WOODS, WATER AND WILDLIFE

The most obvious things are often not true.

Like, for instance, the idea that snowstorms cause trees and weeds to shed their seeds. If you have given much attentnion to this sort of thing, you undoubtedly have noticed the rather heavy sprinkling of seeds that appears on the snow surface aftr ach storm. Juncos and time feeding on these seeds. They also are harvested by goldfinches.

For many years, we supposed the shower of seeds was an aftermath of the storm; that the combination of moisture and cold caused the seed heads to burst and scatter th bonanza at a time when the birds needed it most.

Naturalists however, have determined that the shower of seeds occurs at a rather regular pace throughout the winter A snowstorm neither speeds the process, nor increases the bounty. The clean blanket of snow just makes the seed more obvious than they are when they fall on the brown carpet of snow-free winter.

Some plants, of course shed their seeds at different periods in the course of the winter.There are those that release seed early in the winter, those which release them in mid-winter, and others that drop seed late in winter. A few old reliables either shatter seed heads at intervals all winter long or else hold their seeds in a manner that makes them available to birds and small mammals.

The various combinations of the seed - release characteristics of plants result in a athe steady supply of food through the winter, which sustains those birds capable of exploiting it, according to the Ontario Federation of Naturalists.

The winter food of birds depends to a large degree on the bird's adaptabillity in harvesting seeds. The Crossbills, for instance, depend almost exclusively upon the seeds, which they remove from the cones of evergreen trees. It is intresting to note that despite their similarity the crossbills have different food preferences. The red crassbill feeds largely on pine cones, while the white-winged crossbills prefer the spruce cones.

Birches produce an important seed crop that feed the ruffled grouse, chickadees, purple finches, redpolls, and pine siskins. Even the common alder is important to the ruffled grouse, goldfinches, and redpolls.

ICE POWER. Today in the world there is talk of flower power, black power, etc., but we wonder how often people pause to reflect upon the various powers nature bestows upon us. Ice power is her great winter gift as it allows us to stand upon it and think freely and act freely. There are no controversies surrounding ice power — and to us, this is a true and real power. — TNS Photo

REPORT FROM PARLIAMENT

By Mrs. Jean Wadds, M.P.

With confidence, Robert Stanfield announces to the Ottawa Men's Canadian Club - "My colleagues and I are determined to form a government, which will, as much as possible, command events, rather than be buffeted by emergencies which should have been foreseen," he said.

"At this stage, our responsibility is not to govern, but to prepare to govern."

Then he proceeds with customary accuracy, which is closely related to his keen sense of humour, to remind the audience that Prime Minister Pearson though exactly the same thing when he spoke to them 9 years ago. So much for the criticism from the Liberals that he and his party have an obligation to come up with legislative proposals to solve the government's problems.

The government has been busily increasing its vast body of experts and advisors .There is no like assistance to the opposition who must rely as they did a century ago on the energy and wit of their private members.

The cool conservative leader is increase hiis party's organization and efficiency. As quietly and as powerfully as a RollsRoyce engine he executes the job at hand. He knows where he is going and how.

From the confusion of the government one could well believe this sight has stampeded them.

Cabinet members have been contradicting one another publicly and worse privately.

The solid Premier of Ontario comes out with a stinging statement on medicare.

"I am reflecting the expression of the people of Ontario when I reject the Federal proposals as being excessively expensive, and unfair to those provinces unable to participate, not consistent with our priorities, unfairly inflexible and tampering improperly with matters which are directly the responsibilfty of the provinces."

The medicare dispute has even stopped the glib urbane Minister of External Affairs. The Hon. Paul Martin, whom many see as leading the Liberal leadership race at the moment, was noticeably at a loss in the House of Commons this week.

Asked by Dr. Lewis Brand, Conservative member for Saskatoon, whether the government would abandon its requirement for portability he first announced "I don't think so." He quickly changed this to "Of course not". However, it remains imposible to see how this requirement can be maintained with only one province, at the present, Nova Scotia, joining in medicare.

DEPARTMENT OF LANDS AND FORESTS

Weekly Report

We'll wager that this January, many a farmer and country commuter wished that their lanes and houses had the protection of a coniferous windbreak They would hove had much less snow to shovel and their houses would have been protected from the full blast of the snow and that howling wind.

Windbreaks can benefit your property in so many ways - -provide shelter for houses, protect the livestock and farm buildings, serve as snow fences, protect crops, orchards, and gardens, conserve soil moisture, control seed erosion and last, but not least, it adds beauty and value to your home.

You should establisin your windbreak at least one hundred feet to the windward side of your lane, house, or whatever else you are trying to protect from the wind. Usuallly three rows of trees are sufficient. The rows should be six feet apart and the trees within each row should be six feet apart. The middle row could be a fast-growing species such as scotch pine or red pine. It is best for the middle row to be a slower growing species, as white spruce or Norway spruce. The third row on the outer side, should be cedar. It keeps its branches right to the ground and, along with wind from blowing along the ground and under the other trees once they grow taller and lose the lower branches.

This row of cedar causes the snow laden wind to rise up and over the rows of trees and deposit the majority of the snow in the lee of the windbreak and not on the lane.

As the final choice of species is dependant on the soil conditions, it is wisest to contact your local Department of Lands & Forests Ofice for advise. Now is the time to apply for trees for planting next spring. DO IT NOW!

HUNTER SAFETY EXAMINATION

Due to the lack of applicants, for a hunting licinec examination during January, there will be no schedule drawn up for the months of February, March, and April.

However, any person wishing an examination will forward a completed aplication (form C.R. 1) to the District Forester, Department of Lands and Forests, Kemptville. Upon receiving an application, a date will be arranged for the examination and the applicant advised.

If any hunter safety instructors wish to conduct a safety course during this period, please contact the District Office, Kemptville or D.J. Jones and arrangements will be made to provide adequate examination time for all the students involved.

THIS WEEK AND NEXT

by Ray Argyle

All for one

Next week's constitutional conference will take Canada another step along the road away from Britain, reducing further the country's weakening links with our traditional institutions.

Ironically, at the same time as most of the country appears ready to demolish the ties between Canada and Britain — which in recent years have been more symbolic than real — closer links are being forged with France. As English-speaking Canadians strike out to a new destiny within North America, our French-speaking citizens have suddenly discovered, (and been discovered by), their own "mother country."

But the upcoming Ottawa conference, sponsored by the federal government to consider a Bill of Rights to be attached to the British North America Act, will spend more time looking inward toward our own two solitudes, rather than outward toward London or Paris.

All the provincial premiers are to attend the conference. They've been given a grounding in the agenda by Justice Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, who visited the 10 provincial capitals in preparing for the four-day session. A successful conference could make Trudeau the man to beat in the Liberal leadership sweepstakes.

While Prime Minister Pearson didn't plan it that way, the conference has turned into the second round of the new constitutional dialogue. The first was of course the Confederation for Tomorrow conference last fall in Toronto, organized by Ontario and enthusiastically supported by all the provinces.

Out of that conference came a remarkable amount of goodwill, and a significant softening of attitudes by the Western premiers. Previous to that get-together, they had hardly recognized Quebec as part of Canada, let alone been willing to consider reshaping the country's government framework in order to accommodate the one-third of our population of French origin.

But by the time the Confederation for Tomorrow conference had ended, it was evident a fresh wind was threatening to blow away the cobwebby old BNA Act.

The session also marked a radical turning point in the strategy and tactics of Quebec premier Daniel Johnson.

It now appears that Mr. Johnson came out of the conference convinced that Quebec could gain more by going along as just one of the 10 provinces in the never-ending federal and provincial power struggle. Quebec actually had much in common with the other provinces in seeking common increased provincial powers.

Instead, therefore, of taking on both Ottawa AND all the other provinces, it now appears Mr. Johnson's goal to spearhead a common assault by ALL the provinces on federal powers.

This is why the Quebec stand at next week's conference will be to ask for increased authority for every province, instead of a special status for Quebec.

Thus, the things which Quebec wants for itself, it will ask for little Prince Edward Island as well.

Under the new Confederation sought by Quebec, Ottawa would retain control over foreign affairs, defense, citizenship and trade and commerce.

But the provinces would garner vast new powers in the fields of social and economic affairs, ranging all the way from baby bonuses to divorce laws.

A vital key to the new sharing of powers would be that the provinces would be entitled to their share of federal funds, but Ottawa would not be able to tell them what to spend the money on. At present, the federal government subsidizes various programs which the provinces must go along with if they are to receive the funds.

Such is the case with the medicare plan, on the federal lawbooks to go into effect July 1. Some of the provinces want to spend federal medicare funds in such fields as housing and education instead, but under the present constitutional set-up they must go along with Ottawa's bidding or lose out entirely.

O.P.P. REPORT

OPP Officers in Dundas County were busy last week, both in traffic and criminal investigations. Two break, enter and thefts, one at Chuck's Esso in Iroquois and one in Winchester area, are presently being investigated. An attempted armed robbery in Winchster was drawn to a conclusion in Magristrate's Court, on Thursday, January 25, 1968. Charles Roy Smith, age 22, a Morrisburg area man, was sentenced to one year in jail. Smith armed with a toy revolver and masked, attempted to rob an elderly Winchester couple. Constable R. C. Noble was the investigating officer.

Investigations into infractions of the Liquor Control Act produced six charges under that statute. All of these charges were for having liquor in a place other than a residence. A note of interest here, and rather encouraging, is that during the month of January, only one minor has been charged with consuming or having liquor.

On the highways officers patrolled 14,440 miles in a total of 368 duty hours. This resulted in 57 traffic charges being laid with 95 warnings issued. Two persons were arrested and charged with driving while their ability was impaired by alcohol.

Six property damage and one personal injury accidents were reported and investigated. Emily Jane Crober, age 17, of RR1 Morrisburg, suffered minor injuries in a one car accident south of Williamsburg. She was treated for cuts and released from hospital. Two persons were charged under the Motor Vehicles Accident Claims Act for failing to produce proof that the vehicle they were operating was insured.

Officers answered 17 other calls including such complaints as disturbances, alleged fraud, and assistance to the public.

The safety officer for Dundas County visited two schools where 333 students were given instruction on school bus safety.

A total of 18 hours was spent in the courts with 70 convictions being registered.

SPECIAL HOLIDAY RATES ARE ANNOUNCED BY P & O BRIDGE CO.

A special toll will be in effect on the Ogdensburg-Prescott Bridge during February 22, 23, 24 and 25 in connection with an invitation to 'Come Look Us Over" issued by the Ogdensburg Bridge and Port Authority. As a part of the Washington's Birthday holiday, the toll will be a "Washington's Quarter" for each crossing by a private passenger vehicle during this four day period.

The Ogdensburg Bridge and Port Authority, which also operates the Ogdensburg Airport, waterfront Port facilities and a proposed industrial park area, developed the bridge promotion as a kick -off event for the Centennial now being celebrated by the City of Ogdensburg. James P. McGuiness, Executive Director of the agency, stated that the Bridge was designed to increase traffic and the flow of international trade between Canada and the United States. Recent announcements concerning construction of the "Freeway" leading from Ottawa to Prescott and the Bridge and the expedited action by the New York State legislature on the NU-WAY corridor which will connect Ottawa by super highway to Washington, D.C., are encouraging signs that the graceful span across the St. Lawrence will play an expanding role in commerce between the two nations. These recent developments and the Ogdensburg Centennial definitely call for a special acknowledgement by the Ogdensburg Bridge and Port Authority.

As a result, the invitation to use the Ogdensburg-Prescott Bridge to "Come Look Us Over" has therefore been extended at the reduced toll of twnty-five cents per passenger car. This special toll will apply over the four day period starting Washington's Birthday through Sunday, February 25th, 1968. It is hoped that the two minute ten second international bridge crossing will be used by many local residents to visit friends explore the countryside and enjoy the many recreational attractions available in Canada and the United States.

Pupils Donate To Milk Fund

Pupils of Morrisburg Public School donated $128.00 toward the 'Cup of Milk" fund under sponsorship of the Unitarian Service Centre. This sum, raised through a collection of pennies saved by the children who sacrificed treats and conducted a salle of candy at the school, represents 12,800 cups of milk to be sent to hungry children in Korea and India.

The project from Ottawa last year sent four carloads of milk to these needy waifs. The target this year, is five carloads of powdered milk, representing a collection of $27,906.

Deadline for donations was January 31st.

DEAR DORIS advice from Doris Clark

A quiet love

DEAR DORIS — My husband talks a lot to everyone while I really haven't much to say.

Is it necessary for a married woman to speak to every male of her acquaintance? Since I'm married I don't care whether I do or not. I came here as a bride and while my husband has known these people most of his life, they were strangers to me.

I get bored when he is so longwinded. Maybe I'm jealous, but I have spoken to people who didn't reply. This really gets me. My husband tells me I shouldn't worry over it, but I'm a sensitive person.

Ours has been a happy marriage for 20 years and I feel guilty for getting upset about such things.

Worried And Upset

DEAR WORRIED AND UPSET — Good manners mean at least a gracious nod. Why not speak? If you stare straight ahead, folk may well think you snobbish! Your talkative mate may even be trying to be extra friendly to make up for your silence.

Isn't it high time you began sharing his interest in the friends of his childhood? You could at least listen with a friendly look on your face.

DEAR DORIS — My son is 20; does not seem to want to work. He just goes to the newsstand and reads funny books. Sometimes he looks for work but his friends have found him jobs and he may only stick it for a couple of weeks.

He has his own car and I loaned him money for car insurance. That's all right, but my problem is to get him to understand that he has to stand on his own two feet and start supporting himself.

He has been in trouble with the law twice for stealing cars. The last time he went to jail for a year and was on probation till last month. Mind you, he didn't have a very pleasant childhood. I have been married twice and my second husband and he don't get along. My daughter was my folks' pet and the boy was always sat upon.

Wits' End

DEAR WITS' END — One thing led to another. As a lad he was blamed too much, loved too little; punished but never praised. Now your kindnesses are accepted as indulgences, and his habit of not caring is ingrained.

Talk with his probation officer, and start right now to change things. Between you there's a chance for guidance into work he can do and be praised for; and the car should be a reward if and when he does well. I'm writing to you privately and more fully about this.

DEAR DORIS — Once some years ago you helped me with a contest for a 4-H club meeting.

This time it is for a shower, in honor of a young friend. Would you have a suggestion for entertainment?

Auntie Mame

DEAR AUNTIE — Yes: the Bride's Scrap Book. Everybody searches through old magazines to find amusing illustrations of: (1) Jean as a baby: (2) John as a baby; (3) school days; (4) their first date; (5) they're engaged! (6) the wedding; (7) the honeymoon; (8) one year later; (9) 25 years later; (10) 50 years later.

Selecting, cutting out, pasting up, labelling, assembling the scrap book — it's all fun. The cover should be padded and covered with woven satin ribbon. Or use your own imagination about captions and cover-decor.

Confidential to Ugly Duckling — We can't all be raving beauties, but we can dress up the package as nicely as possible. This means dresses well pressed, hair clean and well brushed, faces clean and not too made-up looking.

Once you've done your best with what you've got, forget it. Talk to the other fellow; put him at ease. Let a lovely personality shine through.

Sees Family Unity As Source Of Stability

Mrs. Jean Wadds stresses the encouragement of family units as a source of stability in our changing society.

Speaking to the Agudath Israel Men's Club on Sunday, Jan 28th, Mrs. Wadds said,

"It seems to me that we have come full circle and that we will automatically fill this vacuum for the individual by the return to the comfort and reassurance of a family unit."

"All religions have endeavoured to rotect and promote the family group and we have the Vanier institute of the family atracting interested and concerned individuals and groups. We are more and more tuning our society to helping family units. Where young mothers must, or because of ability amd the trainning want to work, we have a great deal to do in the development of day nurseries. I feel strongly that this is an area long neglected.

"We have interesting developments right here in Ottawa, of facilities in housing developments, whereby families, by renting a unit can automatically swim together in magnificent pools, play games together and have magnificent parties.

"The Canadian Welfare Council has recognized the challenge and opportunities of our growing leisure and assiciated itself with several organizations in convening the Canadian Symposium on Recreation in Montreal last June, 1967, with the theme "Man and Leisure".

"We certainly must, somehow, and basically work towards solving the human lonliness that leads to dellinquency, drug addiction, alcoholism and mental illnesses.

"We hear a great deal, and it is thrilling about our advancing technical world, the wonders of medical science, the astonishing work of computers, the worldwide instantaneouh communications and ever improvinXg transportation speed, and facilities. The American Saturn V, the most powerful vehicle ever to fly, has made it possible to travel in space out to 250,000 miles from earth.

"A balance of power in the world seen but it seems to me that we must be equally aware of the enormous challenge and opportunity opening up to us through the interchange of cultural heritages.

"Although we may have far to go in improving our educational posibilities and raising our education sights, still in 1965-66, Canada spent 2.8 billion on education. By 1971-2 we expect to double this to exceed $5billion.

It is exciting and thrilling to think of the possibilities of such a future. It is more evident that the beter educated individual is more confident, more unique in his possible contribution to society, more recognizable in his personal qualities. Our societies' expectations will be vastly increased, and our built-in propellor of improvement will be larger and owrk faster.

"It seems to me that we will tend more and more towards world units in chosen fields.

"Your ancient culture has long recognized the necessity of study and has given proper respect to learning.

"I have read that education of your boys has been mandatory for thousnalds of years.

"It has served you well as you competed all over the world and withstood hardships and disasters.

In our lifetime we have seen the rise and fall of great states and political movements. There are those in this audience who remember the great days of Czarist Russia and the carnage of the revolution in that country which levelled their socitey. We see them now developing away from their rigid state control to signs of increasing industrial freedom

"We have seen the United States move from a pioneer country, unskilled in diplomacy, observor on today depends on a balance of technological competence.

Such mechanical, physical development of the world has never the world scene, to the central force in world affairs today.

"In 1867, America purchased Alaska for $7,200,000. By contrast the government in Washington recently biult a new house office building for 120 million.

We have seen the British empire, on which the sun never set, weakened by two wars, granting self-government and independance to vast areas of the earth

"One of Britain's most able PM's has been writing his memoirs. Alert, intelligent, world educated, the course of history has held few surprises for him.

His comments recently in New York are interesting and from a man of his calibre, a great compliment to your race.

You have long exhibited the capacity for survival for many changes through many centuries. This great British statesmen envisions your qualities as those that are needed to face the world, or worlds ahead.

At a luncheon in his honour, Harold MacMillan was asked by John Barkham, editor of the Saturday Review Book service for Newspapers, what sort of future he envisioned for Britain. Devoid of empire, did it lie along the lines of another Sweden or another Athens, as some have suggested. MacMillan pondered a while, and then said, 'Not another Athens. Those people who suggest that have not read their history. Athens was based on slave labour, ran a powerful empire, fought great wars, and eventually decayed and died. It may well be that someday Britain will follow in the footsteps of Sweden, but, if so, I'm glad I won't be here to see it.

"No, the future I hope for Britain is more like that of Israel. In the time of Elizabeth we were only two million people, in the time of Marlborough, only five or six million, and in the time of Napoleon, only ten million. The other day, while the world debated, Israel's three millionis imposed their will on their enemies. They had what any great people need - -resolution, determination, courage, and pride. These are what really count in men and nations."

THE SPORTS BEAT

By Glen May

They must be worn

This reporter has fastidiously talked to, overheard, read, and listened to hockey players oratorically giving their views regarding the pros and cons of wearing a helmet to earn a living.

The upshot of this latest outcry resulted from a tragedy. It is indeed a puzzling and frustrating world when a death has to be the key to unlock the door of common sense.

Bill Masterton died from injury received in a game between his Minnesota North Stars club and the Oakland Seals. The general concept of the tragedy is now that it might have been avoided IF Masterton was wearing a helmet.

Following are a host of comments from National Hockey League players and executive explaining their personal views on the use of helmets in hockey.

NHL president Clarence Campbell said: "Masterton's death was a normal hazard of our business. The very best helmets that money can buy are made available by the team if the players want them. Some players just won't wear them."

Gordie Howe: "No, I won't wear a helmet, but I'd recommend youngsters wear them."

Bobby Hull: "The reason we don't wear helmets is vanity, that's all. After this I'm going to take a very careful look at the possibility of wearing a helmet."

Stan Mikita: "I'll be wearing a helmet as soon as I can find a good one. And to be sure it's right for me, I'm working on my own design.

J. C. Tremblay: "I've been hit on the head only once since I've been wearing a helmet, but I'd never take it off now. I've only got one head and I'm going to keep protecting it."

Pierre Pilote: "I guess I'm too old to wear one now. But I think they're a good idea. When I'm instructing at hockey school and a kid comes without a helmet, I ask him what's going on."

Davé Balon, who used to be a linemate of Masterton's: "I talked to my wife before the season and told her I would wear a helmet. But when I came to training camp there was only one helmet around and I didn't claim it."

Hap Emms, owner and general manager of Niagara Falls Flyers in the Ontario Junior A Hockey League has ordered all of his players to wear helmets. The same now goes for the Peterboro Petes of the same league.

Frank Mahovlich says he "would wear a helmet tomorrow if ordered to do so" by his employers.

Wren Blair of the Minnesota North Stars: "I think helmets are a good idea for amateur players. Pros are putting on entertainment and part of the artistic appeal is being close to the players and seeing their faces."

One NHL'er told me that he is positive 95 percent of the players would wear helmets if a suggestion was put forth.

Hockey players wear pounds of protective material from their shoulders to ankles. Yet, they leave the most important part of their anatomy open for wounds, be they minor or serious.

Professional hockey players are credited with intelligence, but it certainly makes this scribe wrinkle his brow in confusion when it's the teeny-boppers who show the intelligence of wearing helmets.

ADMISSION OF MEMBERS OF SESSION

Welcome to the Family Church of Faith and Friendship
