St. Luke's, at Dunbar, Is Completely Renovated

Re-opening Sunday.—Services Held in Parish Hall During Renovation.—Beautiful Interior Created By Well-Known Artist.

After worshipping in the parish hall for a few Sundays, the members of St. Luke's Lutheran Church, Dunbar, rejoice greatly that the decorating of their church is now complete and ready for the public opening and reconsecration on Sunday evening.

The interior of the church was decorated by the well-known Holland artist, G. B. C. Van Der Feen, of Toronto. The prevailing tints are cream, buff, tan, pale blue and gold. Beautiful scroll work in heavy gold relief has been worked onto the face of the alter recess at the front of the church. The pews and chancel furniture have been painted in light colours to harmonize with the general wall and ceiling tones. The general finish is in Flemish opaline effect, the latest in interior decorating, and presents a very pleasing effect.

Besides the decorating, several changes have been made in the chancel. The railing, which formerly extended across the front of the platform, has been moved so as to form an enclosure for the choir. The chancel floor has received a veneer of V-joint. The elevated platform upon which the pulpit stood, has been lowered and now holds the altar. The wide pulpit has been narrowed and placed in a position at the front left of the platform, while the lecturn has been placed opposite on the front right of the chancel. All the windows of the church have been frosted and the stove pipes received a coat of aluminum. New carpeting for the aisles was presented by Mr. Ezra Miller.

The committee in charge of the renovations and decorating consisted of the following members: Genzmer Barkley, Bismark Barkley, Roy McMillan, George Brooks, Cecil McMillan and Jason Froats. Besides the usual work this committee gave several hours of work gratis.

The official re-dedication will be held Sunday night at 7.30. The guest speaker will be Rev. W. A. Mehlenbacher of Morrisburg, while the local pastor, Rev. C. R. Cronmiller, will have charge of the liturgy.

Under the leadership of Rev. Mr. Cronmiller, with the wholehearted co-operation of the members, St. Luke's has progressed in the past few years. Only a short time ago a parish hall was built at the rear of the church which has proved of great value in the social and spiritual life of the congregation.

Archbishop of Ottawa Administers Confirmation

Most Reverend Dr. J. C. Roper Pays Annual Visit to Holy Trinity.—Candidates Presented by Rector.

On Sunday evening Holy Trinity church was filled with a reverent and devout congregation, the occasion being a visit from the Archbishop of Ottawa, the Most Reverend Dr. J. C. Roper, to the parish. Evensong was sung to the third collect, the rector officiating. This was followed by the service of Confirmation at which the rector presented six candidates. The Veni Creator was sung to Dycke's setting. The Archbishop's address to the candidates was listened to with reverent attention. He reminded the congregation that the witnessing of the answers of the candidates should put them in mind of their own confirmation and pleaded for a due exercise of the seven-fold gifts of the Holy Spirit conferred in that sacrament. And then again to the candidates pointed out theirs was to be a life in which prayer and communion held a large part. A feature of the service was the singing of the whole congregation led by the choir under the direction of the organist, J. A. Morris.

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

Ontario Pastures.

Over 23 per cent, or one acre out of every four of the improved lands in Ontario is in pasture. The estimated total returns on pasture in the form of live stock products from June to October yearly is approximately $40,000,000. Of this $34,000,000 is derived from dairy produce. Results from experiments have shown that by proper management and improving fertility of the soil, returns could be increased from 100—200 per cent on a very large proportion of pasture.

The Best Varieties of Grain.

A new pamphlet bearing the above title and prepared by the Cereal Division, Experimental Farms Branch, is now ready for distribution. This pamphlet lists the varieties which are recommended province by province across Canada in the case of wheat, oats, barley, peas and flax for seed.

A separate pamphlet prepared jointly by the Cereal Division and the Ontario Agricultural College, dealing with both spring and winter wheat in Ontario, is also available.

Help Egg Production.

Two factors that have most to do with the revenue from eggs are the prices received and the rate of production. Unfortunately, the price paid for the product is not always subject to the will f the poultryman, but the rate of production is in his hands and his alone. A much higher yield is within reach of any breeder who will give some care to his flock. A good male has been known to pay for himself many times over. At one of the Dominion Experimental Branch farms, a careful selection of breeders has resulted in an average increase over five years of 73 eggs per hen, the production being raised from 141 to 214. The Egg Laying contests also have demonstrated what is posssible to be done in good farm flocks. Since the contest started in 1919 the average yield has increased from 120 to 178 The average production in the 1931-32 contest was 175 eggs, and as this average was taken from a total of 4,370 birds, entered by 437 breeders in the 13 contests throughout the whole Dominion, the average may be taken as fair for the better classes of breeders in Canada. Further, the hatchery approval and cockerel distribution policies of the Dominion Department of Agriculture are at the disposal of those building up poultry flocks.

Protection For Shallow Well.

Water of deep origin has probably travelled some distance and been filtered through a large depth of earth so that the danger of surface pollution is reduced to a minimum.

If a deep well cannot be sunk for reasons of expense or otherwise, it is desirable to take great care to protect the shallow well from surface pollution. This may be done by lining it with concrete or puddled clay to a depth of 10 to 12 feet carrying the protection up one foot above the surface of the ground. Surface water will then be filtered at least 10 feet of earth seeping into the well.

Oats For Hay and Pasture.

The dry season of last year followed by a long cold winter has resulted in feed supplies being pretty well used up and many farmers face a shortage of hay. Under these circumstances it becomes necessary to sow some kind of annual crop in the spring which can be cut later. For this purpose there is nothing better than oats or a mixture of peas and oats. Oats grow fairly well in cool weather and for this reason seeding some oats as soon as the land is ready so as to get a crop of hay early in the season. Peas thrive in cool weather also when mixed with oats improve the quality of the feed. Two bushels of oats and one of peas is the correct rate of seeding.

Orchard Sod Treatment.

A very interesting experiment in the comparison of two systems of sod treatment in orchard management has been in progress for many years at the Dominion Experimental Station at Fredericton, N.B. Forty-three Fameuse and 31 McIntosh apple trees are under observation. In one block the grass is cut and removed as hay. In the other block, the grass is cut and left as a mulch around the trees. No additional mulching material of any kind has been added, and the fertilizer treatments have been identical on the two blocks. For the 14-year period, 1920-1933 inclusive, the average yields per tree are considerably higher under the sod-mulch system and clearly indicate the advisability of this treatment. With the Fameuse variety the average annual increase per tree has been 3.33 pecks, and with the McIntosh 2.76 pecks per tree.

Sanitation in the Brooding Quarters.

Colony houses are preferable for brooding purposes as they can be moved to fresh ground. Feed and water containers should be scrubbed daily. Litter should be kept clean and sweet.

Stands covered with small mesh wire should be used to place feed and water vessels on, preventing chicks from picking up disease germs in the waste feed spilled on the litter. Do not use mouldly feed or dirty water.

Where hens are used for brooding, dust often to control vermin, using Sodium Fluoride or Sulphur. Blue Ointment weakened with lard or vaseline may be used on the young chicks and mothers.

Study of Distribution Indicated As Necessity To Reduce Losses

A survey of conditions at the Union Stock Yards, Toronto, made by the Ontario Marketing Board, would indicate that there is a definite need for a more even distribution of live stock offerings during the five trading days of each week.

At present, by far the greatest volume of live stock is offered on Mondays and Tuesdays. The result of this condition is that a considerable percentage must be held over sometimes until Friday, necessitating the expense of one or two extra days of feeding in addition to freight and other charges.

This angle of marketing must receive more study if losses are to be reduced to a minimum.

Bees Suffer Heavy Winter Loss And High Honey Prices Indicated

"This is the year when those capable beekeepers who have carefully studied their business and know how to meet emergencies should make profits," says Dr. E. J. Dyce, Provincial Apiarist for Ontario, and he continues: "Reports from all parts of Ontario indicate that between 30 to 40 per cent of the colonies died during the winter and that an additional 20 per cent of the colonies are so badly weakened that they will be unable to gather a honey crop. The loss has occurred mainly among the small side line beekeepers who neglected to properly care for their bees last fall.

A backward spring, combined with heavy colony losses and serious winter injury to clovers in many sections of the province indicates an abnormal shortage of honey again this coming season.

"Since the past two crops of 1932 and 1933 were much below average, practically all the honey was out of the hands of the producers early last fall. Since short crops were experienced not only in Ontario but throughout the world, the corresponding shortage of beeswax has caused its price to increase about 50 per cent during the past few months."

EXPENSIVE CROWS.

Messrs. Girdwood, Crawford and Mills, of Perth, have killed 97 crows so far this spring. Their hunting ground is around one of the slaughter houses where they have a blind. Stuffed owl, hawk, a cat and other objects were used for bait and up until Thursday of last week 97 crows had been killed. About $15 in ammunition had been used and it means that at this price there will be a good many less crows this summer being shot off before they nest.

Are You a Friend of Snakes? Great Friends to Farmers

Not many people are. The large majority of people have a dread and fear of all reptiles and many actually believe that our common snakes are poisonous. They say that the little forked tongue which bobs in and out so quickly is the "stinger." The following article taken from the Scout Diary for 1934, "Beneficial Canadian Reptiles," will perhaps quiet your fright of these slippery fellows and stop any bad dreams you may have of them.

Many million dollars worth of Canadian fruit, grain and other food stuffs are destroyed each year by insects, mice and rats. Almost universal credit is given birds for their help in keeping down the insect pests. On the other hand very little credit is given our friends the snakes and lizards for their very valuable service in fighting not only insects, but mice and rat enemies of man. As a matter of fact the snake is a better mouser than the cat. It is able to enter all sorts of cracks and holes which the cats cannot reach. This practice of hunting mice and young rats probably is the real reason for the presence of the so-called Milk Snake—not for the "milking" of cows.

Too often boys and girls, and older people as well, kill all snakes on sight under the quite mistaken impression that they are in some way harmful. With the exception of the rattler—the only poisonous snake in Canada (not found in these parts of the country) —every snake killed is a good friend killed.

There are some 27 species of snakes found in the Dominion. The markings are practically standard throughout Canada, except in the case of the Garter Snake. This snake as found on the prairies shows a yellow line along the side, whilst in the mountains and in British Columbia, he sports a darker coat, with patches of red.

Snakes are frequently mis-named. The Water Snake is often incorrectly called the Black Snake, and the Red-bellied Snake mis-called a Copper Snake—and killed "as poisonous."

Also valuable as insect exterminators are the salamanders and newts, of which there are some 20 species in Canada. The largest is the Tiger salamander, found in the west, adult species reaching a length of 12 inches. The salamanders have a smooth skin and the newts a rough skin. They hibernate in burrows or rotten logs.

The Red-backed Newts pass through two distinct life stages. They spend the first two years on land, as "Red Newts," then return to the water as adults, green in colour.

Assurance of SAFETY

The first requirement of the investor, particularly the small investor, is assured safety; income yield is of lesser importance. That is why so many hundreds of thousands of Canadians regard their savings deposits in this bank as the best type of investment. The income may not be so attractive as the promised yield of certain securities, but it is sure and steady, while the principal itself is safe and always remains at full face value.

Beer Bill to be Limited Restaurants With Service

Open Liquor Laws Not Contemplated, Premier Henry Tells Peel Electors. — Roadhouses and "Corner Restaurant" Ont.—Local Option.

Brampton, May 6. — Deprecating the suggestion prevalent in some quarters that his government, if returned to power next election, intends "letting down the floodgates on liquor," through its new beer and wine amendments, Premier Henry yesterday definitely stated that such will not be the case, and further intimated that restrictive powers vested in the Liquor Control Board will insure that the proposed distribution with meals in eating-places will be pretty well confined to "restaurants where service is needed."

"By sales authorities that are to be set up," said he, "we don't mean the small restaurants on the corners. We don't mean refreshment booths along the roadside. And roadhouses as they are sometimes called, do not enter into our scheme of things. Nothing of that sort has ever been mentioned. Nothing of that kind has ever been thought of."

Mr. Henry was speaking in support of the Peel riding candidature of Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy, his Minister of Agriculture. While he was singularly clear on these points, he left some indecision in the minds of the audience as to what the Liquor Control Board intends to do in regard to liquor advertising. "We have never gone the limit," said Mr. Henry, in speaking of the authority provided under the present Liquor Control Act. Under the law the board may grant a special permit to have liquor served at a banquet. None has been granted to date, although the board sometimes has thought that we should. Then there is the matter of advertising. That has never been allowed, although the board has the right to allow it. We have felt that the people were not in favour of it, and that the mission of the Act was to control, not to encourage, the consumption of liquor."

Mr. Henry denied that he had been "dragooned" into making the changes in the law, and resented the occasional repetitions of the cries of 1926, when the L C.A. was before the people, that the government's move was destined to turn Ontario "into a shambles."

Local Option to Stay.

Mr. Henry stressed the point that local option as practiced under Whitney, and obtaining in the L C.A., would also apply to beer and wine distribution. No municipality that didn't want it need have it. Those like Peel, which have been "dry" for years under local option or the C.T.A., would find their wishes respected, he says.

Dr. McQuibban, the Liberal House leader, had, he said, opposed Mr. Hepburn on the beer and wine legislation, but was ready, he said, to follow him in everything else. What did Dr. McQuibban, he asked, think of the recent South York Liberal meeting, where the Internationale was sung, and the Liberal chairman complimented the singers, afterwards saying: "You sing our songs and we'll sing yours." Would Dr. McQuibban follow that sort of thing?"

Famous Evangelist Is Dead; Dr. H. T. Crossley Spoke Here

83-Year-Old Evangelist, Member of Internationally Known Team, Remembered By Local People.

Rev. Dr. H. T. Crossley, former member of the internationally-known evangelistic team of Crossley and Hunter, died in Toronto last week at the age of 83. Dr. Crossley will be remembered as having carried on evangelistic meetings in Chesterville about three years ago.

Dr. Crossley was the partner of Rev. John E. Hunter, who died in 1919. He had been making his home in Toronto with Rev. K. Crossley Hunter, his associate's son.

Fame of Dr. Crossley and Mr. Hunter at one time was as great as that of the noted evangelists, Moodie and Sankey.

Dr. Crossley was born in King Township, York County, Ont. He was educated in public schools and Victoria College, Cobourg, Ont. He was ordained in 1878 and held charges in Weston, Brantford and Hamilton before joining forces with Mr. Hunter. The two evangelists became known as the Crossley-Hunter team and toured extensively through Canada and the United States.

When Mr. Hunter died in 1919 Dr. Crossley carried on their work alone for seven years, retiring on pension in 1926. Dr. Crossley was unmarried and had no immediate relatives.

Two-Year Period of Great Flood Seen By Noted Suuspot Scientist

Large Spots Re-appearing Now Will Bring Heavy Rain During 1936, Causing Great Floods Throughout the World.—Recent Droughts Are Result of Decrease in Spots, Says Noted Solar Student.

Great floods throughout the world in 1936-38 are predicted by Captain Thomas J. J. See, veteran professor of mathematics in the United States Navy. He based his forecast on the effect of huge sunspots.

Captain See, with 45 years' experience in scientific work, collaborated for many years with the late Rev. Jerome S. Ricard of Santa Clara University, in the study of Father Ricard's theory that sunspots cause weather changes.

"Since the decrease of sunspots began in 1928," Captain See declared, "very great droughts have been observed in nearly all the countries of the globe, notably the drought of 1930, in the Mississippi Valley, which accentuated the evils of the depression, and that of 1933, which delayed agricultural recovery.

"But now large sunspots have appeared and will increase for the next four years, yielding vast floods in 1936-38, and an increasing rainfall this year and next, after which the floods will become notable. as during the Mississippi floods of 1927.

"The sunspots mix hot and cold air much like the mountains, yet act in a slightly different way, by cutting down the heat of our globe, thereby letting the cold currents of air descend nearer the earth, for making more rain. That is the whole meteorological effect of sunspots."

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Watson and sons of Colquhoun spent Friday with the former's mother and also motored to Northfield accompanied by Mrs. Eligh.

We are sorry to report the illness of Mr. Donald J. MacMillan and daughter Cassia and Mrs. Jim MacMillan, who are confined to the house for a few days, but we are glad to say they are recovering nicely at time of writing.

Explained.

A teacher of a primary grade was out of the room for a time one day. When she returned she found that the children had taken advantage of her absence and were having a hilarious time.

"I'd like to know why it is," she remonstrated, "that you are never working when I come back into the room."

"It's because you wear rubber heels," ventured little Jimmie.

Roebuck Promises Beer That Is Cheaper And "Real Stuff"

Hepburn Backer Says "Wishy-Washy Stuff" of Tories Doomed If They Gain Control at Queen's Park.

On the definite assurance of Arthur W. Roebuck, the people of Ontario, if they elect a Hepburn Government at the next election, can look forward to the distribution in this province of better beer than the "wishy-washy stuff" that the Tories have been selling from their stores during the last few years.

Beer, he also promises, will be cheaper, and any man who happens to have "a five-cent piece in his pocket" will be able to buy it.

"Beer is no issue at all," he told South York electors last night, "for you will be able to get your beer just as well under Liberal rule as you will under Tory. "You are going to get your beer just the same, and under a Liberal administration you will get good Liberal malt beer instead of Tory synthetic stuff."

RIDGE ROAD WORK UNDER WAY

Work of reconstruction of the Ridge Road, connecting Chesterville and Winchester, was commenced this week, and will give employment to many in the district.

During our hike held on Saturday afternoon to Mr. A. Bailey's bush, about three miles up the Nation, an Investiture ceremony was performed when three boys made the Scout Promise and became Boy Scouts. They were:

Heber Dwyer, of the Wolves;
Lloyd Smith, of the Beavers, and
Laird Ouderkirk, Whip-poor-wills.

The ceremony was opened with flag break and a brief talk by the S.M. on the meaning of the solemn promise a boy makes when he becomes a Scout. At the close, before cheers were called for the new Scouts, explanations of how the three sections of the promise are fulfilled and how the observance of them makes real men out of boys, were given by the S.M.

Four Scouts went to the bush in the morning, leaving a trail of Scout signs and notes for the balance of the Troop to follow. The rain just at the hour set for leaving Headquarters nearly squashed the hike and undoubtedly kept some away, but the start was made about 1.30 for the three-mile walk. The A.S.M. took charge of the group and the S.M. with King's Scout Graham Runnells, journeyed by another trail, laying plans and planting instructions for a treasure hunt on the way home. After arrival at the objective, and a dip in the Nation the Investiture was performed. While a game of camouflage was being enjoyed, three Tenderfoot Scouts successfully passed their fire-lighting tests: Walter Thompson of the Whip-poor-wills, Adelard Dagenais and A. P. L. Harold Hummel of the Beavers. P.L. Rodney Hummel attempted his cooking test by wrapping two of the fish he caught in the morning with clay, along with two potatoes. The experiment was not altogether successful for the clay fell off in the fire and considerable portions of the eatables were burned. This method requires considerable practice but produces deliciously cooked grub when mastered. Better luck next time, Rod.

The first directions for the treasure hunt were found when the S. M. announced a note was hidden under some of the refuse scattered about the camp fire. The rubbish was gathered up and the paper was found under some orange peel by Scout Walter Thompson. The trail led across fields, along the road and along the river bank to "a skull in a small tree in a gully" at the end of a path. There the directions led "north 137 paces to roll of fence material." And there was found—a potato. With due ceremony the tuber was cut in two and planted in the sod. Who'll keep the bugs down this summer?

A tired but happy gang reached town about 6.50, hungry as a pack of wolves.

HOW DEEP SHOULD VARIOUS CROPS BE SEEDED?

Much Depends Upon The Condition of Seed Bed.—Results of Experiments Given.

WHEAT, oats and barley should be seeded at a depth of about two inches. Buckwheat gives better result at one inch. Peas and vetches do well at two inches, corn at one to two inches and sunflowers at two inches. Potatoes should be planted deeper and do best between two and four inches. The smaller seeds such as grasses and clovers must be planted shallow and give best results at about one-half inch deep.

These figures are presented, based on the results of experiments conducted for the past four years by the Field Husbandry Division at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. In this experiment 13 different crops have been used. Wheat, oats, barley, buckwheat, peas, vetches, sunflowers and corn have been seeded at depths of one, two, three, four, five and six inches. Timothy, alsike, red clover and alfalfa were seeded one, two and three inches deep and potatoes at two, four, six and eight inch depths.

The proper depth of seeding has been influenced quite considerably by the amount of moisture present. In an extremely dry season most crops will germinate more satisfactorily if planted deeper than in a normal season due to the greater amount of moisture at the lower depth. The opposite is true in a very wet season due to the greater amount of moisture at the lower depth. The opposite is true in a very wet season when very shallow seeding produces better results. The above figures are based on a normal season and represent conditions in an average season in Eastern Canada.

It will be noticed that for the general run of field crops the most suitable depth to seed is about two inches with the exception of the smaller grasses and clovers. While the most suitable depth is approximately the same for most of these crops it has been noticed that some crops are more seriously affected than others by a departure from this depth. Common vetch, for instances, germinates almost as satisfactorily at a depth of five inches as at two inches. The two inch depth, however, is recommended. Next to vetch, peas were least affected by deeper plantings although they were considerably better at two inches than deeper. The germination and yield of wheat, oats and barley dropped rather gradually following planting from two to four inches, deeper plantings were followed by very marked decreases in germination and yield. The germination of corn was reduced to a greater extent than sunflowers following deeper plantings but both fell off quite markedly when planted deeper than two inches. Buckwheat was influenced most of all the crops and germination was depressed very considerably when planted deeper than one inch.

The above recommendations refer to crops grown on sandy loam soil. On heavier clay soils, generally speaking, slightly shallower plantings should be employed.

EARACHE.

EARACHES occur at all ages, but children suffer more frequently than adults. The pain varies from a dull ache to an excrutiatingly sharp one. There is no relation between the severity of the pain and the gravity of the cause. A boil in the external canal, which is not as a rule serious, causes a particularly severe, while a dangerous mastoid may give rise to nothing worse than a dull ache.

Earache may be due to an irritation or inflammation of the canal which leads from outside to the ear drum. Any foreign body which lodges in the canal will likely cause irritation. Children are apt to poke things into their ears and some of these articles swell with heat and moisture, thus blocking the canal and at the same time injuring the lining membrane. Forgotten pledgets of cotton wool are not infrequently found in the ears of adults, causing earache. A collection of wax pressing on the drum, causes pain.

Infections, such as boils in the canal, are particularly painful because the lining membrane adheres closely to the cartilage leaving but little room for swelling. This means pressure and pressure on nerve endings means severe pain.

Behind the drum lies the middle ear which is connected with the throat by the eautachian tube. Otitis media, or inflammation of the middle ear is the most common cause of severe earache and it is always preceded by some infection of the nose and throat such as the common cold or influenza. It is especially prevalent in children up to puberty because of diseased tonsils and adenoids, together with an eustachian tube which is comparatively short and wide at that age.

Otitis media should be thought of when the cause is being sought of an unexplained fever, restlessness at night, crying or occasional screaming. Usually the diseased ear is kept next the pillow and the child often pulls at the ear. When the drum ruptures or is opened (paracentesis), there is immediate relief as the pus escapes and pressure is relieved.

If the infection spreads back, the mastoid becomes involved and this brings the infection close to the meninges or lining membrane of the brain. The pain over the mastoid bone, behind the ear, may be severe or may be only a dull ache.

A well-wrapped hot water bottle may be applied to relieve the pain. Nothing should be put into the ear excepting by a doctor's order.

Many earaches and ear troubles in children would be avoided by keeping the nose and throat healthy, by removal of diseased tonsils and adenoids and by the proper treatment of colds.

POULTRY CASH RETURN.

Poultry Yard Now Returns More Than Half Total Sale of Canada's Entire Wheat Crop.

A COMPARISON between the revenue derived from field crops and from poultry during the past few years reveals some interesting figures. For the six years 1925-31 the cash returns from field crops in the three Prairie Provinces dwindled almost to one-third, says Mr F. C. Elford, Dominion Poultry Husbandman, while the poultry revenue remained practically the same. In 1925 the field crops gave nearly thirty times the revenue given by poultry, while in 1931 it was only ten times. In British Columbia in 1931 "farm animals" produced 62 per cent of the amount of revenue derived from poultry. In Alberta the return from poultry was 40 percent of that from farm animals. In Saskatchewan it was 55 per cent. In Ontario in 1927 poultry gave 57 per cent of what live stock produced; in 1931 it had increased to 88.8 per cent. In 1931 the product of the poultry yard handed to the farmer in actual cash more than that received from the sale of Canada's entire crop of wheat.

THE MUSIC LESSON

SITTING by the deal table in the kitchen, with eyes flashing and her hands moving impatiently, Susannah Kuhns awaited the return of her daughter Louisa. The basket of close-packed, sprinkled wash beneath the table proclaimed that the day was Monday; the orderliness of the kitchen signified that the hour was somewhere between the putting away of dinner and the preparing of supper. To be exact, it was half past four o'clock. At three Louisa's music teacher had come and at four had gone, at two precious dollars an hour, but Louisa had taken no lesson. Neglecting her opportunity, defying her mother, indifferent to the waste of money, Louisa had walked out of her mother's house

Susannah, who was slender and spry and just twice as old as her seventeen-year-old daughter, struck her hand sharply on the edge of the table, then rose and walked up and down the room.

"I will tell her the meaning," Susannah declared. "Once more I will put it up before her as it is. To want to be all the time cooking and baking and scrubbing and preserving and making soap when she could sing! Have I my mind any more that this can be! Shall she be educated, or shall she be forever dumb—that is it. That is what I will put to her. I—"

A train whistled down at the end of Main street. It carried the music teacher back to that abode of learning, of musical knowledge and musical appreciation, the county seat. It was a coincidence that it should also carry young Jimmie Fackenthal, the mail clerk who came into Millerstown each Monday at twelve o'clock and left at half past four. It was no thought of young Jimmie, however, that made Susannah pace the room in excitement. The man in the moon was as little connected with this great trouble as was Jimmie Fachenthal, friend of Louisa though he was. Louisa was not to marry; her mother did not think of her marrying. She had higher plans for Louisa than a life of drudgery and dullness.

"I will put it before her," said Susannah again, almost sobbing in her excitement. "Again I will put it before her as it is."

Now pacing the floor, now sitting on the edge of her chair, Susannah waited. Since her childhood she had longed for adventure; since her marriage her spirit had escaped only once from the monotonous duties that filled her life Then, when for three days she and her husband, Oliver, and her two children, Ollie and Louisa, had taken up their abode in the county seat, she had found to her dismay that her singing, the one pleasure of her dull existence, was laughable.

Thereupon, returning to Millerstown, she had ceased to sing except on rare occasions when she climbed to the garret or locked herself into the parlour. She had even refused longer to lead the choir in church, although the congregation besought her and her husband commanded.

"What is funny in Allentown is funny here," poor Susannah had explained grimly.

"It is not funny to these in Millerstown, her husband had declared sensibly. "They like it."

"It is funny to me," Susannah had said, and then her eyes had shone. "Louisa will sing when she is big. Louisa has a voice. Louisa will take lessons."

No one ever suspected the height of renunciation to which Susannah rose. To live in the success of your children is not always easy at the age of thirty-four!

At noon it had been Louisa that had cried. Then Susannah, standing by the stove stirring her endive dressing, had gone on furiously. She did not forget the dressing for an instant. When you have been an expert cook for twenty years, you are not likely even in emotional crises such as this to waste the good eggs and flour and vinegar and the morsels of bacon that give to endive dressing its distinctive (Pennsylvania German) flavour.

"Singing," declared Susannah, "is not just hollering. You—"

"I—" Louisa opened her mouth and closed it helplessly.

Louisa was a pretty girl, but she was fat, and the tears that stood on her cheeks were not becoming.

"You will be quiet," said Susannah with decision. "I have brought you up from little. I have trained you. I have saved you so that you wouldn't need to work so hard. I—" is to me no trouble to work. I—"

But Susannah cut her short ruthlessly.

"I like to work!" wailed Louisa. "It

"I kept all these years egg money for you, and the little money I got from my pop. You are to take these lessons, you are to learn, you—"

"I would rather work. I can sing already, I—"

"Louisa!" Susannah almost shrieked. "I am talking. Be still, Louisa, till I am done! You think you can sing! O my soul! I know what singing is. I thought I could sing, too; then we went off, and I heard singing. They made it different in Allentown, and they made it right. They put their singing up here" Susannah indicated the roof of her mouth. "They didn't put it down here, as if their collars were all the time choking them. They—"

"I don't want to—"

Susannah lifted the endive from the stove to the table.

"I don't care what you want. It makes nothing out if you want or if you don't want. You are to learn to sing. The lady, she comes to learn you. Two dollars I pay her to learn you, She—"

Defiance blazed suddenly in Louisa's blue eyes There was at that instant a long whistle as the twelve-o'clock train came shrieking round the curve.

"You didn't take singing lessons," she said bravely. "You got married."

Susannah flushed. It was irritating to be reminded of the fact just then.

"Yes," she agreed. "I got married, that is so. It was nothing else for me to do; that is why I got married I had no piano. I had no mom to tell me to sing. I had no nice teacher to learn me. I sang till—till that time in Allentown—" Susannah's voice sank to a broken whisper; it was not easy to speak of the great humiliation of her life. "They looked at me in the church, and the people laughed over me how I sang. I saw them! And when I sang in the house, a little girl came running in, a little neighbour girl, and she said I should stop my hollering. I—"

Susannah's voice had thickened until she could not speak.

"Pop, he thinks I can sing good enough already,' 'said Louisa sullenly.

"Pop!" repeated Susannah scornfully. "Pop! What does he know about it, tell me that!"

"He says to spend two dollars a week that way is not right, he says it is wicked, he—"

Susannah took a step toward her daughter.

"Is it your pop's money?" Her voice rose in shrill demand. "Would you rather learn to sing and get money for singing—those in Allentown in church got money—and perhaps learn others to sing, or would you rather stick in Millerstown and scrub and bake and—"

"Yes, I would," insisted Louisa stubbornly.

"Well," said Susannah, "you're not going to. After dinner you are to practice till she comes, that is what you are to do."

"It makes me feel like a fool!" Louisa wept now with sobs and cries like a baby. "It is just opening my mouth and yelling, 'Ah, ah!'—that is what it is It is the dumbest thing in the world. Ollie, he mocks me and the neighbour children they make fun of me, too. They say 'Ah, ah!' at me, and—"

Tears had no effect upon Susannah. "You are to sing," said she.

"I would rather scrub the whole house every day. I would rather dig the garden and plant onions. I would rather—"

"If you are so fond of working, you can set the table," said Susannah coolly. "It is almost time that your pop comes."

Still sobbing, Louisa set the table; with angry eyes Susannah served the pot pie and poured the fragrant coffee into the cups.

When her husband arrived for his dinner, he looked at the two women and rubbed his chin and sat down at the table in silence. There was nothing to be said. Susannah knew her mind, Louisa knew hers, and Oliver, who had not the least sympathy with musical ambition, knew that a word from him would only do harm to Louisa's cause.

As she ate, Susannah's eyes began to shine. The weekly visits of the young music teacher were the joy of her life. The teacher played and sang; she talked about music; she was romance and poetry to Susannah. To her and to Louisa's spiritless imitations of her Susannah listened with rapture.

Louisa had a voice like her mother's, except that her collar seemed an inch or two tighter. But for that difficulty the young teacher promised a cure.

"She has a voice," she assured Susannah. "She uses it as incorrectly as possible, but the voice is there all the same. Did you never sing yourself?"

"Ach, a little," answered Susannah in great mortification and heartache. "Just in church I sing a little."

There was nothing surreptitious in Louisa's defiance. She went upstairs and put on her best pink dress, which her mother liked her to wear for her lessons, and she tied in her hair the enormous pink bows that her mother thought ridiculous, and donned her white slippers, which were the envy of all the girls in Millerstown. Then she walked boldly out the kitchen.

Susannah thought she knew why Louisa was setting forth.

"That is right," she said approvingly. "Get some flowers for the parlour till teacher comes."

But Louisa got no flowers; she did not turn down the board walk, which, with flower beds on either side, bisected the long yard; she went round the side of the house and out the front gate.

"Louisa!" called her mother presently; but Louisa did not answer.

"She went to Sarah Ann to get peonies for teacher," said Susannah to herself. Then she dried her hands and went upstairs to brush her hair and put on a clean dress and apron. Louisa's arraying herself for her music lesson was a tribute paid to vanity; her mother's was homage paid to art.

When Susannah came down, Louisa had not returned. The girl was not in the house, she was not in the yard, she was not visible at Sarah Ann Mohr's, next door.

Susannah called across the fence, "Did Louisa come to get flowers, say?"

"No," answered Sarah Ann from her rocking-chair. "Louisa went walking fast down the street."

It was two o'clock before it occurred to Susannah that Louisa had denied her. Even then Susannah thought it was only in the matter of practicing. Louisa hated to practice. That she would stay away from her lesson Susannah did not dream until she heard the clock strike three and saw the teacher at the door Then, with face white as her stiff apron and with trembling hands, poor Susannah let the teacher in.

Now, at half past four, trembling once more, by turns white and flushed, Susannah waited. The teacher had gone on the train that was also Jimmie Fackenthal's train. Susannah walked nervously up and down her kitchen. It was time to begin supper, but to supper Susannah gave no thought. The shock of disappointment seemed to have stunned her. She had deprived herself of luxuries, even of comforts, had made many sacrifices, had prayed that the desire of her heart might be fulfilled, and Louisa had proved unworthy, ungrateful, cruel.

Once Susannah took a long drink of water, as if her throat were burning; several times she spoke to herself, enumerating the monotonous duties from which she had meant to save her child.

"Scrubbing!" The words came out jerkily. "Soap boiling! Butchering! Washing! Rag-carpet sewing! Mending! Preserving! Canning! Fruit-juicing! O my soul!"

There was an unaccountable excitement in her manner. Once she went to look at herself in the little mirror by the door, as if to see the ravages that this grief had made upon her.

At a quarter to five o'clock Louisa, in her brave array, walked in. Her face was crimson, and her hands shook like her mother's; she looked as if she, too, were disquieted by some great emotion. Never in her life had she disobeyed her mother; she feared her too heartily for that.

For a long time Susannah stared at her. Louisa looked unlike herself with her scarlet cheeks and her quivering mouth. Her curly hair lay in ringlets on her forehead, and there was a strange, shining light in her blue eyes.

Under her mother's scrutiny Louisa began to cry.

"I can't sing, mom," she declared. "I won't sing, mom."

"Sit down!" commanded Susannah with decision.

Louisa sat down on the edge of the kitchen rocking-chair; her mother sat down on the other side of the room. Susannah spoke in a low key, as if she, too, were suddenly a different person. Louisa was frightened by her mother's gentleness, her strange voice, her trembling hands.

"It is things I must ask you, Louisa."

"I can't sing," repeated Louisa wildly. "It is no use to talk, mom."

"Once more, Louisa, for the last time in this world, why will you act this way?"

"I hate it!" declared Louisa. "It is dumb. I am not for singing. It is wasting time."

"It takes one little hour in a whole day Louisa." Susannah's voice quivered in her excitement.

"I could do better things in that time than say 'Ah, ah,'" objected Louisa.

"What could you do?"

"I could learn to sew and bake and cook better than I can now," replied Louisa. "I don't know how to keep a house and I want to."

"What! To keep a house!" said Susannah sharply. "You needn't think about keeping a house. I will keep the house like always."

"I will not sing!" cried Louisa. "I will not sing!"

The flaming red came back to Susannah's cheeks.

"I told you how I was once shamed in Allentown," she said. "Think of it, Louisa, to take music lessons, to improve yourself, to learn! To have some tell you the right way!" She spoke as if she described an actual experience of her own, and not one forever denied her. "To feel every Monday that you are learning! And to have the people listen to you when you sing, Louisa, think of that! Remember how I saved for you, Louisa, remember—"

"I can't help it," answered Louisa, weeping. "I'm sorry, mom, but it is too late, mom. I—"

"Too late?" echoed Susannah. "What do you mean by too late?" Suddenly Susannah's voice rose shrilly. "You talk about keeping a house! For who, then, will you keep a house?"

Louisa covered her hot face with her hands.

"For Jimmie Fackenthal. He don't want me to sing, he don't care for singing, he wants me to cook, he—I—"

"What!" cried Susannah.

Then Susannah crossed the room to Louisa's side and laid her hand on Louisa's heaving shoulder.

"For the last time," said she solemnly. "Will you cook and bake and scrub all your life, Louisa, or will you sing?"

Louisa wrung her hands.

"I will cook and bake, mom!" she cried hysterically. "I am sorry for you, mom, I—"

For an instant Susannah stood looking down at Louisa. Her face quivered, her lips opened and shut, as if she were seeking to master herself. Then she took her daughter to her arms.

"I am happy for you, Louisa," she said. "If it is what you want, I am happy for you. But you needn't worry about the money, Louisa,"—Susannah stopped a moment and gasped for breath,—"because I am taking those lessons myself."

The Smart Red Man.

A farmer some miles back of Almonte was joshing an Indian the other day about the unpleasant fall, winter and spring that Canada has experienced "This d—— country should be handed back to the Indians," observed the farmer.

"No, no," replied the noble red man in the guttural voice characteristic of his race. "Red man too smart for white man. Him not take country back. Him go live at North Pole where it's warm."

So it seems even the Indians are disgusted with the country and its rotton climate.—Almonte Gazette.

RHUBARB, PIE PLANT OR WINE PLANT.

WHAT could be pleasanter than to take one's spring tonic as a juicy rhubarb pie? Rhubarb ranks along side of oranges in its mineral content.

If you will try the following recipes you will never again doubt the wisdom of calling rhubarb Pie Plant or Wine Plant, two names by which it is frequently designated.

Rhubarb Wine.

(An old recipe)

Rhubarb makes a very excellent wine, which, when it has stood for a sufficient length of time acquires a flavour like that of champagne. If it is made as soon as rhubarb is plentiful it may be used the following Christmas, though it improves with age.

To 10 pounds of cut rhubarb, add two gallons of water. The rhubarb should be bruised with a heavy weight so the juice will come out readily. After adding the water, let it stand for five days, stirring occasionally. Add eight pounds of sugar and the rind of two lemons to the strained juice. Let this remain four or five days more, adding to it on the second day half an ounce of gelatine to aid in clearing. At the end of five days skim any crust which may have formed from the top, and put the wine in a cask. Do not cork the cask but leave the bung open for two weeks. Then cork the cask and leave the wine for six months before bottling. Allow to stand at least a month before using.

* * * *

Do you know that rhubarb leaves should never be eaten? They contain large quantities of acids harmful to the human body.

Rhubarb Meringue Pie or Tarts.

The following recipe may be used as pie or for tarts. Line your pie tin or patty tins with unbaked pastry and into them pour the following mixture.

2 tablespoons flour
1 cup sugar
1 cup chopped rhubarb
2 egg yolks
2 tablespoons water
½ tablespoon salt

Mix all together, fill pie tin and cover with meringue made by beating two egg whites with two tablespoons of sugar, and bake in a moderate oven.

The secret of a tender meringue is to cook it slowly. If cooked too fast it will be tough and sticky. Everyone has had the experience of eating a pie with a meringue that insisted in coming off all in one piece and was very sticky and chewy. A meringue should cut easily without sticking to the knife.

Rhubarb Marmalade.

Rhubarb for marmalade should be young and fresh. Cut it into inch lengths without peeling. Weigh it. Allow three-fourths of a pound of sugar to every pound of rhubarb. Place the sugar and rhubarb in a preserving kettle, heat it very slowly and boil until thick and clear. Pack in clean, hot jars and seal.
