Arrest Cardinal Boy on Murder Charge

A 17-year old Cardinal native, Ronald Reid, was Tuesday afternoon charged with the slaying of Benjamin Spellerman, Cardinal merchant, who was found beaten and shot in his own store on August 23rd.

The arrest was made at 3 o'clock at his home in Cardinal, Police Chief E. "Ted" Smith laying the charge. Inspector Robert H. Wannell, of the criminal investigation branch, Ontario Provincial Police, Toronto, was also in on the arrest.

Inspector Wannell said the arrest came after much methodical and conscientious police work. The investigation was headed by Chief Smith, the Inspector said, "and I was just assisting".

At the time of the finding of the badly beaten body of the merchant, no mention was made of a gun, but police stated, following the arrest, that they were dragging the St. Lawrence River for a gun, believed to be a 38 calibre revolver.

A Morrisburg diver has been called in to aid in finding the weapon.

Wednesday, Police Chief Smith flew to Toronto with the accused's personal effects and clothing. They were turned over to the Ontario medico-legal laboratories.

The funeral took place in Dunbar Presbyterian Church on Wednesday, August 24th at 2.30 p.m. Service was in charge of Mr. Fred Millar, whose sermonette was based on the text "I Am the Ressurrection and the Life". Hymns sung were "Unto the Hills" and "Abide With Me". The choir sang the anthem "After".

On the occasion of their Fiftieth Wedding Anniversary, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar A. VanAllen of Aultsville will be at home to their friends on Tuesday, September 6th from 2 to 5 p.m. and from 7 to 9 p.m.

50th ANNIVERSARY FOR MR. AND MRS E. A. VanALLEN

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar A. VanAllen, well and favourably known residents of East Williamsburg, will mark a happy event on Tuesday, when they will celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary.

Mr. VanAllen is the son of Mr. James VanAllen and his wife, Martha Shaver, both deceased, while his wife is the daughter of the late Mr. Charles Wells and his wife, Adelaide Gallinger.

It was on September 6th, 1905 that Edgar A. VanAllen and Maude Ethel Wells were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents. Officiating minister was the late Rev. Mr. McAmmond.

Their attendants were Percy Wells and Bessie Robinson, both of whom are since deceased.

All their married life was spent in farming at East Williamsburg until Mr. VanAllen's retirement a few years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. VanAllen, who are members of Aultsville United Church are both enjoying good health and it is the hope of their many friends that they will be spared for many years yet to enjoy their retirement.

They have four daughters,— Mrs. Sanford Wells (Lois), Aultsville; Mrs. Edwin Froats (Doris), Farrans Point; Mrs. Carroll Morris (Eva), of Potsdam, N.Y.; Mrs. Rex Robertson (Joan), Moira, N.Y. There are also 11 grandchildren.

HYDRO SHOULD CONTACT BUSINESS PEOPLE FIRST

A suggestion was made to us this week that we should urge Ontario Hydro, when they are ready to commence negotiations in Morrisburg, to make first contact with the business people to be disturbed, rather than the home owners, as was done in Iroquois (withone exception).

The suggestion was made by a Main Street businessman, who is also a holder of considerable other property. Whether or not he desires to remain in the reconstructed Morrisburg, will depend to a large extent on what financial arrangements can be made with Ontario, in regard to his business relocation.

This, to us, seems only fair, in as much as Hydro must deal eventually with businesses, large and small, and there is no valid reason why they should exert pressure on the small business operattor, who is not in a financial position to fight in the Ontario courts for his rights as a "free enterpriser" in this vaunted land of "free enterprise".

With his suggestion, we are in very hearty accord, but we hardly think it possible that Hydro will listen to any urging, by us, or by anyone else, on this project. Their publicity branch has made much of the very satisfactory arrangements made on other projects, but on the St. Lawrence Project, there have been more dissatisfied customers than any other kind.

NOT CANADIAN HOSPITALITY

Russian farmers and farm experts visiting Canada to learn more of our methods of farming, and incidentally, what we refer to as our Western democratic way of life, were roundly booed and insulted in Winnipeg this week.

This is certainly not an example of our Canadian way of life, and reflected no credit on those responsible for the exhibition.

It must be even more reprehensible to Westerners (Canadian Westerners that is) who take great pride in their vaunted western hospitality.

NOTE TO READERS

Would you please check the label on your paper this week! We have corrected our mailing list to Thursday, September 1st. If there are any errors, we will be glad to correct them, but if your subscription is in arrears, will you please bring it in, or mail it in as soon as possible! It pains us to mention such a crass subject as money to our loyal readers, but we find it a necessary prop to operate a successful business, and we also find it extremely difficult to carry on without it. While we are on this disagreeable subject, we might note that many advertisers call in by telephone, and then promptly forget all about their monetary obligation. Worst offenders in this group are the secretaries of church groups, who through pressure of business, or possibly other activities, seem to forget quite often.

ANNE HIRST
Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hirst: I am a bewildered and unhappy fiancee because for nearly a year I have kept my man waiting. I am afraid to marry him. My mother is badly handicapped, besides being one spoiled woman, and she would have to live with us, for I cannot pay board for her elsewhere.

"She has always objected to any man I knew because she hates the idea of my marrying. My fiance is patient and wonderfully kind, but she doesn't get along well with him and I know it is mainly her fault. Wouldn't it be harder for him after we marry? I really am frightened at the prospect.

"I must take that chance, though, or end my engagement. We love each other deeply, but I can't ask him to wait any longer. (He is 31 and I'm 26.) He insists we shall all manage somehow, but have I the right to expose him daily to my mother's irritating ways and her foolish whims? I value your opinion, so please give it.

IN LOVE BUT AFRAID"

Your fiance is old enough to see your mother as she is yet so eager to marry that he is unafraid of the consequences. Why not go ahead? He would not offer her a home unless he believed you three could live agreeably together.

I suggest that you tell your mother you have fixed your wedding date. When she sees your marriage is inevitable, she will reconcile herself to it. Self-centered as she is, she should be grateful you have found someone to love you and take care of you. In the circumstances, I think you have the right to ask her to be more tolerant toward him.

In planning your living arrangements, provide a pleasant room for her, furnishing it like a sitting-room with her books and radio. When you are settled, encourage her friends to drop in often, and otherwise see that she finds other interests than herself. After a while, you may find a private family living nearby who can give her the little care she needs; many people are glad to add to their income this way.

Neither of these suggestions is ideal, of course, yet how else can you marry at all? Your fiance wants a home of his own, and he does not want to move into your mother's house. Go along with the idea and take it for granted that things will work out well. If each of you will be a little more thoughtful and charitable, you will probably find that the trouble you anticipate will not develop.

MOTHER IS RIGHT

"Dear Anne Hirst: I am 15, and am in love with a boy whom I've been going with for eight months. I have found out now that he has a bad reputation and comes from a questionable family, so Mother wants me to break up with him soon.

"I met another boy some time ago, a nice one whose people are respected. He's in the Navy now and will return in September; Mother wants me to go out with him then and drop the one I care for. What should I do?

MISERABLE"

I go even further than your mother. Break up with this boy at once, making any excuse you please. At 15, you evidently do not realize how vital to your social life is your good name; if you keep on dating this young man you cannot help but share his reputation, and that might take a long, long time to live down. After you send him away, date any boy your family approves.

If you let your feeling for your present beau overcome your judgment, how do you know the Navy lad will want to date you when he comes home next month? A well-born young man with the right instincts selects nice girls to take out, and if this one learns of your association with your friend he and his people might pass you up entirely. Be smart.

Inviting an older relative to share your home is never a welcome idea, yet if it must be done there are emotional adjustments which intelligent people make that can prevent anticipated discord. Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. What should I do at the dinner table if someone asks me a question just as I am conveying a bite of food towards my mouth?

A. Most certainly don't put the food into your mouth and then attempt to answer the question. It is much better to return the fork to your plate, answer the question, and then resume eating.

Q. If the bride is being married in a traveling dress, what should the bridegroom wear?

A. An ordinary business suit, or one that is appropriate for traveling, with perhaps a little white flower from the bride's corsage in his lapel.

Q. Should a woman walk on a short distance, or should she wait with her escort while he pays the taxi fare?

A. She should wait with her escort.

Q. At an engagement announcement party, who gives the toast?

A. The father or a male relative of the girl should rise to propose her health and that of her fiance. It would be nice for the father to say, "To the health and happiness of my daughter, Mary, and to my future son, Bob."

Q. When one is smoking at the table in a restaurant, and there is no ashtray, is it all right to use a plate or saucer for the ashes?

A. Only an ill-bred person would do this. It is much better to ask the waiter or waitress for an ashtray.

Q. When entering a night club with her escort, should a girl go first to the table with him and then excuse herself while she goes to the powder room?

A. No; she should go first to the powder room while her escort waits for her somewhere near the entrance to the dining room.

Q. Is one obligated to send a wedding gift to a friend who is marrying for the second time, if one sent a gift for the first marriage?

A. This is optional: you may or may not send a gift, as you wish.

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

by Gwendoline D Clarke

There has to be a first time for everything and last week we had it. That is to say for five days we had the privilege of taking care of our grandson without the help of his parents. Daughter was away to camp with her troop of Girl Guides and Art was busy on the transportation end of the affair. So . . . we had Dave. He was asleep in his cot in our room when his parents left and we wondered what the reaction would be the next morning. We need not have worried. Dave accepted the situation and took everything in his stride.

It was very hot and humid . . . as if I need to tell you . . . so we decided that for once in his life Dave could go without shoes and socks as his mother did when she was young. The lawn was hard and dry and we wondered if his feet would be too tender to stand it. But they did. Part of the time Grandpa was building a stone garden walk. Dave, nearby, amused himself by getting in and out of a small wash-tub into which Partner had poured a pail of water. The supply didn't last too long as Dave got a couple of tobacco tins and busily baled it out. It didn't matter how wet he got as his clothing was reduced to a pair of training pants. Poor little chap — he usually settles down so well at night but for several nights there wasn't a breath of air and he was naturally restless. So on two occasions I took him out of his cot and we sat on the front steps together to cool off. After that I put him back in his cot and he went right ff to sleep.

Strange how children will find their own favourite playthings. My little two-year-old niece in England has lovely toys but her pet plaything was a small jar half filled with mixed buttons. She never tired of tipping them out and picking them up again. Dave's mania was to see how many stones he could pick up off the driveway. Every time he came into the house one chubby little hand would be grasping a fair-size stone—and woe betide us if we tried to take it away! A set of farm animals was another joy—two horses, two cows, a pig and a sheep. He sat in his high chair and played with them and at meal-time the animals had to be fed as well as Dave. We made it a rule that the animals must be put back in their box when he went to bed, with the exception of one. He was allowed to take either the pig or the sheep with him, firmly grasped in his wee hand.

Of course our supremacy as caretakers ended when Mummy and Dad appeared on the scene. At that age—not quite two—grandparents just don't count if the parents are around. So for that reason we were glad to have Davey to ourselves and to know that we could manage him without any trouble should an emergency arise. Of course when a child is in a strange place constant vigilance is necessary. So when I was busy in the house grandpa took over. We couldn't just put Dave outside and leave him to amuse himself. There was always the chance he might wander off to the road or be busy picking up stones in the lane when a car drove in.

Now we have a new job on our hands . . . breaking in another dog—actually an eight-months-old puppy—partly German Shepherd breed. Robbie, our Welsh Corgi, is a nice little house dog but as a watch-dog he doesn't amount to much and we have the idea that a good guard dog on a farm is a necessity these days. Rusty the Second is that all right but he needs quite a bit of training. So far he has only to bark and people keep their distance. We had a "Rusty" once before so this dog has to be Rusty the Second. Robbie, of course, is frightfully jealous but the cats don't mind him at all. In fact Partner said he witnessed the funniest thing last night he has seen for a long time. Rusty and Robbie were having a wrestling match outside, half playing, half fighting with a good deal of growling mixed in. Black Cat Joe was sitting on top of the woodpile looking on. All at once Joe raced over to the dogs, jumped in between them and broke it up. The dogs were so surprised they stopped immediately. Then Referee Joe calmly walked away and went back to the woodpile!

Well, I really think this is the happiest morning since my return from England — and only because it is pleasantly cool. In the Old Country I was never warm enough but I can certainly take the cool weather better than the heat, especially when it goes on day after day. It is exhausting to say the least. Sometimes I think there should be a law against working in temperatures over 90 degrees. Who was it said — "Only mad dogs and Englishmen lie out in the midday sun."—or words to that effect. Here's hoping we don't get another heat wave for a little while. Some jobs are quite impossible in hot weather.

SYSTEMATIC

She was in bed and her husband was making her a cup of tea. "I can't find the tea," he called out.

"I don't know what could be easier to find," she answered. "It's right in front on the pantry shelf—in a cocoa tin marked matches."

Add flour mixture to creamed mixture part at a time, combining thoroughly after each addition. Her Books Sold By Tens Of Millions

When the woman who had thrilled our grandparents with the magic of her pen died, the cry went up, "Who Was Marie Corelli?" Everybody was eager for the truth that lay behind the mystery built up around this queen of best-sellers.

But it was not easy to discover. One newspaper stated that Marie Corelli had been found one wintry night, a blue-eyed baby with £10 pinned to her shawl, on the doorstep of a certain Doctor Charles Mackay, who had adopted her.

Another announced the finding of a birth certificate proving without doubt that Miss Corelli was the daughter of Thomas Cody, a Marylebone labourer. And yet a third paper entered the fray to publish an account of a romantic meeting in a Stratford-on-Avon church between Doctor Mackay and Maria Coralie Gonsalez, a beautiful Italian countess. Hence the name "Marie Corelli," they suggested.

Marie herself always declared she had been adopted by Mackay. But a lifelong friend insisted that the doctor was the novelist's legal parent.

Research has proved this last statement true, but although Marie was born on May 1st, 1855 (thus the centenary of her birth fell this year), Mackay couldn't marry her mother — an Englishwoman named Mills — until 1861, after his first wife died.

From a letter found after Marie Corelli's death it is clear she did not know the truth about her birth until 1889, when the decease of her father revealed the facts to her.

But she managed to keep the secret for the rest of her life, putting busybodies off the scent not only by declaring she was an adopted child, but by deducting ten years from her age to make the story more convincing.

While yet in her teens Marie started to write, but she could not find a publisher. One editor even declared that fiction-writing was obviously "not her forte." How furious he must have felt a few years later when the novels of Marie Corelli burst upon a startled world.

Like a dazzling meteor this unknown writer sent her works soaring into the blaze of publicity and became the famous author whose sensational books were the talk of the world.

Queens, princes, prime ministers and bishops, all were tremendously impressed by the thirty-one novels she wrote. Their subject-matter ranged from disembodied souls to absinthe addicts in the Parisian underworld, and her imagination was so powerful that everything she touched was charged with rich emotion.

Is it any wonder her world sales could be reckoned in tens of millions, and her earnings £10,000 for each book?

But behind this astonishing success story lay years of grinding slavery for the sake of two worthless men. One was Marie's philandering father, Doctor Mackay; and the other his rascally son Eric.

As soon as these jackals realized what a money-spinner they had in the young Marie they allowed her to support them in idleness for the rest of their days

Eric was a particularly nasty specimen; fat, flabby and lazy, he had been a sponger all his life. Blind to his vices, his stepsister financed his shady affairs, and permitted him to escort her to the various social functions she attended.

On these occasions Eric displayed such devotion towards her that tongues began to wag. It was whispered they were lovers and even secretly married. When, later, Eric showed his true colours by boasting that it was really he who had written all Marie's books, she did at last turn against him.

Among Marie's many admirers were the Prince of Wales (afterwards Edward VII) and Mr. Gladstone. When the latter visited her one day he brought Mrs. Gladstone, who was obliged to sit outside the house in Earl's Court in an open carriage for over two hours while her husband chatted and laughed within.

Marie Corelli was presented to the Prince of Wales when she stayed in Germany. He gave a dinner party in her honour at which he commented upon the smallness of her hands. "Out of small things what wonders arise!" he exclaimed admiringly.

This was followed by a luncheon in which Marie was introduced to "my son, George, who is well acquainted with your books."

When, eventually, the deaths of the two Mackays relieved her of much responsibility Marie moved to Stratford-on-Avon. Here she became so great a legend that more people went to stare at her house(with its cascading window-boxes, than to Shakespeare's birthplace.

Coloured postcards of her were on sale in all the shops, and one tourist was overheard to boast that she had seen "Shakespeare's daughter"!

But Marie was no heroine to the townsfolk. She threw her weight about too much and was not above telling the shopkeepers how to arrange their goods. She drove around in a tiny carriage drawn by Shetland ponies, with a footman perched up behind, and even bought a gondola to glide upon the Avon with a gondolier specially imported from Venice.

To hit the headlines was ever Marie's aim, and she went to great lengths to keep her name before the public. "Nothing succeeds like excess" was her motto and she kept inventing more fables to keep the interest from flagging.

She refused to be photographed, and all likenesses of her had to be faked. She announced that she belonged to a secret religious sect not allowed to worship in church and that she could speak Hebrew fluently. There was no truth in either statement.

But so well did her self-advertising work that if she visited the Memorial Theatre the audience rose to its feet as though she were the Queen; and when the poetess, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, called upon her, she knelt to kiss Marie's hand while her male escort stood behind her with bowed head.

Little wonder the novelist was not amused when the following limerick was circulated:

"There was a fair Siren of Strat,
Who narrated the Sorrows of Sat.,
She'd a gond. on the Av.,
She was everyone's fav.,
Though she used Shake's trustees as a mat."

Perhaps one of Marie's most ardent fans was Sir Thomas Lipton, and she often went yachting with him. But during the first World War this friendship landed her in a spot of bother.

At her request Sir Thomas sent her quantities of sugar for jam-making and the incident was reported to the police. The result appeared in prominent headlines: MARIE CORELLI CONVICTED OF FOOD HOARDING. She was fined £50 with twenty guineas costs.

When Marie Corelli was fifty-one she fell in love with a well-known artist who was already married. For her it was a deeply emotional affair, but to him no more than a passing flirtation. She was blissfully happy until he dropped her like a hot coal. Then she poured out her soul into her private journal. This was published, after her death, under the title: "Open Confession. To a Man from a Woman."

During this affair she was startled one night by shots in her garden. A young man was arrested, the smoking revolver still in his hand. He had fired through the window of Marie's music-room . . . "only to see Miss Corelli and bring her out to speak to me." He was found insane, and Marie sent his mother a generous cheque.

In January, 1924, Marie Corelli had a heart attack and, for four months, sat propped in a chair. One day she asked for a window to be opened so that she might hear some children singing, and as a result she contracted congestion of the lungs.

As actress Ellen Terry placed a wreath of lilies upon the grave of the woman whose books had fascinated so many she was heard to whisper, "God bless the darling."

"COMES OF AGE"—Princess Margaret holds her pet dog as she poses for an informal 25th birthday portrait in the garden of Clarence House, London. In royal circles, a princess "comes of age" when she is 25.

"PRETTY PLEASE"—Yank's photogenic catcher, Yogi Berra, is caught with an angelic expression on his face as his prayers are answered with a neat snare of a pop foul at New York's Yankee Stadium.

How to Pick A Name for Baby

Strange as it may seem, there are more ways of finding a name for baby than by calling a family conference, thinking about characters in films and fiction, or by sticking a pin in a list.

For instance, what a Hindu infant will eventually be called often depends upon the brightness of a flame.

The mother's choice of name for her offspring is usually approved. But if her husband desires something different, each suggestion is written on a separate slip of paper.

On the twelfth day after the birth, two lamps are placed over the two names. And the flame which burns more brilliantly denotes which "label" the child shall bear.

In Egypt, three pieces of paper resting under three wax candles are used in a similar ceremony. But, in this case, one of the three names under consideration is always that of a god or martyr.

And the candle which lasts the longest bestows a name on the little one.

Mohammedans have for centuries employed an even more unusual system, which prevents any possibility of argument.

The five most favoured name suggestions, inscribed on separate squares of paper, are placed between the pages of the Koran, the sacred book of the Mohammedans.

Then after an interval a priest is invited to bless the book, extract the final choice and reveal it to relatives assembled round the child.

More curious still is a custom observed by the Ainos, inhabitants of Northern Japan, who do not name a child until he or she is five years old. When at last the auspicious day has dawned and the father gravely announces his decision, he also explains that he needed time to ponder over the problem!

In some Japanese regions a baby's name is changed four times, with irregular periods intervening. This wily plan is adopted to confuse evil spirits who may be plotting to harm the youngster.

In German rural districts, too, parents are perpetually on guard against adverse influences, and they always pick a fresh name for an infant who is stricken with serious illness.

It is generally believed that the new choice will bring better health to the unfortunate mite.

European gipsies declare that a baby should never be named after a dead brother or sister. According to ancient Romany lore, parents who are foolish enough to do so are inviting bad luck.

The Chinese have the oddest notions of all when selecting a name for junior.

In certain provinces if asked how many offspring he has, the Chinese father of a boy and a girl replies, "I have only one child."

This extraordinary viewpoint is explained by the fact that baby girls are regarded as inferior to boys. Therefore, they are not considered worthy of a proper name, but are simply referred to One, Two, Three or Four, according to their order of arrival on earth.

Perhaps you have never made buttermilk biscuits with bran. Here is a recipe for this combination which you and your family will like.

BRAN BUTTERMILK BISCUITS

½ cup ready-to-eat bran
¾ cup buttermilk
1½ cups sifted flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon salt
⅓ cup shortening

Soak bran in buttermilk. Sift dry ingredients together Cut in shortening until mixture is like coarse corn meal. Add soaked bran; stir until dough is well blended. Turn onto floured board and knead lightly. Roll or pat to ½-inch thickness and cut with floured cutter. Bake on lightly greased pan in preheated oven (450° F) about 12 minutes. Makes 12 biscuits, 2½ inches in diameter. Note: if sweet milk is used instead of buttermilk, omit soda and increase baking powder to 3 teaspoons.

EYE TO THE FUTURE

Before China was engulfed by the Red tide, a family named Lum — grandfather, father and twelve-year-old son — lived in poverty in a tiny compound. The grandfather was crippled by arthritis and unable to continue his share of work in the rice paddy, so the father decided to liquidate him. He trussed him up in a big market basket and made for the shore of the Yangtze River. En route he met his son who cried, "What are you doing to my poor grandfather?" "Quiet," whispered the father. "By lowering him into the stream we will end his suffering and at the same time lighten our load." "I see," nodded the son, "but be sure to bring back the basket. I'll need it for you one day."

Clothes Line Gave Clue To Permanent Waving

In a small village in the Black Forest of Germany one summer afternoon many years ago a small boy sat on his garden step watching his mother hurriedly collecting the family washing off the clothes-line.

"It's going to rain, Charles," his mother warned. "You must come in."

The dreamy little boy sat on. The shower came. The hot sunshine followed. Then, to him, a remarkable thing happened. Watching the hempen clothesline, he saw it gradually tighten until it became so taut that it caused the two young trees, to which it was tied, to bend over towards each other.

The discovery enchanted him. He took a small ladder and let down the line. The trees sprang back into position and the line jumped into a series of kinks and curls.

He told no one about the incident. It was not the only thing of this kind that he had noticed. On the way to school he had observed that, around noon, the twigs and leaves in the forest were straight, but in the early morning dew they curled and waved.

Eventually, no doubt, these discoveries would have passed from his mind, if one afternoon, later in the summer, he had not played a game of rounders on the village green. Boys were called away for milking, so an urgent invitation was sent out for girls to take their places. He had four sisters, but none, he knew, was available. He had to explain, rather shame-facedly, that they were having their hair put into curlers.

"Pooh, fancy putting their hair into curlers!" mocked a little girl, whose mass of golden curls was the pride of the village. "My mummy just holds my head in the steam of a kettle and it curls right away."

Thus was the final link established in young Charles Nessler's theory which led to his great invention of permanent waving in 1905 — fifty years ago.

As soon as he could save enough money he came to London and took a hairdressing shop at 47, Great Portland Street, in the West End of London. Few hairdressers believed that hair could be permanently waved and money was hard to get to finance his work. He lived by working for wigmakers and making artificial eyelashes.

Hardships followed his first experiment. He gave a demonstration to leading London hairdressers and it ended in a near riot. The model was injured, the machine damaged and Nessler himself was manhandled. Hairdressers were alarmed that what they had seen would kill Marcel Waving—with specially designed irons — upon which their living at that time depended..

Like Marcel Grateau, the French hairdresser who invented this form of hair waving, Charles Nessler forgot to patent his process of making straight hair curly. Had he done so, said Mr. Justice Eve a few years later in the courts, his invention could never have been copied or infringed in any shape or form. And Nessler might have died one of the richest men who had ever lived.

Baffled and enraged by his treatment at the hands of London hairdressers, he set to work improving his machine and offering permanent waves to rich women at $30 a time. Some of his best backroom boys left him to develop the invention on their own lines, one of whom was Eugene Suter, the millionaire owner of Eugene Waving. Another was Peter Sartory, who invented machineless waving many years later.

Then another tragedy overtook Charles Nessler. The 1914-1918 war broke out and as he had forgotten to take out naturalization papers, he was interned. But after a brief period, he was released and allowed to go to the United States. After the war his possessions in London, his shop and the invention, were seized and sold for almost nothing to the landlord.

From the other side of the Atlantic he saw his great invention revolutionizing hairdressing in Britain. From a mere handful of ladies' hairdressing salons, thousands of shops opened throughout the country and permanent waving gradually became world-wide with customers for it running into millions.

Today in Great Britain the industry employs some 150,000 people. In Canada and the United States it is three times as large. There are now some 100 systems of permanent waving and all the methods—hot, machineless, tepid and cold, were invented here.

Although Charles Nessler became wealthy and successful in the United States (he died there a few years ago), he never quite overcame a sense of being persecuted, the result of his early days in London. In his later years he became obsessed with the fear that humanity was losing its hair and making his great invention worthless.

He attacked scientists who said that baldness was hereditary and he vigorously denied that baldness had anything to do with age.

"If baldness were hereditary," he wrote, "women would be at least equally subjected to it as, with one or two exceptions, the transmission of traits from parent to child alternates and the father's characteristics are found rather in the daughter than in the son."

He was tireless in collecting statistics about hair. He found that the normal adult produced four and a half ounces of hair annually — and some produced up to seven ounces. He studied people who lived to be a hundred and proved that they had grown as much as thirty-five pounds of hair during their lifetime. The hair produced from a single root in the average human being during lifetime was fifty feet in length.

Although he was not a scientist he derided medical opinion when it claimed that baldness was the result of infection through disease. He pointed to the tramp who is seldom without luxuriant hair growth. He dismissed dieting as a means for safeguarding the health of the hair.

"Hair," he wrote, "is the physical expression of that inner urge in all of us to self-protection and mankind is unconsciously losing this urge as it makes life safer, more assured and more organized."

Baldness was the result of the failure of hair to reproduce itself and this was due to a breakdown in the body's hair-making machinery.

"The hair gives the first indication of bad health in the majority of cases, if we would only watch for it. A healthy person always has good hair, even though athletes often go bald, but athletes are strong often without being healthy," he contended.

Was It Coincidence

Strange things happen when Fate takes a hand in matters. Or was it just coincidence that caused two cars to collide at a busy intersection in Johannesburg the other day?

One of the drivers was Mrs. Jessie McLeod, who was on her way to the city centre to visit her sister-in-law, Mrs. Rose McLeod. As she climbed out of her dented car she stared in astonishment at the other driver — the sister-in-law she'd been on her way to see!

A few years ago, a New Zealand woman, Mrs. Thomas Askew, of Dunedin, arrived in Hamburg to search for her son. He had been reported "missing" three years previously, in 1944, after his 'plane was shot down over Germany.

Mrs. Askew spent four fruitless months scouring German records for any trace of her son. Then she came across a vital entry in a hospital record at Dortmund.

It related to a New Zealand pilot, name unknown, who was admitted to the hospital with serious injuries after being shot down while on a raid. The final note read: "Discharged to military police," followed by the date.

With the help of police officials, Mrs. Askew traced her son to three different concentration camps. The last one in which he had been was captured by the American forces and all the prisoners had been freed.

Convinced that he was alive, she enlisted the aid of the American Army of Liberation and was given no fewer than nineteen cases of Australian, British and New Zealand airmen who had been released but whose identities were unknown because they were suffering from lapses of memory.

Still determined to find her lost boy, Mrs. Askew came to Britain. But her son had not been admitted to any hospitals here; nor had he been taken to America. She then discovered from the War Office that the Anzac men had been shipped back to their native land. She set out at once for Australia.

Another two months elapsed during which seven men suffering from loss of memory were traced. But there was still no sign of Mrs. Askew's son, Dennis, aged twenty-six; and his mother finally had to return to her home in New Zealand.

As she stepped into the house she saw some letters that had been delivered during her lengthy absence. One of them had been airmailed from Sydney a few hours after her departure.

As soon as she'd read it she ran for the telephone to call a taxi. "Dear Madam," it said, "We have been able to trace a man whose description fits that of your son. This man's identity is totally unknown, but he is believed to be either Australian or a New Zealander and is at present in Government employ in Canberra."

Three days later a 'plane with Mrs. Askew on board touched down at the Australian capital, and within a few minutes Mrs. Askew, weeping bitterly, swept an embarrassed young man into her arms. She had found her son! He still had no idea of who he was, but now, safely back home, he has recovered after a series of operations.

Even more dramatic was a search that took just over five years. Here truly Fate took a hand in the matter. A young American infantryman was believed to have been killed in action in the first world war; but there was no trace of his body. By December, 1920, his father, Lorne S. Aberman, decided to go in search of his son's body. He went to Europe and scoured cemeteries and records in vain.

From the State Department Mr. Aberman learned that some 2,000 American soldiers were still listed missing. Many of them were believed to be suffering from loss of memory or were dead and untraced.

In November, 1923, almost five years after his son vanished, Mr. Aberman arrived in France with his son's dog, an Alsatian. "If I do not recognize my son," Mr. Aberman declared, "his dog will."

In a remote French village he learned that there were some "strange" Frenchmen in the district, derelicts of the war who had lost all trace of time and place and their own identities.

The searching father went from man to man and found that mostly they were Belgians or Germans. Then, in Alsace-Lorraine, in a small village, the dog gave a sudden, eager bark one morning.

Jerking himself free from the leash, he darted through a crowd of people and jumped up excitedly at a man with a badly disfigured face. He was blind in one eye, one leg had been amputated below the knee and four fingers had been lost from one hand.

But the dog knew his master!

The whole tragic story was then revealed. The young man, hideously scarred by the war, did not want to return home but settled in a community where many men were just as badly scarred as he was and where he would not be subjected to the curious stares of strangers.

Surgical treatment soon restored young Aberman to a semblance of what he had been. And when his faithful pal died in 1933 a grave was made for him and a simple tombstone erected to commemorate the Alsatian who had found his master.

The habit of reading is the only enjoyment in which there is no alloy; it lasts when all other pleasures fade.

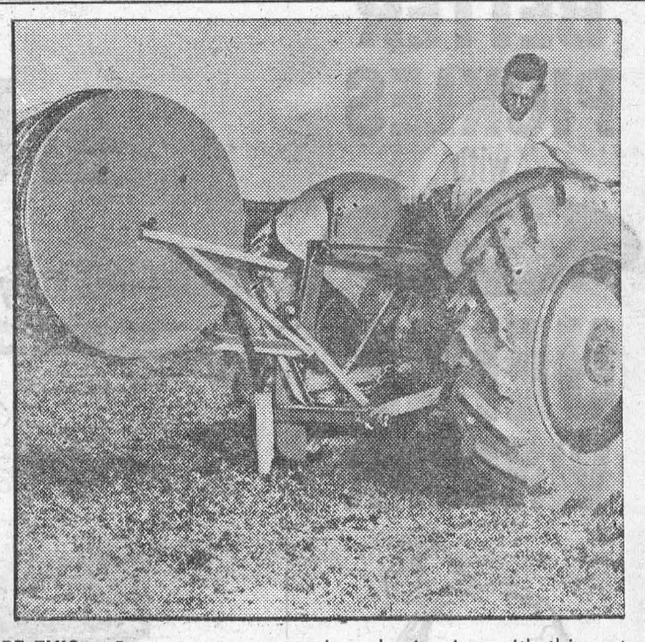
TALL TALE — Iowa isn't the only place where the corn grows tall. Murray Geiger of Churubusco, Ind., farmer, looks up at a cornstalk more than 10 feet high. Recent heat and humidity teamed to produce a bumper crop.



PIPE THIS — Farmer prepares to lay plastic pipe with this automatic device on a plot of land where the labor-saving mechanism is manufactured. Disposable reels holding up to 600 feet of piping are attached to the machine, which is constructed for a three-point hitch, but which is adaptable to any farm tractor, according to the manufacturer. Operating at tractor speed, it is designed to uncover a trench, lay pipe 14 to 20 inches deep and back-fill after itself, at the rate of 100 feet per minute.

IN MEMORIAM

BARKLEY-In loving memory of our dear son, Stewart Barkley, who passed away September 6, 1945.
Ten long years have passed away
Since our great sorrow fell.
The shock that we received that day
We still remember well.
We never knew what pain you bore,
We did not see you die—
We only know you passed away,
And did not say goodbye.
We often think of you,
Your name we oft recall;
But all that there is left to us
Is your picture on the wall.
—Sadly missed by Mom and Dad, Son, Arnold, Sisters Desta and Arlene and Brother, Ralph.

DILLABOUGH — In memory of a dear husband and father, Elgar Dilabough, who passed away Aug. 21, 1951.
There is no parting from those we love,
No distance can divide.
For today, in memory's garden
We still walk side by side.
Each dawning a thought of him,
At evening tide a prayer,
For the hearts that love him,
He always will be there.
—Always remembered by Wife, Ella and family.

DAOUST — In loving memory of a dear husband and father, Joseph Daoust, who died August 30th, 1953
I have only your memory, dear husband,
To remember my whole life through.
But the sweetness will linger forever
As I treasure the image of you.
—Ever remembered by his Wife, Goldie and Children.
