Mrs. Robert Henderson and Misses Annie and Emma Sharpe were in Ottawa on Monday, Oct. 23rd, attending the funeral of the late Rev. R. H. Archer.

Misses Annie and Emma Sharpe and Mrs. Henderson attended the funeral at Christ Church Cathedral, Ottawa, of the late Rev. R. H. Archer of Ottawa on Monday morning last.

Mrs. T. W. Boyes is the delegate from the Women's Institute attending the Eastern Ontario Convention of that organization in the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Annable returned home on Saturday from a ten days trip in Western Ontario. They visited the latter's sister Mrs. H. Irving and niece Wm H. McConnell of Arthur, and nephew, Dr. Irving of Drayton, Ont.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Johnston arrived home after spending four months in the west. They visited Springwater, Sask. Edmonton, Calgary, Spokane, Walla Walla, Washington, Pendleton, Salem, Oregon, Astoria, and Seaside, Oregon.

Miss Marion Campbell went to Ottawa on Friday evening to be present at the marriage of her sister, Miss Jean Campbell, on Saturday at high noon. On Saturday evening, after the bridal couple had left, a party was given for the younger set and among the out of town guests were Mr. Wm. Fisher and Misses Helen Agnew and Mary Campbell, who motored in for it.

The Press last Saturday received a letter from Mr. J. W. Flett, telling of his safe arrival at Kingsville, Ontario. Kingsville is a town of about 2000 inhabitants, is a summer resort, and in summer an excursion steamer runs between there and Detroit. There is a trolly line to Windsor, 28 miles distance. Mr. Flett sends his kind regards to all Winchester friends. Mrs. Flett and son are spending a few weeks with friends in Belleville before going on to Kingsville.

On the afternoon of the 7th inst, from 4.30 to 8.30 Miss Empey was the hostess of a number of ladies in honour of her mother's approaching birthday, Nov. 15. The entertainment was an innovation, being a flower contest. In the letter of Madames Sweet and Ritchie, who won the prize, had their choice of one of the nine beautiful bouquets. Their choice was the bouquet of single and double petunias. The parlors had quite an artistic appearance from the arrangement of flowers, etc. Mrs. Empey was in a very happy mood throughout the evening.

Before leaving Shelburn, Ont. for Winchester, Mr. H. L. Lee, just appointed manager of the branch of the Union Bank here, and Mrs. Lee, were the recipients of a very very flattering presentation in the way of an address, accompanied with a gold headed cane and handsome pipe to Mr. Lee, and an iced tea set to Mrs. Lee. The Shelburn Free Press in making a note of the departure of Mr. Lee and family says, "In their five years residence here, Mr. and Mrs. Lee have, both in business and social circles, made many friends who will join in wishing them continued prosperity and health in their new home."

Mrs. C. B. Timmins and Mrs. R. McQuaig were hostesses at a miscellaneous shower given at the home of Mrs. Timmins on Friday evening in honor of Mrs. Christie Robinson whose marriage took place on Saturday. A large number of guests were present to offer congratulations. A little waggon prettily decorated with pink and white crepe paper and loaded with beautiful gifts was presented to the bride-to-be. Mrs. Robinson was quite overcome by the manifestations of the thoughtful and kindly feeling of her friends toward her and feelingly thanked them for their gifts.

Dainty refreshments were then served and a social hour followed. Upon departing the guests all wished Mrs. Robinson much happiness.

Messrs A. Sweet, Dr McKeown and H. B. Fetterly went to Brockville last Friday to take part in a big Masonic celebration known as the "Fall Ceremonial of Remesses Temple," These masons are known as Shriners, in other words Freemasons of a specially high degree. Here is how they are described by the Brockville paper, which says; "A large number of Scouts of the Desert, Idlers of the Oasis, Guards of the Harem, Disturbers of the Peace, representing Rameses Temple, Toronto; Karnark Temple, Montreal; Meria Temple Watertown, N. Y.; Mocho Temple, London, Islam Temple, San Francisco, gathered here for the great fall ceremonial of Rameses Temple." Now that sounds terrible enough, and the Press would advise the wives of those "Shriners" to insist upon a full explanation of what "Guards of the Harem" and "Disturbers of Peace" means.

The W. C. T. U. are making arrangements for their usual entertainment on Thanksgiving night, Nov. 6th. It will take the form of a contest. Music and Elocution. Keep the date in mind.

It was with profound regret that the people of Winchester learned on Friday morning of the death of Rev. R. H. Archer, of Ottawa, on the previous day. For a number of years the Rev. Mr. Archer was the rector of St. Mathias Church here, and he and his beloved wife were loved by all demonination in town. After leaving here Mr. Archer went to Cornwall, where he was rector of the English Church there until he was forced to retire, owing to ill-heath. They then moved to Ottawa where deceased has been an invalid ever since.

To his dearly beloved widow who was devotion itself, goes out the sympathy of the whole community. Besides his widow he leaves a son and daughter. The funeral took place on Monday.

St. Mathias Ladies Guild are holding an Afternoon Tea and Bake Sale on Saturday afternoon, Oct. 28th at the Rectory

A Vast Improvement

The Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal starts its fall and winter campaign for subscriptions a vastly improved paper over what previously looked like perfection. To those who have read that great weekly for years it would seem impossible to make improvements. Nevertheless the publishers seem detemined regardless of cost to make the Family Herald better value than ever before. Every Department is being strengthened and new features added. In fact the Family Herald and Weekly Star during 1923 will be of such value that no Canadian home can afford to be without.

Big Paying Sale continues till November 11th at Coons' Store. Keep last week's Press. for reference.

Maple Ridge Cemetery

In another column of this issue is published the auditor report of the Maple Ridge Cemetery Coy. which shows a very handsome surplus on hand. It will be thought by many that some of that surplus might have been expended in improving the walks and grounds. In explanation the directors say that they have found it impossible to secure the necessary labor to carry out the improvements they wish except at unwarranted cost. Besides they are confronted with the necessity of purchasing more land, as there are only a very limited number of lots now available. The directors are anxious to expend the funds on hand to the best advantage and may be trusted to do so.

Worthy Your Support.

At the annual meeting of the Winchester Branch of the Bible Society, held on Monday evening, the following officers were elected. President, Dr. McKendry; Vice-Presidents, the resident ministers; Secy-Treas., Mr. A. Duncan; Depositary, Alex Duncan; Committee, J. F. Campbell Dan. McCallum, J. E. Lanoue, J. D. Stewart, Geo. Earle, C A. Coons, D. H. Weir Ezra Summer, J. E. Jackson, Robt. Rennick and Geo. C. Reveler. In a short time a careful canvas will be made of this district for funds, and there should be a very liberal response, as no objeet is more worthy of support. The Bible Society distributes every year millions of Bibles, printed in every tongue, where Christian ministers have gone. The Society is dependent solely on free contributors. Winchester district has not supported this cause as generously as it should, and when the collectors call on you give liberally.

Among The Fire Sufferers

Among those who went through an awful experience, and lost all they had in the in the district, was Mr. and Mrs. McNair. Mrs. McNair is a sister of Mrs. W. S. L. Merrill, of Ottawa, and formerly of Mountain. Mrs. McNair tells how she, her husband aed little boy, Roy. remained all night in a field covered with wet blankets to keep off the awful heat. Mr. McNair was unable to see for two days after, the heat had had such an effect his eyes. All that saved him was that he was able to occasionally duck his head in a bucket of water. They are now living in a school house with other burned out families. Mr. McNair writes that their crop, this year was the best they ever had. She said that the scene was terrible that they thought the end of the world had come.

Who Is He?

A man who claims that he is travelling in the interests of Christian Missions is going through this section, distributing literature, and collecting what he can from those disposed to favour him. The Press don't know anything about the merits of his work, but we do know that any contributions for missions will be properly placed if given through our established churches, and the established churches do not send strangers through the country on such errands. There are too many strangers seeking help throughout the country at the present time.

The house was prettily decorated with ferns and autumn flowers. Mr. and Mrs. Moffat left by motor for New York City, the bride wearing a navy blue tricotine suit and mink chocker, the gift of the groom. LOCAL AND GENERAL

"The Man From Glengarry" is to be shown in Motion Pictures in the Town Hall, on Tuesday, Nov. 14. Those who have read Ralph Connor's books will enjoy this opportunity of seeing one of his greatest stories shown in pictures.

The elections held on Monday to fill vacancies in the Ontario Legislature for South East Toronto and Russell County, resulted in Col. Currie redeeming South Toronto from the Liberal ranks. In Russell there were three candidates, Goulet Liberal, Blanchard Progressive and Bowen Independent liberal. Goulet was elected by a large majority over the two opposing candidates, he received 4,095 votes, Bowen 250, and Blanchard 1,907. It is a somewhat significant fact that in both ridings not one third of a possible vote was polled, and that in Russell the progressive candidate got very little support from farmers.

Using Oil as Fuel

Mr. Geo. Mowat, Hotel Winchester, has just installed through Mr. C. B. Timmins, two universal oil burners, with which he intends to heat his hotel during the Winter. The oil burners is something new in the way of heating large premises, but so far they are giving perfect satisfaction, and the trouble of not having to store and shovel coal and carry out ashes is done away with. Mr. Mowat is bound to keep his hotel up-to-date in every respect.

DON'TS FOR GIRLS

Don't say "say,"
And don't say "see?"
Don't say "listen,"
And don't say "gee!"
Don't powder your nose
In the public gaze;
Don't polish your nails
In the public ways.
And don't display
Such a length of limb;
Don't dress on the street
As if going to swim.
Don't talk too much about "him" and "his,"
Don't say often, "I'll say it is,"
And don't say "dearie,"
And don't chew gum:—
And then I'll say
The millennium's come!

For the Boys and Girls

Developing Your Legs.

Good legs are essential in football for either linesman or back, and in this day of automobiles any player who arrives back at school with a good pair of legs under him is almost sure to get his chance.

Of course walking and running are the most common forms of exercise for the legs, and both give good results when they are done properly. Long strolls will reduce rather than build up your legs. Two or three miles, if you walk properly, will be enough. Carry the body erect, hold the knees well back, push the weight of the body vigorously from the ball of the foot at each step, use a stride of medium length, and walk as rapidly as you can and still observe those rules. Running long distances does little to develop the legs, but sprinting in short dashes on the balls of your feet is good.

Skipping rope is good, but the heel should be brought well up toward the buttock, in order to exercise the muscles of the back of the thigh. In stationary running, do not stop with the usual front-thigh work of bending the knees up in front, but also practice bringing the heel up behind as high and as snappily as you can.

The front-thigh muscle usually receives much attention owing to the common belief that the upper thigh is especially important. It is the muscle immediately above the knee that counts; the failure of that is what causes an athlete to collapse in the legs. It holds the leg straight or controls the angle at which it bends. There is no better exercise for that particular muscle than the knee bend. With your hands on your hips and your heels slightly raised, squat until you are sitting on your heels. Straighten up rather slowly, and repeat the exercise until you are tired. Go clear down every time. A light bar or some such weight held across your shoulders will make the exercise both more interesting and more valuable. Increase the weight of the bar slowly instead of increasing the number of bends. Ten to twenty times is enough. Never do more than thirty.

The calves of the legs are sometimes hard to develop. The shin bone joins the bones of the foot in a way that differs in different persons. The distance from the point of juncture to the end of the foot varies. One man who has an eleven-inch foot may have a long front foot and a short heel, and another man whose foot is of the same length may have a short front foot and a long heel.

The action of the foot in walking is mainly a contraction of the tendo Achillis and the gastrocnemius, the great calf muscle that draws the heel up and presses the ball of the foot downward. Other things being equal, —weight of body, and so forth,—the man who has a short heel will have the larger calf, because he has to use more motive power to counterbalance the disadvantage of poor leverage. Also, the long front foot means more work for the muscle that runs along the outside of the shin bone, which lifts the toes and draws them toward the shin.

If correct walking, running and skipping rope fail to bring your calves to proper size, try this: Stand on the edge of a low step—two or three boards or something else low enough to let the heels touch the floor but high enough to stretch the calf muscles. Now raise the heels rather slowly and rise as high as you can on your toes. Repeat the exercise until the calves ache a little, then reverse the position and draw up the toes. You can keep your balance by resting a hand on the back of a chair, but be careful not to divide the strain. If you need still stronger medicine, lift one foot and exercise one leg at a time.

HUMOR IN HIGH PLACES

Queen Alexandra has the gift, common with other members of the Royal Family, of seldom forgetting a face.

This is illustrated by a story told by Lord Ernest Hamilton in "Forty Years On." When he was eight years old, Lord Ernest met the Princess of Wales, as Queen Alexandra then was.

His hands were at that time disfigured by a number of warts, and the Princess promised she would charm them away. A certain rite was gone through, to the best of his recollection with hazel twigs, and from that day on the warts began to disappear!

Fourteen years later Lord Ernest was again presented to the Princess, and H.R.H., shaking hands, asked: "But where are the warts?" It was explained that her magic had effected a permanent cure.

Absent-Mindedness.

Lord Strathnairn (better remembered, perhaps as Sir Hugh Rose), of Indian Mutiny fame, became very absent-minded in his last years. At a Foreign Office reception he asked everyone he knew to dine with him on the following night, and then forgot all about it.

Next night some thirty-six hungry and expectant people disembarked from various vehicles at the front door of his tiny house in Charles Street. As there was nothing in the house to eat, the guests had to return the way they had come.

Sometimes Lord Strathnairn forgot whether he was dining in his own house or another's. On one occasion, when dining with Lady A., and in a particularly absent-minded mood, he suddenly turned to his hostess and said:

"My dear Lady A., I really must apologize to you for this extremely nasty dinner. I cannot imagine what has come over my cook. I have never known her so disgrace herself before."

Walter Francis, the fifth Duke of Buccleuch, always wore a Glengarry bonnet when in Scotland. In winter he affected a shepherd's plaid flung across his shoulders in place of an overcoat. On several occasions he was, to his own unbounded delight, taken for a shepherd.

One day his own valet made this mistake when passing him in the dusk. Wishing to be affable, the valet remarked: "Fine evening, Jock."

"Oh, aye, it's a' that," replied the Duke.

The only man Lord Ernest ever came across who resolutely refused a proffered tip was John Bell, an old Scottish gamekeeper—well educated, keenly intelligent, and meticulously honest.

Are Scots Mean?

"The extraordinary idea," writes Lord Ernest, "that the Scot is a mean fellow, to whom the spending of sixpense is pain, is about as wide of the truth as it is possible for a popular fallacy to reach. In my experience, which is considerable, the Scot, in the matter of generosity, is distinctly ahead of either the English, the Welsh or the Irish."

Lord Ernest once met the late Cameron of Lochiel in London.

"Halloa, Lochiel!" he said. "What brings you up?"

"You may well ask," he replied, irritably. "Well, the fact is, they wired to say my mother was dying and I came all the way up from Achnacarry; and now I find she isn't dying at all. It really is a most infernal nuisance."

"It is a curious fact," writes Lord Ernest, "that though my father (the Duke of Abercorn) never unbent towards the people (in Ireland) among whom he spent the last years of his life . . he nevertheless inspired them with an unbounded admiration which very nearly approached worship.

" 'The Deuk's a nice, affable kind of a man, I overheard one say of my brother.

" 'He is that,' was the reply, 'but give me the ould Deuk. Sure he'd look at you as though you were the very dirt under his feet.' "

When the Paper Doesn't Come.

My father says the paper he reads
ain't put up right,
He finds a lot of fault, he does, perusin' it all night,
He says there ain't a single thing in it worth while to read,
And that it doesn't print the kind of stuff the people need,
He tosses it aside and says it's strictly on the bum—
But you ought to hear him holler when the paper doesn't come.

He reads about the weddin's and he snorts like all get out,
He reads the social doin's with a most derisive shout,
He says they make the papers for the women folks alone,
He'll read about the parties and he'll fume and fret and groan;
He says of information it doesn't have a crumb—
But you ought to hear him holler when the paper doesn't come.

He's always first to grab it, and he reads it plumb through,
He doesn't miss an item or a want ad
—that is true,
He says they don't know what we want, the darn newspaper guys,
I'm going to take a day sometimes an' go an' put 'em wise;
Sometimes it sems as though they must be deaf and blind and dumb,
But you ought to hear him holler when
the paper doesn't come.

Not What They Meant.

The true "bull" is not manufactured; it just happens. Perhaps that is why it rarely fails to amuse. Here are some amusing examples:

An Irish notice of reward for an escaped convict: "Age not known, but looks older than he is."

In the course of a speech the defender of Ladysmith said the best "bull" he ever heard came from an Irish soldier, who, when asked, "What struck you most during the long siege?" replied: "The number of bullets that missed me."

A woman went into a London confectioner's, and looking at a pile of buns, asked, "Are those buns to-day's? Because yesterday's were not."

An Irish reporter is credited with the following gem:

"When they stood up to sing their opening hymn there was not an empty seat in the sacred building."

The most amusing "bulls" are the outcome of the impulsive haste with which the Irish politician expresses himself. For example:

"When we get Home Rule everybody in Ireland will do as he likes, and those who don't will be made to do it," is taken from the speech of an Irish labor leader.

"The time has come when we must strip to the waist and roll up our shirt-sleeves," said an ardent Irish politician.

"I wish I were left-handed," said an Irish laborer, "because if I hurt my right hand I would have my left to fall back upon."

An Irish M.P., speaking of a political opponent, is represented to have said: "Even if he told the truth I would not believe him."

The Thing That Counts.

"It isn't what you earn that counts."
"Huh?"
"The salary doesn't figure."
"What does?"
"The ability to make it last from pay day to pay day."

The man who blows his own trumpet is usually out of tune.

Goitre is Preventable and Curable.

The public, and more particularly the women, will be interested to know that the enlargement of the thyroid glands, commonly known as Goitre or Thick neck, has been demonstrated by those engaged in medical research, to be not only curable by medical treatment, but also preventable.

Goitre has been demonstrated to be a deficiency disease. That is, a disease due to insufficient iodine content in our food or drink. This has been made clear in two ways. First—by demonstrating that enlargement of the thyroid can be readily produced by the entire elimination of iodine from our food and water supply. And secondly, by having demonstrated that the enlargement of the throid gland, or goitre, can be prevented or cured by the proper administration of iodine in a form that can be readily assimilated by our system, that is by giving a small medicinal dose of some official preparation of iodine, for instance, syrup iodine of iron, or iodine of sodium, for a period say of two weeks, spring and fall. Iodine, when administered in that form, promptly finds its way to the thyroid gland, owing to this gland having the greatest affinity for it, and, only functioning properly when iodine is present. The absence of iodine content in the gland results always in enlargement. Iodine, therefore, in an active and inactive form, is a normal constituent of the gland.

The reader will naturally wonder why it is only necessary, then, to administer the iodine say twice a year, and only for ten days or two weeks at a time. Consistent with Nature's laws of self-preservation, this gland is capable of storing any excess of iodine in its colloid, which seems to serve as a storehouse, in a harmless manner, for any excess of iodine.

Unfortunately, all research seems to follow evolutionary lines, and this is no exception. However, few problems in medical research afford quite as much interest to the lay mind as that of the cause of goitre, and how the knowledge of its cure and prevention has been obtained.

It would seem from the history of this discovery that those engaged in medical research are not always as keenly observant as they might be, nor do they season their scientific knowledge as well as they might with common sense. For instance, ashes of burnt sponges was successfully used in the treatment of goitre by the early Greeks. Of course they were not aware when using this that these ashes were rich in iodine, nor yet were they aware that iodine played any role in the prevention or cure of this condition. However, iodine has been used more or less for over a quarter of a century. No doubt in cases of goitre that have been painted with tincture of iodine with more or less success, the results have been due to the small amount of iodine obsorbed.

Women and the League.

The selection of Mrs. Coombe Tennant as a British delegate to the Assembly of the League of Nations was doubtless made because of her exceptional fitness for the place and not for lack of men capable of filling it. This appointment and her candidacy for the House of Commons from the Forest of Dean promise her prominence in public life not surpassed by any of her countrywomen.

Mrs. Tennant is a sister-in-law of Lady Stanley and of Mrs. Margot Asquith. Her son was killed in the World War, and during this war she organized the women of Wales for agricultural work. She has spent much time in France and Italy and is as familiar with the languages of those countries as with her own. She has long been noted as an eloquent speaker and as an authority on social and political questions.

She is not, however, the first woman to serve as a delegate to the League of Nations. For the last year Miss Helen Vacarescu has been the representative of Rumania, serving in that capacity at the Geneva meeting of the league. At that assemblage she added to the distinction she had already won as a poet by her brilliant oratory and her skill in statecraft and diplomacy.

Not An Eye Witness.

Little Willie's father had taken him to Sunday school for the first time, and on the way home, in order to see if the youngster had learned anything, he asked:—

"Who was it killed Goliath?"

"I dunno," said Willie. "I was sitting on a back seat and couldn't see."

DEVELOPMENT AT GREAT FALLS, MAN.

UNEQUALLED IN CANADA WEST OF NIAGARA.

Completed Project Will Provide Power for 75 Million Dollars Additional Industries.

It has been said that capital follows power and that people follow capital, and it is usually the history of a community where hydro-electric power has been introduced and consistently and properly marketed that industry has been stimulated and the development of the community generally furthered. The fact that certain areas of Canada are not provided with cheap coal supplies has been largely compensated for by the availability of potential water-power development. Power, for instance, had a great deal to do with making the city of Montreal the first industrial centre of Canada, and the same factor has resulted in the industrial prosperity of the Eastern Townships of Quebec. The same development can be effected, and is being effected, in other Canadian areas where good transportation is available, labor abundant and reliable, electrical energy provided.

At one time it was generally assumed that Winnipeg could never become a great industrial or manufacturing centre by reason of the absence of coal deposits within distance of economic transport from the city. The power posibilities of the waterways about it were disregarded. To-day the city of Winnipeg, after being the great trade distributing centre of the prairie Provinces, is developing as its manufacturing centre. At the end of 1919 Winnipeg returned a record of 876 industrial establishments, capitalized at $80,378,258, employing 23,175 persons, and accounting for an annual production of $119,836,108.

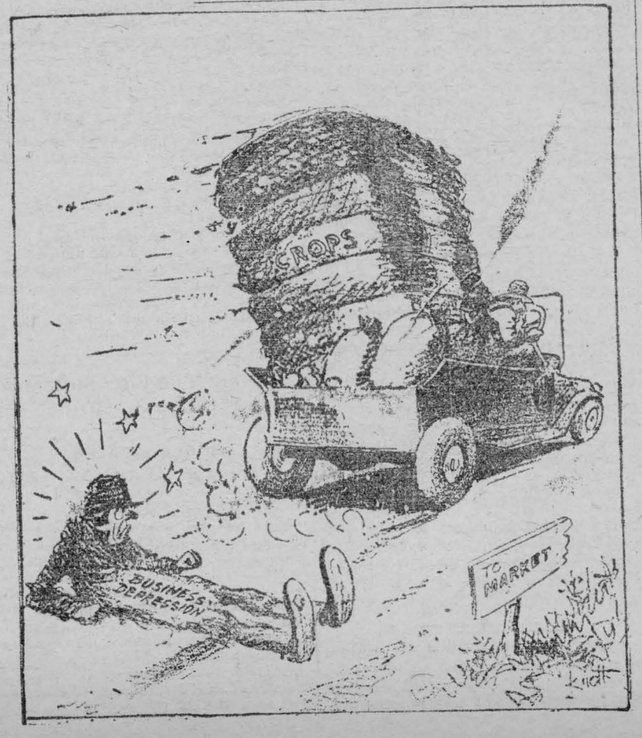
The Winnipeg River provides the city of Winnipeg with two hydro-electric developments of the major class, the 35,000 horse-power plant of the Winnipeg Electric Company on the Pinawa channel, 58 miles distant, and the municipal plant at Pointe du Bois, with turbine horse-power installed at the present time to the extent of 47,000, and designed for an ultimate capacity of 100,000 horse-power. When these plants were installed it was seriously questioned whether the output could be absorbed by Greater Winnipeg. Yet within twenty years, despite the doubling of the capacity of the power supply, the expansion of the city and its suburbs, the great development of industry, and the anticipated industrial needs of the immediate future have necessitated making provision for an extension to the power available.

Extensive H.P. Development.

This demand is being met by the Manitoba Power Company, which, at Great Falls, on the Winnipeg River, is developing a project which, for dimensions and potential importance, is unequalled in the Dominion west of Niagara. One thousand men are working on the preliminary work preparatory to the installation of the units of a 168,000 horse-power plant. Several falls have been included in one concentration. A dam with a maximum height of 70 feet and 4,000 feet in length is being constructed which will raise the present level of the water 46 feet. The pond or reservoir so created is of an area of approximately 2,000 acres. The completed power house will contain six vertical turbo-generators. The initial installation is to contain a power house building to accommodate three units, and two generators are to be included of 21,000 k.w. capacity. For the first installation the amount contemplated to be spent at Great Falls is in the neighborhood of seven and a half million dollars, and ultimately ten and a half million dollars will be put into the work before the site is developed to its capacity.

The development of a power project of such magnitude has been undertaken upon the firm belief of prominent, hard-headed business men in the yet greater potentialities of Greater Winnipeg from the industrial standpoint. To utilize the power the completed project will provide, to the full extent, will require the introduction of seventy-five millions of dollars of capital to finance new industries, or practically doubling the present sum invested in Winnipeg's industrial enterprises. The fact that the necessary finances to complete the project have been forthcoming and the work is being proceeded steadily with, is indicative of a general faith in Winnipeg's industrial future.

DELIBERATELY RUN OVER



HINTS on HEALTH and BEAUTY

QUITE useless will any and all cosmetics and toilet applications prove to the woman who makes no attempt to take care of her health.

For good health is the prime factor in a clear skin.

And following the deduction plan, it becomes clear that conservation of energy plenty of fresh air and exercise and nourishing seasonable food will do more to enable woman to keep youth and good looks as companions than all the beauty treatments she can use.

Nature vs. Art.

However since some of us didn't consider these things in time and others of us are not quite convinced that health is the greatest beautifier in the world and none of us are quite satisfied with ourselves as we are, all of us employ a little art now and then to help along nature in her good work.

And if done carefully and discriminatingly, there is no harm on our efforts to make ourselves look as well as we are able.

Only of one thing we must be sure, and that is that we do look well after we are through.

For many a maid resembles a circus clown after too lavish a use of stickup rouge and powder.

A perfectly harmless rouge may be made at home.

Take a raw beet, thoroughly washed and dried, and press it against a grater until the juice is extracted.

Then mix this liquid with starch or with rice powder until the shade desired is attained.

Cover this with a thin cloth to keep out the dust and set in the sun to dry.

If a few drops of rose or lavender oil are worked in it will adhere the better to the skin, but when this is done the mixture must be thoroughly sifted through sheer muslin to insure its being smooth.

To make another harmless rouge follow these directions.

Mingle one-quarter dram of carmine with one ounce of powdered magnesia and then slowly work this into one-half dram of sweet almond oil.

Force the preparation through coarse muslin several times, pressing out the lumps.

The oil should be absorbed and the rouge come out in powder form.

The application first of ice cold and then hot water to the face often accomplishes good results.

Use for the agents in applying this treatment two thick pads made of several layers of Canton flannel somewhat near the size of a silver dollar.

Dip these into ice cold water and lay them upon the cheeks where the color is desired, allowing them to remain there for about two minutes.

When they begin to get warm re-dip them in the ice water and put them again upon the cheeks.

Then follow this with pads dipped into bearably hot water and laid in precisely the same spots as were the cold pads.

Courting Color.

Repeat alternately this operation until a distinct sensation of glow is felt in the skin and this will mean that the blood has been brought to the surface.

Finish the treatment by lightly rubbing cold cream over the skin that has been wet. This will preclude any possibility of chapping.

Moderation is a good thing to use in all things and it is a rule which should be rigidly adhered to in the use of colorful cosmetics.

Autumn Sunrise.

Blazoned and round I saw the great sun rise,
Float out above tall maples flaming red;
A wind swayed them, blew steadily ahead
And curved their sun-sprayed tops in green dawn skies,
And at my feet the road with rainbow eyes
Sparkled, and winding onward—a white thread—
Was lost in golden-yellow fields out-spread
Under stray clouds rich-tinged with autumn dyes.

Out in the fields strong men were garnering sheaves,
Singing old songs, clear songs of men
deep-chested;
And the sun shone, and sunbeams
came down-thronging * * *
I also sang, walked on and knew no
longing,
Swished a thin bough that twanged
out unarrested
Amid the rustle of wind-shattered leaves.

Princes in Beggary.

The German princes, proud and wealthy relics of royalty, are in sore straits, and some of them are making persistent appeals for public aid. Oscar, of Prussia and Rupert, of Bavaria, are imploring the German government to pension them as former generals of the Imperial army, while the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen wants to return to well-paid duty as inspector general.

As for William Hohenzollern, formerly Kaiser, he contents himself with claiming the property belonging to him. In Berlin and the suburbs he claims fifty-three palaces or other residences. Many houses in Berlin are mortgaged to him; he has properties all over Germany, and his wealth is so great that the Prussian Minister of Finance, who is in charge of auditing his accounts with the government, declares himself incapable of estimating it fully.

And the Kaiser does not pay a cent of tax on his income.

A 3-in-1 City.

Peking is in reality three cities in one. There is an inner or Manchu city and an outer or Chinese city.

The inner comprises the imperial city, which, in turn, contains the "Forbidden City" or the "Purple Forbidden City," inside the walls of which, again, is the imperial palace.

Peking itself is one of the oldest cities in the world, being known to exist in the twelfth century before Christ, but although it is of immense size, being twenty-five miles in circumference, much of the space within the walls is unoccupied.

An Early Bird.

"Pat," said a manager to one of his workmen, "you must be an early riser. I always find you at work the first thing in the morning."

"Indade, and I am, sor; it's a family trait. I'm thinking."

"Then your father is an early riser, too?"

"Me father is it?" answered Pat. "He rises that early that if he went to bed a little later he'd meet himself getting up in the morning."

Working yourself to death is hard. Loafing yourself to death is easier and much quicker.

The Lighter Side of Irish Life

An old lady in Dublin, who wanted to find a tram to take her to Blackrock, asked a policeman for information. She was standing in the middle of the road, near Nelson's Pillar, the place at which most of the Dublin trains converge.

"In one moment, ma'am," said the policeman, "if you haven't moved out of the way, you'll find it in the small of the back."

A woman, travelling alone, had succeeded in filling every unoccupied seat in a first-class compartment with her luggage. She declined to move any of it in order to allow another traveller to enter the carriage. He appealed to the guard, who remonstrated with the woman.

"Do you know whom you are speaking to?" she replied. "Let me tell you that I am one of the director's wives."

"I can't help it, ma'am," said the guard, "and it wouldn't make a ha'porth of difference if you was his only one."

The problem of old-age pensions is sometimes a troublesome one in Ireland. One applicant nearly lost her pension through having been vain when she was young. The register of her marriage was found, and it was stated there apparently on her own authority, that she was twenty-five at the time of the ceremony, the date of which proved that she was not, as she now stated, seventy years of age. The woman explained, however, that, her husband being eight years younger than herself, she had understated her age by ten years.

Eventually the pension was granted, and her daughter, who had heard the whole subject thrashed out, was immensely impressed by the mother's escape.

"If ever I'm married," she said, "I'll give out that I'm ten years older than I am, no matter what age himself (the man) may be."

An old man, sending in his claim for a pension, said he was seventy, whereas the authorities discovered that he was eighty.

"You must have known you were a good bit over seventy," the pensions officer said. "Why didn't you say so?"

"Your honor," said the old man, "I'll not be telling any lies about it. I had my mind made up to get married as soon as ever I got the pension, but there isn't a girl in the parish who would look at me if it got out on me that I was eighty."

There is a tradition that on one occasion an Irishman, asked to what political party he belonged, replied, "I don't know, but I'm against the Government anyway."

An English tourist once pointed out a round tower to the car-driver who was conducting him round Clendalough, and asked him who built it.

"There's nobody knows that," said the car-driver, "but seeing that it isn't of any manner of use and must have cost a great deal of money, I'm thinking it must have been the Government built it."

A traveller found himself at an out-of-the-way railway junction, where it was necessary for him to spend the night. He asked a porter if there was an hotel in which he could get a room.

"There's two hotels," said the porter, and in reply to a question as to which was the best, he added: "There's some that prefer the Railway Hotel and there's some that prefer the Imperial, but whichever of the two you go to, you'll find yourself lying awake the night wishing you'd gone to the other."

A mourner was found by a friend standing disconsolately on the platform of a West of Ireland junction.

"What brings you here?" said his friend, glancing at the mourner's silk hat and black coat.

"I was meaning to attend a funeral, said the other, "but the corpse has missed the connection."

Sir Boyle Roche, speaking in the Commons, perpetrated a "bull" when he said: "What, Mr. Speaker, and so we are to beggar ourselves for the fear of vexing prosterity. Now I would ask the honorable gentleman, and this still more honorable House, why should we put ourselves out of the way for posterity? What has posterity done for us?"

A preacher once began his sermon thus: "This text, my beloved brethren, may be said to occupy an intermediate position between that which precedes it and that which immediately follows it."

A traveller, anxious about his letters, asked the waiter at an Irish hotel what mails there were in the place. "Three, your honor," replied the man; "breakfast, dinner, and tea."

At least something new has come out of the distress of Austria, in the form of postage stamps bearing the portraits not of sovereigns, according to custom, but of famous musicians. Japan, it will be remembered, adorns her exquisite stamps with a chrysanthemum flower, Great Britain with the portrait of the sovereign, France with a group emblematic of the republic, and the United States with portraits of various statesmen. But Austria alone selects men whose fame is in the world of art.

Thus the two-kronen stamp bears the portrait of Francis Haydn, the immortal composer of "The Creation," "The Seasons," "Armida" and a wealth of sacred and secular music, not forgetting the national hymn of Austria. The five-kronen stamp shows the handsome face of Mozart, the inspired melodist of "Don Giovanni," "The Magic Flute" and other masterpieces. On the seven-and-a-half-kronen stamp appears the mighty and incomparable Beethoven. And on the 10-kronen stamp is the likenes of Franz Schubert, worthy comparion of the other great masters.

Musicians and philatelists alike will rejoice in these stamps, which are excellent examples of the engraver's art. But connoisseurs will wonder at the judgment which placed on the highest priced stamp of all, the 50-kronen, the portrait of the composer of "The Beautiful Blue Danube," "Wine, Woman and Song," "Thousand and One Nights" and other fashionable dances of a generation or two ago. Is it to be believed that the Viennese really rank Johann Strauss above Haydn, Mozart, Schubert and Beethoven?

Too Much.

"Am I to understand that in your opinion your boy has too great an appetite?" asked the physician of the anxious mother. "Do you realize, madam, how much a growing boy can eat?"

"I should think I ought to, if anybody does," returned the mother. "I'll just put the case to you, doctor.

"Where we were, up in the mountains, this summer, the waitress would come and say to my boy: 'We have fried fish, steak, liver and bacon, baked and fried potatoes, biscuit, muffins, and dry toast.'

"And my boy would say, 'I'll take it all, please—and some eggs.' "

It matters not how long we live, but how.

MANY TROUBLES COME THROUGH THE BLOOD

If Kept Rich and Red Good Health Will be Yours.

Nearly all the common diseases are caused by bad blood, weak, watery blood poisoned by impurities. Bad blood is the cause of headaches and backaches, lumbago, and rheumatism, debility and indigestion, neuralgia, sciatica and other nerve troubles. It is bad blood that causes disfiguring skin diseases like eczema, and salt rheum, pimples and eruptions. The severity of the trouble indicates how impure the blood is, and it goes always from bad to worse unless steps are promptly taken to enrich and purify the blood. There is no use trying a different medicine for each trouble, for they all come through the one cause—bad blood. In conditions of this kind Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been found very beneficial, as they have a direct action on the blood, enriching and purifying it. That is why this medicine is so often successful, after other remedies have failed—they reach the root of the trouble in the blood. Mr. Albert S. Giffin, Mount Pleasant, P.E.I., tells what these pills did for him. He says:—"Some months ago I was in a badly run-down condition. My blood was poor, I had no appetite and my work left me completely tired out. I fell off in weight, was altogether in a miserable condition. I was taking medicine, but it was not doing me any good. At this stage a friend who had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills with beneficial results, advised me to take them, and acting on his advice I did so. The result can be summed up in a few words: I took the pills for a little more than a month, when I can honestly say I never felt better in my life. I can now eat a hearty meal, do my work with comparative ease, and have gained in weight. I advise weak, rundown people to give these pills a fair trial."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

With The BOY SCOUTS

"A Scout's Duty is to Help Others."

What has been done can be done again. Here are some boiled-down gleanings from reports of actual Boy Scout accomplishments. They are typical of the thousands of "Good Turns" which Boy Scouts are doing every day in the year in compliance with their Scout Law—"A Scout's Duty is to be Useful and to Help Others."

"Visited other troops and entertained some at our Headquarters. Sold Christmas Seals for Tuberculosis Campaign Fund. Opened up road filled with snow bank. Pulled out several automobiles. First aid rendered to old gentleman who fell down stairway. Helped organize new Scout troops."

"Helped during the 300th anniversary celebration. Patrolled the line of march during the parades and stood ready to do first aid work if necessary."

"Accepted responsibility for looking after open-air skating rink provided by public-spirited citizens for the young people of the town."

"Helped at various conventions, Clean Up Week, Fall Fair. Cleared underbrush out of large area of town park. Attend daily to raising and lowering of flag on pole outside town hall."

"Helped at Parish House Fair. Sold tickets, helped at booth and cloak room, ran errands. Helped get Community Christmas tree. Gave demonstration of first aid and bandaging before village firemen."

"Helped in removing snow. When the flood came last spring laid planks across bad places for the people to walk on. Stopped a runaway horse. Helped in auto accident."

"Assisted the church in distribution of advertising matter. Held a "Father and Son Banquet" to which a majority of the fathers came and all the boys."

"Visited sick boys and sent each some little token, eatable and otherwise. Acted as leaders in many ways at school."

"Guides and ushers at entertainments, religious services and conventions held in church. Contributed to church work and missions."

"Made contribution to Provincial Council to aid it in extending the benefits of Scouting to boys in towns without Scout troops. Took flowers to hospital, provisions to poor. Assisted in better baby and anti-tuberculosis campaigns."

"Helped fire department locate dangerous conditions liable to result in fires. Assisted in controlling traffic during parade on Circus Day."

"Built bird houses and placed them in trees in town park and along the streets. Collected baskets for a supper in connection with district Sunday School Convention."

"Took lead in movement to provide proper local celebration of Dominion Day, efforts resulting in biggest and best holiday programme in years."

"Assisted as guides during Baptist Convention. Polished brass work about church gallery several times. Assisted in decorating church for special occasions."

"Saturday mornings through the winter spent helping widows and families without grown men, piling wood, splitting kindling, shovelling snow. It was done systematically and well. Never pass any broken glass or bottles that might injure auto tires without removing the same. Take care of young children on excursion trips."

With such evidence of practical helpfulness is it any wonder that Rudyard Kipling gave to the Scouts the title he had previously given his great boy character, Kim — "The Little Friends of All the World?"

My Boy.

I want my boy to be straight and true,
To be strong and loving and kind,
To practise justice, and mercy, too,
To be clean of living and mind;

He's impatient, a bit, with the Decalogue,
So I'm teaching my boy to love a dog.

HEALTHY CHILDREN ALWAYS SLEEP WELL

The healthy child sleeps well and during its waking hours is never cross but always happy and laughing. It is only the sickly child that is cross and peevish. Mothers, if your children do not sleep well; if they are cross and cry a great deal, give them Baby's Own Tablets and they will soon be well and happy again. The Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative which regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach, banish constipation, colic and indigestion, and promote healthful sleep. They are absolutely guaranteed free from opiates and may be given to the new-born babe with perfect safety. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

No Surrender.

During the unneighborly war between England and France, in one sea fight H.M.S. Marlborough was engaged in a severe battle, and got the worst of it. The captain and second lieutenant were dangerously wounded, the vessel was so shattered that to handle her was impossible, and the officers and crew were deep in conference as to a "surrender." One officer protested, declaring he would nail the colors to the mast and go down fighting. There were some poultry-coops on the deck, and during the fight the coops had been broken and the poultry were roaming at their own will. At the moment when the protest against "surrender" was going on, a young rooster happened to fly on the stump of the broken mast, and, having reached the top, flapped his wings and sent out a lusty clarion cry of "Cock-a-doodle-doo."

The sailors gave a loud and merry cheer, and vowed there should be "No Surrender." A few minutes after H.M.S. Aquiton came to their help and towed the Marlborough to a place of safety. The gallant young rooster became a public hero, and his "cock-a-doodle-doo" of defiance to the enemy endeared him to his country. He remained with the crew, and became their proud and happy pet—their literal "mascot."

What Might Have Been.

Pat was making a wooden pigsty, when he missed the nail he was hammering and hit his own thumb.

After having it wraped up he met one of his friends, who, naturally, asked him what he had been doing.

"Sure," said Pat, "I hit me thumb with a hammer. It's bad now, but I'd had no thumb left at all if I'd been striking with both hands!"

MOTHER!

Clean Child's Bowels with "California Fig Syrup"

Even a sick child loves the "fruity" taste of "California Fig Syrup." If the little tongue is coated, or if your child is listless, cross, feverish, full of cold, or has colic, a teaspoonful will never fail to open the bowels. In a few hours you can see for yourself how thoroughly it works all the constipation poison, sour bile and waste from the tender little bowels and gives you a well, playful child again.

Millions of mothers keep "California Fig Syrup" handy. They know a teaspoonful to-day save s a sick child tomorrow. Ask your druggist for genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on bottle. Mother! You must say "California" or you may get an imitation fig syrup.

Tribute to the Cow.

Little do we realize the debt we owe the cow. During the dark ages of savagery and barbarism we find her early ancestors natives of the wild forests of the old world. As the bright rays of civilization penetrated the darkness of that early period, and man called upon the cow, she came forth from her seclusion to share in the efforts that gave us a greater nation and more enlightened people!

For twenty thousand years she has shown her allegiance to man, sharing alike in his prosperity and adversity, responding nobly to all that was done for her, until through her development she became an idol of the people of her native country.

Her sons helped till the soil for our ancestors and slowly moved the products of the farm to market. They went with man to the dense forests of the new world, helped clear them for homes and made cultivation possible for the coming generation, and when the tide of emigration turned westward they hauled the belongings of the pioneer across the sun-scorched mountain ranges to new homes beyond.

Truly, the cow is man's greatest benefactor. Hail, wind, drouths and floods may come, destroy our crops and banish our hopes, but from what is left the cow manufactures into the most nourishing and life-sustaining foods, and is she not foster mother and life itself to countless thousands of little children all over this world of ours? We love her for her docility, her beauty, and should misfortune overtake us as we become bowed down with the weight of years, we know that in the cow we have a friend that was never known to falter. She pays the debt. She saves the home. God bless the cow—little do we realize the debt we owe her.

To Erect Memorial to Early Missionaries.

The most probable site of the martyrdom of the Jesuit missionaries, Fathers Brebeuf and Lalemant, by the Iroquois in 1649 at the mission of St. Ignace situated near the present town of Midland, Simcoe County, Ontario, has been donated by Mr. Charles E. Newton for the erection of a permanent national memorial to commemorate one of the most heroic episodes in early Canadian history. At this time the hereditary feud between the Iroquois and Huron nations reached its climax and a terrible visitation of the Iroquois resulted in the practical annihilation of the Huron tribe. Urged to flee, the heroic missionaries declared that the priest must stay with his people and amid the whoops and yells of the Iroquois they were dragged through the forest and subjected to the most frightful tortures until death released them from their sufferings. Mr. Newton, at one time reeve of the township of Tay and for many years in the service of the provincial government, has shown much public spirit and historic interest in preserving the site and at the request of the Canadian National Parks Branch has deeded over an acre and a quarter of his farm for the erection of a suitable memorial and tablet in memory of the heroic priests. The work will shortly be taken in hand and the memorial will add one more to the notable historic shrines of Canada.

Boils—Their Cause and Cure.

Boils come from germ infection of the skin, ucually from other boils or ulcers or discharging wounds. The germs get into a pore of the skin and grow to form a gathering which soon turns to matter. The gathering stretches the skin and causes pain.

The sooner a boil is treated the quicker will it be cured. When a boil first appears, wash it thoroughly with soap and water and place a drop of carbolic acid right on the head of the boil. Then paint the surrounding skin with tincture of iodine. If this does not stop the boil, it should be opened freely with a sharp pen-knife, of which the blade has been held for several minutes in boiling water. After opening the boil, pour peroxide into the opening and cover the wound with a piece of clean cotton that has been boiled in water. Keep this cotton moistened with a solution made by adding a teaspoonful of either boracic acid or common salt to a cup of boiled water. Change the cotton dressing twice a day.

Don't let matter from a boil get on the surrounding skin, and boil all clothing soiled with matter. If signs of a new boil appear, paint the spot with iodine.

It is a mistake to suppose that a boil is a sign of health or that matter from a boil contains impurities which previously existed in the blood. Boils usually appear in a person not in good health. For this reason a person subject to boils should build up the general health by simple living and attention to the rules of health. Keep the bowels well open, eat freely of vegetables and fruit but use only a little meat.

Pat's Precaution.

Pat Maloney was nailing a box which he intended sending by rail. It was essential that the box should not be inverted during the passage, and a friend ventured to suggest that Pat should write on the case, "This side up, with care."

A few days later, seeing Pat, he asked, "heard any more about your goods? Did they get there safely?"

'Every one of them broke!" said Pat.

"The whole lot? Did you label it, 'This side up,' as I told you?"

"Yes, I did. And for fear they shouldn't see it on the top I put it on the bottom as well!"

HEALTH EDUCATION

BY DR. J. J. MIDDLETON

Provincial Board of Health, Ontario

Dr. Middleton will be glad to answer questions on Public Health matters through this column. Address him at Spadina House, Spadina Crescent, Toronto.

Man's very existence on this earth is threatened by another kind of warfare unknown to a large section of humanity. This was strikingly made plain by Dr. L. O. Howard in his presidential address at Toronto recently before the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"The insignificant insect" is man's greatest enemy, Dr. Howard maintains. "They threaten his life daily; they shorten his food supplies, both in his crops while they are growing, and in such supplies after they are harvested and stored, in his clothing, in his habitations, and in countless other ways. In many respects they are better fitted for existence on this earth than he is."

Warnings like this are becoming universal that man must cease warfare on his fellow-men in order to preserve his existence in the struggle with nature.

Ill-health and poor physique help the insect in this struggle, so it is the manifest duty of all classes of citizens to improve the physical and mental conditions of the present and particularly of the rising generation, so that by observing hygienic principles in their daily life and by maintaining physical fitness and freedom from defects of all kinds the human race may continue to remain supreme among the living things of earth.

Are we doing it? Just listen to this:—

There were 7,804 babies died last year in this province before they reached one year of age! Isn't there something wrong here? This slaughter of the innocents must stop!

Of those who survive the first critical year of life large numbers have physical defects of one kind or another, which could easily be corrected if taken in time. These defects include decaying teeth, diseased tonsils, adenoids, defective eyesight, defective hearing, malnutrition, etc. All or any of these defects tend to bring about a lowered state of health and prepare the way for the development of diseases which can be traced in many cases to the untreated focal infection which with a little forethought could have been removed before irreparable damage is done.

It is no longer a question of whether a country can afford public health work. What it cannot afford is the waste that must inevitably result from the want of it.

In this connection the old saying again rings true: "A stitch in time saves nine."

Why risk your health?

THE path of the tea or coffee drinker is beset with dangers to health and comfort. These dangers lurk in the irritant, Caffeine, which is the active principle of both tea and coffee.

For those who enjoy a well-made cup of tea or coffee, but find that it makes them nervous, wakeful and irritable, there's satisfaction and freedom from discomfort in delicious Instant Postum—the table beverage of no regrets.

Its fragrant aroma and rich, full-bodied flavor are delightful. Instant Postum is made from roasted wheat and contains no Caffeine, nor any other harmful ingredient whatsoever.

What of our Young People?

What cussedness is it that gets into men of mature years, and prejudices them against providing for the welfare of the younger generation in a way different from what they were themselves accustomed to? "If it was good enough for me, I guess it's good enough for them" is the excuse so frequently given when an effort is being made to provide something in the way of a gymnasium, a recreation room, a play or sporting ground, or a rink. On the same ground, why do they not go back to tallow candles, to home-spun clothes, to cow-hide boots, and use the middle of the road and carry a lantern instead of using paved walks and well lighted streets? Our boys and girls, as has often been remarked, are our best and most promising national asset, and as they are trained and developed so will they prove a blessing or a curse to the future generations. It is a biblical truth that "The sins of the parents are visited on their children to the third and fourth generation" and it is eqully true that the neglect of the fathers and the mothers of the present generation will be in sad evidence in the character and disposition of their grandchildren. The greatest blessing that can come to one is the knowledge that their life has been a blessing to others.

Winchester is not exempt from the plague of the stubborn cussedness that would either deny or refuse to help in providing certain advantages in the way of recreation rooms and other plans of amusement for our growing boys and girls. And in the matter of such advantages Winchester is sadly deficient. It would be as hopeless a task to stop this old world of ours revolving on its axis as to try and prevent boys and girls seeking a certain amount of of amusement as well as recreation. The burden is upon the shoulders of the fathers to see that proper recreation and proper amusement is provided.

And right here the Press wants to say that the talk that has been fairly general in town of late that certain young men are by stealth bringing liquor into this place, and that some of our boys, and girls too, are having a too intimate knowledge of this; as well as other talk about motor trips, dance halls, and questionable conduct on the part of certain young people, lays a responsibility on the citzenship of Winchester that should be taken up, and not shirked. Continually gabbing about the indiscretions of certain youths, holding up hands in holy horror of their actions, and going about with the look of despetic piety, will never help the young to a better life. Neither will it remove the responsibility from our shoulders.

The fact must be recognized that the majority of our young men are not attracted to the gatherings of young people in our churches. The Press does not pretend to criticise the work of the young people's organizations in our churches. They are doing a splendid work, and perhaps if they were properly backed and encouraged they would be able to do much more than they are. The pity is that there cannot be some united action on the part of the young and the old of our churches, and the fathers and mothers of the town to deal with this problem.

Last week a certain good lady came to the editor with a story about two young men who had gone to Hull, and brought back a suit case full of bottles of liquor; how they had been detected by a bottle being broken and the smell of the liquor remaining in the car they had used. She thought that their names should be published, —as a warning to others of course.

We have been in the newspaper business a good many years, and such requests to publish names of evil doers, and give prominence to incidents that would set tongues awagging and bring grief and shame to parents and relatives, have been so many and so urgent that we have ceased to worry about the effect of our refusal to publish them.

The Press has no desire to hurt or wound the feelings of any living human, and not a week passes that we do not either throw into the waste paper basket some contribution that was intended as a slur or slap at someone, or are requested to give publicity to some unkindly rumor. Particulary is this true with reference to some business or public man, or local organization. No good ever results from such publicity, and too often much harm is done and unnecessary sorrow caused by the repealing of such stories.

Anyway, the fact remains that at the present time there is a great deal of talk about certain your people "going straight to the devil" and that is about all there is in connection with their so called misbehaviour.

There is no sense in sitting down and saying this is the work for the Church. The church is YOU and you are a part of the church. The responsibility is YOURS and not someone else's. If YOU begin to act, others will follow your example. If YOU sit still, fold your hands, roll your eyes, and get a hopeless look on your face, others will do the same. If you like doing something, suggesting something, the Press will back you to the limit.

What Will Winchester Do?

Perhaps the editor of the Press is as much to blame as anyone else, but we are willing to confess that when passing through a certain village, not as large as Winchester, a short time ago, we saw in a public square an old battered machine gun, a gun captured from the Germans in the great war—it was mounted on a solid base, and with a proper inscription underneath — that the blush of shame mounted our face when our companion asked what Winchester had done in the way of a proper 'Memorial' of the war, and we had to confess that the only memorial was in the shape of a "service flag" that hung at the back of the town hall platform, the work of the ladies of the W. C. T. U. The two battered guns that came to Winchester through the efforts of Mr. O. D. Casselman, who was then the Federal member for Dundas, are still stored away out of sight, and are not even properly taken care of. Armistice Day is not far away. If will bring back to memory that day four years ago, on the 11th of November, when the joyful news was flashed over this Dominion, and over the world, that hostilities had ceased, that the German Army was defeated, and the German Nation asking for terms. What a day it was. How our boys did celebrate. How the church bells did ring. And at night you remember the big bonfire, and how the Kaiser was burned in effegy. And there was some public speaking. What enthusiasm. It was a day we said we would never forget. Four years have passed. The lads who went over and survived, have all returned. Their sacrifices and their deeds of valor are only a memory. And the trophies that we were so urgent in securing to commorate that great victory, are still stored away out of sight.

Will Armistice Day be publicly observed in Winchester? Will some effort be made to arouse public spirit to a pitch where some definite action will be taken to have our war trophies be properly cared for? The Press has faith that the hearts of the people are responsive and they are willing to do their part if only those in proper authority will take the necessary action to bring this question to a proper understanding.

NOTES AND COMMENTS BY THE EDITOR

The Conservatives of Iroquois are making ready for a provincial general election. A meeting of the Liberal-Conservative Association of that place is announced to be held for the purpose of organization.

The severe early frosts of last week caught a good many fields of undug vegetable, and in some cases the crops will be much less than if they had been gathered a week previous.

During the past two weeks four Ontario newspapers have been compelled to retire because of the high cost of production, and in one case the loss to the shareholders was very heavy because they had put in a very expensive plant.

To remove smell of paint put a pail of water in the room, and change it every few hours. The water will absorb the smell of the paint, but it will do the work more quickly if a sliced onion or lemon, a large piece of camphor or amonia, or a handful of hay, be put into it.

Thanksgiving Day is only a few days away. If any people in this community think they have no reason for giving thanks, perhaps a moment's reflection upon the present condition of the residents of Haileybury and district, as compared with their own, would induce some cause for gratitude and thankfulness.

The local paper is one thing by which strangers judge the size of a locality and the ability of its business men, hence the paper that does not show the advertisement of every enterprising business is forced to misrepresent it. The paper is a mirror that should reflect a community's true picture and every business conducted therein.

Speaking at the unveiling of a memorial tablet at the boys' farm last week, Sir Arthur Currie said;—"I am no preacher, but I am always willing to bear testimony to the power outside ourselves that makes for righteousness. No man or nation can be truly great unless they acknowledge that power. Christianity did not fail in the war—the war proved the very triumph of Christianity."

A few months ago the Mennonites left Canada for Mexico because the government of Manitoba instead that English and not German should be the first language taught in their schools. However, the "liberty" of Mexico, where bandits raided and robbed them, was rather too much liberty; the Mennonites have asked Manitoba to take them back. The English language and a real government do not look so bad after all.

Speaking about the weather and early frosts, in the year 1816 frost occurred in North America every month of the year. Ice formed an inch thick in May; snow fell to a depth of three inches in June, in many parts, including a part of Ontario. ice formed on still waters in July. Corn was frozen in the fields and much stock perished for the want of nourishment. And that was one of the trials our grandfathers faced in those good old days.

The slight fall of snow and sever frost of last week was a reminder that the winter frosts and snow storms are not far away, and that as yet the coal situtation in this section is one to cause some anxiety. It may be, as we are assured by some dealers, that there will be plenty of coal if we only have patience, but the the cold snap of last week was somewhat trying on the patience of those who have no coal in the celler.

The action of Mr. J. J. Morrison, secretary of the U. F. O. in promptly visiting the fire sweep district of New Ontario, and interesting the organization he so ably represents in the work of relief, and providing for the re-stocking by farmers in that section who lost not only houses, barns and all contents, but all live stock as well, is one of the best acts of his busy life, and shows that there is a practical side to the political doctrines of the secretary of the United Farmers that is of greater value than some of his political views.

The Post office Department warns all who do any amount of correspondence to have their name and address printed on the outside of their envelopes, by so doing, any letter or parcel which cannot be delivered can be promply returned to the sender unopened. The Department also recommends that in all cases where correspondence is intended for visitors, or temporary residents, that the name of the permanent resident with whom the visitor is staying should be mentioned in the address. Why not get a box of envelopes with your name and address neatly printed on the corner, at the Press office. They won't cost you any more than the plain envelopes.

There promises to be a lively election in Lanark to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. J. A. Stewart. Already the names of over half a dozen aspirants are mentioned to come before the Conservative Convention. The names of several prominent Liberals are before that party to choose, and the progressives will put their former candidate, Mr. Anderson, in the field. It will be a three cornered fight, and an uncertain one. The riding has always been Conservative, and the late Mr. Stewart had a majority of nearly 3000. But Mr. Stewart was a particularly strong candidate, and there being no Liberal in that contest he received a large liberal support. The coming contest will be watched with unusual interest.

The Cheery Morning Word

He always said "Good mornin' "—
And emphasized the good,
As if he'd make it happy
For each one if he could;
Good mornin', just good mornin',
To every one he met;
He said it with a twinkel
That no one could forget.

He always said, good mornin'—
And people used to say
That one of his good mornin's
Clung to you all the day;
And made you sort o' cheerful
Just thinkin' of the sound;
It always was good mornin'
As long as he was round.

He always said, good mornin'—
And, glad and happy-eyed
Those were the words he whispered
The mornin' that he died.
Those were the words he whispered
As cheerful as he could—
And I believe God's angles
Have "emphasized the good!"

"Good morning is a simple wish, but we would all be the poorer if we did not use this pleasant salutation. How much more pleasant it is when those about you offer the ordinary common places about health and weather. Heaviness and sorrow may be for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. Help each other to meet the day's work with courage and unconquerable faith.

The Dardanelles and the Massacres

There has been considerable ado in the past few weeks over the possible closing of the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus thus interfering with trade, specially with Southern Russia. The nations interested particularly in Commerce have said the Straits must not be closed—England has sent her forces in great strength to withstand any attempt to do so on the part of the Turk, and at same time tried to settle matters by friendly means—anxious for peace but ready for war has been Britain's attitude. The Turk has halted, and it has occured to us that if the same nations said, and said it as if they meant it, the wanton slaughtering of Armenian Christians must cease. Christiandom would no longer be horrified by learning of vast numbers of Armenian Christians being massacred in cold blood. It is not to our credit to value the dollars made by commerce more than the lives of men, women, and children even whose only offence is that they are followers of the Lord Jesus Christ—Are Christian nations worthy of being called Christian?

Wm. Philp, Lindsay, Ont.

An exchange remark that cattle have passed though summer and autumn under unusually favorable conditions. Pastures have been abundant, streams which frequently dry up in summer have been kept running freely, and the fly pest has been much less serious than usual. Cattle should go into winter quarters in prime condition. There is just one thing that may prevent this—allowing the animals to be exposed to those chilling fall rains that cannot be far off. One such exposure may cause a loss in stamina and milk flow that cannot be made up in a month afterwards. There is, too, no excuse for running any such risk this season, because feed supplies—hay, excellent oats straw, roots, ensilage and coarse grains—taken in the aggregate, were never so abundant as they are this year. With protection against cold and wet during the next few weeks there is every reason to expect one of the most profitable winter dairying seasons in the history of the province.

Special Train For Hunters

The open season for hunting deer and moose in Northern Ontario is rapidly approaching. South of the French and Mattawa rivers Nov. 5th to Nov. 20th inclusive; north and west of these rivers, Oct. 25th to Nov. 30th inclusive. North of the Transcontinental Railway Line the season is from Sept. 15th to Nov. 15th inclusive.

The Canadian National Railways traverse the finest hunting territory in this country. This fact with their special and regular train service makes "The National Way" the premier line for the hunter. The huntinth grounds are so vast there is game for everyone.

The selection of grounds is a most important matter and one which requires careful study. The territory reached by the Canadian National lines north of Parry Sound is already a favorite one, but the new country east and west of Capreol is as yet comparatively little known to the Hunter and should, therefore, be highly attractive to the follower of the deer and moose.

The Canadian National Railways are providing special train service, which with regular trains will meet all demands. Special trains will be operated as follows: Leave Toronto Union Station 11.15 P. M. Oct. 31st for Capreol and intermediate points, and 11.15 P. M. Nov. 2nd, 3rd, and 4th for Key Jct. and intermediate points. The usual ample accommodation of sleeping cars, baggage cars and coaches will be provided.

The Annual Hunter's Leaflet issued by the Canadian National Railways is now ready for distribution, and may be obtained on application to any agent of the Company, or write General Passenger Department, Room 607 Royal Bank Bldg., Toronto.

If YOU could Visit our Mills—

VISITORS to the Quaker Mills no longer marvel at the exclusive flavour, texture and goodness of all things baked with Quaker Flour. They see for themselves the infinite care with which Canada's finest wheat is treated from the berry to the sack.

They see how thoroughly the grain is selected and cleaned—how gradually and finely it is milled—to produce a perfect flour. They see how Quaker Quality is ever maintained, by constant vigilance and hourly tests in the process of milling—by an actual baking of bread from each day's flour. Quaker Flour must bake up to the Quaker standard before it can leave the Quaker Mill.

They realize why no other flour can equal "Quaker." Try it for your next baking.

Woman's Interests

Rolls, Cookies and Other Good Things.

Pickled beets are improved by using sweet cider instead of vinegar. Boil the beets until tender, peel and cut into slices. Boil the cider for fifteen minutes, season to taste with salt, pepper and allspice, then pour over the beets, which will be ready for present use or may be scaled while hot and kept in a cool place.

When making apple butter wash, pare and core the apples, then run them through a meat-chopper or sausage-grinder. Place the chopped apples in earthenware crocks and stand on the back part of the stove to become warmed through. Treated thus, they will not retard the cooking when added to the apples which are already cooking in the kettle.

For fig pudding: To two cupfuls of cooked rice, add the beaten yolks of two eggs, a pinch of salt, a half-cupful of sugar, one and one-half cupfuls of sweet milk and a teaspoonful of vanilla extract. Put half of this mixture in a buttered pudding dish, cover with a thick layer of chopped figs and over this the remainder of the rice. Dot the top wtih butter and bake for half an hour in a moderate oven. Serve hot with cream for fruit sauce. Dates can also be used if desired.

This savory stew will make a plentiful meal: Cut two squirrels or rabbits in pieces and fry in shortening until half-cooked, then add four quarts of boiling water, a slice of fat salt pork, a large onion, sliced, a dozen tomatoes, peeled and cut in pieces, three large potatoes, peeled and sliced, three cupfuls of lima or string beans and a half cupful of butter. Cook slowly for three or four hours. Ten minutes before serving cut the tips of the grains from twelve ears of young sweet corn and press out the rest of the grain, add the corn, also two teaspoonfuls of sugar, and season with salt and pepper.

Swiss rolls are made thus: Scald a cupful of milk with two tablespoonfuls of butter, one tablespoonful of sugar and one scant teaspoonful of salt. When lukewarm, add half a cake of compressed yeast, dissolved in a little water. With this blend thoroughly one and one-half pints of flour. Let it rise until light, then put the dough in the ice-box for three or four hours or keep overnight. When wanted, roll out on a well-floured board to about half an inch in thickness, spread with butter and roll up like jelly-cake. Cut across in slices about three-quarters of an inch thick, place in pans, leaving plenty of space between, so they will not touch when they rise. Avoid keeping the rolls too warm. When more than double in size, bake in a quick oven.

Honey drop-cookies require no sugar. The receipt calls for three-quarters of a cupful of honey, one-quarter cupful of shortening, one-half teaspoonful of ground cinnamon, one-eighth teaspoonful of ground cloves, one egg, from one and one-half to two cupfuls of flour, one-quarter teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of baking-powder, two tablespoonfuls of water, one cupful of raisins, seeded and cut in small pieces. Place honey and shortening over the fire until the fat melts. While the mixture is warm, add the spices. When cold add the water, the beaten egg, and one and one-half cupfuls of flour, sifted with the baking-powder and soda. Finally stir in the raisins. Sufficient flour must be added to make a dough stiff enough to drop on the pan by spoonfuls. Bake in a moderate oven.

Some Aluminumware Pointers.

Aluminum probably makes a stronger appeal to the housewife who is buying a few new kitchen utensils or the one who would like a few more, than any other ware. Attractiveness, lightness and durability are all so efficiently combined in this ware that it is becoming more and more popular. The bright silvery appearance of this ware makes a strong impression on the housewife who wishes a decidedly attractive kitchen. Aluminum will not tarnish. Its lightness makes it especially suitable for such articles as large frying pans, double boilers, and roasters, which in cast iron are too heavy to be handled conveniently.

Aluminum is as strong as iron. In fact, it is often used in place of iron when strength and lightness are both required, as in airships. The remarkable durability of this metal assures one that an article of good aluminumware will last a lifetime. This metal is also non-rusting, a quality which means much in any cooking utensil and time of the housewife.

The initial cost of aluminum is higher than some of the other wares, but this is greatly offset by its durability and economy in fuel. It requires less heat when used as a cooking utensil, for it conducts heat readily. Heat is distributed through it twice as fast as through tin, and three times as fast os through iron. Handles of aluminum utensils are very often tinned iron, steel or wood because aluminum ones become hot so quickly. In addition to conducting heat readily, it also retains heat longer than any other metal. Coffee and tea will keep hot longer than in any other metal.

There are two varieties of aluminumware, the cast from liquid aluminum, and the stamped from sheet aluminum. In cast aluminum the melted metal is simply poured into a mold of the desired shape. The chief advantages of this process is that extra thickness can be given to the parts of a utensil where it is most needed and many shapes and patterns can be made. Utensils made by the stamping process are drawn from sheets of aluminum and by different steps are brought to the desired shape. Stamped articles often have lengthwise wrinkles in the metal. These are removed by pressing an iron tool against the utensil as it revolves.

The care of aluminum is a very important factor as in all utensils if it is to appear at its best. A very important point in the case is that caustic alkalies, such as lye, ammonia, strong washing powders or soaps containing alkalies, must be avoided. Any pure soap or metal polish without grit will cleanse the polished surface. The inside often becomes discolored after cooking foods containing iron, such as spinach, or if hard water is used. This is harmless and can easily be removed by a good cleaning powder. A thick black coating can be removed with steel wool. Coatings of burned grease can be removed by boiling utensil about five minutes in a gallon of water to which three or four teaspoons of oxalic acid crystals have been added. Wash the utensil afterward with plenty of soap and hot water.

A wrong impression that many people hold is that it is harmful to cook acid foods in aluminumware. Very careful experiments have been performed along this line and it has proved that there is no danger from the use of aluminum cooking utensils.

The Paradise of Long Life.

That which Ponce de Leon vainly sought seems to exist at Horchies, in Hainaut, four miles from Mons, in the midst of the coal and metallurgic region of Belgium. It is a village of 3,000 inhabitants, where almost everybody reaches the age of the patriarchs.

They have just been celebrating, one after another, two diamond weddings (sixty, sometimes sexenty-five, years of married life), five golden weddings (fifty years of married life), and the 101st birthday anniversary of a man, Francois Colin. But even this centenarian does not constitute a phenomenon in this privileged community, for there was born, in the last year of the eighteenth century, a woman who saw the end of the nineteenth century and died only at the end of the first lustrum of the twentieth century.

It is noteworthy that the Methuselahs of Horchies are all former workingmen and workingwomen, who knew neiher the benefits of the eight-hour day nor those of the anti-liquor laws. Will Horchies, under the new regime of the least effort and of the uttermost obstinence, remain the paradise of long life? Some doubt it. In some fifteen or twenty lustrums we shall know if they are right.

Impressed by the young skipper's authoritative manner, the porter pressed a button, and while Frank waited for an apparently interminable minute, during which time he scrutinized the face of every nurse who passed along the corridors, the stout, red-faced matron came over to him.

"Walk over here, Captain," she said as soon as she saw him. He followed her to a seat in the entrance hall.

"Do you really want to see Miss Dexter?" she enquired.

"Do I really want t' see her?" reiterated the other. "Good heavens, lady, I've come all th' way from Portland t' see her! I 'phoned th' hospital a dozen times an' even sent telegrams. Is this a prison?"

The matron sighed. "I don't know what to do," she said quietly and with something of motherly sympathy in her voice for the distraught young man by her side. "Miss Dexter says she don't want to see you."

"Don't want t' see me?" repeated Westhaver dazedly. "An' why, Mrs. Kenealy?"

The old lady had evidently something on her mind and it was distasteful to her to give it utterance. Frank sensed it, and asked abruptly, "You've got somethin' t' say, Mrs. Kenealy! Out with it!"

The matron paused for a moment and then placing her hand upon the young skipper's arm in motherly fashion, she spoke: "Captain! we women are very peculiar and you'll probably think so too after what I tell you. I saw Miss Dexter last night when she came in with that Morrissey man, and I gave it to her pretty strong. She cried a bit—in fact she cried nearly all night—but I got a pretty clear confession from her. Captain! she never really cared for you——"

Frank gave a start, and while he remained silent the matron continued in sentences which seared his soul.

"She is a very vain and selfish girl, Captain, and she lives in an atmosphere of high ideas entirely unbecoming to her station. We see a lot of that in a hospital where there are girls of high and low degree engaged in nursing, and none know their characters better than I do who have had thirty years' experience with them. When Miss Dexter came here first she seemed a very quiet and demure young woman, but being pretty, she soon became a favorite with the students and internes who come around here. They flattered her a lot and sent her chocolates and flowers until she began to develop what is vulgarly known as a 'swelled head,' and the girls did not like it. She always referred to you as her 'Captain' when you were sailing out of this port, and the girls heard no end of talk about you. Then came that paragraph in the Boston paper about that very brave thing you did last winter in bringing in that vessel, and, of course, the other girls got hold of the fact that you were an ordinary fisherman, and they made Carrie's life pretty miserable, I can assure you. It rankled in her mind quite a lot, and the others up in the dormitories did not spare her. They'd be asking her all about fish; telling her that she'd have to live on fish when she got married, and so on, and they made out that a fisherman was a degraded profession. Now, Captain, I don't think that for a minute, and many's the time I've told her so. Those who earn their bread as you do—out on the stormy waters winter and summer—are to my mind every bit as respectable and even entitled to more consideration than those who work in commonplace pursuits ashore. Our Saviour Himself showed His judgment of men when He chose for His disciples the men who hauled thier nets on Galilee. However, my arguments had but little effect upon her giddy mind, and when this Morrissey man came around—and that has been the case even when you were going with her—she's been writing him and telling the girls that he was the 'Captain' to whom she was referring, and not you at all. I asked her what she meant by her conduct when she came in last night, and she practically told me that she liked Morrissey better than you. She said that if she were to marry you she'd have to live up in some lonely village in Nova Scotia, and she hated the idea intensely. Then she said that your prospects were poor and that you'd be captain of a fishing boat all your life, and in her mind that was a very poor and mean profession. She'd have to live in an atmosphere of fish and hear nothing but fish all her days, and she hates the very mention of the word. This Morrissey man will be sailing out of Boston all the time, and if she marries him she can either stay in the city here or go to sea with him, and he makes a lot of money—enough to keep her supplied with all the fancy clothes and things that she likes——"

"I c'd do that too," interrupted Frank brokenly. "She c'd live in Boston as well. I c'd git a vessel an' sail out o' T Dock."

The matron nodded. "Yes, that's so, but it is your profession that she objects to, and I think you'd be foolish to change it and ruin your career for a girl who is really not worth it. Captain, she is vain, extravagant, and giddy. There is nothing in her head but dress, good times, theatres, and fellows. You don't know her like I do, and I think you are too good a boy to be tied up to a girl of that sort. Forget her, my son——"

"How can I?" groaned the other. "Good God, woman! I've lived for that girl! I've toiled an' slaved an' risked men's lives for her sake! She has been the only thing what made life worth while! God! if you only knew what I've had to go through in order t' make her happy! An' now? It's all gone—all gone for nawthin'. My schemes, my hopes, an' my ambitions. All gone—all gone!" and he clasped his head in his hands with the mental agony which was consuming him.

The matron's eyes filled with tears—she, who had gazed on many travails; the last bitter moments of the dying—and she rose to go.

"Never mind, my boy. You're made of sterner stuff than to break up over the unfaithfulness of a flighty girl. You're too good for her. Go, my son, and may God help you to forget. Good-bye!"

Like a man in a dream, Frank came away, and still in a daze he collected his clothes and took train for Portland, where he arrived early on a fine June morning.

Walking down Commercial Street, he met the runner for the ship's store people who supplied him, and the man greeted him effusively. "Your stuff's all aboard, Captain," he said. "Will ye come an' hev a touch, eh?"

"No!" growled the other savagely, and changing his mind, he said, "Yes, I will. Heave ahead!" And, for the first time since he was a boy, Frank Westhaver allowed strong drink to pass between his lips.

CHAPTER XIII.

Jules had shepherded the Kinsella's gang aboard the vessel without much trouble. Their money was nearly all gone, and sick and miserable with the aftermath of a "big drunk," most of them were glad to crawl into their bunks to sleep it off.

Shorty showed up around ten in the morning, and Jules noted in no little surprise that the skipper had been drinking. "Why, Frankee," he said, as his old friend lurched along the deck towards the cabin gangway, "where have you been?"

Frank took no notice of the question. "Are all th' gang aboard?" he growled instead.

"All aboard, Frankee, an' all veree dronk."

"Humph!" The young skipper grunted and swayed slightly on his feet, while his old dory-mate regarded him with eyes of consternation.

"Why—what's de matter, Frankee? Ain't you well?"

Shorty laughed—a harsh, grating laugh. "Oh, well enough, Sabot! Well enough!"

The other nodded doubtfully, and reaching into his pocket, produced a letter. "Here's somet'ing which come for you after you left for Boston."

Frank grabbed at it, and scanning the address on the envelope, he gave a start of surprise. "From Carrie?" he murmured thickly. "Le's see what she has t' say." He sat upon the cabin-house and read it. It wasn't a long communication, but if he had any doubt of her feelings towards him before, the letter and subsequent events dissipated any hopes he might have entertained.

"Dear Frank"—it ran—"In order to save you and me a lot of pain and trouble I'm writing this to make clear to you the impossibility of my ever becoming your wife. I have been anylising my feelings, and I find that I do not love you, though I like you very much. Do not come to the Hospital again. I am sorry this has to be, but hope you will forget and forgive. Beleive me always your friend—Caroline Dexter."

"Huh," growled Frank when he had read it. " 'Anylizin' ' her feelin's—look how she spells 'analyzing' an' 'believe'! Th' wench! Tcha!" And with a gesture of disgust, he crumpled the letter up and threw it on the deck.

When he had clattered below, the astonished Jules picked the note up to find out what it had to do with Shorty's complete change of manner, and though he could scarcely read it, yet he understood the full significance of the communication.

"Poor Frankee!" he said with a sigh as he hove the letter over the side. "Mon pauvre ami—an' I was afraid so—veree mooch afraid. Dat girl she was no good. Frankee too good for her!"

There were sounds of protest emanating from the gloom of the cabin and Jules could hear Shorty cursing. "Come out-a my bunk, you scurvy swine!" he was saying. "Come on! Heave out, th' lot o' ye, an' git under way! D'ye hear? All out an' git under way!"

Jules shook his head. "Frankee's bit off, I'm afraid. Bad t'ing to get outside to-day. Blowin' veree hard outside."

The skipper's head appeared above the companion. "Go for'ard, Sabot, an' turn th' gang out t' make sail. Git her down to the end o' the dock."

Sabot, whatever his thoughts were, never disregarded an order of Frank's, and he gave the shout down the fo'c'sle scuttle. As may be surmised, there was very little heed given to the command—a chorus of stertorous snores and groans being the only evidence of the tenancy of the tiers of bunks. "D'ye hear me!" bawled Jules. "Skipper says to git under way! Turn out!"

Frank's savage face appeared in the scuttle. "Are they turnin' out, Sabot? No? By the ol' Judas! I'll turn them out!" And jumping down into the gloomy apartment, he started in hauling the intoxicated men out of the bunks and rolling them out on floor or locker. Have you noticed a telephone switch-board operator at work? Well, Shorty, savage, dangerous in his present state of mind, and half-drunk himself, pulled the men out just as a switch-board girl would pull out a succession of plugs, and inside of a minute the gang were extricating themselves from their quilts and blankets and cursing the whims of the skipper in the lurid and flowery oaths peculiar to the rougher type of deep-sea fishermen.

Antelope on Increase.

The Government Antelope herd in the National reserve near Foremost, Alberta, continues to increase and is reported to be in a very satisfactory condition. There is a natural increase for the present year of over thirty, bringing the total number of antelope in the herd to one hundred and thirty. The reserve, which is known as Nemiskam Park, represents the most successful attempt yet made to breed antelope in captivity. It was once widely distributed over the western plains but is now on the verge of extinction. Swifter than the greyhound in flight, exceedingly graceful and beautiful, the antelope has for many years been a prize for the big game hunter and its numbers have been diminishing of late years with a rapidity that has aroused the concern of all lovers of wild life. Ten years ago Dr. W. T. Hornaday, the distinguished American naturalist, estimated that there were 2,000 in Western Canada. To-day, there are reported to be only about 1,000 in a wild state in Alberta and 250 in Saskatchewan, while they entirely disappeared from the province of Manitoba some years ago. It is apparent that the only way the species can be preserved from complete extinction is by breeding it in captivity, and experiments to this end have been made by the Government of recent years. Attempts were made in connection with one of the National Parks, where it was hoped that antelope could be induced to thrive with other wild life. Where individuals survived it was found that they did not thrive on the ordinary prairie grass and post mortem investigations appeared to indicate that the antelope apparently requires certain small and not widely distributed plants as well as alkaline salts for its sustenance. What these were and where they could be obtained could not be easily ascertained so it was decided that the most successful method was apparently to let the antelope select his own habitat and to endeavor to breed him there.

This has been done at Foremost, Alberta, where a herd of 50 were found to be feeding in the spring of 1918. A fence was quietly bult about the animals enclosing them in a reserve of 9 square miles apparently without their discovering that they had been taken captive. The steady growth of the herd and the absence of disease is good evidence that the experiment is likely to prove successful and it is hoped that it will result in saving this most interesting species from the extermination which otherwise inevitably awaits it.

Mr. Nixon "Listens In."

Hon. H. C. Nixon was in his 27th year when he became provincial secretary of Ontario. And he doesn't look any older than his actual age, either. On one of his first visits to Toronto, after the election of 1919, Mr. Nixon entered a downtown barber shop. The barber who attended him was holding forth upon the fallacies and perils of the Farmer government.

"These fellows are absolutely inexperienced," he assured Mr. Nixon. "And they're a bunch of youngsters; two or three of 'em no older than you or me, sir—and a fine pair of fools we'd look, trying to run a government, wouldn't we?"

History does not record the provincial secretary's rejoinder.

Taking the Bun.

Dean Inge, the gloomy dean of St. Paul's, is said to have met with an adventure lately that made him laugh.

Feeling hungry in a train, he beckoned a paper-boy at a station, gave him sixpence, and asked him to fetch a Bath bun, adding that he might have one for himself.

The boy departed, and presently returned munching a bun.

"Here's your change sir" he said; "there was only one bun left."

"The Things Which Are Temporal."

"I can't understand why it should ever have happened," the young man exclaimed impatiently to his pastor as he sat propped up in an armchair at the window. "If anyone had told me a month ago that I'd be laid up with a broken leg, I wouldn't have believed it. And I was so sure I was going to make the team this year at college, and now everything's spoiled. I can't understand these disappointments!"

"Maybe you will understand in time," the pastor said gently. "Have you noticed the new concrete bridge out there that spans the railway racks?"

The young man looked out of the window. "Yes, I've seen it," he answered wearily, "but I don't—"

"Wait a minute, Max," the minister interrupted him kindly. "If you'll listen you'll hear the sound of planks and timbers clattering to the pavement as the workmen remove them; those timbers formed the structure of a temporary bridge that spanned the tracks before the concrete abutments were in place; they never were intended to serve any except a temporary purpose. For a time they did very well, but the contractor knew that they wouldn't stand the wear and tear of years. Sooner or later, Max, God takes the temporary supports from beneath most of us. Our natural impulse at first is to try to build our lives upon what is insecure and temporary. That physical strength upon which you were depending so largely; education, to which you have been looking forward with eagerness; money, which some people believe will do anything—all those are good, Max, but human experience shows us every day that after all they are only temporary supports."

The pastor paused and then continued: "Because God knows that those things cannot stand the wear and tear of years he does for us what the workmen are doing out there—he knocks away the temporary supports as we build our lives on something more substantial. And, Max, if during these long days you cultivate an attitude of uncomplaining fortitude, a spirit of trust and faith and patience, you are going to carry out of this place qualities of character that will far outlast that physical strength upon which you were building such high hopes."

The youth's eyes filled with tears. "I'm beginning to see," he said bravely.

The state that tolerates disrespect of any law breeds defiance of all law.

EFFICIENT FARMING

Autumn Poultry Items.

It pays to store up a bushel of dry sand in the fall before the freezing weather. This will serve as fine grit for the baby chicks that are hatched next spring before the ground has thawed.

The use of green feed in the winter ration not only helps to keep the birds healthy, but it seems to influence the fertility of the eggs produced the following spring. The most vigorous chicks seem to come from hens that have plenty of green feed in the winter. Now is the time to store mangels, cabbages and all the cull vegetables available for poultry feed. At the present low price of oats, more sprouted oats will probably be used in the laying houses this winter.

Patch the leaky poultry house roofs. This will improve the condition of the litter in the houses and help to prevent colds and roup. Hens can stand cold weather but dampness will soon undermine their vigor.

Isolate the first hen that shows signs of a cold and it will help to prevent other cases. Place the sick bird where she will not be forgotten and neglected at feeding time. Remove the mucous from the nostrils and rub the swollen part of the head with camphorated vaseline. When a hen has a lump near the eye it seems largely due to the clogging of the nostril because of the cold. Prompt attention is necessary to avoid the loss of the bird.

The full dry mash hopper in the laying house takes a lot of worry out of poultry management in stormy weather. Then you know that the hens will be properly fed for health and egg production even if they cannot use the range. Hens do not gorge on mash to the exclusion of other feeds. It looks expensive to keep feed before them at all times. Experience proves that it is the most economical method. It is not just the cost of feed but the difference between the production costs and the returns that determines the profits.

The farmer with a small flock can often use commercial mash to good advantage. Others raise part of the ingredients of the mash. Then it pays to buy other necessary materials and make the mixtures at home. You know what is in the home-mixed mash and I think that home-grown grains can be sold quite profitably in the form of eggs if you have the right kind of egg-making machines.

Be careful not to feed mouldy corn to hens. Spoiled wheat is another cause of sickness. When cleaning out all bins it is best to burn or bury any spoiled grain before the poultry finds it. If mixed ashes become wet and then sour and mould, they are a source of danger.

If you have immature pullets I think it pays to force them now and place as much growth and fat on them as possible before winter weather. The pullets that go into winter in fine condition will naturally prove the best layers and the most desirable breeders. Pullets that are in poor condition when winter begins are seldom profitable.

It pays to have permanent poultry houses firmly bolted to the stone wall. This can be done by setting eight-inch bolts in the cement and securely fastening them to the sills. Small colony houses can be partially protected by driving a two-by-four post at each corner and spiking it to the house. Dangerous windstorms seem more prevalent than in the past and the small buildings of the poultry keeper are in particular danger.

Old stone piles which are a breeding place for weasels are dangerous to the poultryman's profit. The stone is fine to help make the fill for the foundation of a laying-house. The wall can be left partially unfinished, leaving an opening in which the stone can be dragged on a stoneboat. This saves the heavy work of dumping stone over the wall and the possible damaging of the wall.

Here is a good plan for nests that can be used where the uprights are not in the way. Build the section without backs to the nests. The side wall furnishes the backs. Then hinge the section to the wall. By raising the nests toward you, all of the old litter can be drummed out at the back. This saves time in cleaning nests when new nesting material is needed.

Sunflower seed contain a lot of indigestible fibre and are not in a class with corn and wheat for poultry feed. I believe it pays to feed the sunflowers in the fall when the hens are moulting and the pullets need a little extra fat and a little gloss on their feathers. The heads can be thrown on the ground on the range and the hens will soon thresh them out. Unless there is a very large surplus of sunflower seed I believe it is best to save work and let the birds consume all the seed in the fall. If sunflower seed is stored for winter use the heads must be gathered before the wild birds attack them. Hang the heads where they will dry thoroughly or shell out the seed and spread it out in very shallow heaps. It is quite moist and may mould if the heaps are not stirred occasionally. It is too much work to save much sunflower seed for winter use, as corn is of greater value at that time.

The Sunday School Lesson

OCTOBER 29

World Wide Prohibition, Isa. 61: 1-9. Golden Text—Righteousness exalteth a nation; But sin is a reproach to any people.—Prov. 14: 34.

Lesson Setting—The chapter in Isaiah which we study to-day from the standpoint of temperance is bound very closely to the preceding chapter. Both deal with the return from captivity. Chapter 60 shows the external greatness and glory of Jerusalem when the Gentiles shall come to her light and kings to the brightness of her rising. Chapter 61 deals with the spiritual and inner mission of Jerusalem. It lays before us the spiritual programs of God's restored people. This program was fulfilled by Christ. In Luke 4: 17 we read how Jesus entered the synagogue at Nazareth and read from the scriptures the first verse of Isa., Chapter 61, and began to say unto them, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." The Old Testament prophet testifies of the New Testament Messiah.

1. The Servant's Mission to Israel, 1-4.

V. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me. These words are the words of the servant of the Lord spoken of by Isaiah, chapter 53. The picture of the servant is realized in Christ. The program outlined by the prophet is one prompted by the spirit of God. The program of service that has not this compelling motive lacks the requisite beginning and fails to reach its real end. Service must be the lift of God and the lift to God. Anointed me. As priests were set apart to their sacred office by anointing with oil, so the servant is set apart by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Preach good tidings. This is what the gospel is—new news, true news, good news. Meek; afflicted. Broken-hearted . . . captives . . . bound. The mission of the servant is to be a mission of service for the needy. This involves not only a saving of people from heart-breaking and enslaving conditions, but also the removal of the conditions that bring heart-breaking and enslavement. This means that people must sometimes be saved from themselves. World-wide prohibition is advocated because intemperance not only brings about social conditions that are heart-breaking, and soul destroying, but makes men and women helpless slaves. "We must change the character of conditions by changing the conditions of character."

V. 2. To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord; the year of the Lord's favor to Zion.

V. 3. To appoint unto them that mourn; to offer or provide. Beauty for ashes; a crest or adornment of the head, denoting joy instead of ashes sprinkled on the head as a sign of mourning. That they might be called trees of righteousness. God's people, under God's blessing, are to become like to a great, flourishing forest of oaks, instead of broken trees. A reference to such chapters as 28 will give us very clearly the prophetic attitude to intemperance as a barrier in the way to all spiritual progress for the human soul, and to all programs of service that seek to lift burdens and wipe away tears.

V. 4. They shall build the old wastes. The mission of the servant of the Lord is to be more than consolation. It is to be a mission of restoration. The desolations [illegible] the Exile is to disappear. The people restored to God's favor are to become a restoring people. A society rightly organized will be a productive society, bringing the best out of everything. The earth will respond to the heavens. A people free from the burden of sorrow will be a people free for work. Intemperance is one of the greatest of desert producing forces. Temperance is a great building force.

II. Israel's Mission to the World, 5-9.

Vs. 5, 6. Strangers shall . . feed your flocks . . ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord. Israel's fountain of joy and blessing is to overflow to the Gentiles. The Gentiles are to become partners in the blessings, but the pre-eminence of the Israelite as the chosen agency of divine grace is to be willingly recognized. They are priests and ministers of God.

V. 7. For your shame ye shall have double. Not only pre-eminence, but recompense for all the sorrow and suffering of the exile there is to be a double blessing.

V. 8. I, the Lord, love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering. God demands sincerity in worship, for he sees how even deceit and injustice may mask itself behind the external forms of worship. On the other hand, he will deal with his people faithfully, in his promises and covenant.

V. 9. Their seed shall be known among the Gentiles. This fidelity of God to his everlasting covenant shall not only be experienced by the Israelites, but it shall be manifest to the world. The world of the Gentile will confess freely that it sees the favor of God resting upon his people. The temperance implication of the whole passage is that while the fountain of blessing flows from God and from a divine height, yet men are to be diggers of channels for this fountain's flow. They are to be the agents of God, removing all that prevents the flow and the overflow.

Application.

This chapter from one of the greatest of the prophets proclaims the good news of deliverance from a foreign yoke. The days is coming, says he in effect, when your captivity shall be turned, when your people, instead of being the slaves of others, shall have their start in the ascendant, when instead of sitting in the dust with ashes upon their heads, they shall ride on fortune's neck with a garland about their brows. This surely would be greeted as a political gospel.

Our Lord standing up in the synagogue as a young man of thirty-two and referring to the still greater deliverance which he proposed to achieve for mankind, makes a bold appropriation of this chapter. This day, said he, is this scripture fulfilled in your ears. For this the rulers of the synagogue had him thrust out of the city, but a Christian posterity took him into its heart and testified and still testifies, "Thou O Christ are all we want."

For many years past another tyrant has reigned—King alcohol. To a great many men, weak and strong, he has been saying, as did the infamous Gessler to the brave inhabitants of Switzerland, "Bow down, ye slaves, bow down." Of late many prophets, peering into the future, have affirmed that they saw this Satan, like lightning fall from heaven. World prohibition one day will be inevitable. It is coming with that coming of the Lord which makes all things new.

THE MASQUERADE PARTY

Here are some suggestions for masquerade costumes for the All Hallow's Eve party:

Spanish girl, ankle-length (red or yellow), flowered shawl draped over one shoulder and around hips; white waist, with elbow sleeves; black slippers with red satin pasted over heels, and red silk stockings. Wear hair dressed high with a wide fancy comb, and arrange a red rose to droop over one ear.

A gipsy wears a very full skirt of gaily figured material, white blouse and soft sash of red wound around the waist. The hair is parted in the middle and worn in two braids, with a gay handkerchief wound over the head and tied under the braids in the back. Innumerable strings of gold and coral beads are worn. The stockings should be white, the slippers black.

The alphabet costume is odd. A plain white dress can be used as a foundation and a border of letters sewed or pasted to the bottom of the skirt. Such words as "cat," "dog" and "ball" may be placed diagonally on the skirt. A large fan has the letters A, B, C on it. The letters may be cut from printed matter, or from black paper.

An Irish peasant costume requires a short woolen skirt, blue-and-white striped low bodice, white neckerchief and apron, gray stockings, high-heeled shoes and a handkerchief tied over the head.

A white witch wears a bodice and quilted petticoat of white sateen, with panniers over the hips and a ruff around the neck. A pointed cap with streamers at the tip is worn. A black cat on the skirt and a bat on the bodice contribute the finishing touches.

Boys would like to dress as Captain Kidd in ragged short trousers and white skirt with frayed sleeves. A red sash is wound around the waist, a red handkerchief is tied around the head; a dirk stuck in one of the wide boots completes the costume.

An Arab requires baggy trousers made of red cotton, fasten tightly around the ankle, a white shirt, red velvet bolero jacket, red sash, Turkish slippers and a red fez (hat).

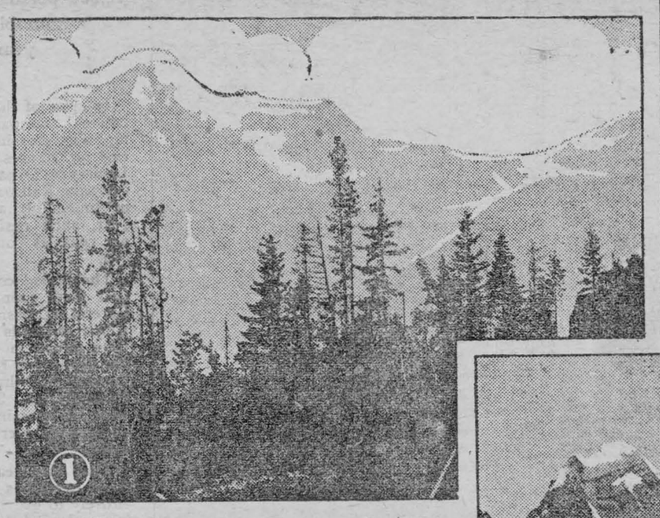
A boy who can take the part could dress as a "flapper," using any girl's costume which fits him. Goloshes worn wide open, silk stockings, gay sports skirt, sweater and hat will do. With a wig of bobbed hair and considerable "make-up" it would be difficult to identify him.

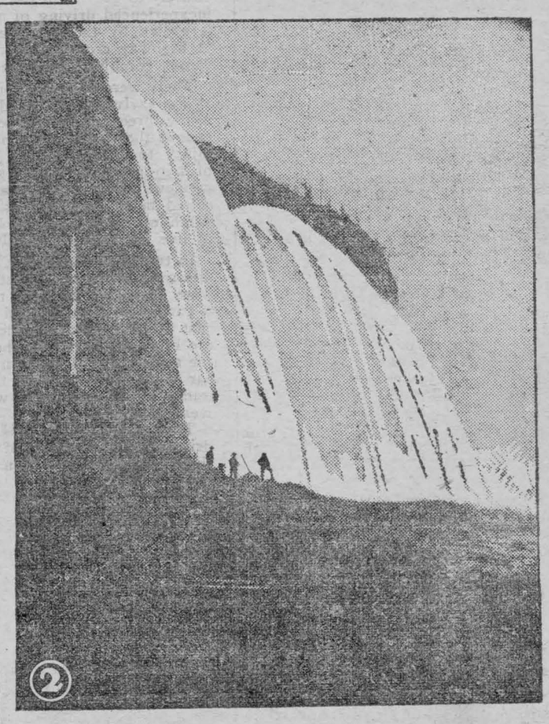
Domino costumes can be depended upon to disguise, and are worn by both girls and boys. They can be made of cambric or sateen, in one or in two colors, or of plain and figured material.

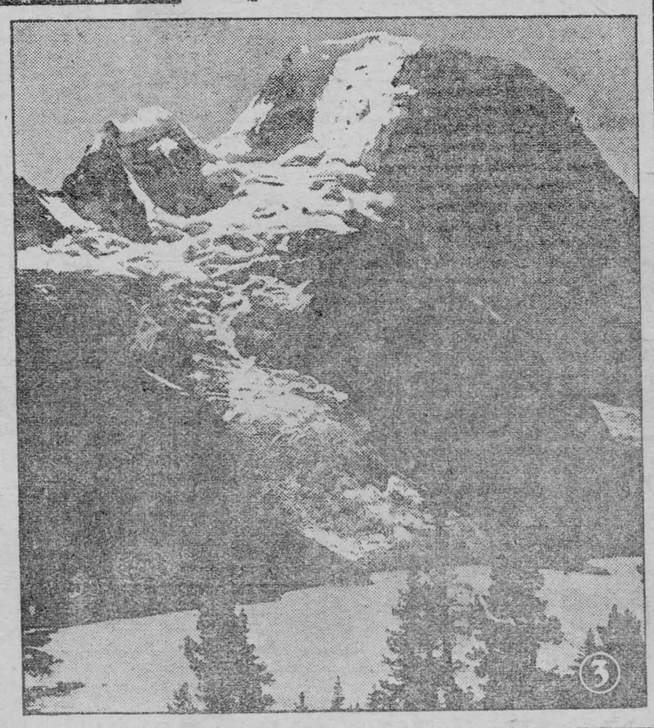
A little oil in time on proper places will prevent future long faces.

Mastering Robson

1. Mount Robson From C.N.R. Rails
2. Emperor Falls.
3. Mount Robson and Berg Lake.
4. Mountaineering Party on Robson Glacier.
5. Pet Bears make an Ascent. on their Own Account.







SCALING seemingly inaccessible heights is an achievement that appeals to every red-blooded man and woman, while it makes hero worshippers of the children. The mountains have looked down upon us for so long that when a man looks down upon a mountain he has done something in which all men can take pride.

Robson's snowy cowl is at an altitude of 13,068 feet above the sea, and the mountain is so massive that it seems to fill the whole landscape when seen from transcontinental trains using the Yellowhead Pass route. The photographs that are reproduced herewith illustrate the mountain, its glaciers, and Berg Lake; but no picture can adequately depict a cliff that rises almost sheer, nearly a mile and a half into the air from the lake which takes its name from the masses of ice breaking off from time to time from that enormous frozen river, Tumbling Glacier. Robson is a mountain difficult to climb.

On August 11, 1922, Windsor Putnam, of San Francisco, guided by "Jack" Hargraves, Canadian, reached the peak of the mountain and returned to levels of greater safety on the same day. They went in by way of the Valley of a Thousand Falls, skirted Emperor Falls, shown in the group of photographs, and at the close of the first day camped just above timber line, on the side of the mountain fronting on Berg Lake. They slept there that night, and, next day, moved their camp peakward about a thousand feet. On the third day, the distance remaining to the peak was negotiated, and a return effected to camp. The journey back to valley level was accomplished later, without difficulty.

This appears to be the first important mountain climbing feat accomplished without the aid of Swiss guides. Robson has been climbed before — in 1913, — when, according to the records, four members of the Alpine Club made the ascent, accompanied by a Swiss guide. Rev. G. K. V. Kinney, guided by a Canadian, Donald Phillips, essayed the climb several times from different angles, and got to within a couple of hundred feet of the top. Their climb was notable, even if they did not attain the peak. "Jack" Hargraves is the youngest of three brothers, doing mountain guide work in the Mount Robson district. He is a veteran of the Great War, and a native of Canada West.

Mount Robson, according to the Commission of Conservation, is taller than any other mountain in the Canadian Rockies south to the American boundary. The only mountain in Canada that is higher is Mount Logan. That peak is close to the Alaskan boundary.

A "Jack" Supper Party

A notice in the weekly paper invited everybody in town to a Jack Supper and Party on Hallowe'en:

Every Jack you know'll be there for you to greet!
Everything for supper will be there to eat!
There'll be lots of funny stunts;
Make your plans to come, at once—Everybody! Everybody! toute de suite!

As if this weren't enough to stimulate attendance, the information was added that the object was funds to furnish the community centre that was needed in the village.

The town hall was hardly large enough for all the arrangements, and the committee almost wished they had used the schoolhouse.

The first Jacks that greeted the patrons were jack-o'-lanterns, real and toy ones. The imitation ones hung thickly from the ceiling, and gave the necessary Hallowe'enish atmosphere; the real ones grinned from the window sills and other vantage points.

The feature which first attracted interest, however, was the line of supper booths at one end of the hall. Each had a large sign above it identifying it, and its attendants were characteristic.

First was Jack Spratt's House. Next to that, Jack in the Beanstalk's, then Jack Horner's, and finally Jack Frost's.

Jack Spratt and his wife served cold sliced meat and potato salad; Jack in the Beanstalk presided over individual baked beanpots with steamed brown bread accompaniment; Jack Horner sold apple, mince, berry, pumpkin pie; Jack Frost dipped out the ice cream.

A certain price was charged for a portion of each food, and visitors could move progressively from booth to booth till they had what they wished.

It was possible also to have a Flapjack counter, where a famous local flapjack maker was kept busy "flapping."

Jack and Jill in costume wandered in and out among the throng, dispensing water from a shining pail. Another Mother Goose Jack was popular in the person of Handy Spandy, Jack-a-Dandy, with his booth of candy.

After supper, which, of course, was the main object, and in itself proved a great deal of fun, the other attractions of the Jack Party were appreciated. There was, for instance, "Shooting Jack Rabbits." This sport consisted of hitting stuffed rabbits with baseballs at a given range.

Jack-be-Nimble managed a contest which consisted of jumping frontward and backward over a very tall candlestick. The successful contestants were awarded wee wax tapers.

The ever popular grab bag took the form of a real live sailor jacky with his kit bag, which contained jumping jacks and jack-in-the-boxes for the youngsters.

Fortunes, without which a Hallowe'en party would be incomplete, were uniquely offered. Large "Jack" roses of paper were fastened to a mock rosebush, and a pretty maid gowned in crimson bestowed these favors in exchange for a nickel each. A little written fortune was concealed in the heart of each rose.

Some of the young folks enjoyed games of jackstraws and slapjack in one corner of the hall, and there was a whittling contest with jackknives.

As people have grown rather tired of the cut-and-dried Hallowe'en party, this affair proved a marked success socially, and brought in a generous sum as well for the community centre.

Sometimes it is hard to unscrew the top of a jar of fruit. It is said by plunging the top of the jar into hot water it will come off easily. We know that a good way is to pull out the rubber ring on any side it can be got hold of until the top loosens. The rubbers should never be used again, anyway.

When witches fly,
And the owlets cry,
And the dog howls, "Ki yi, ki yi,"
When the black cat mews,
as the night grows old,
And the snake through the dewy grass glides cold,
It has come, I ween,
All Hallowe'en!

We store our apples in barrels, wrapping each apple separately in a piece of newspaper.

A wagon can be greased in this way with one-half the usual lifting: Remove the burrs from both wheels on one side of the wagon, then grease them. Let the wheels hang about two inches out. Go to the opposite side of the wagon, remove both burrs, and give the wagon a shove toward the loose wheels.

APPALLING RECORD OF CARELESS DRIVING

12,500 persons were killed and 300,000 persons were injured in automobile accidents in the United States during the year 1921, and yet this appalling total seems likely to be exceeded in 1922.

In spite of the most extensive educational campaign against railroad highway crossing accidents ever carried on, figures just compiled by the Insurance Department of the Pennsylvania Railroad System show that in June, July and August, of this year, such casualties increased 30 per cent, as compared with last season.

The period covered embraces the first three months of the National Careful Crossing Campaign," in which railroads of the United States have joined in efforts to make plain the deplorable results of carelessness. During the three months, on the Pennsylvania System alone, there were 107 crossing accidents, in which 71 persons were killed and 115 injured.

That this year's large increase in these casualties is chargeable almost entirely to growth in the reckless and inexperienced driving of automobiles, is shown by the fact that casualties at highway crossings from all other causes combined decreased.

There were 85 automobile accidents at Pennsylvania Railroad crossings in the three months in question. They caused the death of 56 persons, and injury to 107 others, or an average of two personal casualties for each accident. Twelve of the accidents resulted in 39 deaths; four caused the death of 20 persons, or an average of five for each car involved.

In two of the accidents, entire families were wiped out. That these lives were sacrificed to pure recklessness is particularly emphasized by the fact that in both instances the drivers of the cars lived close to the scenes of the accidents and were entirely familiar with the lay-out of the railroad tracks and roads over which they were driving.

The responsibility of automobile drivers for the safety of riders in their cars is no less than that of locomotive enginemen for the safety of their train passengers. It is, therefore, impressive to note that as against the lives lost in only three months by careless driving of motor cars over tracks, there were no passengers killed in train accidents anywhere on the Pennsylvania Railroad System during the entire year ended May 31st, last. In that period no less than 1,400,000 passenger trains were operated and 152,000,000 passengers carried safely.

The chief reason for this striking contrast is that locomotive enginemen are thoroughly trained in every detail of their work, and are required to demonstrate knowledge and ability to operate trains safely before being entrusted with their handling.

On the other hand, analysis of the causes of crossing accidents shows that the vast majority of motor car casualties at railroad highway crossings are attributable to a comparatively small percentage of inexperienced and irresponsible automobile drivers who have neither the knowledge training or judgment required for the safe operation of such machines. The result is often failure to exercise even the most ordinary precautions necessary for the protection of life when approaching or driving over railroad tracks.

Moreover, reckless driving of automobiles is not confined to highway crossings. This is shown by the daily reports in the newspapers of accidents caused by driving automobiles into telegraph poles, or stone walls and by skidding, sideswiping, turning over and colliding. From this running chronicle of death and injury, the conclusion would seem warranted that what is needed at the present time is not merely a Careful Crossing Campaign to concentrate attention on crossing accidents alone, but a national campaign carefully planned and directed against all forms of careless automobile driving.

How About That Auction Sale

Going to have a farm auction sale soon?

Well, you want it to be a good one, don't you?

You surely do!

Now, listen! Adout this Auction Sale Business.

Did you ever stop to think how much conditions have changed the last few years. People—you and your neighbors—travell in autos nowadays and they go down the concessions so fast that they don't always see an auction sale bill tacked on the corner fench post.

Oh, well, they might see it but they don't stop to read it—they are going somewhere and they haven't time to stop. Isn't tl at true? Sure it is. You pass 'em yourself.

But you are going to have a sale. You want a big crowd, for the larger the crowd the better the bidding, and the better the bidding the better the price.

Now, having a sale in your business. Getting a crowd is our business. Our interests are mutual, and right here we want to say that an advertisement of your sale in The Winchester Press will be seen by many hundreds of people. If you have the goods, that will draw the crowd.

An extra bid on the brindle cow or the roan mare will cover the few dollars spent.

To be sure, get out bills, because many look at it alone. The majority of farmers nowadays are having both bills and the paper.

Come in and see us. We will help you arrange the advertisement and help you on the whole deal. Engage one of the best auctioneers in Ontario if you wish, to.

We are also prepared to print sale bills in best shape.

The Press goes into over 1,000 homes in the neighbouring townships, and is read by more people in this district than any other newspaper.

Missionary Sermons

The Missionary Campaign in the Methodist Church was inaugurated last Sunday when Rev. H. S. Cooke, of Morewood preached two very excellent sermons in the Church here to large audienes, and one at Harmony in the afternoon.

In the morning his subject was "The Universal Christ and the responsibility of the Church in carrying on his Work." His text was "Go ye into all the world."

In the evening he spoke on "Christ's Mission on Earth," taking as his text; "He shall gather together in one of those who are scattered abroad."

The pastor Rev. J. K. Curtis will continue the Missionary campaign next Sunday.

Late Mrs. James Christie

The Dundas county colony in Smiths Falls will join with other friends of the bereaved in extending sympathy to Mr. James Christie of Calgary in the death of his wife, Florence Johnston. Deceased, who has been ailing for nearly four years, died on Saturday in the Ontario Hospital at Brockville at the age of 47 years. The remains were conveyed to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Nolan, 37 Winnifred street, Smiths Falls, and this afternoon the funeral took place to the C. P. R. station for burial in Maple Ridge cemetetary, Winchester. There were many floral tributes. The late Mrs. Christie was born in Mountain township, not far from Winchester village, in 1875, a daughter of Mr. and Mr. John B. Johnston. After Mr. Johnston's death Mrs. Johnston and family came to Smiths Falls, where in 1903 Florence Johnston and James Christie formed a life alliance. For five years after their marriage they resided in Winchester, then went out to Calgary where Mr. Christie still has his home. With the husband there is left one son—David—a boy of 4½ years. The deceased is survived also by her mother and two sisters, the sisters being Mrs. Nolan of Smiths Falls and Mrs. Wm. Lynch of Minneapolis. George, a brother, died here six years ago.—Smiths Falls Record.

European countries generally 35 to 40, while in Japan the consumption is 200 pounds each year. The Department of Marine and Fisheries says Canadians should use fish at least once every day.

Robert Stead's Greatest Book

IN HAPPY NOVEL OF THE NORTHWEST

"Neighbours" is Nearer the Heart of Canada than Any Other of Famous Canadian Author's Books.

Romance of the Last Great Tide of Settlement in Saskatchewan Country is Big Theme.

You will never have to ask that question, "What is Canadian literature?" again when you have read Robert Stead's latest and, so far, his greatest novel, "Neighbours."

There are few Canadians who are not familiar with this author's former novels, "The Homesteaders," "The Cowpunchers," and "Dennison Grant." This new book runs true to the Stead tradition of a good story, real humour, pure love and a real idea—even some real mystery, and it has more of the real atmosphere of life in it, than any other which has come to us in a long while. It is true writing, and will add fresh laurels to the fame of this already well-beloved author.

ROBERT STEAD,
Author of "Neighbours," "Dennison Grant," "The Cowpuncher," "The Homesteaders," etc.

"Neighbours" relates how two families of young people, brother and sister, neighbours, in a little Ontario town; neighbours, fifteen years later on adjoining homesteads in the Saskatchewan country, find life and love. Their stories run smoothly until a young Englishman settles in the community and upsets all expectations, including the reader's. But the best part of "Neighbours" in my mind, and what makes it a great book, is the picture of the people who make up that far-scattered "Neighbourhood" of homesteaders, Jake is the old villain who finds "locations" for the gullible newcomer; the "Sneezits" are a gaunt big-eyed Polak family, who live in a cave that the precious live-stock may have builded shelter—and the widow, and the Scotch family—and the wedding! All of that is writing of the finest type, and places this Canadian book in high order among the best literature of to-day.

"NEIGHBOURS," a happy novel of the Northwest, by Robert Stead, Hodder & Stoughton, Toronto, $1.75

The following items is going the round of our exchanges, and we see no reason why the Press should not make use of it, for it is just as applicable here as elsewhere.

Some subscribers inform us that they are bothered by neighbors borrowing their copy of the Press and the habit in some cases has become a nuisance. The Press costs less than three cents a week—the price of a letter stamp—there is no reason why those who are borrowing from their neighbors couldn't afford themselves to subscribe for the paper. Our list is growing bigger, but we can handle a few more subscriptions. Just forward the price and you won't need to bother your neighbor for a whole year.
