LOCAL AND GENERAL

Farm tractors sold in the prairie provinces of Canada during 1928 totalled 17,143, an increase of 7,117 over the previous year.

Several residents of Perth were fined by the police magistrate for not having a radio license when the inspector unexpectidly called on them.

Over $9,000 has been subscribed by the citizens of Kemptville toward the erection of a covered rink on Riverside Park. As only another thousand is required operations are expected to begin shortly.

For driving his car recklessly on a local street, a Perth motorist was fined $16.50 and his license cancelled for thirty days, says the Perth Courier. And it would not be surprising if the same thing happened in Winchester with some of our over zealous drivers.

Thirty-two years ago the first Women's Institute was organized in an Ontario village. This movement has since spread, not only across Canada, but almost throughout the world. In the Dominion there are about 2,200 branches, of which more than 1,000 are in Ontario. The Province of Alberta comes next with 312.

The following from an exchange is well worth quoting. "It is only when every citizens becomes proud of the home town and puts his shoulder to the wheel of community improvement that the hopes and ambitions for the future of the town take substantial form. By working together for community betterment the people work for the advancement of their individual selves."

Recommend Mr. Lawson

The law association of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, at a meeting held at Cornwall, passed the following resolution:

Moved by I. Hilliard, K. C., of Morrisburg, and seconded by J. G. Harkness, Counties Crown Attorney, and R. F. Lyle read as follows: "That the Law Association unanimously recommend W. B. Lawson, K. C., of Chesterville, as Judge of the County Court of the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, and if for any reason the appointment be not made, we unanimously recommend the appointment of F. T. Costello, of Alexandria, as such Judge, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. Mr. Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Justice, at Ottawa.

Sleigh-Widening Bill

Recently we referred to a bill in Legislature by which owners of sleighs would be fined $50 and costs if they did not comply with the terms of the bill by December 1st. The bill was introduced into the Legislature by Mr. Mahoney, M. P. P. for South WentWorth and on March 7th received its first reading. The bill was so unpopular that it was withdrawn and it is to be hoped it never re-appears. The exact wording of the bill follows: "No sleigh or other vehicle upon runners shall be used by any person upon any highway in Ontario unless the runners thereof, measuring from centre to centre, are apart at the bottom exactly four feet nine inches. Every person who contravenes the provisions of this section shall incur a penalty not exceeding $50 recoverable under The Summary Convictions Act."

Took Mother's Advice

"You won't get it," was the answer Mrs. Annie Brown gave to a youth who entered her small store at Montreal last week and ordered her, at the point of a revolver, to hand over what money there was in the cash register.

When the would be bandit came around behind the counter, Mrs. Brown advanced to meet him, looked him over, and in a motherly tone, gave the youth some good advice. "I'd hate to see my boy come to the same condition you have," she said. "You are not the kind of a boy a mother feels proud of but you could be"

"I wouldn't use that revolver if I were you. There are other persons in this building who hear everything I am saying. You would not get away if you shot. Be a boy your relatives would like you to be, and leave me alone."

The revolver was withdrawn from her side, The youth dropped his head, grasped her arm, and said, "Thank you, madam." Then he was gone.

Stranded Married Couple

A young married couple from Syracuse, in a Ford car, found themselves stranded in Kingston, and their car in need of repair. Love is alright, but it don't pay for board or car repair, and the desperate couple appealed to the tender-hearted Mayor of the Limestone City, and were assisted to the extent of having their car repaired, given a good meal, and enough cash to land them at Ogdensburg. And thus will the name of "Craig," Kingston's big-hearted Mayor, go down in history.

Auction Sale Bidding

After bidding on an article at a farm auction sale the purchaser cannot change his mind. He must take and pay for it. This, in effect, was the ruling of Judge Thompsou, son of the late Sheriff Thompson. of Perth, Division Court at Whitby the other day. Edgar Storry sued Chis. Yakely for the price of a potato digger which had been sold by auction to Yakely at the sale of a farmer named Thompson. The auctioneer "knocked down" the digger to Yakely for $40. It was revealed later that the digger originaliy belonged to Storry, not Thompson, the former having a quantity of goods in the sale, including the potato digger. Yakely never took the article off the place and Storry asked for judgment for the sale price of $40. Yakely held that the digger was not a good one but His Honor held that such sales were held without warrancy being given and gave judgment in full. On the witness stand the auctioneer said this was his first sale in 27 years that had been challenged.

61 Years Ago

Sixty-one years ago yesterday, May 1st Aaron Sweet, a young lad with bright eyes and high ambitions, left his home and his mother's side at Hummingford, Que., and landed at Morrisburg, Ont., when under the kindly guidance of his uncle, Mr. Broder, he started on his career as clerk. Mr. Sweet has been in business ever since, and always in this section, for it was in 1870 that he came to Winchester, and here he has remained. Sixty-one years is a good long term, above the average, but the years with good living and close attention to the laws of health, have dealt kindly with Mr. Sweet and he is today as keen a business man as he was say fifty years ago. And what changes have taken place since the lad Aaron Sweet left his home and came to Ontario. Did he dream of paved roads, automobiles, telephones, radios, flying machines, short dresses for women and bobbed heads for girls young and old. No, in those early days of homespun suits and hooped skirts, very few had the vision of what would be the state of civilization in 1929. But Mr. Sweet has always kept up with the times and while he, like most men who have passed the three score and ten, likes to reminisce, and tell of "those good old days," he believes that even the good old days were not as good as the present, and that the progress and improvement have developed better characters, better homes and better people. The Press joins Mr. Sweet's many friends in congratulations and best wishes.

Earnest practical messages were delivered by J. A. Waddell on Sunday. From John 1 40 he spoke on Andrew of whom very little is said in the Bible, yet he did a magnificent piece of work when he brought his brother Peter to Christ. He also brought Christ the lad with the few loaves and fishes, and later introduced the Greeks to the Messiah. He was an average man with ability and what he accomplished shows us the possible power of a human life if consecrated to God. He was willing to be kept in the back ground and render his service quietly for his Lore, so much so that a great many people were influenced by the beauty of his character. Rev. Waddell showed the need for personal work such as done by Andrew and asked: Do we go out through the week to bring some person face to face with Christ? This is the business of the man in the pew as well as of the man in the pulpit. Andrew found that if he was willing to bring what he had to Jesus that would be blessed with results. Everyone has something they can give to their Master that He may make use of.

Speaking from Acts 4 13 in the evening the pastor showed this this to be a splendid testimony to the influeuce of Jesus upon the lives of these men and a great tribute to their character. Like their Master they took persecution calmly. In their zeal for the truth they exhibited the spirit of Christ. This spritit reflected in the daily lives of His followers is the real evidence of the christian life. The pastor urged his hearers to ponder over the lives of the Bible characters, especially Jesus, and get a personal relationship to Christ, knowing Him as our God and our Lord, imitate His life because we need living illustrations of the Gospel's precepts. In closing he asked this practical question—"Men and women whom the younger generation are watching from day to day what kind of life are you living?" In the morning the choir sang "Sing and Rejoice" and an Evenin Hymn at night. In both of these Mrs. Steele took leading solo parts.

At both services regret was expressed by the pastor for the departure of so worthy a citizen as Mr. Potter. who had always filled his position as Organist so efficiently and had so willingly helped in every department of the work of the Church.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered next Sunday morning.

"STAR" STORIES

How George Robey Got His First Chance and Nellie Wallace Was Kept Waiting.

Mr. Chance Newton gives us entrancing pictures of the early music halls of London, England, and shows how they saw the professional "birth" of many a "star." And he tells intimate little stories of people whom we all know, by name at least.

"When I first met George Robey it was on rather a peculiar occasion. It was at a matinee at the Oxford, and one of the turns was an entertainer called 'Kennedy the Mesmerist.' Kennedy, like most of his tribe, had quite a regiment of subjects on the stage, and these he put under what we called then the "fluence.'

"One of these 'fluence folk was a growing boy who did all sorts of strange antics on being pierced with needles, etc., and even consumed candles with a gusto."

This boy was George Robey. He impressed his power of comedy so strongly on the then manager of the Oxford that he was given a chance to do a singing and comic acting turn on his own! And another "star" had risen.

Sir Harry Lauder is another "top liner" whom Mr. Chance Newton knew in days gone by. About Lauder's beginnings there are many interesting stories in this book. Speaking of Sir Harry's financial success, Mr. Chance Newton says:

"Some of these big sums have accrued, of course, by way of sharing terms. It is not so long ago, however, as well I know, that Lauder, then rising to magnificent salaries, was compelled, by old contracts of several years' duration apiece, to fill all manner of dates at sums ranging from eight to twenty pounds a week!"

How Sir Harry would dislike that, if his own estimate of his "canniness" is to be relied upon. Yet on this point Mr. Newton tells us:

"The general legend as to Harry Lauder's said to be characteristically Scottish thrift, or 'nearness,' is, of course, only a legend. Those of us who know him well also know well that he is one of the most benevolent and philanthropic of men, who takes care never to 'let on' regarding his benefactions. In fact, as he said: 'I dinna let ma left hand knaw what ma richt hand doeth'."

Music halls were not always regarded as quite "the thing." It took the graciousness of King Edward to make them respectable. Of King Edward's first visit to a variety theatre there is a good story.

It was suggested that his Majesty would not wish to be seen by crowds entering the hall, so the business manager had a brain-wave. He arranged for a sort of royal box on wheels, to meet the King practically at his carriage door and "cart" him bang into the auditorium.

The idea was all right in theory, but failed in practice. The strange conveyance got stuck on its way into the theatre, and it was so long before they could move it that King Edward had to be conducted to his seat in another manner.

It would not be gallant to leave this book without making any reference to the many charming and clever ladies mentioned therein. So, as a wind-up, comes a very amusing story told by Nellie Wallace, the famous variety ad revue star.

"Not long ago, Nellie had an invitation to a very swagger Park Lane mansion, where she was to be the honored guest. On arriving there, the parlormaid kept her waiting in the hall for some time. Eventually on being reminded by Nellie that she was still there, the maid replied:

"'You must wait a little longer. The mistress is expecting a comic-faced actress, who I believe is called Nellie Wallace!'"

Gypsies Claim Permit to Steal.

Gypsies have always, whether justly or unjustly, been labelled as chronic thieves. The Romany has ever felt that the world is against him and collects toll. Gypsies were severely persecuted in days gone by and, until less than a hundred years ago there was a law in England making it a crime, punishable by hanging, simply to belong to the race or to speak their language.

There is a legend among the Alsatian gypsies that when Christ was to be crucified, the Roman soldiers came to a Gypsy smith and asked him to forge the four nails for the cross, one for each limb. The Gypsy refused in spite of every threat, and when the nails were finally made by a Jewish smith, the Gypsy tried to steal them. He succeeded in stealing only one, and that is why on the crucifix one sees both feet held by a single nail. To reward the Gypsy for his most laudable efforts, the Lord has granted permission to every member of the race to steal once in seven years.

A Gypsy does not steal because he is too weak to resist the temptation, but from topsy-turvy principles.

Insect Hunters.

Giant hunting grasshoppers nearly five inches long, that prey on small animals such as mice and the young of ground-nesting birds, are found in the Congo.

They rival the kangaroo as jumpers and can leap a considerable distance on to their prey. The hunting grasshopper is not so great a leaper in proportion to its size as the king grasshopper, the young of which, even before its wings are developed, can jump a hundred times its own length. Very few men can cover more than twice their own length in a jump.

The hunting grasshopper is the largest of all grasshoppers. Its great front lip hides a pair of jaws as effective as a hay-chopper, and its appetite makes it a plague to mankind.

Old Scots.

Many of the inhabitants of the Irish counties of Down and Antrim speak a form of old Scots, with little sign of the Irish tongue.

THE FASTEST TI

What Can Happen In a Single Eye-Wink.

The fastest thing that any man can do is to wink his eye. The instinctive re-action of winking when a cinder blows into the eye is about one-tenth of a second for most people. In that flash of time, an automobile speeding 60 miles an hour will move nearly 10 feet. A fast airplane will move more than twenty-five feet. Thus, the pilot can run into a small bird after he has first seen it before he can wing his eye against the expected shock, writes E. E. Free in Popular Science Monthly.

Some months ago, a workman fell out of the fifteenth floor of a building in course of construction in New York City On the thirteenth floor he grabbed a rope hanging from a scaffold and swung himself in on the twelfth floor, saving his life. He afterwards confessed that he was as much astonished by his act as anyone who saw him.

The explanation is that the fall of 20 or 25 feet before he grabbed the rope occupied about one second and a quarter, which was time enough for his thinking machinery to issue the orders which made his muscles take hold of the rope below at the proper instant. Had he been placed in equal danger while driving an automobile at 60 miles an hour he would have been killed.

Tests with a group of typical automobile drivers have shown that the average time needed to see a danger signal, realize its meaning and begin to press the brake level is a little more than half a second. In that time, a car travelling 40 miles an hour would move 30 feet. That distance represents the minimum margin of safety the driver must maintain to avoid accident.

As speeds increase, no remedy for the advancing number of accidents will be found in stricter driving tests or improved warning signals. Devices will have to be found speedier than the human nervous system.

One such possibility is the photo-electric cell. It can react to a light signal in less than one ten-thousandth of a second. Perhaps speeding automobiles and aircraft may some day be equipped with these lightning-like electric eyes, so that collisions can be avoided and speeds checked automatically before the human pilot even has time for his tenth-of-a-second wink, let alone for any kind of thought.

REAPED $100,000.

Government's Rake-Off In One Day From Gambling.

More than $100,000 was reaped by the French Government and the administration of the Casino of the Forest at La Touquet as the result of the amazing night of play at the baccarat tables recently.

This sum, which beats every record ever made at Le Touquet for a night's play, was taken by the box into which is paid 5 per cent. of the winnings of the players taking the banks.

The bets made during the night by the bankers and the players betting against them must have amounted to something between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000.

The casino's profits are used to improve Le Tourquet. More than $80,000 has been promised towards the construction of a branch railway which it is proposed to build between Le Touquet and Etaples, thus linking the resort with Paris and Boulogne.

The casino is to help in financing the construction of a harbor which will permit millionaires' yachts to anchor at this pleasure resort.

A new 18-holes golf course is also to be constructed close to the race-course.

Nearly all the best villas, for which the rents average more than $2,500 for the season, have been taken. Some of them cost more than $5,000 for the three or four months.

Collection of Odd Coins.

Coins and currency once valued at millions of dollars make up the collection of Cere C. Standford of Gregory, S.D., and shown in London, England recently. The currency is worthless now, except to collectors. The most valuable piece in the collection was taken from ruins at Pompeii.

One piece of Austrian currency, worth at one time $500,000, is in the collection.

In United States gold coins, Standford has $2 and 50 cents in single pieces, a 50-cent and 25-cent gold coin. He has U. S. paper money in 50-cent, 25-cent and 10-cent denominations.

A silver piece in the collection is one of three peace medals given by the United States to Indian chiefs in 1871. He has an Egyptian coin with the pyramids stamped upon it. Money used in Hong Kong has a Chinese emblem on one side and Queen Victoria on the other. Coins from the Philippines have Spanish inscriptions on one side and English on the other.

Twenty-Four Tons at a Bite.

An electric power-shovel with a dipper that will gouge out nearly twenty-four tons of earth in one bite is to be used in the open pit mining of coal in Illinois, United States.

The shovel boom is 120 feet long and the dipper stick 82 feet long. Material can be lifted to a height of from 90 feet to 100 feet, and deposited over a radius of 150 feet from the centre of operation. Only one man is needed to control the shovel, which is worked by three hand levers and one foot pedal.

Fruit In Briquet Form.

Karl Hessel, a German engineer who has devoted his life to the study of fruit and vegetable chemistry, has developed a method of preserving whereby fruits and vegetables are reduced to dry powder, which is pressed into a briquet. In preparing for use, the briquet is dissolved in water and the substance and taste are revived.

Toronto Star: Once again a member of parliament has arisen at Ottawa to suggest that Canada should annex the West Indies. . . . There ought to be an increased trade, because they have much we could buy and there is much we could sell them. No doubt capital from this country will, in increasing amounts, be invested there. But Canada as a country is large enough already and has troubles enough without ransacking distant seas in search of more.

Public Ownership in Australia

Harold Cox in the London Financial Times: The Australian State Railways have for years been losing money heavily. The loss now amounts to several millions a year. Again, the losses on State shipping have been so serious that the Commonwealth Government has reluctantly found itself compelled to abandon its shipping venture, and the ships have been sold off. The many smaller State enterprises on which Australia has embarked also show heavy losses. These definite results fully justify the Dickham Commission in their strong recommendation to Australia to look for prosperity to private enterprise, facing its own risks in the hope of securing profits, rather than to State interference with trade and industry.

West Indian Federation

Kingston, Jamaica, Mail: Just at present it is doubtful if federation would be feasible; there is not yet sufficient community of interest in the various colonies. The recently concluded West Indies Conference has done a great deal to improve that situation; and conferences to be held in the future will do more. The ground is being prepared; proposals have been drafted for unified legislation relating to tariffs and shipping; these West Indies today are more inclined to speak with a common voice than they were twenty years ago. All these things will have their influence on the political and economic developments of the immediate future; but many doubt whether the present generation will see the advent of anything approaching Dominion status. There are cross-currents observable here, one of them being the tendency to regard the Eastern and Western groups of colonies as having interests that cannot easily, if at all, be harmonized.

Promise and Performance

London Weekly Scotsman (Cons.): The Liberals and the Socialists may have their marvellous cure-alls in the way of promises. The Unionists have their solid achievements in the way of safeguarding and rate-easing, which are already beginning to operate, and which will solve the unemployment problem in the only way it can be solved, by a steady and increasing absorption of the unemployed into productive industry.

THESE SIMPLE RULES MAKE TEETHING EASY

Be careful of Baby's diet during teething. Do not overfeed him. Watch his stomach and bowels and at the first sign of indigestion, gas or constipation, give him a few drops of harmless, pleasant-tasting Fletcher's Castoria. These simple rules are making teething easy on millions of babies—and mothers, too. For over thirty years Castoria has been the trusted standby of mothers everywhere. It soothes wakeful, cross babies to sleep quickly and easily—and it's purely-vegetable, so you can give it as often as needed. It does the work of castor oil better and more gently. For your protection, the bottle of genuine Castoria always bears the Fletcher signature.

Too Much ACID

Many people, two hours after eating, suffer indigestion as they call it. It is usually excess acid. Correct it with an alkali. The best way, the quick, harmless and efficient way, is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained for 50 years the standard with physicians. One spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids, and at once. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

You will never use crude methods when you know this better method. And you will never suffer from excess acid when you prove out this easy relief. Please do that—for your own sake—now.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions—any drugstore.

I feel so safe with the Tablets that I always keep a box in the house."

Woman in Men's Clothes Not New

Some Remarkable Parallels to the Case of "Colonel Barker"

The case of "Colonel Barker, D.S.O.," who confessed, recently, to being a woman who had masqueraded for six years as a man, is very far from being unique. It would not be hard to fill a book with precedents. Both our Army and our Navy have produced their share of them, writes Francis Gribble in The London Referee.

There was, for instance, Mrs. Welsh, who fought and was wounded in the battle of Ramillies. Her sex was discovered in hospital. After her recovery she was given the post of regimental cook.

In the churchyard of St. Nicholas Church, Brighton, is a tombstone to the memory of Phoebe Hessell, who died a hundred years ago at the age of 108. In order not to be separated from her soldier husband she enlisted and served for nearly twenty years with the British Army in the West Indies, and on the Continent, being wounded at the battle of Fontenoy.

Then there was Mary Ann Talbot, believed to have been a daughter of Lord William Talbot, Steward of His Majesty's Household. She served as a powder monkey under Lord Howe on the glorious first of June; and she subsequently became an actress and played Juliet at Covent Garden.

Still more famous is the case of Dr. James Barry, whose name heads the list of Inspectors-General of Hospitals in the 1865 Army List. Dr. Barry died in July of that year, and it was then officially reported to the Horse Guards that the doctor was a woman.

Her professional career had extended over half a century. She had fought a duel at the Cape with Sir Josiah Cloete. It is said that she was the legitimate granddaughter of a Scottish Earl, and had adopted the medical profession because she was in love with an army surgeon.

An interesting French case is that of Mlle. Vidginie Ghesquiere of Delemont, who entered the army as a "substitute' for her brother, disguising herself in his clothes, because he had no stomach for fighting. She was promoted to the rank of sergeant for saving an officer's life at Wagram, and was mentioned in the Order of the Day for distinguished services under Junct in Portugal.

If a man instantly turned his ears and mind away ,the assault would be easily repulsed; but as soon as he opens his ears so far as to dwell upon and daily with temptation, he is already well-nigh conquered, and the strife is at the hardest.—Dr. John Tauled.

As soon as thou hast bravely turned thine ear away from the tempting voice thou has well-nigh prevailed, for this enables thee to hear the inward voice, and takes away thy deafness.—Thomas A. Kempis.

Automobile Insurance

Ottawa Journal (Cons.): (The dates for third party automobile insurance have gone up 50 per cent.) When automobile owners get their new bills and discover the increased cost of probable that a very large number of them will drop this part of their policies and and retain merely those applying to loss. of the outomobile only. Against quite a large proportion of owners of motor cars the public has always had no redress; there are many from whom nothing could be collected by people injured by their cars. To increase that number by making the cost of insurance for legal liability more expensive, almost prohibitive in some cases, is a serious thing.

Sons of Farmers to Be Instructed

Kent Education Committee to Provide Way for Lads to Work and Learn

London.—The Kent Education Committee is providing a residential form institute to give agricultural education to the sons of working farmers and other young land workers who can afford to spend only a comparatively short time away from their work, and for whom the courses at college are too expensive.

The institute, which will be opened later in the year, is situated at Borden, near Sittingbourne. It comprises a large lecture-room, two smaller lecture rooms, two laboratories, two students' common rooms, a staff-room, a carpenter's shop, a blacksmith's shop, a large dining hall, single cubicles for 40 resident students, and accommodation for the teaching and domestic staff.

Seven cres of land are available for sports and games; and there is a farm of 250 acres which will be used primarily for demonstrating, under normal farming conditions, the theory underlying the agricultural practice taught in the lecture-rooms.

In addition to the boarders, day students will be admitted. The fees will be low, and a number of scholarships will be available.

THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE AND THE CHURCHES

A Presbyterian correspondent writing to the Toronto Globe last week asked the question. "Why do we not hear more sermons on temperance in our churches today?" and then went on to point out that in the olden days when the bar-room was in full swing it was a common thing to listen to a sermon on the evil of over indulgence in intoxicants. But today the pulpit is silent. Why? Read the daily papers, and every issue contains an account of some tragedy, the result of indulgence in strong drink. Shooting, stabbing, hold-ups, murders. Bootlegging is more in evidence in Ontario today than at any time in its history. More car accidents are the result of liquor than ever before. Everywhere the trail of the serpent drink is in evidence. And what are the churches doing about it. Oh, we must educate our children. We must teach temperance in our Sunday Schools. All very well. But where are the brave and true advocate of temperance, the real champions of the cause, who are not afraid to publicly denounce a growing evil that is every day winding its slimy cords about the powers that should be fighting it, and resisting it at every turn? Is it because they are afraid to offend some church adherent whose political leanings are toward the government that has placed this curse of Government Control on the people, unasked and unwanted. Would a plebiscite of the people of Ontario today support Government Control? No! It never has and never will. But too many people put their politics before their religion. They believe in the righteousness and the goodness of God, but they believe more in their political party and what it will bring them. And on the whole, is the pulpit showing itself much better? The Government Control Act is proving almost as great a curse to the province as the bar-room did, but its work is not so open but more insidious. It is time the Churches took up the cudgel against this great moral canker.

A BOY'S WEEK

In many cities in the United States May 19 to 25 will be observed as "Boy's Week," a week set apart for a boys programme in School, in Municipality and in the Church. Chicago is to have such a week, and an item of news left with the Press states that 700,000 lads in that city, under 21 years, are to take part in the program. The object is to call special attention to the needs of boys, and for the kind of situation that will help them grow into better citizens than their fathers. To most boys father is the acme of perfection. He is the boys ideal of what a man should be. Unhappy is that home where a father is not so regarded. So it will be hard to teach the boys to aspire to be better men than their fathers. But they may be inspired with an ambition to be as good as they think their fathers are, and that would be something. The idea is one that should be encouraged. There is no reason why Winchester should not have at least one day set apart for a "Boys Day," when the boys of the town and their fathers could meet together and discuss the problems that confront the youth of today. Let us have the boys point of view as well as the fathers point of view. Here is work for our clergy to undertake with the help of the school teachers. Anything that can be done for the boys is work well done, and will bring its reward.

OBEYING THE LAW

Within a week "Stop" signs will be placed on certain streets in Winchester, and certain locations designated as "no parking" places. Common sense will convince anyone that the work of the authorities in this direction is intended only for public safety. It is a law that you instinctively obey when you visit the city. You know if you transgress you are liable to a fine. You know the authorities have enacted such laws for the public safety. But in your home town you imagine you have a privilege, and you do not feel like complying with regulations the same as you do when you visit other places. Get the habit. Show a good example. Uphold the law for the general good. The law in Winchester with reference to parking, speeding and other precautions will be enforced. The local policeman has been instructed to enforce the regulations. The easiest way, the sensible way, the decent way, and the right way is to obey the law. It entails no hardship. It imposes no restriction that is not for the general good. Why not fall in line and be a good and patriotic citizen instead of a crank and a thorn in the flesh.

It is such a good thing to do isn't it, when we hear something we are sure our neighbor or friend would like to hear, something that we know for certain will cheer and encourage him, to "pass it on." There is undoubtedly a great satisfaction for the person who tells the good thing, as well as those who receive the words of encouragement, and the inward satisfaction felt is a pleasant reward in itself. How often in your own contact with people you meet and know, you think some pleasant things about them even while you are talking to them, or you have heard of some fine thing they have done and it seems as though something inside just holds you back from telling it? Don't. Just resolve then to be big enough when you hear the good word to give the flowers while we live and "pass it on."—Jocelyn.

Quite a unique occurrence took place at Grace Church Men's Club Banquet, Tuesday evening, says the Trenton Advocate, when President Wm Avery requested a 30 second silent prayer of all present, 80 in number, in sympathy, respect and honor for the good life led by the late Mr. O.E. Fortune. The occurrence was unique in so far as there were 80 Protestants, among whom were Orangemen and Masons, offering up a prayer to their God for the father of the Local Knights of Columbus and a leading worker in the Roman Catholic Church. This is co-operative Christian love and is a spirit that would do the world good if it could be universally observed.

MYSELF

I have to live with myself and so—
I want to be fit for myself to know
I want to be able as days go by
Always to look myself straight in the eye.
I don't want to stand with the setting sun
And hate myself for the things I've done,
But I want to go out with my head erect,
I want to deserve all men's respect.
And here in this struggle for fame and pelf,
I want to be able to like myself—
I don't want to look at myself and know,
That I am bluster, bluff and empty show.
I never can hide myself from me;
I see what others may never see—
I know what others may never know.
I never can fool myself and so,
Whatever happens I want to be
Self-respecting and conscience-free.

Their Religion in Danger

A party of clergymen were attending a Presbyterian conference in Scotland. Several of them set off to explore the district.

Presently they came to a river, spanned by a temporary bridge. Not observing a notice that the structure was unsafe, they started to cross it. The bridge keeper ran after them in protest.

"It's all right," declared the spokesman not understanding the reason for the old man's haste: "we're Presbyterians from the conference."

"I,m no, caring aboot that," was the reply, "but if ye dinna get off the bridge you'll all be Baptists!"

Signature Solves Old Paris Murder

Application For Visa Results in Arrest of Wanted Man

Prague, Czecho-SSlovakia. — The vigilance of a Czecho Slovakian consular official at Paris was credited with solving a sensational two-year-old murder mystery involving three young natives of this country.

Dudolf Skalsky, 33, a mechanic, confessed after a long examination that he shot the three youths. Skalsky was apprehended through his passport signature after the Paris consular official had scrutinized every signature carefully since the murders.

The three young men, Kilka, Machorovski and Mueller, were found dead near Lourdes in 1927. They had gone to Paris immediately after graduating from college in Czecho-Slovakia in the hope of finding work.

Skalsky said in his confession that he met the three in Paris and offered to sell them a revolver. Cautious, the youths insisted on going to the outskirts of Paris to test the merits of the weapon.

Skalsky said he accidentally shot Machorovski during the trials and Kilka and Mueller attacked him. He fired at them and killed both.

Later, Skalsky said, he returned to Paris and obtained possession of their luggage by imitating their signatures.

When Skalsky recently applied for a passport visa, his signature resembled the forged writing to such an extent that police arrested him.

Trade With the U.S.A.

Victoria Colonist (Cons.): The fiscal aim of Canada should be to sell more to the United States than she buys from that country, and to sell her goods in the manufactured state instead of sending the raw products abroad to provide work for foreign workmen instead of her own. As an earnest of the development of such policy the tariff barriers against American goods should be raised, so as to promote manufactures at home and preclude the necessity of our people being driven to purchase American goods, and so sending money out of the country which should be retained for circulation in the Dominion.

HENRY'S SHORTHAND SCHOOL
Ottawa, Ontario
No school in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa Schools to come to it.
Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Timely Hints on Moth Control

The U.S. Dept. of Agriculture Gives the Latest Data in Reference to the Control of this Household Pest

"MOTH DOPE" LISTED.

The classic story of the man who bought a bag of mothballs and then sat up all night to pelt moths with them is due to be told again, now that the symptoms of Spring cleaning are appearing.

There will be laughs at his expense, for almost every woman prefers her own method of dealing with moths. But few know the most effective means of offense or defense, as witness the unofficial figures which report a $200,000,000 loss annually as a result of the depredations by this prime offender among fabric pests.

The Clothes Moth

The clothes moths are not anxious to be seen, and therefore always flutter about darkened corners. They love the darkness in which they perpetrate their crimes. They are frightened readily and have extremely guilty consciences, especially when clothing and other objects are moved. They then run or fly to concealment.

There are two very common species of clothes moths. They are the case-making clothes moth (Tinea pellionella) and the webbing clothes moth (Tineola biselliella). The adult of the case-making clothes moth has a wing spread of about half an inch. Its head is a dull yellow, with indistinct dark spots on the middle of the outer portions. The hind wings are silky, white or grayish.

The case-making moth is so named, not from the number of bad cases of apoplectic anger which it causes but because the larva, for its protection, makes a portable case out of spun silk and fragments of the fabric upon which it feeds (that's where last Summer's dress went). These cases attain a length of one-quarter to one-half an inch, depending upon the hunting grounds the moth has inhabited.

The larva almost never leaves its case. It withdraws into its silken shell when resting but when it gets hungry for another bite out of a dress or overcoat it sticks its head and first body segment out and nibbles away. It moves about restlessly, eating small holes here and there. As the larva grows it enlarges its case from time to time, both in length and circumference.

On reaching full growth the larva attaches its case of silken threads to the material upon which it has been feeding, or it may crawl to another part, carrying its case. After attaching itself firmly it seals itself with silk, thus making a pretty pupal the pupa or chrysalis to the active moth.

The webbing clothes moth is the most abundant and injurious of the fabric pests. During the last few years nearly all instances of severe clothes moth damage reported by manufacturing plants throughout the North, including New York, Chicago and Boston, have been associated with this species. Thousands and thousands of dollars are lost through moths by woolen and worsted manufacturers—a further incentive to get your moth.

A Thriving Moth

For years this webbing clothes moth has been the prevailing species in certain houses in West Massachusetts and Southearstern Connecticut. Although this type is often called the Southern clothes moth it has been shown by investigators to thrive equally well in the North. Its larva resembles that of the case-making moth. Unlike the latter, however, it has no case but spins silky transparent tubes or tunnels wherever it goes. Often it spins a cobwebby mass of silken threads, apparently at random, as it crawls around fabrics.

Of course, one of the best ways to get rid of moth sis to starve them. If you want to be a benefactor to moths be sure and have plenty of bristles, hair, feathers, fur and raw wool around the house. Those are ingredients for a moth's feast. And if you want to have a generous stock of moths always on hand all you have to do is to allow one piece of feather or hair-stuffed furniture to act as a breeding ground. And do not forget the piano felts and the stuffed pheasant.

Household moths almost never injure household fabrics or wearing apparel in daily or weekly use or articles that are brushed ,cleaned or beaten once or twice a month. Furniture, on the other hand, may be in constant use and still be infested. Next month is the time when the pests are on the wing in the greatest number. It is evident that the man with the moth balls was at least trying to do something about these pests. If he did not know exactly how to go about it, he could easily have found out. There are effective methods for the control of fabric pests by the use of which the losses due to them can be reduced to a minimum.

Means listed here for killing fabric pests or for protection against them have been tested by the United States Department of Agriculture. The first thing necessary is constant watchfulness. No treatment known to kill clothes moths that are alread in fabrics will have any lasting effect in keeping other clothes moths from infesting the fabrics later. No practical treatment known will render wearing apparel absolutely immune to attack.

Under all circumstances a thorough brushing and beating and, if possible, a sunning of all fabrics is required before any treatment is applied..

The following specifics are listed in the order of their effectiveness.

Nathalene. Very effective in the form of flakes or moth balls for protecting clothing in closets, trunks or tight chests.

Paradichlorobenzoe. Equal in effectiveness to napthalene and used in the same manner.

Camphor. For use in tight chests.

Pyrethrum powder..

Cold storage .

Storage in chests of red-cedar heartwood.

Dry heat is dependable if it can be applied, and treatment of cracks and hiding places with hot water, soap, gasoline, benzine or kerosene and dry cleaning are protective.

Clothes moths do not eat through paper to reach clothing; so any kind of firm wrapping paper is satisfactory, and several thicknesses of newspaper will serve. Articles first treated to free them from moths will remain safe if wrapped carefully in newspaper. It has been established that the printer's ink does not scare them away. Care must be taken to bend back the folds of the paper upon themselves at the ends of the bundles, so that the moths cannot crawl into a specially prepared dining room.

Although cold storaged things are usually frowned upon, this is not the case when it comes to dealing with moths. It is not alone the cold that kills the moths. They like an even temperature and can withstand a temperature of 18 degrees Fahrenheit for a long time. But to suddenly boost the temperature from 18 degrees Fahrenheit to 50 degrees Fahrenheit and hold it there for two days and then drop it again to 18 degrees Fahrenheit—well, the moth is no more.

Cedar Chests

Tests by the Bureau of Entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture show that a cedar chest with sides, ends and bottom of red cedar heartwood at least three-fourths of an inch thick and with a cover of solid red color or of neutral wood lined with red clear veneer will kill all the newly hatched young larvae of the clothes moth. Tests are now under way by the bureau to determine the relative effectiveness of chests containing various percentages of red cedar.

Some so-called moth-destroying materials, sworn by for years, have been found ineffective. Even if grandmother told you they were effective, discard the use of the following.

Tobacco extracts containing nicotine, lavander flowers, cayenne pepper, dusting allspice, black pepper, air slacked lime, dusting on powdered sulphur, dusted salt, borax, powdered eucalyptus leaves, sodium bicarbonate, lead oxide, dried red cedar leaves.

With an expression too awful to describe, the villian threatened the hapless hero. "At last I have you where I want you!" he snarled. "And over these lofty cliffs I'll hurl your vile body!" Raising the hero in his arms, he was about to cast him into the cruel sea when an interruption came from the gallery. "Don't waste 'im, guv-nor," cried a voice, loudly. Farm Notes

A BERRY BEARING CLIMBER

Among climbing vines that are useful in concealing screens, bare verandahs, summerhouses, old stumps and fences is the American Bittersweet, Celastrus scandens. This is one of the best climbers, being a rampant grower with glossy green leaves. This plant, if given a chance, will establish itself very quickly, as it twines about everything it can get hold of and is not subject to injury from insects and disease. It is described by W. T. Macoun, the Dominion Horticulturist, in his bulletin, "Ornamental Trees, Shrubs and Woody Climbers." Bittersweet has an advantage over some other very useful vines in bearing bright colored berries, which remain hanging after the leaves have disappeared. It is pointed out by the author in this bulletin, which is numbered 89 and published by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, that one in procuring a plant should have knowledge that it has borne fruit or has been propagated from a fruit-bearing vine, as some of the plants bear only male blossoms that do not set fruit. The American Bittersweet is but one of many hardy climbing plants described in the bulletin that have been tested at the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa.

PERENNIAL CLIMBING PLANTS

A greater use of climbing plants would add beauty to many of the homes in the country. Houses that lack beauty of architecture may be made very attractive by the planting of some of the hardy climbers. Verandahs, summerhouses, milkhouses, fences, rocks, and old stumps of trees covered with climbing plants will so change the appearance of the place that it will hardly be recognized by one who has known it before. Fortunately there are many hardy native climbers available in most districts and most nurseries carry suitable kinds at low prices. For many years a large number of kinds of these plants have been under test by the Central Experimental Farms system. The results of these trials are contained in Bulletin No. 89, "Ornamental Trees, Shrubs and Woody Climbers." Among the most favored of these for hardiness, rapidity of growth and permanence the Virginia Creeper holds a prominent place. This vine, Ampelopsis quinquefolia, a native of the colder parts of Canada, is one of the hardiest and quite suitable for Prairie Provinces planting. While it has tendrils by which it clings to wire supports and trellises, it does not attach itself well to walls. Another variety of the Virginia Creeper known as the self-fastening or Hairy Virginia Creeper, attaches itself firmly to brick and other walls, requiring no special support. This variety, found growing wild at Ottawa, is hardy for Ontario and the Eastern Provinces, as well as in British Columbia. Many other attractive climbers or ornamental trees and shrubs are described and recommended in this publication, issued by the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

ORNAMENTAL HEDGES

For dividing lines between properties or separating parts of the home grounds, living hedges are often more suitable than walls or fences. There are many plants suitable for hedging purposes, and most of these have been well tested at the Cetnral Experimental Farm at Ottawa, where there are no less than eighty-four hedges of sufficient length to make reliable comparisons. In testing hedge plants at the Central Farm about one hundred and twenty species of trees and shrubs have been tried out. Many of these have proved unsuitable. The hedges at the Experimental Farm are of different heights and breadths, and include both deciduius and evergreen varieties. These, as well as the method of their cultivation and care are described in Bulletin, 89 published by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa and entitled "Ornamental Trees, Shrubs and Woody Climbers." For positions where tall hedges are desired the Siberian Pen Tree has proved satisfactory, as have also the Honey Locust, the Common Buckthorn and some of the Birches. For tall evergreen hedges the Douglas Fir and the Norway Spruce are recommended, while for low evergreen hedges the American Arbovitae is very desirable. For deciduous hedges of medium height the Alder Buckthorn, the Wayfaring Tree and the Woody Caragana make good effects, while the Japanese Barberry, the Dwarf Cargana are well suited where low growing hedges are desired. The author of the bulletin, Mr. W. T. Macoun, the Dominion Horticulturist, observes that the shape of hedge that has been found most pleasing to the eye, and at the same time ensures the branches remaining alive almost or quite to the ground, is one with the broadest part of the hedge at the ground, gradually narrowing towards the top and the top being rounded instead of being pruned to a sharp point.

"Come to Scotland"

London Observer (Ind.): The Secretary for Scotland disposed in a few perfunctory words on Wednesday of the question of developing recreation as an industry, although this is the policy which offers most prospect of revival for the depleted Highlands. Sir John Gilmour prefers to leave the matter "to such public bodies as the 'Come to Scotland' movement, and so on." But people will not go to the Highlands to walk upon highroads, and the shooting interest, which chiefly controls that area, does its best to see that they shall go nowhere else. The first necessary step is to pass the Access to Mountains Bill, and that is what a Scottish Minister who was in earnest about the matter would see to.

Third Installment

WHAT HAPPENED BEFORE

Palermo is the scene. There an exile, Leonardo di Marioni, has come for love of Adrienne Cartuccio, who spurns him. He meets an Englishman, Lord St. Maurice, who falls in love with Adrienne on sight. Leonardo sees his sister Margharita, who tells him his love for Adrienne is hopeless. But he pleads with her to arrange an accidental meeting, to say farewell, between Adrienne and him.

She consents. That night the Englishman is informed of an attempt being made to carry off Signorina Cartuccio and Margharita, who are walking, by brigands employed by a rejected suitor, on a lonely road. He rushes to the scene, and proves able to rescue the ladies.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

The two ladies looked at their preserver standing in the middle of the road—fair and straight and tall, like a Greek god, but with a terrible fury blazing in his dark blue eyes.

"You are not hurt, I trust?" he asked, his breath coming quickly, for he was in a towering passion. He was not speaking to the darker of the two girls at all; in fact, he was unconscious of her presence. He was standing by Adrienne Cartuccio's side, watching the faint color steal again into her cheeks, and the terror dying out of her eyes, to be replaced by a far softer light. Her black lace wrap, which she had been wearing in Spanish fashion, had fallen a little back from her head, and the moonlight was gleaming upon her ruddy golden hair, all wavy and disarranged, throwing into soft relief the outline of her slim, girlish figure, her heaving bosom, and the exquisite transparency of her complexion. She stood there like an offended young queen, passionately wrathful with the men who had dared to lay their coarse hands upon her, yet feeling all a woman's gratitude to their preserver. Her eyes were flashing like stars, and her brows were bent, but as she looked into his face her expression softened. Of the two sensations gratitude was the stronger.

"You are not hurt?" he repeated. "I am sorry that I did not get here sooner, before that fellow touched you."

She held out her hand to him with a little impetuous movement.

"Thanks to you. No, Signor," she said, her eyes suddenly filling with tears. "Oh, how grateful we are, are we not, Margharita?"

"Indeed, indeed we are. The Signor had saved us from a terrible danger."

"It is nothing. The fellows were arrant cowards. But what was the carriage doing here?"

He pointed along the road. Already the clumsy vehicle had become a black speck in the distance, swaying heavily from side to side from the pace at which it was being driven, and almost enveloped in a cloud of dust.

Adrienne shook her head. Margharita had turned away, with her face buried in her hands.

"I cannot imagine. Perhaps they were brigands, and intended to carry us off for a ransom."

The Englishman shrugged his shoulders.

"Odd sort of bandits," he remarked. "Why, they hadn't the pluck of a chicken between them, especially this one."

He touched the prostrate figure with his foot, and the two girls shuddered.

"He is—is not dead, is he?" Margharita asked.

"Not he. I shouldn't say that he was very badly hurt either," the Englishman declared, bending down and listening to his breathing. "More frightened than anything. He'll get up and be off directly we leave. You will let me see you home?" he continued, speaking to Adrienne.

She looked up at him with a gleam of humor in her wet eyes.

"You don't imagine that we should let you go and leave us here?" she said. "Come, Margharita."

The Englishman looked at the other girl, almost for the first time, as she came up and joined them. Her dark eyes were full of tears and her face was troubled. There was very little relief or thankfulness for her escape in her expression. The Englishman was no physiognomist, but he was a little puzzled.

"There is no danger now, Signorina," he said reassuringly. "To-morrow I will go to the police, and I dare say that we shall get to the bottom of the whole affair."

She shuddered, but made no reply, walking on by their side, but a little distance apart. As for the Englishman, he was in paradise. To all intents and purposes, he was alone with Adrienne Cartuccio, listening to her low voice, and every now and then stealing a glance downward into those wonderful eyes, just then very soft and sweet. That walk through the scented darkness, with the far-off murmur of the sea always in their ears, was like the dawning of a new era in his life.

It was she who talked most, and he who listened. Yet he was very happy; and when they reached her villa, and he left them at the door, she gave him a white flower which he had found courage to beg for.

"May I call on you to-morrow?" he asked, trembling for the answer.

"If you would like to, yes," she answered readily. "Come early if you have nothing to do, and we will give you afternoon tea à l'Anglaise. By the bye," she added, a little shyly, "is there not something which you have forgotten?"

He divined her meaning at once.

"Of course, I ought to have told you my name!" he exclaimed hastily. "How stupid of me. It is St. Maurice—Lord St. Maurice."

"Lord St. Maurice! Then are you not the fortunate possessor of that delightful little yacht in the harbor?"

"Yes, if you mean the Pandora, she's mine. Do you like sailing? Will you come for a sail?" he asked eagerly.

"We'll talk about it to-morrow," she laughed, holding out her hand. "Good-night."

He let her hand go. If he held it a moment longer, and a little more firmly than was absolutely necessary, was he much to blame?

"Good-night," he said. "Good-night, Signorina," he added, bowing to Margharita. "I shall come to-morrow afternoon."

Then he turned away, and walked with long swinging steps back to the hotel.

"MARGHARITA!"

She had found her way into a lonely corner of the villa grounds, and, with her head resting upon her hands, she was gazing across the blue sunlit waters of the bay. Below, hidden by the thickly-growing shrubs, was the white, dusty road, and the voice which disturbed her thoughts seemed to come from it. She pushed the white flowering rhododendrons on one side, and peered through.

"Leonardo!" she exclaimed. "Leonardo!"

"Are you alone?" he asked.

"Yes. Adrienne is in the house, I believe."

"Then I am coming in."

She looked troubled, but she could not send him away. He clambered over the low paling, and, pushing back the boughs of the shrubs which grew between them, made his way up the bank to her side.

"Have you been away?" she asked.

"Yes, I have been home. Home," he repeated bitterly. "I have wandered through the woods, and I have climbed the hills where we spent our childhood. I have looked upon the old scenes, and my heart is broken."

Her eyes filled with tears. For a moment her thoughts, too, went back to the days when they had been children together, and he had been her hero brother. How time had changed them both, and how far apart they had drifted. They could never be the same again. She knew it quite well. There had grown up a great barrier between them. She could not even pretend to sympathize with him, although her heart was still full of pity.

"Leonardo, I am sorry," she whispered. "How is it, I wonder, that all through life you seem to have set your heart upon things which are impossible."

"It is fate!"

"Fate! But you are a man, and man should control fate."

"Have I not tried?" he answered bitterly. "Tell me, do I so easily relinquish my great desire? Why am I here? Because I have said to myself that I will not be denied. Adrienne shall be mine!"

She looked at him steadily.

"We have not met, Leonardo, since the night after the concert. Do you know that we had an adventure on the way home?"

"Tell me about it," he answered, looking away.

"Is there any need, Leonardo?"

A faint tinge of color stole into his olive cheek.

"You guessed then," he said. "Tell me, does she know? Has she any idea?"

"None."

"She does not suspect me at all?"

"No; she thinks that it was an ordinary attack by robbers, and that the carriage was to take us a little way into the interior, so that they might hold us and demand a ransom. It was her own idea; I said nothing. I feel as though I were deceiving her, but I cannot tell her. She would never look upon your face again, Leonardo."

"You must not tell her," he muttered. "Swear that you will not!"

She shook her head.

"There is no need. I am not anxious to denounce my own brother as a would-be abductor."

"Margharita, I was desperate," he cried passionately. "And that cursed Englishman, he has become my evil genius. It was a miserable chance that enabled him to become your preserver."

"It was a very fortunate one for you, Leonardo."

"What do you mean?" he cried sharply. "Tell me, has he been here?"

"Yes."

He seemed to calm himself with a great effort. He was on the threshold of what he had come to know. He must keep cool, or she would tell him nothing.

"Margharita," he said slowly, "the time is fast coming when I shall have no more favors to ask you. Will you remember that you are my sister, and grant me a great one now?"

"If I can, Leonardo."

"It is good. I shall not ask you anything impossible or unreasonable. Tell me the truth about Adrienne and this Englishman. Tell me how you have spent your days since this affair, and how often he has been here. Then tell me what you yourself think. Tell me whether she cares for him; and he for her. Let me hear the whole truth, so that I may know how to act."

"Leonardo," she whispered, "remember our watchword, 'Endurance.' I will tell you everything. Lord St. Maurice came on the day after our adventure. He stayed till evening, and we walked with him on the Marina. The next day we went yachting with him. Yesterday and to-day he has spent nearly the whole of his time here. I believe that he is in love with Adrienne, and as for her, if she does not love him already, I believe that she soon will. You have asked for the truth, my brother, and it is best that you should have it. Forgive me for the pain it must cause you."

The Englishman sat quite still, holding in his hand a long, curiously-shaped dagger, which the first gleam of moonlight had shown him lying at his feet.

He was no coward, but he gave a little shudder as he examined the thing, and felt its blueish steel edge with his finger. It was by no means a toy weapon; it had been fashioned and meant for use. What use? Somehow he felt that he had escaped a very great danger, as he put the thing thoughtfully into his pocket, and leaned back in his chair. The shrill voices and clatter of glasses around him sounded curiously unreal in his ears.

By degrees he came to himself, and leaning forward took a match from the little marble table, and re-lit his cigar. Then, for the first time, he noticed with a start that the chair opposite to him was occupied, occupied, too, by a figure which was perfectly familiar. It was a Sicilian who sat there, quietly smoking a long cigarette, and with his face shaded by the open palm of his hand.

Lord St. Maurice made no sign of recognition. On the contrary, he turned his head away, preferring not to be seen. His nerves were already highly strung, and there seemed to him to be something ominous in this second meeting with the Sicilian. If he could have been sure of being able to do so unnoticed, he would have got up and gone into the hotel.

"Good-evening, Signor!"

Lord St. Maurice turned and looked into the white, corpse-like face of the Sicilian. It told its own story. There was trouble to come.

"Good-evening, Signor," he answered quietly.

The Sicilian leaned over the table. There were gray rims under his eyes, and even his lips had lost their color.

"A week ago, Signor," he remarked, "we occupied these same seats here."

"I remember it," Lord St. Maurice replied quietly.

"He is—is not dead, is he?" Margharita asked.

FRENCH MARITIME ALPS

ANCIENT TOWNS ARE OPENED TO TOURISTS.

Autoists' Demand to See Mountains Led to Construction of Modern Roads—Towns Date Back to Fifteenth Century.

France has always been noted for its roads, and since the war, in spite of the shortage of national funds, writes a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, a considerable highway extension has been achieved. This has been due to the increase in motor vehicles touring the country. Since 1923 the number of private cars and large touring buses carrying parties has tripled.

The largest users of cars were visitors from foreign countries, particularly the United States. And among most visitors there has been an ever increasing desire to see more of the outlying portions of France. To meet this demand French road builders have performed some fine engineering feats in many places, carving out perfect automobile routes to places formerly only accessible by mule path.

Some of the finest of these new roads are to be found in the maritime Alps westward from Nice. Here in a region of narrow valleys, low ridges, and mountains with flat-topped peaks, there extends over a stretch of some seventy miles of country a collection of ancient towns; towns for the most part deserted, that dream in the sun of memories of the past. Most of them are off the beaten path, and until the gradual expansion of motoring roads in the last few years, an extension still being continued, they were only reached after a steep climb on foot up narrow paths first worn by nimble goats. Indeed, it was largely the tourist demand to visit these places that led to a series of roads remarkable in construction and very costly, but which have already more than paid for themselves through money spent by visitors.

These ancent towns basking sleepily in the mild climate are scattered here and there on scores of ridge tops, or on flat little plateaus marking the culmination of the low mountains of the region. They are all very much alike, these brown and gray huddles of stone, with here and there rising among them the tower of a deserted church. They are all about the same age, belonging to the fifteenth century, though a few date back to Roman times. Built in those days when defence was the first thing considered, these ancient towns were always placed on the edge of a ridge or plateau, so that two sides at least faced upon a sheer drop. The outer walls of all the houses were built to form one solid front, a stout fortification broken only by narrow slits of windows in the earlier centuries, through which arrows could be sped or rifles fired. During the more recent times of habitation some of the old walls had parts of them knocked out to give place to modern windows. With the exception of such changes, these relics of the historic past are unchanged from the days when they were erected from 400 to 600 years ago. For long centuries the inhabitants of these places terraced up the meagre earth on the surrounding hillsides and valley slopes and gained a poor living frm the none too fertile soil. But the last twenty-five years have so changed living conditions that to-day the majority of these towns are deserted. In some of them one or two families remain and gain a living catering to tourists. For the most part the inhabitants have migrated to the big centres where the manufacture of automobiles and other industries gives them a living which their barren farms on the rocky hillsides no longer offer in these days of high cost of everything.

So the ancient towns now remain dreaming in the sun, the only excitement when a motor-car with tourists arrives, and the visitors go prowling through undulating and narrow streets which once rang to the shouts of men at arms fighting in the narrow ways, the clank of knights in armor and the twanging of crossbows. As the towns are built of solid stone, they will probably endure for centuries to come.

And if the natives of the land have largely ceased to be interested in these habitations of their forefathers, there have been tens of thousands of foreigners yearly so eager to see these historic spots that the "Routes Nationales," the roads built by the Government, and the "Routes Departementales," roads built by the different municipalities, have been extended to reach some amazing places, till, by the end of the year there will hardly be an interesting part of remote France that is not available to the motor tourist.

A description is here given of one of many pieces of similar roads, that leading to the very old village of Gourdon. This place stands on a high point at the end of a long valley some forty miles from Nice. To reach it from the valley a road had to be cut up the face of the mountain, some 2,000 feet. Yet, though the ascent is very steep, a road was completed up which a car of average power can climb at the rate of twenty miles an hour. This feat is achieved by a series of switchbacks, some of them exceedingly short, in some places almost touching each other, in order to overcome the ascent with an easily climbable grade. When the road reaches within a few hundred feet of the top, a series of rocky benches make the climb somewhat easier.

Surveying With Explosives.

Earthquakes manufactured by engineers are being used in surveying the right-of-way of the proposed Turkestan-Siberian Railway. Explosives are set off under the ground, and the resulting vibration accurately traced so that the character of the underlying strata may be determined. A special seismograph traces the vibrations on photographic paper with an accuracy that could not be attained by other methods.

A Farewell

A very pleasant evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John D. MacDonald, on Friday, April 26, when a farewell party was given in honor of Miss Mary McNab, who is leaving shortly for her new home in Winnipeg.

The evening was spent pleasantly in games of various kinds. Later Miss MacNab was called to the floor, and Miss Mary McDonald read the following address, while Miss Alma McDonald presented her with a lovely purse.

Ormond, Ont.

Dear Mary:—

We have assembled here this evening to extend to you on your departure from our neighborhood, our kindest wishes.

We regret to lose one such as you from our community. You have been a true and kind friend to all and you will be sadly missed.

In your absence from us we hope you will have all kinds of happiness, and among your new friends will not forget your old friends.

We present to you this small gift, not for its intrinsic value but as a token of our love and esteem.

Signed on behalf of your neighbours.

Miss MacNab was greatly taken by surprise, but by a few well-chosen words, expressed her appreciation for the beautiful gift, and for the thoughtful kindness and good will of her friends.

The party broke up by singing, "For She's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Rev. J. A. Waddell, of Winchester, was chairman, and Rev. John Hurst, of Elma, the secretary. Refrenceuce was made to the death of Rev. A. O. Watts, of Merrickville, recently, and sympathy expressed to the family. Sympathy was also conveyed to Rev. W. G. Announcement was made of a meeting of the boys' work board and also of the girls' work board for Dundas county to be held at Morrisburg on Friday afternoon of this week

The report of the special committee appointed to consider the new Hymnal elicited much information. The committee recommended that hymns of home life, patriotism and evangelism be given special considera ion, and also suggested other hymns to be included. It was decided that Psalm selections be embodied in the new hymnal, and that familiar hymns be retained with familiar tunes.

Rev. W. G Bedford, of North Augusta, tendered his resignation from the pastoral charge, and made request for superannuation. Mr. Bradford has given 36 years to the work of the ministry. and has not been in good health for several years. His request was sanctioned by Presbytery.

Dundas-Grenville Presbyterial

With over two hundred members of the Women's Missionary Society of the United Church in attendance the third annual meeting of this Presbyterial convened in Chesterville on Thursday last.

The officers met to transact necessary business at 9 a. m. while delegates were arriving and being registered. At 9.30 the Pres., Mrs. Clarke Hyndman, took the chair. With her on the platform were four vice Presidents, Mesdames Murdock, Stafford, Kerfoot and Armstrong, also Mrs. Coulthart and Mrs. Smith of the Morewood Auxiliary, who conducted the opening devotional exercises. Cordial words of welcome were given by Mrs. (Rev.) Newman of Chesterville, to which Mrs. Murdock replied.

After hearing the minutes of last year's meeting, Resolutions and Press committees were appointed and then Mrs. Hyndman expressed her appreciation for the help of her officers during the past year after which she conducted an impressive memorial service while the Vice-Presidents read the names of those in their section who had passed on to higher service.

Miss Connell in giving her report urged greater accuracy in auxiliary reports. The Treas., Mrs. Elliott, reported sending $9400 to our Branch Treasury. Miss Tweedie, President of the Montreal-Ottawa Conference Branch, extended hearty greetings therefrom. The different Supt's. of Depts told of progress in their work and of encouragments. Miss Tweedie conducted an interesting questionnaire, and Mrs. Russell closed with prayer.

A Young People's Conference was held from 11.12 under the direction of their leaders Miss Jessie Smith and Mrs. J. Anderson.

The afternoon session opened with devotional exercises by Cardinal Aux., after which Miss Connell called the roll and there were but few places not represented. Crystal Rock and Oxford Mills had nearly all their members present. An excellent review of two Missionary books was given by Mrs. A. Allison. "In Great Waters" is a story of our mission work on the Pacific Coast. "From Jerusalem to Jerusalem" will be the study book for next year. Mrs. Coleman, in her paper on "How to interest the uninterested," gave a call for great faith and christian endeavor, naming several ways of enlisting those not interested, and summing it up by urging us to plan, pray and persist. Mrs. D. McLeod, in leading the discussion, emphasized the arousing of the interest. Mrs. W. J. Cass also spoke, stressing knowledge of mission work, and the personal touch. Mrs. Hilliard said, "Let us talk about our mission work at meal time and at every opportunity so that we may interest the young folks in our homes. Tell them missionary stories and items from our missionary papers." Mrs. W. N. Fulton sang "Others" in her usual pleasing manner.

Miss Brimstin of West China, gave a brief talk on two very attractive Chinese buildings on the west side of Chengtu. These are Household Science Homes where each girl is to spend at least six weeks after graduating from the schools. Instruction is also given on the care of children. In the years to come we are going to realize a great blessing through the training of these girls. A beautiful Installation service for new officers was conducted by Miss Tweedie. At the tea hour greetings were brought by Mr. Hamilton, Reeve of Chesterville, by Mrs. Faulds from Glengarry Presbyterial, by Rev. Johnston from the Presbyterial, and by Mrs. Graham from the Anglican Church.

The evening session, which was very largely attended, was presided over by Rev. R. E. Newman. Rev. Hurst of Elma, extended greetings from the Presbytery. A beautiful selection entitled "Cast Thy Bread upon the Waters" was sung by Mrs. Geo. Merkley, Miss Elsie Hewitt and Madge Campderros. The address of the evening was given by Miss Brimstin, who took her hearers on an imaginary triy to China, asking them to visit the Womens Compound at Chengtu, 2000 miles inland. Some buildings found there are the W. M. S. Hospital and the Canadian Press Office. She described the kindergarten and other schools saving that the W M. S. has opened to the women of China avenues of usefulness unthought of before. These natives have carried on the work in the absence of the missionaries. Miss Brinstin asked for prayer for their special evangelistic services in China and said in closing, "We rejoice that God has used us and brought many into the Kingdom but there is so much yet to be done.

Mrs. (Rev.) Servage brought the report of the Resclution Committee in which appreciation was given for all who helped to make this gathering a success, and to the ladies of the congregation for excellent meals. The fact that a new Temperance Dept. had been created was commended and each Aux. was urged to include a short talk on this subject at their monthly meetings. Rev. Newman in reply expressed the pleasure of the Church in being privileged to entertain such a gathering.

A wonderful pageant "The Woman at the Well" was put on by the Chesterville Aux. in which the awakening from heathen darkness and from materialism to christianity was vividly depicted. The scenery for the background and the costumes for over 30 characters were very artistically arranged, and the musical and literary parts were so well done that it showed much talent as well as faithful practice. Morrisburg extended an invitation for the Presbyterial meeting next year. Rev. Newman closed with the Benedection.
