Synopsis of Canadian North-West Land Regulations.

ANY person who is the sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. The applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Subagency for the district. Entry by proxy may be made at any agency, on certain conditions, by father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of intending homesteader.

Duties—Six months' residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres solely owned and occupied by him or by his father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-emp a quarter-section along side his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Must reside upon the homestead or pre-emption six months in each of six years from date of homestead entry (including the time required to earn homestead patent) and cultivate fifty acres extra.

A homesteader who has exhausted his homestead right and cannot obtain a pre-emption may enter for a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate fifty acres and erect a house worth $300.00.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

Miss Isabel Farlinger left on Monday for Montreal.

Miss Marjorie Bradfield, of Montreal, is visiting in town.

Miss Maud Baker is visiting with her brother, Mr Stanton Baker, Toronto.

Miss Sadie Anderson left on Sunday on a visit to her brother in Portland, Me.

Mrs P. Gormely has been visiting with friends in Ogdensburg for a few days.

Quite a number of Morrisburgers attended the Central Canada Exhibition at Ottawa this week.

Miss Ella VanAllen returned Monday from Toronto, where she has been spending the last week.

Remember, the old favorites, Guy Bros.' Minstrels will be be at the Music Hall Tuesday, Sept. 23rd.

Mr B. A. Herring, manager of the Bank of Ottawa, is spending a few weeks' holidays in Syracuse, N. Y.

It is estimated that the steamer Thousand Islander carried over 30,000 passengers during the month of August.

Miss E. Olga VanAllen left Tuesday for Saskatoon, after spending her vacation with her mother and with friends

Mr Robert Henderson, of Kingston, with his sister in-law, Miss Corbett, are visiting with Mr Henderson's mother here.

Mr Amos Barkley, who was recently employed at the St. Lawrence Hall, has been engaged as clerk with the Messrs. O'Reilley at the Windsor.

There is a possibility of the rectorship of St. Paul's, Waddington, which has been vacant for some time, being filled by Rev. Mr Green, of New York.

Services in St. James' Church on Sunday will be at 8 a.m., 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.; Sunday-school at 2.30. Service in Trinity Church at 2.30 and Sunday-school at 2 o'clock.

A fire which occurred at Thousand Island Park on Monday morning did damage to the extent of $12,000, destroying twenty boathouses, a number of skiffs and five motor boats.

Four pupils wrote here this week on the supplemental exam. for entrance to lower school. This examination is for those pupils attending approved schools who do not write on the regular lower school examination.

Mrs (Dr.) Smith, of Cornwall, and Mrs A. D. McArthur returned yesterday from a summer's trip, their itinerary taking in Butte, Mont., and the Coast. From Vancouver they returned by C.P.R. to St. Mary's, where their mother, Mrs Laflamme, and Miss Catharine McArthur joined them in their return here.

Mr Bernard Fetterly, son of Mr Walter Fetterly, of this town, conducted both morning and evening services on Sunday in St. Paul's Church. Mr Fetterly, who is a student at the Chicago Lutheran Seminary, preached two very acceptable sermons and gives promise of becoming conspicuous in the ranks of the Lutheran ministry.

Recently when the steamer America was going around Bell's Point at the head of Wolfe Island, a large sea serpent was seen by many of the passengers. The animal was about fifteen or twenty feet long and was playing about, causing the water to splash into the air.—Exchange. The presence of a bar on the larger passenger boats may account for the fact that an occasional ichthyosaurus is seen in the waters of the St. Lawrence.

The Morrisburg baseball team went on Saturday to Ogdensburg, where they played the State Hospital nine. At the end of the second the score stood 6-1 for Morrisburg and eleven innings had to be played to decide the game, which resulted in a win for Ogdensburg by one run, the score standing 7-6. The Ogdensburg team had a State league pitcher, while Ray Mallen threw for Morrisburg. The boys go to Cardinal on Saturday to play the team there, winners in their league. The Morrisburg Baseball Club may well be proud of their record this season, having won 10 games out of 14.

A large number of horses have already been entered for the Ogdensburg Fair and Horse Show. Among the entries so far are those of R. C. Vanderbilt, New York; E. Seelig, New York; E. B. McLean, Washington, D. C.; Mount Vernon Stock Farm, Hudson Heights, N. Y.; Cumberland stables, Toronto; A. Yager, Simcoe, Ont.; Allison's Island Farm, Waddington and Morrisburg; A. G. Vanderbilt Stock Farm, Newport, R. I; Crow & Murray stables, Toronto; Thos. Irving, Winchester; Capt. Reasson, London, Ont.; J. B. Holgate, Weston; Sifton stables, Toronto; Allison Stock Farm, Chesterville; Jones & Bates, Ottawa.

Col. J. Wesley Allison has been invited to judge all harness and saddle-horse classes at Michigan State Fair.

While operating a double cut-off machine in the Beach Furniture Company's factory at Cornwall, Roy Hesse had three fingers of his right hand cut off.

Mrs John Connor and children were visiting Mrs H. Martin in Waddington last week, and are this week spending a few days with friends at Winchester Springs.

The ladies of the Altar Society of St. Mary's Church will (D. V.) give a tea and hold a sale of fancy and useful articles about the first week in December.

The Board of Education met in regular session on Monday evening, in the Agriculture office. Accounts to the amount of $374 42 were passed. A letter from Mr J. R. Balfour was read, asking that he be appointed to the board of Entrance examiners, to replace Mr Duprau; also a letter from Inspector J. A. Houston, inquiring what repairs had been made to the M. C. I. gymnasium and equipment. No action was taken in regard to Mr Balfour's appointment; but the M. C. I. committee was instructed to again take up the matter mentioned in the inspector's communication. The secretary reported having received $28 50 from the T. Eaton Co. to balance account re cadet suits. Principal Jamieson said that the suits were not as ordered, being of a poorer quality, and suggested that the Board have Lieut. Broder adjust the matter. On a motion by Mr J. L. Casselman, which was seconded by Mr C. S. Colquhoun, Principal Jamieson was asked to work with Lieut. Broder to finally arrange the matter.

Mrs A. B. Carman and family are moving to Seaforth, where Miss Carman has secured a position on the Collegiate Institute staff. Their many friends will be sorry to see this estimable family leave town after so many years residence. Miss Carman applied for a position on the local High School staff, but for some reason her application was passed over, which was not to the credit of the Board, since a local applicant, whose grandfather was chiefly instrumental in establishing the I. H. S. here, and whose father was an old and honored resident and heavy taxpayer for many years, should have been given the presence. Even if the salary asked —$1,000—was higher than the Board felt able to pay, they should at least have considered the application and consulted Miss Carman, who was in town. No doubt she would have consented to a reduction in salary to meet the situation rather than break up their family home in Iroquois. The loss of another family from Iroquois was also a factor that should have been considered.—St. Lawrence News. Miss Carman was on the staff of the Collegiate here two years ago.

The late Mrs. Fitzpatrick's maiden name was Mary Anne McNally, and she was born in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., near Myers' Creek, opposite Morrisburg. She was married in 1865, and leaves to mourn her loss her husband and three sons and three daughters, namely: Arthur, of Seattle, Wash.; John, of the Marine Department, Parry Sound; George, second engineer on the steamer C. J. S. Simcoe; Mary (Mrs. James Henophy), Rochester; Ettie (Mrs. C. R. Duprau), Ottawa; Nellie (Mrs. Howard Hartell), Rochester. A son, Thomas, died about two years ago.

The funeral took place at nine o'clock to St. Mary's church, where solemn High Mass was sung by Rev. Father Meehan. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Arthur Merkley, W H. McGannon, Gregory Brandstetter, James Laskey, Alfred Clement and D. C. Bush. Among those from out of town who were in attendance at the funeral were Mr. Frank Mullen, Ogdensburg; Mr. and Mrs. Dineen, Ogdensburg, besides the sons and daughters of the deceased, with the exception of Mr. Arthur Fitzpatrick, who was unable to be here.

The late Mrs. Fitzpatrick was a home-loving, motherly woman and endeared herself to all with whom she came in contact, and the family have the sympathy of the community in their irreparable loss.

Mr. McNally, of the big map and railroad-ticket printing house of Rand, McNally & Co., Chicago, is a cousin of the deceased.

East York Bye-election

The bye election in East York on Monday resulted in a rout of the Rowell forces, the Government candidate, Mr George S. Henry being elected by 607 majority.

The result showed that the electors preferred the concrete legislation of Sir James Whitney in the interests of temperance rather than the uncertain policy of the Liberals in Ontario.

Ogdensburg Exhibition

Will Offer an Unrivalled List of Attractions to the Public Sept. 22-26

(From the Ogdensburg Journal,)

With the near approach of the forty-second annual exhibition of the Ogdensburg Fair and Horse Show, the executive staff of the association is redoubling its efforts in anticipation of the greatest fair in the history of the society. For weeks past preparatory work has been in progress at the grounds while the downtown headquarters of the fair have been no less active and animated. The work of advertising the fair on both sides of the river has been in progress over a month and there is not a town or hamlet of any importance within a wide radius that has not been covered by the publicity campaign. Printers ink has never yet failed to earn results and the thoroughness of the work performed by the fair management this fall in this regard is already bringing fruit.

Particular attention has been paid to the work of putting the live stock sheds and pens in a clean and healthful condition for the reception of the prize cattle, poultry, sheep and swine that will be brought here. They have been whitewashed and swept and then disinfected and the poultry coops have been thoroughly sprayed. Considerable draining also has been done. The dairy hall that formerly stood west of the Floral hall has been moved near the Franklin street gate. This change opens up the entire field west of the promenade and gives added space to the midway and concession sections. The electric light company now has a gang of men at work readjusting the lighting arrangements so as to provide excellent illumination throughout the buildings and grounds.

The management is effecting various other improvements in and around the grandstand and show ring. The platform seats between the race track and show ring will be of a more permanent character and a new bandstand will be erected in a more central position than the one that formerly stood at the east end of the enclosure. The old bandstand that was at the side of the grandstand will be removed entirely and an exit will be provided on that side, making three lower exits and two upper ones.

The race track has been remeasured by the secretary with a steel tape three feet from the pole and has been found to be just four over the full mile, twice around.

The main attractions of the fair will be the races horse show, music and flying machine, together with various others already announced. The racing stakes and purses aggregate $7,500, the largest amount ever offered at the Ogdensburg fair, and indications point to the best class of horses and the best light harness sport in the history of the association. Vice-President J. Wesley Allison, who is judging at some of the largest shows in the east, sends word here that the quality and quantity of the Ogdensburg horse show this year will outrank all former ones. Among the noted stables to be shipped here will be Reginald C. Vanderbilt's Sandy Point Farm entries of Newport, R I. Mr. Vanderbilt himself will come here to stay through the show as he did last year, despite the rain that lasted for three days.

John H. Allen, ring master of the Madison Square Garden Horse Show, who officiated at Ogdensburg last year, will again be in charge and the judges will be selected from the best on the continent.

The famous Governor-General's Foot Guards band of Ottawa has been engaged for the whole week and will play many new selections. Their reputation for high class music is too well established to need mention. They will be heard at the great horse show concert in the opera house on Thursday evening, when Miss Florence Hinckle, soprano, and Evan Williams, the peerless American tenor, will sing. Thursday will be the big day of the fair and on that occasion the people will have an opportunity to see the famous Foot Guards regiment, which will visit the fair 400 strong and give an exhibition drill. Special permission has been secured at Washington to allow the guards to come across the boundary and the event will be further evidence of the international friendship that exists between the two great nations that are divided by an imaginary line.

The flying machine exhibition Tuesday, Sept 23rd, will be made by Capt. Paoli in Capt. Thomas Baldwin's famous Red Devil aeroplane. The birdman's contract calls for two fully equipped machines on the ground so that if an accident happens to one the other will be immediately available. Capt. Paoli will make two 20 minute flights, on one of which he will take up a passenger. The fair has an iron-clad contract with the aviator guaranteeing flights, and feels that the unfortunate experience of previous years with birdmen will not be repeated. Capt. Paoli has been engaged to fly at various fairs in this part of the State and Canada before he comes to Ogdensburg.

Special dining arrangements will be provided under the grandstand at the fair grounds. A special dinner as well as a la carte service will be inaugurated during the fair.

W. L. Day, with the chef and a picked crew from the steamer Rochester, will be in charge and excellent service is assured.

Prescott Man Has Narrow Escape

Prescott, Sept. 6.—The Edward street crossing at the Grand Trunk Railway at Prescott was the scene on Thursday of another serious accident, which only by a miracle did not prove fatal. When Mr Abram Lane, a well known Prescott citizen was crossing the track driving a young and spirited horse he did not notice the two trains coming in opposite directions.

He was watching one of the approaching trains, when the horse became unmanageable and threw him out of the buggy. The train coming in the other direction struck the buggy and demolished it and carried the horse until the harness became loose doing no considerable injury to the animal.

Had not Mr Lane been fortunate enough to have been thrown from the buggy he would have undoubtedly been killed outright. Outside of a serious cut on the head and bruises on his body he escaped further injury.

Robinson—Contryman

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr and Mrs George Contryman, Bush Glen, on Wednesday, Sept. 3, at 3 o'clock p. m., when their only daughter, Edna Mary, was united in marriage to Mr Mason Robinson, youngest son of Mr Hugh Robinson, of Grantley. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr Meyer, of Finch.

The bride, who was given away by her father, looked very charming in a dress of cream messaline de Chene silk trimmed with silk embroidered chiffon. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch fob, and to Miss Amy Warner, cousin of the bride, who played the wedding march, a gold brooch set with pearls. After tea Mr and Mrs Robinson left for Toronto and Niagara and on their return will reside at Grantley.

The bride's travelling suit was of navy blue Bedford cord, with hat to match. The bride received many handsome and useful presents, including a number of cheques, cut glass and silverware.

Those present from a distance were Mrs A. Hawn and Miss Cora Hawn, of Goldfield, Colorado; Mr and Mrs S. C. Hill, of Munster, Ont.; Mr and Mrs Ira Herriman, of Chase Mills, N. Y.

Craig—McIntosh

The marriage was solemnized at Robertson Presbyterian church, Edmonton, Alta., on Wednesday, Sept. 3rd, of Lottie A., only daughter of Mr and Mrs Ira McIntosh, of Morrisburg, to Lawrence A. Craig, son of Mr and Mrs J. C. Craig, Edmonton, the Rev. Mr Stewart officiating. Miss Jean Craig, sister of the groom, acted as bridesmaid, while Mr M. E. Hunter, cousin of the bride, attended the bridegroom.

The bride looked charming in hand-embroidered cream silk mull over silk with veil and orange blossoms. Her reception dress was black silk net over canary satin, and her going away suit was of navy blue serge, with white hat. The bridesmaid's dress was yellow chiffon over yellow silk.

After the ceremony the guests repaired to the home of Mr and Mrs J. C. Craig, brother of the groom, where dinner was served.

The bride received many beautiful and useful presents, including linen, silverware and cut glass.

Mr and Mrs Craig will leave shortly for their future home in Chicago.

Matilda Rural School Gardens

In the following list will be found the names of twenty-five pupils with the score they made on their plots. There were many more pupils whose names do not appear on this list who had excellent gardens, but the following are those that scored the highest number of points in the Township of Matilda:

Acil Hanson, s. s. 12, Brinston, 97 per cent.; Stanley Thorpe, s. s. 12, Brinston, 97; Arthur Bowden, s. s. 9, Dundela, 96; Annie Conner, s. s. 8, Irena, 96; Merton Casselman, s. s. 9, Dundela, 95½; Walter McGowan, s. s. 13, Brinston, 95½; John McGowan, s. s. 12, Brinston, 95½; Carrie Ellis, s. s. 19, Pleasant Valley, 94½; Clifford Ellis, s. s. 19, Pleasant Valley, 94; Eva Coons, s. s. 11, Dixon's, 93½; James Thorpe, s.s. 19, Pleasant Valley, 93½; Ralph Marcellus, s. s. 7, Rowena, 93; Laura Crobar, s. s. 11, Dixon's, 92; Gertrude Smith, s. s. 9, Dundela, 91½; Allie Shaver, s. s. 23, Iroquois, 89½; Winnie Crobar, s. s. 11, Dixon's, 89½; Gracie Geggie, s. s. 14, Toye's Hill, 89; Mary Payne, s. s. 13, Brinston, 89; Ernest Ault, s. s. 8, Irena, 88½; Fred Ault, s. s. 8, Irena, 88½; Kathleen Barnhard, s. s. 9, Dundela, 87; Earl Crobar, s. s. 11, Dixon's, 87; Aletha Coleman, s. s. 14. Toye's Hill, 86 1/2; Eva Strader, s. s. 13, Brinston, 86 1/2; Delbert Wylie, s. s. 14, Toye's Hill, 86.

Any pupil with a score above 70 per cent. may be considered to have a good garden; below that, they need to give a little more attention to the work. Out of 143 gardens in the township 80 of them scored over 70 per cent. which goes to show the high character of the work done by the pupils.

A Dark Shadow;

Or, A Coming Vengeance

(CHAPTER V.—(Cont'd.)

Lady Edith shrugged her shoulders. "I don't think you will have a chance, Sara," she said, with a laugh that was a trifle wistful as well as scornful. "I'm not going to continue his acquaintance; and, for his part, he is too big a man to care to continue mine. He is not like the other men who have nothing to do.—And how bored I am with them!—" she broke off. "They have nothing to say but the old, old things, and they think of nothing but their clothes and their clubs, and— I don't care, I'll wear anything you like; you know best what goes with this dress—the pearls? Very well."

She made a gesture of compliance, and sighed as Sara took the magnificent pearls from the jewel case.

"Am I ready? My fan. Oh, how I wish there were no dinner parties, no dances, no crowds, and hot rooms, and that I could go somewhere and be quiet, Sara!" she exclaimed, and, as Sara put her arm round her, carefully yet caressingly, Lady Edith let her head rest for a minute or two on the woman's bosom. Sara uttered a little cry, a crooning cry, the one with which she had soothed the girl when she was in her arms.

"Missie tired," she said pityingly. "Missie come home soon, and let Sara put her to bed early."

"Yes," said Lady Edith, "I should like to sleep for—oh, for ever." She put up her face for the woman to kiss, and the woman touched it with her lips as a devotee kisses the image of his patron saint, as a mother kisses the child who is all the world and more to her.

She went down to the carriage with her, and—the footman making way for her—arranged the beautiful dress so that it should not be crushed.

"Good night, my angel!" she murmured; then, with a kind of salaam to Lord Chesterleigh, she said in an undertone, "Missie not stay long to-night, sahib; she tired."

Lord Chesterleigh nodded pleasantly, much as he would have nodded to one of his own family.

"All right, Sara," he said.—"Are you tired, not well, Edith? Would you rather not go?"

"No, no!" she responded, with a touch of impatience. "Of course we are going! I am quite well and fit. Sara would fuss if I pricked my finger."

Sara watched the carriage until it had disappeared, then, ignoring the other servants as completely as if she were unconscious of their presence, she went up to Lady Edith's rooms, and began to put away her mistress's things. Once or twice she paused, and looked before her with an expression of anxiety, foreboding, and anger.

"He has come at last!" she muttered. "He always comes sooner or later. And this man she loves, this pig—" Her white teeth gleamed as she clicked them. "Pig as he is, she loves him—do I not know!—and she shall have him!"

CHAPTER VI.

"What is it, a masquerade ball, or are you going to do a little burgling?" asked Quilton, pausing on the stairs and looking up at Clive, who was just coming out of his room. Clive, who was dressed in a shabby old suit of checks, with a cloth cap that had seen a deal of service in the worst of English weather, laughed with satisfaction.

"Look like that, do I?" he said. "That's all right! I'm going on a little expedition. Ever hear of Paradise Gardens?"

"No," said Quilton in his impassive way. "Party on there?"

"Yes; there's always a party going on at the Gardens," said Clive; "and an especially good one on Saturday nights. It's a street in the slums, to be exact; and I want to see it. I'm told that I don't know what the slums are if I'm unacquainted with Paradise Gardens."

Quilton nodded. "I see. I will say this for you, that you do the thing thoroughly, Harvey. Going to take a bobby, 'tec, with you?"

"No," replied Clive. "I'm hoping to pass muster in this kit; besides, the police have plenty to do without playing escort to professional philanthropists."

Quilton was silent for a moment; then he said:

"Think I'll come with you, if you don't mind. I've a night off—Saturday, you know; and I'm inclined for a little beano."

Clive hesitated a moment. "It may be anything but a beano for us," he said significantly.

"Case of broken heads, or worse?" said Quilton nonchalantly. "Well, I've never had my head broken—not quite broken, you understand—and I'm pining for a new sensation."

"All right," said Clive. "But you'd better make yourself a little less respectable."

"Couldn't if I tried," said Quilton, glancing down at his tobacco-and-tea-stained coat, his corkscrew trousers, and his bulgy and ill-fitting boots.

Clive eyed him up and down. "Clean collars are barred at Paradise Gardens," he observed.

"Give me a minute," said Quilton; and he went up to his room, and returned presently with a dingy comforter round his neck in place of the offensively white collar.

"Let's get on a 'bus," said Clive. "Have you ever realized that, taking into consideration the wear of shoe leather and the elbows of your coat, its cheaper to ride than walk in London? This used to be the poor man's carriage," he resumed, as they climbed to the top of the omnibus; "but it is now that of the rich man also. I have seen several bishops on the top of an omnibus; and I spotted one of the directors of the Bank of England the other day."

"Nice to be acquainted with bank directors," murmured Quilton.

"Oh, I met him at my father's," explained Clive; "though what on earth he was doing there I don't know," he added candidly. "No director of even the most credulous and trustful of banks would negotiate a loan with the Rafboroughs."

"The old barriers have been broken down," observed Quilton. "This is a democratic age; the peasant treads closely on the heels of the peer, the mason travels in the twopenny Tube with the millionaire, the bishop rides on the knife-board of the omnibus with a bricklayer—and Mr. Clive Harvey—I beg his pardon, the Hon. Clive Harvey, son of the Earl of Rafborough, whose ancestors came over with William the Norman—chooses as his companion on a slum-prowl the humble and seedy William Henry Quilton."

"Don't be an ass, Quilton," adjured Clive. "But you're right. It is a democratic age, and barristers are being levelled in every direction. Some of them ought to have come down long ago; for they are so high and so thick that men could not see each other over them or through them; they divide the classes, and one class does not know how the other class lives. Do you imagine that the upper classes, as they are called, and rightly, for they are on top, are aware of the misery, the abject misery in which so many of their fellow-creatures — their fellow-citizens, by Jove!—live, or rather, drag through an existence of which one of the lower animals would be ashamed?"

"They have every opportunity of reading about it," said Quilton. "The Beacon costs only a ha-penny—"

"They read about 'em, of course," assented Clive. "So do you and I read about the Esquimaux, and the Bakhs in Central Africa; but reading is no use. You want to know, you want to have it brought home to you—"

"As we are going to have it brought home to us two presently?"

"Quite so," said Clive. "The poor think the rich hard-hearted; they are not, they are light-hearted, careless, thoughtless—"

"'More harm is wrought by want of thought,'" quoted Quilton passively.

"Ah, that's it!" said Clive. "It's want of thought. I know a round score of people, titled, rich people, who would not only be moved to tears by a description of the state of things we are going to see, but would shell out, and liberally too. But that isn't enough. Private charity has the effect of a drop in the ocean, and little more. We want legislation, we want to get at the root of the matter, to deal so with things that the denizens of the slums would be taught that it is a crime to drink, to herd together like pigs in a sty, to beat their wives and starve their children, in short, to live like wild beasts—I beg the wild beasts' pardon!—instead of self-respecting human beings."

"Hear, hear! 'Here the hon. gentleman resumed his seat amidst prolonged cheering,'" said Quilton.

Clive laughed. "I beg your pardon, Quilton," he said; "but I wasn't making a speech. If you knew as much of the condition of the poor as I know—"

"How do you know I don't?" said Quilton dryly. "You talk of the slums here in London; do you know them in New York, in Chicago? Do you know the kind of place the meat-packer calls 'home' in the latter place? Do you know the backwaters in Paris, Berlin, Naples? I bet you don't; but I do.—Got a match upon you?—I have no doubt there were slums in the prehistoric period; you bet there were some in Rome and Jerusalem. You want to bring about the millennium. All right; don't mind me. But, clever as you are, I don't think you'll do it."

"Perhaps not," said Clive, checking a sigh; "the millennium is a big thing; but I am going to have a fair and square try to improve matters."

"Here's luck to you," said Quilton, lifting his pipe as if it were a glass. "Look at the thousands upon thousands of well-dressed and presumably well-to-do people in the streets. Have you ever gone into the suburbs of London?"

"Yes?" said Clive. "I have taken long walks in every direction."

"And been struck by the miles and miles of not only comfortable but expensive houses?" said Quilton. "They stretch right into the country. In every direction, mind you—not only in one. Did you ever ask yourself how the occupiers of those houses, ranging in rent from $200 to $1,250, paid their rent, to say nothing of getting their living?"

"Yes, it is wonderful. London is a Great Mystery, for, of course, it all comes out of London."

"Yes," drawled Quilton, "and you can understand how the present-day German must echo Blucher's famous aspiration: 'What a city to sack!'"

They got down at Whitechapel Church, and Clive led the way across the road into one of the streets that branch from the main thoroughfare. At first it was decent enough, though the signs of squalor and vice rapidly showed themselves; but Clive, asking his way to Paradise Gardens, was directed through a series of narrow streets, through which he and Quilton passed as travellers so to speak, not to Paradise, but to its extreme opposite; for these narrow streets grew ever narrower, more squalid, more filthy, and were thronged with people more squalid and filthy than the streets themselves. At every corner there was a flaring gin-palace or a shabbier but not less disreputable beer-shop, about which hung loafers of the lowest type, who stared at them with a resentful curiosity.

They reached their destination at last, and they found it to be anything but a paradise or a garden. It seemed to be the end of the world, the spot to which all the filth and mire of humanity had silted. There were no gin-palaces here, but low-browed beer-shops and grimy public-houses, about which congregated individuals to whom the loafers in the broader streets were princes and gentlemen. Children, scarcely clothed, were playing and wallowing in the black mud of the gutters. Frowsy women, scarcely more adequately clothed than the children, with unkempt hair, and dirt-laden faces, were leaning against the doors of the public-houses on squatting on the pavement; they were indifferent to, or only taking a languid interest in, a fight which was going on between two men at the end of the court; but presently a couple of women staggered and rolled out of one of the beer-shops. They were singing at the top of their voices, both madly drunk, and suddenly one of them "cheeked" the other.

In an instant they were both engaged tearing each other's hair and clawing at each other's bosoms. The loafers woke up, and formed a ring, not a keenly interested ring, but a limp and languid one; the little affair was too common in Paradise Gardens to cause excitement or anything but a lazy interest. And the women fought like tigers; blood flowed, hair was shed by handfuls. Clive looked on for a while with white face and a racked soul; Quilton as impassively as ever.

Clive was breaking through the ring of spectators, when a policeman thrust him aside and made his way through the ring. He separated the combatants, but made no arrest. Why should he? Such fights were as frequent in Paradise Gardens as "At Homes" in Mayfair.

The two women went off, still shrilling threats that savoured of the nether hell; the policeman dispelled the languid crowd, and in doing so confronted Clive and Quilton. He knew Paradise Gardens and all its denizens, and he saw that Clive and Quilton were strangers.

"Pass along," he said; then he looked at Clive keenly. He had been on duty in Palace Yard, and recognized Mr. Clive Harvey, "the people's friend." He saluted, but shook his head.

"Rum place this, sir," he said; "scarcely the place for a gentleman. Might get into trouble any moment. There ain't a worse place in London; better be going, sir."

"It's all right, constable," said Clive. "We've come to see what we can for ourselves."

"Then you'd better take me with you, sir," said the policeman, gravely. "It is not a fit place for gentlemen like you."

"No, no," said Clive; "we want to go alone. We shall be all right."

"Well," said the policeman reluctantly, "I shall be at the corner there if you call to me. But I hope you'll be careful, gentlemen, for we policemen get the blame if anything goes wrong."

He tramped off as reluctantly as he had spoken, and Clive and Quilton pursued their investigation. They entered one of the doorways—all the doors were open, as if the occupants of this fearful den invited inspection—and knocked at the room on the ground floor. A half-clad girl opened the door to them, and Clive and Quilton looked in upon a scene which would seem incredible to one of my ladies of Belgravia.

There were nine persons in the room, male and female, of all ages, from the grandfather of eighty to the child of six, to say nothing of three babies lying on a piece of sacking in the corner. They were matchbox-makers, and they were working against time. Some of them were bending into shape the thin pieces of wood, some were pasting the labels, others were fixing them to the shaped boxes. Work as they might, and as they did, with a feverish, wolfish eagerness, they could only earn a few pence apiece in the day of sixteen hours. They raised their heavy eyes and stared at Clive and Quilton; then fell to work again as if they grudged the moment their presence had stolen.

Clive asked a few questions, and they were answered grudgingly, with a subdued ferocity, as if the time demanded were so much lost.

"How much do we earn a day? Say one and nine.—Yus; and all of us works. Do we all sleep here? Where the blazes do yer think we sleep?—Is that child ill? Yus; mother thinks"—here the speaker indicated, with a jerk of the head, an old beldame with tangled grey hair and toothless jaws—"that it's scarlet fever. Perhaps it is. I don't know. Doctor? What's the use of a doctor? He'd cart her off to a hospital, and we shouldn't see her no more.—Water? O' course there's water—plenty of water; look at it!"

It was oozing from the cracked and broken ceiling of the room, and dripping into a washing basin.

"Why don't we complain to the landlord? We never see the landlord; we only see the agent. The landlord is a swell at the West End; so we've 'eard. Don't stand in the light, mister; I can't see what I'm doin' of."

Clive surreptitiously laid a modest coin on the corner of the crowded table, and he and Quilton passed out.

"Do you think that the world knows this kind of thing is going on?" asked Clive grimly.

"Of course they do," replied Quilton. "Our novelists have dealt with this kind of thing for a long time past, but it only gives the reader thrills, pleasant thrills, and makes him feel thankful that he doesn't live in Paradise Gardens and have to make matchboxes for a living. Want any more?"

Clive led the way up the rickety and filth-coated stairs to the first floor, and opening a door after several knockings, entered a grimy room, in which sat an idiot boy nursing a baby. Both were encrusted with filth, and the boy had so repulsive and demoniac an expression on his face that Clive for the moment recoiled. He asked a few questions, but the boy was quite incapable of understanding them, much less answering them; and when Clive pressed a coin into his hand his fingers scarcely closed over it—so unaccustomed was the imbecile to the sight and feel of money. Clive went outside sick at heart.

Quilton was not there, and, in search of him, Clive went up another flight of the dirty stairs. As he did so he saw Quilton coming out of a room. Quilton stood, holding the handle of the door which he had closed, his face paler than usual, his thick eyelids completely covering his expressionless eyes. His attitude, almost as of one on guard, his increased pallor, struck Clive.

"What is it?" he asked.

"Nothing," said Quilton, in his slow, impassive tone. "Only a women; and she's asleep; we had better not disturb her."

Clive nodded in assent, and they descended to the less impure and fetid atmosphere outside. Another fight was in progress, a fight in which two of the most prominent residents of Paradise Gardens were engaged. They were stripped to the waist, and blood was flowing freely, to the infinite delight of the crowd which pressed around them.

GRACEFUL COMPETITION.

The Egyptians Are In a Class by Themselves in Courtesy.

The cordial word between master and man, the mixture of unclouded assurance and deference with which the poorest and most unlettered approach the rich and the learned; the dignity on both sides, which permits equality and a happy fellowship, throughout the Egyptian villages visited by Mr. S. H. Leeder, he often comments on in "Veiled Mysteries of Egypt." He tells of the graceful habit of speech among the poor fellaheen, which lends a touch of poetry to lives of toil and drudgery.

It is extremely interesting, and sometimes amusing, to see the ingenuity and persistency with which two friends, especially after a long absence, will sustain a competition in courtesy. They heap one compliment upon the other, in obedience to the command of the Koran.

"Salaam Aleikum."

"Aleikum Salaam."

"With you be peace, and [redacted] their mercy of God, and His bless[redacted] but on

"May your day be blessed.'

"May your day be blessed a[redacted] exer- to nib- yesterday."

"May your prosperity be[redacted] nourish- increased."

And so on. There is somet[redacted] calves in the Arabic language which lends itself to a rhythmic repetition and phrase expansion. Mr. Talbot Kelly, who knows the out-of-the-way people of Egypt so well, from his travels as an artist, speaks of this "Old-World courtesy."

"I am frequently salaamed by a native," he says, "who asks, 'Does your work prosper?'

"'Thanks to Allah,' I reply.

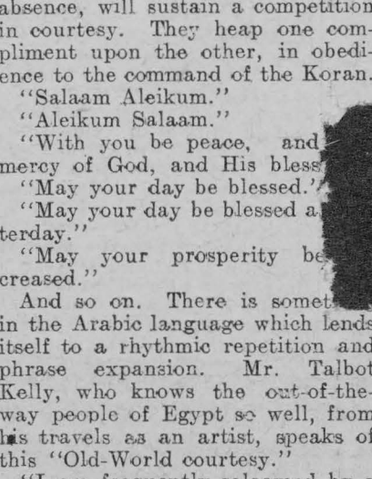
"'God increase your prosperity! Our Lord and the Prophet know the good men.'"

A Linguist.

An old but sturdy Irishman, who had made a reputation as a gang "boss," got a job with a railroad construction company at Port au Prince, Haiti.

One day when the sun was hotter than usual, his gang of Haitians began to shirk, and as the chief engineer rode up on his horse, he heard the Irishman shout:

"Allez!—you sons of guns!—allez!" Then, turning to the engineer, he said, "I curse the day I iver learned their language."



UNANSWERABLE.

"Mother, do doors talk?"

"No, dear. Why do you ask?"

"Well, I heard you tell Mary to answer the door."

On the Farm

Hand Feeding for Small Calves.

If we start a calf out right in the first year of its life, it will ever be a profitable animal; but if we do not give him a fair, good start he will, at best, be a worthless scrub, consuming much more feed than he will ever pay for, writes Mr. Edward C. Glitzke.

It is much more profitable for the farmer to put flesh on a young calf than it is to half-feed him when he is young and expect to have him make all the gain when he is fitted for the market.

Nature never intended the calf to be raised by hand, and we must understand the calf's physical makeup quite well if we wish to succeed by hand feeding.

The calf is not made to consume coarse feed when it is young—in fact, it takes several weeks to get acquainted with grain. The only nourishment that a young calf takes is milk, and if this does not contain the necessary food elements the calf will suffer.

Where the calf is hand fed it is only natural to suppose that it receives skimmed milk, because the cream is the one object for which the cow is milked.

Now, in taking away the cream, we are taking away a very important food element—fat. But one need not hesitate to take this fat if it be supplied in another and cheaper form.

For a very young calf the only desirable substitute is linseed meal. This should be boiled, or rather, only scalded, in hot water and mixed with the milk as a kind of gruel for the calf.

It should be fed in such quantities as the size of the calf may require. Be sure you get the old process ground oil-cake. This differs from the new process in the fact that in the former the oil is pressed from the seed by hydraulic pressure, and, of course, a great amount of the oil remains in the meal.

The new process is a product that is left after crushing the seed and washing the oil out by a chemical known as naphtha. This is practically of very little value as feed and should be avoided.

Where any number of calves are to be raised by hand it is best to prepare a set of movable stanchions. These are quickly made from one by four-inch lumber, and where they are movable they can be changed from place to place to suit the convenience of the feeder.

After the calves are in the stanchions it is an easy matter to dish out a quantity of milk to each individual without continually being pestered by the others.

After they all have their milk they should be provided with finely ground cornmeal in troughs or boxes, they will soon form a habit of taking their chop after each meal and forget about the awful ping period in their growth. A calf that is once stunted never amounts to much except as a food consumer.

The Woodlot.

A good income may be obtained from a farm woodlot if it is properly handled. The main thing is to make it better all the time by eliminating the less valuable trees and improving the conditions so the other tres may make a better growth. Trees like elms ought always to be cut instead of trees like oak and walnut when they will serve the purpose equally well. Crooked trees make just as good firewood as straight trees. Grape vines and all similar pests injure the growth of the trees materially and it will pay big to cut them. Good management pays in woodlots.

Save the Manure.

In promptly handling barnyard manure, the farmers can save or lose hundreds of dollars annually. A manure heap is a hotbed of bacterial activities. Some of the nitrogen is formed into ammonia and passes into the air; this is a clear loss. Some is transformed into nitrates which are soluble. These are washed out by rains and sink into the soil, or run off into the ditch; this also is a direct loss. Some is formed by bacteria into nitrates and these nitrates attacked by another species of bacteria which change into nitrogen, which passes into the air and is lost.

SALT AND GOOD LOOKS.

German Physician Advises Its Use to Whiten Skin.

According to a German physician, salt taken with food has a whitening effect on the skin. This is accounted for by the fact that it is a compound containing the powerful bleaching agent, chlorine. At any rate, it is undoubted that white people eat much more common salt than dark races.

Fruit, on the other hand, darkens the skin, because it contains salts of manganese.

Besides whitening the skin it is probable that abundance of salt in the diet makes the face and the whole body plump. When a person eats salt freely the result is that the blood, skin, muscles, etc., retain a great quantity of fluid. Hence the effect on the face would be to make it full and rounded.

But it should be eaten with judgment and moderation. If a young girl eats a large quantity of salt and makes her face plump then the skin is stretched and, as she grows older and drier, wrinkles appear. But if she uses a saltless diet while young, then when the wrinkles come she should be able to disperse them by adding salt to her diet.

So far as observation goes salt has the virtue of preserving the health of the skin and preventing eruptions. But only when used in moderation is it of real service, and people with weak hearts or kidneys, or who have a tendency to dropsy, are better without any or with the smallest possible quantity.

Ready to Quit.

Pat had been at work for three days digging a well, and as the foreman wanted it finished within the week he had promised Pat another man to help him. It was getting on to 11 o'clock and Towser, the foreman's bulldog, was looking over the edge of the pit, when Pat said to himself, "I'll have a smoke." He had filled his pipe and was about to light it, when he glanced up and beheld Towser's handsome features.

Slowly moving his pipe from his mouth, he said, "Be-e-gorra, Oi've wor-rked wid Germans and Hengarians, and Oi've worked with Ooitalians, but if a man wid a face like that comes down to work beside me Oi gets up."

You would probably be surprised if you knew how much good has come out of your mistakes.

When the girl yawns it's the young man's cue to get into the home stretch.

WOMEN NEED A SAFE TONIC

And There Is Nothing Better Than Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Toning Up the Blood

It is said that woman's work is never done, and that it is a fact that whether in society or in the home her life is filled with more cares and more worries than falls to the lot of man. For this reason women are compelled regretfully to watch the growing pallor of their cheeks, the coming of wrinkles and the thinness that becomes more distressing every day. Every woman knows that ill-health and worry is a fatal enemy to beauty, and that good health gives the plainest face an enduring attractiveness.

What women fail to realize is the fact that if the blood supply is kept rich and pure, the day of the coming of wrinkles and pallor, dull eyes and sharp headaches, is immeasurably postponed. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are literally worth their weight in gold to growing girls and women of mature years. They fill the veins with the rich, red blood that brings brightness to the eye, the glow of health to sallow cheeks, and charms away the headaches and backaches, that render the lives of so many women constantly miserable.

Mrs. William Jones, Crow Lake, Ont., says: "I feel that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life. I was so badly run down that I could hardly drag myself around. I was so bloodless that I was as pale as a sheet, and you could almost see through my hands. In fact the doctor told me my blood had all turned to water. I was taking medicine constantly, but without benefit. My mother had so much faith in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that she bought me two boxes and urged me to take them. How thankful I am that I followed her advice. Before these were gone I began to feel better, and I continued using the Pills until I had taken five more boxes when I was again enjoying the blessing of perfect health, with a good color in my face, a good appetite, and I feel sure a new lease of life. I will always, you may be sure, be a warm friend of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

If you are weak or ailing begin to cure yourself to-day with the rich red blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make. If you do not find the Pills at your dealer's send 50 cents for a box or $2.50 for six boxes to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and they will be sent you by mail, post paid.

FORTUNATE YOUTHS.

Little Heirs to Great Estates on the British Isles.

Who is the luckiest youngster in the kingdom? Examination of the peerage reveals many interesting cases of boys of tender years, who will one day inherit vast riches, estates, and great family honors, the most fortunate, perhaps, being the five-year-old Earl of Arundel and Surrey, the son of the Duke of Norfolk, who is heir to both his father's and mother's estates. The Duke of Norfolk owns 50,000 acres in some of the fairest English counties, his rent roll exceeding a quarter of a million a year, while the Duchess of Norfolk—Baroness Herries in her own right—owns 18,900 acres, says London Tit-Bits.

The Duke is one of London's great land-owners, owning a considerable slice of the south-east side of the Strand, and, according to a competent authority, the rent roll of this land a couple of decades ago was $260,000. New buildings in Norfolk and Surrey Streets have immeasurably augmented the rent roll, which has probably increased a great deal more.

A year previous to the birth of the Earl of Arundel and Surrey a son was born to the Marquis of Bute, "the uncrowned King of Cardiff," as he has been called, whose father left the enormous fortune of $30,000,000. His son and heir, the Earl of Dumfries, a bright little youngster of six years of age, will inherit vast estates, which cover 117,000 acres, in addition to many titles. Lord Bute is the wealthiest peer in Scotland, although he does not possess quite so many acres as the Earl of Dalhousie, who came into the title, an income of over $250,000 a year and about 138,000 acres of land, when a boy of nine. His son and heir is Lord Ramsey, who was born in 1904.

Two more instances of vast fortunes which will descend to lucky youngsters, not only from their fathers, but also from their mothers, are afforded by the cases of the Marquis of Blandford, son of the Duke of Marlborough, who is now sixteen years of age, and Viscount Mandeville, son of the Duke of Manchester, who was born eleven years ago. The Duke of Manchester owns some 70,000 acres of land, and is also possessor of four country residences, two in England and two in Ireland. His wife, Miss Helena Zimmerman, daughter of an American railway magnate, whom he married in 1900, brought much wealth to the Manchester family. With two exceptions the Duke of Marlborough is the smallest of our ducal land-owners. He possesses about 26,500 acres of land, the revenue being given at $180,000.

Quite a number of heirs to large estates were born in 1894, the same year as the Prince of Wales, and such names as Lord Whitchester, grandson and heir, after his father, to the Dukedom of Buccleuch and Queensberry, occur to one readily, says Ladies' Field. The Duke is easily the biggest landlord in this country. He owns 460,000 acres, mostly in Scotland, and much of it is barren land. The Earl of Hillsborough, born in 1894, son of the Marquis of Downshire, will inherit some day 120,000 acres. A great many acres of his future property are in Ireland and some in Berkshire.

Among the most illustrious names of heirs born in 1895 is that of the Marquis of Devonshire. His inheritance will number some of the best known estates in the country. The acreage the duke owns is 198,572, the annual value of which is $903,750.

RENOVATING BUCKINGHAM.

Rushing Work on the King's London Residence.

Buckingham Palace is at last undergoing a thorough renovation externally. For the next three months 150 men in eight-hour shifts will be at work day and night without a break reconstructing the front in white Portland stone. Powerful electric lights will be used at night. All the stones to be used have been prepared and numbered to save time.

During the progress of the renovation special precautions will be taken to guard the treasure vaults in the basement, the value of the contents of which is almost fabulous. They comprise the vast accumulations of jewels, armor, pictures, statuary, furniture and objets d'art which have come into the possession of the royal family in the last two centuries. There is no accommodation for these treasures in the royal residences.

The largest of the three vaults measures 300 feet by 260 feet. It is used for the storage of furniture and pictures. The smaller, which is lined with steel throughout, is used as a jewel room. Its contents are almost priceless. It contains more than 6,000 gold ornaments, weighing considerably more than a ton. Many individual items would fetch thousands of pounds in the open market. Most of these jewels are gifts made to Queen Victoria by other sovereigns.

UNSIGHTLY PIMPLES CAME ON FACE

Sores Spread Until Face Was Covered. So Itchy Could Not Resist Scratching. Cured Entirely in About Two Weeks by Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

Clachan, Ontario.—"My trouble started with sores breaking out on the face. They came as pimples and were unsightly. These sores seemed to keep spreading until my face was covered. They were so itchy that at times I could not resist scratching them. After trying two or three different salves which did not stop the sores breaking out, I tried a cake of Cuticura Soap also Cuticura Ointment. I found that they cured me entirely of the sores in about two weeks." (Signed) Fred E. Meyer, Feb. 12, 1912.

LEGS BURNED AND ITCHED

Souris West, P. E. Island.—"My little girl, aged four years, was troubled with a painful rash on her legs. It began in a dry rash very hot and itchy and after a few days it looked like little pimples with a white top on them. Her legs burned and itched very much and she was very restless and was also cross and fretful. She used to scratch and make sores when I was not watching her. I had to leave her stockings off her as they would irritate her legs. I used to bathe her legs with warm water and use the Cuticura Soap freely, then dry her legs and rub on the Cuticura Ointment and she was cured in one week." (Signed) Mrs. P. J. Mullally, Aug. 1, 1912.

MAY BE ONLY RUMOR.

Will Prince Arthur Be the Next Governor-General?

Everybody is speculating as to whether the rumor that Prince Arthur of Connaught will succeed the Duke of Connaught as Governor-General of Canada, is founded on fact. One society woman, whose position at the British court entitles her words to some respect, states that without doubt he will be the next official occupant of Rideau Hall. The various diplomatic missions which Prince Arthur has undertaken to almost every country in Europe, on behalf of the late King Edward, as well as King George, have revealed in him high qualities of tact and diplomacy. Like his father, the Prince is a keen soldier, and is loved by the officers and men in his regiment. In society he is an equally popular figure.

Between the Prince and his future wife there is a sharp contrast in mode of life. Few princesses have led so quiet a life as the Duchess of Fife. London society scarcely knows her. Both her own and the tastes of her mother have dictated this course. She has led the quiet home life which her parents preferred, and has been the constant companion of her mother, the Princess Royal, and of her younger sister, Princess Maud. Among the few young people admitted to her intimacy, the Princess is very much liked; she is remarkably well read, an expert with a rod, and fond of country life and all outdoor pursuits.

When the Princess Royal is in residence in London, a Highland piper, clad in his kilt of Duff tartan, and with the sprig of boxwood in his glengarry which adorns the bonnets of the Clan MacDuff, is always on duty. At Mar Lodge in Scotland, a great deal of Highland state is always observed, and every year, under the auspices of the Braemar Highland Society, a peaceful "gathering of the Clans" takes place, known as the Braemar Gathering, when the Duff and Farquharson men and the Balmoral Highlanders march on the ground with tartans flying to the strains of the bagpipes, and bearing such obsolete weapons as pikes and battle-axes.

FRENCH RED TAPE.

Cat's Allowance Continues Though Cat Is Dead 12 Years.

About twelve years ago the Paris prefecture of police had a pet, a tortoiseshell cat named Mou.

Poor Mou died in April, 1901, but its memory is still kept fresh in a way for which the prefect has every reason to be thankful. An allowance of $72.50 per annum was made from the police treasury for Mou's keep and the entry figured in the books of the department. The entry still appears every year and the prefect still draws the allowance of $72.50, although the vacant place left by Mou's death has not been filled.

Before the item can be struck out of the budget it would be necessary to have the cat's death legally certified by a notary or by a State document, and as cats have no civil status the difficulty is got over by continuing the allowance.

One for Tobacco.

Tobacco is exceedingly efficacious in the killing of microbes, according to Messrs. Langlais and Sartory, two French experts, who state their experiments have shown that in five minutes tobacco smoke will kill almost all the microbes in the saliva, thus nearly completely sterilizing the mouth. One of the experiments carried out by MM. Langlais and Sartory was to place several cigars in water containing many million cholera microbes to the square inch. The tobacco sterilized and destroyed the microbes in twenty-four hours.

Lead to Strange Results.

Testator's requests often lead to strange results. A Scotchman, Thos. Thorp, left all his worldly goods to his two nephews on condition that they erect a monument to his memory with at least one verse inscribed thereon. These careful brothers searched long and ardently for a verse at once brief and apt, but they found that the poets were inclined to run to words. They asked the aid of the monumental mason, who suggested that the following couplet would admirably meet the case:—

Here lies the corp
Of Thomas Thorp.

The brothers thought this apt, but wordy. The mason cogitated long and deep, and, to the satisfaction of everyone, the verse found upon the stone was:—

Thorp's
Corpse.

CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION.

We learn from a reliable source that the Auto-Strop Safety Razor Co., Ltd., of Toronto, who are well-known throughout the world as manufacturers of the Self-Stropping Auto-Strop Razor, have arranged a novel and attractive method of advertising which will be demonstrated at their booth in the Manufacturers' Building, at the Canadian National Exhibition

This demonstration will be conducted as follows: Each visitor to the Booth will be presented with a numbered badge, which will be issued in duplicate. By finding the person bearing the duplicate number and presenting same to the Auto-Strop Booth each holder will be given a $5.00 Auto-Strop Safety Razor free of charge.

It is safe to say that this Booth will prove one of the most attractive at the Exhibition.

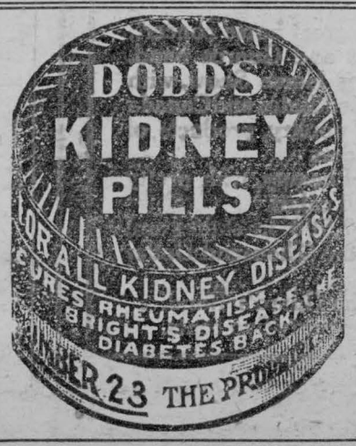
The Difference.

Some men spend their time thinking up reasons why others fail; the wise men devote all their time to thinking up ways by which they can succeed.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

True and Brave Women.

To be able to look cheerfully and hopefully through clouds of poverty and distress is an accomplishment bestowed by nature upon every true and brave woman; and, no matter how poor or humble her home may be, the magic power of smiles can brighten its shadows and lighten its cares. Upon the troubled mind of a feeling husband a wife's smile falls like a sunbeam on a flower. And how much more beautiful it makes the face that wears it than a frown! When a wife and mother, forgetting sorrows and hardships, smiles away her tears there is a loveliness in the act that speaks to a man's heart more eloquently than words.



LAW SUITS IN ENGLAND.

Only One Man in Twenty-five Resorts to the Courts.

Litigation is not keeping pace with population in England, according to a special report on the subject by the Government. The number of lawsuits has declined until now only one Englishman in more than twenty-five resorts to the courts. The exact proportion being 3,959 suits per 100,000 of population. In England there is one judge to every 1,130,000 persons. But divorce suits are on the increase, the applications by husbands exceeding those by wives in the proportion of five to four. One marriage in every 250 now ends in divorce, separation or annulment. The average duration of a marriage that ends in the divorce court is eleven and a half years. In 33 per cent. the duration was five to ten years, and in 39 per cent. it was ten to twenty years; 36 per cent of the couples divorced were childless. Divorce is almost unknown in some of the agricultural counties, there having been in the year only 11 in Dorset, with a population of 223,000; only 9 in Wilts, with a population of 287,000, and but 1 in Hereford, with a population of 114,000. Nottinghamshire County, population 604,000, had 183 divorces, and Lancashire County, 4,768,000 population, had 1,287.

Identified by Finger Prints

(Kingston Standard)

The officials at the Portsmouth Penitentiary have sent to Col. A. P. Sherwood, Commissioner of Dominion Police at Ottawa, a collection of finger impressions from the Portsmouth penitentiary, among which were those of the man who claimed he was Arthur B. Baker, who was sentenced at Ottawa, August 15th, to two years' imprisonment for housebreaking and theft.

His finger prints prove him to have been sentenced at Ottawa, August 15th, and at St. Francis, Que., March 5, 1908, to three years in St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary for housebreaking.

Booth's Timber Mill at Ottawa Destroyed by Fire

Ottawa, Sept. 7. — Three hundred men are thrown out of work as the result of a fire in the timber mill of the J. R. Booth industries here today. Damage to the extent of $100,000 was caused by the blaze, the origin of which is a mystery. The mill destroyed was rebuilt only three years ago, new machinery being installed at the time. Splendid work by the firemen prevented the flames spreading to the other buildings owned by the same firm.

Prominent People Proud To Testify For "Fruit-a-tives"

MR. TIMOTHY McGRATH

130 ATLANTIC AVE., MONTREAL, MARCH 1st, 1912.

"For years, I suffered from Rheumatism, being unable to work for weeks at a time and spent hundreds of dollars on doctor's medicines, besides receiving treatment at Notre Dame Hospital where I was informed that I was incurable. I was discouraged when a friend advised me to try "Fruit-a-tives". After using three packages, I felt relieved and continued until I had used five packages when a complete cure was the result after years of doctoring failed. I consider "Fruit-a-tives" a wonderful remedy. You are at liberty to use this testimonial to prove to others the good that "Fruit-a-tives" has done me"

The Virtue of the Lead Packet

The last process tea undergoes at the gardens is firing, to exhaust all moisture, as moisture is fatal to quality. The tea is then much drier than the air. It is then quickly placed in the airtight lead packets, or lead lined chests which are soldered up and made airtight.

When chests of tea come into the possession of some dealers, they, unthinkingly, cut the lead open and leave the tea exposed to the moist air for weeks, while all the time, it is fast decaying. Remember, tea, however preserved, decays with age, but it will lose more in a week exposed to the air, than in six months in a lead packet.

That is why 'Salada' tea is sold only in sealed lead packets; its native purity and garden freshness are perfectly preserved.

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. I wrote them and got THE NEW METHOD TREATMENT. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

Household

Selected Recipes.

Eggless Cake.—Cream together one cup sugar and one-half cup butter. Add one cup sour milk, one cup dry cocoa, one even teaspoon soda dissolved in hot water, pinch of salt and flavoring. Mix with enough sifted flour to make stiff batter. To make a good spiced cake use brown sugar instead of white, leave out the cocoa, add to the flour a half cup or more of seeded raisins or currants and flavor with teaspoon each of ground cinnamon and allspice. Beat very thoroughly.

Johnny Cake.—One cup flour, one-half cup corn meal, one tablespoon sugar, one teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon baking powder, one tablespoon butter or lard. Sift all together, then add one and one-fourth cups sour milk, beat until smooth, pour into a greased pan and bake for about twenty minutes in a quick oven.

Soft Gingerbread.—One-half cup butter creamed, one cup brown sugar, two eggs, one cup molasses, one cup sour milk, three cups flour, one teaspoon soda dissolved in milk, one teaspoon ginger, one teaspoon cinnamon. Bake in a moderate oven. This will make two.

Sour Milk Griddle Cakes.—One egg, well beaten, one cup sour milk, half teaspoon soda dissolved in a little of the milk, half teaspoon salt, and flour to make into medium thick batter. Beat thoroughly and cook on hot greased griddle.

Brown Bread.—Two cups sour milk, two-thirds of a cup dark brown sugar, two level teaspoons soda, pinch of salt, three cups graham flour. Bake one hour.

Cottage Cheese.—When curd has separated from whey in souring, turn the curd into a coarse cotton bag and let drain in a cool place for twenty-four hours, or until free from whey. Add salt and sweet cream to taste, and shape into small balls. Process may be hastened by heating thick, sour or clabbered milk first, but the cheese is tougher.

Cheese Cakes.—Nice to eat with stewed fruit or preserves. One and one-half cups cottage cheese, one-third cup sugar, two tablespoons cream, grated rind and juice of one lemon, three eggs, one-half cup juice of one lemon, three eggs, one-half cup currants and citron, one-fourth cup sherry wine, one tablespoon melted butter. Press cheese through colander or potato ricer. Add sugar, cream melted mutter, juice and rind of lemon, eggs beaten light, the wine and fruit cut into small bits. (Both wine and fruit may be omitted.) Line small tins with pie crust, fill with this mixture and bake about fifteen minutes or longer if necessary. When done sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve while warm.

Frosted Peaches.—Select some peaches that are not too ripe, and dip them one at a time in water that has just boiled, so that the skin may be easily removed. Then cook the peaches in a syrup until they are soft to the fingers. Strain them and plunge them into the whites of eggs beaten to snow, roll them in powdered sugar, and leave them for a few minutes in a gentle oven. Hash some macaroons and angeliques, and on removing the peaches from the oven roll them in this hash.

Old-fashioned Almond Rings.—Roll one-half pound of puff paste very thin, and cut round of puff paste cutter. From each cut out with biscuit-smaller one from the round cut a the ring will be about an inch wide. Beat the whites of six eggs to a stiff froth; add one-half pound of pulverized sugar, one-half pound of dish in boiling water, and stir with the meringue is thick. Slice one-half pound of blanched almonds very thin. Stir them into the meringue. Cool. Then with a silver knife place this mixture on the rings. Bake at the temperature proper for cake. These almond rings will keep fresh for several weeks.

Scotch Short Bread.—Mix together one pound of flour and one-half pound of butter; stir in one-quarter pound of sugar, and the yolk of one egg. Work with the hands until stiff; cut in two portions. Sugar the board instead of flouring it, and mold the dough, pinching the edge like pastry; prick with a fork to prevent its rising in blisters. Mark it before baking, and break it when serving. Put on a tin or in a round tin, ungreased, and bake a long time in a very slow oven. It is of a fawn color when done, and is soft until cold. It is improved by putting the dough into a cool place for an hour before baking.

Spinach Pats.—Finely crumb the inside of one-half of a loaf of stale bread; soak the crumbs in water, and squeeze them dry. Cut the crust into small squares, and fry them to a golden brown in hot butter or oil. To the bread-crumbs add a small onion, cooked soft in butter and chopped fine, one-half of a peck of spinach, picked over, washed, and chopped, a teaspoonful of whole-wheat meal, a pinch of salt, and the fried crusts. To bind the mixture, add two eggs; form it into small pats. Dust them with bread-crumbs, cracker-crumbs, or fine flour, and fry to a golden brown on both sides in a flat frying-pan. The pats are particularly good served with baked ham.

Baked Eggplant.—Cut in halves a medium-sized eggplant, from stem to tip, leaving the half-stem in place. Put the two halves in boiling water for about five minutes, until the meat can be readily scooped from the skin. Chop this meat fine, and add to it one gill of (raw) pine-nut or one pint of (boiled and chopped) chestnuts, one-half pound of chopped boiled chicken (or any kind of meat preferred), one-half pint of boiled rice, one tablespoonful of chopped celery, one large onion, one large tomato, one-half green, sweet pepper (all chopped), salt to taste, and add four tablespoonfuls of olive oil, and two eggs (well beaten). Mix these ingredients thoroughly, replace in the egg plant skins or shells, and bake one hour in a slow oven, preferably in a dish in which the vegetable can be also served, as removing it from the baking dish is likely to spoil its appearance.

Household Hints.

Use boiling water for tea stains.

Use salt and lemon juice on ink stains.

Mud stains should be soaked in kerosene.

Rub grass stains with molasses and wash.

Turpentine or benzine will remove paint stains.

Scorch stains, remove by exposing to sunshine.

Tar stains should be soaked in warm milk and salt.

To remove acid stains use ammonia or chloroform.

Perspiration stains will be removed only by boiling.

Fruit stains should be soaked in milk or use oxalic acid.

Chocolate stains, soak in kerosene and wash in cold water.

Blood stains should be soaked when fresh, in cold water.

Put dry salt on fresh wine stains and warm milk on old ones.

Coffee stains should be treated with boiling water when fresh.

Tops of old shoes, cut into shape and covered, make excellent iron holders.

A cut lemon will remove the mark made by striking matches on white paint.

Never allow a mirror to hang in the sunlight, or the backing will become clouded.

Equal parts of beeswax and turpentine rubbed on dull floors will brighten them.

Cook carrots and beets whole, then skin and slice.

Avoid cooking vegetables in an iron kettle.

Save a ham bone to cook with dried peas for pea soup, and thus add to the flavor of the dish.

A teaspoonful of ammonia mixed with half a cupful of cold tea is said to be excellent for cleaning black felt hats or men's black coats. Apply with a bit of cloth.

Some housewives believe that if the pitcher containing milk or cream is put into a pan of water it will be more likely to keep sweet during an electric storm.

A pinch of soda added to a berry pie before the upper crust is put on will keep it from running over.

Pieces of wood soaked in cedar oil and laid in drawers of an ordinary chest, closet or bureau will impart all the virtues of the most costly cedar chest.

Stains from tinware, agate or crockery may be removed by rubbing with a damp cloth and sifted wood ashes.

When the nickel chafing dish becomes dull, wipe it off with a soft cloth moistened with ammonia, and then polish with another soft rag.

Sew a small button to the corner of a dish towel. This will prevent the necessity of getting a knife to scrape a dish or plate.

To prevent custard dishes or cups from cracking when pouring boiled custard into them, place the dish or cloth on a damp cloth.

If hot vinegar is used instead of cold when making meat sauce, it will greatly improve the flavor and give the sauce a better color.

White enameled furniture can be cleaned by dissolving one tablespoonful of baking soda in one pint of warm water. Saturate a soft cloth and wash the furniture.

A quantity of quicklime put into a damp cupboard for a few days will absorb the dampness.

When the hot-water bag starts to leak do not throw it away, but heat clean white sand and put it into the bag. The sand is better than water. It retains the heat longer.

The best way to cook an egg is to do it one's self at the breakfast table. Take a quart of boiling water and carefully drop the egg in. At the end of five or six minutes it will be beautifully cooked.

A delicious hot weather sandwich is made of whole wheat bread, stale, buttered with unsalted butter, and spread with chopped olives and walnuts. Raisins also make a good filling.

Spiced jelly for decorating meat dishes is made with gelatine—a boxful soaked in a cup of consomme. Let the liquid simmer and add a cupful of tarragon vinegar, two tablespoonfuls of fruit juice, any kind, and two of lemon juice, and a teaspoonful of salt. Cook five minutes, strain and chill.

Swiss eggs are a good luncheon dish for summer. Butter a pie dish, cover the bottom with slices of cheese, break the eggs over the cheese and sprinkle with bread-crumbs. Bake until done.

NEW SLEEPING SICKNESS.

British Savant Describes Fatal Disease.

Surgeon-General Sir David Bruce, head of the Sleeping Sickness Commission, who was sent to Central Africa nearly two years ago, reports that the work will not be completed for another year.

The object of the commission was to study the relationship of the African fauna to the spread of sleeping sickness in that continent. The work has been carried on in a wild and remote region about fifty miles from the shores of Lake Nyassa, where the members of the commission lived and worked in mosquito proof huts. Sir David Bruce finds that the so-called sleeping sickness in Nyassaland is not the same as that of Uganda or the West Coast, although it belongs to the same category. It is more rapid and even more fatal. There has been no case of recovery.

It is now established beyond doubt that the disease is carried by glossina morsitans, a fly which is widely spread over the whole of Africa.

The disease in Nyasaland and north and northeastern Rhodesia has been given the name of sleeping sickness, but the work of the commission went to show that it was the old tetse fly disease of South African hunters, which was formerly supposed only to attack animals, but has now spread to man. Sir David Bruce does not believe that there is any danger of the disease spreading. He is of the opinion that it has probably been in these areas from time immemorial, and that it will never assume the terrible proportions of the sleeping sickness of the Congo or Uganda.

BRIDAL FINERY IN SUMATRA.

The Dress and Ornaments Are Heavy With Gold.

Brides all over the world like to make the best display possible on their wedding day, and the bridal attire of the various countries is invariably both costly and beautiful. For sheer gorgeousness, however, says a writer in the Wide World, it would be hard to rival the wedding finery of the belles of the island of Sumatra. The dress is woven entirely of gold thread, and its weight is so great that the wearer can hardly move; even standing up requires a distinct effort. Apart from this shimmering, golden garment, the bride is loaded down with gold ornaments, rings, bangles, earrings, pendants, girdles, and necklaces, and sundry ornamental purses of the same metal. The huge ornaments hanging on chains round her neck are hollow, but all the smaller charms are of solid native gold, most massively wrought. One might almost think that the natives, having heard something about a good wife being worth her weight in gold, had set out to prove the fact by loading their quaint little brides with the actual equivalent of their weight in the precious metal.

SUSPEND LIFE FOR MONTHS.

Professor Bakhmetileff Makes a Bold Assertion.

Professor Bakhmetileff, of Moscow, announces that he has been experimenting to determine the source of life and has obtained some remarkable results along a collateral line, the suspension of life, by the use of a substance which he calls "anabiose."

He has been a specialist for seventeen years in the study of hibernation, and the results of cold upon animals, particularly bears, and his discoveries are in this field.

He has progressed to a point, he says, where he can place an entire herd of cattle in a state of suspended animation during the severe Russian winter, thereby saving the cost of fodder, shelter and attendance, and revive them in the spring in good condition.

The treatment, which he has applied successfully to several different kinds of animals, reduces them to total unconsciousness; respiration and digestion cease completely. They are kept for months at a uniform temperature, regulated by a thermometer, and when they are brought into light, humidity and warm they recover consciousness, apparently not weakened by their experience.

Professor Bakmetieff has not yet been able to apply "anabiose" to human beings to determine if healthy persons could be transferred to complete suspended animation and then restored at will to their previous health; but he is in negotiation with the prison department to obtain volunteers among condemned men who will submit themselves to the treatment.

The other day he brought back to full life a large sturgeon which he had kept under "anaboise" since winter without any kind of nourishment and in complete stillness. It proved to be perfectly healthy, with the roe in fine condition, which would not be the case with a fish kept frozen.

What It Was.

The small boy was the first to answer the telephone. The person on the other end of the wire was a friend of his mother, and the following conversation ensued:—"Is this Mrs. Blank's residence?" "No, ma'am, it's Mrs. Blank's little boy."

Speed and Endurance.

"Money went a whole lot further in the old days than it does now," said the Old Fogy.

"That's because it didn't go so fast," explained the Wise Guy.

The Difference.

He stood beside the altar,
And his face was grave and sad;
She stood beside the altar,
With a smile both sweet and glad.

Once is Enough.

Proh—They say lightning never strikes twice in the same place.

Kohn—Well, what's the use?

No man is happy unless he thinks he is.

But there is little marrow in the bone of contention.

Lots of failures can be traced to the belief that other people are not quite as smart as we are.

But why this awful difference
Between the man and maid?
Her clothes were made to order
While his were ready-made.

AIR-SHIP IN REAL EARNEST.

Graphic Account of Its Work in the Turco-Italian War.

An interesting comment on the progress of aviation and the influence it is exerting on modern methods of warfare is furnished by an account of the work of a dirigible in the Turco-Italian War, published in the Stampa of Turin.

The dirigible left its hangar at six in the morning, with the commander and two pilots. The object was to carry out an offensive reconnaissance. Rising over the sea to the height of one thousand meters, the balloon turned eastward toward Koefia, and passed over that oasis. The crew could see that, for the moment, at least, there were none gible turned south toward Sidi Muffa, in the neighborhood of which were scattered the tents of the Turk and Arab camp.

No sooner had it reached the edge of the encampment than numerous little puffs of white smoke were observed on the ground beneath, and the unmistakable crackle of rifle fire made itself heard above the roar of the air-ship's motor. The Turks and Arabs had begun a violent fusillade against the dirigible, which promptly answered by dropping its first bomb. A flash of fire and a dense cloud of smoke rose from the middle of a group of tents, and men were seen to rush out and away from them.

The Turks, realizing the futility of their rifle-fire, brought their artillery into action. From the edge of the sand-dunes came two flashes, soon followed by others. Evidently the Turks had prepared the artillery beforehand for this purpose, for the shells took an almost vertical line of flight. The Turks had posted their guns on the slope of the sand-hills, and buried the tail of the carriage deep in the sand in order to prevent the recoil from overturning the gun. In spite of all the preparations, however, the aim of the gunners was wild.

The dirigible, on the other hand, let fall other bombs, which seemed to be as effective as the first. The aeronauts, moreover, while carrying on this aerial combat, which lasted almost an hour, accomplished also the chief end of their voyage—an exact reconnaissance of the enemy's camp. They took numerous photographs, which, when put together in proper order, gave a perfect plan of the position. The dirigible returned to its hangar at eight o'clock; it had been two hours in the air.

INVENTING A GAME.

A Magpie and White-eared Flycatcher Have Some Fun.

A young magpie came into the possession of Mr. E. J. Banfield, who, in his book, "My Tropic Isle," gives an interesting account of the bird's accomplishments. It went in and out of the kitchen at will, and if by chance food was not spread out at the accustomed place, it protested loudly, and always effectively.

The bird spent many hours endeavoring to sing. No cultured relative was present to teach the notes of its kind, so that in default it learned the complete vocabulary of the domestic poultry, besides the more familiar calls and exclamations of its mistress.

A white-eared flycatcher took up its abode near the house, and the magpie, after a decent lapse of time, admitted the stranger to its companionship. The wild, larderless bird, however, had little time to play. All its wits and energies were devoted to the serious business of life. It knew none of the games that the magpie invented except one—a kind of aerial "peep-bo," to which the more intelligent bird lured it by means of a prize.

The magpie found a moth, big of abdomen, fat and brown, a tempting morsel to any insectivorous bird. Envious of the dainty, the wagtail fluttered and skipped about the magpie with cheerful chatter; but the fluttering moth, daintily held by the extremity of its body, was alternately presented and denied. While they danced about a bush, the magpie tantalizingly held the moth for acceptance and hopped off as the wagtail was about to snatch it. To the tame bird, fortified by the knowledge that its meals were provided, it was all fun. To the hungry wild one, the moth dangling temptingly before it and whipped disappointingly away, it was a game equally sincere, but of varied interest. The one assumed a whimsical air, chuckling in encouraging tones; the other took it all in earnest.

At last, unable to restrain an exclamation of delight, the magpie unwarily slackened its hold, and the moth fluttered off, to be snapped up on the instant by the wild bird, and gulped without ceremony.

After this the game was frequently played, but the magpie had invariably to make it worth the while of the wagtail by offering a prize in the shape of some tit-bit.

A succesful man is not necessarily a cleverer man than the failure. He may merely have worked a little harder.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, AUGUST 31.

Lesson XI.—Israel at Mount Sinai. Exod. Chap. 19. Golden Text, Heb. 12.28.

The narrative intervening between our last lesson and this one includes a number of important events. At Rephidim the people murmured against Moses because of lack of water, which, after Moses's earnest intercession with Jehovah, was miraculously supplied. Then came Israel's war with Amalek, familiar to Bible readers principally because of the incident on the mountain top in which Aaron and Hur supported the hands of Moses while he prayed for Israel's victory. Not long afterward, Jethro, the priest of Midian, Moses's father-in-law, visited the camp of Israel in the wilderness, giving Moses wise counsel concerning the way in which he might best administer the important affairs of his difficult office (chapter 18). Our lesson passage takes up the thread of the story immediately following the departure of Jethro.

Verse 1. In the third month—According to Exod. 12. 1, 2, the departure of Israel from Egypt was commemorated by the inauguration of a new calendar: "This month shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year to you." But the first month of the Jewish calendar corresponded approximately to our month of April, which would fix the time of the year for the events of our lesson as midsummer.

The same day—Three months to a day after their departure out of Egypt.

Wilderness of Sinai—The unhabited district in the immediate vicinity of the mountain. Sinai itself is usually identified with Horeb, and located near the southern point of the peninsula between the Gulfs of Suez and Akabah.

Rephidim—Somewhere in the vicinity of Sinai, perhaps just northwest of the mountain itself.

3. Moses went up unto God—Went up the mountain to be alone in meditation and prayer.

The house of Jacob—Jacob's descendants, the Israelites.

4. Bare you on eagles' wings—A beautiful figure illustrating solicitude of Jehovah for his people. The habits of the parent eagle were not unfamiliar to the desert pilgrims. This king of birds is said to hover round and beneath its young when these make their first attempts to fly, ever ready to support them on expanded wing when they become exhausted.

Brought you unto myself—Separated you from other peoples worshipping other gods.

5, 6. My covenant—From this time forward Israel's relationship to Jehovah is to be a peculiar covenant relationship. Israel becomes Jehovah's own possession, a kingdom of priests and a holy nation. "And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and foreigners shall be your plowmen and vine-dressers. But ye shall be named the priests of Jehovah" (Isa. 61. 5, 6).

Verses 7 to 15 inclusive record the preparations made by Moses and the people for the further manifestation of Jehovah's will toward them, in harmony with Jehovah's announcement to Moses.

16. The voice of a trumpet exceeding loud—Jehovah's summons to the people discernible between the peals of thunder.

17. Out of the camp—And nearer to the mount.

18. Smoked . . . quaked — The whole manifestation was awe-inspiring and overpowering in its effact upon the minds of the people. The language throughout is that of the early prophetic narrative, abounding in expressions in which the actions of Jehovah are brought within the range of human comprehension.

21. Break through unto Jehovah—Approach too near the sacred mountain.

To gaze—Merely for the purpose of satisfying their curiosity.

Mascot Ring for Duchess.

The mascot engagement ring is the latest thing in jewelry. It is said that Prince Arthur has given the Duchess of Fife a delightful old ring, which belonged to the family of the Red Prince, to which house his mother belongs. This jewel has a history. It was given by a forbear of the Duchess to her fiance, a soldier prince, when he was going to the wars. It is in the shape of a nine, within which are nine magnicent diamonds taking the form of an anchor, indicative of faith and trustfulness. For years the mascot ring has been in the possession of the Duchess of Connaught.

Conjugal Amenities.

Knicker—You must take me for a bank, you are always asking for money.

Mrs. Knicker—You must take me for a railroad; you are always thinking I can do with less.

REVENGE RUINED A QUEEN

BECAME A WANDERER AFTER LOVER'S MURDER.

Marquis Was Faithless and Paid Court to Another at Same Time.

Queen Christina of Sweden, only daughter of the great and good Gustavus Adolphus, kept all the gossips of Europe in a ferment for many years. After holding down the throne of her father for four years, she voluntarily abdicated in favor of her cousin, in order that she might travel and enjoy herself. At that period she was young and beautiful and the most learned and accomplished woman of her time, and it was not strange that the "Welcome To Our City" sign was hung out whenever she deigned to visit a burg.

Towards the close of the year 1657 she honored France with her presence, and the palace of Fontainebleau was turned over to her with the compliments of the season. She was attended by a royal retinue of servants, and also by her grand equerry, the Marquis Monaldeschi.

This gentleman, as his name suggests, was an Italian, and for a considerable time had been

The Queen's Favorite.

They were recognized as lovers, and since the Queen had abdicated, it seemed more than possible that they would be married and go housekeeping. The Marquis was extraordinarily handsome and gifted in all the graces and polite mannerisms of the time. He was a charming man, but entirely unscrupulous. When duty took him away from his royal mistress they wrote love letters, just as ordinary people do, and the letters of the Marquis always breathed undying devotion. And, while thus convincing the Queen that he lived for her alone, he was quietly laying siege to a young Roman girl of wealth and beauty.

In his letters to this girl he ridiculed the Queen shamefully, applying contemptuous names to her; and, not satisfied with this baseness, he sent several of the Queen's love letters to her, that she might enjoy a good laugh. But Nemesis was on the false lover's trail.

There was a certain cardinal who had long been jealous of the Marquis, and who was anxious to be the Queen's favorite. The Cardinal had his spies, and soon learned the details of Monaldeschi's treachery. By some means he secured possession of the entire correspondence with the Roman girl and turned the letters over to the Queen. Christina must have had a bad hour when she read those letters in which her love and trust were ridiculed.

"Hand Me The Papers."

On Saturday, November 10, the Marquis was summoned to the Galerie des Cerfs, a long and gloomy apartment of the palace. He entered, bowing and smiling in his accustomed manner. The Queen was there with Father le Bel and three armed strangers. Christina's face was as cold and rigid as marble. As the Marquis advanced, smirking, her glance brought terror to his heart, although he had no inkling of what was in store. Turning to Father le Bel, she said:

"Hand me those papers."

He produced the letters, which had been entrusted to him by the Queen. She in turn handed them to the Marquis.

"Do you recognize these?" she asked.

There was an icy sweat on the brow of the Marquis and his legs trembled under him.

"I have never seen them before," he stammered at last.

"Look again," said the Queen sternly. "Are those not your seals?"

He could say no more. Helpless, speechless, trembling in every limb, he could only look imploringly at the merciless woman. The three men closed around him and drew swords.

"You are a traitor," said the Queen, and turned her back on him. The three armed men drew closer. The Marquis saw that his hour had come. He had been known as a man of courage, but in this extremity he was a picture of abject terror. He seized the Queen's gown and entreated mercy. He wailed and wept and howled. And she looked down at him with unforgiving eyes and lashed him off with her riding whip.

"Father le Bel," she said, "you are a witness that I treat this dog fairly. I give him all the time he needs to justify himself, if he can."

Tried to Apologize.

Hearing these words, the Marquis began a long plea, trying to explain, trying to apologize, trying to convince the Queen that his repentance was sincere. She stood like a statute and listened to it all. When he had said all he could think of, the Queen turned again to the priest, as calm and inexorable as ever.

"Father," she cried, "do what you can for the good of his soul. He has failed to justify himself, and he must die."

The good priest dropped on his knees before her and prayed that she would have mercy.

"I have said the words," answered the Queen, "and no power under Heaven can make me unsay them."

Then she left the room, and Monaldeschi was left with the priest and the three executioners. He groveled on his knees in a sickening way, like Monmouth at the feet of King James, and implored the priest to make one more effort. So the priest went to Christina and begged for the wretched man's life, but she was adamant.

Le Bel returned to the gallery and announced that his errand had been useless.

"Prepare yourself to die!" cried the chief of the executioners, and the Marquis and the priest prayed together. Then the butchery began. The Marquis wore a suit of cail under his clothes and thus turned the swords of the executioners, so that they hacked him over the head and neck, and he dragged himself over the floor like a wounded snake, and Called on God for Mercy.

But there was no mercy for him in heaven or on earth. One of the butchers finally stabbed him in the throat and ended his misery.

At that period murders were not regarded seriously, but even calloused France was indignant over this barbarous crime. The Cardinal Mazarin, whose conscience wasn't at all sensitive, wrote officially to Christina saying, "a crime so atrocious must be considered sufficient excuse for banishing your Majesty from the court and dominions of the King, who, with every honest man, felt horrified at the lawless outrage just committed on the soil of France."

The reply of Queen Christina is one of the finest examples of pure insolence in all the archives of history. It is too long to be reported here, but the following paragraph indicates its sentiment:—

"Understand, all of you, servants and masters, little people and great, that it was my sovereign pleasure to act as I did. I neither owe nor render an account of my actions to any one—least of all to a bully like you."

But she left France in a hurry just the same. Three years later the cousin in whose favor she had abdicated died, and she returned to Sweden with the intention of wearing the crown again. But the brave and honest people of Sweden refused to be governed by a murderess, and she was told that she would be deprived of her revenues if she remained in Sweden. So she became a wanderer on the face of the earth, and died at Rome, a bitter and lonely old woman. She wrote her own epitaph, which is unsurpassed for stern brevity:

"Christina lived 72 years."

HOW TO READ THE MOON.

The First Rule is Not to Believe What it Seems to Say.

Few people can tell at a glance whether the moon is waxing or waning. Here is a whimsical rule to remember by. It is very simple to those who know Latin and is not difficult for those who do not. The first thing is to notice whether the moon is like a D or a C—that it whether the full semi-circular curve is on the right or the left. If the moon shows a D that naturally stands for decresit. "It wanes."

But then comes in the great principle "The moon is always deceitful," and one has to understand the opposite of what the moon says, so that a moon which shows a D is a waxing moon, while a waning moon is like a C.

Those who have no Latin will no doubt look to see whether the moon says it is "decreasing," in which case they will understand that it is waxing, while a waning moon will deny that it is "decreasing."

TO SAVE TROUBLE.

Mabel—"I wonder why they always have a rooster and never a hen on steeples?"

Jack—"I expect it is because it would be difficult to collect the eggs."

Meant Regardless of Cost.

Bess — Something that Jack said last night didn't sound just right.

Tess—What was that?

Bess—I told him if he called me pet names I wouldn't speak, and he replied that he would call me dear at any price.

RETENTION OF THE HEALTH.

Rules for the Preservation of Mind and Body.

Prof. Vincenz Czerny, one of the greatest of the Heidelberg (Germany) surgeons and an authority on cancer, is leaving his post this month, having attained the age of seventy. He has issued a kind of moral testament in the shape of seven injunctions to those who wish to go through life with healthy body and mind.

"1. Look after both body and mind in a rational way; divide the day reasonably between labor and recreation; eat healthy food; observe all rules of cleanliness and live in a dry, sunny and well-aired house.

"2. Work eight hours at your calling, take eight hours for recreation, exercise and self-improvement and eight hours for sleep. One gets best rest when asleep between two hours before and two hours after midnight. In the other eight hours you may count two for the three meals of the day, two for are or reading, two for family intercourse, or for public works, and two hours for some exercise or sport—walking, climbing, riding, rowing, swimming or gymnastics.

"3. Food must be both sustaining and easily digestible. You should not consume more than a pint of food and drink at each of the three meals; anything more than this overloads the stomach. In consequence observe moderation.

"4. You must not be a slave of enjoyment. Alcohol, coffee, tea and tobacco have no nutritive qualities, but through the usages of generations they have become almost necessities and are not easily replaced. They are all poisonous, but through customary use they have lost some of their dangers. By injudicious use of them you will shorten your life.

"5. From childhood up see that you are clean. Have at least a sponge down with cold water every day; twice a day clean the teeth and wash both hands and face. Take a hot bath once a week and see that you change your linen and bed linen regularly. Your rooms must be large, dry and sunny and the bedrooms especially must be large and well aired.

"6. Bring only as many children into the world as you can feed and educate; and,

"7. When ill do not delay to consult a really capable doctor and follow his advice."

THE TORN TICKET.

How a Gentleman Befriended a Lady Traveller.

In an East Coast train a gentleman noticed that the lady opposite seemed ill at ease. She was searching through her bag and her gloves, and then made an investigation of the seat and floor, apparently without success, says the Liverpool Post. "Can I help you in any way?" he inquired after this had been going on for some time. "I can't find it anywhere," she replied; "it's my ticket from London. I've lost it." "Well," he said, "I think I can arrange that for you. He tore off a corner of his own ticket, gave the ticket itself to the lady, and put the fragment in his pocket. On arriving at their destination the lady gave up the ticket and passed through the gate. Later came her fellow-passenger. Him the collector stopped and asked for his ticket. "I gave it you," said the passenger. Thereupon an altercation ensued, the outcome of which was that the stationmaster was called in, and the case was laid before him. "Will your collector kindly go through those tickets and see if he has one from London with the corner missing," demanded the passenger courteously. The ticket was found. "Now," he continued, "see if this piece fits it." It did fit, and the collector was too much surprised to venture any further remonstration on the moment. But there was a twinkle in his eye which showed that he was not without a sense of humor.

WHERE TO EAT AT TORONTO EXHIBITION.

That is the annual problem at the big Toronto Fair, but this year a tasty meal may be had in the large, airy dining rooms of Nasmith's, Limited, situated under the East and West ends of the big Grand Stand, where, with noise and heat and dirt screened out, one may enjoy a well-cooked, full-course meal on the American plan for only fifty cents. For those desiring a more elaborate service, the European Grill, at the extreme west end of the Grand Stand, is recommended, in which one may order according to the dictates of fancy or appetite, and be assured of treatment equal to the best hotel.

The Comfortable Place.

Grandpa—Are you getting along nicely at school, Freddy?

Freddy—Yes, grandpa, I've got the best place in the class.

Grandpa—And what is that—at the top?

Freddy—No; near the fire.

THE WORLD IN REVIEW

Every fourth person one meets in Canada has come to the Dominion within the past ten years. A tourist in the train or a visitor to any city or town from coast to coast if he has his eyes open is sure to be impressed with the number of faces he sees that plainly show foreign birth. This continent has become the great melting pot of the nations and the Government reports show that representatives of ninety different nations settled in Canada in 1912. In that year the number who came from the British Isles was 145,859 and from the United States 140,143, the first time on record when the British immigrants outnumbered those from the United States.

Industrial Progress.

The report of the census of 1911 dealing with the manufactures of Canada during the year 1910 has just been issued, and is a striking proof of the advance this country has made along industrial lines. Compared with the census of 1901, which gave the figures for 1900, there has been an increase in the ten years of 4,568 in the number of working establishments, of $800,667,122 in the capital invested, of 176,930 in the number of persons employed, of $127,759,066 in salaries and wages, and of $684,922,264 in value of products.

Shrinkage in Building Operations.

Building permits in Canada for the seven months of the present year have showed a decrease of eight per cent. over those for the same period last year. This decrease has been due chiefly to Quebec and the West. In Ontario and the Maritime Provinces large increases have been recorded. The amount of money expended this year on buildings in Ontario shows an increase of 38 per cent. in the Maritime Provinces an increase of 87 per cent., in Quebec a decrease of 4 per cent., in British Columbia a decrease of 77 per cent., in Alberta a decrease of 23 per cent., in Saskatchewan a decrease of 53 per cent., and in Manitoba a decrease of 51 per cent. With only three exceptions, North Battleford, Medicine Hat, and Nelson, the western cities are very much behind their records in 1912. For the month of July, this year, the general decrease is 26 per cent.

Good Roads and Country Life.

The public improvement most needed today is the improvement of our roads, and there is reason for optimism. Persistent appeals accumulate effect, but better than a century of propaganda is the spread of the automobile and the motorcycle. It is the possession of these for practical use and pleasure that is forcing the good roads movement. And together they will still further transform the conditions of rural life. They will take up what the telephone and the trolley began and give to life in the country new social resources. Isolation is passing completely from the country, and with its departure one of the profoundest social and economic changes in the history of the country will take place.

Forests to be Safeguarded.

Arising out of the reorganization of the Forestry Branch of the Ontario Department of Lands, Forests and Mines, it is understood that an important move is shortly to be taken by the Government to more adequately safeguard the forest wealth of Ontario. Prof. E. Z. Zavitz, Forestry Commissioner, has been commissioned by Hon. W. H. Hearst to study the whole question and report with a recommendation of a plan to be adopted. It is likely that when the Legislature meets next session a comprehensive programme will be laid before the House. The fire-protection programme will co-ordinate with the reforestation scheme now under way. Not only is the fire-ranging force to be maintained and strengthened, but it is stated that fire belts will be cut through the most valuable stretches of pine forest, a more efficient patrol will be kept up, and severe prosecution of those who violate the forest regulations. The fire belts, it is hoped, will prove a buffer, and where a fire starts to spread it will strike these belts and stop for lack of combustible material.

Thousands of Hindus to Come to Canada.

Secret reports that have reached the Department of Immigration at Ottawa of a scheme on foot to bring thousands of Hindus to Canada by a direct line of steamers from Calcutta to Vancouver are causing the officials considerable concern. One rumor has it that a co-operative scheme, embracing one hundred thousand Hindus, will shortly be launched. Protests have already been received from the Pacific Coast, and it is reported that a special officer will be sent to London to make representations to the India Office.

Hitherto it has been possible to prevent an influx by the order in council which stipulates that immigrants must come by direct passage from the land of their birth. Another clause that may be used, and has been used in similar cases, is the one prohibiting the immigration of persons belonging to a race deem unsuited to the climate or requirements of Canada, but the Hindus have waged a campaign against this barrier, and point to their brethren now in good health and comfortable circumstances in British Columbia. Hindu women and children are said to be included in the new colonization scheme.

If despite warnings the Hindus attempt to land in Canada a serious situation will develop for feeling among the white population in British Columbia is very strong. Despatches from the Canadian Pacific coast say that white farmers are already clamoring for similar laws in British Columbia to those recently passed in California, and against which Japan so strongly protested.

Oil Fuel for the Royal Navy.

When Mr. Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, announced that oil will supplement coal in the case of large as well as small ships of war, he called attention to another of the long series of changes that have revolutionized ocean transportation. This last is by no means the least, for the use of oil will bring with it not only increased speed, but a much larger radius of action and easier and faster replenishment. The admiralty has not, however, come to this momentous decision without full assurance that it is justified. For more than a hundred destroyers are built or under construction dependent entirely on oil fuel, and the experiment of building a division of fast battleships and battle cruisers and a number of light cruisers burning oil fuel only, Mr. Churchill affirmed, has proved successful.

Coal, however, will not be entirely abandoned, because, as the first lord explained, oil is only required in large ships when an exceptional speed has to be reached with a vessel of exceptional quality. Whatever may ultimately happen, coal will continue to be the main basis of British sea power in line of battle at present. But the stake in oil ships is already so important that Britain must have the certainty of a steady supply of oil at a steady price and the admiralty recognizes that it must become the independent owner and producer of its supplies. In Britain itself are great potentialities, since the Scottish shale deposits alone, if developed, can yield between 400,000 and 500,000 tons a year for 150 years. The problem, remarked Mr. Churchill, is not one of quantity, but of price.

PRODUCERS AND CONSUMERS

PRUSSIAN WIVES SOLVE THE MARKETING QUESTION.

Consumers May Attend Meetings at Which Producers Fix the Prices.

The quality of food consumed in Prussia, the chief state of the German Empire, has been considerably improved by the Housewives' League. The League is composed of producers as well as consumers, and in the case of the principal league in East Prussia, the 2,400 members are divided almost evenly between city and country. Of the country women, 600 are the wives of the owners of the larger estates and 600 are peasants' wives.

A. M. Thackara reports that the organization has two forms of activity—market houses and schools.

The Market Hall.

"The market hall," he says, "consists of one or more rooms centrally located, and thither the country, or producing members, bring their goods for sale to the city, or consuming members. They must pay yearly dues of 70 cents to $1.20 each, and must agree to sell all their products through the hall, with certain exceptions as to perishable goods or those which are very bulky.

"Inferior goods may not be shipped under any circumstances and may be sent back to the saleswoman. Eggs must always be clean and bear the stamp of the seller. New laid eggs must be stamped with blue or black ink, older eggs with red ink. All other articles also must be stamped or otherwise marked to show their origin. Prepared meats, such as sausage, ham, etc., must be accompanied by a certificate of the official meat inspector. Fresh meat must be stamped by the local veterinarian or slaughter house authorities.

Selling Prices.

"The producers or sellers set the prices at which the goods are sold, in monthly meetings, which the city members are at liberty to attend. The prices range, as a rule, somewhat higher than in the general markets, but it is claimed the greater purity and general superiority of the articles sold are more than an offset. Outsiders are not allowed to participate in the selling or buying.

"The object of the market halls is not only to enable the farmers' wives to have a ready market in which to dispose of their wares and the city wives a centre in which to buy goods of assured value and purity, but also to bring the producers and consumers into better mutual understanding, to let each gain an insight into conditions of production and consumption."

The Housewives' League has membership in the provincial chambers of agriculture and promotes poultry raising and vegetable growing. Its schools are intended to provide better economic education for young women. The schools are equipped with model kitchens and with libraries, class-rooms and dormitories, with experimental vegetable gardens, with equipment for poultry breeding, etc. There are five of these schools, and there are twenty-eight of the market halls in East Prussia.

TIP TO NEWLYWEDS.

From Those Who Married When It Was Fashionable to Save.

Henry Brown's father and mother were married when the senior Brown was earning $1.25 a day, with occasional layoffs. They started housekeeping in two rooms. She did the housework, made and mended the clothes, took care of the babies and by her capable ways made it possible for her husband to lay something aside. Out of those carefully painfully accumulated savings Henry was educated.

Henry expects to be married this fall. He draws a salary of $25 a week. His girl is the sweetest creature on the face of the earth—in Henry's opinion—but she can't cook, she has to have a maid, and she and Henry are planning to start in a classy apartment. At the beginning their home will be sweller than that of the old folks ever was.

But we shall miss our guess if Henry at the end of the first year shall have anything in the bank. Or at the end of the second or third or tenth.

Henry's father used to make a very satisfying meal on mush and milk.

Catch Henry doing that! He might, for sometimes men do have old-fashioned longings. But Henry's bride wants sirloin steak for hers.

A ride by rail for even a few miles, especially for pleasure, was an event in the lives of Henry's pa and ma.

But we are willing right now to go on record with the prediction that it won't be long before Henry and his frau will be whizzing through town and country in an automobile. It may not be paid for. And it may cut alarming holes in Henry's $25 per. But the Joneses and the Smiths have autos; and the Browns are going to be every whit as good as they.

Of course, it is right that the young generation should be better off than the old. That's what progress is for. The wonderful achievement in wealth production during the last two score of years would be ghastly practical jokes if young Brown and the young Mrs. Brown that is to be couldn't start their home-making on a higher economic plane than their parents knew in the scantier long ago.

But not that we said better off.

What is better off?

Is it to be in debt right at the edge, with no cushion for an emergency.

Or, is it to use hard, practical sense and self-denial in the spending of an income, so that what's spent brings in a tolerably durable return; and so that, no matter what's bought, something is always saved?

Custom, the most cruel of tyrants, makes spendthrifts of most of us.

Whereas, 40 years ago custom was rather on the side of thrift—it was fashionable to save.

If custom is like a pendulum, swinging between extremes, wouldn't it be a pretty good idea for the newlyweds this fall to give it a push toward frugality?

AN OLD NURSE.

Persuaded Doctor to Drink Postum.

An old faithful nurse and an experienced doctor are a pretty strong combination in favor of Postum, instead of tea and coffee.

The doctor said:

"I began to drink Postum five years ago on the advice of an old nurse.

"During an unusually busy winter, between tea, coffee and overwork, I became a victim of insomnia. In a month after beginning Postum, in place of tea and coffee, I could eat anything and sleep as soundly as a baby.

"In three months I had gained twenty pounds in weight. I now use Postum altogether instead of tea and coffee; even at bedtime with a soda cracker or some other tasty biscuit.

"Having a little tendency to Diabetes I used a small quantity of saccharine instead of sugar, to sweeten with. I may add that today tea or coffee are never present in our house and very many patients, on my advice, have adopted Postum as their regular beverage.

"In conclusion I can assure anyone that, as a refreshing, nourishing and nerve-strengthening beverage, there is nothing equal to Postum."

Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more, and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate, and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.
