Balloonists on Long Trail With Indian Guides.

Cochrane, Ont., January 3.—Lieutenant Walter Hinton, Stephen A. Farrell, and A. L. Kloor, Jr., the United States balloonists, who landed at Moose Factory on the Hudson Bay, on December 14, and who were first heard from yesterday, after they had been sought for weeks, are in excellent spirits, and apparently none the worse for their experience, according to latest reports received here.

Immediately on their landing a party of Indians were despatched by the Hudson Bay Company to the nearest telegraph office to notify the outside world of the safe landing. The Indians reached Mattice, Ont., yesterday.

The party of balloonists left Moose Factory on December 27, on their way to the railroad. Some three hundred miles will have to be traversed by dog team with Indian guides, and it is not expected that the party will reach Mattice, on the Canadian National Railways, before Saturday, January 8, at the earliest, as travelling in this manner is necessarily slow, due to the extremely cold weather and deep snow.

A night employee of the Canadian National Railway states that he observed the balloon going over Cochrane during a heavy snowstorm about midnight on December 13, being just visible and at a very high altitude.

The balloon party on their return journey will come down on the ice on the Missanabie River, eventually striking the Hudson Bay post at Mattice, Ont., on the Canadian National Railways, and start home by train from that point.

A personal interview with the balloonists is not until they near the railroad, and the information already secured is from the Indians who brought out to civilization the word of the balloon's landing.

Moose Factory is on James Bay, a subsidiary of Hudson's Bay, one hundred and eighty-five miles north of Cochrane. Moose Factory is near Moose Harbor, the proposed terminal for the James Bay extension of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, of which the first twenty miles from Cochrane north are now being started.

Moose Factory is a Hudson Bay Company trading post at the south end of James Bay, where the Moose River empties into the Bay.

Four months ago a seaplane with a party of Canadians, under Captain W. Roy Maxwell, flew from the Canadian National Railway line to James Bay.

"Uncle Cal," invited the parson to have Christmas dinner with him. The parson accepted, and the spread was magnificent—sweet potatoes and celery, cranberries and mince pie, plum pudding and a turkey so big yet so tender that the parson had never seen the like before.

"Uncle Cal, where did you get this wonderful turkey?"

"Parson," said Uncle Calhoun Clay, "when you preached dat wonderful Christmas sermon dis mawnin', I whah you go to get him?.... uh, no material matter."

Electric Light and Power Meeting at Brinston

On Wednesday evening Dec. 22, a public meeting was held in Gilson's Hall, Brinston, under the auspices of the Community Association of Matilda, to devise a means by which Electric Light and Power might be obtained for the residents of the County of Dundas and the adjacent country.

It is needless to say that the hall was filled with representatives from all the outlaying districts, including many business men from neighbouring villages.

The meeting was called to order by Dr. Collison, who in a few words stated the purpose of the meeting.

The principal speakers of the evening were: Mr. W. H. Casselman, M.P.P. of Chesterville and Mr. Beach of Iroquois, Mr. Casselman being the first to address the audience. Mr. Casselman stated that the use of electrical power throughout the Province of Ontario had become a necessity, not only to the urban centres but to the rural population, and that through an investigation being made of the water power of the Province it had been ascertained that there was enough surplus power being controlled by private concerns, also power yet undeveloped which if used would to a great extent help out the present situation, and with this end in view a scheme had been proposed by which these power could be purchased and developed and power could be extended therefrom to the rural population of the Province at a rate that would be within the reach of all.

The scheme as proposed is understood by the writer to be that the Provincial Government tax all water power in use to the extent of two dollars per. horse power, this amount to form a fund, and from the proceeds of this fund any corporation or private person using electrical power would receive a bonus of fifty per cent. of the amount charged per horse power, between thirty dollars per horse power and eighty dollars per. horse power; that is any person or corporation paying say seventy dollars per. horse power would receive a refund of twenty dollars, thus actually costing them fifty dollars per horse power, and in this way would tend to equalize the purchase price It is further proposed the Government grant substantial aid to the building of the high tention Lines and appoint a Power Commission, this Commission to appoint sub-commissions wherever power available throughout the Province, these sub-commissions to be located as nearly as possible at the terminal of the high tension lines and that these sub-commissions have the power to enter into a contract for the purchase of electrical power wherever available. It is also proposed that at the terminal of the high tension lines or transforming stations that low tension lines would be distributed over the rural section of the country the same as rural telephones are at the present time and that the price would be uniform throughout.

In conclusion Mr. Casselman spoke of the trek from the country to the city but thought in the near future the public would see the folly of their ways.

Mr. Beach of Iroquois, was the next speaker. Mr. Beach emphasized at some length the references that Mr. Casselman had made to the present use that was being made of electric power, and said that at the present time they had at their plant at Iroquois enough unused power to supply the County of Dundas and if necessary some of the neighboring counties. On being asked, Mr. Beach said at the present time they were utilizing some four hundred horse power, had a reserve of two thousand horse power and could develop more. Mr. Beach said that he could dispose of this extra horse power at the present time but would perfer to see his home district benefit from its use as he was a firm believer in the upbuilding of home industries.

A further discussion was engaged in by the audience to the end if one was to judge that the people are enthusiastic in their demands for electrical power and if aid is not forth coming from the Government there is likelihood a company will be formed and will take hold of Mr. Beach's proposition. For the present a committee was formed for the consideration of the proposition of Mr. Casselman and Mr. Beach. The names of committee as follows:—Chairman A. McGruer, Secretary ... retary D... A. T. Feared Young Men Are Drowned.

Two young men, Lorne McMillan, son of Mr. John A. McMillan, bridge tender at Mille Roches, and Norman Henry of Raymondville, N. Y., are believed to have been drowned on Thursday last while crossing from the Canadian side to Barnhart's Islahd in a small boat. McMillan was in the employ of Mr. Clarence Cowell, of Barnhart's Island, and was asked by Henry to row him across the river and back. They did not return to the Island and it is feared they were drowned. A pair of oars and a mitten were found on the South side of Cornwall Island on Tuesday, and yesterday the boat was found, but up to this time no trace of the men had been secured. The relatives of the men are dynamiting the river in an effort to bring the bodies to the surface.—Cornwall Standard.

Eighty-third Birthday Remembered.

A very pleasant evening was spent at the home of Mr. Lewis Swerdfeger on Thursday Dec. 30th, when his children and friends gathered to help him celebrate his eighty-third birthday, which celebration found them both hale and hearty. About twenty-five guests were in attendance. Of Mr. Swerdfeger's family there are eight children, all living and nineteen grand-children and four great grand-children. The children are Mrs. Sarah Schell, Ogden, Utah; Mrs. George Guild, Piedmont, Wyoming; Mr. Dexter Swerdfeger, Ogden, Utah; Mrs. Frank Fetterly, Chesterville; Mr. Willis Swerdfeger, Mr. Chesley Swerdfeger, Williamsburg; Mr. Thomas Swerdfeger, Gallingertown and Mr. Aden Swerdfeger Osnabruck Centre, who was unable to attend on account of sickness.

After partaking of a beautiful supper the evening was happily spent in social conversation, music, and singing, after which an address was read by his grand-daughter Miss Beatrice Fetterly.

Following is the address;—

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis H Swerdfeger;—Dear Father and Mother.

We, your sons and daughters, have assembled here tonight, to celebrate our father's eighty-third birthday. We are here to show our respect for your parental guardianship from our youth up. We are sure we all appreciate the kindness which God has shown in extending those years of influence over us. We ask you to accept this purse and gifts not for their intrinsic value, but as a token of the great esteem in which you are held among us. We wish God to preserve your life, that you may live to see many returns of the day.

Signed on behalf of
Your sons and daughters.

Misery Reaches its Apex in Cities of Soviet Russia

M. Armande, a native of Petrograd, gives in the Riga Rundshau the following appalling picture of conditions in his native city. "For three years a comparatively good harvest has benefited the Bolsheviki but now a catastrophe is facing Russia. The harvest has been a failure; famine is stalking through the country. The collapse of the railways following that of the waterways transportation system has prevented imports from reaching the city. The misery of the inhabitants exposed to the frightful cold, has reached its apex and mortality is terrible.

"These words are no exaggeration; matters have actually gone so far that Russia's former capital is nearing the end. The entire population of Soviet Russia has been reduced 10 per, cent., that of the towns 40 per cent., Moscow 45, and Petrograd 70.

"Famine and cold have been responsible for terrible ravages. In Petrograd the wooden pavements had been burned, wooden houses torn down and the planks sawed up for firewood, stone houses are falling into decay, bridges are in a dangerous condition; in fact only the inhabitants of the once magnificent Imperial City, but the devasted and neglected buildings themselves are drifting toward ruin

"Everywhere one sees ruin, dirt, decay. The people have no clothing save that made from rope, and while at one time their food consisted of horse and dog flesh; to day there are no animals left in the city, Epidemics rage unchecked; typhus, scurvey and other diseases are playing their part.

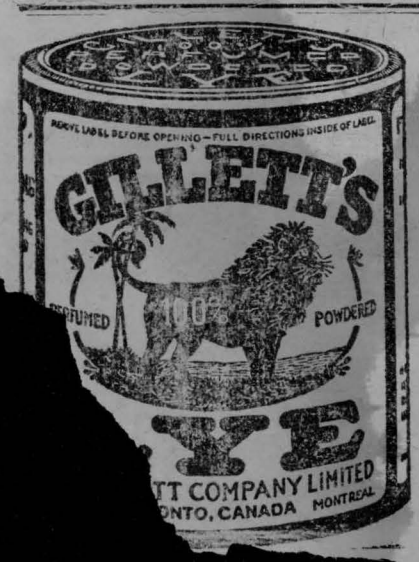
"Now that the railways can no longer be used, it is not even possible for the inhabitants to save themselves by migration. They are condemned to death and their existence has become extremely useless. In the workshops the temperature is two or three degrees below zero. Nothing is being produced or manufactured, for besides the cold, tools raw material and fuel are lacking.

Between ten in the morning and four in the afternoon, there is some life on the streets, as everybody is trying to buy food. For months the citizenry has been living on the sale of their last remaining possessions. People die in barracks and houses or, without sound, on the streets. Every evening carts convey corpses from the hospitals through the city.

"Coffins are rare, and since grave diggers must live, they burn the bodies and sell the coffins for use again. The struggle of one class against another continues, but even the workers, their wives and children are famine stricken.

"Only the leaders of the Communist party fare better. There are still Soviet institutions which have everything and where hunger is unknown. In Petrograd there are to-day wines and delicacies which are at the disposal of the commissaries especially those of the commission for fighting the counter revolution and speculation, a notorious organization that has flung its net of spies and informers over the whole city.

"The terrible business of the destruction of the weakest by the less weak is now beginning Friends, aimly connections, enemies are being denounced, sold or betrayed Domiciliary visits, arrests and revenge are destroying the weaker vessels while the stronger, by using what strength remains to them, are able as members of the Gorochovaja (spy organization) to keep their heads above water for the time.



German Spy System A Ludicrous Failure

In "German Spies at Bay," a book issued with the approval of the British War Office, we get what is perhaps the first authoritative and complete account of the machinations of the enemy in the British Isles in war-time. The author, Sidney Theodore Felstead, shows that there were few spies, and only one of them of first-class intelligence. He doubts if in the more than six years of the struggle Germany got a single piece of information out of England that it was able to put to practical use. On the other hand, it received much misleading information, provided by the British Government after the spies were taken into custody. Not only has the ingenuity of German spies been grossly exaggerated, but also their numbers. This war due to a sort of hysteria induced by sensational writers long before the war, and was heightened by the nervous actions of persons of known German birth. A man who knows his neighbors are looking at him suspiciously simply cannot help acting in a furtive manner.

With the exception of Carl Hans Lody and Fernando Bushman, who acted from patriotic motives, and were treated by the British as officers and gentlemen, every German spy was a moral bankrupt of sub-normal intelligence. Lody was executed in the Tower three months after the war broke out, so it is plain he did not have much time to serve his masters. Because he was recognized as a German patriot there was some talk about his sentence being commuted. But when the suggestion was made to the military authorities they strongly opposed it on the ground that he ought to be shot, and the fact advertised to create an impression on other spies. He met his death without flinching, and it is recorded that when the provost marshal entered his cell to tell him that his time had come Lody remarked rather wistfully: "I suppose you will not care to shake hands with a German spy? The British officer said: "No, I would not; but I will shake hands with a brave man."

Bushman was a young Brazilian of German origin, and landed in England in 1915 with a forged passport. He had been graduated from a German school for spies in Amsterdam or Rotterdam, and as he was a cultivated person, an unusually gifted violin player, and well supplied with money, he achieved a certain social popularity in the hotels in the West End of London. It was because of a sudden financial stringency that he fell into the hands of the authorities. He wrote to Holland for money and the letter was intercepted. When interviewed by the police he said that he was a salesman for a Dutch house, and was seeking orders for cheese, bananas, safety razors and similar bric a-brac. When in France he said he had sold picric acid, cloth and rifles. It seemed a weird combination, and suspicion was further roused when he said the name of his employers was Diercks and Co., of the Hague.

Now it happened that Diercks and Co. were known as receiving agents for German spies in England, and the admission sealed Bushman's doom. The British detectives had come across the trail of The Hague firm a short time before, and in a manner that illustrates the low intelligence of the German spies. Early in 1915 the censors had noted several orders for large quantities cigars going to this Dutch firm. The extraordinary feature was that the orders were all sent from British Naval ports. It was no secret that British sailors are not great cigar smokers, cigarettes and pipes being more agreeable to them. So the two suspects who had sent the orders were picked up. They proved to be a big bearded Dutchman named Janssen and another Dutchman named Roos. They were arrested and questioned separately. Jenssen said he was a seaman, and said that the firm had employed a sailor as cigar salesman because he could not find another berth.

He said he knew little about the firm, but that it certainly had no other representative in England When told that the address was that of a member of the German secret service Janssen turned pale, but denied all knowledge of the fact. He also insisted that he did not know Roos when confronted with him. When searched each man was found in possession of a little bottle of perfume, which proved to be an invisible ink. Eventually they confessed, and both were executed. Their code was simple to the verge of childishness. They would use the name of a cigar for a class of battle-ship, and thus reported the number of such ships they could discover at each of the ports they visited, information useless to the Germans even if it proved accurate. Had they been a little more than half-witted they would have sent their messages from London, where the ordering of huge quantities of expensive cigars might not have seemed so unusual a proceeding. Altogether there were more than thirty spies arrested and convicted in England. Eleven were shot one was hanged, one committ six had death sentences commu imprisonment, and the others were sentenced to shorter terms. The German Government paid them little, but overpaid them.

Will Go Bone Dry On February First

Ottawa, Jan. 4—The provinces of Nova Scotia, Manitoba, Alberta, and Saskatchewan will go bone dry on Feb. 1. This, it is understood, is the actual date set although the official proclamation will probably not be issued for a day or two.

The Dominion proclamation follows on the plebiscites recently taken in the four provinces on the question whether importation within their territory of alcoholic liquors shall be permitted unless within restrictions set by the Provincial Government.

Since the prohibition order-in-Council was cancelled a year ago, there has been a large trade in liquor imported for personal use. Provincial enactments could not touch such trade unless the importer sold the liquor. In such a case he would be liable to fine under the Provincial law. The provinces were able to control sale, but not importation.

So far as Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia are concerned, importation for personal use will be illegal on and after Feb. 1. Only such importation will be permitted as is provided for in prohibitory legislation enacted by the particular province affected.

Any infraction of the law in this respect will render an offender liable to a fine for the first offence of not less than $200 and not more than $1,000 and, in default of payment, to imprisonment for any term not less than three months and not more than six months, and, for each subsequent offence, to imprisonment for any term not less than six months and not more than twelve months.

Ontario votes in April, and the Yukon Territory in July, whether or not they likewise shall go "all dry."

Cynical.

He (cynical): "Not always. I once knew a fellow who did it, and the girl refused him."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

"Who's dead?" asked the stranger, viewing the elaborate funeral procession.

"The bloke inside the coffin," answered an irreverent small boy.

"But who is it?" the stranger pursued.

"It's the mayor," was the reply.

"So the mayor is dead, is he?" mused the stranger.

"Well, I guess," said the small boy, witheringly. "D'you think he's having a rehearsal?"

Have Plenty of Music in your Home this Winter

There's nothing equal to Music for making the long, cold evenings of winter pass by pleasantly.

How the kiddies love music! They revel in it.

Where there's plenty of life and melody the young people want to stay home.

And what an unfailing source of joy music is to the older folks, whether they participate by playing an instrument or merely sit back and listen to the sweet strains produced by others in the family.

The piano, the player, the phonograph, the violin, the banjo, ukelele, flute, etc.—all are good.

All the instruments of modern melody offer you their services. See them and select from them at your nearest music store.

A Promise

It Was Well Kept and Did Great Good

By EVERITT P. CLARKE

I.

About the middle of the nineteenth century, when the wild and woolly west deserved the appellation, a girl in a frontiersman's cabin was getting supper in anticipation of her father's coming home from attending to his daily duties. She was about fifteen years old and seemed to be made up principally of arms and legs. Nevertheless her face was pretty, and she gave promise after passing the filly age of making a comely woman. While she was standing over the cook stove she heard a clattering of horse's hoofs without, which grew rapidly nearer, and in a few moments a horseman galloped up to the door and threw himself from his animal, which he struck on the haunch and sent on its way.

"Hide me! For heaven's sake, hide me!" he said to the girl.

His haste made it plain that there was no time for explanation, and the girl, moved by his piteous condition,

"FOR HEAVEN'S SAKE, HIDE ME!" HE SAID TO THE GIRL.

led him to an upper story of the house and put him in a closet. Then, going below, she waited breathlessly for what might happen. But a few minutes elapsed before half a dozen men broke into the clearing and came toward the house. All passed on but one, who pulled up at the open door and called out to the girl:

"Seen a man go by here just now?"

"Yes."

"Which way did he go?"

"I heard his horse gallopin' into the timber over there," pointing.

The man started off and joined the others. After awhile the fugitive came downstairs. He was not over twenty-five years old and good looking, though his face was ashy pale. He went up to the girl, took her hand in his and said feelingly:

"You've saved my life."

"What did they want with you?" she asked.

"They wanted to hang me."

"What for?"

"Well, I'm the slickest gambler in the territory. I went into the settlement down the creek and cleaned 'em all out. Besides, I've done more shootin' than all the rest of 'em put together. They decided that I am too desperate a character to have around, so they concluded to git rid of me."

The girl listened to this with a sober countenance.

"What makes you look so sorry?" asked the man.

"I don't like to think of you as a gambler."

He seemed touched by her interest in him. "What difference does it make to you whether I'm good or bad?" he asked.

"Reckon I'd rather save a good man from the vigilantes than a bad one. I suppose I should have given you up."

The man looked at her intently for a few moments, then, "But you didn't," he said. "Would you have given me up if you had known I was a gambler?"

"I don't know that I would."

"Would you rather I wouldn't be a gambler?"

"Yes."

"Or a shooter?"

"Yes."

"Little girl, give me some of that supper you're cookin'. I'm hungry and need sustenance."

The girl, who had been frying some bacon and potatoes, put a part of them on a plate and set it on the table. The young man sat down, and she poured him a cupful of coffee. He had somewhat recovered his nerve and ate heartily. When he had finished he rose and, pouring out on the table a heap of money that he had won by gambling, looked at her as much as to say, "Will you take it?"

She shook her head.

A look of disappointment crossed his face.

"What can I do," he asked, "to repay you for saving me from the vigilantes?"

"Stop gamblin' and shootin' and all the other things."

He made no reply to this, but seemed to have been deeply moved. He stood looking out through the open door in the direction the vigilantes had taken and listening. Presently he said:

"I reckon I'd better git out of here while I have a chance. They'll overtake my horse and, seein' no rider on him, will know that they've passed me. They'll come back for me."

He took the girl's hand and looked earnestly into her eyes.

"Say, little gal, if it hadn't been for you I'd be swingin' now. You own the rest of my life. For you I'll stop gamblin' and shootin' and the other things. Goodby."

He bent down, kissed her, then struck out for the timber on that side of the clearing from which he had come.

II.

In a gambling house a man was dealing faro to a motley crowd, few of whom possessed some claims to respectability, while the most of them were roughs. A young clergyman, whose calling was denoted solely by a white necktie, entered and announced that services would be held that evening in the building commonly used for a dance hall and he hoped that all in the room would make it a point to attend. No one paid any attention to him. Presently his attention was arrested by a girl of twenty who entered the room, walked up to an elderly man who sat at one of the tables where a game of poker was being played and, placing her hand on his shoulder, said persuasively:

"Come away, father."

The clergyman watched her, looking into her face inquiringly. When she spoke he started. Memory seemed to be working within him. Then suddenly something was recalled, and his face lighted up.

"You go home with your daughter," he said to the man the girl was trying to get away, "and I'll play your hand for you."

Every one at the table looked at the speaker wonderingly, for a clergyman to gamble, even for another, was remarkable. The man he addressed looked up at him curiously and saw something in the resolute face that led him to obey. He rose from the table and gave the clergyman his seat. The girl, too, looked at the latter curiously, then took her father by the arm and was leading him away when the clergyman asked:

"How much have you lost?"

"All I had—$1,200."

The father and daughter passed out, and the game went on. There were three men at the table besides the one in the white necktie, and every one of the three was a card sharp. There were old tricks and new tricks practiced by the sharpers. The clergyman seemed a bit unfamiliar with the new, but thoroughly versed in the old. However, he had not played long before all schemes were alike familiar to him. The game was simply one of wits against wits. When a player was detected in cheating he returned his winnings. He was not abashed, and no one objected. As the game went on a number of persons stood about the table watching it, especially interested in the clergyman's sleight of hand. Slowly, but surely, the pile of bank bills and gold pieces before him increased. It was not only his skill in card manipulating that attracted attention, but that one of his calling should be so versed in the ways of card sharps. At last he called a halt and counted his winnings. They figured $1,260. Shoving the $60 over to the others, he scooped the rest into his handkerchief and, rising from the table, said:

"Gentlemen, I trust you will all be at the services this evening."

What five years before had been a clearing had now grown into a town. True, there was but one street in it, but the clergyman, leaving the gambling den, pursued that street, stopped before a house and knocked at the door. It was opened by the girl who had led her father from the game.

"I have brought you," said the latter, "the sum you told me you had lost to those card sharps."

And he emptied his handkerchief of its contents on the table.

Both father and daughter looked at him with the same continued astonishment.

"Do you remember some years ago," said the clergyman to the girl, "saving a man's life from a vigilance committee?"

"I do."

"He was to repay you by abjuring his evil ways and trying to be of some use in the world."

"You are that man?"

"I am."

"You are no older looking than then, but you are different looking, else I would have known you."

"I have kept my promise. I find I can do most good among the people with whom I was familiar in those days, now horrible to me, when I was a card sharp and a desperado. It is to you I owe my reformation as well as my life." Then, turning to the father of the girl, he added: "The men with whom you were playing are cheats. You are no match for them. What they took from you dishonestly I got back honestly, for we all knew that it was not cards we were playing, but sleight of hand with cards."

The fame of the clergyman who had beaten card sharps at their own game spread abroad and curiosity to see him brought him a large assemblage at the meeting he had announced for the evening. Many were moved by his eloquence. Before he left the place he had reformed it, and with him as his wife and coworker went the girl who, by reforming him, reformed many others.

An Anchor of Security

LIFE INSURANCE stands for the continuity of the home.
The home is the essential factor of the nation—the hope of the world. Anything that works for the continuity of the home, its influence must be immeasurable. The centre prop of the home is the provider, the wage-earner. The home is built up around him. If he fails the home is shatrered. It no longer holds tegether. But life insurance steps in when the provider is called away, and takes his place, to some extent at least.
The Sun Life Insurance Co. has a plan that will fit your needs.
The premiums are low and the profits large.
