MOREWOOD HONORS DEPARTING HIGH SCHOOL PRINCIPAL

On Thursday evening, August 17 the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Loucks assembled at their home in the eve of their departure for Ottawa, where Mr. Loucks goes to take up his duties as principal of Westboro High School. His retirement from the principalship of Morewood High School was marked by the presentation to him of an Oak writing desk and to Mrs. Loucks a rocker, accompanied by the following address:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Loucks—

Your many friends in this community have assembled here this evening to spend with you a few hours of social intercourse and to recall the many pleasant memories of the past before you leave us to take up your future home in Ottawa. Although we all feel glad on account of your promotion to a field of greater opportunities and one more suited to your capabilities yet it is with feelings of regret and sadness that we realize that you are leaving us and the loss to our community will be very keenly felt.

As a teacher, we have learned to love and respect you for your many noble and excellent qualities and high ideals. Your conduct towards the pupils, who were privileged to receive instructions from you, has always been marked by kindly courtesy and consideration for their welfare, and you have been a constant friend ever ready to help and advise. You have always been a true example of manliness and your lofty, and upright character has ever filled your pupils with respect, both in the class room and in after life, and the influence you have exerted upon them is indelibly written on their lives and character and they will always cherish the fondest of memories for you. Your influence and work have not been confined to the school room alone but in all forms of activities that tended toward the betterment of the social and moral life of the people at large. In the church and Sunday School you leave a vacancy that will be hard to fill, but such are the vicissitudes of life, and God fulfills Himself in many ways. It has ever been your aim to so improve this school that it might be second to none in the Province and in that aim you have without a doubt succeeded. Beginning first as a Public School, then as a Continuation School and finally as a High School Principal, it has steadily progressed upward until at present, owing to your untiring zeal and ambition, it is a seal of learning reflecting credit upon the community. Not only has the school porgressed but you yourself by steady application to study, have kept pace with the changing times and by extra study have equipped yourself for better work and service by obtaining your B. A. Degree from Queens University. You have been a credit to the school, the community, to yourself and family, and we feel confident that in the new field of your labors that the greatest of success and happiness awaits you. And in severing the bonds, which bind you here and will still be retained in our hearts and memories by the ties of friendship, love and respect. It is impossible for us to adequately express our deep sense of gratitude and obligation for the devoted service you have rendered our school and community for the past twenty-three years, or to express our regret and sorrow at losing your services and companionship, but in order to express our sincere feelings in some tangible manner, we kindly ask you to accept this writing desk; and to you Mrs Loucks, we kindly present this rocker They will ever serve as rememberances of this school section and in the years to come, when memory's chain brings the light of other days about you, they will serve to recall the many friends in this community whom you leave behind. And in conclusion, as we sadly bid you farewell, all can assure you that we cherish in our hearts only the most kindly feelings, and we sincerely wish you and Mrs Loucks the greatest success and happiness in the future which lies golden and mystic in the bosom of time.

Mr. Loucks was unable for some moments to reply, being so deeply moved by these manifestatiins of friendship and love on the part of the people of that community. He thanked them for their loyal and interested support of the school and hoped that they would give the same support to his successor. He expressed his gratitude to the School Board for their zeal and interest in all matters pertaining to the school, and concluded by expressing his gratitude for the beautiful gifts, the address and the expression of friendship and regret. Lunch was served by the ladies after which all bade Mr. and Mrs. Loucks good bye with the feeling that the community was losing good citizens, true friends and a real good teacher

Mr. Loucks is a Dundas boy and has taught twenty-four years in the County of Dundas.

We wish him all success in his promotion.

Easier to Operate The New McLaughlin-Buick

Every motorist will appreciate the advantages of the new, completely automatic oiling system of the 1924 McLaughlin-Buick "Master Six" engine. Every part is lubricated at all times without any attention other than keeping the crank case supplied. Push rods, rocker arms, crank shaft, timing gears, are all perfectly oiled and require a minimum of care from the driver.

From radiator to tail light the new "Master Sixes" are new cars.

More powerful engine—new and longer chassis—new body—four-wheel brakes. Yet underlying all these improvments are the proved McLaughlin-Buick engineering principles—principles famous throughout the Dominion and responsible for McLaughlin-Buick's enviable position as "Canada's Standard Car."

CANADA'S OPPORTUNITY HAS ARRIVED, SAYS BRITAIN'S WAR PREMIER

Winnipeg, Oct. 14.—Before two large audiences which excelled in enthusiasm and exceeded in numbers the attendance at any of his previous meetings in this country, David Lloyd George delivered his final messages to the people of Canada to-night.

He said that, while he left Canada with keen regret at not being able to make a complete transcontinental trip, he looked forward greatly to contacts he hoped to establish in the United States during the remainder of his visit.

This city gave the British war Premier a mighty welcome. Thousands were at the railroad station when the Lloyd George special train pulled in. Other thousands lined the thoroughfares traversed by Lloyd George and his party on a sightseeing tour of the city, while throngs assembled about the Government House, where the British statesman, Dame Margaret and Miss Megan Lloyd George are the guests of Sir James Aikins during their brief stay in Winnipeg.

The bigger of the two meetings addressed by Lloyd George to-night was held at the Olympic Rink, which seats more than 5,000 people. This was held under the auspices of the Canadian Club.

Simultaneously the address was heard by another big audience at the Assembly Hall of the Industries Bureau, the speech being transmitted between the two halls by radio. After his address at Olympic Rink the distinguished visitor went over to the Industries Bureau, bowed, and spoke briefly, receiving a big ovation.

Before his two audiences here he again eulogized Canada for her great contribution to the cause of the allies during the war, and congratulated her people on the proud position the country, as a result, would occupy in the future. "A mighty Empire within an Empire." Even more than at previous gatherings he has addressed, he stressed her responsibility in connection with the settlement that must follow before the world could be said to be really at peace.

On the eve of his departure for the United States Lloyd George, in his final speech in Canada, declared for the first time from the public platform, that Great Britain and the United States by standing together could guarantee the peace of the world. The declaration evoked tremendous enthusiasm in an audience of 5,000 or more to whom he delivered his final message on Canadian soil at the huge Board of Trade auditorium.

The British war Premier recently expressed the same sentiment in an intervier, but in none of his public addresses in the Dominion had he made mention of the United States in the connection he did to-night.

"If the British Empire and your great neighbor to the south, the United States, stand together, the two can guarantee the peace of the world," he said. "The mere fact that they are there is in itself some measure of guarantee. Even now every statesman who is out for mischief has one eye on the loot and the other on the United States and the British Empire. He is trying to divert their attention, to drive them apart, but, thank God, the British Empire is a unit. That one fact emerged out of the great war, and until the war they did not know it.

"You have an opportunity in Europe such as probably no new country has received in cycles. The United States had its great opportunity in Europe through the Napoleonic wars. The same condition prevails in Europe to-day, even to a greater degree. The war was the most terrible ever waged in this world. There will be millions of people looking toward the West—the land of hope, the land of abundance, the land of assured peace—as a home for themselves and their children's children. It depends upon Canada whether she makes as good use of those conditions in Europe as the United States did a century ago."

LLOYD GEORGE PRESENTED WITH KEY TO CITY OF MONTREAL

Britain's famous war premier was almost mobbed, time and time again, by enthusiastic Montrealers during his visit to the Metropolis. In the picture he is seen with Mayor Mederic Martin, during the presentation of a Key to the City of Montreal, and a civic address. At the right is Dame Margaret Lloyd George.

EMPIRE LEADERS MEET IN CONFERENCE

Developments Arising From Italo-Greek Dispute Explained by Cecil.

A despatch from London says:—The Imperial Conference met on Thursday in the morning and afternoon. The Marquis of Curzon, Foreign Secretary, opened the session with a statement of the political developments as a result of the Janina murders which brought on the recent Italo-Grecian crisis.

Lord Robert Cecil followed with an address on the League of Nations, dwelling in detail on the developments arising from the dispute between Italy and Greece. There was some criticism expressed in the subsequent discussion, it is understood, but the general tenor of the proceedings was an indication of the strongest desire on the part of each of the Governments represented at the Imperial Conference to give the fullest support to the League.

The Canadian viewpoint expressed was that as regards European affairs, the League was the best agency for whatever mediation might be necessary. Sir Lomer Gouin warmly thanked Lord Robert Cecil for his assistance at the Geneva assembly in regard to the Canadian objections to Article 10 of the League covenant. Sir Lomer outlined the history of the Canadian opposition to the article in its original form, remarking that the Right Hon. C. J. Doherty, former Minister of Justice, had originally only accepted the article under reserve. He added that the interpretative clause, meeting the Canadian objections to the original article and submitted to the recent assembly of the League, might be considered as having been accepted by the various nations in view of the fact that only Persia had voted against it.

When the Imperial Conference meets again on Monday the Marquis of Salisbury, Lord President of the Council, will initiate the discussion on Empire defence. Lord Salisbury's statement will deal, it is expected, with defence generally. Colonel L. C. Amery, First Lord of the Admiralty, will subsequently deal with the problem of naval defence.

A later despatch from London says:—When with Old World ceremonial London conferred her honorary freedom on the Premiers of Great Britain, Canada and Australia the City compurgators in ancient phrase declared them to be "men of good name and fame, who do not desire to defraud the City, but would pay their scot and bear their lot." (Compurgation was the ancient practice of clearing an accused person by the oaths of several others, called compurgators—usually 12 of them—who swore to their belief in his innocence.)

Standing, each of the trio of Premiers took the oath to "keep the King's peace in my own person."

Premier Baldwin, both at the Guildhall, where the ceremony took place, and in his after-lunch speech in the Mansion House, stressed the necessity of the development of the Empire for meeting "the gravest problem of unemployment this country ever had to face." He felt confident, he said, that a solution would be found for the grave problems that now confronted the Empire. Canning's policy had been to call in the New World to redress the balance of the Old, and "we call into our councils those representatives of the great Dominions overseas in the newer world, that we may see, by taking council together, whether it be not possible, as I know it is, to redress the balance in our Old World troubles by so devloping our inheritance that there may be open, before our people and theirs, a fairer inheritance in the future than any of us has yet enjoyed."

Premier Bruce urged the business men to unite with the statesmen in helping to solve the present economic difficulties.

"Into our Conference we seek to carry the spirit of the freedom of London, knowing that so long as that spirit survives the British Empire will endure."

These words were used at the ceremony by Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King, Premier of Canada, and the words were indicative of the tenor of his remarks, both then and at the subsequent luncheon given by the Lord Mayor in the Mansion House.

Being everlastingly on the job beats carrying a rabbit's foot for luck.

It's sound advice to keep your balance—personally and financially.

BRITAIN'S SEA POWER IN MEDITERRANEAN

Flotilla of Newest and Most Powerful Destroyers Turned Over to Admiral Brock.

London, Oct. 14.—The striking force of British sea power is being slowly transferred from the North Sea and the Atlantic to the Mediterranean.

The Iron Duke, the former flagship of Admiral Jellicoe, will be turned over October 24th as the flagship of Admiral Sir Osmond Brock, commanding the fourth battle squadron, which is Britain's Mediterranean fleet. The eighth destroyer flotilla, composed of the older destroyers, have been ordered home from the Mediterranean, and the fourth flotilla, containing the newest and most powerful destroyers, has been substituted.

Thus British sea power is relatively higher in the Mediterranean than it has been since the redistribution early in the century. At present, out of seventeen modern battleships, Britain is keeping six in the Mediterranean, out of sixteen new light cruisers six are in the Mediterranean and two destroyer flotillas out of nine are also there.

Navigation Season Closes in Yukon Territory

A despatch from Dawson City, Yukon, says:—The Dawson season is closed and the last steamer for outside has departed. The steamer White Horse left for White Horse Friday afternoon.

Tens of thousands of caribou are trekking southward for the winter. Bands of them have passed through the outskirts of Dawson City, and hunters have got a plentiful supply. For a hundred miles down, bands of caribou can be seen swimming the Yukon River and sometimes surrounding canoes and steamboats as they pass.

The winter output at Kenohill silver mine is expected to exceed 12,000 tons of ore this winter.

POWERS IN ACCORD ON REPARATIONS

Belgian Plan Meets Favor—Minimum of German Indemnity 50,000,000,000 Marks.

Paris, Oct. 14.—The British Government's acceptance of the suggestion of the Belgian Foreign Office for a reference of the Belgian reparations plan to the Inter-Allied Reparations Commission as the basis of a concrete plan in the pending negotiations for a settlement of the question of German reparations was received at the Foreign Office to-day.

This completes the general accord by all the Allies—Italy having given her assent to the proposal Saturday—and the Reparations Commission will proceed officially to study the Belgian plan with a view to ascertaining whether it can be used as the basis for a solution of the problem of reparations when the negotiations concerning them are resumed.

The broad outline of the plan provides for a minimum of 50,000,000,000 gold marks as Germany's indemnity, to which is added 82,000,000,000 marks in "C" bonds.

The plan gives 3,000,000,000 gold marks as the amount in yearly payments Germany can make. It gives the figures as arrived at, together with all technical documents. By reorganization of the German railroads along the lines elaborated, according to the plan, they could be made to yield one billion gold marks alone, while other monopolies, such as tobacco, wines, beer, mineral waters, sugar, salt, matches and coal, if managed as the experts advise, would provide an additional 1,500,000,000 gold marks. To these figures, the plan asserts, may be added 500,000,000 gold marks as the fruits of eventual participation by the Allies in German industrial enterprises.

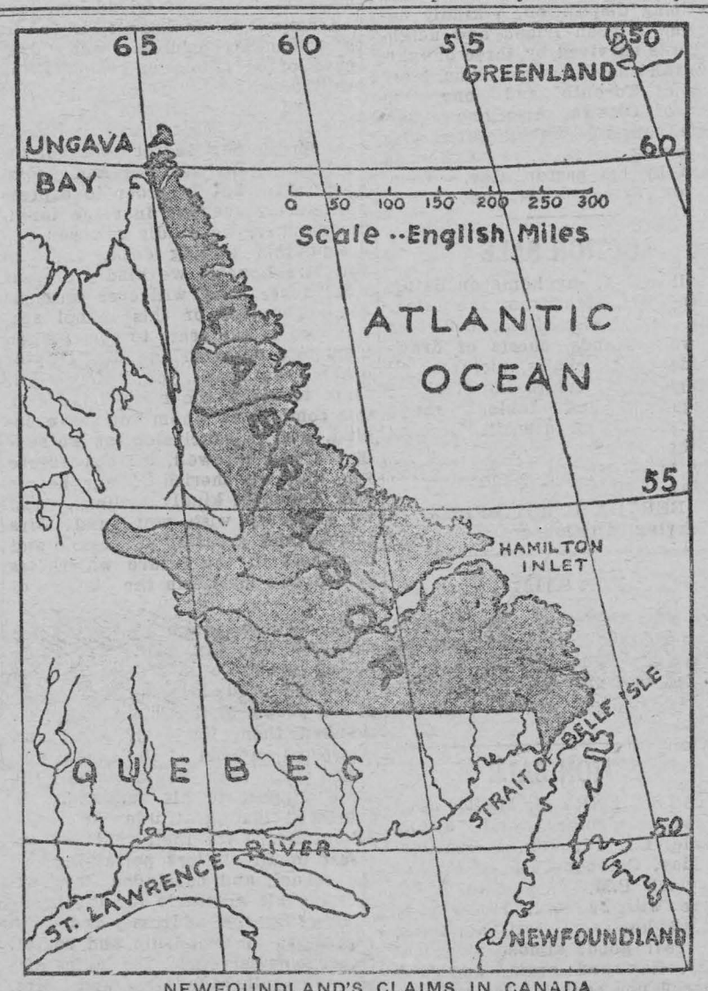

The Belgian Government further suggests that as soon as the Reparations Commission has taken full official cognizance of its plan, a conference of the head of the Allied Governments be called.

It was stated here to-day that the Belgian proposal meets with the full and complete assent of the French Government, which was the first of the Allies to send an affirmative reply to Brussels.

Prince May Become King of Canada

A despatch from London says:—The Daily Sketch says: "Curious rumors are in circulation about the Prince of Wales and Canada. His Royal Highness is known to be very much attached to that country and he showed in his leave-taking how much he regretted his visit had come to an end. He remarked, however, that he would soon return and prolong his visit as much as possible.

"This has given rise to much speculation as to whether a change in the Constitution is in contemplation. There are those who seem to foresee great developments within the Empire at no great distance of time, and one of them is the raising of Canada from the status of a Dominion to that of a Kingdom."

NEWFOUNDLAND'S CLAIMS IN CANADA

An area of 520,000 square miles in Quebec and Labrador is under dispute between Canada and Newfoundland, and the negotiations are drawing near to a conclusion after almost twenty years' preparation. After the conquest in Canada by Wolfe, Newfoundland was granted the "coast of Labrador," and now claims the lands drained from the rivers of Labrador. Rich forest lands, mineral areas and fisheries have brought the dispute to a head. The map shows the area claimed.

CANADA WINS FIRST AT U.S. DAIRY SHOW

Ontario and Quebec Win Three First Prizes in State Herd Competitions.

A despatch from Syracuse, N.Y., says:—Canada proved its merit as a great dairy country on Friday by winning three blue ribbons at the National Dairy Exposition. The Province of Ontario won in both Holstein and Jersey state herds, and Quebec was first in Ayrshire state herds, winning against the finest cattle the United States possesses.

The results were as follows for the three classes for which Canada was entered:

Holsteins: First prize, Ontario; 2, Connecticut; 3, New Jersey; 4, New York; 5, Michigan; 6, Ohio.

Jerseys: First prize, Ontario; 2, Connecticut; 3, New Jersey; 4, Massachusetts; 5, New York.

Ayrshires: First prize, Quebec; 2, New York; 3, Wisconsin; 4, Vermont; 5, Ohio.

Every state herd contest was won by Canada.

The triumph of Canada brought the competition in the cattle ring to a rousing finish in the Coliseum.

First Consignment of Niagara Peaches Well Received

A despatch from London says:—Interest has been aroused in the fruit trade here by the first experimental consignment of Ontario peaches to the country by Niagara Peninsula growers. About 1,400 cases of peaches have arrived at Southampton in good condition, and London, Liverpool, Manchester and Glasgow have become the centres of distribution for the fruit.

The office of the Agent-General for Ontario informs the Canadian Press that the experiment of shipping peaches to Great Britain has been fairly successful and worth continuing.

Another consignment of Niagara Peninsula peaches is expected in a few days.

Erect Memorial to the Princess Pats

A despatch from London says:—Lady Patricia Ramsay has expressed a wish to place in the Memorial Chapel of the Royal Military College at Sandhurst a memorial to Princess Patricia's Own Canadian Light Infantry Regiment, of which she is the Colonel-in-Chief. The offer has been accepted.

The Queen and Princess Mary (Viscountess Lascelles) have already placed memorials to their own regiments in the chapel.

New French Law to Improve Birth Rate

Paris, Oct. 14.—Louis Marin, Vice-President of the Chamber of Deputies, plans to obtain a law at the next session making it a crime punishable by one year's imprisonment and loss of citizenship for Frenchmen to desert their families.

This is one of the measures planned to improve the birth rate in France.

1923 WHEAT CROP WORTH HALF-BILLION

Ontario's Harvest Compares Favorably With That of Last Year.

A despatch from Ottawa says:—In its second estimate of Canada's field crops, issued on Friday, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows a slight change in the total wheat yield for the Prairie Provinces as compared with that issued a few weeks ago. The total, as estimated in Friday's bulletin, is 446,570,000 bushels, as compared with 446,775,000 in the previous estimate. There is a variation in the three Provinces, however. Manitoba shows a decrease of over 2,000,000 bushels, Saskatchewan a decrease of over 6,000,000 bushels, and Alberta an increase of nearly 8,000,000 bushels.

Ontario's crop yields, according to this latest estimate, are as follows, with those of last year, respectively: Wheat, 18,714,000 bushels and 19,893,000; oats, 99,408,000 and 116,034,000; barley, 13,348,000 and 13,972,000; rye, 2,344,000 and 2,500,000; peas, 2,055,000 and 2,077,000; buckwheat, 4,951,000 and 4,266,000; mixed grains, 22,713,000 and 21,270,000; corn, 15,051,000 and 12,306,000. Wheat, rye and corn showed a considerable increase in yield per acre, while decreases were shown in the other grains.

Ontario's total grain yield this year was 173,669,000 bushels, as compared with 156,527,000 bushels last year.

The total yield of the West by provinces follows:

	1923	1922
Man.	36,481,000	60,051,000
Sask.	252,622,000	250,167,000
Alta.	157,467,000	64,976,000

Duke of York May be Next Royal Visitor

London, Oct. 14.—Although little credence is placed in the fantastic rumor in the Saturday Journal that Canada might become a kingdom, with the Prince of Wales as head, there is a good deal of speculation here regarding his next visit to Canada in view of his professed fondness for the Dominion. It is stated to-day that next year he will visit South Africa, which is the only Dominion he has not yet seen. It is hardly likely, therefore, that he will be able to pay a return visit to Canada until 1925.

Before that time it is probable that the Duke of York will be able to carry out his desire to follow in his brother's footsteps. He had admitted that he would very much like to go to Canada, but the trip has not been considered advisable as yet. He may, of course, follow the Prince of Wales' example and go incognito, but it is more probable that his first visit will be made in his official capacity.

Surnames and Their Origin

FREDERICK.

Variations — Fredericks, Friedrich, Friedrichs, Fredricks, Fredson, Fredsen, Frederico, Fredo.

Racial Origin—English, German, Scandinavian, Italian, Spanish.

Source—A given name.

Family names in this group are all derivatives of the given name of Frederick, or its equivalents in the various languages mentioned.

To some it may be a matter of wonder that a given name palpably of Teutonic origin should be popular enough to have developed into a family name among such races as the Italian and the Spanish. The answer lies in the fact that the so-called Latin races are considerably more Latin in language than they are in blood. While the Teutonic element may not predominate in them it is largely represented in the blood of the conquering Goths of medieval days, who swept over the ruins of the Roman Empire.

The given name of Frederick is of Teutonic origin. Its original form was "Frithuric," and it was a compound of the words "frithe," meaning "peace" or "peaceful," and "ric," meaning "king" or "ruler." It is to be noted that this word "ric" has its counterpart in the Celtic "rix" and "righ," as well as the Latin "rex."

Among these family names the forms Frederick, Fredericks, Fredricks, Fredson are English. Friedrich and Friedrichs are German. Fredsen is Scandinavian, and Fredo and Frederico are both Spanish and Italian.

LATIMER.

Variation—Lattimer, Lattiner.

Racial Origin—English.

Source—An occupation.

The populations of medieval Europe had one great advantage and convenience which has not been passed down to their posterity. They had a common language for international communication. The language of the scholar, the educated man, was the same in all countries.

To-day, it is true, most Europeans consider that they are not well educated unless they know two or three languages beside their own. But in those days it was not necessary to know more than one tongue in addition to the native one in order to converse with scholars of all lands.

This universal language, of course, was Latin, the language of the church. And at one period in medieval England, it was considered more important to know how to read and write Latin than Norman-French. Anglo-Saxon was "deader" then, so far as reading and writing went, than Latin is to-day.

The "latynere" was the man who could read, write, and speak Latin; in short, the scholar. At a somewhat later period, Sir John Maunderville wrote: "And men alleweys fynden Latyneres to go with them in the contrees and furthere beyonde in to tyme that men conne the language."

The difference between the sound of an "n" and an "m" is not great, but it is a good bit harder to say "latiner" than "latimer" in ordinary conversation. Hence the word, existing now only as the family name, has come down to us in the "corrupted" form.

The Touch That Tells.

"Tony's not a bit smart. Somehow, his clothes always look all wrong," said one girl.

"Tony's got no sister to keep him up to scratch," remarked her friend flippantly.

Men may not dress so much for women, as women undoubtedly dress for men; but it is a fact that in homes where there are sisters you find well-dressed brothers.

Of course, men won't own up to it, but you notice it in a hundred little ways. A girl's feminine eye for detail allows her to jog her brother tactfully when his socks and ties are not all they might be. She may never be allowed to purchase the sacred articles; nevertheless, he hears her half-whispered comment on so-and-so's toilet, or such a man's new suit, and ear-marks it for future reference.

One sister I know has good taste in materials, and usually has her way in the choice of her brother's new suit. And because she is his sister and takes an interest in his welfare, her bargain eye is always on the alert for a good cheap line in new soft shirts or a place where one can get reliable gloves at less than five shillings a pair. Yes, sisters can dress brothers and dress them well.

Another reason for a man's extra smartness where women abound is the fact that he dislikes showing up shabbily in their company. Modern woman is smart and well groomed; spurred on by her example, man instinctively follows suit.

But the man on his own lacks this subtle feminine aid. Mother is a dear, probably, but a little old-fashioned as regards men's dress, and inclined still to take her standard of male smartness by what father wore twenty years ago.

So there it is. The sisters of this world, and later on, of course, some other brother's sister, do more than their fair share towards seeing that men are well clothed.

Masterpieces of Fiction That Were Dictated.

The man who walks about his study or lounges in an easy chair whilst his secretary takes down a dictated novel or article for the Press is sometimes regarded as a product of these modern days of hustle.

Yet there are great precedents, for both "Paradise Lost" and "Paradise Regained" were dictated. Milton was blind and unable to transcribe his own works. His method was to compose a number of lines in his mind, and then dictate them to anyone who happened to be handy.

Wordsworth, the great interpreter of nature, used to ramble over hill and dale composing poems. When, after his death, an inquirer asked an aged villager if he knew him, the old fellow said: "Aye, sure, I've oft seen him goo bummin' past." He was referring to the poet's habit of murmuring his lines as he walked.

In this way he could compose and memorize a couple of hundred lines. When he returned home he would call his sister or his wife to his side, and dictate the whole to them whilst they wrote.

Sir Walter Scott is another example. The whole of "Ivanhoe" and "Guy Mannering" was dictated to secretaries, who took turns in striving to keep pace with him. But it was not Scott's usual habit to dictate. He was unwell at the time and unable to write.

It is certain that he Iliad of Homer, as well as most of the ballad literature of the world, were spoken or sung for years, perhaps for ages, before they were committed to writing.

The Australian women have needles made of a little bone from the leg of an emu, and they thread them with the sinews of opossums, kangaroos or emus.

Unless you make up your mind to enjoy your work, you will never like it even a little.

Dress Fads of Famous Authors.

"He had a double gold chain outside his waistcoat, and such breastpins that I thought he looked like one of our river gamblers." Such is the description of Charles Dickens, given by Prentice in an account of his tour of the Unitetd States. A tendency for overdressing was always one of Dickens's characteristics.

A photograph of Dickens, taken in 1852, shows him in a frock-coat with a broad velvet collar, a waistcoat made of some furry stuff, and trousers of a huge check. Percy Fitzgerald says the French painter's remark, that Dickens was "more like one of the old Dutch admirals we see in the picture galleries than a man of letters," conveys an admirably true idea to his friends.

"The first time I saw Archbishop Whately," said the Provost of Oriel College, Oxford, "he wore apea-green coat, white waistcoat, stone-colored shorts, flesh-colored stockings. Bishop Heber was dressed in a parsley and butter coat. Dr. Arnold in a light blue coat with metal buttons and a buff waistcoat."

Charles Lamb always dressed in black. "I take it," he said, "to be the proper costume of an author.' When this was once objected to at a wedding, he pleaded the raven's apology in the fable that "he had no other." His clothes were entirely black, and he wore long black gaiters up to the knees.

Southey wore clogs; he had a fawn-colored all-round coat and a cap with a knob to it. He never put on a swallow-tailed coat. Like Southey, Porson, the great Greek scholar, had an utter contempt for appearances. When Hazlitt met him in the library of the London Instituion, he was dressed in an old rusy black coat, with cobwebs hanging to the skirt, and with a large patch of coarse brown paper covering the whole length of his nose.

Preserving Pianists' Art.

To play the player piano properly, taste, musical instinct and considerable practice are necessary. Sufficient justification for the last will be found not only in the increased power and fluency of expression that result, but also in the vast fund of knowledge that is required in the process.

Through a highly sensitive electrical device it is possible for a pianist whilst playing what appears to be an ordinary piano, to cut simultaneously an exact record of his playing upon a paper music roll. The result is an almost uncannily truthful reproduction of the pianist's performance which, after the roll is duplicated, becomes available to every owner of an instrument fitted with the mechanism.

The accuracy with which these instruments reproduce the pianist's own interpretation, the phrasing, the rhythmic peculiarities, the niceties and delicacies of shading is amazing.

It is surely no trifling contribution to culture that the all too fugitive art of the pianist may thus be preserved for the benefit of vast audiences whom he may never see, or, that the music lover of 1923 may enjoy in the seclusion of his home, the playing of the greatest contemporary artists.

Cigarette Commended.

Dr. Royal S. Copeland, formerly Health Commissioner for the city of New York, states that the cigarette is the most suitable smoke as the tobacco in that form is perfectly consumed, and as combustion is better the nicotine is practically destroyed, Although a non-smoker himself, Dr. Copeland says there can be no doubt that smokers find solace and comfort in the moderate use of tobacco.

A Cat-astrophe.

"Drowned?"

"Oh, no."

"Stolen?"

"No, indeed."

"Hurt in any way?"

"No."

"Well, I can't guess. What became of her?"

"She growed into a cat."

SYMPTOMS OF ANAEMIA

An Inherited Tendency to Anaemia May be Overcome.

Some people have a tendency to become thin-blooded just as others have an inherited tendency to rheumatism, or to nervous disorders. The condition in which the blood becomes so thin that the whole body suffers comes on so gradually and stealthily that anyone with a natural disposition in that direction should watch the symptoms carefully. Bloodlessness, or anaemia, as the medical term is, can be corrected much more easily in the earlier stages than later. It begins with a tired feeling that rest does not overcome, the complexion becomes pale and breathlessness on slight exertion, such as going upstairs, is noticed.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a home remedy that has been most successful in the treatment of diseases caused by thin blood. With pure air and wholesome food these blood-making pills afford the correct treatment when the symptoms described are noticed.

You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail, postpaid, at 50c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Shoemaker's Kingdom.

He was in his way a king, that miserably poor and helplessly paralyzed old shoemaker who lived in one of the grimiest streets in the squalid East End of London. He could think great thoughts, bright, happy thoughts by means of which he peopled his kingdom, the dark little kitchen in which he sat day in and day out. In London's Underworld, Mr. Thomas Holmes, who for upward of a quarter of a century was a police-court missionary, reports this remarkable conversation, which took place between himself and the cripple:

"It is a very hard life for you sitting month after month on that chair, unable to do anything!"

"It is hard; I do not know what I should do if I could not think.

"But isn't it hard for you to do nothing except think?"

"No! it is my pleasure and accupation."

"What do you think about as you sit here?"

"All sorts of things—what I have read, mostly."

"What have you read?"

"Everything that I could get hold of—novels, poetry, history and travel."

"What novelist do you like best?"

The answer came, prompt and decisive: "Dickens."

"Why?"

"He loved the poor; he shows a greater belief in humanity than Thackeray."

"How do you prove that?"

"Well, take Thackeray's Vanity Fair, it is clever and satirical, but there is only one good character, and he was a fool; but in Dickens you come across character after character that you can't help loving."

"How about poetry; what poets do you like?"

"The minor poets of two hundred years ago. Herrick, Churchill, Shenstone and others.'

"Why do you like them?"

"They are so pretty, so easy to understand; you know what they mean. They speak of beauty and flowers and love; their language is tuneful and sweet."

"You have read Shakespeare?"

"Yes, every play, again and again."

"Which do you like best?"

"I like them all, the historical and the imaginative. I have never seen one acted, but to me King Lear is his masterpiece."

As the missionary went out the old shoemaker doubled over farther in his chair, alone with his thoughts, alone with his kingdom.

Clever Bishop.

The clergyman's small son was spending an afternoon with the bishop's children.

"At the rectory," he said, "we've got a hen that lays an egg every day.'

"Pooh!" said Master Bishop, "my father lays a foundation-stone once a week."

Irish Railway.

A railway line was being built in Ireland, and to save time it was decided to begin operations simultaneously from either end.

Nerves So Bad That She Would Sit and Cry

Mrs. Mary Hocking, Madoc, Ont., writes:—

"Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has done me a wonderful lot of good. I suffered from general weakness and was so run down and my heart and nerves were in such bad shape that I would sit down and cry and not know what I was crying about. I also used to have weak spells. Thanks to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, however, I am real well now. I shall always keep a box of the Nerve Food in the house, and recommend them to my friends; they are a wonderful medicine."

(Mr. J. W. Vince, Druggist, of Madoc, Ont., says: "I have sold Mrs. Hocking your Nerve Food, and the medicine has done her much good.")

Roast Turkey!

For tender, meltingly delicious and wondrous flavored turkey, you must roast it in an SMP Crystal Ware or Pearl Ware roaster. This roaster roasts as if by magic. It bastes the roast or fowl—the fat dripping down from above. The delicate juices and rare flavor are cooked right in. Nothing is lost. There is no wasteful shrinkage.

When you buy expensive roasts of meat, turkey, or other fowl or fish, you want them perfectly cooked. For from $2.00 to $4.00 you can purchase a splendid SMP Roaster that will positively guarantee the roasting. To ensure the perfect cooking of an expensive 15-lb. turkey, surely it would pay you to use the proper utensil—an SMP roaster costing only one-quarter the price of the fowl! A roaster that fully guarantees perfect roasting!

After the hardest roasting, an SMP Roaster cleans as easily and simply as a china dish. No scouring or hard cleaning. There are styles and sizes to suit every size of roast, fish or fowl. Finished in Pearl Ware, two-coated pearly-grey enameled ware, or Crystal Ware, three-coated snowy-white enameled ware. You can inspect them at any good hardware store.

"QUALITY" Is adding New Customers Daily

CHEAP AUTO SERVICE

Why is it, when we speak of a cheap article we are prone to think of low initial cost? To be sure, the initial cost usually demands first consideration, but we should not be oblivious to other and frequently more important cost items which must be included in our figures to complete the account.

A thing is cheap or otherwise in direct proportion to the value received in actual service. Our experience has taught us that it usually pays to buy the best. Accordingly we purchase no (so called) cheap or trashy products or materials, but only goods of known worth, which in our judgment will give the best satisfaction to our customers and thus prove cheapest for them in the long run.

Many have learned that our shop turns out the cheapest repair jobs also, not because prices are unusally low, but because of the quality of the work itself and the long period of satisfactory performance inevitably following each properly executed job. If you too would enjoy the satisfaction which a smooth running motor can bring, have your work done at Tindal's Garage.

Mrs. M. A. McNeill, Canaan Sta., N.B., writes:

"I was troubled for years with terrible backache, resulting from kidney disease. At times in each month I remained in bed, the pain was more than I could stand, and to walk was almost impossible. I used about $50.00 worth of other medicines, but with little results. Now I am completely better, after using only five boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Woman of To-Day

CHILDREN AND GROWN-UPS.

We certainly do have a time getting the children to brush their teeth regularly, at least once a day, preferably after each meal. Lately the children are staging a comeback. "I clean my teeth as often as father and mother clean theirs," said one girl. "Oftener than dad does."

Could it be possible? Having opportunity to visit a few of the fathers and mothers I made some discreet inquiries which took the form of asking what make of toothbrush enjoyed their preference. Time and again I met the reply that the present equipment was worn out and no opportunity had occurred for its replacement. The toothbrushes that I saw in many cases were sorry specimens of ancient vintage, getting bald as to bristles and generally decrepit and discolored as to frame. No matter how conscientious father or mother might be in attempting to ply such an instrument it would be quite impossible for it to do good service.

"One apiece" is the rule for toothbrushes, and it is just as important for grown-ups as children. The brushes should be well-bristled, large enough to give a good comprehensive stroke, yet not so large that it cannot be readily turned to reach all surfaces of the teeth. It should be flexible but not wabbly. It should stand up well under wear, but considering the fact that a toothbrush gives service three times every day it is not surprising that one wears out now and then. Fifty cents is a fair price for a good brush. If you use it faithfully you will put it through the toothbrush drill over five hundred times in six months and by that time it is not surprising if it clamors for retirment. Spending valuable time in applying a worn-out brush that does not get results is about as bad as wilful neglect.

Fathers and mothers, please take stock of your toothbrushes and see that there is a good one per capita through your family. Remember, that you are neither too old nor too young for the chore; the only persons excused are those who disdain teeth because they live wholly on a milk diet, and those who are not dependent upon the usual methods of cleanliness but can take out their teeth and wash them in a bowl. If you would avoid this latter unenviable distinction get a good brush and use it with persistent regularity, no matter whether young or old. Remember, that in brushing the teeth you not only cleanse them but you improve the circulation of blood through the gums, sweeten the mouth, prevent pyorrhea. —Dr. L.

UTILIZE YOUR TIN CANS.

It is the little personal touches that make a house a home—those things, usually small in themselves, that show you are interested in the art of housekeeping. And many times the most attractive houses are not those that are the most expensively furnished, but those that show the greatest amount of taste and care or attention. One of the most charming kitchens I ever saw was a farm kitchen and the expenditure of money for the furnishings was small indeed.

The floor was painted and the walls were painted apple green. But the one thing about the room that added more to its attractiveness than all else was the array of enameled cans that filled the pantry shelves and were in evidence in half a dozen places about the room. They were all sizes and shapes. There were baking powder cans, coffee cans, cocoa cans and spice cans of various sizes. With automobile enamel these had been painted apple green and the name of the contents had been painted on in black. There were cans for everything that a can could be utilized for about a kitchen. A large ten-pound coffee can held the sugar and several five-pound ones held the rice and other cereals. This done away with the unsightly paper bags and pasteboard cartons that make a shelf look so untidy.

Another practical use for the tin cans is to steam breads and puddings in. They are particularly suitable for this if the pudding or bread is intended for school lunches. Bread may also be baked in these cans and the children are always delighted with the little round slices.

The round cans are ideal receptacles for cold mush that is intended for frying. The mush, if molded in them, will come out in smooth rounds that can easily be sliced. The lids are nice for baking little cakes for the school luncheons, or little tarts may be baked in the round ones.

TO JOIN CARPET RAGS.

Instead of laboriously sewing carpet rags, whether they are to be used for carpets, woven or braided rugs, join them by using the weaver's knot.

Overlap the ends of the two rags to be joined about three quarters of an inch. Then cut a small lengthwise slit through both rags. Next take the free end of the rag that is on the top and slip it up through the slit. Draw the knot tight and the trick is done.

This makes a neat, firm, flat joining, is much more quickly done than sewing and it also saves thread.

HOME-MADE SOAP PASTE.

When a cake of soap becomes so small as to be annoying to use, I place it in an enameled basin reserved for this purpose. When enough pieces have accumulated to make it worth while, I shave the soap and melt it in sufficient water to make a good soap paste. For sufficient pieces to be equivalent to a good-sized cake of soap, I use about a quart and a half of water.

After this is thoroughly melted I remove from the fire and stir into it three or four tablespoonfuls of kerosene. When well blended, I pour the mixture into glass containers having covers.

This paste is excellent for cleaning water marks and other stains and dirt from bathtubs, lavatories and porcelain sinks, and I keep a jar of the paste near at hand for these purposes. It cleans without the hard rubbing that one finds necessary with most other cleaners used for this purpose. Every housewife will find it an inexpensive and efficient labor-saver. —A. M. A.

MENDING KID GLOVES.

To mend a tear in kid gloves, first buttonhole around the edge of the tear with silk of the same shade, then draw the stitches together firmly, one at a time. This is not only a neat way to darn, but a durable one as well.

A COMFORTABLE HOUSE OR HOME DRESS.

4081. Long waisted effects still prevail, as this style shows. It is nice for tub silk, gingham, voile and also for taffeta, gabardine and crepe. Blue and white checked gingham is here portrayed with bandings of blue chambrey and organdy for collar and cuffs. The sleeve in wrist length is fitted with a dart.

The Pattern is cut in 7 Sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust measure. A 38-inch size requires 5¾ yards of 32-inch material. The width at the foot is 2⅝ yards with plaits extended. Collar and cuffs of contrasting material require ¾ yard 32 inches wide.

Pattern mailed to any address on receipt of 15c in silver or stamps, by the Wilson Publishing Co., 78 West Adelaide St., Toronto. Allow two weeks for receipt of pattern.

Alms in Autumn.

Spindle-wood, spindle-wood will you lend me, pray,
A little flaming lantern to guide me on my way?
The fairies all have vanished from the meadow and the glen,
And I would fain go seeking till I find them once again.
Lend me now a lantern that I may bear a light,
To find the hidden pathway in the darkness of the night.

Ash-tree, ash-tree, throw me, if you please,
Throw me down a slender branch of
russet-golden keys,
I fear the gates of Fairyland may all be shut so fast
That nothing but your magic keys will ever take me past,
I'll tie them to my girdle and as I go along
My heart will find a comfort in the tinkle of their song.

Holly-bush, holly-bush, help me in my task,
A pocketful of berries is all the the alms I ask;
A pocketful of berries to thread in golden strands,
I would not go a-visiting with nothing in my hands—
So fine will be the rosy chains, so gay,
so glossy bright,
They'll set the realms of fairyland a-dancing with delight.

King George "Swaps" Stamps With American.

King George is known far and wide as the most democratic monarch ruling to-day. He is as equally famous as a stamp collector and takes a deep interest in matters philatelic.

At the recent International Stamp Exhibition, held in London, which the King visited, he pointed to one stamp in the collection of Arthur Hind, a prominent American philatelist, and said: "Too bad you were outbidding me for that the other day."

Mr. Hind said he had no idea he was bidding against the King, and offered him the stamp as a gift. But the King, being a sport, refused to accept and said:

"I'll tell you what I'll do. I have a stamp you'd like; let's swap." And they did.

How Cameras Help Doctors.

Photography is receiving the attention of doctors as a means of early diagnosis of smallpox and other diseases involving a rash.

Photographs of children have shown the symptomatic measles rash developing under the skin days before it was visible to the eye.

"I have been able to tell in advance by means of photography that children were sickening for measles," said a London practitioner.

"This method should be valuable in smallpox cases. People in contact with known cases could be photographed before any rash develops on the outer skin. If the camera revealed the disease on them, they could be removed to isolation before they became infective."

The jury was out something more than an hour. The news of the verdict was brought to Kirby at the city jail by his cousin James.

"Jury finds that Uncle James came to his death from the effect of either a blow on the head by some heavy instrument or a bullet fired at close quarters by some unknown person," James said.

"Good enough. Might have been worse for me," replied Kirby.

"Yes. I've talked with the district attorney and think I can arrange for bond. We're going to take it up with the court to-morrow. My opinion is that the Hulls did this. All through his testimony the fellow sweated fear. I've put it in the hands of a private detective agency to keep tabs on him."

The cattleman smiled ruefully. "Trouble is I'm the only witness to their panic right after the murder. Wish it had been some on else. I'm a prejudiced party whose evidence won't count for much. You're right. They've somethin' to do with it. In their evidence they shifted the time back thirty-five minutes so as to get me into Apartment 12 that much earlier. Why? If I could answer that question, I could go a long way toward solvin' the mystery of who killed Uncle James an' why he did it."

"Probably. As I see it, we have three leads to go on. One is that the guilty man is Hull. A second possibility is the unknown man from Dry Valley. A third is Horikawa."

"How about Horikawa? Did you know him well?"

"One never knows an Oriental. Perhaps I'm prejudiced because I used to live in California, but I never trust a Japanese fully. His sense of right and wrong is so different from mine. Horikawa is a quiet little fellow whose thought processes I don't pretend to understand."

"Why did he run away if he had nothin' to conceal?"

"Looks bad. By the way, a Japanese house-cleaner was convicted recently of killing a woman for whom he was working. He ran away, too, and was brought back later."

"Well, I don't know a thing about Japs except that they're good workers. But there's one thing about this business that puzzles me. This murder doesn't look to me like a white man's job. An American bad man kills an' is done with it. But whoever did this aimed to torture an' then kill, looks like. If not, why did they tie him up first?"

James nodded, reflectively. "Maybe they have the red Indian habit of torture in Japan."

"Never heard of it if they have, but I've got a kinda notion—picked it up in my readin'—that Asiatics will go a long way to square a grudge. If this Horikawa had anything against Uncle James he might have planned this revenge an' taken the two thousand dollars to help his getaway."

"Yes, he might."

"Anyhow, I've made up my mind to one thing. You can 'most always get the truth when you go after it good an' hard. I'm goin' to find out who did this thing an' why."

James Cunningham looked into his cousin's face. A strong man himself, he recognized strength in another. Into the blue-gray eyes of the man from Twin Buttes had come a cold steely temper that transformed the gay, boyish face. The oil broker knew Lane had no love for his uncle. His resolution was probably based on a desire to clear his own name.

"I'm with you in that," he said quietly, and his own dark eyes were hard as jade. "We'll work this out together if you say so, Kirby."

The younger man nodded. "Suits me fine." His face softened. "You mentioned three leads. Most men would have said four. On the face of it, of the evidence at hand, the guilty man is sittin' right here talkin' with you. You know that the dead man an' I had a bitter feelin' against each other. You know there was a new cause of trouble between us, an' that I told you I was goin' to get justice out of him one way or another. I'm the only man known to have been in his rooms last night. Accordin' to the Hulls I must 'a' been there when he was killed. Then, as a final proof of my guilt, I slide out by the fire escape to get away without bein' seen. I'll say the one big lead points straight to Kirby Lane."

"Yes, but there's such a thing as character," James answered. "It's written in your face that you couldn't have done it. That's why the jury said a person unknown."

"Yes, but the jury didn't know what you knew, that I had a fresh cause of quarrel with Uncle James. Do you believe me absolutely? Don't you waver at all?"

"I don't think you had any more to do with it than I had myself," answered the older cousin instantly, with conviction.

Kirby gave him his hand impulsively. "You'll sure do to ride the river with, James."

CHAPTER XV.

A GLOVE AND THE HAND IN IT.

As Rose saw the hand of the law closing in on Kirby, she felt as though an ironic fate were laughing in impish glee at this horrible climax of her woe. He had sacrificed a pot of gold and his ambition to be the champion rough rider of the world in order to keep her out of trouble. Instead of that he had himself plunged into it head first.

She found herself entangled in a net from which there was no easy escape. Part, at least, of the evidence against Kirby, or at least the implication to be drawn from it, did not fit in with what she knew to be the truth. He had not been in the apartment of James Cunningham from 9.20 until 10.15. He might have been there at both times, but not for the whole interval between. Rose had the best reason in the world for knowing that.

But what was she to do? What ought she to do? If she went with her story to the district attorney, her sister's shame must inevitably be dragged forth to be flaunted before the whole world. She could not do that. She could not make little Esther the scapegoat of her conscience. Nor could she remain silent and let Kirby stay in prison. That was unthinkable. If her story would free him she must tell it. But to whom?

She read in the "Post" that James Cunningham was endeavoring to persuade the authorities to accept bond for his cousin's appearance. Swiftly Rose made up her mind what she would do. She looked up in the telephone book the name she wanted and made connections on the line.

"Is this Mr. Cunningham?" she asked.

"Mr. Cunningham talking," came the answer.

"I want to see you on very important business. Can I come this morning?"

"I think I didn't catch your name, madam."

"My name doesn't matter. I have information about—your uncle's death."

There was just an instant's pause. Then, "Ten o'clock, at the office here," Rose heard.

A dark, good-looking young man rose from a desk in the inner office when Rose entered exactly at ten. In his eyes there sparked a little flicker of surprised appreciation. Jack Cunningham was always susceptible to the beauty of women. This girl was lovely both of feature and of form. The fluent grace of the slender young body was charming, but the weariness of grief was shadowed under the long-lashed eyes.

She looked around, hesitating. "I have an appointment with Mr. Cunningham," she explained.

"My name," answered the young man.

"Mr. James Cunningham?"

"Afraid you've made a mistake. I'm Jack Cunningham. This is my uncle's office. I'm taking charge of his affairs. You called his number instead of my brother's. People are always confusing the two."

"I'm sorry."

"If I can be of any service to you," he suggested.

"I read that your brother was trying to arrange bond for Mr. Lane. I want to see him about that. I am Rose McLean. My sister worked for your uncle in his office."

"Oh!" A film of wary caution settled over his eyes. It seemed to Rose that what she had said transformed him into a potential adversary. "Glad to meet you, Miss McLean. If you'd rather talk with my brother I'll make an appointment with him for you."

"Perhaps that would be best," she said.

"Of course he's very busy. If it's anything I could do for you—"

"I'd like you both to hear what I have to say."

For the beating of a pulse his eyes thrust at her as though they would read her soul. Then he was all smiling urbanity.

"That seems to settle the matter. I'll call my brother up and make an appointment."

Over the wire Jack put the case to his brother. Presently he hung up the receiver. "We'll go right over, Miss McLean."

They went down the elevator and passed through the lower hall of the building to Sixteenth Street. As they walked along Stout to the Equitable Building, Rose made an explanation.

"I saw you and Mr. James Cunningham at the inquest."

His memory stirred. "Think I saw you, too. 'Member your bandaged arm. Is it broken?"

"Yes."

He felt the need of talking against an inner perturbation he did not want to show. What was this girl, the sister of Esther McLean, going to tell him and his brother? What did she know about the murder of his uncle? Excitement grew in him and he talked at random to cover it.

"Fall down?"

"A horse threw me and trod on my arm."

"Girls are too venturesome nowadays." In point of fact he did not think so. He liked girls who were good sportsmen and played the game hard. But he was talking merely to bridge a mental stress. "Think they can do anything a man can. 'Fess up, Miss McLean. You'd try to ride any horse I could, no matter how mettlesome it was. Now wouldn't you?"

"I wouldn't go that far," she said dryly. For an instant the thought flickered through her mind that she would like to get this spick-and-span riding-school model on the back of Wild Fire and see how long he would stick to the saddle.

TRAINING TOM

By Claude Callan

Several weeks before Tom and May married something happened that removed her last doubt. She was convinced that he really loved her and that he was at last a grown man, qualified to take upon himself the responsibilities of married life.

This occurred one evening when he dropped over to see her just as her brothers and a number of other boys in the neighborhood were preparing to go on a hunt. The air was frosty and the dogs were anxious to go to the creek bottom. Tom was invited to join in the hunt, and for a few minutes he appeared to be undecided, but finally he made up his mind to remain at the house with May, and his determination to do this was unshaken even when he heard the hounds filling the air with a rich-toned announcement of an early conquest.

May was happy. She knew that everything Tom had told her was true and she was ready to go with him to the little home his father had given him on the small farm he was to cultivate.

In less than two months Tom and May were in their home, far away in the hills and out of sight of other homes, but this just suited them. They felt that they would be willing to live right there forever and not see a relative or friend. The cold rain was pouring down on their little home, which was leaking in several places, a fault which did not disturb them in the least. May had arranged bright new pans to catch the water and she was watching Tom build shelves in the kitchen.

It is true that the shelves might have been considered a pretty rough job by some people, but they were the only kind that Tom could afford, and a good woman is usually satisfied with almost nothing if she knows that her husband is doing his best and really trying to make things comfortable for her.

"That top shelf slants backward a little," Tom said in an effort to disparage his own work.

"I like that," May said, "because it will hold things better."

"Well, if I haven't got the other shelf slanting toward the front!" Tom announced.

"That won't hurt a bit," May told him. "It makes it easier to clean, and besides when I get the papers on the shelves nobody will be able to notice that they are not even."

The rain was so heavy that some people might have thought that the house was in danger of being washed away, but May wasn't uneasy. She had Tom there to protect her and she felt that there was no need of her being afraid of the elements.

Not satisfied with the shelves he had built, Tom was anxious to do still more to make May happy, and every time they went to town together he wanted to buy something nice for her or for the house, but she knew that he couldn't afford to spend so much and she told him that they must be satisfied with what they had until he made a good start in the world, a thing that she was sure a man of Tom's ability could not fail to do.

When young Robert arrived in the home the house was filled with relatives for several days, but finally Tom and May had the little fellow to themselves, and they were prouder of him than they had been of the kitchen shelves.

Tom suddenly became a grave old man, and, although he thought he remembered everything the grandmother had told him, he kept one of his work horses at the gate so he could ride to May's mother's in case the baby should cry in some peculiar manner that he couldn't understand. Two or three times during the night he was on the point of going for the grandmother, but each time May managed to get the baby to sleep, and the next morning Tom was proud of himself for having taken such good care of the little fellow. As a matter of fact, he had done nothing except fill the lamp, but May had bragged on him and he felt that he was almost the equal of the best old women in the neighborhood.

For almost a year after this time Tom continued referring to everything on the place as "ours." He not only felt that May was his partner, but he took the baby into the firm. So long as he owned nothing he appeared to be perfectly willing for May to enjoy the pride and share the responsibility of being a partner, but after the first unusually good crop year Tom began to feel that everything was his.

He still loved May, but he realized that, after all, she was only a woman and that she wasn't to be considered when he was weighing the more important matters that a husband and father must decide.

It was at this point that May's people began talking. They said that Tom was just like the rest of his people, and it was a notorious fact that Tom's older brothers were mean to their wives.

"Poor May!" said the grandmother.

"She had plenty of warning," said a sister who was not inclined to be very sympathetic.

"It all comes from her being too good to her husband," was the opinion of Aunt Julia, whose husband served through two wars and who wasn't afraid of anything in the world except her.

"Now the proper thing for you to do," May's mother said to her, "is to have a talk with him and come to an understanding."

This appeared to be sensible advice, but May didn't even consider trying it. She remembered that her mamma used to have a serious talk with her papa every few weeks in an effort to come to an understanding, but the talks never amounted to anything. Really it seemed to May that the result of the talks was that her parents came to a misunderstanding, and she was determined not to try the same thing on Tom.

"All right," the mother said. "Do as you please, but don't blame me for the consequences. If you want to be a slave to a man all your life I haven't another word to say, but if I were in your place I would have my rights or I would bundle up these three children and move to myself."

May's mother frequently announced that she hadn't another word to say, but after making this announcement she always thought of something else and said she couldn't keep from saying it.

"The trouble with you," she continued, "is that you are afraid of Tom. You ought to tell him that you are young and that you are not going to lock yourself up in this house and never see anybody. Just tell him that he is very good company, but that you want to see someone else occasionally."

May made no response to this, although she felt that Tom really had come to the conclusion that no woman should ask for anything better than to be around him all the time. He didn't even feel that it was necessary for him to look his best. He thought that his wife ought to be proud of him at his worst and he went around looking his worst most of the time.

After all the relatives and friends had finished giving advice May went about training Tom in her own way.

First of all, she told him that they both should have nicer clothes, and when he said that they never saw anybody much and that nobody ever saw them she replied warmly:

"Well, we see each other."

If this made any impression on him she failed to detect it. He seemed to figure that, since they were married, it made no diffreence how each one appeared to the other, but she had an entirely different view. She not only wanted him to think that she was young and pretty, but she wanted him to dress up occasionally so she could feel proud of him.

It really looked as if Tom was to have his way and that he and May would settle down with the one object of accumulating money and getting the children raised, so the children in turn could marry, settle down and devote their lives to raising their children, but May didn't give up. She decided to begin her campaign by improving herself, and knowing that Tom would be mad if she spent a lot of money for a fine dress to wear in public, she spent all her savings for one nice house dress.

One afternoon when Tom came from work he found his wife wearing this bright dress instead of the dingy one he had expected to see. When she asked him how she looked he had to confess that she looked nice, but he said he couldn't see but what she looked just as well in the old one. It wasn't entirely worn out.

In a few weeks May had another nice house dress. It looked as if she was thinking more of herself than she was of the children, but Tom didn't complain. He said very little, but he wished that some of the neighbors would happen over and see May in her new dress. In spite of all he had said to the contrary, he felt proud of his wife in her finery, and after a few weeks he suggested that she ought to get a nice dress to wear to church.

May remembered that every time her papa had told her mamma to buy a new dress her mamma had been satisfied with learning that he was willing for her to look nice. Instead of buying the dress, her mamma would begin to talk economy, but May took Tom at his word and in a short time she had the dress made, but she refused to wear it unless Tom would buy a new suit for himself.

"You look so nice when you are dressed up," she said to her husband, and, though Tom was not more vain than the ordinary man, he decided that she was right. Although he said nothing, he agreed with her that he did look nice when he was dressed up.

"I just thought this morning," she continued, "when I saw those men at the lot that you were the nicest-looking one in the crowd and I wished then that you had a new suit.

Tom pretended that he didn't think he was the nicest-looking man in the crowd, but he felt that his wife had remarkably good judgment about such things and he decided to let her "drive" him to town to buy a new suit of clothes for himself.

The entire family went along, and, while Tom allowed his wife to select the pattern, he wouldn't listen to her about the size. He had always bought clothes too large and he wasn't going to make himself look ridiculous by buying a suit that would fit, but May didn't expect to accomplish everything at once, so she finally agreed that the suit was small enough.

The following Sunday Tom and May were as nicely dressed as any couple at church and most of the people were greatly surprised.

"Tom must think he is going to lose her," one sister-in-law said.

"She is going to ruin that boy, certain," was the remark made by Tom's aunt, who had given him two chairs from her attic when he married.

"Well, I don't think it is good taste," Aunt Lucy Hines said, " to put so much on your back when you are in debt."

Really Tom and May were not in debt, but Aunt Lucy's theory was that nice clothes and debts always went hand in hand.

May's mother was the happiest woman at church. While she said nothing about the new clothes, there was a smile on her face which made it evident that she felt sure May had followed her advice and come to an understanding.

But the best part of the whole thing was that Tom realized that his chances of accomplishing something in the future hadn't been destroyed by the expense. He felt that he could pull through in spite of the money he had spent for his wife's clothes and his own, and he found that he had a little more respect for May's opinions.

May knew that he was thinking this, but she said nothing about her victory. She simply made up her mind that she would not lose any of the ground she had gained, and every afternoon for a week when Tom came home he found her wearing one of her pretty house dresses.

The next step was easy. Although Tom had looked upon the house as a shelter for them to stay in while working the farm, he began to feel that, after all, it might be best to add a few conveniences in addition to the kitchen shelves. He could see that such a neat woman as May was entitled to something better than he had supplied.

Pretty soon Tom was consulting May about his plans, and not entirely to her surprise he once more began referring to things on the farm as "ours."

When Tom bought his next suit he had so much confidence in May's judgment that he allowed her to persuade him to get a suit small enough, and, although he felt foolish in such a suit at first, he soon reached the point where he actually liked it and wondered why he ever bought his clothes too large.

One Sunday morning, early in the summer, when Tom and May and the children drove up to the church the entire family looked so nice that everybody admired them.

"Haven't Tom and May come out?" one kind old lady said to Tom's mother.

Shaking her head the dear old mother said:

"Poor Tom!"

But even she was pleased when May came to her, kissed her and led her up the aisle, Tom following with May's mother and the children.

Screenings for Sheep Feeding.

Beginning with the first of October, screenings will be freely offered commercially along with other mill feeds and coarse grains. An amendment of last session to the Feeding Stuffs Act, a Dominion measure, provides that mill screenings shall be sold as such and not mixed with shorts, as has been the rule for many years.

Elevator screenings fed to sheep at the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa returned a value of $70 a ton in the gains made by the stock. The grain ration contained two-thirds screenings and one-third consisting of a standard ration of oats, bran and oil meal. Where fed without screenings, the standard ration used as the grain feed yielded a return of $45 a ton in gains made. The screenings, like the oats, were fed unground. The screenings used consisted of a mixture of cracked and shrunken wheat, hulled kernels of oats, and wild buckwheat and some other weed seeds. This product as now obtainable is so cleaned either at the elevators or flour mills as to be practically free from the fine, bitter weed seeds found in screenings until recently. The Feeding Stuffs Act administered by the Seed Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, requires that it shall contain not more than one per cent. of fine weed seeds and that percentage of tough fibre shall be low. In sheep feeding it is better fed unground, because sheep dislike a floury feed. For hogs and cattle the screenings need to be finely ground in order to destroy weed seeds and to increase feeding value.

The most powerful lifeboat in the world is being built for use in the Mersey; she is sixty feet long, driven by motors, and has cabin accommodation for fifty people.

WHY I BELIEVE IN BOYS' AND GIRLS' CLUBS.

I shall nevr forget my first lesson in stock judging, when I was a freshman in the college of agriculture. We were handed score cards which gave the names of the various parts of the animal and the per cent. to be given in case the animal in question was perfect. I was dumbfounded. I had fed and watched pigs grow, milked cows, and worked horses all my life, and yet there on the card were words I had never before associated with an animal. It proved a revelation and an incentive for careful study. After "going over" a cow brought into the class-room, with the score card, the cow became more than a frame covered with hide and hair. A machine was revealed with wondrous possibilities. The same was true with the horse, the pig, and the sheep.

When I was a youngster and followed my father around as he slopped the pigs, I would peek through the fence and watch the pigs from day to day make hogs out of themselves. In those days I generally had a pet, some favored one in the bunch, that was selected because of his curly hair or perhaps the white spots on his side. Some years later part of my family chores included feeding the pigs. Just as when a lad in knee breeches. I still pick out a pig that "looked good" to me. The selection was determined partly by the pig's degree of friendliness toward me, and perhaps by some marked color or texture of hair.

NOTHING LEARNED.

I had never paid any attention to the judging at the fall festival or the county fair because in those days these festivities, as far as I was concerned, were picnics where red lemonade flowed freely, the sports bet on horse races, and every one stayed till sundown to see the balloon go up. Any demonstration in judging livestock was carefully hidden at the far end of the track, so that very few knew anything about it. And even if you knew about it, and were fortunate enough to see the judge in action, his manner made the work more mysterious and meaningless. There was never an explanation or a reason given for any placing.

On my first Thanksgiving vacation from college I was out in the cow lot and the pig pen at home every day making comparisons and scoring individuals. I was actually getting acquainted with them. Though I had known them all my life, they were strangers until the score card made the introduction.

Those elementary lessons in judging, and later the participation in judging contests with other colleges at the big livestock shows and the judging at fairs, are among the most pleasant of my experiences.

In contrast to my early boyhood days on the farm, the boys and girls of to-day have an opportunity to take advantage of specific training in practically all branches of farm work right at home. When I was a boy (that was not very many years ago) the boys' and girls' club idea wasn't born yet. With these institutions the boys and girls on the farm have every opportunity to acquaint themselves with the best information along practically every line of farm production.

I worked with a group of boys and girls this year in the pig clubs. These young people are just like I was when I was their age. They milked cows, fed pigs, drove horses, and plowed corn. There was nothing special for them to think about except getting up at 5 a.m., work all day, and milk the cows after sundown.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

Forty boys in this community this year changed this old program. Each assumed the ownership and responsibility of feeding and caring for a purebred pig. Four distinct business organizations or clubs were formed, each selecting officers from their own number and adopting a regular constitution and by-laws. Meetings were held regularly each month. Anyone doubting the ability of a bunch of youngsters from eleven to eighteen to conduct a meeting in true parliamentary style, with a little coaching, should make an effort to visit a boys' and girls' club in most any agricultural community. These youngsters grab at the chance to run their own meetings, and they do it right, too. I have actually seen a bunch of ten boys conduct a meeting themselves in a more businesslike manner than do many adults. Meeting with their own group gives these lads confidence in themselves, and they get information in parliamentary law which they will never forget.

But there are other factors that are just as important, perhaps more so, in the club activities. Feeding and caring for their pigs, each attempting to raise the best in the county, molds our future hog breeders.

When the judging lessons are given, and the try-outs for the county judging team are staged, no more earnest and sincere group can be found. A baseball game or a football contest has no advantage over a contest of this kind for intense and concentrated interest on the part of the players. It is a gruelling contest.

These forty lads started at seven o'clock in the morning and worked till six at night, judging twenty-five classes of stock, which included horses, cattle, sheep, and hogs. And at the end of the day each contestant was asked to give his reasons on four classes of stock judged during the day.

IMPRESSIVE SIGHT.

It is no small task to keep in mind the details of a particular class of stock, singling them out of ten or more bunches judged, and give reason on placings several hours after seeing them. Yet these youngsters stood up individually before a group of sixty men and women who made the trip, and told in detail why they made their placings.

It was an impressive sight to see these boys work and hear them give their oral reasons and explanations.

Following the boys' and girls' club work in its various activities is amply convincing that it is one of the greatest of forces for agricultural progress.—B. R.

"The Child's First School Is the Family"—Froebel."

Children's Prayers—By Bertha Hayward Higgins

"Mother, I think I'm going to make a collection of prayers," said my small boy one evening.

"Very well," said I, "I think that will be fine. Are you going to paste them in a scrap book?"

"Yes, but I'm going to learn them first. But when can I say them? I can't say them all every night, can I?"

"Well, perhaps not if you have a large collection, but you can say your favorite one every night, and have the others ready for special occasions. There are so many times when you want to ask God for something, or thank Him for that which He has already given you. It would be very nice to have all ready for use, a collection of prayers which someone has already thought out and expressed in more beautiful language than you would be likely to use if you made them hastily."

Now whenever he finds a prayer which he wants to add to his collection, we read it through and discuss it, then we decide on what occasions it would be likely eo have the most meaning for him. Some, of course, have to be adapted to meet his needs.

I feel that in changing them I have been able to avoid dampening the religious feeling that is being awakened in the child, and I hope thus to avert the danger that arises wherever formal prayers are used—that they shall become a mere mechanical repetition of words.

I have always believed that a child's prayers should be spontaneous and natural, and that if formal prayers are used, they should be explained and made to have some real significance.

I believe too that the child should understand that he must do his part in having his prayer answered.

One of the prayers which Laddie had in his "collection" and which he has adapted to his needs, is for use when his baseball nine is going to play a game.

"But," said he, when we were discussing it, "what if one of the fellows on the other side prays as much as I do?"

Then I recalled to him the fact that "God helps those who help themselves," and together we summed up the conclusions, that regular systematic practice would be needed, and all the fellows on the winning team would need to be brave and honest, and always play fair.

I tried to make him see that while our prayers may not always be answered in just the way we expect, we will, if we do our part, always get either that for which we ask, or something better. In proof of this I recalled his disappointment last summer at the postponement of the Sunday School picnic, because of a rainy day when he had prayed for a sunny day. We had the picnic later on, and we also had a large quantity of blackberries, which we would not have had if the drought had continued, and we are still having blackberry jam.

Just as I have tried always to retain my child's confidence, to make him ever ready to have a "good talk over" as he calls it, so I have tried to make him feel that nothing which interests him is too small or too insignificant to be taken to God in prayer. And just as he had learned to feel that Mother and Dad are "good sports" and can understand and forgive his little boyish mistakes, so he is coming to realize the greater understanding and ever ready forgiveness of the "All-Father."

Just as the Indian lad when he went alone into the mountains to fast and pray ("mine a vision") was unconsciously setting up in his own mind the ideal into which his charcter would develop, so is the child who early forms the habit of prayer.

HOW TO PREPARE AN ADDRESS

Many a person dodges a gathering simply because he knows that as a member of a responsible organization he will be called upon and expected to make an address. To dodge anything is to acknowledge defeat, whereas to meet a situation is an important step toward success.

The person who "gets out of making a speech" lessens his own self-respect and self-confidence; but if he makes a determined effort to be ready for the occasion when he may be called upon to give "a brief address," he not only educates himself in poise and general information but in time gains recognition as the "ready speaker" that will make him known either in the business or in the social world.

To prepare for an address is simple if it is done systematically. Here are some suggestions from a person who, by following them, won a leading place in a contest over seventy others who tried for the honor of making an address:

1. Jot down at random your personal opinion on the subject, for it prevents your talk from being stereotyped and gives it personality. Therefore, be sure to do that before you get impressions either from persons or from reading matter.

2. Determine how long the address should be.

3. Decide upon the general way in which you will express yourself—whether you will be formal (in which case you must omit slang), semi-humorous or brief and businesslike. Whatever style you choose, try to present the most hopeful and constructive facts.

4. If you lack ideas or information, read enough "to set you going" by consulting at the public library such of the following books as you think are likely to help you, encyclopaedias, some yearbook or almanac, government bulletins, the Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature (which gives references, both under the name of the subject and under the names of authors of magazine articles in leading publications, both current and past) and such special books on the subject as either the card catalogue or the librarian may suggest.

5. After you have got all the ideas on the subject that you can, outline your speech simply in this form:

Introduction — One sentence is enough for that.

Body—Under that heading should come a paragraph for each phase of the subject. A single word to suggest the logical order of treatment is enough.

Conclusion—In some cases a single sentence is sufficient; other cases need a brief summing up in a few forceful words.

6. Study the address and then copy the outline of it in large legible writing or in typewriting upon a card small enough to hold in the palm of the hand. If your speech is not perfectly memorized, or if stage fright makes you forgetful, the card will keep your remarks in the logical order that makes them most interesting; and, although you may not say them exactly as you wrote them, you will be more likely to just because you have carefully prepared them and have notes that remind you.

"Jack is selling oil stock."
"Maybe that's why he's so smooth."
