Mr. and Mrs. Chris. McLean Married 50 Years Yesterday

Fifty years ago yesterday in the parsonage at Elma, Miss Orinda Harper and Christopher McLean of Chesterville were united in marriage by Rev. John Fowkes, the witnesses being Miss Salena Casselman and Jackson Hussey.

Yesterday the citizens of Chesterville took the opportunity of paying their respects to this well loved and much respected couple on the completion of half a century of married life when they celebrated their Golden Wedding anniversary at their home on King street. From a distance, friends and well wishers were present from Ottawa, Smiths Falls, Morrisburg, Williamsburg, Syracuse and other points.

The home was tastefully decorated with fall bloom and presented a most pleasing appearance to the two hundred and more who took advantage of the occasion. In the diningroom, the table was decorated with baby 'Mums and yellow tapers on a handsome lace cloth. During the afternoon the table was presided over by Mrs. C. W. Casselman and Mrs. W. O. Dixon, while during the evening these duties were taken over by Mrs. F. W. Merkley, Mrs. Gillissie and Mrs. Harper of Smiths Falls.

Mrs. C. F. Marshall and Mrs. D. Moriarty had charge of the registry and a very beautiful wedding cake, portions of which the guests carried away after signing the bride's book.

Miss Katie Harper had charge of the gift table, where conspicuous among the many handsome remembrances were the gifts of the grandchildren, a large bouquet of mums presented by Miss Ruth Gray, of Ottawa, and a beautiful comforter presented by Miss Vivian Alguire. On behalf of the family, Mr. Fred. McLean presented a clock. Other gifts from many sources included silver, china and other appropriate articles.

For the past 25 years Mr. McLean has served His Majesty on the mail route between Chesterville and Morrisburg and which he bids fair to continue for many more years, retaining his vigour in a remarkable degree. Mrs. McLean is also in very fine health and throughout the years of married life has made the care and comfort of her family her ideal but not to the exclusion of other duties expected of a good neighbour and citizen.

May they enjoy many more years of wedded companionship is the wish of all.

Belanger---LaLonde.

The marriage took place on Tuesday morning of two very well known Chesterville young people when Miss Rose Lalonde, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adelarde Lalonde, became the bride of Mr. Eugene Belanger, son of Mr. Moise Belanger and the late Mrs. Belanger, at St. Mary's church with Rev. Fr. Keaney performing the ceremony. The bride was charming in navy blue velvet with matching accessories and was supported by her cousin, Miss Alice Lavergne, dressed in blue crêpe. Mr. Victor Belanger was best man.

Fall Season Commenced By Trinity United Y.P.S.

The Young People's Society of Trinity United church held its first meeting for the season on Monday evening with 34 members present. Officers for 1937-38 were chosen as follows:

President—Jack Cross;

Vice-Pres.—Grace Allison.

Secretary and Press Reporter—Olive Gillard.

Treasurer—Jack Fulton;

Pianist—Vivian LaSalle;

Convenors of committees— Christian Fellowship, Harry Allison, Iva Hosie, Edna Beattie; Citizenship, Harold Williamson, Audrey Alford, Alice Cass; Culture, Evelyn Boyd, Eileen McMillan, Lois Boyd; Missionary, Muriel Johnston, Doris Forward, Marion Robinson; Recreation and social, George Hosie, Shirley King, Marguerite Shaver, Yvonne Merkley. Attendance Contest, Harold Hummel and Merle Marcelus.

The meeting was in charge of the Christian Fellowship Committee. Grace Allison and Merle Marcellus played a piano duet. A reading, "Our Neighbours," was given by Iva Hosie, and Vivian LaSalle and Arlie Colquhoun sang two numbers. Edna Beattie gave a few highlights on the world's news, followed by a recitation, "I Saw From the Beach," by Roger Mariner. The remainder of the evening was spent in games and contests.

Next week's meeting will be in charge of the social committee.

Women's Institute Protests Against Slot Machine in Town

At the Women's Institute meeting held yesterday afternoon, Mrs. James Hanna, who was the delegate to the Eastern Convention, gave a very full and interesting report of the addresses and proceedings of each session. Plans were made for catering to the Dairymen's Association banquet to be held on November 5th.

The members placed themselves on record as being opposed to the operating of slot machines in the village.

A social hour was spent at the conclusion of the afternoon's programme, and tea was served by Mrs. P. S. Boyd Mrs. Jim Slosser, Mrs. A. Jarvis, Mrs. Haldane Durant and Mrs. Norman Cameron.

Mrs. Hugh Shaw, Elma, Died at Age of 81 Years

On Friday, Mrs. Hugh Shaw, an aged and respected resident of Elma, passed away after ailing from a cold for a few days and being confined to her bed for a week. Recovering from a long illness last winter, Mrs. Shaw had enjoyed the warmth of summer and had made several visits to relatives and friends, and had attended meetings of the church women's organizations that she loved so much.

In September Mr. and Mrs. Shaw celebrated their 63rd wedding anniversary. Mrs. Shaw was born in Mountain township 81 years ago and lived in that township the greater part of her life.

The funeral was held on Monday, and was conducted by Rev. Robert S. Smith, B.D., pastor of the United church of which Mrs. Shaw has been a member for many years. The hymns "Peace, Perfect Peas," and "Asleep in Jesus" were sung, and "The Old Rugged Cross" was sung as a quartette by Mrs. Bernice Barkley, Mrs. R. S. Smith, Mr. Reg. Barkley and Mr. Donald McMartin.

The pastor preached from the text "God Is Love," a favourite text of the deceased. During the course of the sermon, Rev. Mr. Smith reminded the congregation of the beautiful traits of character in the life just ended. Her regular attendance at worship in the House of God and at the sacraments, her love for the Women's Association and the Women's Missionary Society, and her genial spirit of good-will among her neighbours, and urged a following of her example. Mr. Smith was assisted in the service by Rev. Donald Morrison, B.D., of Hallville.

Interment was in the beautiful South Gower cemetery, the bearers being Messrs. Adam Barkley, John Armstrong, Oscar Becksted and Mahlon Becksted.

Aged Chesterville Lady Buried This Morning

The death occurred on Tuesday in Kingston of Mrs. Eliza Chambers at the age of 84 years. The deceased was the widow of the late Geo. Chambers, of Connaught, where most of her life was spent with her husband and family, until about 20 years ago when residence was taken up in Chesterville. Mrs. Chambers was very highly respected and loved in the Connaught community and during her residence in Chesterville made many more friends.

Of a family of nine, she is now mourned by five daughters and two sons, Miss Minnie, of California; Mrs. Chas. Snyder, of Washington, D.C.; Mrs. Ed. Gannon, of Mountain township; Mrs. John Devaney and Mrs. M. Kelly, of Chesterville; Patrick on the homestead, and Frank, of Cleveland.

The funeral took place this morning at St. Mary's church where requiem high mass was celebrated by Rev. Father P. J. Keaney.

W. M. S. Presbyterial Sectional Meeting at Hallville

A sectional meeting of the W.M.S. of the Dundas-Grenville Presbyterial was held Thursday in the United church at Hallville with the president, Mrs. George Carlyle, in the chair. The theme was "Courage and Consecration," the devotional period being conducted by Mrs. E. Taylor and Mrs. A. Duncan, of Reids Mills Auxiliary.

The following committees were appointed: Courtesy, Mrs. W. R. Johnston, South Mountain, and Mrs. Thos. Johnston, Hainsville; press, Mrs. Chas. Strader, Brinston; Miss Violet Van Allen, Mountain. Mrs. Gordon Cleland was named a member of the finance committee.

The address of welcome was voiced by Mrs. Donald Morrison, and replied to by Mrs. James Benton, Iroquois.

Mrs. Rumsay Peterson, of Brinston, Presbyterial president of Dundas-Grenville, game a resumé of the branch executive meeting at Montreal, and stated the allocation of missionary funds had been placed at $7,500 for this Presbyterial, and that it had been decided to return to the method of direct allocation. Matters concerning temperance work were discussed by Mrs. Herbert VanAllen, of Van Camps.

Special speakers at the morning sessions, Miss E. Brown, R.N., of Ethelbert, Man., and Miss Ida McKenzie, of the Church of All Nations, Montreal, were introduced by Mrs. R. Peterson and Mrs. Allen Van Allen, of Mountain.

Mrs. J. L. Murdock, of Hainsville, spoke on nomination of officers and an address was given by Rev. S. T. Burnam, of Inkerman. The morning session closed with prayer by Mrs. James Evans, of Hallville.

Afternoon devotions were led by Mrs. W. R. Johnston, Mrs. Asa Berry and Mrs. Gordon Cleland, of South Mountain, and greetings from the ministers and laymen of the Dundas-Grenville Presbytery were extended by Rev. E. Lacey, of Brinston.

Others taking part in the afternoon session were Mrs. W. S. L. Merrill, of Morrisburg; Miss Violet VanAllen, of Mountain, Mission Band secretary; Mrs. R. Sharra, Brinston; Mrs. Herbert McQuaig, and Miss Carry Stewart presided at the organ during the day. In the afternoon a solo was sung by Mrs. W. Reynolds, of Hainsville, and the roll call showed an attendance of 115 delegates. The Hainsville auxiliary extended an invitation to the section to hold the next meeting at the Hainsville church.

Y.P.U. MET ON MONDAY.

The Morewood United church Young People's Union met in the hall Monday evening with John McGibbon presiding, and Inez Sheppard as secretary. The meeting was in charge of Miss Alta Loucks, educational convenor. Miss Verda Gordon, Miss Marjorie Faulkner, and Mrs. James McMillan assisted in the call to worship. Miss Alta Loucks gave a talk on "Iceland." The meeting closed with the Mizpah benediction, and then a social half hour was spent.

C.G.I.T. GIRLS MEET.

The regular meeting of the Morewood C.G.I.T. group was held at the home of Miss Gladys Carlyle on Saturday. The president, Miss Vivian Fetterly, presided. After the devotional period, an interesting item was a question box, and plans were made for the making of a newspaper. A dainty lunch was served by the hostess, and the meeting closed with Taps.

Five Persons Are Injured On Highway Near Morrisburg

Two adults and three children were seriously injured north of Morrisburg on the Ottawa-Morrisburg highway, Sunday night, when a buggy driven by Grant Casselman, of Morrisburg, was struck from the rear by a car driven by Lawence Barnett, of Cumberland, who claimed lights from an approaching car blinded him momentarily during a snow storm.

Injured were Harvey Beckstead, of Morrisburg, severe lacerations, bruises and shock and profuse bleeding; Mrs. Amorel Beckstead, his wife, with similar injuries; Doris Beckstead, 9, facial cuts, and Paul, 6, facial cuts, children of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Beckstead; and Glenda Barnett, 2 years, facial lacerations, daughter of the car driver.

Casselman, driver of the horse and buggy, escaped injury as did Barnett; his wife, Mrs. Annie Barnett; Marvin Barnett, 16 months, their son; and Watson, of Cumberland, occupants of the car.

Damage to the car amounted to more than $150, while the buggy was demolished. The horse was badly cut.

A MATCH TRICK.

On the surface of a small bowl of water, place a number of matches, so that they have a star formation.

Then get a piece of soap, dip it into the water in the centre of the star, and the matches will shoot away toward the edge of the bowl.

If a piece of lump sugar is dipped into the water the result is the opposite, all the matches rushing together.

DOGS.

Interesting Facts About Our Dominion of Canada.

MOST of man's work has been done by ten animals, five of them of almost world-wide distribution—the horse, ox, ass, mule and dog—and five of very special locations — the camel, elephant, reindeer, yak and llama. The dog is probably the least important of the draught animals and yet it rivals man in its ability to live in all climates. It goes wherever man goes and on the shores of the Arctic can live on a diet of meat and fish or beans and bananas mixed with a little meat in equatorial Africa.

The fur-trader and explorer in the northern districts depend upon dog teams for their travelling and many touching stories are told of this service to man in snow-bound areas. In France, Holland, Belgium and Germany it is not uncommon to see dogs pulling heavy carts laden with farm produce, nor unusual to find a peasant woman on one side of the wagon tongue and a dog on the other. The dog in these countries takes the place of the horse because of the small patch of land available to a family cannot be used to feed a large work animal. In Germany pet dogs are heavily taxed but the work dog has been left untaxed. In many Eastern and most Mohammedan cities the dog acts as a scavenger.

Besides being well known as a faithful friend to man, this animal has been taught to do many things, such as guiding blind people, rescue work, acrobatics and tending sheep. Breeding for special purposes has become a business. For the improvement of stock there were 184 dogs valued at $11,000 imported last year. Of this number 54 came from the United Kingdom.

"Stay In The Country" Lord Tweedsmuir Advises

"We can't have a strong nation without having a strong country folk," His Excellency the Governor-General told a large gathering of farmers at the Eastern Counties Ploughmen's Association match near Clarence Creek, Thursday last.

After tramping over soggy ground to view the 71 entries in operation, His Excellency delivered a short address.

He said he was pleased to see so many children out to greet him at Clarence. Wherever he went in Canada he saw all kinds of Canadian products but the product he liked to see best was the children. Never had he seen such healthy and good looking children as he had seen in Canada.

"Don't get in to the towns too soon," advised Lord Tweedsmuir. "Don't imagine the only work worth doing is in the towns. There is far more important work to do in the country. We can't have a strong nation without a strong country folk."

In conclusion, His Excellency hoped they would stay in the country and build up a strong Canada.

"The streamlined bathtub has made its appearance."

"Yes, but what we need is a cake of soap equipped with hydraulic brakes!"

"I can't thread this needle mother?"

"Why, son?"

"Well, every time I get the thread near the eye it blinks."

Dundas-Grenville Presbyterial Sectional Meeting in Matilda

The sectional meeting of Dundas-Grenville Presbyterial of the United church was held at the White church in Matilda township on Friday, and was splendidly represented. The morning session was scheduled to take place at 9.30 a.m., the devotional period being in charge of the Winchester auxiliary. Words of welcome by the White church ladies were replied to by Mrs. C. A. Adey, of Williamsburg. Mrs. G. W. Reaburn, of Chesterville, followed with the reading of the minutes and business of the last sectional meeting. Mrs. Peterson, of Toyes Hill, introduced the two guest speakers of the day, Miss Jessie Brown, of Ethelbert, Man., missionary graduate nurse, and Miss McKenzie, of Montreal, representing the Church of All Nations.

Music by the Morewood Octet was beautifully rendered and listened to attentively. In the absence of Mrs. Casselman through illness, "Gleanings From Branches" were given by Mrs. Merrill, of Morrisburg. Mrs. Tait, of Chesterville, prepared and read a very fine and instructive paper, entitled "The Church and What a Member Should Be." This closed a very busy morning session.

After a delightful dinner prepared by the White church ladies, the afternoon session was opened by a devotional period, conducted by the Winchester Springs auxiliary. Mrs. Peterson at this junction explained explicitly the allocation for 1938. Roll was called and answered to by the different representatives, who were then greatly interested in listening to the many reports from the various Auxiliaries, Circles, and Bands, plus their problems. Miss McKenzie, guest speaker from Montreal, delighted her audience with pictured stories of her work in Montreal. A vocal duet sung by Mesdames Adey and Merkley, of Williamsburg, was most effectively rendered.

Mrs. Hilliard, of Morrisburg, in her usual enthusiastic and impressive manner gave a talk on Temperance, reminding the delegates of the necessity of creating a temperance atmosphere in the home. A questionnaire was ably conducted by Mrs. Allison, of Morewood, bringing to a close a very pleasant and helpful day.

WITH THE BOY SCOUTS

ANOTHER TROOP ON THE WAY.

As a result of the work of three "Lonies," Winchester is going to have a Troop—in fact it is well on the way now with "Spark" Dukelow as the Scoutmaster. Monday evening, during the visit of Mr. Edgar T. Jones, Field Secretary, Jack Davies, Jimmie VanBridger and Jimmie Spinks, the three Winchester boys who were guests of the troop at camp this summer, were invested, with their new Scoutmaster assisting. They report about 25 boys anxious to get going in Scouting and a couple of hikes have already been held. The 1st Chesterville Troop was able to help the 1st Cardinal Troop get under way, and the boys are anxious to get another group organized in our neighbouring town.

* * * *

APPLE DAY PROFITS DOWN.

Apple Day seems to have its ups and downs for the 1st Chesterville Troop. After the profits dropped in 1935, a fine total was made in 1936, and then this year the profits took a toboggan slide. Part of the trouble of course can be laid to the weatherman who sent a heavy downpour Saturday and part of the trouble to lack of organization. The Troop just came back to Headquarters a week before Apple Day and the boys were not sufficiently settled back in the ropes. The Whip-poor-wills proved again they are the best salesmen, as they turned in twice as much cash as the other two patrols together.

* * * *

RECRUITS ANXIOUS TO JOIN.

About ten young boys are reported anxious to join the troop and get in on the fun of Scouting. These boys should get in touch with some of the Scouts who will bring them up to the next meeting on Wednesday, November 3rd. Camp is a long way off just now, but there's much to be learned before next July rolls around.

Starting with the points of Monday evening, the patrol with the greatest total when camp does arrive, will have the privilege of the new tent for its own use. Of course the regular six-weeks competition will be carried on throughout the winter and spring for the possession of the Honour Patrol Pennant.

A TENT PITCHING RECORD.

Pitching a 10 x 12 tent Northern style, using seven poles and two guy-stays, in 80 seconds, and taking it down, packing it and piling the poles in 61 seconds, a feat of the Kirkland Lake Scout Troop team, was one of the achievements of the 6th Annual Northern Ontario Scout Jamboree at Iroquois Falls. Other contests included pioneer bridge building, tree felling and fire lighting.

YOUTHFUL TOILERS OF THE SEA

The old British trawler "Espero," used in the filming of Victor Hugo's "Toilers of the Sea," is now the prized floating home of Guernsey Sea Scouts. The old vessel, which had been abandoned by the moving picture people, and had sunk in St. Peter Port Harbour, was purchased at auction by Rev. G. A. Taitt, and handed over to the Scouts. The youthful men of the sea are now restoring and refitting the old craft under the direction of a ship's carpenter.

B.-P. AND HIS DOGS.

When at home at Pax Hill, Hampshire, Lord Baden-Powell, World Chief Scout, begins his day at 6 a.m., with a walk, accompanied by his three dogs. One of these is a big black "Labrador," old and blind. At every stile, relates Mr. J. F. M. Stewart, of Toronto, a summer guest of the Chief Scout, B.-P. helps the old dog over, and guides him through the gates. When they turn back for home, the old dog presses his nose against his master, and is given his cane. Proudly carrying this, the dog goes ahead, and arriving in front of the house, walks slowly in a circle until the Chief Scout comes, and with a pat on the head, takes it from him.

McQuesten Declares Press Most Potent Safety Force

Toronto.—The press of Ontario is the most important single factor in the war being waged against highway deaths and accidents, according to an opinion expressed this week by Hon. T. B. McQuesten, Minister of Highways for the province.

"Although conclusive statistics have not yet been completed," said Mr. McQuesten, "there can be no question that the 'fear' campaign which the highways department has conducted during the past several months has had a definite effect on the reduction of the horrible carnage and needless waste which has been stalking our highways.

"It is quite evident," he declared, "that whatever success this campaign has achieved is due in great measure to the whole-hearted co-operation which has been extended to the Department of Highways by editors in every Ontario community, and I wish through the medium of the press to extend to them this department's warmest gratitude for the public-spirited way in which they have used their news and editorial columns to save human lives and prevent misery and destruction."

Comments have been pouring into his office every day, the minister said, both from motorists and pedestrians concerning the effectiveness of the department's campaign. The most significant, he maintained, came from scores of travelling salesmen and truck drivers.

"These men," said Mr. McQuesten, "are driving on the highways every hour of the day and each day in the week. They, perhaps, more than any other groups, are more quick to observe changes in the driving habits of the province, and they have been almost unanimous in commenting on the general improvement in highway motoring. They report less cutting in, less passing on hills and curves, and a noticeable reduction in all the bad, careless, thoughtless habits which result in death and destruction on the highway."

But there is still much work to be done, pointed out the minister. People are still being slaughtered on the roads of the province, and automobiles are still piling themselves up in twisted heaps of wreckage. The war against thoughtlessness, recklessness and stupidity on the highways must be carried on until people can travel in complete safety and pleasure.

To this end, he called for the unceasing aid of Ontario editors and every pedestrian and motorist in the province.

"The Department of Highways," stated Mr. McQuesten, "is doing everything it can to design and construct highways which will be as accident-proof as engineering science can make them, but this can be of little effect unless the human beings who travel the highways take upon themselves the responsibility of controlling the ever-present 'human factor' in accident prevention. Engineers can mold concrete and steel to the ends of safety, but no force more potent than the press has been found which can mold human minds into paths of life-saving thoughtfulness."

BOY MAKES BIG MONEY WITH CALF AT SHOW

Fiery Cross Witnessed On Highway Near Cornwall

Provincial police are investigating a "fiery cross" on the highway near St. Andrews, 10 miles north of Cornwall, Wednesday night last, the first incident of the kind ever reported in that district. The cross, a 10-foot, wooden frame wrapped with oil-soaked sacking, was erected near the road. A passerby arrived on the scene just as the cross was fired, and saw several men run to an automobile and speed toward Cornwall. The spectator pushed the cross over, and it fell across the roadway where it tied up traffic until the flames subsided. Police have no explanation to offer and little information to work upon.

Extra* markets for milk products

The Dominion's use of milk in fluid form is increasing steadily, but it falls far short of the approximately 16 billion pounds of milk produced yearly by Canada's 4,000,000 milk cows.

Research and salesmanship have found and made other markets for 9 billion pounds of milk that consumers don't drink every year.

Since 1857 Borden, through research and selling, has played a leading part in developing extra markets for both milk and manufactured milk products.

It is these extra markets that have helped dairying become one of Canada's biggest sources of farm cash.

Have You Sent Yours?

FOR several weeks The Record has been asking YOU to send the names and addresses of relatives and friends whom you think would like to hear of Chesterville's Old Home Week in 1938, to the Secretary, W. H. Casselman. Have you sent in your list? Some have responded to the appeal, but there are hundreds of other former residents of Chesterville and district who will want to hear of the big time being planned for their entertainment next summer from July 30 to August 3rd, and the committee wants to send an announcement shortly to every person away from Chesterville who ever lived in this village or the surrounding country—and the only way this can be done is by every person getting busy as soon as they read this appeal, jotting down the information required and sending or phoning it at once to W. H. Casselman, phone 12, Chesterville.

CONSPICUOUS BY THEIR ABSENCE.

The farming district immediate to Chesterville has become somewhat conspicuous during the past two or three years through the fact that a ploughing match is not among the fall attractions for tillers of the soil. Matches have been held in the county and nearby in Stormont county, but the list of competitors in these matches very seldom carries the name of a ploughman from around Chesterville. Almost invariably large crowds are attracted to watch the experts show their ability in the many fine points of such work. Boys and men from about Finch are among the most expert in Ontario attending and carrying off valuable prizes not only from local matches but from the International, held last year in these counties and recently at Fergus in Western Ontario.

When a man or boy takes pride in his ability with a plough, he goes through the country with his eyes open, not only to criticize the work of other men, but he takes stock of farm home surroundings and feels the urge to have things about his own home tidy and as they should be; and what one does in this direction is soon followed by a neighbour, all adding to the beauty of the countrysde and at the same time increasing the value of their property.

Visitors to this county during the past few months have been most agreeably impressed with outstanding floral displays at farm homes, which for the most part are a feminine touch, leaving it for the men to become enthused over well tilled acres.

"NATIONAL WISHING DAY" UNOFFICIALLY OBSERVED

Officially Thanksgiving Day has gone into history for the present year but this week has seen an unofficially declared "Wishing Day" probably observed by about nine-tenths of our citizens. That is wishing they were winners in the Irish Sweepstakes just announced. It is quite interesting to read of the uses the lucky winners will make of their easily gained riches, and just as easy to register a silent determination to be in on the next drawing even if there are laws against buying tickets as well as selling them. The laws in question are just about as effective in keeping the tickets out of the country as law is in stopping the bootlegging of liquor in prohibited territory.

Winners of prizes are broadcast from one end of the Dominion to the other and for a brief space are public figures. Notwithstanding all the publicity, we do not hear of any complaint that the prizes are not paid to the winners, all of which is "ag'in the law," but many of us will be in the next draw for the first time or perhaps the twentieth.

It kind of makes the winter step along to be planning the spending of a hundred and fifty thousand dollars next spring when one wins the big prize and if you do not win you have had a real Scotsman's holiday. Of course, you would not spend it as you planned anyway. In the recent list of winners, a man out West was going to put his thousand odd into his business, another would replace his wooden leg with a new one, a young lady decided with her winnings she would have her breakfast in bed for ever more, others would see the world in extensive travel.

HEALTH

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

COUGHING.

COUGHING is almost invariably a reflex act. It may occasionally be a neurotic or wilful act. In the vast majority of cases the stimulus which originates the cough is situated in some region of the respiratory passages between the vocal chords and the tiny little terminal air cells in the lungs which are found at the end of the branches coming off the windpipe This is called the bronchial tree.

The cause of the irritation in the respiratory passages is in the majority of cases either an inflamed or congested condition of the mucous membrane lining the passage or an excessive quantity of mucous secretion brought about by invading enemies called germs. Less frequent causes are hæmorrhage in the lungs, inflammation in the larynx, pressure upon the windpipe by an eniarged thyroid gland situated like a horse shoe around the air passage in the neck, or foreign bodies in the throat or windpipe such as dust or particles of food.

The character of the cough varies with the cause and to some extent with the general state of health. The most obvious distinction in the quality of the cough is that between the moist or loose cough and the dry or hard cough. The loose cough indicates the successful removal of mucous from the air passages which in adults results in expectoration Children usually swallow secretions which they cough up. The dry cough indicates the presence of an irritant which the cough is unable to remove from the air passages. The hard cough of the early stages of bronchial catarrh is usually followed by a loose cough consequent upon the production of mucous which is secreted by the inflamed membrane. It is most important that persons suffering from a dry, hard cough be kept warm and free from chills or exposure in order that the inflammation which is present may not be permitted to progress to the point of invading the lung tissue and thus produce pneumonia.

A short, weak, frequently repeated dry cough is known as a hacking cough. It is due to a mild irritation in the upper air passages, a condition which if untreated may become chronic.

Inflammation of the larynx and vocal chords causes a barking cough which is usually ineffectual in removing any mucous.

Coughing is much more prevalent in winter than in summer because disease germs which are so frequently present in the mouth and nose flourish when the body is subjected to lower temperatures. It is, therefore, most important that in winter every effort be made to keep the body free from undue exposure to cold and wet. When a cough does develop, stay indoors if at all possibe until all danger of developing a serious infection has passed. A neglected cough or cold accounts for a great many serious illnesses and a great many deaths. It doesn't pay to ignore a troublesome cough.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

A SMALL CALF.

Palmerston Observer.

SO FAR as we can recall, most of the freaks of nature (or whatever you may wish to cail them) which we have had occasion to report in this district, have pertained to mammoth, or at least unusual size, but the editor of the Forwich Record reports he saw something which goes to the other extreme. It was a black heifer calf, a week and a half old, standing 20 inches high and weighing approximately 20 pounds, perfectly normal in every respect and as frisky as can be. A Durham cow belonging to Reeve J. A. Bryans gave birth to this miniature model on September 5th, and it was not her first born by any means. Like most oddities there is no explanation for its cause, but the fact remains that it is the smallest calf we have ever seen.

CUTTING THE FUELWOOD.

Judicious Cutting Will Increase Value of Woodlot In Addition to Saving Fuel Cost.

THE FARMER who owns a 10-15 acre woodlot is envied by his neighbour in the sections where many farms have the entire acreage cleared for cropping and pasture, as he has a supply of fuelwood and timber close at hand, and he does not have to make a cash outlay. Due to the increasing scarcity of fuelwood in many of the better agricultural districts, more owners of woodland are giving attention to their woodlots in order that they may be preserved and that they will give larger financial returns over a period of years.

The annual cutting of firewood may be made the starting point in a more efficient scheme of management. In many cases the fuelwood may be secured from a woodlot and it will be more valuable, in better condition for future growth, and present a more pleasing appearance. The method and care that is taken today will make a difference of hundreds of dollars in the value of the woodlot 15, 20 and 50 years hence. Rather than considering only the present; that is securing the best wood in the shortest time with the least work, the owner should cut the trees that will improve future growing conditions.

Examples.

1. Thin a second growth stand rather than clean-cut a small area.
2. Cut the large trees that have to be worked up with cross-cut rather than take the 5"-10" diameter trees that may be sawn with buzz-saw and split easily.

The following rules might well be used as a rough guide in selecting the trees to be cut and saved in a fuelwood operation.

Cut—

1. Dead trees,
2. Unsound and rotting trees,
3. Crooked trees,
4. Poor species of timber trees,
5. Short bushy crowned trees,
6. Some trees where stand is too thick (thinning)
7. Trees that are shading and interfering with the growth of others beneath them.

Save—

1. Straight trees,
2. Sound trees,
3. Tall, well-crowned trees,
4. Better species of trees.
5. Enough trees to make a full stand.

Trees 2"-10' 'in diameter of the more valuable species should be saved from breakage if possible when large trees are felled. The large tree should be felled in the direction where least damage will result. This may be done by wedging, pulling it with a rope, cutting off large limbs before felling, or bending the small trees over with a rope until the large tree is felled.

Farmers who have not fenced their woodlot from stock would be well advised to consider fencing part at least as protection from stock now will mean that there will be a woodlot on the farm 25, 50 and 75 years hence. because small trees always start in a woodlot that is not pastured by stock. A cultivated field or pasture may be squared by taking in a corner of the woodlot. The fuelwood could be cut from the part included with the cultivated field. The woodland area could be increased by including the cleared corner with the woodlot and planting it with forest trees next spring.

THEY HAVE THEIR RIGHTS.

Dealing with cows, says "Our Dumb Animals," as though designed by Nature to be treated only as milking machines, typing them up day in and day out in stanchions, and dealing with hens as only laying machines, confining them continuously to narrow wire quarters is against Nature and we believe dairy men and poultry men will some day find this out. Cows and hens, with us, have the right to enough freedom and out door air to make life mean something more than just milk and eggs.

A Minor Detail.

"The old bus averaged three hundred and fifty miles a day."

"Wasn't the scenery—"

"We only had two punctures."

"Wasn't the—"

"Did eighteen miles to a gallon."

"Wasn't—"

"And about two hundred miles to every quart of oil."

"Was—"

"Didn't stop at one garage."

"W—"

"Boy, it sure was a wonderful trip!

"Yes, but the scenery?"

"What scenery?"

At breakfast a Scot suddenly exclaimed in horror, "Jean, Jean! Can I believe my own eyes? Sich extravagance I never saw in a' my life!"

"Hoots, Jock, what's the matter?" asked Jean.

"Two pinches of salt on wee Jamie's porridge!"

"Well, never mind. Ha'e ye forgotten it's his birthday?"

NIGHT SHIFT.

A word picture of how a police force guards the public and its property will be portrayed by the CBC on its "Night Shift" broadcast to be presented from Winnipeg on Friday, October 29th, at 9.30 p.m. EST to the national network. Wilford Davidson, CBC commentator, will conduct the Canadian listener on a tour of the Winnipeg police station and will describe many phases of police work which go on, night and day. The commentator among other things will describe the Siemens-Halske police signal telegraph system on which are recorded the reports made by policemen on their regular beats. In emergencies, the constable can order a police wagon, report a fire, or in case of accident, call the ambulance.

HUNTING IN THE FALL.

Those interested in the hunting of wild game in the autumn will derive much valuable information from the talk entitled "Our Game Supply," to be given by Dr. William Rowan, Professor of Zoology, University of Alberta, in a broadcast over the national network of the CBC on Friday, October 29, at 10.30 p.m. EST. Dr. Rowan's talk will embrace natural fluctuations in the game supply with special reference to ducks, grouse and the Hungarian partridge. Dr. Rowan has done considerable research on these subjects in Canada and this summer continued his research in Great Britain. While in England he gave talks for the BBC.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

MISS HELEN LACEY, B.H.Sc.

OUT OF THE CRANBERRY BOG.

CRANBERRIES appear on the market at a time when we most appreciate them. The fruits which have been in season during the summer are practically gone and we feel quite sad when we try to think of bright interesting desserts. Then along come the cheerful, bright, red cranberries and we all are happy again.

CRANBERRY PUDDING.

2 cups stewed, sweetened cranberries
¼ cup butter
¾ cup sugar
1 egg
¾ cup milk
2 cups flour
3½ teaspoons baking powder
1-3 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla

Cover the bottom of a greased baking dish with the cranberries.

Cream the butter, add sugar gradually, blend well Add beaten egg and salt aternately with the milk. Add vanilla with the last addition of milk

Spread cake mixture over the cranberries and bake in a moderate oven about 40 minutes. Serve hot with cream.

CRANBERRY SAUCE.

3 cups cranberries
1 cup boiling water
1¼ cups sugar

Pick over and wash cranberries. Add water, cover and cook slowly until very soft. Remove from heat. Add sugar, stir until thoroughly dissolved.

CRANBERRY STEAM PUDDING.

½ cup butter
1½ cups sugar
3 eggs
3½ cups sifted flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
2 cups cranberries

Cream the butter, add sugar, then eggs well beaten. Sift flour, salt and baking powder and add alternately with the milk. Wash, dry and cut the cranberries in half, flour with some of the measured flour. Add to the first mixture. Place in a greased mould, cover and steam two hours. Serve hot with cream or orange hard sauce.

MOCK CHERRY PIE.

1 cup cranberries
½ cup seeded raisins
¾ cup sugar
1 tablespoon flour
1 teaspoon almond extract
1 teaspoon butter

Line a pie tin with pastry. Fill with cranberries, washed and cut in halves and mixed with the chopped raisins. Sprinkle with mixture of sugar and flour. Add almond extract and dot with butter. Cover with a second crust and bake in a hot oven about 40 minutes.

CRANBERRY COCKTAIL.

Remember this recipe for your Christmas dinner. It makes an excellent beginning for any meal.

2 cups cranberries
2 cups water
3 cloves
2-3 cup sugar
1 tablespoon lemon juice

Wash cranberries and cook with water and cloves. When tender, strain thoroughly. Add sugar to the liquid and cook long enough to blend thoroughly. When partly cooked, add lemon juice. Serve icy cold.

CRANBERRY SHERBET.

1 quart cranberries
1 cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
4 cups water
2 cups sugar
¼ cup lemon juice
1 cup walnuts

Cook berries with 1 cup sugar and 1 cup of water until soft. Push through a sieve and add salt. Boil four cups of water and two cups of sugar together for 10 minutes. Cool and combine cranberries, syrup and lemon juice. Freeze until partly solid; add nuts and freeze stiff.

A small serving of cranberry sherbet is very nice with the meat course.

To rid cranberries of seeds, cut in half and rinse in cold water before cooking.

Tablecloths should be large enough to cover the table with at least nine inches and not more than 18 inches over the edge on all sides. They should be laundered with three length-wise creases folded as a fan or screen. The table should always be protected with a silence cloth or asbestos pad.

Abe Ginter's Resignation

WHEN the doctor came out of Abe Ginter's bedroom he had a puzzled look on his face. Mrs. Ginter, with her hands folded in her apron, stood in the living room awaiting him. "Well?" she said.

"Abe's not so very sick," replied the doctor, "although he ought to have had that old wound opened up sooner; but he has something on his mind that is worrying him. Do you know what it is?"

"I wish to goodness I did; but he won't tell me. Just worries and worries and won't tell. Men are so cantankerous!"

She lifted a corner of her apron to her eyes; for, although Mrs. Ginter was sharp of tongue, she was tender of heart.

"I think it's something about his war record," she continued, "though what it is goodness only knows. I've been married him night forty years, and I never heard anything against him as a soldier, or any other way, for that matter."

"Well," said the doctor, "if we can relieve his mind he'll come along all right. If we can't, I don't know what will happen. It's the worry that's wearin' him out. Let's see; you have some children out West somewhere, haven't you?"

"Only John; he never came East. Mary died, you know, and it's her Hannah that's with us."

"I see. Suppose you write to John and tell him he'd better come on. I—I think maybe the old man might like to see him."

"Doctor, you don't think—"

She hesitated and looked at him sharply.

"Oh, there's no immediate danger. Get that thing off his mind, if you can, whatever it is, and keep on with the same medicine. I'll call again tomorrow morning."

The doctor strode down the path to the gate, where his horse was tied, and jumped into his buggy. Mrs. Ginter, with her hands folded in her apron again, watched him drive out of sight. She was thinking what she should say to John.

"Sary."

It was Abe's voice from the bedroom. Letting her apron fall, she pushed open the door of the sickroom and entered. It was a small room and plainly furnished; conspicuous on the wall hung a Grand Army uniform, and over the old-fashioned bureau an American flag was neatly draped.

On the wide, high bed lay Abram Ginter. His sallow, wrinkled face showed signs not so much of physical suffering as of mental suffering.

"Sary, has the doctor gone?"

"Yes, Abe."

"He might as well. He can't do anything for me. It wouldn't be worth while if he could. A man that's done what I've done is better out of the world than in it."

Mrs. Ginter squared her elbows and put her hands on her hips.

"Abe Ginter," she said, "you just stop that nonsense. What's the use of your fretting and fidgeting your life away, and no one knows what it's all about, and you won't tell. I'm going to put my foot down now. Something's got to be done."

She pushed a chair back from the side of the bed and sat down in it resolutely. The old man turned his head on the pillow and faced her.

"You're right, Sary," he said. "Something's got to be done and I've decided to do it. Get me a pencil and paper."

She hastened into the living room on her errand. That the secret that preyed on her husband's mind had to do with his conduct in the Civil War she felt sure, but what it was that he had done she could not imagine.

As a young man, indeed when he was scarcely more than a boy, he had gone West to seek his fortune. Then came the war. At the end of it, an honourably discharged veteran, with a wound received at Five Forks that was bound to last him a lifetime, he drifted back to Indiana, married and settled down, but he never prospered. He was too easy-going—too conscientious, some said; he lacked the true Western energy and push. And the old wound troubled him so that for months at a time he was unable to work.

When Abe's father died, back in the Pennsylvania town where he was born and left him the old homestead, he and his wife, both now past middle age, got together their few belongings and with their little granddaughter Hannah, came east and settled down in Abe's boyhood home. It was a small truck farm on the outskirts of the village, but it served to supply a decent living for Abe Ginter and his little family.

When the old soldiers of his native village learned that he was a veteran of the Civil War and had an honourable discharge, and especially when they learned—not from him, for he never told of it, but from some one else who knew—how valiantly he had fought, what desperate bravery he had shown at Five Forks, they besought him to join their Grand Army post. At first he would not listen to them, but they kept urging him until at last he yielded. No man in the post was more loyal and devoted; but he would accept no post and no honour. He had fought in the war as a private soldier, he said, and he always wanted to remain one.

When his wife returned with paper and pencil, she brought also a large geography of her schoolgirl days on which he could lay the sheet of paper. Then she got his spectacles and helped him to sit up.

He found it a great effort to write. At best, he was unused to writing, and now the pencil seemed obstinately reluctant to set down the thought in his mind. But he started in bravely:

"James Madison ag—" He looked at his wife over the top of his spectacles. "How do you spell adjutant?"

"Why," she replied uncertainly, "it is a-d-g— Wait! I'll get the dictionary."

"No, I can't wait. There isn't time. I won't write to the adjutant, anyway. I'll write to the post commander."

So he took a fresh sheet of paper and started again.

Wm. Torrey commander sir. I resine my membership in Robert Durland Post.

"What!" exclaimed his wife, who was looking over his shoulder. "What is that, Abe?"

"I'm resigning my membership in the Grand Army," he replied quietly.

"You—resigning? What for? Just when you need friends most? Abe Ginter, you're crazy!"

"I've thought it all out, Sary. I know what I'm doing." Then, paying no further attention to her, he wrote on:

I turn in my button with this letter. I never had any right to join the post. I—"

The last sentence was more than Mrs. Ginter could bear. "Abe Ginter! That's not so!" she cried. "Why had you not a right to join the post, I'd like to know! Weren't you a soldier? Didn't you get wounded? Haven't you got an honourable discharge? Why aren't you as good as any of them?"

"That's my secret, Sary. I've kept it for forty years. There are only three men that know it, and if they are livin' they're livin' in Indiana; but I can't associate any longer with volunteer heroes like Adjutant James Madison and Chaplain David Graham. I'm not fit."

"Fit, fiddlesticks!"

Sarah Ginter had completely lost her temper, but her husband was still calmly resolute. With increased effort he went on with his letter:

If the post had known what I know, they wouldn't have taken me in the first place. It's better that I get out while I'm alive, and not wait till I'm dead. This is for the sake of my conscience and to be fair with the post.

Your Obedt. Servant
Abram Ginter.

When he had signed his name, the old man read the letter over to himself.

"It's not just as I wanted it," he said. "That last is badly mixed. But I haven't time—or strength—to write it over. Where's Hannah? She must take this to William Torrey right away."

But Mrs. Ginter had not yet recovered from her astonishment and indignation.

"Hannah's not going to take that crazy letter to town till she's had her dinner. I'll settle that. Why, it's a mile to William Torrey's house, and here it's almost twelve o'clock!"

While she was scolding, she laid the letter on the bureau, and took away the pencil, paper and geography. Then noticing the ashen look on the old man's tired face, her voice took on a kindly tone.

"There," she said, "you lie back. You're tired now. Let me get this pillow out. I'll have your broth ready in a minute, and when you eat some you'll feel better."

She eased the old man's head down on the one pillow and smoothed back his thin gray hair.

"The letter must get to him, so it can be presented at the meeting tonight," he said. "There's no time to lose."

"I'll send Hannah with it just as soon as she's finished her dinner."

As she bustled about her work, Mrs. Ginter felt that after all it had perhaps done her husband good to write the letter, for apparently it had relieved his mind.

When Hannah returned in the middle of the afternoon and told him she had delivered the letter into William Torrey's own hands, he seemed greatly pleased. That night he looked brighter and more cheerful than he had looked before in many weeks. He ate his gruel with a relish, and fell early into a restful sleep that lasted until at daylight the little brass cannon ushered in Memorial Day with its accustomed salute from the brink of the ledge north of the village.

But if Abram Ginter slept peacefully that night, there was consternation at the post. What did Abe Ginter's letter of resignation mean? Did not everyone know that no man in Pennsylvania was better qualified to belong to a Grand Army post than Abram Ginter? Had not a comrade from the West fought side by side with him and told them all one night before Abe joined the post about that dreadful day at Five Forks when Ginter got the wound that had lasted him through life? Of all the desperate and daring deeds of the Civil War what deed on either side had been more desperate and daring than his? And all for the rescue of a tattered and blood-soaked flag that he could not bear to see fall into the enemy's hands!

Since he had been with them in the post had he not been a faithful member? Then what did his letter mean anyway? But of only one thing they were sure: they must not let Comrade Ginter withdraw from the post in this summary fashion.

So they appointed the commander, the chaplain and the adjutant as a committee to interview the old man the next morning and to report to the post at half past nine o'clock, when they were to form for the Memorial Day parade.

At half past eight the next morning, William Torrey's two-seated surrey stopped in front of Abram Ginter's house, and the members of the committee got out. Hannah was the first to discover them, and she darted into the house and broke the news to her grandmother.

"For the land sakes!" exclaimed Mrs. Ginter. "Hold them outside a minute, Hannah, while I tidy up your grandpa's room."

With the alertness of youth, Hannah entertained the visitors on the porch for five full minutes before Sarah Ginter appeared at the front door and invited them to come in.

"It was a curious letter," she said, when the commander had explained to her the purpose of the visit. "Whatever possessed the man, I don't know. But you can go in and find out if you can; I'm sure I can't."

So they went into Abram Ginter's bedroom. He did not seem greatly surprised to see them, nor was he greatly pleased. He guessed the purpose of their visit and feared trouble.

"I got your letter," said Torrey, when they had inquired after Abe's health. "I read it to the post last night, and the boys don't know what it means. They appointed us a committee to come up here this morning and find out."

"Hasn't my resignation been accepted yet?" inquired the old man anxiously.

"Not yet, Abe," replied the commander. "The boys didn't understand; they wanted to know first what it was all about."

"That's my secret, William Torrey," responded the sick man firmly. "I can't tell you that. You ought to have accepted it the minute you got it—for the good of the post."

"Now, Abe," broke in the chaplain, "don't you think you owe us some explanation?"

"It wouldn't do any real good," was the reply. "No explanation would help any. Besides, what's the use of my spreading my disgrace broadcast? Can't you do the right thing by me and let me go?"

"But we don't want to let you go, Abe," said the adjutant. "We don't believe there's any good reason for your going. And we can't believe it till you tell us what it is."

Then Abe turned his face to the wall in silent protest. The visitors looked at one another awkwardly until Sarah Ginter came to the rescue. She had entered the room with the visitors and had remained standing at the foot of the bed.

"Abe Ginter," she exclaimed, when she felt that the silence had lasted long enough, "don't be a fool! Maybe you have been a knave, but if you have prove it! Prove it!"

"It wasn't quite that, Sary," he replied weakly. " Just a coward, that was all."

"Why, you weren't a deserter, were you?"

"No."

"Nor a spy?"

"No."

"Nor a—"

"Bounty jumper?" suggested the chaplain.

"No, oh, no!"

"Ever break and run under fire?" asked the adjutant.

"Me? Never!" replied the old man with spirit.

"Well, when you first enlisted—" persisted the adjutant.

"I didn't enlist," interrupted the sick man, facing his visitors.

"Didn't enist?"

It was evident that the old man had spoken inadvertently; but Sarah Ginter quickly followed up the clue.

"Then how under the canopy did you get into the army?"

The gaunt face of the helpless veteran reddened with shame as he looked hopelessly from one to another of his inquisitors. He knew that the game was up.

"I was drafted," he said simply.

And now that the secret was out, he hurried on in explanation.

"Yes, gentlemen, drafted; forced against my will to help defend the flag of my country; for two years a laggard and a drone in the comfortable North, while you volunteers were spilling your blood and wasting your lives at the front. And then drafted, drafted! Flung into the army! Oh, it's disgraceful! I'm not fit to associate want to get out—that's why!"

He lay back on the pillow exhausted and the gray ghosts of weakness again chased the colour from his face.

Commander William Torrey looked at Chaplain David Graham, and Chaplain David Graham looked at Adjutant James Madison, and the faces of all three men flushed consciously; but in William Torrey's voice there was a merry twinkle.

"Well, boys," he said to his two companions, "I guss he has sized you up about right, eh? Better smile and take your medicine."

Then he turned to Abe Ginter and laid his hand affectionately on the sick man's arm.

"I have to tell you, Abe," he said, "that both my adjutant and my chaplain loved their country so much that they went to war—to escape the provost marshal's posse in the draft of '63."

Then all three visitors began to laugh, softly at first, and then more merrily, and Mrs. Ginter, after wiping her eyes with the corner of her apron, joined in, and—well, for a few minutes it did not seem like a sickroom at all.

Abe Ginter lay bewildered, and looked helplessly from one to another of his visitors. Suddenly William Torrey grew sober.

"Abe Ginter," he asked, "did the fact that you were a drafted man make you fight any less vigourously, make you any less anxious that the old flag should come victorious out of every battle? I know very well that it did not."

The old man's hand stole along the coverlet until it reached and grasped the hand of the post commander. The others looked on with deep emotion.

"William Torrey," he replied, "when the government forced me to fight it made a patriot of me. When I went down there and saw what those boys were doing and suffering for their country, it made me feel just as if I wanted to lick the whole Confederate army single-handed. Oh, I tell you there wasn't a drop of my blood that was too good to be shed for Abe Lincoln and the flag!"

"Good! Good! I knew it!" exclaimed the commander. "That was just the way with Graham and Madison; wasn't it, boys?"

But without waiting for them to answer he hurried on: "And as for getting out of the post, it's the rankest nonsense! The boys won't listen to it for a minute."

"But, maybe, if they knew," began the old man feebly, and William Torrey interrupted him:

"Knew? Knew what? That you were drafted? Ay! But they shall know. They shall know that you never lifted a finger for your country until you were forced into the service. And they shall know, too,—indeed they already know,—that no braver soldier ever wore the blue. Why, man! If what Sam Havens wrote me from Indiana is true,—and Sam Havens never told a lie in his life,—you ought to be wearing a congressional medal today for exceptional bravery under fire. That's right!"

The chaplain and the adjutant nodded their approval vigourously; but Abe Ginter had nourished his delusion for years until it had become a deeply rooted conviction; he could not easily give it up. He was still doubtful what attitude his comrades of the post would take. "I'm afraid," he said, "that they wouldn't want me to stay."

The commander rose to his feet. "Look here, Abe Ginter, I know those boys, every mother's son of them. I know they won't accept that resignation; and what's more, if you don't withdraw it, and do it today, they'll—they'll court-martial you for insubordination. I'm going back now and say that you authorize me to withdraw it, and Graham and Madison shall be my witnesses. You do authorize me, don't you, Abe?"

But the old man could not answer. His voice was beyond control, and tears were chasing one another down the furrows in his face. He took a fresh grip on the post commander's hand, and reached out his other hand to Graham and Madison in turn.

"Silence gives consent," said William Torrey. "Come, boys, we must go. We report at half past nine."

So they were off, and Abe Ginter was left alone with his wife. "Now that you've got that off your stubborn old mind," she said, "I hope you'll decide to get well."

But the old soldier soon began to worry again.

"William Torrey means well," he said, "and so do Graham and Madison, but they're not the whole post."

At half past nine he asked whether it was not almost time for the Memorial Day procession to start. The route was a quarter of a mile away, but at least he could hear the band.

"Not for an hour yet," replied his wife. "I'll open the window more, and swing the bed around so that you can look out and hear it better when it comes."

At ten o'clock, with the assistance of her granddaughter, she moved the head of the invalid's bed to the window, so that he could look out across the front yard to the orchard on the wooded rise of ground that hid the river road from his view; but he knew how the procession would look. There would be the village band in the lead, the marshall of the day on horseback with a red sash across his breast, a carriage containing the officers and speakers, another in which would ride the crippled and feeble veterans, a dozen old soldiers in uniform on foot, a score of young girls dressed in white, carrying wreaths and bouquets of flowers to lay on the graves of the soldier dead, and at last, on foot and in carriages, the citizens of the town.

Many a time he had marched in such a procesison, but he would never march in one again. Even while he dwelt on this thought, from somewhere far away came the soft music of a band. The old man put his hand to his ear to catch the strains more clearly, and his wife raised the window sash higher and braced it with a longer stick.

The music grew more distinct. Doubtless the procession had reached the nearest point to Abe Ginter's cottage; and the melody would soon fade away. Mrs. Ginter had taken a chair by the head of the bed and was also listening.

"Seems to me," she said, "it's remarkably plain. The air must be clear today."

Then something that she saw down the road attracted her attention and she went to the window.

"Abe Ginter!" she cried. "I do believe"—then she brushed her hands across her eyes to make sure they were not deceiving her—"I do believe they're coming up this way."

"No," he replied, lifting himself on his elbows. "No, they—they wouldn't—"

Sure enough, there they were, coming around by the back road, a half mile out of their way, just to pass Abe Ginter's house. There were the band and the marshall; and there were the carriages and the little group of veterans and the flower girls and the citizens; he saw them with his eyes—at least until his eyes grew so wet that he could not see at all.

"They're doing it for you, Abe!" cried Mrs. Ginter. "They're doing it for you! Here, Hannah, quick! Help me get your grandpa up so that they can see him. Put those pillows at his back. There, how's that? They're doing it for you, Abe! Isn't it grand?"

"Halt!"

It was Commander William Torrey who gave the command. The old boys were there in the road, less than a hundred feet from Comrade Ginter's window.

"Left face! Salute!"

Every hand went up to its corresponding hat in obedience to the command.

"Comrade Ginter," said William Torrey, "the members of this post appreciate your bravery in war, your devotion to the Grand Army, and your faithfulness as a comrade. They know why you wished to resign, and they will not release you from membership. Living or dead, you shall never be dropped from the roll; and may God keep you with us in body for many a day."

He turned to his command:

"Right face! Forward march!"

The band and the marshall, the carriages, the veterans, the white robed girls and the citizens passed up the road, leaving in his wayside home the proudest man who saw the sunshine that beautiful day.

New hope came to him and new strength, and the long summer, the happiest that he had known in years, passed gently over his head; but when the girls went again in May to lay flowers on the mounds of sleeping heroes, they placed a wreath on Abram Ginter's grave.

Straders Hill

Friends will be sorry to learn that Mrs. Earl Johnston, of Toyes Hill, has infantile paralysis.

Miss Mara Strader is visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Durham Wells, Hoasic, this week.

Miss Olive Strader called on Mrs. Mason Hanson on Monday.

Mrs. Blanche Hanson has returned home after spending some time with her sister, Mrs. McIntosh, at Spencerville.

Visitors of Mr. Herb. Hanson Sunday were Mr. and Mrs. C. Wylie, of Toyes Hill, and Mr. and Mrs. L. Miller of Dixon.

Visitors at Mr. Henry Hanson's were Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Strader, of Dundela; Mr. and Mrs. Jim Wells and children and Mrs. W. McGowan, of Dundela.

"He said he would lay the earth at my feet," said the sentimental girl.

"Yes," answered Miss Gadabout, "it sounds good, but it is not practical. You already have the earth at your feet. What you want is a three- or four-story house over your head."

Further Plans Are Made Publishing "Historical Review"

A meeting of the Finance Committee of the Old Home Week was held in the Community Hall on Thursday evening last when arrangements for the publication of the historical review were furthered. Advertising space in the book will be sold at the rate of $5 for a full page, $3 for a half page, and $2 for quarter page.

A membership fee to include a badge was set at $1.00, and copies of the Historical Review will be sold for 50 cents. The members of the Finance committee will shortly canvass the town and vicinity for advertising space to be sold in the book, and it is hoped prospective advertisers will have the layout of their ads made ou: ready for the committee when the call is made.

J. Howard Fulton was appointed as treasurer and Dr. A. B. Clayton secretary. Members of the committee present were J. H. Fulton, Geo. H. Barkley, A. J. Barrie, Geo. Gillard and Dr. A. B. Clayton.

"Pro" Alford Making Good With Springfield Indians

The word comes from the training camp of the Springfield Indians at Quebec, that Chesterville's aspirant for major hockey as a goaler, Lyle "Pro" Alford, is attracting considerable attention not only from Coach Boucher of the Indians but from other high ranking hockey experts who have looked him over. Whether "Pro" will make the grade or not this year will not be determined for several days yet. With Keith "Kitt" McConnell, of Morewood, who is going big guns on the defence, and one other, these three represent all the rookies who are left at the Quebec training camp out of nine or ten who were given a chance to show their wares.

TEMPERANCE SERMONS.

Sunday last in the United and Presbyterian churches, temperance in the use of intoxicating liquors was the theme of discourses when Rev. A. R. Sanderson, of Whitby, occupied the pulpit of Trinity United in the morning, and Rev. C. A. Adey, of Williamsburg, in the evening. At the evening service in St. Andrew's, Rev. Mr. Sanderson was the preacher.

Young Winchester Mother Passed Away Unexpectedly

A sad and unexpected death occurred early Monday morning in Winchester, when Lillian Farmiloe, wife of Clare Brown, passed away after giving birth to a daughter who survives along with six other children. Mrs. Brown, who was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Farmiloe. Morewood, was in her 36th year, and she gave her time fully to her home and family.

On Tuesday afternoon, loving tribute was paid to her by the large attendance at the funeral service in St. Paul's Presbyterian church, Winchester. Her pastor, Rev. W. D. Turner, spoke from the words, "We all do fade as a leaf," and spoke highly of the deceased. He was assisted in the service by Rev. W. S. Atchison, of the United church. A solo, "He's the One,' 'was sung by Mrs. W. D. Turner. Interment was made in Maple Ridge cemetery.

Ball-Heisler

The marriage of Miss Helen Dorothy Heisler, of Ottawa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Heisler, Lunenburg, N.S., to Mr. J. H. Grant Ball, son of Mrs. Arletta Ball and the late Irvin Ball, of Chesterville, took place very quietly on October 14th, at half past four in the afternoon at Parkdale United church, Ottawa. Rev. Norman Coll officiated and the couple were unattended.

A becoming model of moss green satin-backed crêpe and a corsage bouquet of Johanna Hill roses were worn by the bride.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride's uncle, Mr. J. A. Heisler, 442 Lewis st., following which Mr. and Mrs. Ball left on a motor trip through New York State. The bride travelled in a brown wool crêpe dress and brown coat with beaver trimmings, and with matching accessories. Upon their return, Mr. and Mrs. Ball will reside at Ridgemount.

Elma

Mr. Will Shaw is spending a few days with Mr. Hugh Shaw.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred. McMillan and Rev. and Mrs. R. S. Smith were in Brockville on Tuesday to see Mr. John Barkley, of Boucks Hill, who is very ill in hospital.

The pastor of the U would like to thank all the f have given so generously toward the carload of vegetables for the West.

IN MEMORIAM.

Fleming—In loving memory of my dear father, Thos. H. Fleming, who passed away November 2nd, 1936.

Snuff the candle slowly lest the glow
Shall leave us in the blackness of our sorrow;
And lower the curtain gently—whisper low—
For we must in silence seek to borrow
A song of yesterday to last the morrow.

Sadly missed and ever remembered by his daughter Jennie.
