Our Column

The weather this morning was anything but Spring like.

And there were those who predicted an open winter and early spring.

A little over three weeks till Easter Then for holidays and home comings.

The surest sign of spring we have yet seen was a carpet on a line and a man beating it.

Parliament opens at Ottawa this afternoon with usual ceremony and splendour. It is likely to be a very busy and very lively session.

Drivers with 1930 markers on their cars are running the risk of a fine. The term of grace ran out on March 1st. and any day the police may start a check-up on the old markers.

Owners of motor cars would appear to be in luck this season, if predictions and promises materialize. They are promised a reduction in insurance rates on their cars, also a reduction in the price of gasoline.

Miss Blache Little, of Hoboken, N. Y., holds an enviable record of having attended Sunday School 20 years without missing a class. What the Press would like to know is—What did Blanche do between times.

Melvin's Garage brought six new cars down from Oshawa last Friday. It's lucky they got here before the storm Thev are all new Chev, models, and as Ab. says, run like a top.

No single other factor entering the body from without has so rapid and deadly effect in changing the whole character of an individual as a narcotic. It is a soul poison banishing self control, distorting sense perceptions and under mining the moral tone of the personality.

Alcohol is a narcotic poison.

It was learned from Inspector Baker that Dundas County contains some 300 deer, and in the north-western section the animals are a nuisance to the householders in the summer, entering their gardens and eating growing vegetables. As many as six have been seen in the garden of a house at the same time says an Ottawa paper.

According to a statement made by Rev. Mr. Waddell in the United Church on Sunday morning last, the corner-stone of that beautiful church was laid just fifty years ago by Rev. Dr. Carman, then an outstanding minister and leader of the then Methodist Church. As stated by Rev. Mr. Waddell, the men who then undertook the erection in Winchester fifty years ago of that splendid church edifice were men not only of vision, but men of great faith. Very few communities of the size that Winchester was fifty years ago would shoulder so great an undertaking, depending wholly on the willing and free contribution of the people who at that date were the adherents of the Methodist cause. We wonder if such an undertaking could be successfully promoted today.

Total teaching days for 1931 are fewer than ever, according to a circular sent out by the department of education at Toronto to all Ontario schools. Two hundred days of actual tuition used to be the rule, but this year there are only 197 days. This applies, says the department, to high, continuation, public and separate schools. In the January to June period there are 118 days and in the fall term 79 days. Easter holidays will be from April 2nd to the 13th. The schools are to close for summer vacation on June 29 and reopen on September 1 Actually in most places these dates will be observed. June 29 falls on a Monday, and of course most school boards, at least in cities and towns will close the schools on Friday, the 26th This year September 1st falls on a Tuesday, and Labor Day on the 7th. It is the custom for the schools to open on the day after Labor Day Will the whole of the first week of September be added to the holidays? That would take a total of five days off the 197. The department circular points out that neither Arbor day nor Empire day is a holiday, though the latter is usually a half holiday if not a whole one in most of the schools.

Hydro's Good Year

Mr. McDonald, travelling Auditor and Inspector for the Ontario Hydro System, was in town this week, and reports everything in the very best of shape, and the accounts splendidly kept. He informed the Press that the past year would prove a profitable one for the municipality to the extent of over $600. During the past few days the mechanics have been kept very busy on outside work owing to damage done by the storm of Sunday and Monday last.

We are Grateful

The Winchester Press desires to express thanks to those who so kindly sent us their copy of the Press of Feb. 26, as requested. We desire also to in this way ackhowledge the receipt of three letters, one from Montreal, one from Brockville and one from a rural subscriber; commending and expressing their appreciation of the Editorial page of the Press. Oue subscriber wrote, "We read your editorials before we begin to look for the news." All of which is very encouraging to the editor. A former pastor of one of our churches writes the Press as follows, under date of March 10: "Allow me to congratulate you for the high standard you aim at in the paper which you edit. The editorials in the Winchester Press are such as to stimulate thought and create a desire for the nobler things in life. We welcome its weekly visit to our home."

Mr. Newvine's duties will include, besides operating the plant in the daytime, taking care of line troubles and repairs and servicing the town meters. He takes over his duties to-day.

Miss Helen Merkley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Merkley, of Morrisburg, and physical instructress at Ontario Ladies' College, Whitby, was honored by the Royal Life Saving Society last week, being one of six out of 2 000 to be granted the Honorary Associate's Award. This award is gained by Miss Merkley through her tireless effort and interest in the promotion of life saving and swimming in her department at Whitby Ontario Ladies' College.

The funeral service of the late Mrs Sarah A Deeks was held in the Lutheran Church, Williamsburg, on Saturday afternoon, conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. R. Cronmiller. The funeral was largely attended by many old friends and relatives in this community, showing the esteem in which the departed lady was held. The late Mrs. Deeks was a sister of Mrs. Ella Froats and Miss Emma Casselman, both of Williamsburg and Mrs. Cecilia Weegar of Chesterville, to whom sympathy is extended; also to her daughters, Mrs. E. M. Beckstead, of Morrisburg; Mrs. Thomas McLean of Chesterville, and Miss E. Maude Deeks, R. N., of New York City.

The March Storm

The terrefic gale and snow storm that passed over portions of Ontario and Quebec on Sunday and Monday last does not appear to have been as severe in this immediate section as in other parts, and the snow fall was less than in most places. It was severe enough, goodness knows, and all Sunday night it blew a perfect hurricane. The highway between Morrisburg and Ottawa was again closed, and will not be rightly opened for car traffic before the end of this week.

Killed By Falling Tree

Daniel O'Connell, an Irish lad, aged 18 years, and only out from his native land, was killed by a falling tree while working in the bush on the farm of Mr. James Fisher, near Kenmore, on Monday last. He was assisting in falling trees, and when a large tree was toppling over he started to run across the path in which the tree was falling and was caught by some of the larger branches. He died several hours afterwards. One leg was nearly torn from his body.

Dismissed The Charge

A charge of assault against Lorne Robinson, teacher of S. S. No. 3, Williamsburg, made by Archie McKoy, of Morrisburg, was dismissed by Magistrate McCormick in police court last Saturday. The charge followed Robinson's striking Arthur McKoy, 11, son of Archie McKoy, while reprimanding him in school for poor work. The boy proven to have been disobedient and impudent and the court dismissed the case. A large crowd lined the police offices as the case had created much interest in Morrisburg and vicinity.

Seriously Ill at Toronto

The many friends of Mrs. E. Flora will regret to learn that she is seriously ill at Welsley Hospital, Toronto. Mrs. Flora went to Toronto last Friday to spend the the week end with her daughter, Miss Marguerite and son, Dr. Fred Flora, who live in Toronto. On Sunday Mrs. Flora was taken ill with a severe attack of appendicitis, and on Monday afternoon the attending physicians decided that an operation was necessary. The operation was successfully performed, and while the physicians say that she is progressing as favourably as could be expected, Mrs. Flora is a very sick woman, and it may be some weeks before she will be able to return to her home.

W. J. Cameron, of Finch, Dead

A message from Finch on Tuesday says: A telephone call from Cornwall this morning brought a feeling of sadness to the whole community and surroundings when it was received about eleven o'clock this morning and bore the message that W. J. Cameron had passed away at the Cornwall General Hospital, where he had been a patient for the last two weeks.

The late Mr. Cameron was in his 41st year and was a son of Mr. Joseph Cameron, retired section foreman of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He was enjoying best of health until recently.

The late Mr. Cameron was very popular among all who knew him serving the United Counties as stationary engineer and general repair man for the last fifteen years.

Hard Drilling

Mr. Simzer, who has the contract to drill a well on the Skating Rink Property, has had hard going. He struck a layer of hard rock that for a time taxed his best steel drill and power to get through it. "It was the hardest piece of drilling I ever encountered," Mr. Simzer said. He is now down about 100 feet, but does not expect to strike a good flow of water at less than 150 feet. He is authorized to go deep enough, even to 200 feet or more, to get the proper supply of water.

Enjoyable Play

All available seats were taken in the Town Hall on Friday evening, March 6th, when members of the Presbyterian Young People's Guild presented their humorous play entitled "The Runaways." Mrs. W. D Turner, President of the Guild, was in charge of the presentation and its success was due to her entire direction and clever interpretation of each role.

Too much praise cannot be given the entire cast for the splendid and thoroughly satisfying performance of this difficult but very humorous play showing in every act the result of excellent training. The membership of the cast included the Misses Edna Robinson Marion Turner, Phyllis Henderson. Vivian Lee and Messrs Harry Rodney, Robert Robinson, Gordon Johnston, Lester Bell, Morris Wilson and Alfred Bostock.

Rev. W D Turner acted as chairman and between acts, Miss Helen Smith, A T. C. M., rendered piano solos which added greatly to the evening's entertainment. At the close of the play, Mr. Harry Rodney voiced the appreciation of the players to Mrs. Turner, and Miss Edna Robinson presented her with a boquet of flowers. The proceeds amounted to $73.

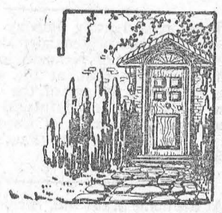
By MARIE ANN BEST



Conservation of energy is efficiency operating at its highest level. It prevents the mind from getting in a rut and wandering around itself, like a cow around a stake. The highest form of conservation of energy is that which makes for control at the center, so that no matter what happens on the surface of one's being, there's quiet in the deep.—W. John Murray.

Good Management

When we think of house keeping as an occupation it can hardly be listed as a trade It is in a class by itself, for there are all kinds and myriad ways of housekeeping. Each household has its own particular methods of doing things, developed gradually through generations of that particular family.

Some women go about their homes quietly and calmly. Everything always seems to be in its place. The work appears to be always done and there is lots of time for all things. An atmosphere of leisure permeates the home even while a great deal is being achieved.

In other homes the mistress of the house is continually in a rush. Time seems a hard master and the day is gone before even the routine is accomplished, let alone any extras or outside work Quite often the trouble arises because so much time is frequently frittered away and most people are more or less guilty of this at times. One just doesn't know where the time goes. The work piles up even though we seemed to be constantly busy, forgetting about the few minutes of various kinds of relaxation which spun out into an hour or more, until one grows quite excited when all sorts of tasks are remembered and crowd in on one's time that must, it seems, be done at the moment.

Many good housekeepers take a little time first thing in the early morning (they especially advocate early rising) to jot down a list of what must be done during the day. Then use of the clock is a good key to help you open the door of order and unruffled serenity. It will aid you to get the routine over as quickly as possible. Meals are planned and other household duties quickly despatched one by one in a systematic way with a clear mind, allowing just so much time for each thing. Plan as you go and clean up as you go along, then because the routine is done long hours remain for the extras, the short periods for rest, and for the enjoyment of the things you always wanted to do but never seemed to just have the necessary time to accomplish.

Twilight Hour Story — About Wee Chicks and Other Little Friends.

Chap. 13

It was a good thing Jimmie Chick and his three little chick sisters were inside their warm box that cold night or I guess they would have been like the butterfly. But now, since Mr. Sun got up it was so warm outside that Mamma Lady thought it would be a fine chance to give them some fresh air. So she and Billy put the box outside in a warm corner and covered it over with an old window screen so nothing could get in to scare them. They liked it fine out there and were growing fast, just like little weeds. Do you know how fast that is? Well, ask Mother or Daddy.

Billy happened to look out of the window, and what do you think he saw? The cutest little gray kitten with short hair came over from the barn where it lived with its mamma, the barn cat. Little kittens are so pretty, don't you think so? But when this little fellow saw the box, oh, dear, he jumped right up on top of the screen! It was a good thing the screen was on the box, wasn't it, so he couldn't get in? He looked down at the chicks and they were a teeny bit frightened. Of course he wouldn't hurt them, but he wanted to play, and at last he did find a hole in the screen and when Billy saw him, do you know what puss was doing? He was putting his funny little paw down the hole as far as he could and waving it around trying to touch the chicks. Billy thought he better get him off there or puss might tip the screen and the chicks would get out and get lost again. So he put the kitty on his shoulder and Mamma Lady mended the hole with a piece of string.

Billy took the little gray kitten back to the barn where Topsy, his mamma, the barn cat, lived. She was so glad to see him and licked him all over from his head to the tip of his tail with her red tongue and then purred so loudly. I wonder how kitties purr anyway, dont' you? They only purr when they are happy, did you know that? So if you havent got a kitty of your own and you see one, try petting it and see if it will purr. It is just the loveliest soft little song that it sings. Topsy, the barn cat Mamma, was different from Fluffy, the house cat, for Topsy had short hair just like her little grey kitten, only her fur was real shiny black, not grey. Isn't that funny — black cat had a grey kitten. Our own white Mammas never have black little girls or boys, do they? But then, sometimes Mamma's or Daddy's eyes are blue and yours might be brown, or the other way around. Did you ever notice that?

But I didn't tell you what Fluffy, the house cat, looked like, did I? She was very different from Topsy. In the first place she wasn't black like Topsy, but she was yellow. Just as yellow as the chicks, only she had big brown swirls around her body and brown rings on her tail. Her fur wasn't short and glossy like Topsy's, but it was real long, almost like a little pomeranian doggie. You know what he looks like, I am sure, only, it was more silky and soft and she had a big tail that looked like a squirrel's tail. Did you ever see a squirrel or chipmunk? Only Fluffy's tail was much bigger than the squirrel's whole body, head and tail all put together, for she was a Persian puss. Fluffy was very proud of being a Persian, and walked like it too. How do you walk when you are proud? Well, that is the way she walked. All the same she could catch mice in the house. All the mice had to live outside under the ground or she would catch them, because Mamma Lady didn't like mice to come in her house and eat up all her cheese and good things without even asking for it. Mamma Lady liked Fluffy just as well as she liked Jimmie Chick and the other three chicks that looked so much alike.

Another thing, out in the barn, Billy's Daddy liked Topsy, the barn cat so much because she chases away the big rats that come in the barn to see if they can eat up all the grain that belongs to George, the horse, and Molly, the cow, who gives such a lot of good milk. My, but milk is good, isn't it? Topsy fights those big rats even if they are strong, and thinks hard how she can catch them. Then she hurries back to her little kitties which she has hidden in a box in a dark corner where nobody can see it. Mamma Lady put a nice cosy piece of old blanket in it so the five baby kitties could keep snug and warm, and Topsy came in and snuggled around them, washing them all well, for she washes them every time she comes to them because she likes them to be so very clean. After she was all through she purred and purred them all to sleep and soon went off to sleep too, curled up in the box so contented and warm.

Your Riches

Count your riches as you may,
Seek your fame where'er you will,
Peace must mark the close of day
Or you'll be unhappy still
Friends must trust in all you do
Or no joy can come to you.

Gold is good to have and own,
Fame is worth the winning, too,
But if these you gain alone
Little will they do for you,
Friends must be and love must stay
Or your life is thrown away.

View it howsoe'er you will
Life is more than wealth or fame,
More than cunning, more than skill;
Peace requires an honored name,
Though the heights you stand upon
Love and faith must follow on.

Gentle deeds must mark the strong,
Thought for others grace the wise,
Skill cannot conceal a wrong,
Oft with triumph, friendship, dies.
Happiest they, whate'r their place,
Who have touched their lives with grace.

—Edgar A. Guest.

FAITH

Only beyond our knowledge is there the exercise of faith. It is where sure knowledge ends that sure faith begins. Even a suspicious doubted will trust his suspected neighbor "as far as he can see." But He whom we trust, and in whom we have faith, can be trusted beyond sight, and against sight, in darkness, or when all appearances seem against His loving purposes and plans in our behalf. God will never fail us, and our restful trust in Him ought never to fail.

You can't do it all, but it's up to you to do all you can.

Strange Creatures Found in Crates

By Philpott, in "Animal Life"

Dealers and sellers who receive cargoes of fruit, etc., from abroad are often surprised—and not unfrequently greatly thrilled also—by certain things turning up in the crates, barrels, baskets, and sacks for which they are not specially desirous of receiving.

Strange living animals and curious insects from tropical or semi-tropical regions are not at all an uncommon feature amongst such cargoes of fruit and vegetables, whilst occasionally astonishing and interesting letters from the people afar who have sent the packages are also discovered.

Two railway porters who were unloading bananas at Southampton docks recently, jumped when they unexpectedly saw a bunch of these begin to raise itself in the crate that they were handling. They made a careful inspection ere touching it further, and were surprised to see a large snake raise its head and hiss at them. They at once fled.

However, an ex-soldier, named New, who had had experience in the handling of snakes in India, managed to secure the reptile, and dropped it safely into his haversack. Later on he disposed of the snake to a local taxidermist, who killed and stuffed it.

A ship laden with fruit was being emptied at Hull last March, when from one basket of the fruit there sprang an animal the size of a large rat, which the dockers, however, managed to capture. It was of light fawn color, with large, shiny, black eyes, dark markings, paws like a donkey, a long, soft tail curling up in a knot, and a long tapering snout.

Mr. A. I. Peacock, formerly of the London Zoo, gave it as his opinion that the charming little creature was a species of opossum, which lives on insects and small living animals. It had probably come from the West Indies, and Mr. Peacock said that if, when a bunch of fruit was picked there, such an animal chanced to be within it, its instinct would certainly be to "play possum," and keep secreted until the fruit had been packed.

In June, 1920, a New Zealand sheep farmer, whilst attending to some great flocks of sheep, lost his gold watch. He soon discovered that it had somehow fallen from his pocket, but, try as he would, he could not find it on the ground near. He was astonished this year when the watch was returned to him (it had his name and address engraved inside) from a city in the United States, to which some bales of wool had been shipped by him in 1929.

In a cargo of apples received by Covent Garden, London, from South Africa, a porter, on opening one of the barrels, was half frightened to death by seeing a tremendous spider—for so it seemed to him, being almost as big as his fist—dash out, and make its way rapidly amongst the crates on the ground.

Luckily, he did not try to capture it by hand, though it was eventually killed by a blow from a thick piece of wood. Then it was pronounced by experts to be a very large specimen of the famous and terribly poisonous tarantula, of which both natives and white folk in South Africa and elsewhere fight as shy of as possible.

For Smithfield fruit market, Manchester, two men at a railway goods depot were unloading a crate of bananas last April, when a large snake, which had been concealed amongst the fruit, suddenly emerged and bit both of them. They were taken at once to Ancoats Hospital, and after receiving attention, were sent home. It was believed by the doctor that the bites were both poisonous, but the prompt attenion, no doubt, saved the men from serious consequences, if not death itself. The snake was killed soon after it had bitten the men.

Probably no dealers and workers amongst fruit have, however, been so thrilled unexpectedly as were a couple of dockers at Liverpool a few years ago, when, whilst they were removing some large cases of fruit which had just come in from Western America, they saw, lying amongst these cases, an enormous boa-constrictor, which, being thus rudely and suddenly disturbed, began to raise its head and unfold its great body in a very threatening manner.

During last June a north England fruiterer found a novel note inside a barrel of apples which had come from a farm at Sorrell, Tasmania. The farmer, who said he was a young man of twenty, stated that he wanted a wife from England, domesticated, a good cook and housekeeper, also able to keep accounts intelligently. He added that to such a young woman he could offer a capital home and marriage, and he went on:

'So far as looks go, I am not very particular. But she must not be a flapper, or at all flighty, nor a girl afraid to work in double harness. Above all, she must not be bad-tempered, as I hate bad-tempered people from top to bottom."

PILGRIMS

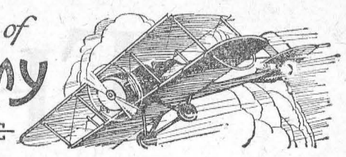
The inferior creatures find in the objects and scenes of earth enough to satisfy their limited natures. But we are mightier than the perishing world, and, herefore, find no rest in any earthly thing. There is here no pillow for the head, no home for the heart, for the pilgrims of eternity. Our rarest delights, our noblest experiences, speak to us most forcibly of our immortality; just as the strange midnight sky, lit up by the Southern Cross, brings sad thoughts to the heart of the sailor on the Pacific Ocean, and reminds him how far he is from home.

The contents of the stomach of a seal captured in the Arctic ocean a few years ago indicated that the animal had dived to a depth of 3,000 feet.

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE



WHAT CAME BEFORE:

Captain Jimmy and his dog Scottie set out in their Vickers airplane to see the world. Captain Jimmy is a late member of the Royal Air Force; Scottie is a bristling Scotch terrier who as a pup adopted Captain Jimmy and stayed with him through all his adventures since. Just out of Calgary, Jimmy, Scottie and their good plane Eagle run into a violent storm.

Boy, how that rain did pelt down; and the wind whined and whistled out of a black stormy sky. The good plane Eagle plunged and reared like a huge dragon-fly. Scottie, with his Scotch austereness, never made a sound, though he must have been scared white beneath his whiskery black coat. Suddenly we drove forward into an air pocket and the whole plane dropped away from under us for 20 or 30 feet. Perhaps you have been in an elevator sometimes when the operator has let it drop quickly. That's quite like the sensation you have when a plane hits an air pocket and she drops from under you. It makes one's stomach a bit uneasy.

Let me tell you that I was worried. I don't mind a squall or a storm when I am out in the open, but among the foothills—well, that's a different situation.

I headed down as best I could and down we went. Sometimes straight down, sometimes sidewise, then a gust of wind would pick us up and whirl us about. Soon I didn't know whether we'd land in one piece or a piece at a time.

But land we did—bump-bump-bump. We taxied along the ground. The rain came down in sheets and I could not see ten feet ahead. I steered by guess only—and what a guess! Suddenly ahead of us there loomed a tall tree. I swung as far to the left as I could to avoid a head-on collision, but I couldn't clear it. Smack! We crashed our wing against the tree—the meanest tree I ever saw. It was almost in the exact center of a little grassy valley—and it was the only tree within many yards of us. With all the rest of the whole world to grow in, of course, it had to grow right there, and, of course, I had to steer straight for it.

I wonder if you have ever crashed into something while going thirty or forty miles an hour? I hope not. But if you have, you can understand what happened to us. The straps held me to my seat, but I was so shaken up and bruised that I could scarcely move. And Scottie — the poor terrier, popped out of the cockpit like a shot out of a gun. Sailing through the air he went, and landed in a thick clump of grass, where he rolled over—not once, but a dozen times. Finally he stopped rolling and I untangled myself from what had been an airplane and went over and picked him up. A sorrier pup you never saw. It hurt to stand up and worse to sit down. Soon, by good luck, the rain stopped, and we scratched the wet top of some pine needles and settled down as comfortably as possible to talk things over.

But night was coming on, and we had to find somewhere to sleep. When I asked Scottie about it, he wasn't even the least bit interested He kept right on licking the bruises and lumps he had. Anyway, a dog doesn't care much where he sleeps, he simply follows his tail around two or three times, and settles down, and he's in bed.

That sort of bed doesn't appeal to me so much, however, so I got up and started over to the little old deserted cabin. It was only a rough little cabin some woodsman had built—and was really as lonely as could be—but it looked mighty snug and homey to me right then. The sun was rapidly sinking behind the hills, and strange sounds drifted down from the tall pine covered slopes nearby. A great Barred Owl went "Whoo-Whoo" back in the dark timber. Perhaps you have heard a Barred Owl? It sounds like a hungry wolf and a wildcat rolled into one—and, of course, while you know its' just a Barred Owl, it doesn't seem to help much, for in spite of all you know, you're scared all the same.

Well, boys and girls, that little cabin looked mighty good to me, and I started up the little trail to the door. Suddenly the bushes began to move. Yes, sir, moved just like as if some heavy animal was trying to peer out at you without being seen. Then there was a snarl. A nasty mean snarl, and the biggest, fiercest bear I ever hope to see lumbered out and stood looking at us . . ."

A Doctors' Dinner-Party

Dinners for doctors depend largely—too largely—on luck. Get a member of the profession comfortably seated at the table and set an appetizing meal before him—and it's dollars to doughnuts that some urgent patient will desire his presence before dessert is served.

Probably Mrs. H. W. Carter, wife of a Washington, North Carolina, physician, knew this all along. But if she didn't, she does now.

Not long ago, says an Associated Press dispatch from Washington, "she invited several of Dr. Carter's fellow practitioners to dinner." Reading on:

While the guests were awaiting the summons to the dining-room, the telephone rang. It was an emergency call for Dr. DeWitt Kluttz, and he grabbed his hat.

Two minutes later Dr. P. A. Nicholson was called to the 'phone. He disappeared in the wake of Dr. Kluttz.

Just as dinner was served, a call for Dr. D. T. Taylor, and before the oyster cocktails had been finished, Dr. E. W. Larkin also had to leave.

"Well," began Mrs. Carter.

Just then the telephone rang again. Dr. Carter answered, seized his hat, and rushed out of the door.

Mrs. Carter finished the dinner in solitary state.

Congo Railroad Nears Completion

New Line Will Link Copper Country of Katanga Area With Deep Water

London—Through the fever-infected reaches of the Congo engineers are pushing twin rails of steel to bring dark Africa's produces a week nearer to the market.

The newly built railroad will be inaugurated within the next few months. It will link the copper producing country of the Katanga area with deep water and world consumption. Transportation facilities thus will be afforded for the country's exports, which in 1929 totaled about $1,700,000.

By eliminating shipments of exports to the east coast of Africa the new line, with its connections, will permit ships to call for their cargo at Lobito in the Portuguese Angola. This will save twice the steaming distance between Lobito and the east coast points, clipping twelve days from the round trip.

The Benguela road is now in operation as far as the Belgian Congo frontier, a distance of approximately 750 miles. The new line will add some 500 miles to its terminus at Elizabethville.

Additional railroad facilities for the Congo are projected to connect Stanleyville and Lake Albert, which will provide the last link in rail-water communication between Cairo and the Cape.

Products of the Congo consist largely of palm olive oil and its by-products, cotton, cocoa, rubber, coffee, copper and some reef gold and diamonds.

New Hudson Bay Route To Be Used This Fall

Winnipeg.—The first practical test of the Hudson Bay grain route to Europe will be made in September, and it is expected that by the opening of navigation in 1932 all facilities of the new Atlantic port will be available for whatever business may offer.

Contracts provide for the completion of the grain elevators at Churchill, terminus of the new Hudson Bay Railway, and of the new Atlantic route by September. Dredging and dock extension will be finished in the Spring of 1932. The authorities have decided that it will be possible to make a test shipment of two or three cargoes, or about 750,000 bushels of wheat, this Fall, from which valuable lessons will be learned in respect to freight and insurance rates. Shipping companies are prepared to co-operate.

For many years the producers of Western Canada have looked forward to opening of the Hudson Bay route to Europe, and now that the project is so near completion they are watching each step with intense interest. They expect that a considerable part of the Western wheat crop, particularly that originating in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, will find its way to market through the Churchill elevators, and they will be greatly disappointed if the route does not reduce materially the freight charges on grain. For the moment at least, the long controversy over the possibilities of the route is stilled. All parties, even those who opposed most vigorously the expenditure of many millions on the railway and on port terminals, now are agreed that it must be tested not by theory and deduction, but through the hard decisiveness of practical experience.

Queer Fish Walks On Ocean Bottom

Chicago.—A fish that seems to prefer walking to swimming, and which has the pedal equipment necessary for perambulating on the bottom of the sea, has been added to the piscatorial exhibits of the ield Museum of Natural History.

The batfish, as this species is known, comes from the tropical and semi-tropical seas of the Gulf of Mexico According to an announcement from the museum, looked down at from above it seems to have a body like a toad, but this terminates in a fishy tail. "Looked at from the side, it appears to have four legs with finny feet, and these are yet more peculiar because the pair close together under the throat are the hind feet, while the forefeet or hands are far apart and well set back," the description continued.

"While it can swim with its tail, like any ordinary fish, the batfish usually walks or hops along the bottom in comparatively shallow places. In its hopping, it moves exactly in the same way as a rabbit feeding on a lawn. The weight is rested on the forward pair of feet and the rear ones are brought ahead, then the weight is shifted to the rear pair and the forward ones moved along."

Motoring Troubles

The motorist adopted pleading tactics.

"I wish you'd overlook it this time, constable," he said. "As a matter of fact, I was hurrying to town on very important business."

"'Fraid I can't help that," said the policeman.

"I never drive fast as a rule. But I've got to get to town quickly to see my solicitor—"

"Well," said the policeman, "you'll have a bit more news for him now."

Quotations

It is a good thing for an uneducated man to read books of quotations. The quotations, when engraved upon the memory, give you good thoughts. They also make you anxious to read the authors and look for more.

Something like 5,000 motor-coaches enter London every day, while more than 1,500 use road-sites for picking up and setting down passengers.

Naval Treaty Terms Accepted By Italy

France and Italy Now Reach Basis For Limitation Compromise

Rome.—The Italian government have now accepted proposals advanced by Great Britain which will permit its full adhesion to the London naval treaty.

The proposals previously had been accepted by the French government. Adhesion of the two governments to the London treaty, reached at conclusion of the naval conference almost a year ago, which makes that pact a five-power instrument instead of a three-power treaty as it is now.

Negotiations which brought the Italian acceptance were carried on by Rt. Hon. Arthur Henderson, foreign secretary, and Rt. Hon. A. V. Alexander, first lord of the admiralty for Great Britain, and Dino Grandi, foreign minister, and Rear Admiral Guiseppe Siriana for Italy. Premier Mussolini himself carried on part of the conversations.

The proposals advanced by Great Britain, some reports said, specify a specified relationship to the British that of Great Britain and inasmuch as France previously has accepted a specified rleationship to the British navy, fix indirectly the relationship between the Italian and French navies it is understood that the Franco-Italian parity controversy is in effect postponed until 1936, when the entire naval treaty comes up for review.

The agreement apparently eliminates at least for five years the threat of an Italian-French naval race. The London treaty, signed last April, prescribes limitation and reduction of naval armament for the United States, Great Britain and Japan and agreement on some phases of the naval disarmament problem among those three nations, France and Italy.

Under the limitation clauses 8-inch gun cruiser tonage is fixed at 146,800 for Great Britain, 180,000 for the United States and 108,400 for Japan. Six-inch cruiser tonnage: Great Britain, 192,000; United States, 143,500, and Japan, 100,450. Destroyers: Great Britain, 150,000; United States, 150,000; Japan, 105,500. Submarine tonnage is equal at 52,700 for each of the three. France and Italy signed only those sections relating to "humanization" of submarines, a capital ship holiday and certain other technical phases.

A new scheme of naval limitation whereby world powers will be asked to limit their maximum construction to 25,000-ton warships will be proposed by France, Britain, and Italy, it was learned at the foreign office recently.

Fire and Drowning Recalls Old Curse

Hastings, England—A "fire and water" curse, placed on historic Battle Abbey by an enraged monk nearly 400 years ago, is being recalled here in connection with the recent burning of part of the structure.

The malediction was pronounced in 1543 after Henry VIII had dissolved the chapter and delivered the abbey to a court favorite.

"Your family by fire and water shall miserably perish," the infuriated monk shouted to the new owner, Sir Anthony Browne, as he burst into the dining room after the dissolution order had been posted.

"Two of Sir Anthony's nephews were drowned," the Very Rev. W. W. Youard, now dean of the abbey, said. "Part of the abbey was destroyed by fire; recently Lady Webster, wife of the owner was drowned, and now this fire has come."

The abbot's hall, a section dating from the eleventh century, was destroyed by the latest fire. It housed many relics associated with the Battle of Hastings, in which William the Conqueror defeated Harold. In late years a school for girls had occupied the hall.

The Bridal Cactus

A cactus was carried by a bride instead of the more usual bouquet of orange-blossom at a Warsaw wedding recently. It was stated, in reply to inquiries, that the cactus brought good luck.

It will come as a surprise to most people to know that the cactus is "lucky"—so far it hasn't usually been credited with producing either good or bad fortune. Carried by a bride, indeed, it rather suggests a warning to the bridegroom, because the average cactus is fairly well provided with the means of self-defence.

The cactus is hardly likely, therefore, to win general favor as a bridal bouquet. The more usual orange-blossom can, after all, produce reason for its claim to be a luck-bringer. According to authorities on folklore, it is appropriate at a wedding because the orange-tree bears flowers and fruit at the same time. So the bride's orange-blossom means that she will have a family and keep her good looks.

Northern March

When the sun shines upon the crust of March
In the bare wood, how blue the shadows lie
Along the snow between the gray tree-boles!
And where the muffled stream runs, bluer still,
Between its snowy banks edged with frail ice,
The silvery oaks and sugar maples stand
Like a faint tracing in a lacquer tray,
Or a worn pattern on old Sheffield plate.
The strong sun melts the snow in open places;
A calling crow flies over, trailing north
His silent shadow down the wooded slope; . . .
A bluebird flies to an apple bough.
—Bliss Carman, in "Sanctuary."

Canadian Fish Take to the Air

From Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, comes the news that fish have taken to the air in the Canadian northwest. To be exact, they have been taken by air to market. A Government bulletin supplies the following interesting information on this subject. "Fish caught in Lac la Ronge, in Northern Saskatchewan, are flown twice daily to Prince Albert, a distance of 200 miles and from there shipped by rail to Chicago, New York and other American and Canadian centres. Each plane carries about 1,600 pounds of fish in an unfrozen condition, and immediately on reaching Prince Albert they are packed in ice for shipment in 50-pound boxes. While airplane transportation has been reported satisfactory, it was found that increasing demand for the northern fish made necessary an additional means of carriage; so two motor tractors, each hauling a heated caboose with a carrying capacity of about 7,000 pounds of unfrozen fish, have been put into service, and a trip from the lake by the two tractors means approximately sufficient fish can be brought to Prince Albert to make up a carload lot for shipment. Though this is the first year in which fish have been handled by plane, catches from waters in the more remote areas of Northern Saskatchewan and Alberta have been successfully marketed as far away as the cities of the United States for several seasons past. Fish from Lake Athabasca, Northern Alberta, for instance, have won market favor, notwithstanding that the distance they have to be carried from the lake to the international boundary alone is about 700 miles." —"The New Outlook."

Reversible Vestees

Women who make their own detachable vestees have learned the advantage of having these bits of daintiness finished with equal care and attractiveness at both ends. When this is done, the vestee is quickly changed, end for end, in case it becomes spotted while being worn. This has been found a simple way to avoid the embarrassment of having to wear an untidy-looking vestee resulting sometimes from a little mishap at table or during the serving of informal refreshments.

When selecting ready-made vestees it is well to consider this interchangeable, end-to-end, advantage. If the decoration is vertical, in the nature of pin tucking, drawnwork or insettings of lace, one has only to add a corresponding band of lace to the lower end of the vestee, thus making the entire piece suitable to wear with either end at the top. Now that small buttons are so much in vogue as a trimming detail, a closely set line of these, either in white or color, is a modish center decoration for a vestee or georgette or voile, both of which fabrics are easily kept fresh. Eggshell, flesh, or any of the off-white shades, are excellent for combining with white or slightly ecru lace which finishes the vestee at top and bottom. Several small tucks on each side of a center row of buttons gives the desired vertical trimming. Dark buttons on light fabrics are specially smart just now, the color matching the predominating tone of the dress, but there is never any mistake in using small, white pearl buttons, which make the vestee wearable with other than one dress.

In the Same Boat

It was little Timothy's first day at school. Shortly after the opening of the first lesson he walked up to the school-teacher's desk and said:

"I ain't got no pencil."

The teacher, with a shocked expression on her face, said:

"Oh, Timothy, I haven't a pencil!"

A sympathetic look crossed the small boy's face, and he replied:

"Ye ain't, either? Well, we're both in the same fix, ain't we?"

The Pleasure Was Theirs

The mistress of the house rang the bell to call her maid.

"Jane," she said, when the girl arrived, "did you tell those ladies who just called that I was not at home?"

"Yes, ma'am," replied the girl.

"What did they say?" asked the mistress.

"They all smiled ,and said, 'How fortunate'," Jane answered.

Tourists to Make Trips in Zeppelin

Graf Zeppelin Will Also Be Used as Taxi to Egypt and Spain

Arrangements for low-priced flights on the Graf Zeppelin will bring the experience of a ride in the famous world-roaming dirigible within the reach of almost all travelers to Germany this summer.

Short flights over Germany for as little as $36 a passenger will be offered for the benefit of tourists, says an announcement of the Hamburg-American Lines, general agents for the Luftschiffbau Zeppelin. The minimum fare will be charged for a four-hour flight over either Lake Lucerne, the Black Forest or the Tyrol. Most of the flights will be from Friedrichshafen, a few from Berlin.

In addition to serving as an outing machine, the Graf Zeppelin will be run in a taxi service to Egypt, Spain, the French Riviera and other countries, including the Scandinavian. The ship will be made available for charter by groups of tourists, societies and clubs, whenever a minimum of fifteen passengers is booked. The dirigible will accommodate thirty-five passengers.

Tentative plans have been made for a cruise over the Mediterranean to Egypt in April. Definite arrangements have been made for a cruise over Spain, leaving Friedrichshafen on May 29. The Zeppelin will stop at Seville, and cruise over Lisbon, Oporto, Vigo, Santander, San Sebastian, Biarritz, Toulouse, Barcelona, Valencia, Malaga and Gibraltar, returning to Germany June 2.

Other trips will be made to the Baltic, the Mediterranean, over the Alps and to England and France.

Finds West Favors Ontario Produce

Toronto.—Growing tendency in the prairie provinces to favor Ontario farm products was found by A. H. Wilford, chairman of the recent campaign, "Onion Week," who has just returned from a trip across Canada to ascertain the results of the campaign.

Careful grading and packing in Ontario goods were the reasons offered by Mr. Wilford for increased use of Ontario produce. Buyers favored Canadian-grown fruits and vegetables, he said, and care in their packing and grading had resulted in building up assurance of their dependability.

Many more onions were being used in the prairie provinces as the result of the campaign, he said.

The very spring and root of honesty and virtue lie in the felicity of lighting on good education.—Plutarch.

Find Vitamin C In Peas and Beans

Washington—Dried peas and beans can be endowed with some of the valuable food properties of fresh vegetables by the simple process of sprouting them, recent studies by the Bureau of Home Economics of the U. S. Department of Agriculture have revealed.

Ordinarily dried beans and peas are lacking in the valuable vitamin C, but the sprouting process in some way produces this essential diet accessory.

Complete absence of vitamin C in the diet results in scurvy, formerly the dread of sailors on long sea voyages, many persons endanger their health because of an unperceived deficiency of vitamin C in their diet. This food deficiency also is thought to be an important cause of tooth decay and of many cases of so-called rheumatism.

Citrus fruits, tomatoes and raw cabbage have been recognized as important sources of vitamin C for a number of years, but until recently beans had not been considered as a possible source.

To obtain vitamin source from dried beans and peas, the Bureau of Home Economics experimented with several methods of sprouting. One simple method was simply to roll up a sheet of cheesecloth sprinkled with dried beans, and keep moist until the sprouts were an inch long.

Sprouted seeds, long used in Chinese dishes, have a mild flavor and make up into tasty dishes.

Value of Farm Lands Declines $5 An Acre

Ottawa.—Value of farm lands in Canada in 1930 showed a considerable decline in consequence of the fall in the prices of agricultural products, says a report issued recently by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Average value of occupied farm lands as a whole, including both improved and unimproved land, as well as dwelling houses, barns, stables and other farm buildings, is returned as $32 per acre, as compared with $37 in 1929.

By provinces the average values are as follows, with the previous year's values within brackets: Prince Edward Island, $42 ($43); Nova Scotia, $39 ($36); New Brunswick, $28 ($35); Quebec, $48 ($55); Ontario, $52 ($60). Manitoba, $22 ($26); Saskatchewan, $22 ($25); Alberta, $24 ($28); British Columbia, $76 ($90). The average values in 1930 of orchard and fruit lands, including buildings, etc., in the chief fruit-growing provinces, are estimated as follows, the figures for 1929 being given within brackets: Nova Scotia, $94 ($118); Ontario, $110 ($147); British Columbia, $291 ($314).

First Plane Leaves Croydon For Africa

Imperial Airways Inaugurates Nine-Day Service Over 5,114-Mile Route to Tanganyika

London—The first section of the Imperial Airways route to Capetown, Union of South Africa, was inaugurated on Feb. 28th when a nine-ton Argosy air liner left Croydon with thousands of letters for delivery in various parts of Africa.

A large crowd, including Colonel W. H. Franklin, Trade Commissioner in East Africa, and air line officials, cheered as the great machine took off in a drizzling rain. For the present, no passengers will be carried in Africa on this service, but two passengers were aboard on this initial flight, one for the Continent and the other for Karachi, India, changing at Cairo.

The mail consisted of fifty bags containing more than 40,000 letters, 10,000 of which were sent by stamp collectors. In addition the plane carried half a ton of urgent freight.

The aircraft travelled across Europe to Athens, where the cargo was transferred to a flying boat for the Mediterranean journey to Egypt. From Cairo the boat flew long the new 2,760-mile route to Mwanza in Tanganyika Territory, completing 5,114 miles from London in nine days, a journey taking thirty-two days by ship and train.

The new service is to be run each Saturday morning from Croydon. Captain H. H. Perry was the pilot, accompanied by a mechanic. The first return flight leaves Tanganyika March 10, and the air liner to arrive back at Croydon March 19 with African mails. In several months the whole route will be opened and it will be possible to reach Cape Town from London in eleven days at a fare of about $650. The first class boat fare is about $450, but the air route saves six days.

This inauguration is a sequel to the pioneer work of Sir Alan Cobham, commenced six years ago, when he made a great survey flight to South Africa and back.

Machine Transmits Written Text on Radio

Detroit—A machine which transmits written words by radio and reproduces them instantly at any distant point or points in the same manner as a telegraph printer circuit, has been perfected by Glenn W. Watson, local salesman.

The sending apparatus resembles a typewriter, to which has been attached a revolving disc, and the receiving set is of similar construction. As the letter key on the sending machine is depressed, its characteristic impulse is sent over the air, causing the disc to revolve. When the impulse is received, the disc on the receiving set is turned so that the same letter is printed by the receiving apparatus.

Each disc contains the normal characters found on a keyboard. The discs are perfectly synchronized and controlled by the radio waves, thus assuring exact reproduction of the message sent.

When exhibited to local scientists here, the machine is believed likely to revolutionize transmission methods for police work or others requiring circuit connections within a limited area.

15 Million Parasites May Save Peach Crop

New Haven, Conn.—In an attempt to save this state's peach crop, more than 15,000,000 parasites will be released this spring in time to destroy the eggs of the peach moth, a parasite of the peach tree, it was announced by the Connecticut experiment station recently. In case some eggs escape and are hatched into larvae, the experiment station is breeding another parasite which prefers the juicy worm instead of the egg of the moth. About 900,000 of these will be released later in the spring, and the Connecticut peach crop this summer is expected to mature unmolested by the pests.

Breeding the parasites in the laboratories involves the use of carefully controlled incubators, refrigeration, and electric lights which simulate winter, summer and sunlight.

Family Watch Sold to Former Kaiser

Potsdam, Ger.—A gold watch that ticked for Frederick the Great a century and a half ago was knocked down for 5000 marks, or about $1200, to Wilhelm von Hohenzollern, the last of Frederick's successors, at the auction here recently of the furnishings of the Glienicke Castle.

This castle is the property of Prince Friedrich Leopold von Hohenzollern, a cousin of the former Kaiser, who has been living in Switzerland the last few years.

Other bidders withdrew when the offer of the "House of Doorn" was announced, and a crowd of bargain hunters who had come to pick up relics of the imperial regime applauded when the auctioneer declared the watch sold to the exiled former Kaiser.

Surprisingly low prices were paid for other items. Some idea of the popularity of royal portraits in Germany these days was indicated in the price brought by five lithographs of Prussians kings and princes, the whole lot being knocked down for $15.00.

Pussywillows Early

Fort William—A large sprig of pussywillows in full bud, found on Island No. 2, Feb. 24th, by a local resident is said to be six weeks ahead of schedule. An old-timer, resident here for 37 years, says he has never seen a February so mild nor pussywillows so early in the season.

"DUD" MASON SPEAKS OUT

"Dud" Mason, former proprietor of the Prescott Journal, and for many years a member of the town council, and having also occupied the mayor's chair, has a personality that is singularly his own, and his expressions are like his personality. In the last issue of the Journal he entered a protest against the extravagance of the 1931 Council, and the increase in the tax rate. He starts out by saying:

"One might as well attempt to sail a two masted schooner with a "busted" rudder and a crew of one armed sailors as to attempt to keep the tax rate down in Prescott."

Then again, he writes:

"While always ready to extend the hand of welcome to a novice in the field, I do not relish the novice idea of stepping into office, pawing the air, and without the minutest investigation, mulcing the corporation to the tune of in the neighborhood of ten thousand dollars, and this is what has transpired since the inception of the council for 1931."

It would appear that the Council of Prescott for 1931 are installing a new fire-fighting equipment, but they will need it to quench the fire in "Dud's" summing up of their transaction. Here is how he shouts:

"Now comes the purchase of that fire fighting apparatus of which the local fire fighters have been dreaming for the past dozen years and which we really need as much as a toad needs side pockets and a frog needs feathers, but when an inexperienced one bumps against our bunch of fire laddies he will come away from a fire company meeting fully impressed that the moon is but alfalfa cheese, and if he is not ripe enough to sift everything down to a chamois skin fineness, he is hooked, lock, stock and barrel."

He may be "Dud" Mason, but he is not dumb.

PROTESTS EVERYWHERE

From our exchanges from all parts of Ontario there are editorials and letters protesting against the keeping of provincial highways open for autos and trucks, and preventing farmers from all the side concessions using the highways because of its bareness. A farmer cannot possibly reach the highway in a car or wagon during the winter months. Once he reaches the highway he finds many stretches so bare that his horses cannot pull a load over it. The sides are piled high by the snow thrown off by the government plows. The St. Mary's Journal in an editorial on this subject says;

"And the farmers are not the only ones to suffer. Town merchants are losing business owing to the difficulty their customers have in getting to town. It is bad enough at present, but it will be worse if the present thaw continues for a few days, leaving the pavements perfectly dry with the concessions impassable for motors. It is time that a very pointed protest was made in regard to the handling of snow on the rural Provincial Highways."

It might also be pointed out that so far as the small town merchants are concerned the keeping of the highways leading to the cities open, means a big loss of trade, because so long as cars can reach the city, they will go there, and while there, those who travel in them spend money for goods they could get just as well at their home town stores. On the whole, it is doubtful of the tremendous expense of keeping open the provincial highway is justified.

The United Church

(Contributed)

Last Sunday morning's innovation of a service for the children was very interesting and successful. A Junior Choir of fourteen boys and ten girls under the leadership of the organist, Miss Helen Smith, gave splendid lead in the singing of the children's hymns also singing three special numbers, "In Early Youth," "Birds are Singing," and "God is Kind," the latter one being sung by Master Angus Adams, and a solo part in the second one taken by Miss Norma Hitsman.

Rev. J. A. Waddell spoke to the children on the importance of good foundations, taking Ezra 6;3 and Luke 6:48 as texts. In beginning he described the laying of the corner-stone of this Church in 1883, and said it might better be named a memorial stone. It is upon the foundation that the whole building rests, therefore be well and truly built, so it is in life, in school and chiefly in character. In early life we lay the foundations stones of our own character, The things that abide are truth, mercy, love and peace The best and noblest lives are those lived with Jesus Christ as their example. In closing the girls and boys were urged to make the best of their lives, by giving their hearts to Jesus.

In spite of the blizzard several turned out to the evening service. There was a good choir who sang: "When Peace like a river attendeth my way." The pastor gave a helpful talk from Prov. 3, verses 5 and 6, illustrating and emphasizing the fact that God has in times past and will in the future give His help to all who ask, and to those who acknowledge Him in all their ways he gives guidance and satisfaction.

Vernon Women's Institute

The Vernon W. I. held their February meeting in the form of a Valentine Party, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. Cowan. The house was prettily decorated with hearts and cupids and almost all the members with their husbands or friends were present

Each member, in answer to the roll call, deposited in a mail box, guarded by two cupids their very best production of a home made Valentine. Mrs. Crerar and Mrs. Wilkes proved to have the best talent of valentine making. Heart and Valentine contests and games occupied the evening and small prizes were given for each event. The most becoming paper hat of the evening was made by Mr. Chas Dempsey and worn by Mrs. Irvine Dalgish.

Dainty refreshm ents were served by Mrs. Cowan, and Mrs. Duff Crerar moved a vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Cowan for the use of their home and to the convenors of the evening entertainment, Mrs. Howard Porteous and Mrs. C. Wilkes. This motion was seconded by Mrs. L. Allin and carried unanimously.

About Birthdays

March seems to be a favourite month for births, and not a few of our citizens claim this stormy month as the month in which they first saw the light of day. It is also the month that is celebrated in honor of good St. Patrick, who is credited with having driven the snakes out of Ireland. The 17th of March comes next Tuesday, and Irishmen the world over will observe it in memory of their beloved Saint. The 17th of March is also the day on which one of our respected citizens was ushered into this world of joy, or sorrow, of gladness, mirth and happiness, or grief, melancholy and hatred, according to your disposition. In the case of the citizen mentioned it was happily the former, for we refer to Mr. Robert Rennick, who on the 17th will celebrate the 72nd anniversary of the day he was born. Robert is a boy in spirit, and, as he is often seen swirling around corners and travelling the highways in his big Studabaker at a pace that is too often beyond the speed limit, there can be no doubt as to his activity, energy and supleness. Of course Mr. Rennick cannot lay claim to banishing the snakes out of Ireland, but we do know that he had done his best to banish the serpent, alcohol, out of Canada. Long may he live and enjoy the youthful spirit and happy disposition with which he is to day possessed.

Then there is our good citizen, Mr. Philip Hitsman, who to-day, 12th of March, enters his 86th year. Phil is still as straight as a youth, and even though he does carry a cane, it is more from habit than necessity. More youthful but just as highly respected citizens this week celebrate the anniversary of their birth in Mr. R. M. Elliott, who was born on the 12th of March, and Mr. A. H. Duncan, who was born on the 10th of March, both in the same year, and both have now passed the half centuary mark, may their future years be fruitful and full of joy. Mr. William Hay is another of our very highly esteemed citizens, who claims March as his birth month, and Mr. Hay has passed not only the three score and ten, but four score years, and is still active about his daily work. There may be many more of our citizens who were born in the month of March, but we do not happen to know them. But to all the Press extends best wishes as well as congratulations.

The Late Robert E. Brown

A large company of friends gathered in the United Church at Winchester on Wednesday, March 4th, to pay their meed of honor to one who for over fifty years had found delight in its services and during that time had served the Church in many important relations.

Mr Robert E. Brown was the son of the late John Brown and Mary Grey and was born in Winchester, March 29th, 1850 Here he had lived his entire life, save for the past few months spent with his daughter, Mrs. George A. Dillabough at Aultsville. Fifty four years ago he was married to Selina Cook, daughter of the late John Cook and Maria Locke of Winchester, and this tender fellowship continued until he was called away on Monday morning, March 2nd.

In the passing of Robert Brown, Winchester has lost another honored and highly respected citizen, one whose outstanding characteristics of gentleness and simplicity of manner, won for him a warm place in the hearts of many friends and associates.

The funeral message given by his pastor, Rev. J. A. Waddell, was based on the passage, "Thou shalt be missed" which had been chosen by his bereaved partner.

Mr. Waddell was assisted in the service by Rev. H. E. Warren of Aultsville and Rev. D. W. Summers of Winchester.

During the service favourite hymns of the deceased were sung, while Mr. L. Belway brought a comforting message in song entitled, "No Burdens Yonder."

Surviving are his widow, four daughters: Mrs. Mahlon Durant of Smith's Falls, Mrs. W. N. Simmons, Frankford, Ont., Mrs. F. R. Hickey of Dunnville, Ont., Mrs. G. A. Dillabough, Aultsville, Ont.; and two sons: James H. Chamberlain, Sask., and J. Alex. of Lashburn, Sask.; two sisters: Mrs. J. Argel, of Hazelbridge, Man., Miss Margaret Brown of Winchester; and one brother, Mr. Andrew Brown of Winchester, also survive.

The remains were placed in the vault at Maple Ridge, interment will be made in in the family plot in the Spring.

The sympathy of a host of friends go out to the widow and family in their hour of sorrow.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of a dear wife and mother, Mrs. G. Watt Johnston, who died March 15th, 1930.

She bade us not a last farewell,
She said good bye to none;
Her loving heart has ceased to beat,
And before we knew it she was gone.
Her cheery smile and kindly ways
Are pleasant to recall,
She had a kind word to each one,
And died beloved by all.
She is gone, but not forgotten,
Her memory shall never fade,
Loving thoughts shall always linger,
Around the grave where she is laid.

The Open Book

By William Freeman

"Miss Constance Elliott?" Drusilla's forehead wrinkled. "Did she say why she had called?"

"No, madam. Only that the business was private and urgent.

"Ask her to come in, please."

Miss Elliott was slight and pale. She moved sotly, spoke softly. "I'm so sorry if I've disturbed you, Mrs. Threll," she began. "I was afraid you might be out. I'd better begin by telling you something about myself. I am engaged to be married to a man I've known for several years. Jack—I needn't mention his other name—had been employed until lately as a cashier by Cushmann's, the Regent Street drapers. There's one branch just off Hart Street, known as Mme. Osprey's, where they sell hats and lingerie."

She paused. Drusilla nodded. Her tongue and lips seemed to have gone stiff and dry.

"It was part of his duty to keep a register of undesirable customers, people with bad records, in what was called "the green book." Now he has been dismissed."

"Dismissed?"

"Yes. Cushmann's has been bought by a group of busines men, and there have been alterations. Your husband is chairman of the Syndicate."

"Then why not apply direct to Mr. Threll?"

"He's going to." The cold hazel eyes met Drusilla's grey ones. "The difficulty is that Jack doesn't want to stay in England. There's an opening he's heard of in America, but he hasn't the capital. It is five thousand pounds. He feels sure that if he saw your husband, and explained how confidential his work had been, Mr. Threll would advance the money. Jack might even bring the green book to show him. Only I thought you might prefer to speak to Mr. Threll first on Jack's behalf. Without mentioning the book at all."

Drusilla stood up and put her finger on the bell. "I understand. Please go at once."

"You're foolish. For your own sake ——" She broke off as a maid appeared. "Good-bye."

"Will you see that that person isn't admitted again, please?" said Drusilla. "And bring tea."

But she did not want tea. Her mind was working in wild and desperate circles. She was trapped. And the price of escape was five thousand pounds, to be paid before Saturday, and she hadn't five thousand shillings. Trapped. And it had happened so long ago, too. When she was eighteen, alone in London, overworked, desperately poor. To this hour she was unconscious of having stolen the shawl She had told the detective so, the assistant, Mme. Osprey's manager. They had taken her in a taxi to the station. The magistrate had been sympathetic. "Not theft, a mere lapse of memory? Quite so, quite so. But highly unfortunate.' And had discharged her under the First Offenders' Act. . . . She never guessed that her name had been entered in that dreadful green book. And now it was going to be shown to Teddy.

Why hadn't she told him? Why not go to him now, and rob these blackmailers' weapon of its edge? Her heart froze at the mere thought. She cared for him desperately, but love, she reflected bitterly, wasn't strong enough to cast out fear.

She heard his key in the door, his step crossing the hall. He came in, kissed her, and stood with his back to the fireplace. He began to tell her about the Syndicate which had bought out Cushmann's. He spoke of a profit, when the firm was reconstructed, of thirty thousand pounds.

"You'll have to help me to spend it, Dru."

She tried to smile back at him. "Teddy, I'm so desperately ignorant of business. I wonder if—if you'd take me with you to the central branch, and show me how it's managed?"

"Of course, if you're keen. How about Thursday afternoon? I've that dinner at Woking in the evening, but we shan't be late."

"Thursday will suit me quite well." She stood up and kissed him.

Drusilla slept little that night. There was another day to be lived through. And after that, another night. They passed with frightful slowness. And on Thursday afternoon the car took them to the big shop.

"It's enormously interesting," she said, when they had explored each department. "But we haven't seen everything, have we?"

"There's the counting-house," said Teddy. "But I don't want you to overtire yourself."

"I shan't. . . . I'd hate to miss any of it."

All the plans Drusilla had made vanished as she entered that long room crowded with clerks. Jack, the man who wanted five thousand pounds, was among them, watching her. The mere knowledge blotted out every other idea from her tired brain.

"Yes, we've a big staff," said the head clerk, elderly and self-important. "And most of them have been here since they left school."

"Where do you keep the office books?" asked Drusilla.

"In the safe, when they're not actually in use." He swung open its door. A row of leather-bound volumes stood on the upper shelf. Their sizes varied, but each was bound in green leather.

"Where is the key kept?" murmured Drusilla.

"In the drawer of my table," said the head clerk. "And the key of that is in my pocket."

"Incidentally," said Teddy, "that drawer could be opened in half a minute with a pocket-knife!"

Drusilla chatted cheerfully to Teddy on the way back. She dined early, and went up to her room soon afterwards. Teddy had told her that the Woking dinner would probably keep him too late to return that night. After a time she drifted into a doze, and did not wake until past eleven. She put on a hat and coat, stole downstairs, and went out.

She caught an Underground train to Piccadilly. The journey seemed endless, but she reached Cushmann's at last. The long range of plate-glass windows was divided by a short passage, at the end of which was a door. Drusilla rang the bell and waited with thudding heart. The door opened, and a stout, elderly man confronted her.

"May I come in for a moment?" she asked.

He hesitated. "'Gainst regulations, lady."

"But this is urgent. Are you the night-watchman?"

"One of 'em. My mate looks after the left-'and block while I do the right. You ain't said yet who you are."

"I am Mrs. Threll." She produced a card. "I came here with my husband this afternoon. We went over the whole building."

He scrutinized the card, and became apologetic.

"I 'eard you'd been." He stood aside for her to enter. "Didn't mean to be uncivil, but we've had special instructions not to admit strangers, owing to burglaries lately. What's the trouble?"

"I left a book in the counting-house. May I go up and fetch it?"

"Can't see no objection, only I must not break off my rounds."

"If you'll show me where the stairs are, I can find my way quite easily."

He led her through shrouded and darkened show-rooms to the stairs, and left her. She reached the counting-house and pushed open the swing door. The big deserted room seemed filled with quivering, mocking shadows. She crossed to the head clerk's table and switched on the lamp above it. Trembling excesively, she slid a blade of an ivory-handled pen-knife—one of Teddy's first presents—in the crevice above the drawer, and pressed sideways. There was a click, and the catch of the lock dropped. She opened the drawer, took out the big shiny key that lay conspicuous among a dozen smaller ones, and turned to the safe.

The door opened quite easily. One by one she carried the green-bound books to the table to examine. None of them contained anything which could conceivably be the records she sought.

The last volume was in her hands when she heard footsteps. As, with desperate fingers, she switched off the table lamp, she visualized a dozen possibilities. But the truth was more dreadful than any of them. A hand groped for the switch by the door. The lights blazed up. The new-comer was Teddy.

For a moment she stood looking at him blindly; then, with a faint cry, she fell.

She opened her eyes in bed. A woman appeared, a nurse, and then a man whom she recognized as Wernham, the doctor. And then, after they had given her some medicine, and warned her that she wasn't to excite herself, Teddy came in. He put his arm about her and laid his cheek against hers Neither of them said much. The doctor wouldn't let him stay. It was not until his second visit that she was able to refer to that night at Cushmann's.

"I was abominably worried about you," said Teddy, explaining. "Sort of premonition. And at last I made excuses to leave, and raced back. The car broke down half-way; it was past midnight when I got home and found you weren't in."

"How did you guess I was at Cushmann's?"

"A policeman had noticed you chatting in the doorway with Allen, the watchman. He heard you give your name, and later rang up on his own responsibility to make sure you weren't an imposter. I'd just come in. I gave you a first-class character and went on at top speed in the car to bring you home. A nervous breakdown, old Wernham says. But why should it take the form of reading Cushmann's day-book——"

Drusilla shivered. He didn't know.

She had still to tell him. She heard the murmur of her own voice going on—and on. She heard Teddy begging her to stop. But she couldn't stop.

"My dear, my dear——" this, when at last she had finished," as though it would have mattered! Why, if I had not been afraid of re-opening an old wound, I'd have told you that it was when you were in that wretched police-court that I first saw you and fell in love. . . . Afterwards I lost sight of you for nearly three years. As for the people who tried to blackmail you, Cushmann's had a man named John Duvigne, whom they sacked only a week ago or embezzlement. A real bad hat. But he hadn't the firm's private record in his possession. He couldn't have had it, because it was always kept in old Cushmann's private office. Duvigne couldn't have had more than a glimpse of it, and then by the merest chance."

He caught Drusilla close in his arms, and she smiled up at him, utterly happy.—"Tit-Bits."

"I've changed my mind." "Well, does it work any better?"

The Tough Turkey. 3.

Newspapers, Best Advertising Medium

Agency Official Asserts No Other Method Can Replace Them

Toronto.—There is no advertising that can equal newspaper advertising for results according to I. D. Carson, of N. W. Ayer & Son, Philadelphia, who recently addressed the Board of Trade Club here. Radio, billboards, sky-writing, blotters, rulers or any trick advertising, Mr. Carson declared, would never replace the message the reader gets from his or her wanted publication.

People buy a certain newspaper for its editorial comment, political views and its ability to present and interpret the news of the world, the speaker stated. If they turn accidentally from the news stories to the store news they don't throw the paper away; if the proper message is there in the proper way, they are attracted, he said.

The speaker firmly impresed on the minds of the members the importance of newspaper advertising. He stated that because one might see a person rustle through the pages and then toss the paper to one side, one should not think that newspaper advertising did not pay. It is the paper, he said, that is gone over carefully at the breakfast table or carried home to be studied in the quiet of an evening that is bound to bring results. It carries a message through repetition and reiteration and brings success to the man who uses the space, he pointed out.

Place of Publicity

Speaking of publicity in newspapers, Mr. Carson remarked that no publicity ought to be published unless it had a message of particular interest to the public; it should never be published before it is edited by an editor and above all it should never come from the business office marked "must."

"Canada," Mr. Carson declared, "could spend one million dollars profitably each year in advertising Canada to the American people. Why should you not be a luxury to the American people?" he asked. "The people of the United States are so thoroughly conscious of the ease with which they can get places under their own power, that they will come to this country in direct ratio to the extent that you invite them."

"Advertising is a dynamic social force working for the good of all," Mr. Carson stated; "it is a force in business. It is not something extra, but is part and parcel of the business. It is not something you can hem on to the border of a business to make the business look pretty; it is one blade of the shears and, of course, sales form the other blade."

Advertising did just one thing in business, Mr. Carson said, it increased consumption by annihilating time. A business was made up of four classifications, he stated, finance, production, sales and public opinion. There were many who considered the first three and ignored the last A business must have favorable public opinion and keep pace with the changing times, he continued.

Beauty

By Ll. Wyn Griffith in "The Welsh Outlook."

This pattern we call Good and Ill
Is but the play of light and shade
Upon a hill,
Born but to die with set of sun,
Foredoomed to birth when night is done.

His hand who held the Scales of Right
In iron days of Rome is dust
Motes in the light
The sword that slew at his behest;
In his dread court the swallows nest.

Forgotten now the Evil wrought
In Egypt's town by darkbrowed kings,
A thing of naught
The sorrow, sand-engulfed the tears,
But Beauty journeys down the years.

I know of naught can e'er outlive
This fleeting fashion in man's mind,
This fugitive
Pursuit of Right and fear of Wrong,
Save golden echoes of an ancient song.

Or crystal words the poets write
To illume the darkness of a troubled heart,
The cool delight
Of Venus rising from the deep,
The mirrored stars, a child asleep.

What then is Beauty but the thread
Of life that binds our days in thrall
To years long dead,
To unborn hours, and of this Now
A phantom makes? Go pay thy vow!

EDUCATION

What a hard thing it is to educate oneself in later life, when the memory is or seems to be like a sieve, and some pains are necessary to prevent going back—to say nothing of going forward. Still, I believe there is a way if one could find it out. I think writing is on the whole the best way (for mere reading is not a sufficient object), and in writing it seems to me that great things can be done by industry and judgment. —Benjamin Jowett.

She Should Know

Mrs. Waite called unexpectedly at her husband's office and found that he had gone out for the day.

"You say Mr. Waite is out?" she said to the new office-boy. "Do you know where he has gone?"

"I don't know, ma'am," replied the youth.

"How tiresome!" she went on. Perhaps his secretary could tell me?"

"She certainly could," shot back the office-boy. "She's gone with him."

OLD AGE

The affection of old age is one of the greatest consolations of humanity. I have often thought what a melancholy world this would be without children, and what an inhuman world without the aged.—Colerige.

CHARITY

He that defers his charity until he is dead is, if a man weighs it rightly, rather liberal of another man's than his own.—Francis Bacon.

My Prayer

By Beatrice (Aged 7)

Oh, Master of fire! Oh, Lord of air,
Oh, God of waters, hear my prayer!
Oh, Lord of ground and of stirring trees,
Oh, God of man and of pleasant breeze,
Dear Father, let me happy be—
As happy as a growing tree.

The Place I'd Like To Be

By a Girl (Aged 5)

The place I'd like to be
Is where the spreading tree
Spreads its shade
And is made
By the gentle hand of God
In the rich, black mud,
And the brooklet ripples down
To the other end of town,
And the roses are in bloom,
And the violets give perfume,
And the blue grass waves like bushes,
And in the brook here wave rushes,
—But instead—a dingy town!

Taking a Risk

The doctor stared hard at his client as the latter entered his surgery.

"I perceive that you are in a very despondent mood," he commenced. "In act, you don't seem to care what happens to you."

"Good gracious!" the client gasped. "How on earth did you deduce that?"

"You came here in a motor-car and you let your wife drive," he said.

KINDNESS

An act of kindness, a word of sympathy, may render the whole line of life different from what it would otherwise. have been. There are crisis in many a life when the course it shall take for weal or for woe depends upon a slight influence—almost a single word. How careful then should we be that our influence may at all times be in the right direction!

"So yo' wants to marry mah daughter, eh? Can yo' support a wife, young man?"

"I reckon I kin. I done frowed four sebens in a row las' night."

What British Rule Has Meant to India

By Sir Edward Gait (in the N.Y. Herald-Tribune Magazine), Who For Nearly Half a Century Was Associated With British Administration in India

Now that the nature and extent of the next stage in the development of self-governing institutions in India are being so hotly discussed, it may not be inopportune to turn for a moment from the polemics of the present to the achievements of the past, and to take a bird's-eye view of the many and varied improvements in the moral and material condition of India which have been brought about since the commencement of British rule.

This is generally regarded as having begun with the Battle of Plassey, in 1757, but the area under British administration was comparatively small until nearly half a century later. Even then, it did not include extensive tracts, such as Oudh, the Punjab, the Central Provinces, Sind and Baluchistan, which have been less than a century under British rule, and Upper Burma, which was not annexed till 1885.

There are still numerous native states which are governed by their own chiefs subject to a varying degree of supervision and guidance. These states occupy in the aggregate two-thirds of the entire area and more than one-fifth of the population. They have benefitted in various ways by the British hegemony, but in the remarks that follow it should be understood that I am dealing primarily not with them, but with the area under British administration. Subject to a certain amount of Parliamentary control, the East India Company was responsible for the government until it was transferred to the Crown in 1858—that is to say, about three-quarters of a century ago.

I do not suggest that the benefits which have flowed from the political association of India with Britain have been all on one side. This is not by any means the case. Britain has had her share of such benefits. She has been enriched by her trade with India. Large numbers of her people have found successful careers there. Contact with Indian life and culture and the study of her ancient religions and systems of philosophy have widened our outlook on life. Finally, the prestige and power of Britain among the nations have been greatly enhanced by the possession of India and the control of the military forces maintained there at India's expense. Though these forces are intended primarily for local defense they have been used on various occasions for the general needs of the Empire. Their invaluable assistance in France, Palestine, Mesopotamia and other theatres during the World War is still fresh in our memory.

But if the gain of Britain has been great, that of India has been greater. Some Indian writers are fond of referring to the days of Hindu rule as a golden age, when the people enjoyed peace and plenty and good government. There is, however, very little information regarding those ancient times. There may have been periods to which this description applies. But if so, they were probably confined to the latter part of the reigns of great emperors like Asoka, who, after bringing a considerable part of India under their sway, turned their exceptional abilities to the arts of peace.

Such men were very rare and the empires which they established soon fell to pieces in the hands of their degenerate successors. And even they, in their earlier years, were often responsible for terrible bloodshed. Asoka tells us in one of his edicts that in the course of his conquest of Orissa 100,000 of the inhabitants were killed in battle, and that many times that number were deported or perished through the depredations of his army.

With the advent of the British, wars ceased; the rights of private property were respected; there was no more interference with the religions of the people, and impartial courts were established where rich and poor, high caste and low, alike could be confident of even-handed justice.

These are the great primary benefits. British rule has given to the people of India peace, security, justice and religious toleration. In addition, numerous measures have been taken to improve the condition of the people and to suppress injurious practices. I will mention some of them briefly.

India is a predominantly agricultural country, with an uncertain rainfall, and in the past has frequently been subject to terrible famines in which extensive tracts were almost depopulated. In the early days of British rule famines continued to cause terrible losses, but with the aid of the experience gained on each occasion, elaborate preventive measures have gradually been devised and perfected. Plans for relief work are now kept in constant readiness ,and the state of the crops is closely watched so that adequate help can be given the moment it is seen to be necessary. Relief operations are greatly facilitated by the vastly improved communications.

It often happens that when the crops fail in one locality there are bumper harvests in another. Formerly there was no means of moving the surplus grain to the place where it was needed and the people in one part starved while in another part there was a glut. This is no longer the case. India has been provided with over 40,000 miles of railway, compared with China's 6,000. It has 200,000 miles of roads. Famine has thus been robbed of its worst terrors.

As a protection against the uncertain rainfall, great attention has been paid to irrigation. Already over 28,000,000 acres are protected by the government irrigation works, and canals are now under constuction which will bring the total up to 40,000,000 acres. Not only has an assured supply of water been given to much existing cultivation, but wide tracts which were formerly desert and occupied only by a few pastoral nomads have been rendered culturable and now support a large and prosperous agricultural community.

The agricultural departments, which owe their present organization mainly to Lord Curzon, have done much useful work in introducing new staples, such as ground nuts, which are grown or more than 5,000,000 acres; in improving, by crossing and selection of seed, the cotton, rice, wheat and other crops; in encouraging the use of fertilizers, in improving the breeds of cattle, and in the prevention and control of animal diseases.

In ancient times the greater part of India was covered with forests, but with the growth of population and wasteful exploitation the trees were rapidly disappearing until the formation of the Indian Forest Department in 1865. An area more than twice that of the British Isles has now been marked off as a state forest, and now bids fair not only to supply for all time the produce needed for local requirements but also to support a profitable export trade.

The medical and sanitation departments have done invaluable work in coping with epidemic and other diseases, while the Department of Post and Telegrams gives India the cheapest service in the world.

From time immemorial there has been a small minority of educated Indians, chiefly among the Brahmans, and India can boast of a long line of great theologians, philosophers and poets. But it never occurred to the favored few to aim at a wide diffusion of knowledge. The officials and traders learned as much as was absolutely necessary for their profession or business; the masses remained wholly uneducated. Under British rule a network of schools of all grades has been established, as well as numerous universities, and there has been a remarkable spread of education among the better classes. It must be admitted, however, that the progress made in diffusing even elementary education among the masses has been relatively slow.

When the British government embarked on this task there were long discussion regarding the language in which higher education should be imparted in the state institutions. The decision in favor of English was a momentous one. It has furnished the educated classes with a language in which the Bengals, the Janjabis, the Marathos, the Tamils and all the other linguistic groups can communicate freely with each other, and has imbued them for the first time with a sense of common nationality. It has also given them the key to the whole range of Western literature. They have thus imbibed our own love of liberty and independence. This has led to the ardent desire for self-government which is manifesting itself at the present time.

The seclusion of women is rapidly being abandoned among the educated classes, whose ladies now freely appear in public and sometimes speak on public platforms.

The British government has done a good deal to mitigate the worst of the disabilities of the depressed classes, the so-called "untouchables," by treating all men as equal in the eye of the law and by recognizing their right to education. The missionaries have done still more by raising the standards of living and self-respect. And now the educated classes are beginning to realize the injustice of the treatment to which these unfortunate people are subjected.

Bird That Travels From Pole to Pole

By Oliver G. Pike, F.Z.S.

The energy expended in swimming the English Channel must be as nothing compared with that used up by many migratory birds.

There have been several instances of birds crossings the Atlantic. A lapwing ringed in England was recovered in Newfoundland, and this probably flew over the thousands of miles of sea without resting.

Many of these birds are glad of the help of a passing steamer, and when they land on this in an exhausted condition they show little fear of man, and allow passengers to feed them. A short time ago a large steamer bound for Liverpool was nearly a thousand miles from the American shore when a large flock of birds settled on the rigging and decks.

Longest Flight of All.

Many of these, which included pigeons and owls, were captured by the passengers, and the ship's carpenter was kept busy making cages.

Three small birds feel exhausted on to the deck of a steamer in mid-Atlantic. Two survived, while the third died from starvation. The two survivors were a linnet and a chaffinch.

A Labrador falcon captured by a light-keeper on the west coast of Scotland was so exhausted that he was able to pick it up, and although he endeavored to keep it alive with suitable food, it succumbed. It must have travelled from Newfoundland.

Some migratory birds fly great distances. English small swallows come six thousand miles each spring, and return the same distance in autumn, and many of the dimutive warblers will travel three thousand miles each way. The ringing of birds by British ornithologists has given us valuable information about the destinations of our migrants. We have found that our swallows winter in Natal, our cuckoos go to Northern Africa and Palestine.

But what are we to think of a bird which nests in the Artic circle and winters in the Antarctic? It is believed that our dainty Arctic tern does this; if so, it makes the longest flight undertaken by any bird on migrating. A sea bird could, however, settle on the sea during the journey, and as this tern travels down the coast of Africa it would have plenty of opportunity of resting.

One of the greatest mysteries of migration is the way in which the tiny travellers find their way. It has been proved time after time that they endeavor to return to the self-same spot season after season.

A pair of red backed shrikes returned to the same bush for nesting two years in succession, and a small warbler I have watched has built her nest in the same little bush for three successive seasons. Between their nesting operations each bird must have flown not less than six thousand miles.

Travellers in the southern seas have often seen the great albatross following their boat for a week or more, only settling for fleeting moments to pick up food thrown from the ship—Tit-Bits.

New Theory Advanced of Fatal Belgium Fog

It rose from a poisoned river, thinks a correspondent of The Digest, writing from Woods Mills, Antwerp, New York, and fortifying his opinion with some war-time experiences.

"That mysterious blanket of fog that came along to the Meuse Valley section of France and Belgium, carrying death with it, will remain a mystery unless the waters round about are analyzed for some poisonous substances such as as arsenic, or chloral hydrate; in France's soil and rivers mystery continues to lurk," he tells us as he writes on, elaborating his extremely interesting theory. We are told, as we read on:

"I remember, when we were there during the war, we were forbidden to bathe in a river of the same name—Meuse. We were told that to swim in the river was death, for when you went in and came out, you would be taken with cramps and die. Well, that's just what happened; some did.

"Now, then, it must have been arsenic, for only arsenic would give you painful cramps such as that; but, if the people died without a struggle, then it was because of chloral hydrate, which, when inhaled in vapor or gets into the pores through bathing, cuts the circulation completely, and you fall asleep and die without pain or a struggle."

The Green Places

In fields and deep among the friendly trees
And on the solemn hills, man knows his heart:
He is accompanied by ancestries.
His sires loved green, in it they had their part.
But when he moves alone in city ways,
With mutabilities along the street,
He has no kinship with historic days
No acorns crack beneath his alien feet.
Eternity informs the lightest rain,
And truthfulness the everlasting hills;
Be sure there is no end to any pain
Save in the womb that nurtures daffodils,
Loving the things your father looked upon,
You have the eyes of Jesus, Dante, Solomon.
—Egerton Clarke in "The Death of England."

Fighting the White Man's Scourge

Health statistics compiled by the Nova Scotia Government show that the efforts put forward by that Province to lessen the scourge of tuberculosis are meeting with encouraging results. The Government has created a special tuberculosis department and generous funds are to be set aside for its maintenance. The adoption of stringent enactments, designed to curtail the spread of disease through infection, has resulted in the lowering of the death rate in a marked manner. The general death rate per 100,000 of the population, from all causes, has also been lowered from 134 in 1921 to 90.5 last year. Public monies cannot be devoted to any more profitable investment than that of protecting the health of the people."—"The Montreal Daily Star."

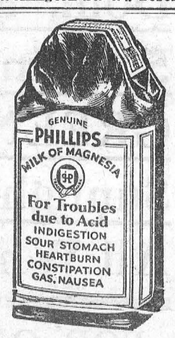
GAS relieved



WHAT most people call indigestion is usually excess acid in the stomach. Food has soured. The instant remedy is an alkali which neutralizes acids. But don't use crude helps. Use what your dotor would advise.

The best help is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. For the 50 years since its invention, it has remained standard with physicians. You will find nothing else so quick in its effect, so harmless, so efficient.

One tasteless spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in acid. The results are immediate with no harmful after-effects.

Once you learn this perfect way you'll never deal in any other manner with the headaches, gas, bloating, nausea, dizziness, indigestion, biliousness, etc., due to an over-acid stomach and bowels.

Be sure to get genuine Phillips'. It is always a liquid; never made in tablet form. Look for the name Phillips on the bottle. All drug-stores sell it—50c.

Sunless Window Made Sunny

Every little while someone discovers a new and delightful way to curtain some north or poorly lighted window, so that the effect of light and sunniness is brought into the room. A very successful window curtain and drapery, which brought an appearance of sunshine and a suggestion of a flowery garden into a dim and cheerless north room, is here described.

The single window, which was about two feet fr the corner of the room, was covered with a glass curtain of cream net, reaching to the window sill. It hung moderately full, its width being once and a half the width of the window. On this curtain, at one side, were appliqued gay-colored flowers with leaves and long stems, all made of silk that permitted the light to shine through brightly, as through stained glass. On the opposite side, that nearest the corner of the room, a drapery of deep daffodil yellow was arranged in an unusual and strikingly decorative manner.

This drapery was not silk but it had a silky luster. It covered the entire width of the window, and two widths were used to get the right fullness, the seam being concealed between the folds. It was cut long enough to reach to the bottom of the window casing. The entire width of this drapery was drawn back to the casing at the side, half way between the top of the window and the middle, from which point it hung in graceful folds down over the casing, covered but a few inches of the glass, hence cutting off almost none of the light.

Flowers Like Stained Glass.

The flowers, leaves, and stems were cut out and finished before they were put on the net curtain. Three flowers, two wide leaves, and three long, slender leaves, were used, besides the stems. Thin plain silk was selected for all of them in order that the effect might be airy and dainty and so their color would show up perfectly. Very thin satin would be equally satisfactory. Heavier material should not be used, as the desired effect is not that of ordinary heavy-looking applique.

The colors for the flowers were pink, yellow, orange, and a light, rosy lavender. Another charming combination, with the yellow drapery, would be light blue, dark blue, yellow, and deep, reddish orange.

The top flower, which reached to just below the middle of the window, was made in this way: A circular piece of yellow silk was cut out, five inches in diameter, but very irregular in outline, suggesting the shape of a flower. The edge was turned under one-quarter of an inch and buttonholed with yellow silk thread. This is easier to do if the silk is first basted on a piece of newspaper, which after ward can be torn away. An irregular circle, 3½ inches in diameter, was cut out of the pink silk and basted over the middle of the yellow silk. The edge of the upper half of this pink inch, and was buttonholed onto the piece was turned under one-quarter yellow silk, using pink silk thread. A piece of the lavender silk, somewhat in the shape of an irregular half moon, was basted over all the lower half of the pink piece and all its edges turned under and buttonholed onto the pink above it and onto the yellow below it, using lavender thread. Then all the extra thickness of silk underneath were cut away so as to leave only one thickness of silk throughout the flower.

The next lower flower was made in a similar way, starting with a large, irregular circle of lavender, and using pink for its upper centre and orange below. The third flower started with pink and had yellow for its upper centre and lavender blow.

Stems and Leaves.

The stems, which were not cut in a straight line, but on a slight curve, to make them look more graceful, were of a light but rather vivid green. The material for them was cut one inch wide, and one quarter inch was turned under on each side, leaving the finished stem one-half inch wide. Both edges were buttonholed with silk thread of the same shade of green. The long thin leaves were a little wider throughout their middle portion than the stems, but tapered to points above, and were buttonholed in the same way. One of the two wide leaves was of green silk, the other of orange. They were two and one-half inches wide by three and one-half inches long, when finished and buttonholed. These were much curved, with a few interesting jags along their underside. Along the middle of each ran a "vein" made with silk thread of the color of the leaf, in a simple stitch.

When the flowers, leaves, and stems the lower left half of the net curtain were finished, the were pinned on at the window and adjusted until their position seemed right, then lightly basted in place. This makes it easy to remove them whenever the net requires laundering. The bottom of the stem and long leaves started from the very bottom of the curtain and extended almost to the sash.

This glass curtain and accompanying drapery were copied for a larger, wider window in another home. But there was added to the glass curtain, straight across the bottom of the net, a strip of yellow silk, four inches wide, the same wi , a third of lavender, another just below of pink silk, of and a bottom one of green, the same thin, semi-transparent silk being used as was chosen for the flowers and leaves. The bottom strip reached just to the window sill This, of course, meant raising the net part so that the top flower came a few inches above flowers and leaves were made slightly the middle of the window. The smaller than in the original curtain to avoid any possibility of the curtain looking crowded. The effect was indescribably gay.

Strange Cargoes Carried By Plane

All Bullion Now Shipped by Plane from London to the Continent

One of the little-known romances of modern aviation is the growth of aerial cargo-carrying.

In a single day more than twenty tons of freight pass either inward or outward through London's aerial terminus at Croydon. During the past nine months, nearly 700 tons of urgent mails and merchandise were air-borne to and fro along the European and Indian lines of Imperial Airways.

The variety of air-borne merchandise is remarkable. Often, a stranded motorist on the Continent will cable for some spare part for his car, and across it goes to him at once in the next air express. Nearly 2,000,000 radio tubes have now been carried by air between London and the Continent.

Lobsters By Air Mail!

So, also, have approximately £80,000 worth of loud-speakers. When valuable pictures have to be carried between London and the Continent, they are invariably sent via the airway. It is increasingly the habit, also on account of the special handling, to send delicate electrical apparatus by air.

Recently, on account of the fact that Brussels sprouts are not normally available in Egypt in winter, some of the big hotels in Alexandria and Cairo conceived the idea of having a consignment sent out specially by the Indian mail-plane to give an extra attraction to the Christmas fare; so, also, on another occasion, were a number of lobsters.

The Flying Lions.

Nearly all the bullion dispatched from London to the Continent is now air-borne—a convincing tribute not only to the speed, but also to the security, of aerial transport. Often, too, as a contrast to this, a consignment of day-old chicks will be placed on an early-morning 'plane, and in not more than a day's flying will reach some distant destination across the Continent.

Strange loads are sometimes air-borne. Not long ago, an Imperial Airways cargo machine had its interior transformed, temporarily, into a lion's den. In this improvised cage, a fully-grown lion, accompanied by its trainer, flew from Paris to London to take part in a circus. On another occasion, a big Handley-Page-Napier cargo-'plane had its hull fitted up as a horse-box, in order to transport a valuable animal on an urgent aerial journey from abroad.

Merchandise dispatched by air from Croydon at midday is delivered in Paris the same evening. It is also possible in a single day to effect the aerial transport and delivery of packages to such important destinations as Brussels, Cologne, and Berlin.

All possible steps are taken to simplify air-goods transport. Consignments from the provinces come up by rail to London and are collected by the airway vans from the railway terminal and taken direct to Croydon for dispatch on the next departing 'plane.

An important point, when considering the airway as a means of transit for urgent loads, is that insurance is cheaper by air than by any other transport, owing to the absence of pilfering and the great reduced risks of breakage.

Paris Effectively Stops Cruelty to Animals

Paris.—The Paris members of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have recently conducted another of those crusading expeditions for which they are becoming famous. This time their objective was the little town of Cernay-la-Ville, about an hour's drive from Paris, where arrangements were under way for a cock fight. The crusaders arrived on the scene in time to enlist the aid of local authorities, and the promoters of the fight abandoned their project. The incident was reminiscent of one which occurred several months earlier, when members of the society chartered motorcoaches and went en masse to Melun, where they succeeded in putting a stop to a bullfight which had been widely advertised and which was being put on in order to raise funds for local charities. Promoters of questionable sporting events involving cruelty to animals, who used to stage their exhibitions in towns just outside the capital with a large measure of impunity, are beginning to have a wholesome dread of the invention of the society's militant president, Mme. du Gast, and her faithful cohorts.

Live Stock Shows

Toronto.—The importance of Toronto as a livestock show centre is further illustrated in the announcement made the other day of the signing of a three-party agreement between the Dominion, the Province and the City of Toronto for the erection of new stables at the exhibition grounds. The new stables are expected to cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 and are to be used for the livestock displays at the exhibition and the Royal Winter Fair.

The hardest cross word puzzle is why one should want to use cross words. Money slips away from the young folks as quickly as time does from the older folks. There will probably never be a low cost of high living. And, as you have probably suspected yourself, a good many of the chaps who long loudly for the good old days are actually longing inwardly for the bad old nights.

The Friend Who Just Stands By

When trouble comes your soul to try,
You love the friend who just stands by.
Perhaps theres nothing he can do,
The thing is strictly up to you;
For there are troubles all your own,
And paths the soul must tread alone;
Times when love can't smooth the road,
Nor friendship lift the heavy load.
But just to feel you have a friend
Who will stand by until the end,
Whose sympathy through all endures,
Whose warm handclasp is always yours,
It helps somehow to pull you through,
Although there's nothing he can do;
And so with fervent heart we cry
"God bless the friend who just stands by."

Along came some campers and took up the strain,

But jump to your task, lest your courage you lose.
And say to yourself, "It is not as I choose,"

An inhabitant of a Scottish village was describing a visit which he had made to the newly installed schoolmaster. He said: "After a bit of a crack he asked me if I would take anything, and I said I wouldna object, and so he fetched the bottle and commenced to pour into a glass. Of course, I soon said. Oh, stop, stop,' and—he did stop. No I dinna think he'll suit this parish."

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

She Couldn't Be Hoodwinked.

Miss E. Thomson, of Clapham, writes:—"I find that Carter's Little Liver Pills will do more to keep the complexion clear, and the skin free from blemishes, than all the face creams I have used. I found the real cause of face blemishes was usually due to liver and stomach troubles. My druggist recommended them as a specific for stimulating the liver and expelling the constipation poisons from the system."
Take Carter's Little Liver Pills for sick headache and indigestion. All druggists 25¢ and 75¢ red pkgs.

Daughter Is Stronger Now

"My daughter Catherine is fifteen years old. She was very irregular, often sick at her stomach and had to stay in bed two or three days at a time. One of your booklets was sent to us by mail so I got her a bottle of Vegetable Compound. Catherine has been taking it regularly and she is gaining in weight and every way. I told the neighbors and four other girls are taking it with good results."—Mrs. Clarence Jenkinson, Box 14, Thornloe, Ontario.

Liquor Hidden In Rear Springs

Becoming suspicious when he observed special rear springs on a car which passed him on the highway near Mille Roches a few days ago, Inspector F. G. Jerome, of Brockville, stopped it and discovered 150 bottles of choice liquors, en route from Montreal to Windsor, contained in it. The driver, Paul M. Arthofer an Austrian, giving Detroit, Mich., as his address, was fined $100 and costs in Cornwall police court, with the alternative of three months in jail, and in addition lost both his car and the liquor, valued at $500.

Advertising Pays

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating" and the best test of whether advertising pays or not is to give advertising a good test. Last week a certain merchant in town informed the Press that since he had started "special" advertisements he found his retail sales had increased over one half. Another merchant volunteered the information that he knew his adv't in the Press was read by customers saying they had read it, and by the sale of some specials he was advertising. Such testimony is convincing, and to the publisher most gratifying. We believe that the merchant who neglects his adv't is making as bad a mistake as though he kept the window blinds on his store down all day long. The Press goes into over one thousand homes in this section. What more need we say as to the value of advertising in its pages.
