HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.
No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.
Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

ST. ANDREW'S CHOIR PRESENT RURAL COMEDY

Tuesday evening the Music Hall was comfortably filled when St. Andrew's choir presented the rural comedy "Aaron Slick from Punkin Crick". The different parts were well taken and the play much appreciated by those present. The cast included Messrs. Milton Shaver, Maurice Beckstead and Otha Hutt, Mrs. Irwin Cross, Misses Maybelle Hummel, Gertrude Weegar and Marg. Shaver.

Frank Fraser, Morewood Passes While Milking

Sunday evening the Morewood community was startled at the news of the sudden passing of Mr. Frank Fraser, a highly respected well-known citizen, ex-reeve of the township of Winchester, at his home while in the act of milking.

After the evening meal, Mr. Fraser with his son, Gordon, proceeded to the barn to do the milking and other chores feeling in his usual state of health and was in the act of milking when Gordon heard his father fall. Gordon hurried to his assistance, movhim from where he had fallen and then hurried to the house for help. Mr. Fraser was taken in and medical aid summoned, but he never regained consciousness and it is believed had passed away before reaching the house.

Mr. Fraser was in his sixty-first year. He had always taken a keen interest in municipal affairs and had been reeve of the Township of Winchester on more than one occasion. He was also a trustee of the Morewood public school and the Morewood high school, and secretary-treasurer of the Morewood Milk Company. Mr. Fraser was a member of the Canadian Order of Foresters.

Five weeks ago the home was bereaved by the death of the only unmarried daughter, Miss Dorothy Fraser. He is survived by his widow, formerly Miss Margaret Robinson; one son, Gordon, of Morewood; two daughters, Mrs. Leslie Moore, of Ottawa, and Mrs. Slinn, of Lachine, Qne.; one brother, Joseph Fraser, of Winnipeg, Man., and two sisters, Mrs. Daniel MacGregor and Mrs. Rodney Marcellus, of Morewood.

Auction Sale Bidding

After bidding on an article at a farm auction sale the purchaser cannot change his mind. He must take and pay for it. This ,in effect, was the ruling of Judge Thompson, son of the late Sheriff Thompson of Perth, Division Court at Whitby the other day. Edgar Storry sued Chris. Yakely for the price of a potato digger which had been sold by auction to Yakely at the sale of a farmer named Thompson. The auctioneer "knocked down" the digger to Yakely for $40. It was revealed later that the digger originally belonged to Storry, not Thompson, the former having a quantity of goods in the sale, including the potato digger. Yakely never took the article off the place and Storry asked for judgment for the sale price of $40. Yakely held that the digger was not a good one but His Honor held that such sales were held without warrancy being given and gave judgment in full. On the witness stand the auctioneer said this was his first sale in 27 years that had been challenged.

W.B.Lawson, Recommended For Counties' Judgeship

Since the death of His Honor Judge O'Reilly last week, there has been much conjecture throughout the United Counties as to whom his successor will be. Steps towards the appointment of a County Judge to fill the vacancy caused by Judge O'Reilly's death were taken at a meeting of the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Law Association, held in Cornwall on Monday afternoon in the court house library, when W. B. Lawson, K.C., of Chesterville, was selected for recommendation to the Minister of Justice as the new County Judge. A resolution. moved by I. Hilliard, K.C., of Morrisburg, and seconded by J. G. Harkness, Counties Crown Attorney, and R. F. Lyle, read as follows: "That the Law Association unanimously recommend W. B. Lawson, K.C., of Chesterville. as Judge of the County Court of the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, and if for any reason the appointment be not made, we unanimously recommend the appointment of F. T. Costello, of Alexandria, as such Judge, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. Mr. Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Justice, at Ottawa.

Mr. Lawson is well-known throughout the United Counties, having handled much business for the different municipalities during his long practice in Chesterville.

Beehler--O'Neil

A pretty wedding took place at St. Mary's church on April 30th, when Laura Catharine, youngest daughter of the late Leon O'Neil and Mrs. O'Neil of Melvin, became the bride of Mr. Walter Beehler, eldest son of Mr. John Beehler and the late Mrs. Beehler of Crysler. The bride entered the church on the arm of her brother-in-law, Mr. Wm. Masterson, who gave her away, to the strains of a wedding march. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Staley. The bride looked charming in a gown of Rose Glow satin and sand, hat, shoes and stockings to match and wore the gift of the groom, a fur neck piece, and carried a bouquet of bridal roses and maiden hair fern. Miss Lillan McCloskey of Chesterville, was bridesmaid and wore a lovely dress of sand georgeete with hat, shoes and stockings to match, and carried mauve sweet peas and maiden hair fern. Mr. Bernard Beehler of Crysler, acted as best man. The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a silver initial compact, to the best man, a pair of gold initial cuff links. The bride's gift to the groom also was a pair of gold initial cuff links. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for a motor trip amid a shower of rice and confetti and best wishes. The bride travelled in her wedding gown with a navy blue coat.

United Ladies Aid

The regular meeting of the Ladies' Aid of Chesterville United church was held at the parsonage on Wednesday afternoon when more than thirty members were present. The devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. L. Cass.

The business hour was bristling with business. The dining-room committee reported the decorating of the dining-room completed. A committee made up of Mrs. M. Durant, Mrs. W. O. Dixon, Mrs. W. H. Casselman and Mrs. G. C. Lacey, was appointed to make plans for decorating the interior of the church, to work with a committee appointed from the trustee board.

On Saturday last in Chesterville a very quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at the United Church parsonage when Mr. Harold Windsor, of Bourget, was united in marriage to Miss Pearl Lawson, of Chesterville, Rev. R. E. Newman officiating.

The bride wore a rose beige dress, hat, shoes and hose to match. They left for a motor trip to New York State, returning Monday evening to Bourget, where a reception was held and many costly gifts received, which showed the high esteem in which they are held. Mr. and Mrs. Windsor returned to Chesterville where they are to reside.

Mrs. J. F. Cass, Winchester Dies in Belleville

The citizens of Wnchester were surprised on Monday evening to hear that Mrs. J. F. Cass had passed away in Belleville where she has been spending a few months with her daughter, Mabel, who is teaching there. The same evening Mr. J. L. Dixon accompanied by Mr. W. J. Cass went to Belleville with the motor ambulance and brought the remains to Winchester on Tuesday afternoon to the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Cass, from where the funeral will proceed to-day (Thursday) at 1:30 p.m., to the United church.

A Load of Potatoes for a Pull

Creemore Star — Potatoes have little value and mud holes are treacherous are two statements the following vouched for narrative will amplify. A young farmer at the south end of the township was driving his car toward home when he found himself mired in a mudhole. Another farmer came along with horses and pulled the car out to solid ground. The grateful motorist offered to pay and when it was declined he said to his benefactor, "Have you lots of potatoes? No? Well, come on over and I will give you a good load."

THE FIRST AID KIT

Every motor vehicle should be equipped with a small first aid kit containing an antiseptic liquid, a sterile salve for burns, two bandages, and similar materials which will make it possible to administer first aid for the slight, as well as serious, injuries which may be encountered while out on the road. With such a kit the treatment of cuts is so easy that it will be used. The application of the sterile salve will relieve the pain from burns, and the easily applied bandages will keep out dirt and protect the injury. The bandages can also be used to prevent fatal hemorrhages resulting from accidents. Then when the doctor comes he will find the "emergency" cared for and he can direct such other treatment as may be necessary.

We can supply these necessary articles in a compact case which will be convenient to carry.

Dundas-Grenville Presbyterial

With more than 200 members of the W.M.S. of the United Church in attendance the third annual meeting of this Presbyterial convened in Chesterville on Thursday last. The officers met to transact necessary business at 9 a.m. while delegates were arriving and being registered. At 9:30 the President, Mrs. Hyndman, took the chair. With her on the platform were the four Vice Presidents—Mesdames Murdock, Stafford, Kerfoot and Armstrong, also Mrs. Coulthart and Mrs. Smith of the Morewood auxiliary who conducted the opening devotional exercises. Cordial words of welcome were gven by Mrs. (Rev.) Newman of Chesterville, to which Mrs. Murdock replied.

After the minutes were read, Resolution and Press Committees were appointed, and Mrs. Hyndman expressed her appreciation for the help of her officers during the past year, after which she conducted an impressive memorial service, while the Vice-Presidents read the names of those in their sections who had passed on to higher service.

Miss Connell, in giving the Correspondence Secretary's report, urged greater accuracy in reports.

The Treasurer, Mrs. Elliott, reported sending $9400 to the Branch Treasurer.

Miss Tweedie, of Montreal, extended hearty greetings from the Branch.

The Superintendents of the different Departments told of progress in their work and of encouragements.

After an interesting questionnaire, conducted by Miss Tweedie, the morning session was closed with earnest prayer by Mrs. Russell.

A young people's conference was held from 11 to 12 under the direction of their leaders, Miss Jessie Smith and Mrs. J. Anderson.

The afternoon session opened with devotional exercises by Cardinal auxiliary, after which Miss Connell called the roll, and there were only a few places not represented. Crystal Rock and Oxford Mills had nearly all their members present. An excellent review was given by Mrs. A. B. Allison of two missionary books, "In Great Waters," a story of our mission work on the Pacific, and "From Jerusalem to Jerusalem," which will be next year's study book.

Mrs. Coleman, in her paper "How to Interest the Uninterested," gave a call for great faith and Christian endeavor, naming several ways of enlisting those not interested, and summing it up by urging us to plan, pray and persist. Mrs. D. McLeod, in leading the discussion, emphasized the arousing of the interest. Mrs. W. J. Cass also spoke, stressing knowledge of mission work and the personal touch. Mrs. Hlliard said, "Let us talk about our mission opportunity, so that we may interest the young folks in our homes. Tell them missionary stories and items from our missionary papers.

Mrs. W. N. Fulton sang "Others" in her usual pleasing manner.

Miss Brimstin, of West China, gave a brief talk on two very attractive Chinese buildings on the west side of Chengtu. These are Household Science Homes where each girl is to spend at least six weeks after graduating from the schools. Instruction is also given on the care of children. In the years to come we are going to realize a great blessing through the training of these girls.

A beautiful Installation Service for new officers was conducted by Miss Tweedie.

At the Tea Hour, greetings were brought by Mr. Hamilton, reeve of Chesterville, by Mrs. Faulds from Glengarry Presbyterial, by Rev. Johnston from the Presbytery and through Mrs. Graham from the Anglican Church.

The evening service, which was very largely attended, was presided over by Rev. R. E. Newman. Rev. Hurst of Elma, extended greetings from the Presbytery.

A beautiful selection, "Cast Thy Bread upon the Waters," was sung by Mrs. Geo. Merkley, Miss Elsie Hewitt and Miss Madge Campderros.

The address of the evening was given by Miss Brimstin, who took her hearers on an imaginary trip to China, asking them to visit the Women's Compound at Chengtu. She spoke of the W.M.S. hospital and the Canadian Press Office. She described the Kindergarten and other schools, saying that the W.M.S. has opened to the women of China avenues of usefulness unthought of before. These natives have carried on the work in the absence of the missionaries. Miss Brimstin requested prayer for their special evangelistic services in China and said in closing: "We rejoice that God has used us and brought many into the Kingdom, but there is so much yet to be done."

Mrs. (Rev.) Servage brought the report of the Resolution Committee in which appreciation was given for all who helped to make this gathering a success and to the ladies of the congregation for their excellent meals. The fact that a new Temperance Department had been created was commended and each auxiliary was urged to include a short talk on this subject at their monthly meetings.

Rev. Newman in reply expressed the pleasure of the church in being privileged to entertain such a gathering.

A wonderful pageant, "The Woman at the Well," was put on by the Chesterville auxiliary in which the awakening from heathen darkness and from materialism to Chrstianity was vividly depicted. The scenery for the background and the costume for over 30 characters were very artistically arranged and the musical and literary parts were so well done that it showed much talent as well as faithful practice.

Morrisburg extended an invitation for the Presbyteral meeting next year. Rev. R. E. Newman closed with the benediction.

The following are the 1929 officers: President—Mrs. Clarke Hyndman; 1st Vice-Pres.—Mrs. J. I. Murdock; 2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. T. A. Houlehan; 3rd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. W. J. Kerfoot; 4th Vice-Pres.—Mrs. R. J. Armstrong; Rec. Sec.—Mrs. T. Coleman; Cor. Sec.—Mrs. J. W. Ault; Treas.—Mrs. J. A. MacDougall; Mission Band Supt.—Mrs. J. Anderson; Mission Circle Supt.—Mrs. Roy McCarley; C.G.I.T. Supt.—Dr. M. Fetterly; Temperance Supt.—Mrs. Howard Graham; Christian Stewardship—Mrs. Ingram Cross; Associate Helpers—Mrs. E. A. Irwin; Supply—Miss Fairbairn; Strangers—Mrs. Hilliard; Literature—Mrs. A. B. Allison; Missionary Monthly & Press—Mrs. H. E. A. Cleland.

Importance of Thinning Vegetables

(Experimental Farms Note.)

Beginners in vegetable gardening are almost sure to make the mistake not only of sowing seed much too thickly, but also of leaving the plants too thick in the row. A very large amount of seed is wasted each year because of this and failure to have plants develop properly is another result of more consequence to the sower of the seeds than the waste of seed. Thinning of all vegetables is desirable as soon as the plants are large enough to catch hold of, that is, quite small. Lettuce can be used even though the plants are thick, but to have satisfactory individual plants of leaf lettuce the plants should be thinned to five or six inches apart, and the plants of head lettuce should be thinned to eight inches or more apart. They will not develop satisfactory heads if much closer than this. It has been found in the Horticultural Division, Experimental Farm, Ottawa, that the larger varieties of head lettuce give the most satisfactory results when the heads are nearly one foot apart. Carrots should be thinned to about an inch and one half apart; beets to two inches apart; parsnips to two inches apart; onions to two inches apart. Radish if sown thinly are thinned as ready for use. Often two many kernels of corn are left in a hill. Five plants are quite sufficient to leave after the cutworms and birds have taken their toll. Bean plants should be from two to four inches apart, and peas about one inch apart.

Vegetables will not develop satisfactorily if the plants are thick, hence judicious thinning is very important.

On Making Allowances

Most people make allowances for themselves much more quickly than for others. It is not that they are consciously self-indulgent or intentionally harsh or uncharitable; but in matters affecting themselves they are in possession of the facts, and in matters affecting others they are not. When they are making allowances for themselves it is because they definitely recognize some weakness or misfortune or unhappy circumstance that seems to them to warrant indulgence; their adoption of a more critical attitude toward others whose conduct on some occasion has fallen short of the standard expected is owing as much to lack of imagination as to an exalted sense of justice.

When they themselves are brusque or unresponsive or irritable they know that it is because worry over illness in the family or their boy's bad standing at school or a bad turn in business or an unexpectedly large bill made them so. But they do not attribute the brusqueness, unresponsiveness or irritability of another to a corresponding cause; they take as a personal affront and resent it and perhaps give the offender a bad name when they talk about him. He is a snob, or a sour and "grouchy" character, or at the least he has no manners.

For men in public life the ordinary citizen is likely not to make allowances—especially when they are of the opposite political party to his own. He is on the watch for compromises with conscience; for votes and acts inconsistent with the high principles proclaimed; he judges harshly—often on inadequate evidence. Even lapses from perfect strength, straightforwardness and courage in the leaders of his own party he does not condone; he finds an unacknowledged pleasure in the shortcomings of the eminent. But although he freely and and vigorously condemns public men for yielding to pressure, he often excuses himself for the weakness that he has shown under pressure. And the excuse seems to him good—at least good enough. Censure, no less than charity, should begin at home.

Animals as Weather Prophets

It is proverbial that pigs see the wind. These creatures become restless and prepare their beds of straw bfore a severe storm, some hours earlier than human organs are aware of its appoach.

Ducks go out to the grass-fields to search for the snails which they know will be found before the coming shower. The field mouse covers up her hole in due time before the setting in of cold weather.

Fish have the strongest instinct with regard to the changing of the weather, refusing obstinately to rise at the most tempting baits or flies when clouds charged wth thunder or rain are passing through the air.

Indeed, most birds and animals have a singular knowledge of changes, shifting their quarters according as the coming rain or the dryness of the atmosphere warns them.

The grouse foretell the approaching rans before the most weather-wise shepherd can do so, by betaking themselves to the dry heights, where they sit or walk about with erect heads and necks, in a manner quite different from their usual gait. So do the mountain sheep change their feeding ground to the lee side of the hills before severe blasts of wind and rain.

CANADIAN CANNERY BIGGEST SARDINE PLANT IN EMPIRE

Sardines are little fish but they mean big money, in the total, in Canada's Atlantic Coast fishery production, and through the season in New Brunswick they keep busy the largest sardine cannery in the British Empire. This cannery is at Black's Harbor on the Charlotte county coast of New Brunswick, the province where by far the greater part of the Canadian sardine fishery is carried on. A small catch of sardines is also taken in Quebec and some of the fish are also caught in Nova Scotia waters. The marketed value of the Canadian production is over a million dollars a year.

Rev. R. P. Stafford Honored On Leaving Morewood

Wednesday evening last week the United church at Morewood was the scene of a gathering which will be remembered for many a day when practically every home in the congregation was reprseneted on the occasion of the farewell to Rev. R. P. Stafford, who had accepted a call to Grace church at Lachine and was on the eve of his departure from Morewood, when the congregation took advantage of the occasion and presented two very handsome upholstered chairs as tokens of remembrance to Mr. and Mrs. Stafford, the presentation being made by Messrs. Orrin Dillabough and Ford Steinberg while the following address was read by Mr. H. Loucks: Rev. R. P. Stafford, B.A., B.D., and Mrs. Stafford.—

For almost four years we, as members of your church and congregation, have profited by your ministrations, and within that period you have endeared yourselves to us by your earnest devotion to duty and the hearty interest you have manifested in our welfare as a people.

In the pulpit, Mr. Stafford, you have faithfully presented the precepts of our religion, have warned us against the evils that continually beset us, and have earnestly pleaded with us to seek our truest happiness in the paths of rectitude and peace.

In our homes you have been our sincere and sympathizing friends. In our hours of trouble and sorrow you have spoken gentle and soothing words; our childen have profited by your instruction; you have united our sons and daughters in holy wedlock; your benediction has rested upon us in our domestic and business affairs, and in all things you have proven yourselves our competent and loving pastor and pastor's wife.

With a deep sense of your many benefactions, those assembled here have requested Messrs. Dillabough and Steinburg to present to you these beautiful chairs as a token of esteem for yourselves, and of our gratitude for your labors in our behalf. We ask you to accept them as freely as we offer them.

Mr. Stafford and Mrs. Stafford each made very feeling replies expressing their pleasure andd appreciation for all the kindnesses shown them during their sojourn in Morewood, as well as for the very tangible gifts they had received.

Community singing and readings by Mrs. W. Coulthart and Mrs. A. B. McConnell were much appreciated after which an adjournment was to the church hall where all partook of the sumptuous refreshments provided by the ladies of the congregation.

MRS. WHITE

It looks almost like magic—the way a wealth of health floods the body under the healing influence of "Fruit-a-tives." Indigestion, Gas and Pain after Eating, Headaches and Constipation simply disappear. As Mrs. E. White of West Toronto, Ont., states: "I suffered from Indigestion for months and could not eat a square meal. Since taking 'Fruit-a-tives' every trace of Stomach Trouble has disappeared. I now eat anything and feel like a new person."

"Fruit-a-tives" will quickly relieve Indigestion and Dyspepsia. 25c. and 50c. a box—at dealers everywhere.

Mr. and Mrs. Vear of Crysler Honored

A large crowd attended a farewell party in the Orange hall, Crysler, on Thursday eveing, April 25th, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Vear who intend leaving shortly for the Old Land, the land of their birth. After the reading of an address by Mr. Frank Baker, Mr. Andrew Ouderkirk made the presentation. Mr. Vear very feelingly replied saying their sojourn in Crysler had been a pleasant one and very cordially invited one and all to visit him and his wife should they at any time visit the mother country.

Followng is the address:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Vear,—

We, your friends and neighbors and members of L.O.L. 528, Crysler, have assembled here this evening to spend a few social hours with you, having recently learned you were soon to leave dear old Canada, for perhaps to you, a better land, the land of your birth.

During your short sojourn among us you have proven worthy citizens, efficient workers in your church and choir and also in our lodge rooms, and we can graciously say to you both, "Thank you." While your stay among us has been short, yet we hope you have been blessed, not only financially, but with a goodly share of health and happiness. And now, Mr. and Mr. Vear, as a slight token of our appreciation, we would ask you to accept this purse of money, not for its value, but that in your leisure hours when you are far from us, and at home, may your thoughts ever return to your many friends and happy gatherings at Crysler. And we would say should you at any time in the future return to us we will greet you with a hearty open hand. And lastly, we all sincerely hope your voyage across the briny ocean may be a pleasant one with good health and happiness, and with loud cheers we all join in saying adieu, Mr. and Mrs. Vear, till we meet again.

Signed by your friends and neighbors and members of the Orange Order.

Crysler, Ont., April 25th, 1929.

Too Much Budgeting Not Liked by Women

There is no doubt that few women faced with the necessity of running the home on a very small allowance would like to have their task made more difficult by the possession of a spendthrift husband.

Yet the fact remains that the careful man who reckons out his expenditure to the last shilling, and who could tell you what he had done with every penny of his salary, is seldom popular with women—not even with wives.

"If I could see my husband bang even a sixpence with an air of reckless abandon I should just jump for joy," writes a housewife from Tooting, siging herself "Small Means."

"It is true we have not many sixpences to spare," she goes on, "but because of that I should admire more than ever the flicker of daring that prompted him to do it—the gesture of defiance of fate, if you like.

"We have to exercise economy, and I do my part willingly and cheerfully. It is the eternally small outlook that grates. We do everything according to rule. There are no surprises—and what irritates me most is that he seems to take an absurd delight in bowing his neck to the economy yoke.

"He never keeps me short of my agreed allowance—but he knows whether I repaid the fourpence he lent me three weeks ago last Wednesday.

"I do not want to run into debt, but I should so enjoy a little mild recklessness—and leaving things to chance now and then.

"Bread and cheese are all right for supper, but it would rejoice my heart to hear him say, 'Oh, blow the bread and cheese—let's have some fish and chips and hang the expense!' It's not the fish I really want—it's the attitude."

Junior Bird Club

The third regular meeting of the Chesterville Peptimists Junior Bird Club was held on April 26th, in Room A. The meeting was opened by the calling of the roll which was answered by a short verse or sentence about a bird. Them inutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The programme was as follows:

"The Rook and the Crow," Minnie Cameron.

"The Bird Bath," Audrey Black.

"The Dog, the Sparrow and the Man." Hilda Latta.

"The Woodpecker," Mary Hartwell.

"The Little Birl that Could Thread Beads," Della McLean.

"A Sparrow in the Church," Ronald Hummel.

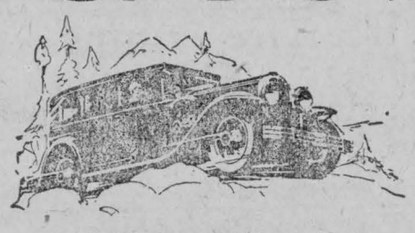

"Feathered Helpers," Helen Cass.

"Helping the Robin at Nesting Time," Jean Colquhoun.

The Field Committees report was given and showed that a great many more of our birds have returned since our previous meeting. The Club donations amounted to 25c. We closed by singing the National Anthem.

Mary Hartwell, Reporter.

REVOLVERS NOT NEEDED

Edmonton Journal—Two intending prospectors heading for the northland were surprised to learn from the mounted police that revolvers and pistols have always been barred in the Northwest Territories. It would be interesting to know just why this rule was drawn up. Local officers explain they can be concealed easily, and anyway, they are not needed. A gun is all that is necessary. Whatever the reason, it is strange that small arms of this nature are permitted in cities and towns—by permit, of course—and are not allowed in a country where one's nearest neighbor may be scores and hundreds of miles away. The arguments against their use in the wilds apply with equal force to their use in thickly settled districts. If it was impossible to buy revolvers, hold-up artists would hesitate to carry a shotgun, that could be seen so easily.

Sheep Industry Prosperous

The sheep industry in 1928 was very good both for meat and wool. Reviewing the year, Live Stock Market and Meat Trade Review issued by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, shows that the wool clip averaged from five to twenty-five per cent. above the values received the previous year, while sheep and lamb sales were fully $1 per hundredweight above the 1927 market. Confidence in the future of the industry is expressed in that the industry showed an appreciable expansion, gains being especially good in Ontario and the four Western Provinces. The total sales at stock yards during the year reached 569,172 head, being approximately 5,000 head more than the sales of the previous year. The season was characterized by the heaviest movement in any of the past five years, with values well above 1927. A feature of the year's business, according to this Review, was the strong demand for feeding lambs and good breeding ewes. Supplies moved back to the farms from Toronto were equal to the previous year when the trade was quite heavy, while in Western Canada orders were constanly left unfilled through lack of supplies. The experience of the past year has put the sheep industry on a satisfactory basis with every indication of a further expansion.

A Crime Against Creation

It may be necessary in the interests of human existence or comfort that certain animals should be killed. It is never necessary that their killing should involve cruelty. Trapping of wild animals and birds is an ancient occupation and has long been considered a perfectly legitimate means of getting a living. Some consider it even an innocent kind of sport. How many of us have ever thought seriously about what it really means?

We confess to having laid snare in the days of youth for the wild things in field and forest. We plodded through sodden or frozen meadow and hill to set steel traps with cruel, jagged jaws hidden on the trail or in the water. But when, on a glorious morning in the hills, we came upon a trapped hare and the beautiful tortured creature sent up its cry of agony that will not be forgotten, hunting by that cruel, steel-jawed method not only lost its glamor forever, but seemed to be the meanest kind of work in the world.

It is said that one hundred thousand skins are sold yearly on the markets of North America, and the annual turnover of the fur business in the United States alone is four hundred million dollars. Stark horror lurks behind those figures. Millions of dumb creatures are tortured to death because fashion insists that women wear furs. Fashion, not nature, or necessity, made the decree whereby millions of creatures with flesh and blood and senses like ourselves must suffer long-drawn-out agonies of fear and pain and die in unspeakable misery before their time.

A picture lies before us which for sheer callousness and cold-blooded brutality surpasses even the horrors of the Inquisition. It is an illustration from a trap-maker's catalogue, showing the working of a fiendish instrument known as "The Triple Clutch—Gnaw and Escape-proof." "See how the flesh of the trapped leg swells into the groove between the two jaw faces, effecting a positive and escape-proof hold." In the old days the poor thing had a chance of freedom by chewing its foot off, but not now! Look at this: "Impossible to pull free even though the foot be chewed off...not a chance to escape."

If we saw the trapped animals, or thought the matter through, how many would be content to go on wearing furs procured by such cruel, inhuman and cowardly devices? An Anti-Steel Trap League formed in Washington, D.C., in 1925 is seeking to have laws passed which will forbid the use of any trap that does not kill instantly or take the animal alive and unhurt. The league is up against that yearly turnover of four hundred million dollars and the decree of fashion, but it has the declared support of the General Feederation of Women's Clubs, and of the poets and prose writers of the country. It must surely have the support of the Christian Churches in seeking to drive out of existence an instrument that is a blot upon our civilization.—The New Outlook.

DISCOVERING FATHER

"Do you dread the trip much, dear?"

Louise Faber looked up with a smile. "Not particularly, mother."

"It won't be long after we are once on the train. Just one change, then home and father."

Louise closed her eyes.

"Home, yes," she said. "But, O, mother, if only father cared as you do!"

"If only you could understand how much your father does care," replied her mother, drawing up a low chair before Louise's big one and taking both the thin hands in hers. 'Some day my two dear ones must understand each other. They are so much alike."

"I don't want to be like father," said Louise impatiently; "I want to be like you; and I am like you in some ways."

Mrs. Faber laughed the gay trilling laugh that was as natural to her as the song is to the bird. "That's the trouble. You are enough like me to blind your father's qualities in you. But listen, Redbird—" She gave a loving pat to the girl's wonderful mass of coppery red hair.

"No, Blackbird," cried Louise, touching her mother's smooth, coal-black tresses, "I don't wan to listen! Please don't tell me just now that I am like father. Why, father never called me a pet name in my life, and you know how I love them. You are always thinking up something new."

"I shan't tell you just now," said her mother with a smile. "You are going home with nothing to do but think, and you really need to think. I know why you love me; it's because you have always been able to wheedle me out of scolding you. But you can't do it this time. You are like your father in many ways, and it is just as much your fault as it is his that you do not understand each other. You have his reticence that holds you back from showing your full heart to anybody except me, and you have his quick temper."

"Yes," interrupted Louise, "I never got that from you."

"No; and you didn't get from me your strong will, which through father's wise training has made it possible for you to control that temper. Why, Little Heart of Oak, I was so frightened when you used to throw yourself down on the floor in a fit of rage and hold your breath until you were black in the face that I would have let you have anything you wanted. I should never have dared to throw a bucket of cold water on you, as your father did, to bring you out of those tantrums. And think what a disagreeable, spoiled thing you would be now, dearest. Nobody could love you, not even your doting mother."

"I know; father did his duty," admitted Louise dryly. "But it has always seemed to me that he never really loved me, and that he didn't care for my love. I never could get so near to him as I can get to you. Why, mother, he doesn't seem to care for all the love you lavish on him."

Mrs. Faber laughed. "Child, your father is a silent lover. He doesn't spill his love all over everywhere; but, oh, how deep it flows! Some day you'll know."

Louise did think as the train rumbled on toward home; she had been taken dangerously ill with typhoid at the place where she had been teaching. Her mother had been with her for seven weeks, and now she was just strong enough to undertake the journey home. During her convalescence the thought of father had been much on her mind. They had always clashed more or less; and in her weakness all the old indifference had come back with aggravated bitterness, and she found herself dwelling on small irritations that she could not dismiss. Some of them took almost complete possession of her mind as she lay back in the car seat.

Father would probably meet them in overalls,—she did hate overalls!—and he would be unshaved. Father never cared for nice details, though they meant so much to her and mother; and father never cared how the house looked; he would not think to make it presentable for their homecoming. She shuddered when she thought in what condition they would probably find it.

Her mother, too, had been thinking. It was the greatest grief of her life that Louise could not be made to understand the depths of her father's quiet nature. Since the girl's early childhood Mrs. Faber had stood as a buffer between the two, patiently biding her time, knowing better than anyone else the strength of the hidden affection that bound them. She knew that her husband's undemonstrative heart was as wrapped up in their one child, and that Louise would discover it some day. As the train came near the home station she made an effective remark; she had been watching her daughter's face and had guessed shrewdly the course of her thoughts.

"Poorf ather!" she said. "He's had a hard seven weeks. There is enough on the farm outside to keep him busy without having to cook his own meals and look after the house. He's been lonely, too, though he has never even whispered it in his letters. If he had, I'd probably have been selfish enough to write him how lonely I was and hurry you home before you were strong enough."

Louise looked quickly. She little suspected her mother of guile, but one of her pet grievances was that her father had not seemed anxious to have them come home.

"There are Dixie and Dexter!" exclaimed Mrs. Faber a little later.

Louise's throat cramped strangely as she caught sight of the shiny black carriage team that was her father's pride. She loved those horses too, and suddenly a great joy welled up within her. She was glad that she was nearly home again.

"And there's father!" cried her mother as the train drew up to the station. "We'll wait here, till everybody else is out."

As they came down the steps' Mr. Faber, without a word, picked up Louise as if she had been a baby and carried her away to the carriage. Louise first gasped with astonishment and then relaxed comfortably in his arms. How magnificently strong he was. He did have on overalls, but she did not seem to care at all about that.

"Plenty of cushions," said mother as she arranged them on the back seat; "that was very thoughtful of you, father."

Louise wanted to say so, too, but somehow she could not bring out the words. Her father climbed into the front seat and took the lines. It was a cold day, and the horses were eager to go, but he held them down, much to Louise's astonishment. That five-mile drive home had been another thing Louise had dreaded. Father was a dashing driver and usually let his team fairly skim over the ground. Ordinarily Louise liked to speed along, too, but now she was weak and miserable. She said to herself that father would never think how it would jolt her; yet they took every culvert and "thank-you-ma'am" as easily and as lightly as if they had had wings. She had not known that he could drive so carefully.

At home he drove close to the back porch.

"Sit still, please, until I unlock," he commanded.

Then he came back and picked Louise up again and carried her into the living room. It was bright and warm and by the stove stood Grandmother Faber's carefully preserved big rocker, piled high with pillows. Over it was Grandmother Faber's precious coverlet that Louise had always wanted to use. How vexed she had been when father would not let her! Now he put her into the comfortable depths of the chair and wrapped the coverlet round her. Mother came bustling in with some of the baggage.

"Oh, you dear old homey room!" she cried with girlish enthusiasm as she looked about her.

Louise had wanted to express the same feeling, but had not known how.

"Why, how clean everything is, father!" her mother went on. "Who helped you to do it all?"

"Nobody," said father. "Couldn't get anyone; did it nights."

An appetizing smell came from the kitchen.

"Chicken!" cried mother. "How lovely! Did you do that yourself, too?"

He nodded. "I didn't know what Lu could eat, but I thought chicken broth was as good as anytning."

"Father," said mother, taking him by the lapel of his coat, "you haven't once said that you were glad to see us. Are you?" she demanded in her gay, irresistible way.

"I guess so," said father sheepishly. "But I must put away the team."

When he came back he carried an armful of kindling.

"I moved a bed into the parlor," he said. "Thought maybe it would be easier for Lu than climbing stairs. I'll start a fire now."

Louise said nothing. Her voice ached with a desire to speak her appreciation, but she could think of no words. After her mother had tucked her in at bedtime, her father came into the room, ostensibly to look after the fire, and stopped for a moment by the bed. Louise hoped he was going to kiss her but all he said was, "Here's this bell. If you want anything in the night ring it."

She did not want to go to sleep. Things had happened so unexpectedly that she wanted to think them out; but she was tired and could not keep awake. Sometime in the night she was awaked by a noise in the room.

"Don't be frightened," said her father's voice. "I just came down to fix the fire." He was down twice before morning.

Louise dozed most of the next day in her grandmother's big chair. Her mother was busy, picking up the thread of her work again, and her father was equally busy, attending to tasks out of doors that he had been forced to neglect. After supper, while her mother was washing dishes, Louise went rather weakly into the improvised bedroom and brought back a brush and a comb and started to dress her hair. Her mother had not had a moment in which to attend to it. Her father put down his paper.

"I used to brush your Grandmother Faber's hair," he said, taking the brush and comb from her.

He put a pillow between her back and the chair and shook out her long hair.

"I'll hate to see you lose all this," he said and brushed it as tenderly as a woman would have done.

Those long, strong, steady strokes—soothing and restful they were! Who would have thought that his work-hardened hand could be so tender? Louise prayed for words with which to thank him, but she seemed possessed of a dumb spirit. She fairly hated herself for that dumbness as he helped her back to the big chair and put a hassock under her feet.

After that her father brushed and braided her hair every night. And just as quietly as he brushed her hair, he did numberless other things for her comfort. One day she chanced to remark that she beleved she could eat a grapefruit. The little town where they traded did not keep them: but two days later her father brought in from the mail box, where the rural carrier had left it, a good-sized package. She opened it and ofund a dozen fine grapefruit.

"Sent to the city for them," he explained briefly.

As the days went by Louise was was conscious of a deepening joy. Sometimes she caught her mother looking at her with a merry twinkle in her eyes Once she said as she stopped to kiss her:

"I believe our one birdling is really settling down into the home nest for the first time. O ducky dear, you are so precious to both of us!"

Somewhere near the beginning of the third week Mrs. Faber stood still in the middle of the room.

"I am of the opinion," she said, "that I have really caught up with myself again. Anyhow I'm going to play so and stop till supper time; and now I'm going to give your hair a good brushing. I haven't had a minute for it before, but father seemed to be doing a pretty good job."

Louise looked up with a queer expression in her eyes. "Let's leave it for father to do."

Her mother sat down on the edge of her chair and gently slipped an arm about her shoulders.

"I believe you like to have father brush your hair," she said.

"Yes," Louise answered.

Mrs. Faber smoothed the beautiful, shining mass, which had not yet begun to fall out.

"O little Robin Redbreast! Ordinarily when you see the father bird off singing by himself you might think he didn't caremuch for hs birdlings. But did you ever watch him carrying food to the little creatures?" Then suddenly she asked, "Have you ever told your father you liked him brush your hair?"

"No," answered Louise simply. "I don't know how; but—oh, I want to!" Without warning her head dropped into her mother's lap. "I never knew—I never dreamed—that father could be like this."

Then Louise began to laugh as unexpectedly as she had cried "Why mother, do you know that father hasn't kissed me once since I came home?"

"Of course not. He's shy on kissing. Child, he never kissed me till after we were married. He was afraid to."

That night, after she had gone to bed, Louise lay a long time awake. She had tried her best to say something to her father when he had combed her hair after supper and failed. Before she went to bed she had tried again to tell him how dear it was to have him do such things for her and had failed again.

"Has he been trying all this years to tell me how much he loves me, and has he failed just as I failed tonight?" she asked herself at last.

She was still awake when her father came down at midnight to tend the fire.

"Father," she called softly as he was about to leave the room.

He came and stood by the bed. She sat up and threw her arms impulsively round his neck.

"O father, father, I love you so!" she whispered. "Do you love me?"

"Well, I guess so," he said, "but you mustn't be uncovered like this. You'll take cold, and we can't have that."

He pushed her back on the pillow and tucked her in. His hand rested a moment on her forehead, but he said no more and did not offer to kiss her. Louise understood now, though; and she laughed as she lay in the dimly lighted room after he had gone.

"O dad, dad," she said softly to herself, "I've found you out at last! And some day—some day—you'll find me out, too."

WATCH YOUR ALFALFA SEED

Hardiness is one of the prime requisites of alfalfa in Canada. The planting of seed from a region known to produce a type of alfalfa unsuitable for Canadian conditions is to invite disaster.

We are informed that there has been lately imported into Ontario two substantial shipments of Argentine alfalfa seed—Numerous tests in many parts of Canada have proven this seed unsuitable for our use. This Argentine seed is required by law to be stained RED to an extent of ten per cent. For your own protection beware of ALL alfalfa seed carrying a red stain.
