Modern Equipment
Modern Methods
Gone are the crude, harsh methods of conducting funerals used in the past. Modern methods and equipment have taken away much of the coldness. The funeral is conducted by us in such a way that the last memory is always a beautiful one. Those whom we serve are invariably impressed with with the calm, quiet dignity of the funerals—a fitting way to pay a last respect to a lovedone.

HENRY'S
Shorthand School
Ottawa, Ont.
No school in Eastern Ontario offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. It leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by 580 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to HENRY'S.
It is not surprising then that business men, in advertising for stenographers, specially say, "Graduates of Henry's Shorthand School preferred."

On Friday, March 30th, Mr. Thos. Wholehan passed away after a severe stroke of paralysis at the home of his sister, Mrs. John Alford. The deceased was well-known in Chesterville and vicinity having been Police Magistrate for the last quarter of a century and thereby entitled to a pension from the Government.

His wife, Catharine Carr, pre-deceased him on June 28th, 1898, and he is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Gertrude Gagnon of Islay, Atla., and Mrs. Roy Howe of Detroit, also three sisters, Mrs. Charles Howe of Smiths Falls, Mrs. William Bell of Oakland, Calif., and Mrs. John Aford, Chesterville.

Mr. Wholehan was a member and constant attendant of the Methodist Church now passed into the United Church of Canada and for many years was a teacher in the Sunday school.

The funeral was under the direction of the Masonic Order of which the deceased was a staunch member, and also belonged to Karnak Temple, Montreal.

Rev. R. E. Newman preached an impressive sermon taking as his text I Cor. 2 : 9, "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

Among those attending the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Foster, Morrisburg; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Foster, Iroquois; Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Houlahan of Brinston; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Merkley, Williamsburg; Mr. Geo. Foster and son Alonzo or Winchester Springs, John and Charles Parker of Winchester.

ANDREWS—MOAD

A pretty wedding was solemnized on Thursday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Moad, 50 Glenview avenue, where their daughter Jean was united in marriage to Mr. Clarence Andrews, son of Mr. Fred Andrews of Smiths Falls. Rev. W. B. Caswell of Sheldrake United church officiated.

The bride, who was given away by her father, was frocked in a charming costume of blue flat crepe and wore a corsage of cream roses; she also wore the groom's gift, a lovely string of pearls.

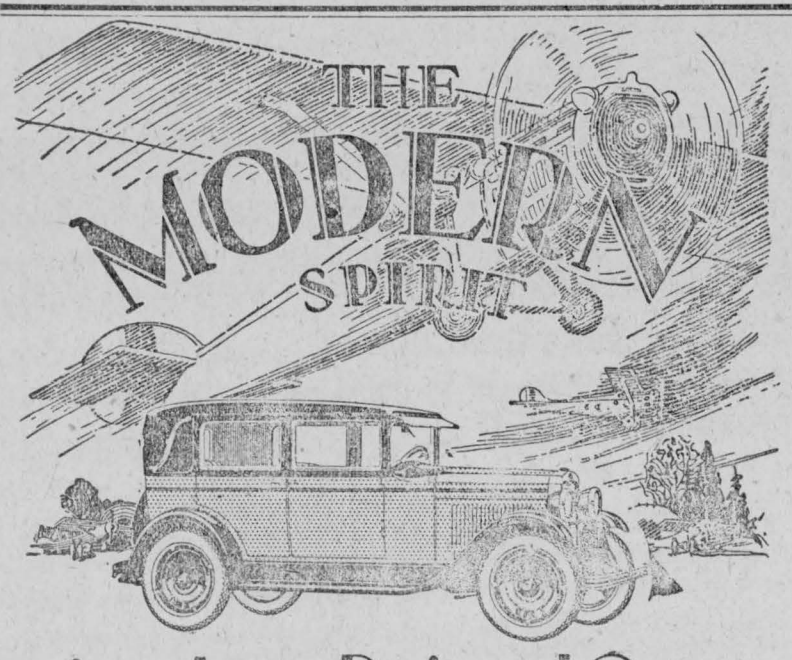
FIRST MATCH MADE OVER A CENTURY AGO

Just a little more than 100 years ago John Walker, a druggist at Stockton-on-Tees, England, whose hobby was chemistry, began to dabble in a strange mixture. He had an idea that a better means for obtaining a light than the clumsy, old-fashioned tinder box could be discovered.

The result was a preparation of chloride of potash and sulphide of antimony, which he called "percussion powder," and placed on sale in his shop. It took fire readily, but still was not exactly what he had in mind. Then he conceived the notion of attaching the mixture to the end of a tiny stick, and thus the match was born.

Today more than 6,000,000 matches are lighted every minute throughout the world. A single machine turns out 177,926,400 matches in a day, not loose and ragged sticks, but smoothly finished, boxed and labelled for shipment.

We invent about 3,000 new words every year, yet sometimes find it difficult to express our thoughts in parliamentary language.



in a Low Priced Car

THE most recent trend of automobile design is strikingly exemplified in the "Bigger and Better" Chevrolet. The high, narrow radiator . . . the long, low bodies . . . the unbroken sweep of the lines from front to rear . . . the stylish blending of colors in finish and upholstery . . . these distinguish Chevrolet as unmistakably new and fashionable. In power, in speed and snap, the "Bigger and Better" Chevrolet is no less modern and vigorous. Countless refinements in engine and chassis give Chevrolet a performance as dependable as it is brilliant.
The "Bigger and Better" Chevrolet, alone among low-priced cars, has truly caught the modern spirit.

The G.M.A.C. . . . General Motors' own deferred payment plan affords the most convenient and economical way of buying your Chevrolet on time.

Knee-Prints Tell

A Sherlock Holmes in real life appears in Alabama where a culprit has been literally run to earth through the shrewd deductions of an alert limb of the law.

To be specific, George Harris, police chief of Alabama City, recently caught, not red-handed, but re-kneed, one William Salvatore, alleged leader of a band of daring chicken thieves who have plied their nefarious trade with hitherto marked success.

A resident of the town had spaded up the dirt floor of his chicken house as a sanitary measure and next morning several fat hens were missing. The matter was reported to Chief Harris, who discovered knee prints in the fresh soil; also remembered having seen Salvatore that morning with red dirt on his knees. Salvatore was arrested, still bearing the tell-tale earth on his trousers. Compared with the red clay of the chicken house floor, the color matched perfectly, as did his knees and the imprints thereof.

Under the circumstances there was nothing leuft for Salvatore but to confess, which he did in copious fashion. He acknowledged the thefts of 300 chickens on a night trip from Birmingham to Gladsden; a like number between Gladsden and Chattanooga; 60 in one night in Gladsden; 80 at Coates Bend, and others in a few minor raids. Considering all the circumstances, a judge decided that a year and 10 days for Mr. Salvatore would be about right.

Alabama chickens and their owners will breathe easier from now on, thanks to Chief Harris and his knee-print system of identification.

To Keep Girls On Farms

Much is said, about boys leaving the farm but our attention was recently called to instances where girls are leaving the farm because the home lacks modern appliances. It is quite noticeable that upon the average farm the barn has better equipment than the house or, in other words, the man is more likely to purchase labor saving devises for himself than he is for his wife. This is not due to the fact that he loves his wife less but the habit of getting equipment for increasing the returns of the farm to lift the mortgage has predominated. The wife can and does get along in her work, though as essential to farm success as her husband's, nevertheless does not show the direct money return. It has become a habit to neglect her,

The advent of electricity is going to do much for the woman on the farm. Many homes have it installed already and they have labor saving devices which make household work easier. Endless numbers of things can be done through electricity and at a very small expense. It is almost imposible to enumerate the many electric labor saving appliances which can be installed in the household; for instance, the washing machine, the flat-iron, the vacuum cleaner, the stove, the motor for driving the sewing machine, the refrigerator, the curling iron, etc.

We are glad the girls are demanding these things for it means they are thinking about advancement and people who do not progress soon perish. When the young men of the farm discover that they must stir themselves to modernize their homes, they will soon find ways and means to purchase these labor saving devices because man is not going to live by himself. Man is an overgrown boy and must have someone to cook for him, mend his clothes and keep them clean, and also to mother him.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Dirty Eggs A Handicap To The Trade

That one of the most aggravating problems confronting the egg trade at the present time is the far too frequent marketing of dirty eggs, is the opinion of Mr. W. A. Brown, Chief of the Poultry Division of the Dominion Live Stock Branch. Farmers should realize, states Mr. Brown, that they can do much toward improving the egg industry by taking steps to prevent the production and marketing of dirty eggs and by discontinuing the very undesirable practice of washing eggs before marketing.

Under any circumstances, it is inevitable that a few slightly dirty or stained eggs will appear. But the farmer who consistently produces and markets large numbers of dirty eggs surely does not realize the bad effect of this practice on his market. These eggs are unpopular with consumers and in some cities it is almost impossible to sell them at any price. Washed eggs are even more dangerous to the poultry industry than dirty ones. Washing destroys the natural protective bloom of the egg shell and, the shell being damp, mould spores often enter causing the egg to become unfit for food.

At the same time it is not difficult to prevent the production of dirty eggs. What is needed is an abundance of clean, dry litter on the floor, plenty of nests, about one to every six hens, clean straw in the nests, and frequent gathering of the eggs.

An Oklahoman 115 years old was knocked down by an automobile. When will people learn to keep children off the streets?

Mr. John A. Graham, Superintendent, Ottawa Dairy Farms, Ottawa, Ontario, producers of high-grade milk for nursery use, writes as follows: "Please supply us with 4 new double-unit Empire Milkers equipped with nickel-silver pails. We have used your milking machines already for 11 years."

Canadian Experimental Farms are also among the 7,000 leaders in the dairy industry of Ontario who have for many years depended on Empire Milking Machines for clean and economical milking.

Some of the Reasons

The Empire Milking Machine is dependable, easy to operate and easy to keep clean. Upkeep cost is low and its power requirements small. It is the only milker which accurately recreates the calf suck and three-point massage from teat-tip to udder. It milks all quarters at once—just as the cow gives it down. Cows milked the Empire way have a longer and more profitable lactation period. These are some reasons why there are more Empires in daily use in Ontario than all others combined. Write for the NEW Empire Catalogue.

The Basis of Municipal Taxation

The assessors throughout Ontario have started on their rounds to lay the basis of taxation for 1928. The assessment roll, besides containing the basis of values for taxation purposes, also gives the population of the municipality and from it the voters' list is made out and from the voters' list the jurors for the court are selected. Thus, says the Chesley Enterprise, it will be seen how important a document the assessor's roll is. Assessment is a relic of the Domesday Book of Norman-French rule in England and it is 842 years since the first official record of land and chattels was made. When commissioners first did their work over eight centuries ago they examined land-owners under oath. Nowadays the assessor takes the owner's word for compiling these statisics and since only land and buildings are assessed these days there would be no advantage in putting men under oath as to the number of head of horses, cattle- sheep and pigs they own, that was done away with over a quarter of a century ago, as a relic of ancient days. The only dumb animal entered on the roll these days is the dog and that is done in order to collect a tax to keep up the fundfor payment of losses of sheep being worried by marauding dogs. Unless a dog owner notifies the clerk of the council that he has despatched or sold the dog, he is held responsible for the tax. When assessments first originated they were a national affair and took a whole year to complete; now the completion lasts only about three months and when the roll is compieted and accepted by the council and the assesor paid off, the clerk becomes custodian of the document and from it figures out how much taxes is to be levied against every owner as soon as the rate is struck. When the first assessments came out the owner had to have a sure title to their lands, but nowadays assessors don't have to be bothered with titles, good or defective, that is recorded in the registry office. A man may have a five-thousand-dollar mortgage on a six-thousand-dollar farm but he has to pay the taxes just the same.

Brooding and Feeding of Chicks

(Experimental Farms Note.)

When the chicks have become thoroughly dry after hatching they may be removed from the incubator and taken to the brooder.

In doing this care should be taken to see that the chicks do not become chilled. A basket lined with flannel with a loose flannel covering makes a good carrier.

The hover should be heated so that the introduction of the chicks will raise the temperature to above 100 degrees. This will mean 90 to 95 degrees in a compartment brooder, or where colony stoves are used 95 to 100 depending on the number of chicks to be accomodated. The comfort of the chicks is readily determined by the sound or lack of sound. When they are comfortable they will be comparatively quiet with only an occasional contented peep, but if they are uncomfortable they will quickly announce the fact in a continual fretful discontented chirping.

When preparing the brooders, if shavings or alfalfa leaves are used for litter, boards on which to sprinkle coarse sand or fine oyster shell are placed in the pens.

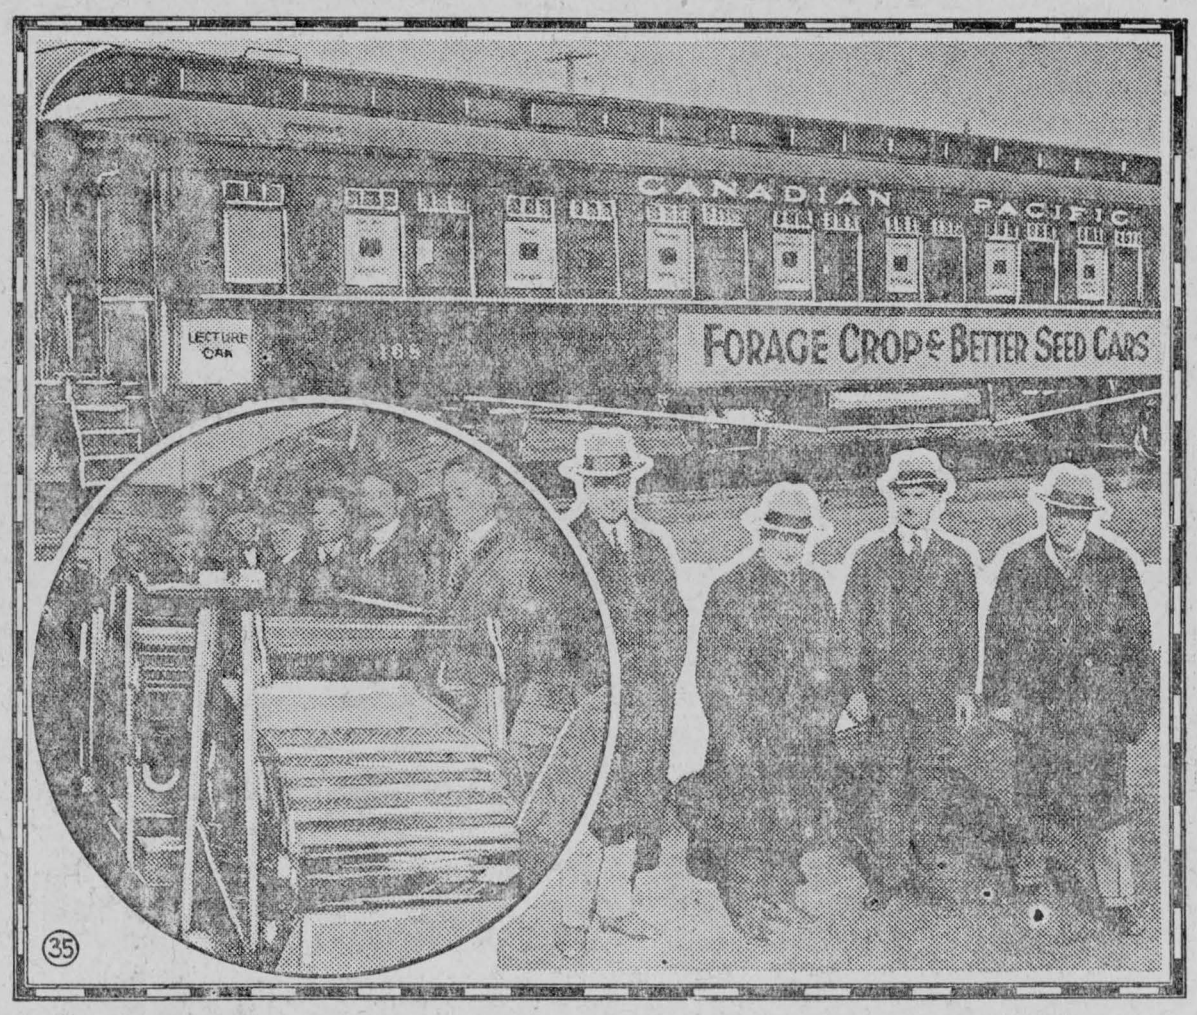
When the chicks are placed in the brooders they should be confined to the brooding compartment or if colony stoves are used a confining fence should be used to keep them fairly close to the source of heat, and they should be left alone until they show positive signs of hunger. As it is heat and rest they require at this period, rather than food, this will be when they are about 36 to 48 hours old.

Ideas differ greatly on the question of feeding, not only in methods but in rations. Experience at the Central ExperimentalFarm has shown just as good results from simple methods as from those more complicated. When the chicks show positive signs of hunger hoppers of chick mash are placed in the pens, as it takes several days before the chicks become accustomed to feeding from them at regular intervals five times a day, small quantities of the dry mash are sprinkled on the feeding boards. These are cleaned off after each feeding, and as soon as the chicks get used to the hoppers dependence is placed on them, and the hand feeding abandoned. Fountains of water, and where possible, sour milk is supplied, also hoppers of chick grit and fine oyster shell. When the chicks are from ten days to two weeks old light feeds of scratch grain are given in the litter to keep them busy. Green feed—sprouted oats, lettuce, chopped greens of various kinds are supplied.

This feeding is continued until the chicks are old enough to go on range, although if it is desired to bring the chicks along quickly moist mashes are used after the first ten days to two weeks.

From the way they sound to us, some of those voices we hear over the radio must emanate from throats not soothed by toasted cigarettes.

C.P.R. Seed Train Tours West



Upper—Specially-fitted lecture car used by the Canadian Pacific on the Forage Crop and Better Seed Grain Train. Windows of the coach are equipped with colored transparent photographs depicting various phases of farming activities. Lower right—The Hon. C. M. Hamilton, Minister of Agriculture, second from the left in the photograph, who opened the Better Seed Grain Train, photographed with F. Hedley Auld, Deputy Minister of Agriculture (left); D. T. Elderkin, manager Regina Industial Exhibition Association, second from the right, and George Williams, representative of the Canadian Pacific Agricultural Department. Lower left—Interior view of one of the cars containing seed cleaning machinery.

With a view to further promoting the best use of seeds and obtaining first-class results in addition to educating the farmers as to how to overcome seed grain and forage crop difficulties, the Canadian Pacific Railway has again placed a touring demonstration train on their lines, which visits all important farming centres in the West, Prairie Provinces and part of the East.

This train went into service at the latter end of last month, the opening being attended by a representative gathering of government officials and members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Producers. The value of such a train was stressed by the Hon. C. M. Hamilton, Saskatchewan Minister of Agriculture, who urged the farmers to make the best possible use of this splendid advantage offered by the railway. In addition to the lecture car, the train consists of two baggage cars carrying a number of seed cleaning machines and others to be used in demonstrating seed and smut treatment. Dairying will also be featured throughout the tour, lectures in this connection being given by R. B. Vogne, government dairy promoter.

In the towns already visited, the train has been greeted with enthusiasm with the farmers displaying an eagerness which speaks highly of the reputation of the seed and forage crop demonstration train. It is operated in conjunction with the University and extension service of the Saskatchewan provincial government, with all cars having been equipped at the Weston Shops of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Winnipeg. Several of the cars are provided with motor-driven grain cleaning machinery of various types, while other cars are fitted with motion picture accessories for the showing of various phases of grain activities, with still others for the purpose of exhibiting grain and grasses.

The entire train is opened for inspection at the various stops, demonstrators being on board to explain the entire exhibit and to give advice on important points in seed selection.

Easter Observance

Easter Sunday this year falls on April 8, exactly midway between the earliest and latest possible dates established for this important Christian festival, which may occur as early as March 22 or as late as April 25.

Strictly speaking, the observance of Easter was an innovation introduced into the church calendar more than a hundred years after the ministry of Christ, being a continuation or outgrowth of the Jewish Passover.

There is no trace of the observance of Easter as a Christian festival recorded in the New Testament or in the writings of the apolostolic fathers. Neither Christ nor his apostles enjoined the keeping of this or any other particular feast. The early Christians being derived principally from the Jewish church, continued to observe the old Jewish festivals, hence their Passover was perpetuated in the spirit of their new religion and eventually became the feast we now celebrate as Easter.

The date of Easter observance was the subject of some of the most bitter controversies which rent the early church, at one time no less than three different dates having been observed in the same year by various branches.

The very name of Easter is from the old Teutonic mythology, being derived from Eostre, the Anglo-Saxon goddess of spring.

But, however originated, Easter commemorates the central basis of the Christian religion, the resurrection of Christ, and has been observed from very early times with stately and elaborate ceremonial, coupled with many curious and interesting popular customs, among which the sending of Paschal eggs, is one of the most universal.

This custom, in turn, is derived from pagan sources, the egg being known to the ancients as a symbol of immortality.

Motorists Cheated

An amazing story of petty swindling is told by Chief Inspector V. A. Stovall of the Texas agricultural department, whose force recently checked up a large number of gasoline filling stations in that state.

With automobiles equipped with "blind" tanks, five inspectors made purchases at various times from 112 filling stations. The gasoline was afterwards measured by the inspectors, the test showing that 85 out of the 112 filling stations had given short measure. In some cases as much as a a gallon and a half.

Further investigation showed that the dishonest dealers had pumps so arranged that when gasoline is being run from the pump to the car a part of it was returned to the underground storage tank. It is said that this trick can be easily worked with nine different types of gasoline pumps in use in Texas.

Whether this practice of giving morotists short measure is of wide extent is not known, but the Texas revelations indicate that means should be employed to check up occasionally as a protection to the public. This does not imply that dealers in gasoline are less honest than other people, but inspections should be made as a protection to honest dealers, as well as a means of detecting swindlers.

Fearing that she would not be excused in time to prepare her employer's dinner, Elizabeth Washington, witness in a criminal case at Ft. Worth, Texas, received the judge's permission to string beans in the court room.

Weekly Review Of The Legislature

Facing a rebuttal that left no room for doubt as to the wisdom of the government in pursuing its present policy in connection with the industry, W. E. N. Sinclair was obliged in the Legislature this week to withdraw his motion calling for the appointment of a special committee or commission to make a survey of the administration of the Department of Lands and Forests. Mr. Sinclair, in debating his motion, contended that an explanation was forthcoming in connection with the course pursued in the disposal of the timber wealth of the Province. The Liberal Leader criticized the government for granting limits when only one tender was received.

Replying in such terms as to make the pressure of the motion impossible, Hon. William Ferguson, Minister of Lands and Forests, stated that the policy of the government was that the market was not at present favorable for the sale of timber limits. Lumber companies were going out of business for the simple reason that following the war they had bought stumpage at prices which made present day operation impossible. The government had therefore taken the attitude that while no timber limits were being sold, in cases where companies had established themselves had built up towns and were giving employment to thousands, some action was necessary to provide employment for citizens of Ontario. Accordingly, where lumber companies could show that they needed additional timber to keep their mills in operation, limits were granted at good prices. In each case the lumber companies bid had been protected by the establishment of an "upset" price by the government.

"These firms buy pulpwood by the cord and timber by the thousand feet," stated the Minister, "the matter of extreme importance is the upset price; that when we put the property up for sale it should be with a proper upset price. We cannot allow our lumber villages to disappear and it would not be fair to take advantage of our right to cancel contracts."

Drugless physicians practising in the province of Ontario must report communicable diseases under the provision of a new sub-section of the Public Health Act introduced in the Legislature by Dr. Forbes Godfrey, Minister of Health. Present Statute merely stated that "any legally qualified medical practitioner" should be so responsible.

Following the adjustment of several disputes that had arisen in various sections of the province as a result of church union, Premier Ferguson has announced in the Legislature the hope that there will be no private bills introduced as a result of church controversies at the next session of the House.

"I think it is well that the Legislature should take cognizance of the fact that it is now three years since Legislation was passed in this House and a tribunal for adjustment appointed," stated the Premier. "There has been ample time to consider and move in connection with any grievance, and I am sure that you will agree that neither this legislature nor any committee should sit as a court of review. May I now express the hope that we will not have this controversy appear again in the Legislature, but where there is disagreement or friction they will bend their efforts towards adjustment."

Realizing that there has been a curtailment of horse breeding in the Province of Ontario in the past decade and that it has been found necessary to import great numbers of commercial horses to supply the Ontario market, the Ontario Department of Agriculture and the Dominion Department of Agriculture have inaugurated a joint policy for the furnishing of financial aid to the owners of good stallions as a means of promoting and stimulating interest in the industry. Under the new plan premiums to approved stallions will be increased approximately 100 per cent. The new plan will in no way interfere with the Ontario Stallion Enrolment Board. Under the joint operation the maximum premium paid to owners of approved stallions will be $300. A special Federal-Provincial premium certificate will be issued in addition to the regular certificates issued under the Ontario Stallion Enrolment Board when and after the owner has complied with the Ontario Stallion Enrolment Act.

"With such encouragement being offered it is hoped that sufficient inducement is now being given not only to keep the good stallions at present in the province, but to encourage owners to buy stallions which will qualify as premium horses within the province," stated Hon. John S. Martin in making the announcement.

After considerable debate, during which members on both sides of the House admitted the merit of the bill, Premier Ferguson has withdrawn his Township School Board bill. In doing so, the Premier announced that during the recess of the House he would endeavor to ascertain what the larger unit meant to the individual counties in a financial way. He will also discuss the measure before the Ontario convention. In withdrawing the Bill, the Premier stated that there was every indication that the bill was gaining favor and that it would not be long before it was generally received by educationalists. He expressed the hope that during the recess the bill would find further favor with the public.

Railway Safety

In contrast with the ever increasing number of automobile deaths, fatal accidents to passengers on railways of the country have dwindled almost to the vanishing point, due to better equipment and the greater exercise of safety precautions.

Based on the experience of a leading transcontinental railroad in 1927, a passenger could travel around the world 2,400 times without an accident, and many times that far without being killed.

Safety measures have achieved even greater comparative results with respect to railroad employees. A reduction of 27 per cent. in the number of casualties to railroad workers was attained last year. It is figured that on the average one of these would be able to work 120 years for each accident that would happen to him.

At present, it is pointed out by a recent writer, railroading is safer than banking or any other important calling. A passenger is safer in a railroad train than he would be in his own home or attending the movies. Many large systems go a whole year without killing a passenger.

Nowadays the dangers of travel are confined almost exclusively to the deadly motor car.

Alimony Plus

While a good many men may pay larger sums of alimony, the plight of an actor in Los Angeles named Cummins, who is contributing rather promiscuously as a result of unfortunate matrimonial ventures, places him at the head of his class.

Under a court decree Cummins was ordered some months ago to pay $600 a month to his divorced wife. Notwithstanding this, he married again and is now being sued for divorce by wife No. 2. Pending the outcome of the suit, he must pay the second wife alimony at the rate of $230 a month.

But that is not all. The latest Mrs. Cummins has no children, but she possesses two valuable dogs which are her joy and pride. She insisted that they should be provided for, also. The judge concurring, an additional $45 a month was assessed against Cummins for the support of the canines. So he is now contributing a total of $875 a month to provide the necessities and luxuries of life for two women and two dogs without the benefit of the companionship of either.

Can you beat that for hard luck?

His Record

We have been reading the high school record of what appeared to be a most promising young man. Here it is:

Vice-president of senior class; president of Webster club; president of school chapter National Honor society; member debating team; member of student council three years; business manner of school newspaper; literary editor of school annual; president of school's Classic club; junior aide of Thucydides club; selected by seniors as the "best boy orator."

By all the rules, such a young man should be expected to attain prominence. He did. Everybody has been reading about him.

His name? William Edward Hickman, murderer of little Marion Parker of Los Angeles; also convicted of a previous murder, and under sentence of death.

All of which proves nothing except that one can never tell how a youngster may turn out.

Nancy Ann Miller of Seattle participated in a two-day wedding ceremony which changed her name to Her Highness, Maharanee Devi Sharmista Holkar, as third wife of a Hindu potentate at Barwaha, India. Another way to get many columns on the front pages.

Haircuts should be avoided when the moon is full, according to a London seer, who declares that hair, like other vegetation, contains more "sap" at that time. It should be cut just before new moon, he says, presumably because the sap is in the head and not in the hair.

Mrs. Belle re Rivera, 80, who founded the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, approves modern women contrasted with those of her early recollection. She declares that woman's place is in the home, and that she should be "feminine in manner, dress and nature, absolute in her submission to her husband."

Mothers are seldom referred to in a flippant manner, but a Toronto bakery disregards custom and tradition by display this sign: "Pie like mother used to make, 6 cents; pie like mother tried to make, 12 cents.

Even an officeholder is entitled to some protection against slander, according to the view of Justice McLean of Melville, Sask., who awarded $500 damages to W. R. Fransher, a member of parliament, in a suit against Henri Peran. In a political campaign Peran charged that Fransher had been "bought by the Conservative party."

Another of life's little ironies is seen in a recent occurrence in Toledo, O. A physician called to treat a man injured by a fall on a slippery sidewalk jokingly remarked to his patient that he should "watch his step next time." Then leaving the house the doctor fell on the same sidewalk and broke his own leg.

A law is proposed in the Alberta legislature to conform to the ideas of the Indian girls of that province, by reducing their marriage age from 16 to 14 years. Clergymen report that the young girls select their mates according to their tribal custom and live with them regardless, when unable to be married because of being under age.

Because Charles V. Sterne of Chicago, was found raising his hat and trying to flirt with wax models in a store window he was fined for drunkenness.

Henry Reitsen of Chicago got a court order to recover his socks and other clothing from his divorced wife, but she was advised to "sock" him if he annoyed her.

An ancient underground city, about two square miles in extent, believed to date from the stone age, has been discovered near Moscow.

TAKEN FOR GRANTED

"But mother, you don't understand. I told the girls I had heaps of clothes at home."

"But, Gladys, why did you tell them that?" her mother asked.

"I you could see what the other girls have!"

"All the other girls, Gladys?" shrewd little sister Florence interpolated.

"All of my set," returned Gladys grandly, as if what others had, whether much or little, did not matter.

"A week is not much time," said Mrs. Clayton, pondering. "And I had not planned for more than one dress. Of course—I know—a girl away at school—or at home, either,"—she smiled reassuringly at Florence,—"has to have something new for Easter."

"I'll help," promised Gladys easily. "A little black taffeta, a simple little evening dress, a georgette,—I think I'll have orchid,—and a sport suit. That's all."

Florence opened her mouth and closed it. Younger sisters of Florence's type early learn the value of restraint under provocation; and Gladys had not been at home since the Christmas vacation.

"We needn't finish more than one," said Gladys generously. "The others can be sent to me afterwards. Don't you think we'd better select them this afternoon, so we can get to work tomorrow early?"

"The taffeta will be very practical," said her mother; "but couldn't you do without the georgette—couldn't you freshen up one of your old frocks?"

"O mother, as if old frocks could be freshened up! All the girls would know it."

Florence was goaded to inquire. "Suppose they do?"

"It simply isn't done," responded her sister.

"Maybe we can find a neat little sport skirt cheap and a simple little blouse," suggested the mother. "That would save making."

"We don't want to find them cheap. Why, mother, sport clothes cost more than anything else—the right kind. We couldn't touch 'em in the stores." She gave her mother an appreciative little pat. "No, I'm perfectly satisfied with my modiste. None of the girls look so well on so little."

Gladys Clayton was one of those girls of whom it is said: "She wears her clothes well." That was owing, in part to her vigorous, erect body, with its gracious youthful modeling, in part to the loving skill that fitted on those youthful contours the exquisitely chosen fabrics that were somehow for Gladys "just right." Other girls said enviously, "With her color, Gladys could wear anything." But Gladys intuitively confined her choice to conservative styles and shades. Even the orchid georgette was an experiment.

Mrs. Clayton, a little worn, a little behind the season, but in her careful clothes nevertheless achieving an effect of immaculate freshness, and Gladys, trim and modern in suit, blouse and accessories of collar and cuffs (of her mother's embroidering), made their purchases in the course of a long afternoon of discriminating search. At the end of the day Gladys' color had curiously brightened, like a flower just bloomed, and Mrs. Clayton looked a little wilted.

Florence had dinner ready. There was something almost maternal in the angular little half-grown girl as she said:

"Now, mother, run along. Gladys and I will clear up."

Gladys spoke with genuine regret: "O mother, sorry, but I promised to be at Nan Gardner's at seven, and it's all of that now."

Florence, who had attempted rather too ambitious a meal for her slight experience, and who was feeling the consequent strain, began warmly, "Well, I must say—"

"I've been just as busy as I could be all the afternoon!" Gladys cried in self-defence. "Besides, I took it for granted my evenings—"

"I won't thank anyone for taking my work!" declared Mrs. Clayton smartly. "After Florence's good dinner, what are a few dishes?"

She did indeed look curiously brighter; her eyes, her cheeks, her very manner, had a sort of nervous, fluctuating brightness that impressed even while it failed to look quite natural.

Her husband eyed her with a kind of peering uneasiness. "It seems to me you are the member of this family who needs a vacation. Why not run up to mother's for a week?"

"Well, maybe I will after Easter."

"Not after Easter; go up there now."

"Now, while Gladys is home?"

"Why not while Gladys is home? Let the two girls run things. She'll be home for good in another two months."

"Oh, I couldn't think of it. Besides, all that sew—"

She checked herself. Her husband never liked to come home and find her immersed in patterns and fabrics. In fact he rarely found thus. Usually on his return she had the work all carefully folded away.

"Let the girls go without Easter fripperies, or else buy them."

Go without! That was not a mother's way, and to buy—

"You girls take your mother too much for granted," he said anxiously.

"I want them to," she answered brightly. "I guess that's the way with mothers."

The next morning they began to work on the taffeta. That was first because Gladys had chosen to wear it on Easter Sunday. Mrs. Clayton, a little puckered, a little tight-lipped (sewing had never been quite easy for her) planned and measured and cut and fitted. And Gladys basted cheerfully without a thought of responsibility. At noon she went down to prepare luncheon. Her mother could hear her singing,—faint in the pantry, clear in the entry,—so full of life and spirit and the very joy of life. She felt almost a shamed pride in her big girl. "I guess all mothers are that way." She worked steadily on.

At luncheon, although she was hungry, she was almost too tired to eat. She reproved herself. It must be the spring coming on, she thought. Through the long afternoon she trimmed and fitted and stitched. Gladys surveyed the results complacently.

"Well," she said, "that's as much as we could hope to do in one day; we'll easily finish it. But, mother, don't you think we'd better cut out the others, with all the fitting to do before I go?"

The orchid-colored georgette made a rainbow sweep of color across the light. The sport silk seemed to quiver like a creamy wave. The very scissor's seemed to grow to the mother's hand.

Florence, who had arrived home from school, surveyed the strewn room dispassionately. Her mother gave the lean, agular shoulder a furtive pat. "Mother'll get to your dress before long now."

Florence flung back an exasperated reddish braid. "O mother, I'm not sure that I want you to. I don't want you ever to be at the mercy of a pattern again!"

For Mrs. Clayton, lacking native skill, had always been at the mercy of patterns. Only her worried care, only that puckered foresight, enabled her to achieve result. That, too, it may be, was a mother's way.

The black taffeta assumed form and comeliness. The mingled sheen of satin, splashed across the orchid web, pinned to the transparent patterns, gave the little room the look of a shop. And every day Gladys bloom ed the brighter. And each nightfall Mrs. Clayton's wilted look deepened. She tried to conceal it with a bustle of cheerfulness. Privately she arraigned herself: "No need of letting a little spring fever unnerve you this way."

By Saturday afternoon only the last but alas! the telling, details remained; The folding of the girdle so that it might not look folded but only softly draped, the matching and the meeting of the lacy vest. Gladys surveyed the simple little taffeta, which had the long, unwinding hours of the past week stitched into its seams like a priceless sort of binding ribbon. "Just the pretty part left, mother." Gladys was going out for the afternoon.

At three o'clock Florence brought up a little cup of Japanese ware, with a bright splash of branch against the translucent porcelain; in the cup there was frothy hot cocoa topped with a marshmallow square. Mrs. Clayton had not wished for luncheon; the unexpected refreshment was like a sharp whetting. She sipped and stirred.

"I declare, Florence, I don't know when I've felt so rested, or so lazy. I don't want to go to work."

"Why don't you lie down just for a few minutes? You'll feel all the fitter."

To Florence's astonishment her mother agreed. "I just believe I will. There'll be plenty of time even if I steal half an hour."

Florence lowered the shades and withdrew.

When she came upstairs an hour later she found her mother still sleeping. A little pucker of worry, which made her seem oddly like her mother, drew her forehead. Here was responsibility. Florence knew that, if her mother could have chosen, she would have been wakened and set to work.

There was the smug black taffeta. To Florence, nervously imaginative as she was, something very like a baleful gleam seemed to glisten among its swart folds, something positively inimical. "Whatever happens," it seemed to say, "I've got to be attended to. I'm first."

And here was the tired little seamstress, more wearied than she had been in any other spring; even the young girl, with her odd maternal sense, could appreciate it. There was the lace, the weight of a cobweb. There was the wide bias of the girdle, like a broad ribbon. If she could only fasten them to their destined end! All her willingness, all her yearning, were not enough to achieve those tasks. There must be skill as well.

What if the dress were not ready? Gladys had set her heart on it. And curiously, not Gladys but her mother would be the more disappointed of the two.

'I'll wait a few minutes and see if she doesn't wake up," said Florence, temporizing. She waited. And the smug black taffeta waited. And the relentless minutes ticked on and on. It was like a contest between the two, the plain, protective little daughter, and the fine unfinished silk. At six o'clock Gladys' elated step awakened the brooding upstairs chamber. Mrs. Clayton aroused, with a glance of utmost compunction at the clock, at the trailing silk and lace that were, amazingly, still nothing except silk and lace when by now they should have been something very different.

"I declare, Florence—I never dreamed—why in the world didn't you wake me?"

"Isn't it finished—why, whatever—of couse I took it for granted—"

"Gladys you make me tired, with your everlasting taking things for granted!" Florence flung out indignantly.

Gladys assumed an injured air. "Well, I'm sure—"

Mrs. Clayton reiterated: "I don't know what could have possessed me."

Mr. Clayton's step could be heard turning in at the walk. He had to get back to the store promptly onSaturday nights. A saving thought flashed across the mother's mind. They all went down to dinner.

On Easter Sunday Gladys wore the new black taffeta. Her fairness, her bloomingness, the fresh, sweet youth of her, made a perfect foil for those dully glistening coils. Even Florence could not help but admire at the same time that she disapproved—disapproved the lighted sewing room and the stitching and the snipping on into the night.

The next day Gladys returned to school. Just at the last moment she exclaimed:

"O mother—I'm sorry—I never meant—I shouldn't have said—"

"There, there! Mother knows, mother understands."

"Now don't overdo. Of course, if you could have the orchid by Friday night, the other could wait, a little."

"Look out for a surprise now any day!" her mother warned her gayly.

But it was not the anticipated surprise that awaited Gladys scarcely a week after her return to schol. It was merely a summons home, terse, abbreviated, as such messages are:

"Mother ill. Come at once."

Something her father had said on that last visit home occurred now vividly to Gladys: "You girls take your mother too much for granted." She had taken her mother for granted. All her dreams, all her plans, all her ambitions, all the bright variation of the days, had remained curiously unaltered in one respect. There had always been mother; there would always be Mother. In Gladys' conception that miraculous fabric of mternal endurance, unlike the frailer stuffs she had worn and discarded, could not wear thin. Even during that last week she had nots een, plain as they were, the signs of its fraying.

Her mind became for the moment a sort of wardrobe, in which hung curiously the taffeta, the orchid, the sport silk. And, crowding against them, what other array of dresses from her little-girl days! But they were not accusing; they were only innocent and gay. It was only during the last years that she had been so critical, that things had been so difficult. Words that she now remembered stabbed her. "Why, mother, of course I took it for ganted—"

It was only for a moment. Like a buffer between her and remorse came her mother's words: "Mother knows, mother understands."

That miraculous, enfolding thing which is mother love and intuition; that, at least, could never wear through.

Florence, rather splashy of apron and face, wringing out a dishcloth, greeted her with a show of efficient cheerfulness. Her father put down her bag.

"You can come right up. She's been asking for you."

It was a short conference, but an eminently satisfactory one. The first acute danger was past.

"But for a time there must be an absolute rest in bed," the physician charged them.

"We'll keep the trained nurse," said Mr. Clayton.

"Won't I do as well?" asked Gladys. Her eyes implored the doctor.

"Better!" he assented promptly.

The old worried pucker asserted itself in them other's forehead. "But, doctor," she said quickly, "Gladys must finish her school."

"That's all arranged for," Gladys assured her. "A sort of extension service will make it all right. And I can run up for a day and graduate, if it comes to that. You see, I'm taking it for granted that you need me."

When the two were alone her mother turned luminous eyes upon her. The thought of the expense of a trained nurse was causing had retarded her recoverey. "Such love, such devotion," she said. "What have I ever done to deserve such love and such devotion!"

Strange humility of mothers!

A little later she told the doctor boastfully: "I have a perfect maid and a perfect trained nuse."

"And your daughter, mother," Gladys whispered.

Florence edged jealously nearer.

Their mother answered the question with entire assurance:

"I am very lucky. I have the two best daughters in the while world!"

Strange pride of mothers' too!

It seems hardly fair

Fathers and mothers used to look forward bravely, but not always happily, to the time when the boys and girls would go away to school in a distant city. It so often meant a break in the habits of home life—a sore trial.

Thanks to Long Distance—the boys and girls at school or college can still be kept within the family circle.

But don't expect them to pay for Long Distance calls out of their slender allowances. That seems hardly fair. The demands upon their none too fat purses are too frequent and too insistent.

Fix a day and hour when you will call them, and you'll find them eager to talk with you and welcoming the voice that can best cheer them on their way.
