HENRY'S Shorthand School
Ottawa, Ont.

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

CHESTERVILLE HIGH WINS E.O.S.S.A. SHIELD ELIMINATE GLEBE COLLEGIATE 3 TO 0

Chesterville's High School hockeyists added the shield representative of the best in interscholastic hockey in Eastern Ontario to the other trophies won by students when on Saturday afternoon they handed a crushing defeat to the Ottawa Glebe by a score of 3 to 0 in a sudden death game at the Auditorium in Ottawa, which was likewise the first defeat of the season for the Glebe boys.

The Chesterville boys uncorked a fast offensive game right from the first whistle and at all times carried the battle to their opponents, while Lapierre and Helmer presented a defense that kept the Glebe sharpshooters at a safe distance. The good effects of a little coaching which the boys have received from "Billy" Dixon since the close of the intermediate series, was plainly visible in the fine combination work of the school boys, and above all in the way they played their positions. Ottawa sport writers referred to their work as being unexcelled.

Before the first period was two-thirds gone Chesterville had taken a commanding lead, Jack McAvoy going in on a self-conducted tour and smashing the rubber into the Glebe twine at the end of six minutes, to be followed in a like time by "Nig" Tate and "Chuck" Lapierre manoeuvering into position with Tate taking the pass and doing the trick.

The second failed to see an increase in the opposition of the Collegiate boys, while "Skints" Helmer found so much spare time on his hands looking after the defense chore that he wandered off up through the whole Glebe army and plunked the rubber home, with only three minutes of play gone.

The Glebe boys during the season had made somewhat of a name for themselves in last period rallies to spring an unbeatable attack but unfortunately for them George Loughren, defence man, was put out when he fell heavily on the ice and could not continue, and McGowan, a wing man, was struck in the face by the puck and was put out. Chesterville played a heady game in this period and did not back up into the defence area on a purely hold-your-lead game, they stepped right into the fray and always met Glebe's rushes in centre ice with the forwards back-checking like fiends to assist in giving Fyke all the necessary protection to let him handle in a brilliant manner all the shots that did trickle through, and give Chesterville High the right to have its name engraved on the handsome shield as winners of this year, along with Renfrew Collegiate, Ottawa Technical and the Glebe, the latter being the only team to win this distinction twice.

The win also made Chesterville High eligible for the provincial playoffs in Toronto at this week end.

The teams:

Chesterville—Goal, Fyke; defence, Helmer and Lapierre; centre, Lynch; wings, Olsen and McAvoy; subs. McElroy and Tate.

Glebe—Goal, James; defence, Higginson and Loughren; centre, McGowan; wings, Fitzsimmons and Crain; subs, Murray, Howitt and McQuaig.

Referees — Kilby McDonald and Pete Devine.

DANCE IN CHESTERVILLE

A dance under the auspices of Chesterville L. O. L. 2686 will be held in the Orange Hall, Chesterville, on the evening of Friday, March 27th, with a good orchestra in attendance. Refreshments will be served. Admission 35c each person. 21

PLAY AT MOREWOOD

A play entitled "Aaron Slick from Punkin Crick," (a clean rural comedy in three acts) will be presented under the auspices of the Presbyterian Ladies' Aid in the Presbyterian Hall, Morewood, on March 27th, commencing at 8 o'clock. Admission 35c and 25c. 21

Mrs. D. G. Hutt Buried

The funeral of Emma Perrault, beloved wife of D. G. Hutt, who died suddenly at her home at Maple Ridge on March 9th, was held Thursday afternoon. Rev. R. E. Newman conducted the service, and a quartette consisting of Misses Elsie Hewitt and Madge Campderros, O. L. King and A. E. Bolster rendered two numbers.

Many floral tributes attested to the esteem and regard in which Mrs. Hutt was held.

Surviving her are her husband, one daughter, Mrs. D. M. McElheran; three sons, Otho and Aura at home, and Arthur, of Rochester, N. Y.; one sister and six brothers, Mrs. Anne Dempsey, Lester Perrault, Ottawa; Frank, Chesterville; Harry, Iroquois; James, Woodlawn; Edward, Baldwin Place, N. Y., and William, Silver Creek, N. Y.

Morewood United W. A.

The regular meeting of the Women's Association of Morewood United church was held at the parsonage on Wednesday, March 4th with the president in the chair, when twenty-one members answered the roll call, and one new member was enrolled.

The treasurer reported proceeds of $61.90 from the contest concert.

The buying committee displayed some very pretty aprons and fancy articles.

It was decided to divide the society into four groups with the following convenors—Mrs. J. W. Bogart, Mrs. W. Coulthart, Mrs. W. Barrington, and Mrs. A. B. McConnell.

After the business was transacted, the ladies enjoyed a social hour and refreshments were served.

IN MEMORIAM

Barkley—In fond and loving memory of my dear father, Thos. Barkley, who died March 24th, 1929.

I often sit and think of you, dear father,
When I am all alone,
For memory is the only friend
That grief can call its own.
I have only a picture
Of the face I loved so well,
To part with you, it was so hard,
No human tongue can tell.
You bade no one your last farewell,
You waved your hand to none,
Your spirit fled before I knew
That you from me had gone.

—Ever remembered by daughter, Mrs. Daniel J. Durant and family.

PROGRESSIVE TEA AT MOREWOOD

Group Number One of the Women's Association of Morewood United church will hold a Progressive Tea in the Church Hall on Tuesday evening, March 29th, from seven to nine, after which a splendid programme will be given. Come and enjoy this novelty entertainment. Admission 25c.

Roads In Bad Shape

With the mild weather of the past few days, roads which were piled high in the big storm of ten days ago are becoming almost impassable for runners or wheels. Where the main highways were cleared of snow they are now practically bare but cannot be reached by wheels from the side roads which makes conditions very bad.

With considerable of the snow gone very little water has yet reached the ditches and the Nation river, the latter probably has never been known to be so low at this time of year. Ordinarily at this time the ice has passed down and the flood has passed its peak. The water has not yet risen over the stepping stones at the crossing near the mill.

Morewood Women's Institute

The regular meeting of the Women's Institute was held on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Vernon Fetterly with twenty-four ladies present. After the business, a St. Patrick's programme was carried out. Two approriate contests were conducted by Mrs. Myers and Mrs. Fetterly, a "Green Contest" and a "Tree Contest," an Irish poem was read by Mrs. Myers, and Mrs. Allan Swerdfeger sang an Irish song which received an encore. A bouquet of flowers was presented to the oldest member, Mrs. George Bogart. The roll call was answered with an Irish joke, and the dainty lunch served by the ladies of Cannamore had green decorations in keeping with the programme.

The April meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Ab. Dillabough.

Little Gwelda McGillvray Wins Anglican Drawing

The Ladies' Guild of Holy Trinity church held a very successful St. Patrick's tea at the home of Mrs. Bronskill Tuesday afternoon. Tea and coffee were poured by Mrs. T. J. McGee and Mrs. A. Morris, while the bake table was in charge of Mrs. A. Harradine, Mrs. Ed. Gillard and Mrs. Arthur Peake. Miss Gladys Fairbrass and Mrs. J. Farrell presided at the candy table. Others assisting were—Mrs. Will Fyke, Mrs. Bert Casselman, Mrs. Hanna, Mrs. Fairbrass, Miss Maud Fisher and Miss Edna McGee. An Afgham, made by the members, was raffled, the lucky name, that of Miss Gwelda McGillvray, being drawn by the Rev. G. Oliver Davies.

The Women's Institute will meet in the Library on Wednesday, March 25, at 2.30 p.m.

High School Hockeyists Leave for Toronto

This is a big day for Chesterville High school hockeyists with all students more or less excited as the hockey team prepares to leave for Toronto this afternoon to take part in the Interscholastic championship finals at the Arena in the provincial capital.

Chesterville has been drawn against Windsor–Walkerville Technical school for 2.30 Friday afternoon, while Belleville Collegiate will meet Runnymede Collegiate of Toronto. Saturday, losers will play losers, and winners will play winners. All games must be played to a decision.

The Windsor–Walkerville Tech. has some record, being Western Ontario champions for three years and were this year O. H. A. junior semi-finalists when they were beaten by Niagara Falls.

Chesterville High has only 105 pupils but they have developed a clever hockey team. In 19 games they have scored 79 goals against 21, have scored eight shutouts, and have beaten Morewood, Winchester, Berwick, Osgoode, Kingston, Iroquois, Kemptville and Ottawa Glebe.

Their team is:

J. Fyke, goal; F. Lapierre and R. Helmer, defence; R. Lynch, centre; C. Olsen, right wing; J. McAvoy, left wing; A. Tate and W. McElroy, subs.

Farmers' Daughters Will Vote

Complete equality between men and women as far as the franchise is concerned will be established in Ontario under a bill introduced in the Legislature yesterday by Hon. Leopold MacAulay, Provincial Secretary.

The bill is an amendment to the Municipal Act and places farmers' daughters on the same basis as farmers' sons, thus qualifying them for the franchise at municipal elections although they do not own property.

IRISH DRAMA "PADDY CASEY'S HOME" CLEVERLY PRESENTED BY LOCAL TALENT

With the recurring St. Patrick's Days the Music Hall has been the scene of many fine plays presented by St. Mary's Dramatic Club, until the saying that the most recent one was the best ever has become somewhat hackneyed, but judging as far as we are capable, we have no hesitation in saying Tuesday night's effort far surpassed anything ever before attempted by this talented club when "Paddy's Casey's Home" was the offering that kept a packed house intensely interested for more than three hours.

The story was a reasonable one that appealed to the hearts of all. Paddy Casey (Mr. Walter Carr) was a one-time hod carrier who graduated to a contractor in the city of New York and eventually amassed a million dollars but never got away from his hod carrying days when the family moved from "Shantytown" to a more aristocratic district of the city, where his wife Mary Anne (Mrs. Mac Curran) wished to forget their earlier days and climb socially. Mrs. Casey was ably assisted by her daughter, Kathleen, (Miss Madeline Hamilton) and their son, Michael (Mr. Arnold Lynch), while Maggie (Miss Anna McDonald) sympathized with her father and tried to make things easier for him.

Complications arose, however, when a new maid was being engaged by Mrs. Casey. At the hour when the maid should have arrived, the daughter of an old friend (Miss Evelyn Farmer) whose father had made much money and lived in California, appeared at the Casey home and with the connivance of Paddy Casey and Maggie, impersonated the maid and lived in the Casey home, where Michael fell in love with her, much to his mother's disgust.

In their social flights, Mrs. Casey and Kathleen required an elaborate wardrobe and to be up-to-date secured the services of a fashionable modiste, or, as Paddy Casey called him, "a he dressmaker," in the person of Armand Francois Bon Aime de Lovier (Mr. Ted Carr), who gave a very fine delineation of his part, injecting just enough comedy into the situations without making them ridiculous.

Mike Casey, who could not get along on an allowance of three hundred per month, got mixed up with a diamond smuggling racket and had secreted the gems in his own home awaiting delivery. These gems became the lure of Madame Bariski (Miss Jewel Clement) alias Slippery Ann, a confidence woman, who, posing as a Bolshevik, made the acquaintance of Mrs. Casey and Kathleen at the Tuesday Morning Club and was invited to be their guest at the Casey home. While there she prattled of free love and of people living their own lives and a disbelief in marriage until Mary Anne thought she should divorce poor old Paddy, and the daughter, Kathleen, had broken her engagement with George Drake (Mat Flynn).

Suspicions of smuggling had reached the treasury department and Jim Dougherty (Eric McMillan) of the department was put in charge of the investigations which led to the Casey home and pointed strongly to Mike as being the guilty party. All the while, Madame Bariski and an accomplice, a new janitor (Tommy Bourke) were doing their utmost to lay hold of the sack of diamonds and make their get-away.

Under instructions of Jim Dougherty, Paddy Casey issued the order that no one was to be allowed to leave the place until further orders. Kathleen, in her new beliefs under the guidance of Madame Bariski, decided to disappear for a few days, taking with her her jewels to a place named by the confidence woman, but was fortunately detained when all hands turned out in the middle of the night when the supposed janitor was seriously wounded by a watchman on the grounds. Although only slightly wounded, the janitor feigned death and confessed that Madame Bariski was his wife in the hopes that both of them would get away from the clutches of Jim Dougherty, who in his work had uncovered the plot, and had arrested Mike Casey on the smuggling charge but could not prove it, when Eileen, the maid, had taken teh blame, to free young Mike whom she loved. While all this was going on Maggie Casey and Jim Dougherty had become enamoured of each other and, instead of trying to hold the criminal had conspired to free Maggie's brother, all of which was successfully done, except that when all had retired, the janitor suddenly came to life and decamped with Madame Bariski in the dead of night, but not before securing the diamonds, Paddy's purse, Kathleen's jewels, and the clothes of the modiste, who brought consternation to the group when he dashed into it wrapped up in a blanket. Explanations were made, Paddy forgave his Mary Anne, Kathleen became reconciled with George Drake, Eileen's identity was revealed as the daughter of a millionaire which made Mike's choice quite proper, Jim Dougherty and Maggie were soul mates and everything was settled to the utmost satisfaction.

Mr. C. J. McCarney, of Merrickville, who was guest soloist for the occasion, rendered most acceptably several songs of old Ireland which were enthusiastically received.

Miss Ella McCloskey in her usual brilliant manner entertained the audience waiting for the first curtain with piano selections appropriate to St. Patrick's Day.

Financially the entertainment was a most decided success, with the receipts totalling more than $180.

William Joseph Cameron Laid to Rest at Finch

The funeral of William Joseph Cameron, United Counties mechanic at Finch for the past twelve years, was held on Thursday from his residence at Finch to St. Luke's Presbyterian church and cemetery. Rev Owen J. Roberts, minister of St. Luke's, conducted the services, assisted by Rev. G. N. Maxwell, of Chalmers United church. Pallbearers were W. E. McQuinn, Gladstone McLean, M. F. McMillan, Dr. J. G. McLeod, John A. Robinson and William Young.

Among the relatives and friends present from a distance were Frank Baker, of Crysler; John McMillan, Angus J. McMillan, Allan McMillan, S. G. McDonald and Fraser McRae, of Avonmore; Robert Smith and Gordon Raymond, of Newington; Lewis and Lorne Hutt, Berwick; John Currie and Fred Leduc of Crysler; S Clark, of Aultsville; Mr. and Mrs. William Grandaw, of Smiths Falls; Mrs. Frank Bragg, of Avonmore; Mrs. D. A. McNaughton, Mrs. John McDermid, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Cameron, George Beckstead, and A. K. MacMillan, of Cornwall; Dixon Fetterly, and Mrs. James Rodden, of Montreal; Harold McKie, of Apple Hill; W. O. Wert and Miss Fern Wert, of Avonmore; and John Nicholson, of Merrickville.

Floral tributes were received from the family, Finch Lodge 557, A. F. & A. M.; L.O.L., 270, Finch; L.O.B.A. 225, Finch; Mr. and Mrs. John Bush and Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Bush, Mr. and Mrs. Cory Bush and Mrs. J. L. Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. A. Beckstead, George and Lillie; Mrs. Ethel Fetterly and family, of Montreal; Mr. and Mrs. Levi Gibson, Finch; Finch Women's Institute, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Young, Finch; Mr. and Mrs. K. C. McLean, Miss Grace Hamilton, J. A. Robinson and S. J. McDonald; J. G. Cameron, county road superintendent, and A. K. McMillan, county clerk and treasurer, Cornwall; Mrs. F. L. Willis, R. N., of Centreville, Maryland.

Mr. Cameron was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cameron, of Finch, and received his education there. When a young man he was employed with M. A. Smirle in the sash and door factory at Finch. He later removed to Otterville, following the same trade ,only to return to Finch twelve years ago, to take a position as foreman of road construction in the United Counties. Latterly he was appointed mechanic in charge of all county machinery and was considered an expert with steam and gasoline engines. In October, 1929, he was called to St. Hubert's Airport, Montreal, to assist in the construction of waterbound macadam runways for landing planes, but after two months returned to his former position, which he occupied until two weeks before his death.

Burial of John Grey Smirle, of Cannamore

John Grey Smirle, who had been very poorly for several years, suffered an attack of rheumatism which affected his heart and stomach, from which he passed away on Friday, March 6. The funeral was conducted by Rev. Nimmo on Sunday afternoon at the Morewood Presbyterian church and cemetery.

The deceased was the son of the late Robert Smirle and Eliza Feeley and was 59 years of age.

He leaves to mourn his loss a widow and eleven children, a sister, Mrs. W. Holls, of Calif.; two brothers, Archie Smirle, of Calif., and Thomas Smirle, of Saskatchewan.

Friends from a distance who attended the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. James Coyne, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Lazette, Mrs. Fred Coyne, Mrs. Wm. Lazette, Mrs. John Lazette, Mr. Jas. Lazette, and Mr. Charles Lazette, all of Cornwall; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lazette, of Crysler; Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Cochrane, of Russell.

Flowers were received from the following: wreaths—the family, S. S. No. 7, Winchester; cut flowers, Mr. and Mrs. John Shaver, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hillis.

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Alfalfa hay reduces the cost of production of live stock products. Grow alfalfa!

KNOW WHAT YOU SOW—"For whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Sow only large, plump, bright seed. Poor seed is dear at any price.

In view of the Somerset report, advocating wider use of pre-cooling facilities and central packing of fruit, itis interesting to note that Mr. Geo. Wilson, secretary of the Norfolk Fruit Growers, places the value of their new cold storage plant in marketing the 1930 crop at $35,750.

Only land that will respond to good treatment should be cultivated at all. There are many thousands of acres in Ontario that will not produce farm crops profitably and should be reforested without further waste of time and energy. Every farmer who applies in time can get free 3,500 trees for reforesting waste areas and 500 for planting in windbreaks. Application forms are available at your local Agricultural Office.

Valuable Snowfall

The recent heavy snowfall, which was general throughout Ontario, served the dual purpose of replenishing the water supply in places where the shortage had been keenly felt during the past few months and of providing a valuable covern fall wheat and other early crops. It is not often that the farming districts receive such a blessing in mid-March and this may prove a happy augury for a prosperous season.

SEED CORN

Sufficient Home Grown Seed Available

As a result of the very favourable weather and the improved situation in regard to the corn borer in 1930, Southwestern Ontario is offering this spring large quantities of seed corn of excellent quality. Official tests have already revealed particularly high germinating power, some samples running as high as 98 to 100 per cent.

Regulations controlling the shipment of seed corn have been modified and this spring any growers or dealers in Old Ontario and Quebec may purchase their requirements and have same delivered on the cob as was the custom previous to the corn borer trouble.

Seed corn grown and matured in Ontario is better adapted to Ontario conditions when used either for grain or ensilage purposes than is the seed imported from sections where the larger types of corn prevail. Experience has proved that varieties such as Golden Glow, Bailey, White Cap and the Flints are best suited to our conditions.

Prevailing conditions demand that we purchase our supplies at home when they are available and are of satisfactory quality. The corn growers of Essex, Kent and Lambton Counties are this year in a position to live up to the enviable reputations as seed producers built up prior to the invasion of the borer.

Purchase your supply of seed corn at home and know what you sow.

Cow testing is very important. Not all cows that give milk are profitable. The only way to make sure of these unprofitable cows is by the systematic use of the milk scales and the Babcock Test.

Sow Clean Seed

A recent survey shows that weeds were responsible for a total loss of between 150 and 200 million dollars in Canada last year. The direct loss in crop actually displaced or killed out by weeds was over 100 millions, while the remainder was made up of freight charges for carrying weed seeds along with grain, clover and other crops, loss of moisture, depreciation of farm value due to weeds and the increase in cultivation necessary where these soil robbers were present. To mitigate this loss, the land must be cleaned up. Careful preseeding cultivation will clean up ordinary fields, while partial summer fallow and the sowing of smother crops such as buckwheat, rape and turnips are recommended for very bad patches of such tenacious weeds as twitch and sow thistle. A clean seed bed, plus clean clover seed and clean seed grain of a high standard of purity and germination, will give a big increase in yield over the other kind at practically no more cost. Only clean, plump, vigourous seed, tested and approved by Government authorities, should be used.

Weekly Crop Report

Naturally at this time of the year the reports of the agricultural representatives throughout Ontario would deal chiefly with seeds and seed problems. The most recent one states that seed cleaning activity is quite pronounced, particularly in Lanark, where one large plant has been running to capacity for some time. In Leeds many enquiries are being received for seed grain. Winter conditions as reported from Muskoka and Parry Sound have been almost ideal for new seeding. Hay is becoming scarce with the baled variety selling at $18 per ton. Ontario reports a heavy demand for both seed and sieve material for fanning mills. Large numbers of Peel County farmers have been turning out for barn meetings at which agricultural problems are co-operatively discussed. In Perth, seed grain is not moving as briskly as in other counties. Live stock in Peterboro is in good condition generally, with feed quite cheap. The same applies to Prince Edward. Orchards and fruit bushes in South Simcoe have wintered well because of the mild winter and good prices are being obtained at sales. In Welland, orchards are receiving a general clean-up and are in good condition. More alfalfa seed than ever before is reported by Wellington.

A Farming Journal

An example which might well be followed in other counties is that of the Norfolk Chamber of Commerce in issuing an annual Agricultural Journal. The third annual issue has just been distributed free of charge to 5,000 farmers in the county. It is an eight-page publication and contains a wealth of information relating to the farming industry. Almost every phase of agriculture as carried on in this county is discussed, such as poultry-breeding, reforestation, tobacco-raising, fertilizers, fruit and vegetable-growing. It also carries several informative articles by O. A. C. authorities. Numerous pictures of local interest are used to brighten the pages. The local representative, F. C. Paterson, who is also secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, has been largely responsible for the success of this valuable publication.

Should Check Fertilizers

This is the season for buying fertilizers and it is important that farmers should know how to protect themselves in making sure that they are delivered the kind and analysis of fertilizer which they purchase. The Federal fertilizers act requires that every fertilizer delivered to a farmer must be labelled with the guaranteed analysis in terms of nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash. Therefore the farmer should check the guaranteed analysis of the fertilizer when it arrives. If short one per cent nitrogen, it is worth about $2.50 a ton less than the purchase price and phosphoric acid and potash are worth about $1 for each per cent. Purchasers are advised to refused acceptance of fertilizer which is not labelled precisely the same guaranteed analysis as that purchased. Should any farmer have reason to doubt the value of a fertilizer delivered to him, he is advised to communicate with the nearest fertilizer inspector or the district representative or agriculture.

Urges Distinctive Mark

"Ontario growers, co-operating with the Ontario Government in packing their apples for export, have made a wonderful impression upon the export market this season," writes Andrew Fulton, special overseas fruit representative. He continues: "The adoption of a uniform standard of colour and quality which has been maintained throughout the season has been recognized by the buyers. I would urge, however, that growers, before another season arrives, carefully consider the advisability of eliminating the multiplicity of brands that now exist and to adopt one outstanding mark by which Ontario apples may be recognized."

FLOWER COLOURS

A golden sunbeam lost its way
And wandered at its will;
It kissed the yielding, soft, brown earth;
Up sprang a daffodil.

The rainbow missed its purple stripe,
And sought it high and low.
'Twas found in a cool, shady nook,
Where fragrant violets grow.

One breezy eve a pink-tipped cloud
Sailed off into the air,
Then settled in a rose-filled spot,
To tint the flowers there.

A bit of summer sky fell down
Into my garden pot,
And now I know whence comes the blue
Of the forget-me-not.

SHORTCAKE OR PUDDING

By Etta Bitta Pye

SHORTCAKE for tea or pudding for dinner—either may be flavoured or garnished with cocoanut. Try these recipes and see how they delight:

Golden Cocoanut Shortcake.

8 thin slices sponge cake
orange sauce
3 oranges, sections free from membrane
½ can cocoanut, southern style

Allow two slices of sponge cake for each serving. Place first slice of sponge cake on plate, cover with orange sauce, orange sections, cocoanut and additional orange sauce. Cover with second piece of sponge cake and top with orange sauce and orange slices. Sprinkle with cocoanut. Garnish with whipped cream around base if desired. Serves four.

Cocoanut Cabinet Pudding

5 egg yolks, slightly beaten
5 tablespoons sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
2 cups milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
lady fingers or strips of cake
1½ cups apricots, sliced
1 cup cocoanut, southern style

Combine egg yolks, sugar and salt with 2 cups milk and cook in double boiler until mixture coats the spoon, stirring constantly; soak gelatin in ¼ cup milk 5 minutes and add hot custard. Stir until gelatin dissolves. Add vanilla. Strain custard into mold, filling 1½ inches deep. Chill until firm. Dip lady fingers into part of custard mixture and line sides of mold. Fill centre of mold with alternate layers of apricots, remaining custard and cocoanut. Chill until firm. Unmold. Garnish with additional apricot halves, whipped cream, and strips of angelica. Serves eight.

Our Ottawa Letter

OTTAWA, March 19.—Parliament is in session and will stay that way for at least three-and-a-half months. Some pessimists are already to the fore with prophecies that the meeting will carry over until fall—and it may.

The programme, as laid before members in the Speech from the Throne, appears contentious only with respect to tariff revision. There is other legislation proposed which the former government refused, such as federal aid for highway building and for technical education. The objection to it, however, is largely academic and it will have the staunch support of the independent members as well as of the Government. Mr. King's objection is to the Dominion voting money where it does not retain direct control of the expenditure. When that objection is recorded the House should be ready for the vote.

The same situation applies after a fashion to old age pensions, though it is under legislation passed by Mr. King that the Dominion already contributes half of these pensions. Under that legislation the Maritime provinces and Quebec felt they could not assume the other half of the expenditure and for that reason the aged indigent in those provinces have not enjoyed pensions up to this time. In other provinces, notably in Ontario, the burden on the municipalities has been felt keenly. The Bennett legislation will take practically the entire burden off the provinces, relieving those where pensions are now operative of their responsibility and securing for the aged poor in the other provinces equality of treatment.

The maximum pension, it is believed, will remain at $240 per year until the whole scheme is in operation and there is opportunity to check the annual cost. At present the entire income of the pensioner is strictly limited and in the new legislation some concession in this regard may be extended. It may even become possible for provinces where they so desire, to augment the federal pension.

The tariff revision is to be extensive on general and intermediate classifications. Mr. Bennett's belief is that the tariff can be used to build up the country and that it can so be used without exploitation of the consuming public. His government is likely to settle for the immediate future the soundness of his belief. High tariffs are going to get an acid test. In putting them into effect, Mr. Bennett is to create a new tariff board whose duty it will be, not only to inquire into rates, but, to safeguard the consumer. Exploitation as a corollary of high tariffs has been the feature of opposition to them and if Mr. Bennett can definitely stamp out exploitation, and fear of it, he will have gone a long way towards destroying prejudice against protective policy. Before his new schedules become effective, however, volumes of Hansard will be filled with barnacled argument for and against.

In the Speech from the Throne, the Government states its satisfaction with progress made at the London economic conference and expresses confidence in the success of the adjourned meeting in Ottawa this fall. As a concession to the conference, very few changes will be made in the existing schedule of British preferences during the present session.

An interesting development is to be the re-organization of Government purchasing. This runs into huge sums each year and has been done through dozens of different department officials. That the system has led to abuse is conceded and the belief exists in many quarters that properly controlled purchasing will mean a saving annually of several millions to the public treasury. By a similar process it is expected that considerable money is to be saved by a new and business-like control of national finance.

Morewood Women's Institute

The February meeting of the Women's Institute of Morewood took the form of an "At Home," when the members entertained their husbands and invited guests.

A very happy evening was spent in Mr. Thos. Faulkner's hall. A beautiful table of flowers was donated by Mrs. Sheppard, of Russell, and was much admired, and added colour to the assembly. Musical contests, games were enjoyed, and progressive euchre was played at eight tables, the ladies' prize being awarded to Miss Beryl Hetherington, and the gentleman's to Mr. S. Barrington. A merry orchestra rendered all the popular music, also a male quartette sang very nicely two selections.

A dainty lunch was served by the ladies in charge of the menu, not forgetting a good supply of pies for the gentlemen.

A woman arriving in this country after a short visit abroad was asked by the customs officials at the landing port:

"Anything to declare, madam?"

"No," she replied sweetly, "nothing."

"Then, madam," said the official gravely, "am I to take it that the fur tail I see hanging down under your coat is your own?"

The Tourists Are Coming

Almost before we know it the advance guard of the 1931 army of tourists will be passing our doors. At least far too many of them will pass unless we wake up to the fact that these tourists should be cultivated and taught to enter our doors rather than pass them.

The average tourist requires so many dollars a day for each day he is on tour. He must have gas, oil, food, and sleeping accommodations. Some one somewhere will be called upon to furnish them. In other years we have gotten our share of this tourist trade and of this money.

It would be a very conservative estimate to say that twenty tourists drive through our town each day. Twenty tourists a day for say 150 days means a total of 3,000 tourists. If our town, our store windows, our streets, our hotels, and everything about us, could be made so attractive that each of these tourists would find it a pleasure to spend one dollar with us, it would mean quite a tidy little sum to our business men and women.

Tourists cover so much territory that they can size up a town almost instantly. If we can make ours a little better than those around us the tourists will see to it that we get more than our share of their trade and our full share of publicity when they return to their homes.

THE PROOF OF MR. PEASLEE'S PUDDING

"I HAD my doubts about that new man that's bought the Gid Waldron place first of his comin' here," Caleb Peaslee remarked, nodding his head weightily, "but now that I've had a chance to see more of him and kind of size him up I'm feelin' consid able easier. I'm about ready to believe he'll be a good neighbour and a benefit to the community most likely."

Deacon Hyne protruded his lower lip. "He's a book farmer," he objected stubbornly. "He's learnt a lot of things about balanced rations—whatever they are—and testin' milk for butter fat mebbe, but I bet he couldn't go into a herd and pick out a good milker by her looks and by the way she'd stand handlin', same's you or me or any man that's been brought up with horned cattle from a boy."

"I venture to say," said Caleb, "that four times out of five he'd pick a better cow! He's got book learnin' to help out his judgment, and he got his judgment sames you and I got ourn—"

"Off'n a farm?" demanded the deacon sharply. "How'd you know he ever see a farm till he come here? D'he ever tell you so in so many words?"

"Well, no, he didn't," Caleb admitted "but for all that I'm willin' to b'lieve he was raised on a farm; I've got what I'd take for fust-rate evidence."

The deacon snorted in a manner that indicated disbelief.

"I shouldn't wonder," Mr. Peaslee observed, "if some of the things that've been said by diff'rent ones might have got to his ears some way. One or two hints he let fall to me kind of makes me think so anyway."

"Such as what?" asked the deacon a little uneasily, and a patch of red showed on each of his gaunt cheek bones.

"Well," Caleb replied, "it's kind of hard to have 'em word for word where I didn't charge myself with 'em p'ticular; but one day when he was over to my place he did say somethin' about farmer that'd 'pitch hay onto a load from the leeward,' and that give me a notion he'd seen enough of hayin' to know it loads easier from the side the wind's blowin' from!"

"Well, that's true ' nough," the deacon replied grudgingly, "but that ain't saying' he was fetched up on a farm, now is it?"

"Another thing he let fall," continued Caleb, " was a remark about Jed Norris shinglin' his barn; I'd been tellin' him how Jed shingled it holdin' the shingles in his arms and standin' on a ladder, bein' too shiftless to build a proper stagin' to work from."

"What'd he say to that?" asked the deacon.

"He looked kind of amused," replied Caleb, "and then he said he knew a boy once in his young days that undertook to lug fifty sap buckets without handles half a mile to the sap orchard; and he went on to say, 'sif that ended the matter, that the boy never amounted to anything when he growed up."

"I'll bet he never did, either," assented the deacon, "doin' a fool thing like that!" His prejudice against the new man was plainly wavering. "What else did he say?"

Caleb grasped his chin thoughtfully. "Well, as I told you, I can't jest say over word for word all he let fall; but one thing that went to prove to me—and to my wife too—that he was farm raised and farm fed was somethin' that come up at dinner time. He'd come over to see about gittin' leave to take down a panel fence in my lower pasture so's he could drive down to the brook for a load of gravel: and, bein' it was about dinner time, I asked him if he wouldn't draw up with us to Sunday dinner! My wife's a good cook, and that day she had an extry good setout, seems to me; she had a couple of baked chickens and mashed squash and riz bread and biscuits, both, and celery right out of the spring house and baked p'taters and apple pie and two-three kinds of cake with easy frosting—you know, the soft kind made with a cream; and Bennoch—that's his name—laid in a good big meal of it. It done me good to see him eat it!"

The deacon looked doubtful. "I don't see as that proves anything," he objected. "Anybody could make a meal off'n that grub, I don't care if he ever saw a farm."

"That ain't all," Caleb assured him. "When he'd et a good square meal my wife got up and fetched something else. 'I don't know as you'll like this, she says, 'but we have it about every Sunday, and if you don't like it I won't think you ain't p'lite if you don't finish it.' And she sot a dishful down in front of him, and I put the cream and sugar where he c'd reach 'em.

"He took one mouthful," continued Mr. Peaslee, "and then he leaned back and grinned at my wife. 'Rye and Injun puddin',' he says to her, 'and if I ain't lost my judgment, it was cooked in a brick oven! I ain't had any before for ten years, but it tastes jest as good as ever!'

"And when he said that," Caleb asserted stoutly, "I didn't need another word to tell me that he'd been raised on a farm—not a word! And now," he demand, "what do you think about it, Hyne?"

Hearing no reply, he turned and found the deacon looking off into the distanct, his lips were drawn in over his almost toothless gums, and he was swallowing in reminiscent delight. "Rye an' Injun!" he said wistfully and swallowed again.

Spencerville Youth Missing

Charles Alexander Montgomery 17-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Montgomery, of Spencerville, mysteriously disappeared from that town Tuesday evening. Montgomery, who is a student at the Spencerville continuation school, had attended classes in the afternoon as usual, and after classes were over was seen north of Spencerville on the Prescott highway.

He was absent from the village all right but was seen at 6.30 yesterday morning riding a bicycle on a side road north of the highway by Earl Adams, a rural mail-driver. No trace of his whereabouts has been found since although his parents and police had been scouring the district during the entire day.

Montgomery is five feet eight in height, weighs about 140 pounds, and has blue eyes, sandy hair and a ruddy complexion. One distinguishing characteristic he possesses is a nose of exceptional redness. At the time of his diappearance he was wearing a light grey cap, dark blue overcoat, light blue windbreaker with simple fastenings, knicker trousers and overshoes. Parents are asking anybody who knows of his whereabouts to communicate with them or with the local police.

Seed Cleaning Plant Operating at Winchester

Under the new policy of the Ontario Department of Agriculture in giving assistance to persons or organizations in the installation of power seed cleaning plants to do custom cleaning of seeds and seed grains, farmers of Winchester Township are to be served by a plant in their vicinity. The firm of Fennel & Wallace are installing a No. 150 Plessisville power cleaner.

The plant will be under the supervision of the Crops Branch of the Department of Agriculture. The inspector in charge will regularly visit the plant to assist in its operation and to check up on the quality of work being done. Prices charged for cleaning seed are also subject to the approval of the Department.

The machine itself is of a type generally admitted the best cleaner on the market and is capable of cleaning and grading all kinds of field and garden seeds, peas, beans, seed grain, etc. One noteworthy feature of its construction is the vertical air blast controlled by a device known as the variable air regulator. This arrangement gives a wide range of air blast—"from a zephyr to a hurricane and every point between"—with perfect control at all times. Every possible variation between the two extremes can be secured to exactly the desired degree. A large number of screens are included in the equipment and separations that were impossible with the old-time fanning mill will be quite easily made.

The need for such service in the district has long been felt, and it is anticipated that a very large percentage of the farmers will take advantage of the service offered. In those sections of the province, particularly the Ottawa Valley, where seed cleaning plants have been in operation for three or four seasons, a great improvement in the quality of the crops has been noted. One community in the Ottawa Valley, where farmers have availed themselves of the service of the local plant, has worked up a splendid trade for Alaska seed oats, and already this year six carloads of Alaskas have been shipped out of the district for seed purposes.

Anyone who laid in a stock of eggs a century ago is out of luck. The daily papers sagely tell us that they are as cheap now as they were then. Someone is always taking the joy out of life.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of a dear wife and mother, who passed away March 22nd, 1930.

When the evening shades are falling
And we are all alone,
To our hearts there comes a longing
If she only could come home.

Some may think we do not miss her
When at times they see us smile,
Little do they know the heart ache
That we suffer all the while.

The Maple Sugar Industry Act

It is reported that farmers in various parts of the country are considering the abandonment of their sugar bushes this spring because of the licensing of the Maple Sugar Industry Act, 1930. Unfortunately these farmers have mis-interpreted the regulations and, with a view to righting this situation, an explanation of the licensing and registering clauses is noted herein.

A sugar bush owner who handles his own product only, is not classed as a manufacturer or packer, and is therefore not required to take out a manufacturer's license on which a fee of $20.00 is assessed. Registration of a sugar bush may be carried out by the Minister of Agriculture upon request of the sugar bush owner; but this registration is purely voluntary and free of charge.

Licensing of a sugar bush is not required when the owner markets all his product within the province in which his sugar bush is located. But if he sells any of his output in another province or out of the country, a license is required, which license will be issued upon application free of charge.

Farmers desiring registration of their sugar bushes or requiring a license should communicate without delay to the Fruit Commissioner, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

A LOCAL FARMER'S VIEWPOINT

Iroquois Post

TO JUDGE by the current newspaper comment and the opinions of our white-collared agriculture specialists, farming in Canada seems to be in a bad way. Practically everyone, from bank presidents down to clerks and office boys, take a crack at the farmer, and offer gratuitious advice as to how the situation may be remedied. But just let us see where we actually stand in comparison with our city neighbours.

In these days of milk at a dollar a hundred or less, and five-cent pork, the farmer is apt to start wondering just wherein lies the advantages in farming as a vocation or means of livelihood. There is a tendency to look more and more toward the city, picturing the urban citizen with his steady and reliable income, pursuing the even tenor of his way, year in and year out, secure in the anticipation of the monthly cheque arriving on the dot. Distant pastures surely take on a verdant hue at such times as these. But is such an attitude justified? We of the rural sections are prone to overlook many advantages to which we become so accustomed that they have lost their significance. The actual cash income is a much more important factor in determining the standard of living of the city dweller than of the farmer.

Admitting that we are not as self-sustaining as were our fathers, at the same time there are so many perquisites that we enjoy, yet take for granted, that the cash income of our city cousins assumes unjustified proportion. To mention a few of these things, milk does not cost us ten cents or more a quart; we may have a supply of fresh eggs at something less than forty-five cents per dozen. Vegetables cost us little or nothing, and we may raise our own supply of meat if so inclined. So much for the cost of living.

In social life, again, we have the advantage. Community gatherings take the place of movies, and without doubt supply a greater amount of wholesome recreation. This is a phase of rural life that could and should be developed more than it is at present. Many farms today are equipped with radios, and the musical talent of a whole continent may be summoned with a turn of the dial. Good roads and motor cars have brought the city to our very doors without sacrificing the benefits of farm life. Local schools and churches adequately supply our educational and religious needs and at the same time give our children the maximum of home influence, a factor of vital importance in the eyes of all right-thinking parents.

Another distinct advantage that farming offers is its scope of managerial ability. What other occupation today offers such great opportunity to the individual to use his own iniative, and such rewards for good judgment?

As a character builder for the rising generation, the farm training is generally conceded to be without equal.

To these might be added the benefits of outdoor life, the pleasures of working with live stock the self respect inspired by ownership of land, and the pleasant feeling of being secured from entering the ranks of the unemployed.

Taking it by and large, the successful farm of today enjoys most of the advantages of city life with none of its disadvantages, with many additional benefits too numerous to mention here.

There are, of course, various factors over which the farmer has no control, and which don't tend to make his lot any easier. The problem of markets is one of them. The farmer is probably the only man on earth who has to pay the price asked for all he buys and take the price offered for his produce. It has always been thus, and probably always will be, or at least until the inborn independence of the farmer is sufficiently controlled to allow him to work in close co-operation with his brothers.

Notwithstanding, farmers in Eastern Canada are in as secure a position as any class of people today, and in the opinion of observers their position is relatively stronger.

ECZEMA

Eczema is an inflammation of the skin accompanied by itching and burning. There are many forms of inflammation of the skin,the most common of which is eczema or salt rheum. It occurs frequently among babies and old people.

As in any other inflammation, there is redness of the spot. The redness increases if the part is irritated. The part itches and sometimes the itching is almost unbearable.

Eczema may be limited to an area, such as the face, or the hands, or the scalp, or it may spread to several parts of the body.

Any inflammation of the skin may follow some irritation from outside. If the hair brush strikes the ear repeatedly it may set up an inflammation of the skin of the ear.

The inflammations of the skin difficult to deal with are those which are due to some internal condition. The difficulty in treating them lies in the fact that it is not easy to find the cause, and it is not possible to treat any condition properly until the cause is known. Proper treatment always aims at the removal of the cause, otherwise the condition is not cured and will likely return.

Improper diet or inability to digest food properly may cause eczema. In such cases, it is the diet which must be corrected, or the digestive system cared for. In babies, if there is too much fat in the diet or if the baby is constipated, eczema may appear as a symptom.

The skin of some persons is particularly sensitive to certain factors which, in their cases, act as irritants and set up an inflammation of the skin.

Some people can use only the mildest of soaps; others cannot wear flannel next to the skin without having trouble.

Workers in certain industries whose hands are exposed to metals, may have skin trouble.

Eczema is also associated with what is called a generally run-down condition. The person whose health has suffered because of worry, lack of sleep or fresh air, or from any other condition which lowers his general health, may develop eczema as a result.

Eczema in old age is often associated with this general loss of physical fitness which is really old age.

The itching which occurs may be relieved by soothing ointments, but cure can only be brought about by removal of the cause. The physician's services are required in order to find the cause and direct the treatment towards the removal of the responsible factor.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 14 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

A Week in the Legislature

IN the first division of the present session of the Ontario Legislature, the Henry government was sustained by the huge vote of 82–19 on the main motion for adoption of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne on Tuesday. An amendment introduced by Farquhar Oliver, U. F. O., Grey South, seconded by T. H. Slack, Progressive, Dufferin, went down to an inglorious defeat by a vote of 95–6, the entire Liberal Group with the exception of Wm. Newman, North Victoria, who bolted before the vote was taken, voting with the Government to register what is probably a record and historical division for its size and fact that W. E. N. Sinclair, Liberal Leader, endorsed the agricultural policy of the government and its agricultural committee.

The Oliver–Slack amendment asked that the House go on record, "regretting the government's failure to establish and maintain markets for farm products so that by increased selling volume the farmer could meet his high overhead cost."

In winding up the debate, the three leaders, Premier Henry, Mr. Sinclair, and H. C. Nixon, spoke. They had been preceded by Wm. J. Newman and J. Fred Reid, Conservative, Windsor West.

Mr. Sinclair, in delivering a most vigorous and determined speech, denounced the amendment as an unfortunate episode coming as it had after the government had acted on his suggestion to convert the Agricultural Committee of the House into an enquiry committee. This committee, Mr. Sinclair said, had held three meetings as an "economic committee," and not as a political body, and after the House had agreed on co-operated effort this season in an honest endeavour to solve the agricultural problems and assist the farmer in his present-day difficulties.

"The Government is doing what we asked," said the Liberal Leader. "We cannot turn right around and kick it in the back. I think the people of the province will agree with me."

* * * *

MR. NIXON condemned the government for its milk policy, the gun license policy, and the Government's fight against Elmore Philpott, and Mitchell Hepburn in the recent by-elections in West Hamilton and Grenville. From the lining up of the Liberals with the Government and splitting from the Progressives, political authorities see an effort on the part of Mr. Nixon to remain independently Progressive and andeavour to establish his party as the coming Opposition group in the House.

* * * *

PREMIER HENRY, in a most analytical address, dealt with criticisms levelled at the government by opposition speakers during the debate. He accepted the hand of co-operation from Mr. Sinclair and his followers in the government's determined effort to assist the farmer, and asked rejection of the amendment. In dealing with the agricultural situation, Premier Henry pointed out that in seven years, the Conservative administration had shown a forty per cent increase in contributions to agricultural service. Value of farm produce in Ontario had increased from $420,000,000 in 1923 to $500,000,000 in 1929.

"This is no mean contribution to the wealth of the province," observed Premier Henry, who added that the farmer is not the only one who would like to have over-head problems solved.

"There is a temptation on the part of rural representatives to bemoan agicultural conditions," said Premier Henry. "It does not behoove public men to advertise unsatisfactory conditions which are really only a part of world-wide conditions and beyond the power of any one to change."

* * * *

REPRESENTATIVES of the Apple Growers' Association faced the Agriculture Committee with a request that a chain of cold storage plants be established throughout the province in an effort to better marketing conditions of apples. They asked that these plants be built by the association with governmental financial assistance.

* * * *

THE Henry Government was also sustained by a vote of 81–16 in defeating the motion of H. C. Nixon, Progressive leader, which favoured the principle of referendum and plebiscite. Mr. Sinclair and his Liberal group voted with the Progressives, and the lone Labour member, Earl Hutchenson, Kenora, bolted from the opposition to side with the government approving the present system of government liquor control.

A SAVING to the public of $500,000 is seen in the new reduced auto insurance rates on private passenger cars which was announced by Hon. W. H. Price, Attorney-General, under whose direction the Department of Insurance is administered. Rates on this class of car will be reduced from two to twenty-six per cent, but rates on commercial vehicles and fleets are to be increased in view of the findings of the Hodgins report that investigated the rates. Premiums on private cars it is estimated will total $6,500,000, while the estimated increase on rates for commercial vehicles and fleets will range about 12 per cent. The Hodgins commission, is was explained, cost about $60,000, but, in view of the saving to the public, this year under the new rates, Attorney-General Price declared to Commission had justified itself.

* * * *

REPRESENTATIONS from the Canadian Federation of the Blind waited on Premier Henry, urging appointment of a committee to consider needs of the blind and prepare legislation to provide pensions for sightless persons over 40 years of age and for all unemployed and otherwise needy blind from 21 years.

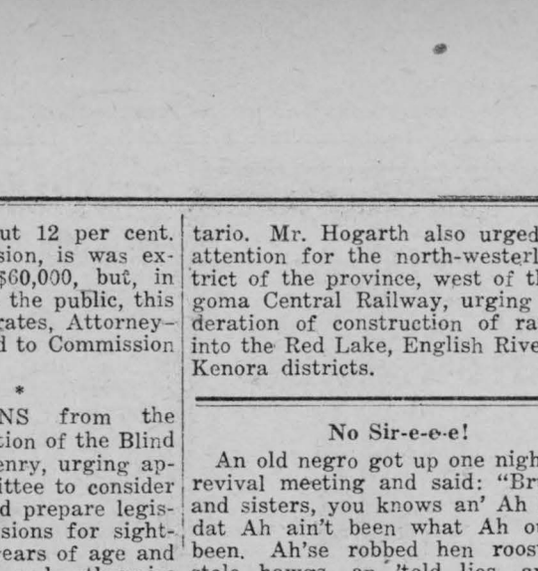

* * * *

D M. HOGARTH, Con., Port Arthur, in speaking on the debate on the Speech from the Throne, urged the government to appoint a commission to enquire into the working of the Newsprint Institute, which at present operates in Northern Ontario. Mr. Hogarth also urged more attention for the north-westerly district of the province, west of the Algoma Central Railway, urging consideration of construction of railways into the Red Lake, English River, and Kenora districts.

TAKING AFTER GRANDMOTHER

THREE generations were represented at the Langworthy's supper table. At the head sat Grandmother Langworthy, still wiry and indomitable. Her daughter-in-law, Marcia's mother, had the worried propitiatory air not uncommon among mothers of growing daughters, and Marcia herself, sullen and silent, represented, unfairly, the new generation.

"But it's only a class picnic," said Marcia's mother. "I can't see why you have to dress up for a picnic."

"Marcia's always dressed up, it seems to me," said Grandmother Langworthy. "We children used to carry our shoes and stockings to church in our hands and put 'em on behind the horse sheds before we went in."

"You couldn't expect anything like that of young folks, nowadays," the daughter-in-law quickly. "But Marcia is well enough dressed for any girl. When I was her age I had only one dress for every day and one for best."

"Oh, dear!" The querulous interjection came from Marcia. "I can't see why you don't understand, mother, that girls nowadays can't do with two dresses any more than they can go round barefooted the way they did when grandmother was young. Everything's different, and people do things differently."

"The more you have," contributed her grandmother, "the more discontented you are. When I was a girl I was tickled to death to get a pair of new shoes or anything at all that was new."

"Oh, I wish you could see how some of the girls dress!" cried Marcia. "I've only one decent shirt waist to my name, and and after I get it ironed I'll have to work till bedtime mending it so it'll be fit to wear." At the door she turned for a Parthian shot: "All the other girls will wear Georgette blouses."

Grandmother Langworthy reached for the bread. She was the only one of the three who ate the plain fare with relish.

"You spoil her, Mary," she commented impartially.

"I suppose I do," the mother replied. "I shouldn't mind that so much if Marcia thought so, too, but it looks to her that she doesn't have anything."

She waited patiently for Grandmother Langworthy to finish her bread and butter. But before the thick slice was disposed of Marcia burst into the room.

"Oh, look!" she cried, holding something filmy and damp toward her mother.

"What is it, child? Has something happened to your shirt waist?"

"Look! Can't you see?"

The two women bent toward her realizing that her excitement indicated pleasure rather than consternation. Her eyes were dilated; a half-frightened smile played about her lips. Now that something had dissipated her sullen air, she looked really pretty.

The mother was the first to speak. "Why, it's Georgette."

"Yes, and hand embroidered all up and down the front. Look!" Marcia straightened the filmy, clinging fabric.

"But where did it come from?" Grandmother Langworthy demanded.

"That's more than I know. It was lying in our back yard right by the steps."

There was a brief silence.

"Do you suppose it'll fit you, Marcia?" the girl's mother exclaimed.

"It looks so. Besides, Georgette isn't like voile. It'll fit a lamp post or a feather bolster. And, mother, it's perfectly good except for a tiny little tear by the cuff."

"But who does it belong to?" asked Grandmother Langworthy.

The inquiry, though timely, was evidently unwelcome. Marcia's face clouded.

"It was in our back yard," she said with something like defiance in her manner.

"You wouldn't say it was yours, would you?"

"It couldn't have blown from anywhere. There's not a breath stirring."

"I declare!" exclaimed the younger Mrs. Langworthy. "Your finding it just now looks fairly providential."

Grandmother Langworthy chuckled. "It's not my idea of providence, taking a nice shirt waist from somebody's clothesline and dropping it down by our back steps."

"I suppose," Marcia said, "you wouldn't spend a five-dollar bill you found blowing across the street."

"Not till I'd tried to find the owner."

"I can't go from house to house asking people whether this blouse belongs to them."

"Must have dropped from an aëroplane," commended the grandmother. Inher dry way she was the humourist of the family.

Marcia went into the kitchen and shut the door hard.

"Now you've made her feel bad," sighed her mother. "It's a pity if she can't take comfort in a shirt waist that blows from nobody knows where into our back yard."

"I'm worried about Marcia, Mary," the older woman answered. "It seems to me that nowadays folks care more for appearances than they do for honesty. If they can dress as well as their neighbours, they don't care whether their bills are paid or not."

"Times have changed. You can't expect Marcia to be satisfied with what we had."

"The Ten Commandments haven't changed any, not that I've heard of, anyway." Grandmother Langworthy began to clear the table.

It was soon evident that her grandmother's criticism had not permanently clouded Marcia's spirits. When she brought in the freshly-ironed blouse her face was radiant.

"Isn't it a beauty, mother? It's even prettier than I thought. With my white skirt I'll look as well as the others. Would you mind mending that little place on the cuff ?You can mend so much better than I."

Marcia was very likely to come home from school festivities in a depressed, not to say sulky, frame of mind; but the class picnic was a memorable exception. She had had a lovely time. Lots of the girls had noticed her blouse and said how pretty it was.

"Did you tell them where you bought it?" asked her grandmother.

"No, I didn't," answered Marcia, flushing.

As a matter of fact, she had been asked that very question and had answered evasively that the blouse was a present. She cast a rather startled glance toward her grandmother, hoping that the uncomfortably shrewd old lady would not continue her catechism. Apparently, Grandmother Langworthy had satisfied her curiosity.

The cloud on Marcia's spirits soon passed. "Oh, mother, I've been asked to join the Cat and Canary Club, the C and CC, they call it."

"That doesn't sound so very friendly," remarked Grandmother Langworthy.

Marcia's mother smiled uneasily. Club membership meant dues, special assessments for special occasions. extra new dresses. But after all she must find some way to meet the added expense; she could not bear to have Marcia shut out of pleasures that other girls enjoyed.

"It's a great honour, you know," Marcia went on brightly. "It is a club made up entirely of High School girls though it really has nothing to do with high school. They meet Saturdays at one another's houses, and everybody is crazy to belong. I honestly believe," she added triumphantly, "that I owe my invitation to that Georgette blouse."

"I'd hate to think," exploded her grandmother, "that I owed anybody's good opinion to stuff as flimsy as that!"

"It may have been different when you were a girl, grandmother, but nowadays dress makes a great deal of difference."

"Where are you going to meet next Saturday?" asked Marcia's mother, more because she wanted to change the topic of conversation to a pleasanter one than because she really cared to know.

"Oh, I'm not a member yet. Next Saturday they'll propose my name, and the Saturday after next they'll vote on it. There are two vacancies now, and I guess Ellen McIntyre will be the other new member."

Marcia did most of the talking that evening. Her enjoyment of the class picnic and her pride over the honour done her by the invitation to join the exclusice C and C C rendered her unusually voluble.

For a fortnight Marcia's emotional barometer indicated fair weather; then without warning it presaged storms. Poor Mrs. Langworthy did not know what to do with this girl who scarcely spoke, made a pretense of eating and went round wearing so forbidding an aspect that even her intrepid grandmother hesitated to address her.

With the hope of suggesting a topic of conversation that Marcia would find agreeable, Mrs. Langworthy one day spoke of the Cat and Canary Club. Marcia turned upon her almost savagely.

"Can't you see that that's all over? Ellen McIntyre's a full-fledged member, and I must have been blackballed."

"Blackballed!" repeated her mother aghast. Even Grandmother Langworthy looked startled. Neither was quite sure about the nature of the rite, but both were vaguely aware that it was not creditable.

"I suppose somebody thought I wasn't rich enough!" stormed Marcia. "Some girls in the club have rich fathers. Sara Kent, who asked me to join, hasn't come near me to explain or—or anything. She just nods when she sees me and keeps her distance."

Mrs. Langworthy raised her head and looked at her daughter.

"I'd have got you the money you needed if you'd joined the club Marcia," she quavered. I'd have done it somehow."

Even Marcia was touched. "Yes, I know, mother, but that's not enough. They meet round at one another's houses, you know; and I suppose somebody thought our house wasn't nice enough. Oh!" she cried, with the tears starting. "How dreadful it is to be poor!"

The seasons for picnics passed, and cold weather came on. Marcia's mother bought her a new winter coat; she changed her hour of church attendance to evening, when the threadbare seams of her own garments would be less aparent. Marcia took the new coat as a matter of course and thought resentfully of the furs that some of the other girls wore. After the unpleasant episode with the Cat and Canary Club she was inclined to hold herself aloof even from the girls with whom she had hitherto been friendly.

"She doesn't have any good times to speak of," her mother remarked.

"She won't take the good times that she might have," said Grandmother Langworthy. "Seems as if she couldn't believe in a good time that didn't cost money."

One chilly fall day Marcia came home from school and, knowing that her mother was not there, went to the rear of the house where she would find the door key, hidden rather obviously under the scrubbing pail on the porch. As she turned the corner with her books under her arm a big, brindle bulldog sprang form the steps where he had been lying. His strong jaws were set on a white garment apparently of cotton, and as Marcia stood staring at him in amazement he raised his head and shook his quarry savagely, bringing into view an embroidered ruffle.

Marcia uttered a sharp cry. She owned only one petticoat with an embroidered ruffle, and her first thought was that her mother had left it hanging on the line where this intruder had spied it. To advance upon a strange bulldog and take something from him is a feat that ordinarily would call for courage; but the thought of danger never entered Marcia's head. The imperative necessisty of snatching the embroidered petticoat from the dog before he reduced it to shreds overshadowed every other thought. At her approach the bulldog dropped the garment and also his tail. He crouched until his stomach almost touched the ground, moistening his muzzle ingratiatingly with his tongue. "Conscience does make cowards of us all"—even bulldogs. The big fellow would have defended a bone to the death, but he knew that he had no right whatever to the embroidered petticoat that Marcia pounced upon as he dropped it and the bulldog did not wait to see what she was going to do about it.

But even as she pounced Marcia realized her mistake. The petticoat was not hers. The material was finer, the embroidered ruffle deeper, and it boasted of sundry tucks and bands of insertion to which hers could lay no claim. Moreover, there was a name sewed to the waistband, the name of a schoolmate, Judith Lindsay.

With her forehead drawn into a pucker, Marcia put her books into the kitchen, hung the embroidered petticoat over her arm and started for Judith's house. The Lindsays lived several blocks away, but, as Marcia had left the schoolhouse as soon as school was over while the popular Judith had lingered, the two girls met at Judith's door.

"Did you want to see me?" asked Judith. She spoke with an accent of surprise that made Marcia uncomfortable. Then as her eye fell on the garment that Marcia carried on her arm the surprise became acute amazement. Judith's eyes dilated; her lips parted slightly.

Marcia caught sight of the brindled bulldog, lying asleep on the edge of the porch.

"Is that your dog?" she demanded quickly.

"Tibs? Why, yes. Surely Tibs is my dog."

"He was in our backyard when I came home from school just now, and he was worrying on this. I brought it back because it had your name on it."

"My petticoat!" gasped Judith. "Why, I shouldn't have believed that Tibs would steal clothes from the line!"

"He seemed ashamed when I caught him at it," said Marcia. "I guess he knew he hadn't any right to it." Her expression changed suddenly as an entirely new thought crossed her mind. "Judith," she gasped, "did you lose a Georgette blouse, did you, back in the fall soon after school opened?"

"Yes," replied Judith quietly, "I did."

"The one I mean is embroidered down the front with—"

"Little wreaths of roses," said Judith, finishing the sentence. " I did it myself, every bit."

Marcia's face was aflame.

"Oh, grandmother was right when she said I ought to try to find the owner. But you see, there it was so close by our doorsteps, and I did so want a Georgette blouse to wear to the picnic."

Judith was staring at her with a strange, startled expression, which Marcia was not able to interpret.

"Of coure you couldn't have done it!' 'Marcia burst out passionately. "You have so many lovely things. But if your best shirt waist were made of coarse voile with a little cheap lace down the front, and Georgette and embroidery rained down on you from the skies, you'd understand."

"I thought I did understand," said Judith, and her pale face made a striking contrast for Marcia's crimson one. "I had just finished it that afternoon, and Mary rinsed it for me and put it out on the line. She meant to press it as soon as it had dried a little. But when she went to look for it, it had disappeared, and Ella, the cook, said she'd noticed a girl walking by and just staring at that Georgette blouse. She couldn't tell how the girl looked except that she was about my age. And then the next day at the picnic—"

The two looked hard at each other.

"Yes," said Marcia in a shaking voice, "I see."

"I knew I couldn't be mistaken about that blouse," Judith continued in a tone of appeal. "And then one of the girls asked you where you bought it, and you looked so confused and said—"

"Yes, I remember; I said it was a present." Marcia put her hand to her hot forehead.

"I hate to go on," said Judith after a moment, "but I've got to tell you something that I'm afraid will make you feel bad."

"What! More?"

"Yes, it's about the C and C C."

"O Judith—"

"We may as well go though with this now, Marcia, since we've started. We girls wanted two new members, and we talked things over and picked you and Ellen McIntyre."

Marcia waited silently. So she had not owed the invitation to the hypnotic Georgette blouse; again her grandmother had been right.

"When Sara Kent proposed your name at the first meeting after the picnic, I opposed your election. I said you weren't the sort of girl we wanted in the club. I didn't tell them why, Marcia, but I said I knew what I was talking about, and they took my word for it. I guess you can't ever forgive me," she added unhappily. "But of course I'll tell the girls that I was mistaken."

Marcia waited a moment.

"We both made mistakes," she said unsteadily at first. "But I think there was some excuse for both of us."

Judith was touched by her generosity. "Marcia, that's dear of you. There's no vacancy in the C and C C now, but just as soon—no, I won't wait for a vacancy. I'll resign, and you can be elected in my place."

For a little while Marcia was silent; then she made perhaps the bravest speech of her life.

"Judith, as if I'd think of taking your place, or as if the girls would ever let you resign! But that isn't all. I'm afraid the C and C C is too expensive for me."

"Why, it isn't expensive. Fifteen or twenty dollars a year covers everything."

Marcia smiled. "And that," she said, "would buy my mother the new dress she needs so badly."

Marcia's mother and her grandmother spent considerable time in the next six months trying to account for the change in Marcia; then they gave it up and contented themselves with expatiating on Marcia's superiority over most young people of the present day.

"I dare say fine clothes are all right," said old Mrs. Langworthy. "I didn't have them when I was a girl, and you didn't have them; but I don't deny that they're pretty and becoming. It's only when a girl gets to thinking that clothes are a great deal more important than other things that it makes trouble."

"Marcia's not that way," her daughter-in-law boasted, with the beautiful forgetfulness of motherhood. "She understands the importance of other things."

"Marcia!" The shrewd old face creased in innumerable wrinkles. "Oh, Marcia's all right. She takes after her grandmother."

ABSOLUTELY

Some fellows can get away with most anything;
There's one in our neighbourhood;
Morals don't mean a thing to him,
Whether they're bad or good.
He lives with a woman he's crazy about—
Unmarried and don't care a blink.
And he doesn't give two steam heated hoots
What the neighbours may say or think.

He has no regard for truth or law,
And he don't care weeps or yearns,
To become a good citizen is all the bunk
So far as he is concerned.
He never thinks of paying a bill;
Society for him has no charm.
He'd let a whole town burn down
Before he'd turn in an alarm.

As a conversationalist he's null and void;
He hasn't shaved for weeks.
He neglects his appearance terribly
And has never been known to treat.
He won't work a lick or he won't go to church,
Fine arts to him are a bore.
And musical instruments to him are a joke,
He can't even play on the floor.

The telephone can ring itself weak,
But he won't give a trembling fret.
Where he stands on prohibition nobody knows—
One minute he's dry and the next wet.
With all of his fuss and cussedness,
He brings his mother great joy;
And he comes from a durn good family
Because he's OUR NEW BABY BOY!

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

DRIVE in SAFETY

with an Automobile Insurance Policy to protect you against the hazards of Fire, Theft, Collision, Property Damage and Public Liability.

Every Automobile Owner in Ontario should know about the new Financial Responsibility Law effective since September 1st. The new law makes necessary the abi lity to pay for damage.

In its general application, it requires that the motorist responsible for damage to person or property of others MUST PAY either personally or through insurance OR BE BARRED FROM THE ROAD.

The sensible thing to do is to carry Automobile Liability and Property Damage Insurance. It is better to have this insurance and not need it, than to need it and not have it.

People who depend upon their crops should not be without some kind of the above insurance.

The loss of crops and barns, sometimes dwellings, is a serious matter to all farmers.

The claims paid through this office, just recently, have been large.

We aim to satisfy our policyholders, and do our utmost on their behalf.

Possibly you believe that you are carrying enough insurance. Think for a moment what a total loss would mean to you. This, as you will admit, is quite possible.

Information regarding various forms of insurance glady given, you are under no obligation whatsoever, just call or write.

A motorist's car had stalled on a country road. The driver looked over his car and saw it was lubrication trouble. He asked an old lady in a nearby cottage if she had any oil in the house. "Any kind will do," he said, "castor oil if you have it." "I ain't got any castor oil, sir," said the old lady regretfully. "but I can mix you up a dose of salts."

"Count-On-Me" Mission Circle

The regular monthly meeting of the "Count-On-Me" Mission Circle of the Morewood United church was held Thursday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Marcellus in the form of a "Due Tea," with eleven members and about fifty visitors present.

The roll call was responded to by a verse from the New Testament, after which the secretary, Miss Addie Swerdfeger, read a letter from Miss Myrtle Casselman, who is practically interested in the circle. The circle decided to divide their programmes under the following heads, Devotional, Missionary, Literary, and Social, with Miss Louva Allison, Miss Nona Loucks, Miss Lillian Swerdfeger, and Mrs. Walter W. Steven as leaders. Mrs. Steven was in charge of the Study Book. The Misses Florence and Hazel Gordon contributed a duet "In a Garden," accompanied by Miss Evelyn Marcellus, which was much appreciated. The meeting closed with the benediction by Rev. Mr. Armstrong.

Music, singing and games were enjoyed until Mrs. Marcellus called for the contest singing of "Faith of our Fathers" between the girls and boys, which the judges decided in favour of the boys.

Mrs. Marcellus had home-made candy passed and afterwards a delightful lunch was served.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of my dear mother, who fell asleep March 22, 1930.

For many years our family chain
Was firmly linked together,
But, oh, the chain is broken now,
Our loved one gone, forever.

The pearly gates were opened,
A gentle voice said "Come,"
And, with farewells unspoken,
She calmly entered home.

—Mrs. W. C. Barrington.
