2 Boys Seriously Hurt in Accidents

Trips Carrying .22 Rifle Dangerously Wounded

Bulletin

ERIC STATA DEAD

A Special to The Record advises that Eric Stata died shortly after reaching the hospital this afternoon.

Eric Stata, 15, Rushed to Hospital at 1.15 This Afternoon With Little Hope Held For Recovery.—Had Been Shooting Sparrows.

At 12.30 this afternoon, Eric Stata, 15, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Stata, town, was injured perhaps fatally when a .22 rifle exploded in his hands as he tripped while shooting sparrows and the bullet struck him at the top of the skull. The accident occurred at the home of Harry Edgerton, a mile north of town. Dr. W. H. Lloyd rushed the boy to the Cornwall General hospital, but held little hope for his recovery.

Eric Stata and Stewart McMurary went to Harry Edgerton's the latter's uncle, this morning, and the family was away when the accident occurred.

Stewart McMurray said the Stata boy was having his turn with the rifle and that he tripped while stalking a bird. He carried the unconscious boy to the house and summoned Hudson Johnston from his home across the roadway. Dr. Lloyd was summoned and after first aid had the unconscious lad rushed to hospital.

The attending physician said there was a hole in the top of the skull but he could not locate the bullet, and also said he was suffering from concussion and perforated fracture.

Badly Cut This Morning; Slipped on Circular Saw

Frank Kirkby, 16, Badly Gashed Under Arm While Working at Farm of E. J. McMillan, Grantley, 10 o'clock This Morning.

This morning about 10 o'clock, as Frank Kirkby, 16, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kirkby, of Chesterville, was assisting E. J. McMillan, Grantley, cut wood with a circular saw, the youth in some way slipped and fell against the saw, receiving a bad cut on the left upper arm and his left side. Mr. McMillan, who was working with the youth, did not see the accident actually happen.

He immediately called Dr. H. H. Casselman, of Chesterville, who was quickly on the spot and had the injured boy removed to the Cornwall General hospital, where it is believed if complications do not set in the patient will make rapid recovery.

Young Kirkby was employed by Aden Durant, and was one of a gang of men assisting with the sawing, the outfit being owned by Mert O'Shaughnessy.

Mr. and Mrs. Kirkby accompanied their son to the hospital.

HEAVY SNOW AT WEEK END.

Between Friday and Saturday nights, this district was snowed in to a greater extent than at any time during the past winter, when snow to the depth of more than seven inches fell. Motor traffic was brought to almost a standstill.

On Friday, many going to Ottawa for the Cornwall "Flyers"—Quebec "Ace" hockey final had a rather interesting time in making the trips in and out. The heavy wet snow accumulating on the windshield made driving anything but a pleasure. One local car was crashed into when a stop had to be made to clear the snow from the wiper but fortunately no one was injured.

Approval Municipal B'rd Sought on H.S. Addition

Council Provisionally Adopted By-law Last Night Enabling Borrowing $10,000 on 20-Year 4½ Per Cent Debentures.—Now Up to Toronto

Another step was made last evening in preparation for building the proposed addition to Chesterville High school to take care of the new courses, with the Municipal Council provisionally adopting the by-law to authorize the borrowing of $10,000 and issuing debentures by the village for 20 years at 4½ per cent. This is Chesterville's share of the $17,000 estimated cost for the two-room addition and necessary changes to the present building.

The province pays half the cost of the new building and equipment and a share of the new heating equipment while repairs to the present structure are borne by the village.

Part of the village's share will be borne by the Counties' Council which pays for permanent improvements at a rate set by the average pupil day attendance for the year, on 80 per cent of the cost of the improvement. The average pupil-day-attendance here for the last 14 years has been 52, and of the annual debenture payment for this work set at $768.76, would reduce the village's share to $448.96, about one mill. However, the attendance of county pupils has increased in the last two years to 56, and this would mean a further reduction of the municipality's share of the annual payment to $424.36.

It is expected that attendance of pupils from outside the village will increase with the new courses of home economics and shop work added and the resumption of the commercial course, discontinued a few years ago because of lack of accommodation. Any such increase in the percentage of county pupil attendance will mean more revenue from Counties' Council.

Reeve Casselman explained the 1936 change in the High Schools Act placing the full cost of county pupil education on the counties and relieving the high school districts of paying any share of this after caring for the full cost of resident pupils. This has meant a saving annually to Chesterville of over $1600.

The votes by the High School Board and the Council have been unanimous for the proposed addition.

Chambers Says Not Attacked But Was Injured in Fall

When Harry Chambers, a local man, was found on the night of March 31 in an unconscious condition near the C.P.R. station, it was believed he had been the victim of an aggravated assault, when it was discovered his collar bone had been broken and other injuries sustained. Two men, Archie Kenniston, of Georgeville, Que., and Russell Wade, Fitch Bay, Que., were seen in company with Chambers shortly after the trio had alighted from the Perth local.

On suspicion of having been Chambers' assailants, Wade and Kenniston were rounded up by local parties and held for Officer Frank Rose, Provincial Police, to come from Morrisburg and take them in charge. They were taken to Cornwall on a charge of vagrancy pending the return to consciousness of Chambers.

Friday they appeared before Magistrate McCormick in Morrisburg on a charge of being in possession of liquor not purchased in a legal manner and were given the time they had already spent in jail. Chambers denied having been assaulted and his injuries are said to have been the result of a fall following a heart attack.

Bride of This Evening Guest of Honour at Party

Saturday afternoon, Miss Lera Fetterly was the guest of honour at the home of Miss Marion Casselman where she was tendered a pre-nuptial shower with Miss Rae Dixon and Miss Maude Lacey assisting Miss Casselman in the arrangements. About 20 friends and relatives joined in the occasion. Miss Dorothea Cross, of Montreal, and Miss Gertrude Weegar assisted in serving.

Miss Fetterly has for several years been on the teaching staff of the Ottawa city chools, and her marriage will take place this evening.

Following the presentation of many handsome gifts, a social hour was spent when prizes were given for the best original limericks.

Reeve W. H. Casselman, who has become prominent in the matter of reforestation in Eastern Ontario, was this week elected vice-president of the Provincial Association at the annual meeting in Toronto.

Death Comes Unexpectedly To Mrs. Samantha Fyke

Sunday evening, death came very unexpectedly to a well-known and much respected resident in the person of Samantha Rebecca Garrett, wife of Herbert Fyke, in her 74th year. Apparently in her usual good health when members of her household left for church Sunday evening, before their return she had suffered a stroke and was in a very serious condition. Medical assistance was quickly summoned but nothing could be done, and she passed away before midnight.

Married 55 years ago, she is now survived by her husband; one daughter, Mrs. James Campbell, and one son, Stanley Fyke, of the C.P.R. Maintenance of Way Department, Chesterville.

The funeral was held yesterday afternoon in St. Mary's church when service was conducted by Rev. George Extence, of Ottawa, and was largely attended. Interment was made in the Maple Ridge cemetery.

Special music was provided by a quartette, Miss Marion Casselman Mrs. T. A. Smirle, O. L. King and Milton Shaver who sang "When They Ring Those Golden Bells."

The pall-bearers were P. S. Boyd, W. H. Casselman, T. Allan and Geo. Gillard.

Flowers received were: Double spray, family; Mr. and Mrs. Hermon Hummel, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Crawford, C.P.R. staff, St Andrews' Choir, St. Andrew's Ladies' Aid, Miss Marion Casselman, Mr. W. H. Casselman, James Riddell and George Riddell; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Campbell, of Oshawa; McKay-Douglas Group of St. Andrew's church, Chesterville Citizens' Band, Mr. and Mrs. Wilbert Crazen, Philadelphia, N.Y.

Pre-Easter Fellowship Services Held at United Churches

Rev. R. C .Tait, of Trinity United, has this week been co-operating with four charges in the Glengarry Presbytery in Pre Easter Fellowship meetings with each congregation having an address by a different minister each evening.

Monday evening, Rev. K. Woodwark, of North Lunenburg, occupied the pulpit of Trinity United; Tuesday evening, Rev. W. H. Legrow, Newington; Wednesday evening, Rev. J. C. Eastcott, Avonmore; tonight, Rev. H. M. Beach, of Finch, will be here, and tomorrow evening each pastor will occupy his own pulpit at 7.30. The meetings have been well attended at all places.

The theme has been "Attitudes to the Cross." Mr. Tait's subject has been "Watching the Cross;" Mr. Beach's, "Obscuring the Cross;" Mr. Legrow's, "Choosing the Cross;" Mr. Woodwark's, "Enduring the Cross," and Mr. Eastcott's, "Rejecting the Cross."

Victoria the Great . . . With . . . ANNA NEAGLE ANTON WALBROOK, H B. WARNER, WALTER RILLA and thousands of others. Adjudged the best film of all nations of the year, it is a picture that every man, woman and child should see. More daring than the outposts of imagination...thrilling beyond the puny limits of fiction... the true story of a romance and reign that saw the birth of the world's vastest empire. Withheld from stage and screen for decades, here it is...in flaming passages torn from the burning pages of the queen's own diaries. History, yes...but more than history...the intimate record of a beautiful woman's romance...the story of a queen who loved as you and I...told against a moving background unbelievable in immensity, ungraspable in scope. Filmed in the actual cities and palaces where the girl-queen's love affair shook the powers of church and state ...with many scenes in wondrous technicolor.

PSYCHOLOGISTS HAVE discovered that one's disposition is determined by diet. It is claimed that potatoes develop equilibrium of the mind, calm thinking; spinach-eaters are men of action; carrots calm the passionate; peas develop futile thinking, shallow emotions, and, in women, flirting frivolity.

WHY WOULDN'T IT BE a good idea for some longheaded and altruistic manufacturer, instead of marring the landscape with signboards, to take over a hundred or so sections of barren public highway, plant them with trees and shrubs, and maintain the planting? A modest sign would give him credit. Instead of billposters he would employ gardeners. Instead of ugliness he would create beauty for the weary roadside pilgrim.

TRANSATLANTIC telephone calls between Canada and countries in Europe and Africa increased practically 70 per cent in 1937 as compared with 1936. The calls averaged about seven per day. Overseas telephone service from Canada has expanded during 1937 to include Southwest Africa, Bulgaria (Sofia), Haiti, Iraq, (Bagdad), and China (Canton and Shanghai). The result of recent developments in long distance telephon-service has resulted in 93 per cent of the 37,000,000 telephones used in the world today being within call from Montreal.

THE OLD STORY about the man who got a job because his prospective employer saw him pick up a pin from the floor has a sequel, possibly equally old. He told a friend of his success and the friend, also job-hunting, had the forethought to drop a pin on the floor as he entered the manager's office. As it happened, he obtained the job without using his strategic device, but as he turned away, just to clinch the bargain, he picked up the pin and put it in his lapel.

Instantly the manager roared: "It's all off. We don't want you here. A man who'll steal a pin will steal anything."

A DIME-IN-THE-SLOT MOVIE will soon be standard equipment in many cocktail lounges, just as the nickel piano was in oldtime bars. For a dime, miniature motion-picture machines will show 2½-minute, 16-millimeter sound films of big-name orchestras and variety acts. The machines will have small screens that don't demand complete darkness. One company which expects to establish a nationwide cocktail-lounge circuit will place 5,000 such machines in operation within the next few months and will distribute twenty new shorts each week.

A STRAGGLING ENGLISH settlement, nestling along a winding Hampsire lane, has but 200-odd inhabitants but they are proud of being called Canadians.

About 78 miles from London the village has houses, church, public house, one store and a blacksmith shop all cluttered along a single street.

The village got its name in a strange way. More than 50 years ago when thousands were migrating to Canada, there was a minor back-to-the-land movement in Hampshire. About 20 families settled in this area. Huts were built by the pioneers and the land broken for cultivation.

When the question of naming the settlement was debated, someone pointed out that those there were settlers just as much as the people who had migrated to the Dominion. "Canada" was the name chosen.

THE MOST ACCURATE CLOCK in existence is to be installed at Greenwich Observatory, London. The gift of a London amateur astronomer, it will be composed of three separate units and will not vary by more than one-quarter of a second in a year.

The speed of the earth's rotation varies slightly, its "time-keeping" sometimes losing or gaining as much as one second in a year. Greenwich astronomers will, in future, be able to check up on the earth's mistakes with certainty.

The "master" clock will be relieved of actual work, such as the turning of wheels and hands, and will be the nearest approach to a freely swinging pendulum with nothing to vary its time. This pendulum will keep the time, but the intricate workings will be contained in the two "slave" clocks.

There are other clocks of this type at Greenwich, but this is the latest and the most accurate of them all.

BIG BUSINESS.

BIG BUSINESS in the United States is taking it "on the chin" these days because it is "big". But is the virtue of a business institution in inverse ratio to tis size? Large scale production and distribution mean lowered costs to consumers, increased purchasing power and more jobs for workers. In addition, the recent report of the National Employment Commission on social measures in industry, reveals that it is big business in Canada that has provided most of these private social measures we have in industry today. Yes, possibly because big business can afford it, but still they have not overlooked social betterment. s

Sick leaves and holidays with pay, pensions and housing facilities and other employee relations plans are now part of many big business setups in this country, and moreover, these are benefits which are not always possible in so-called little business. If the bigness of a business is not based on exploitation, if the enterprise on a whole pays fair wages, maintains decent working conditions and distributes goods at reasonable costs, what is the objection to it? "Isms" which attack big business are being bandied about and in times of unrest and confusion such irrational talk is definitely harmful. We repeat, therefore, as we have in the past, that business has still a big job to do in the field of institutional advertising and public relations.

THINGS THAT KEEP A SMALL TOWN SMALL!

Kiwanis Magazine.

ONE of the things which keep a small town small, and which makes doing business or practicing a profession so hazardous, is the number of people in that town who earn their income there and spend it in the nearby large city.

The small town dentist is irritated by the local citizen who goes to the large city to patronize the cheap advertising dentist, when he himself goes to the big town tailor to have his clothes made. The small town lawyer complains when the big city lawyer is called in on an important case, but when he is getting married he goes to the big city to buy his fiancée's engagement ring. The local druggist is annoyed when the woman who runs the beauty parlour goes to the big city for her soaps and creams, yet he allows his wife to go to the same big city for bargain permanent waves.

Let him among us who is without sin, cast the first stone. When a man makes his living out of the citizens of a town, it is his duty to spend every dollar of that income in the town, if possible. If he expects the people of that town to do business with him then he should realize his own obligation to do business with them.

Of course, women are the worst offenders. The larger stocks, the good advertising, the bargain days and all the other attractions of the big stores in the city have an almost irresistible appeal to them. If a husband would only point out to his wife that the money she is spending was put into his hands by the local people, and that if they too began to deal in the big city, she would starve, she might be cured of this bad habit.

SMALL BUSINESS PRINCIPLE

Leamington Post & News.

HOW many times a week do you hear the expression: "That's small business principle?" We hear it quite frequently. Perhaps the thing that causes most people to express themselves in these words, is when they receive a cheque in payment for something upon which no stamp has been placed. The practice is all too common, although it is not followed by everyone. Every time a person issues a cheque without a stamp on it he or she does nothing less than ask the recipient for a discount of three cents on goods or an account or whatever it may be, because if the issuer does not put a stamp on the cheque the recipient is obliged to, or he or she will be paid three cents short when the cheque is presented at the bank. The banks will not pay face value of a cheque that has no stamp on it and we do not blame them. The person who should put the stamp on the cheque is the issuer. The matter is only a trivial one, but nevertheless it is one that creates a lot of comment, particularly among business men. Surely no person wants to be measured by anything as small as a three-cent stamp.

WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS ADVERTISING GUIDE

Simcoe Reformer.

THE leadership of the weeklies in "Home Town" communities is your guide to successful advertising! Take the Main Streets, coast to coast in Canada, towns from 1,000 to 10,000 population. Check retail sales and discover that 69 per cent of Canadian retail business is transacted on these busy thoroughfares. Investigate further and discover that in these markets The Weekly Newspaper stands out as the centre of interest, the moulder of public opinion and the week-by-week shopping guide. The power of the weekly—as a paper or as a direct-line advertising medium—is that news, editorials, entertainment and other features are localized. Your advertising in the weekly newspaper becomes localized, its effectiveness multiplied. In Canadian towns and villages with populations from 1,000 to 10,000, live 7,750,000 people. Circulations of Canadian weekly newspapers in these markets total 2,800,000. That's coverage for you, complete, direct and traceable. But coverage is only half the story. The secret of the real success being enjoyed by advertisers using the weekly newspapers lies in the fact that the weekly newspapers — and only the weekly newspapers—can offer the sales-making friendly introduction which builds regular users of a product.

Financing the food supply of the nation is a continuous process of extending bank credit.

Farmers borrow at the Bank to buy seed and sow it; to cultivate the grain and reap it; they borrow on security of the harvest.

Grain dealers borrow on security of warehouse receipts over grain in the elevators.

Grain processors borrow against grain supplies, pending the sale of flour, feed, prepared cereals and food specialties.

Shippers of grain and grain products borrow to finance shipments at home and abroad.

Wholesalers and retailers borrow to keep the grain foods moving to their customers, and so on—until the tables of millions are reached, in Canada and overseas.

Making loans to such borrowers is one feature of our modern, experienced banking service—the outcome of 120 years' successful operation.

Shower For Bride-Elect By Maple Ridge Friends

More than 50 friends of Miss Helen Fawcett, of Maple Ridge, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Fawcett, gathered at the home of her parents when a pre-nuptial shower and presentation was held Thursday evening.

The evening was sponsored by Mrs. Fred. Fawcett, Mrs. Sheldon Ball, Mrs. Spearman Fawcett and Miss Madge Allison, and the guests were entertained with games and music. An address was read by Mrs. Sheldon Ball and Miss Fawcett thanked her friends for the many miscellaneous gifts.

Refreshments were served by the hostesses assisted by Mrs. Stanley Fawcett, and Messrs. William Gow, Eddie and Earl Fawcett. The bride's book, designed by Madge Allison and Mrs. S. Ball, was signed by those present.

Winchester Plans Building Addition to High School

Plans to build an annex to the Winchester High School to provide room for the teaching of new courses of vocational training and domestic science were discussed at a meeting of the High School Board and Council Monday night.

The building, which will include a gymnasium and assembly hall on the ground floor to seat 500, as proposed will cost approximately $25,000. The government will pay 50 per cent of the cost of the new class rooms and part of the cost of the new equipment. Consent of the Ontario Municipal Board would be required for issuing debentures to raise money for the proposed addition.

The new annex would be built on the west side and would extend 18 feet south. Entrances would have to be changed but the present heating plant is large enough to provide heat for the whole new building. It is hoped to have the annex ready for school opening in September provided action is decided upon.

Lady Tweedsmuir Visits Russell Women's Institute

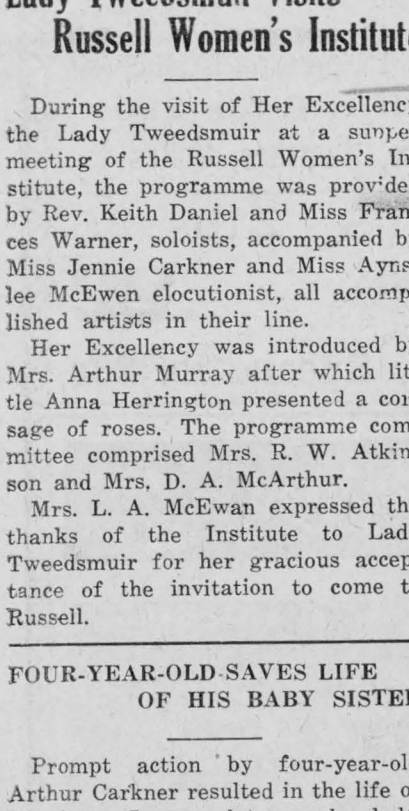

During the visit of Her Excellency the Lady Tweedsmuir at a supper meeting of the Russell Women's Institute, the programme was provided by Rev. Keith Daniel and Miss Frances Warner, soloists, accompanied by Miss Jennie Carkner and Miss Aynslee McEwen elocutionist, all accomplished artists in their line.

Her Excellency was introduced by Mrs. Arthur Murray after which little Anna Herrington presented a corsage of roses. The programme committee comprised Mrs. R. W. Atkinson and Mrs. D. A. McArthur.

Mrs. L. A. McEwan expressed the thanks of the Institute to Lady Tweedsmuir for her gracious acceptance of the invitation to come to Russell.

FOUR-YEAR-OLD SAVES LIFE OF HIS BABY SISTER

Prompt action by four-year-old Arthur Carkner resulted in the life of his sister, Jay, aged two and a half, being saved. The little girl fell into a water-filled post hole in the yard of the Carkner residence at Froatburn. The boy ran into the house crying "Jay's drowning in a post hole," and the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Carkner, saved the baby just in time.

FISHERMEN, TAKE NOTE.

AS a guide to disciples of Izaak Walton, a summary of special fishery regulations for Ontario has been issued. In this summary, as in the act, angling is defined as fishing with a hook and line, or rod, line and hook, held in the hand but not set lines or lines tied to a boat. Angling is the only method by which persons may fish for black bass, pike, pickerel, maskinonge, speckled, brown, rainbow or Aurora trout.

The season for yellow pickerel, including pike-perch or doré and pike, will be closed from April 1 until May 15.

Fishermen may have an additional 10 days fishing for maskinonge this year if present plans of the Ontario Department of Game and Fisheries are carried out. Following representations to the department from camp owners and outfitters in Northern Ontario, D. J. Taylor, Deputy-Minister of Game and Fisheries, said the department is considering opening the "muskie" season June 20 instead of July 1 as in the past.

Summer Holidays Extended 'Til Tuesday After Labor Day

Summer holidays for school children have been extended to the Tuesday following Labor Day, it was learned this week. The real reason for this change, Dr. Duncan McArthur, Deputy Minister of Education explained, is to make it possible for teachers taking summer courses to have a full month's holidays before returning to school.

"For several years to come, summer courses will have to be provided for the re-training of teachers so that they may be prepared adequately to teach the new course of studies," he said. "It is only fair and proper that these teachers who are engaged in taking summer courses should be assured of a reasonable holiday, and I am certain they should have at least four weeks."

A PUZZLE IN BABIES.

Banffshire Journal.

IT IS REPORTED from Shanghai that when the Japanese forces occupied the town of Tsungming they found in a nursery 59 Chinese babies whose 14 amahs had fled at the approach of the invaders.

The major in command, himself a father, issued a general call to other fathers in his unit to feed the wailing infants with milk which the bachelors were ordered to forage for in the deserted town.

Several days later one of the missing amahs was found, and when taken to the nursery she gave a loud scream. The babies were all feeding happily, but the soldiers had mixed up the 59 babies beyond hope of their ever being sorted out again.

The Discovery of Maple Syrup

Legend Says Woksis, Indian Brave, Was Responsible For Finding Delightful Sweetness.

ALONG about this time every year Canadians take time out from the regular routine of life to pay tribute to the Indian brave, Woksis. And if you have never heard of Woksis you are in debt to him just the same—for Woksis, according to legend, was the discoverer of maple syrup.

The Indian tale has it that Woksis, one crisp day in March, got up to go hunting. He hefted his trusty tomahawk, tried its edge with his thumb, and whammed it into the trunk of a sugar maple close at hand. After breakfast, he yanked the weapon free and was off, leaving his squaw behind.

By and by it was time to prepare dinner. Woksis, squaw, the story goes, had a tasty shoulder of moose to boil, but she had forgotten to fill the water pail and the spring was half a mile away. Then she noticed the maple tree. From the wound made by Woksis was pouring sap, and the sap was running right into a pot. She plopped the moose-meat into the pot and put it on the fire to cook.

After a while, Woksis came home again, beset with hunger. Dinner was set before him. Lo, and behold! Instead of just ordinary boiled meat he had a roast deliciously coated with crusted maple sugar.

"Boy," he said, "is this ever good! How did ya fix it?"

So Mrs. Woksis told him. And that, we learn, is how maple syrup was discovered.

Sandy: "Say, mon, when is Annie McTavish goin' to let you marry her?

Andy: "It's verra uncertain, mon. Some fool gave her a big box of letter paper with her name printed on it. She won't get married till it's used up—an' she writes verra few letters on account of the postage."

C.P.R. PICNIC TO TWEED?

Tweed News.—At this writing, the C.P.R. Recreation Club at Smiths Falls, have practically decided to hold their annual excursion and picnic to Tweed during Old Home Week. As many as two thousand people have on previous occasions joined the exodus from Smiths Falls, Carleton Place, Perth and Almonte, for this big day. Such an influx to Tweed on Saturday, the third day of Old Home Week, should add some excitement and interest to that particular day.

Funeral Late Mrs. Merkley Attended by Large Number

The funeral service of Mrs. Chester Merkley, prominent resident of Chesterville, was held Thursday afternoon, April 7, at Trinity United church and was largely attended by many sorrowing friends and relatives.

The service was conducted by Rev. R. C. Tait, assisted by Rev. A. C. Adey, of Williamsburg, and Rev. Mr. Johnson, of South Mountain.

The choir, under the direction of P. G. Hewitt, was in attendance, and a duet, "Does Jesus Care," was sung by O. L. King and A. E. Bolster.

The pall-bearers were D. J. MacMillan, O. L. King, Charles T. Fulton, James Slosser, and A. E. Bolster, of Chesterville, and J. D. Beckstead, of Williamsburg.

Mrs. Merkley was in his 74th year, and was formerly Saran D. Pickering, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Pickering of Goldfield. Fifty-three years ago she married Chester Merkley who passed away 10 years ago.

She is survived by a family of five children: one son, Bert, of Detroit; Mrs. J. M. Jarvis, North Bay; Mrs. H. P. Black, Mountain; Mrs. A. Steinberg, Morewood, and Mrs. G. W. Strader, Williamsburg; two sisters, Mrs. Ezra F. Droppo and Mrs. Dan Fawcett, of Chesterville, and one brother, Michael Pickering, of Portland, Oregon.

Interment was made at Maple Ridge following a brief committal service.

EGGS FOR EASTER.

IT JUST WOULDN'T SEEM like Easter without eggs, so let us have plenty of them. Shall we have them plain or fancy? If you are fond of eggs there really isn't any nicer way to serve them than poached on hot buttered toast or scrambled on toast along with a nice crisp slice of bacon. However, in case you prefer your Easter eggs in disguise or in combination with other foods, here are some recipes for you.

BAKED EGGS.

Butter a plate well and into it break the required number of eggs. Season with salt and pepper. Bake in a moderate oven until set. Garnish with parsley and serve in the dish in which they were baked. If desired, sprinkle with grated cheese before baking.

FOAMY OMELET WITH FOAMY SAUCE.

4 eggs
½ teaspoon salt
few grains pepper
4 tablespoons milk
2 teaspoons butter

Beat yolks of eggs, add seasonings and milk. Beat whites until stiff but not dry. Heat a frying pan; put in the butter; have sides and bottom well buttered. Cut and fold whites into the yolk mixture. When pan is very hot, turn in the omelet, spread evenly and reduce heat. Cook slowly until the omelet is set. Place in a moderate oven to dry slightly on top. Fold; turn out and over, and around it pour the following sauce:

2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon chopped onion
2 tablespoons flour
1½ cups canned tomatoes
2 tablespoons canned mushrooms
¼ cup chopped green pepper
¾ teaspoon salt
few grains cayenne pepper

Cook together the butter and onion blend in flour, add tomatoes and cook until thickened. Add mushrooms, green pepper and seasonings.

CHOCOLATE CUSTARD.

3 egg yolks
½ cup sugar
2 cups hot milk
½ teaspoon vanilla
whipped cream

Melt the chocolate. Beat the egg yolks, blend in the sugar, add hot milk gradually and then melted chocolate. Cook in a double boiler, stirring constantly until it thickens. Flavour with vanilla and chill. Serve in sherbet glasses with a spoonful of whipped cream on top. Garnish with a maraschino cherry.

POTATOES AND POACHED EGGS

Beat mashed potatoes until very light. Spread evenly on a hot platter with a spoon, making indentations for as many eggs as you require. Poach eggs nicely and place them in the little wells prepared for them. Serve hot.

STUFFED EGG SALAD.

Hard cook eggs, cut in halves and remove the yolks. Mash the yolks, add finely chopped celery or finely chopped chicken or ham. Season with salt, pepper and mustard. Refill the whites with this mixture, piling it in lightly with a fork. Sprinkle each egg with paprika and arrange three halves in individual lettuce cups. Garnish with parsley, cress, celery hearts olives or slices of tomato.

SCALLOPED EGGS.

6 hard cooked eggs
salt
milk

Grease a baking dish and place in it a layer of crumbs, then a layer of slices of hard-cooked eggs. Dot with bits of butter, sprinkle with salt and pepper and add another layer of crumbs. Repeat these layers in order until the dish is full, having a layer of crumbs on top. Pour milk over the whole until it comes about halfway to the top of the dish. Brown in a moderate oven. As a variation grated cheese may be added between the layers or the butter may be omitted and small pieces of bacon added instead.

FRIED EGGS.

Heat cooking-fat in a frying pan and slip in the eggs. Cook as many eggs at one time as will fill the pan without touching one another. Baste with some of the fat to cook the yolk. Cook slowly, for if the fat becomes very hot the eggs will be tough and indigestible.

The shell of a stale egg is usually shiny.

* * * *

Eggs are an important source of iron, phosphorus and vitamins, but are not a complete food in themselves and should be used in combination with other foods.

* * * *

Never allow the water in which eggs are cooked to reach the boiling point, as it makes the white tough and leathery.

* * * *

In setting a table, the sharp edge of the knife must always be turned toward the place and the fork must be placed with the prongs pointing upward.

* * * *

The teaspoon should always be placed parallel with the hande of the cup when using with a cup and saucer.

* * * *

No matter what the weather is, always serve hot foods hot, and cold foods fold.

Mr. Peaslee — AS A — Mother's Helper

MR. PEASLEE seemed to walk with difficulty, and he sank into a chair upon the porch of the village store with every sign of relief. Deacon Hyne watched his approach, blazing meanwhile with a surly curiosity.

"Watchin' you comin' up the road, Caleb," he observed, "I was put to it to tell which leg you seemed to favour most when you stepped; both of 'em seemed to be lame, I sh'd say."

Caleb fiddled with his cane and looked ashamed.

"An old fool's the wust kind there is," he said at last. "I'm goin' to tell you all about it, Hyne, but I want you sh'd promise me now that when you've had your laugh out you'll keep still about it. I don't want this whole village to know what an indjit I made of myself!" And Mr. Hyne, seeing that in no other way could he obtain the desired knowledge, promised faithfully.

"That woman we've had stoppin' with us this summer and that boy of hern," began Mr. Peaslee, casting about for an opening. "Well, the 'mount of it is, she 'n' my wife have been wantin' to go to the city for mebbe two, three weeks, but it seems they couldn't take the youngster with 'em, nor they couldn't leave him behind. For two solid weeks they argued and planned to go one day, and argued some more, and give it all up the next day.

"Finally, after a fortnight or so of that kind of talk, I took a hand in it myself. I was forrard with my work and was cal'latin' to sort of rest up a day and take things easy, so I says to my wife, 'If you and Mis' Coates are so set on goin' to Bangor, I want you sh'd both get ready in the mornin' and go!' says I. 'I'll take it onto myself to look out for the youngster one day.'

"I was a mite s'prised at the way she took it, I won't go so far 's to say it teched my temper, but mebbe it stiffened my disp'sition a speck. It b'iled down to this: she didn't feel I was comp'tent to take care of that boy one day. I jest sot back in my chair and looked at her a minute, and then I says:

"'Well,' says I, 'mebbe you're right and I'm wrong, but that boy don't weigh over sixty pounds, and I weigh in the neighbourhood of two hund'ud, and if I ain't able to look after him one day,' I says, 'it's high time I found it out.'

"The long and short of it was, they got ready and went yesterday morning. Both of 'em looked back kind of worried when they drove off, and I saw Mis' Coates whisper somethin' to the boy 'fore they started, but I didn't know what it was, of course.

"I ain't goin' to try to tell you every move of that day, Hyne, but I'll say this: if I'd known what a passel of springs a boy twelve years old is, I'd have thought twice 'fore I'd undertook to look after him ten minutes, let aone all day. Boys must be a lot wuss'n they was years ago, I guess."

Mr. Hyne grinned behind his hand.

"I'd made up my mind to keep him amused and contented," Mr. Peaslee went on, "and 's far 's my strength went and I was able, I lived up to it. There was some few things he wanted me to do that was beyond my powers, but I tried faithful, not meanin' to have my wife able to say that I couldn't keep him contented, and she'd told me so." Mr. Peaslee turned his head with an effort and showed Mr. Hyne a lump as large as a walnut over his eye.

"I got that," he admitted, "showin' him how a cow would hook him 'f he didn't keep out of the pastur'; I was hookin' the ladder, and it was closer'n I cal'lated it was, and I hooked it good; he was tickled pretty near to death and wanted I sh'd do it over, but I didn't.

"There's a welt across my shoulder as big's a lead pencil and a foot long that I got while he was ringmaster and I was clown. I'll do the boy jestice 'nough to say he didn't cal'ate to give me such a clip; he jest entered into the sperit of the thing too hearty, and he was sorry 'nough when he found he'd hurt me. And I lamed one ankle showin' him what a jumper I was forty years ago; I wish I'd let it go at tellin' him but he wouldn't hear to that.

"But the wust was down by the deep place in the brook when he wanted me to play pirate, same's every boy does. He had an old scythe that he'd picked up that he called his sword, and he rigged up a plank that he wanted me to walk and show him how pirates done to folks they captured.

"I don't want you to think I was fool 'nough to walk out on that plank far 'nough to tip it up, Hyne; I jest cal'lated to step onto it and stop. But when I'd got out kind of hestitatin' to where it begun to tip a mite, and I was jest on the p'int of turnin' back, he give me a jab with the p'int of that old scythe, unbeknownst to me that it was comin', and I done jest the same as you or anybody else would have done—I surged ahead and let out a yell, and then down I went clean over my head into eight feet of brook water.

"Wal," sighed Mr. Peaslee, "that about wound up things for the day. By the time I'd got out and we'd got back to the house, the womenfolks was back; and when my wife see me limpin' into the yard without a dry stitch on me, she didn't know whether to laugh or get mad.

"'It wa'n't that I thought the boy couldn't stand it to be left,' s'she, 'but I know knew you'd do somethin' to yourself, and I sh'd guess you'd done a plenty. I ain't goin' to say another word to you about it; I won't have to; you'll have rheumatiz pains that'll talk to you plainer than I can tomorrow,' she says." Mr. Peaslee shifted his leg and groaned.

"What you laughin' at, Hyne?" he demanded. "You wouldn't laugh if you was in my shoes. You mark my words!"

HUNTER BAGS TIMBER WOLF SWIMMING IN CROWE RIVER

Sanford Lawrence had the novel experience of shooting a swimming male wolf on Thursday afternoon. About two-thirty, Sanford was paddling his boat up the river near Whetstone Lake when he saw the animal crossing the river about 50 feet ahead of him.

Thirteen years ago, Sanford shot five wolves in quick succession and made headline news. "This wolf got badly fooled before All Fools' Day," agreed Marmora's noted hunter. "After I put a shot in him, I paddled up to draw him by the hind leg into the boat. He rolled his eyes at me so I took my axe and hit him on the head twice before he quieted. He measured 6 feet 4 inches in length."

THE CANARY ISLANDS.

Interesting Facts About Our Dominion of Canada.

THE Canary Islands are a mountainous, volcanic archipelago in the Atlantic, sixty miles off the African coast. There are seven islands and six uninhabited islets. The total area is about 2,800 square miles, or somewhat more than Prince Edward Island. There are 50,000 inhabitants. These islands are a Spanish possession.

The Canary Islands are famous the world over because of the beautiful song birds that are native there, and from which they have derived their name. The wild canaries are yellowish brown or green with ashy sides streaked with black, and yellow forehead and also underparts.

Volcanoes in these islands are intermittent as is shown by the eruption of Teneriffe in 1909. The climate is subject to hurricanes with waterspouts. The date and banana palm, sugar cane, coffee and orange tree grow there, as well as the laurel pine, heather, broom and lichen. There are native dogs, sheep and pigs, while cats and camels have been introduced.

Canadian imports from the Canary Islands in 1935 amounted to $1,640,000, consisting almost entirely of flax, while our exports totalled over $50,000, the chief items being pneumatic tires, wheatflour, silk stockings, cotton duck and canned salmon.

Liquid Dynamite

A Better Name for Gasoline When This Highly Inflammable Liquid is Used For Cleaning.

"LIQUID DYNAMITE" would be a more suitable label for gasoline when used as a cleansing agent, according to a warning issued today by the Industrial Accident Prevention Association. Because gasoline is highly inflammable, the warning points out, the great importance of not allsowing even a little gasoline to be exposed in a room or other confined space cannot be too strongly emphasized. Gasoline vapour is three to four times heavier than air, and consequently cannot disappear into the upper air as many other gases do; the vapour will flow along for considerable distances near the ground, spreading the field of potential danger.

Science has provided a reliable method of detecting the dangerous presence of gasoline fumes in a "combustible gas indicator," and the associatiosn recommends use of this instrument wherever gasoline is used, particularly in industry. Tests have hown the nose cannot be trusted to detect the danger, and this fact is emphasized by numerous fatalities.

Blindness and eye injuries can be reduced 90 per cent by the wearing of suitable goggles at certain types of work where a hazard is present, according to the report of an eye specialist who has recently completed a survey of eye injuries to industrial workers. "Just as it is industry's responsibility to provide safe working conditions for its employees," he maintains, "so must responsibility be accepted for the enforcement of reasonable rules for the use of goggles."

"No eyes will be saved from injury," R. B. Morley, general manager of the association, adds, "if the goggles, having been provided, are worn up on the forehead, carried in the pocket, or hung up on a nail."

"Don't let a 'handyman' assume the rôle of a specialist and wield a match stick to remove a cinder from your eye," he warns. "Infection or loss of your eyesight can easily follow from such an amateur proceeding. If the eye has been wounded, cover it with a sterile dressing; if the eye has been burned with a chemical, flush it out with plenty of clean water."

Modest.

Among the applications received by a firm for a junior post was this one: "I am 15 years of age, smart, and said to resemble Freddie Bartholomew, but of course I would not expect anything like his salary."

"I'm sorry, I haven't a dime," said the lady as she handed the street car conductor a ten dollar bill.

"Don't worry, madam," he replied politely. "You're going to have 99 of them in a couple of minutes."

Too Bad.

Said a village lad to his sweetheart: "We've been courting in the meadow for three years now, Mary, but we won't be doing so next year."

"Oh, Tom," replied Mary coyly, "do you really mean that?"

"Yes; they're going to build on it."

Why Can't Others Emulate Him?

A retired vocalist who had acquired a large fortune by marriage was asked to sing in company.

"Allow me," said he, "to imitate the nightingale, which does not sing after it has made its nest."

This might have been PREVENTED

...by a Telephone CALL

Neighbours could have saved this barn. But they did not know about the fire — there was no telephone to call them. No farmer should be without a telephone. One single fire would pay ten years' telephone cost for a whole county. Every farmer should consider at least the safety of his home, family and chattels. The telephone banishes isolation, calls aid whenever needed.

His First Day

* * * * *

FOR TWO YEARS, Walter McLoud was the youngest and the proudest member of the Tallahassee fire force. On the death of his father, however, he felt obliged to resign and return to Wanetown, where his mother was living. She had written that she could get along very well alone, but he knew that she was thinking of him rather than of herself. So before the week was out he had arrived at the little cottage, half hidden beneath its aromatic load of Cherokee rose vines.

The next day he applied for work at Maxwell & Barlow's tent factory and was enrolled as a truck pusher. It was a comedown in the business world, but Walter was of canny Scottish blood and in the circumstances regarded himself as lucky to get any job. Barlow's was a growing concern. Given a foothold there an ambitious man ought to climb high.

The factory itself, however, did not please him as the professional fire fighter. It was an old ramshackle tinder box without fire escapes. On his very first morning at work Walter could not help expressing his unfavourable opinion of it to the foreman. Cole, the foreman, admitted the criticism was just but added that the company would be housed in new quarters within a few weeks.

"I reckon you didn't know we've built a fine modern building the other side of town," he said. "She's a beauty. Fire escapes and all that. We outgrew this shack a long time ago."

On the way to the shed to get his truck, McLoud took another disparaging glance at the factory. The old sun-and-weather-rotted structure stood three stories high in a marshy piece of land where several lofty pines grew. One of the trees towered above the east end of the building, the flat roof of which was somewhat lower than the lowest branch of the tree.

The building was purring like a waterfall. The whine of the saws and the hard chatter of the planers mingled with the roll of the trucks racing along the corridor from mill room to shipping room and thence to the delivery platforms. From the carpenters' quarters an the second floor came the ceaseless tapping of hammers. On the third and top floor, ranks of power sewing machines, directed by women and girls, cried shrilly. Outside, the testing crews were putting up and inspecting completed tents. Dippers were running long sheets of canvas from the ill-smelling waterproofing tank to the gasoline bath.

As McLoud trundled a bolt to the tank he saw one of the dippers taking a surreptitious pull at a lighted cigarette.

"Here, mon! Don't ye know better than that?" he exclaimed.

"Mind your own business!" growled the dipper.

That a raw recruit, a mere truck pusher at that, should try to play boss made him angry. He was all the more ready to take offence because he had stopped for a couple of drinks on his way to work that morning, and the effect of them had not yet worn off.

As he walked, muttering, toward the gasoline vat, he took another pull at the cigarette, only to find that it had gone out.

"Think you can boss me, eh?" He yanked a match from his pocket and disregarding the company's most stringent rule, struck it on his trousers.

There was a queer crackling sound in the fume-laden air, followed by a flash of brilliant bluish-pink flame darting, like a snake's tongue, toward the vat. As McLoud dropped to save himself the explosion came. The burning vapour reached the vat house, which disappeared in a jarring thunderclap. A mushoom-shaped cloud of smoke rose rapidly. Then smouldering bits of débris began to patter down.

An excited crowd, among whom was the manager, immediately gathered on the scene, and at the upper windows of the factory clusters of heads appeared.

"It's all right!" shouted the foreman, waving a hand upward. "Nobody hurt!"

Strangely enough, that was true. The vat house had been empty at the moment of the explosion. The nearest person to it was the dipper, whose escape was almost miraculous. Except for a few superficial burns and a bad fright, he had received no injuries, unless you include under that head his discharge, which the foreman gave him instantly.

At that stage, McLoud's trained eye noticed that the scattered fragments of the vat house had started several little fires. The grass was ablaze at the west end of the factory, and a saw dust heap was smouldering.

"Better take a look around?" he said to the manager, stepping forward briskly.

"Yes, yes!" exclaimed the manager. "I'll attend to that. Go on with your work, McLoud, and the rest of you, too."

"Ay, sir," replied the recruit and returned obediently to his truck.

Perhaps the manager's inspection was not so prompt or so thorough as it should have been. At any rate McLoud's attention was presently attracted by the cry of fire. The old call proved too strong to be resisted, and he ran out of the shipping room.

A spark or a piece of burning wood had been blown through a small open window into the engineer's storeroom. Greasy smoke was pouring out of the aperture. A bucket brigade was already falling into line between the factory and a little brackish creek close by.

"Gie the girlies warning, mon," said McLoud, when he had found the foreman. "Get 'em doon out of that."

"Think we need to? I reckon a few buckets'll put her out," replied Cole.

"Na. There's oil in yon smoke, and the mill room's next door-r-r!" cried McLoud, rolling his "r's" in earnestness.

"All right. You go over there with those boys and fetch the hose," said the foreman.

The hose wrench could not be found for some minutes, and it took more precious time to open the rusty valves of the hydrant. When the hose, stiff and warped from long exposure to the southern sun, was at last ready, McLoud saw that it could not cope with the blaze.

"Have ye got the girlies doon?" he asked the foreman.

"Sure. They've been told."

"Where's the stairs?" persisted Walter.

"Now you've said it. Right over the storeroom. Let's see if the women are out."

The women were not out.

The man who had been sent to warn them must have bungled his errand. One look at the stairway showed McLoud that it would be impossible either to ascend or descend it. That whole corner of the factory was a red mass of fire.

As he drew back he saw the carpenters on the second floor fling out of one of the windows a rope made of their tough denim aprons. A moment later they were sliding down it one by one. As the last man descended, the improvised fire escape gave way, but the fellow was so near the ground that the fall did not hurt him much. Then a window on the third storey opened and the forewoman called out.

"Hello! Hello'" she cried. "What are we to do?" Behind her clustered a number of anxious faces.

'Be easy, my bonnies!" shouted McLoud. "Can ye come doon to the second floor noo?"

The faces vanished. A few seconds later they reappeared, pale and panic-stricken. One of the girls started to mount upon the sill, but hesitated when she heard the warning shouts from below. The next moment the forewoman thrust her aside and called out that the stairway was full of fire and smoke. "like a chimney."

McLoud groaned inwardly. He had feared as much; but already a plan had occurred to him, and he began to issue sharp, forcible directions that brought some semblance of order out of the confusion. The ropes he asked for were immediately forthcoming, and the company's electrician supplied him with the desired leg irons. He knew the women were too panic-stricken to make a rope as the carpenters had done, and he feared to waste time in trying to throw them one from the ground. Moreover, he had seen a woman killed at Tallahassee when the rope that she had insecurely tied had slipped its knot. The women on the top floor of the factory needed a man up there to help them.

Armed with the iron and carrying two coils of rope across his shoulders, McLoud began to climb the towering yellow pine near the east end of the factory. The fire as yet was confined to the west end where the stairway was. Puffs of hot, acrid smoke blew out at him at intervals, but did not seriously interfere with his task. The climbing itself required all his attention and all his strength. He had not thought that it would prove so hard.

The size of the trunk made it hard for him to embrace it, and its bark he found, was dangerously soft and flaky. As he crawled laboriously upward, the spurs repeatedly slipped. The sudden strain put upon his arms at such moments made his muscles ache. As he dug his fingers into the interstices, his nails, one after another, broke to the quick.

A bulge in the trunk, which he had not noticed from below, threatened to bar his progress effectually. As Walter tried to work himself over it he felt as if some force were thrusting him away from the tree. His body assumed an awkward outward curve, and his spurs and fingers seemed to have only the feeblest hold upon the treacherous bark. He did not know whether to try to move up or down. It needed only a touch to destroy his balance and send him to the ground, and a fall from that height would probably mean death. Glancing up he saw the strained faces of the sewing girls staring down at him from the east windows and at once his courage returned and he forgot his danger.

"Bide a wee, my bonnies!" he called. "I'm a fire laddie, and I'll have ye doon all fine, never fear."

By flattening himself against the bulge until the breath was almost pressed out of his body, he slowly and painfully slid his chest across the widest part. His torn finger tips dug into the cracks of the bark and, drawing up first one leg and then the other he managed to sink the spurs in, but not very deep. Would they hold when his weight came on them? He tried to ease the strain by supporting himself mainly with his arms. It worked well, and he made a foot of progress. He was almost clear of the bulge and again he jabbed in the spurs.

All seemed secure as he reached up cautiously for another hold. His fingers had just found it when suddenly one of the spurs gave way. His weight dragged violently on his arms, and his fingers began to slip. The backward plunge seemed imminent.

As his free foot scraped against the trunk in his efforts to insert the spur he could feel the hold of the other spur weaking. It was now or never. With the energy of desperation, he struck, risking everything on one chance.

By good fortune the spur held, and instantly he drove in its companion. His fingers dug into the wrinkled bark, and he began feverishly to climb again. His hands and arms were getting weak. If he did not soon reach his goal, he knew that he would never reach it at all.

Boldness wins sometimes when care fails. McLoud never wasted a thought now on whether his spurs were in securely or not. He set himself to reach the lowest limb in the shortest possible period of time, and he reached safe. As he passed the window, some twenty feet away, he shouted:

"Mind I'm tellin' ye! I'm a fire laddie, my bonnies!"

None of the branches extended out above the factory roof; the one he straddled would serve his purpose as well as any other, and to it he tied an end of one of the coils of rope. Then, gauging the distance to a point in the air a little lower than the gutter, he measured off an equal length of the same rope and, fastening it to his waist, let himself down until he hung at the end of it like a spider on its thread.

One end of coil number two he also fastened to his waist and dropped the other end to the ground, where the foreman seized it, as they had arranged. The foreman then imparted a vigourous swaying motion to the rope, and McLoud began to swing like a lofty pendulum. An extra effort on the foreman's part brought Walter within reach of the gutter.

As he gripped it, it creaked ominously. And indeed Walter had no more than thrown a leg and an elbow over the edge of the roof when the gutter broke from its fastenings and, almost carryng him with it, crashed down in fragments into the drifting smoke. The women, thinking that McLoud had gone, too, raised a chorus of hysterical screams.

Walter spoke to them over the edge of the roof. He did not know what he said, but it was evidently to the point, for it calmed them somewhat. In a few seconds he had freed himself from both ropes and had tied one end of number two to an iron ventilation pipe. Then he flung the rope over the edge of the roof so that it hung close to one of the open windows in which the women's heads were framed. The lower end of it just cleared the ground.

McLoud slid down the rope, thrust a leg across the window sill and in a second more stood in the room.

"Easy, my dears," he said, reassuringly. "Ye're safe the noo with Wal-Walter, the fire laddie."

He knew better than any of them that every fraction of a second was precious. Smoke was pouring up through the floor in several places and flashes of light showed that the west end was on the point of bursting into flames. The heat, moreover, was almost unbearable.

He tore a length of canvas from the nearest machine, slashed some strips from it and rapidly knotted them into a kind of sling. Then he hauled up the rope and fastened the sling to the end of it.

"Ready," he announced. "One at a time, lassies. Ye'll make it fine."

And one at a time he lowered them safe down through the smoke to those below. It was done none too soon. The room was full of fire; he was half suffocated, and his clothes and sandy hair were scorched, when at last he slid down the rope himself.

They crowded around him, and everyone tried to pat him on the back or to get in a complimentary word. But Walter, the fire laddie, seemed suddenly to have lost his self-confidence as well as his voice. He blushed crimson with embarrassment when the forewoman tried to embrace him. An expression of relief crossed his face as the Wanetown engine came clanging into the field and drew the attention of the factory hands away from himself.

Carl Henderson, New York, said in a talk on salesmanship: "In flattery, as in everything else, a salesman can go too far.

"A pretty girl said to an energetic young salesman at a counter:

"'I want some soap, please.'

"He looked at her closely, like a real beauty specialist. 'I would recommend,' he said, 'for a complexion that combines so delicately the lovely colours of the lily and the rose—'

"'Excuse me,' the girl broke in, 'it isn't soft soap I want.'"

TRAVEL — RECIPROCITY WITH SCOTLAND

CANADA and Scotland are having reciprocity this year in tourists. As far back as most people can remember, it has been quite the thing for Canadians to go to Scotland for the summer, or for that matter at any time of year, but only during the past year or so has there been evinced any mass desire on the part of Scots to see Canada. So despite the fact that most people think that much of Canada's tourist trade will be toward Glasgow's much-touted Empire Exhibition, there are quite a number of Scots, who, in spite of the Fair's delight at home, are buying summer tickets for Canada.

Perhaps the most imporant move be the 600 school-boys coming under the auspices of the Scottish Schools Travel Trust. Last year's trip, by members of this group, proved so great a success that four parties each of 150 are coming here this year. The first two contingents of 150 each will leave Glasgow, July 8, on the Athenia, and the second 300, July 23 on the Donaldson ship, Letitia. In each case, the boys will spend a week in Canada.

Serious thinking people believe that such a movement of school-boys to Canada is one of the best things that can happen to a country like this. There are a dozen good reasons why such visits are mutually beneficial. Certainly no one appreciates travel, no individual can drink in facts and knowledge like young people, and no better advertising can Canada get free of charge in Scotland than through these fine young lads.

Of great importance, too, will be the coming of the Scottish Farmers' party, who are due in Montreal about May 21. Provincial and federal governments will both recognize the visit of these prominent agriculturists on their first venture into Canada which will mark the 50th anniversary of the formation of the Scottish Farmers. They are headed by A. C. Buchanan, Editor of the Scottish Farmer.

It is also rather interesting that during a year when the Conservative party is picking a leader in Canada that an unofficial visit from fellow Conservatives in Scotland should be in the offing. Col. John McInes-Shaw will head about 100 members of the Unionist party, as this group is known. While so far Canadian Tories have not been notified, it is understood that unofficial meetings will be held between Scottish Conservative chiefs, and the corresponding party here. The visitors sail from Glasgow July 8.

Other groups, as well as many individuals, are already booked for Canada this year.

Balancing this influx of Scottish tourists is the large consignment of Canadian visitors headed for Betahouston Park and the Glasgow Fair. Add to that a party of about 200 Canadian secondary school-children going to Scotland on a tour, and it can be seen that this just about makes a mutually balanced travel budget in 1938. The dollars and cents of it add up pretty well too, for Canadian and Scot alike are bound to spend a certain amount in the other fellow's country and there is no doubt but that Empire links and trade are tightened by such visits.

HEALTH

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

This third article of the "What to Eat to be Healthy" series, tells where certain vitamins are contained. All information is authentic, and should be of interest to our readers.

WHAT TO EAT TO BE HEALTHY
Number Three.

VITAMIN A is essential for the health of the mucous membranes of the eyes, nose, throat, sinuses, bronchial tubes, oesophagus, stomach, intestinal tract, and the genito-urinary passages.

The lack of Vitamin A in the diet causes eye trouble and tendency to infections.

The following foods give you vitamin A: Pasteurized milk, cream and butter, coloured vegetables such as spinach, carrots, leaf lettuce, eggs, liver and kidney.

The distribution of vitamin A is very wide, and it is also very abundant. If your diet contains a pint of pasteurized milk a day, butter and two vegetables besides potato, as well as an egg a day, you will certainly be receiving an adequate supply of vitamin A.

Vitamins B1 and B2 are necessary for the nerves, skin and the normal burning up of sugars and starches in the body.

The lack of vitamins B1 and B2 results in neuritis. A lack of these vitamins also results in constipation.

The following foods give you vitamins B1 and B2: Most vegetables and fruits, particularly peas, beans and lentils, whole grain cereals, egg yolk, liver and kidney.

Vitamin B1 is widely but not abundantly distributed. We must watch carefully to see that we get an adequate supply of it. This vitamin is abundant in wheat germ and yeast. Unfortunately, vitamin B1 is water soluble. If an excessive amount of water is used in cooking, as high as 90 per cent of this vitamin may be thrown away in the cooking water.

In the next article in this series of "What to Eat to be Healthy," we will discuss vitamins C and D.

Watch this series for complete and authentic information on what to eat and where to find it.

CBC PROGRAMME IN BOOK FORM

"Romance of Sacred Song," the CBC programme written by Estelle Fox and presented every Sunday over the national network from Vancouver is the basis of a book, by that author which has just been published. The book contains the stories of famous old hymns which Miss Fox has dramatized for radio during the last few years and, in addition, contains four hitherto unpublished stories of Canadian origin.

AND THEREBY HANGS A TAIL.

What happens when two broadcasters get in a charitable mood at the same time? They buy dogs. At least, that would seem to be the case unless Ted Briggs, of CBO, Ottawa, and D'Arcy Marsh, Corporation commentator, were setting some sort of precedent. Anyway, when a much-of-a-tail-wagging dog was offered them the other day they bought it for two dollars cash because "It looked hungry and friendless." But the acquisition was not easily disposed of, so the two benefactors, neither of whom has accommodation for pets of this description, tossed a coin to determine the canine's master. Ted lost the toss and now he has "Sebeoh" trailing him wherever he goes.

Judge of Karachi, India, Visits Rotary Lucheon

Exemplifying the international friendliness of Rotary, the guest speaker at the provisional Rotary club Tuesday evening was His Honour Judge Rupchand Bilaram, of the Court of the Judicial Commission of Sind, Karachi, India, who accompanied Norman G. Foster, secretary of the Ottawa Rotary Club, and John Balharrie, ex-Mayor of Ottawa and member of the Family and Domestic Court of the capital.

His Honour Judge Bilaram arrived in Ottawa, Monday and, being a Rotarian, looked up the capital club. From Mr. Foster he learned of the visit to be made to Chesterville, and asked that he might come along. These Rotary visits, said the judge, do more to give him a true picture of the country than any other method he knows.

Speaking beautiful English in a finely modulated voice, the swarthy judiciary was very sincere and conscientious in his talk. Introduced by President P. S. Boyd, the judge told of his experiences with Rotary's friendliness in many parts of the world, and how he believed the organization had a vast problem ahead to teach this friendliness to all nations and thereby bring about world peace.

He told of his native city of Karachi which has grown from a fishing village of 50 huts to a world-renowned metropolis of 200,000 people. The airport is second only to Croydon in Empire, and is the stopping place for all British planes to the East. One of the greatest archeological finds has been made nearby with the discovery of a stone-age village thought to have flourished in 5,000 B.C. Houses, made of stone, had walls two feet thick, and the ancients had fine baths. Drainage was highly perfected, and they had a system of coinage which, besides other hieroglyphics, bore the symbols 1, 2, 3 and 4. They worshipped gods, and these are depicted in drawings as always seated under trees. India was already prosperous in those early days, and trade was flourishing with Syria.

Rotary was organized in Karachi in 1933 and has a membership of 42. These men include Hindus, Moslems, Parsees and Christians who come from all parts of India, representative of Karachi's cosmopolitan population.

Judge Bilaram thanked the Chesterville Rotarians for their welcome, which was so typical of the movement the world over. His Rotary membership he considered his second passport. His British passport was of great benefit in his visit to Australia, New Zealand, the United States and Canada, but Rotary brougnt him into very close contact with men who have taken for their motto the ideal of service above self. Instead of visiting the fine buildings and a few dignitaries only, he has met and visited with thousands of men who have become close to him in a way that only the traveler can appreciate.

The Eastern judge is on his way home after a visit to Australia, New Zealand and the United States. He will leave shortly for London, England, and from there will take the overland route to Karachi, India.

W. P. Markle thanked the speakers and told them the welcome would be open for them any time they found it convenient to revisit Chesterville. Norman Foster, secretary of the Ottawa Club, which is sponsoring the local organization, held a conference with the directors after the luncheon concerning plans for the organization meeting set for Tuesday, April 26, and the charter night to follow early in June. G. B. Cummings, of Binghamton, N.Y., governor of District 172, which includes Chesterville, will attend the organization meeting, and invitations will go out to the clubs at Ottawa, Hull, Kemptville and Smiths Falls.

Secretary H. E. Wales read a card received from the Winnipeg Rotary club stating that H. G. Bigelow, of Chesterville, had met with that club last week.

Local Relatives Attend Funeral at Chittenango, N.Y.

The funeral was held this week at Chittenango, N.Y., of Mrs. Anderson Bailey who passed away early Tuesday morning after a year's illness. She was affiliated with Fenner church in all its activities, going to New York State 17 years ago from Canada.

Mrs. Bailey leaves her husband, two daughters, Mrs. Edwin Shaver and Mrs. Lee Barnes; four sons, Lester, Hartley and Arthur, at home, and Lawrence of Canastota. One son James died four years ago. Surviving also are two sisters and three brothers.

The funreal was attended by Mr. Wm. Bailey, Mr. and Mrs. Jay Bailey and Mrs. E. B. McMillan, of Chesterville. Service was held at the home and burial was made in Evergreen cemetery. Rev. Mr. Hunter, of Erieville, and Rev Mr. Atkinson, Canastota, officiated.

GOOD FRIDAY SERVICE.

The Good Friday service at Holy Trinity Anglican church will be conducted from 12 noon until 3 p.m., with Rev. G. O. Davies, rector, leading in the meditations.

CARD OF THANKS.

The members of the family of the late Mrs. Sarah Merkley wish to thank their many friends, neighbours and relatives for their kind expressions of sympathy and beautiful floral offerings received in their recent sad bereavement.

Elderly Township Resident Died in Cloverdale District

One of the oldest residents of Winchester township, Jane Steven, widow of the late Thomas Wilson, died on Friday in her 84th year, her death occurring at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Roy Docksteader, of Cloverdale, where she had resided for some time.

Born in Finch township the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Steven, she came after her marriage to the Melvin Settlement where she resided with her husband until about 34 years ago when they moved to Winchester village. Mr. Wilson died 28 years ago in this month.

Surviving besides Mrs. Docksteader are Miss Christina Wilson, R.N., Lady Superintendent of Cornwall General hospital, and one son, Lloyd Wilson, of Winchester.

The funeral was held at the Docksteader home on Monday at 1.30 p.m., being conducted by her pastor, Rev. W. D. Turner, assisted by Rev. W. S. Atchison. "The Old Rugged Cross" was sung by Mrs. R. J. Empey and Mrs. Hugh Wilson, and "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder" by the choir of St. Paul's church, Winchester.

The funeral cortege proceeded to Morewood where interment was made beside her husband in the Presbyterian cemetery. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Haldane Cummings, R. J. Empey, Geo. Earle, C .Hutchison, J. McCaslin and E. J. Christie.

Berwick

Mrs. J. J. Dutt and Mrs. Rose A. Aubin and Mrs. John P. Rady attended the funeral on Wednesday of the late Mr. John Robillard, of Moose Creek who died on Sunday at the Hotel Dieu hospital, Cornwall.

Nurse Cecile Smirle, of the General hospital, Cornwall, is spending a month at her parental home.

Mrs. Bergeron and little granddaughter, of Embrun, visited for a few days with Mr. Louis Lefebvre and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Miller and family moved last week to the Melvin Settlement.

Friends are glad to hear that Mrs. George Servage is able to be around again after being confined to her bed for some time with a fractured hip.

Study Book is Completed By Trinity United W.M.S.

The April meeting of the W.M.S. of Trinity United church was held on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. James Slosser. After the opening hymn, a moment of silence was observed in memory of two members of the auxiliary who passed away recently, Mrs. Ozias Durant and Mrs. Chester Merkley.

At the 12th annual meeting of the Dundas-Grenville Presbyterial to be held in Morrisburg United church on May 4, an invitation will be extended to hold the next meeting, 1939, in Chesterville.

Mrs. Chas. Munro and her committee had charge of the programme which consisted of a beautiful Easter service of scripture, songs and prayer followed by a dramatic presentation of the last chapter of the study book entitled "Do We Believe in Missions?" Those taking part were Mrs. George Barkley, Mrs. Fred. Forward, Mrs. D. McElheran, Mrs. John Helmer, Mrs. H. E. Wales, Mrs. Stanley Shay, Mrs. O. Colquhoun and Mrs. P. Allison. Miss Edith Johnston read the devotional leaflet and delightful solos were sung by Mrs. Myles Merkley and Mrs. Stanley Shay.
