Impaired drivers

WINCHESTER — Winchester OPP reported a busy Easter weekend when it came to nabbing drunk drivers. Three drivers were charged with impaired driving and another two were given twelve hour license suspensions. Another two drivers were caught driving while their licenses were suspended.

Parked car hit

WINCHESTER — A car slammed into a parked car on Main Street west of Alexander Street about 2 a.m. Sunday morning. Winchester OPP said Robert Morrison of Winchester was eastbound on Main Street when he drove on to the south sidewalk and struck a parked car owned by Brian and Dawn Hutt of Stittsville. Morrison was thrown from his car and taken to hospital by ambulance where he was later released. He had minor injuries. Both cars were severely damaged. Morrison was charged with careless driving and for having liquor readily available.

Village closer to OPP sub-station

CHESTERVILLE — Chesterville is moving a step closer to getting an OPP sub-detachment 14 years after its own village constable was phased out of service.

Deputy Reeve Roger Cole said he expects Winchester OPP to be operating out of an office at the village community hall in "six to eight weeks".

Sgt. McWade of Winchester OPP said the office, which will be provided by the village, will be the first step towards community-based policing in Chesterville.

He said the office would enable the police to work out of Chesterville and give the police a more visible presence in the village.

"From there we can interview somebody who's a witness of a suspect in an offense," he said.

Cole said the added police presence could cut back the vandalism that occurs in the village.

He said having the police work out of Chesterville "is certainly going to make the police force more conspicuous."

"You're going to get the feeling that they're around and closer by."

Last summer vandalism was serious enough that concerned residents took the matter to council.

Council then responded by having an OPP Constable come in and give tips on how to improve the neighborhood watch program.

McWade added that if the idea of an OPP office works out in Chesterville and in other communities in Ontario, then the OPP will consider assigning police officers to specific village beats.

Cole said council will submit a written request to Sgt. McWade to have the office approved by the OPP.

McWade said he will endorse the letter and pass it along to the Commander of OPP District 11 for approval. District 11 encompasses all of Eastern Ontario, including Ottawa.

McWade told councillors last Wednesday night he is optimistic the village's request will be granted.

He said community based policing is part of a nationwide trend returning to the "old concept of a police beat."

For now, he said, the idea was to get the police doing more foot patrols.

"By getting out of the (patrol) cars and doing more footwork, we're looking to get closer to the community, McWade said.

He told council that the increased police presence in Chesterville should help prevent crimes such as vandalism or break-ins.

The village will provide the OPP with an office in the community hall. The police will share the office with an Ontario Ministry of Correctional Services probation officer who uses the office once a month.

Cole said the office will need some renovations but the cost would be "nominal". The renovations had already been requested by the probation officer.

In order to qualify for the first step in community based policing, the village must provide a furnished office with a desk and phone.

Cole said the office already has a desk and phone so it will cost very little to implement the service.

Colin Abbott, who runs Car-O-Line Autos on the corner of Queen Street and King Street, was a victim of a break-in and repeated vandalism last summer.

He said he welcomes the idea of extended police service in Chesterville and the use of foot patrols to keep crime in check.

He said he hopes the extended policing in Chesterville will include more police protection at night. "Our major problem is vandalism and it occurs at night," he said.

Abbott said if there was a police officer on foot patrol at night vandalisms would probably be cut back by 95 per cent.

But he said Chesterville didn't have a serious crime problem. "A lot of it, the vandalism, it's just people being too boisterous."

Chesterville firefighters were called to Maple Ridge Senior Public School Thursday after a couch in the school's nursing room was set on fire. Above, firemen from the department discuss the mini-blaze by the room's outside exit while a fan, put in the doorway by the department, airs the room out. Police have identified a suspect in the fire but haven't yet decided what action to take. The room received minor smoke damage and heat damage.

Arson suspected in Maple Ridge fire

MAPLE RIDGE — Quick action by Chesterville firefighters and school staff stymied what could have been a dangerous fire at Maple Ridge Senior Public School here Thursday.

Firefighters arrived at the scene shortly before 1 p.m. after receiving a call that a fire had started inside the school. Police say the fire was deliberately set.

They have identified a suspect and are now determining what action to take.

A couch in the nurses room of the school had caught fire and was covered in flames when firefighters arrived, about three minutes after receiving the call.

"The boys went in and brought it out and it was still flaming," said Chesterville Fire Chief Ross Casselman.

If the fire had burned for another five minutes, it could have caught onto the ceiling and spread into an adjoining workshop full of lumber, he said.

The small blaze caused smoke damage in the one room and also melted fluorescent ceiling light covers, he said. "The heat was getting pretty good in there," he said.

About 12 village firefighters responded to the fire and the Morewood Fire Department also brought in a tanker truck for assistance.

Casselman said firefighters didn't know how bad the fire was when the call came. All they knew was there was a fire inside the building.

Casselman said it was "scary" the few minutes before arriving at the scene, not knowing what to expect.

"When you get a call like that, you just don't know what you're getting involved in," he said.

"You respond as quickly as you can. Especially when it's a school, you put a little bigger effort into getting there."

Students were evacuated from the school until the smoke was cleared from the building. When firemen left the scene about 2 p.m. the one fire department fan and the school fans had most of the smoke cleared out, he said.

School principal Wyman Barton said students were brought into the school at 2 p.m., for their final two classes of the day.

Barton credited staff members for their "quick action" which helped keep the fire to the one room. Staff members sprayed fire extinguishers into the room and then closed the door so the fire would have a limited amount of oxygen to burn.

"It could have been very serious," he said. The staff reacted "very quickly and very well."

"I'm grateful that no one was injured and that it was contained to one small room."

He said the school was also fortunate it was such a warm day Thursday. It was no problem keeping the students outside for the hour, he said.

But Barton doesn't think Thursday's fire and a fire which burned down a barn near the school late January are an indication of a dangerous trend in the area.

"(They are) just two different situations and I don't see it as a situation that...we would have to worry about on a daily basis."

Sgt. Jim McWade of the Winchester OPP detachment, said the fire is still under investigation and police have identified a suspect. The youth is a student at the school.

"We've identified the individual responsible and we're trying to determine the best action for this individual," he said Tuesday.

He said the incident is not connected to a fire which destroyed a barn owned by Eric Ball, southwest of the school January 31.

McWade said police are continuing their investigation into the barn fire. "We've identified two individuals who have knowledge of the incident and its still under investigation."

McWade also said he doesn't believe the two fires are part of a dangerous trend. "It just happens," he said. "Kids have played with matches before and it has gotten out of hand."

It is believed that the fire at the Ball barn may have been accidentally set by two youths playing with matches. The barn was valued at between $4,000 and $5,000.

Area waste recycling resurrected

Yves Cossette

CHESTERVILLE — Not all waste may have to be wasted if the recycling plans of a local resident gets the endorsement of local politicians.

Claude Helder, a Boyne Road resident wants to start a recycling program for Chesterville, Winchester and Winchester Township. He's taking his proposal to Chesterville council, in April.

He said recycling has become necessary for the area because the dump near Winchester will be reaching its capacity in a few years and will have to be closed.

"We have to do something in order to keep our dump sites to the point where we're not going to get overrun and have nothing," he said.

Helder added it could get very expensive if in a few years local residents had to ship all their waste to a more distant dump.

Chesterville councillor Shirley Coons said Helder had approached her with a request to appear at the next council meeting to make his proposal.

Helder said he as approaching all three municipal councils; Chesterville, Winchester and Winchester Township; to enlist support of his proposal.

He wouldn't say what kind of support he was looking for, but he said he needs a lot of customers in the township and two villages to participate in the scheme to make it viable.

He couldn't come up with any numbers but he said he was told by Winchester Township that a viable recycling program would have to encompass all of Dundas County.

But Helder said a county wide operation would mean he would have to hire more people and buy more trucks to haul the waste.

He said he would rather start locally and gradually expand outwards.

Helder said his two sons now operate a dump truck service for him. He said he works as a truck driver for a firm in Morewood.

"I don't have enough income to make it (dump truck service) a full time business, but with recycling it might make it worthwhile to run the business myself with my son," he said.

Helder proposed to recycle paper, cardboard, glass, steel, aluminum and anything else that's worthwhile.

He said he has a number of prospective clients who are willing to recycle the waste for him including a printing plant in Thorold.

He admitted though that locally many firms willing to recycle material don't pay enough per truck load. Helder said he shipped waste from Ault Food's in Winchester to a place near Ottawa ten years ago, but wasn't being paid enough for shipping the waste.

He also said the demand for recyclable waste fluctuates, because of frequent gluts.

He said he has several containers for storage on his property, but a longer glut of recyclable material would limit his capacity to store waste.

"Once we get it started, it'll be slow going, but I think somebody's yet to make an effort to start somewhere," he said.

BERWICK — There could be some smoke as Finch township and Finch village make another attempt to hammer out a new fire protection agreement next week.

Finch township and Finch village officials will be back at the table Tuesday to try to reach a new fire protection agreement between the two municipalities.

Finch village offers fire protection for the south end of Finch township in exchange for use of the township dump by its village residents.

The village is asking for more money for its fire protection because of a rise in cost of fire equipment and additions it has made to its department.

CHESTERVILLE — A gun once used by Chesterville's village constable will likely have its final resting place at the village's Heritage Centre just across the street from Community Hall.

The hand gun, which was recently transferred to the OPP for safekeeping, was donated by council last Wednesday night to the Chesterville and District Historical Society.

Reeve Jim Cook said he had approached the historical society and asked them if they wanted the gun. "I felt it was a part of the heritage of the village," he said.

He said the only obstacle to transferring the gun to the historical society's Heritage Centre was getting official approval, to move the gun.

Sgt. McWade of Winchester OPP said the only formality needed to transfer the gun to the Heritage Centre was to have it "deregistered" with the RCMP.

The gun would have to be made unusable "forever" to have it deregistered, he said.

The chamber of the gun will have to be welded to the frame, and then "it will then just be a hunk of metal."

Along with the gun, a Webley Model 4, 38 calibre, council also donated a few other items used by the village constable such as his handcuffs and his billy club.

The village constable was phased out of use in February, 1975 when the OPP took over policing Chesterville. The gun, however was left in the community hall for over a decade until earlier this month when council became concerned that it might not be safe there.

The gun was transferred for safekeeping to the OPP until council decided in what way to dispose of it.

Jack Cross, a member of the Chesterville and District Historical Society said the society would welcome the gun so long as it was unusable.

"We would certainly have to remove the firing pin," he said.

The society's board will probably pass a motion at its next meeting to accept the gun, he added.

The gun, handcuffs and billy club wouldn't be displayed all the time. He said the historical soceity usually puts on its displays with some type of historical theme.

He said, for example every year on Remembrance Day the society puts up a display of items relating to war at the Heritage Centre. He said the village constable's equipment would be used in the same way, provided there's a theme to the display.

Drain trouble
Karl Pelletier, a resident of Faubert Street in Chesterville asked council last Wednesday night to help him deal with the flooding in his backyard.

Quick solution

CHESTERVILLE — A Faubert street man received a quick response to part of his request to Chesterville council to help him solve drainage problems at his home.

Work crews cleared out blocked drains on Faubert Street Thursday morning after Karl Pelletier asked council last Wednesday night to help rid him of flooding in his front yard.

"The following day they came and cleaned out the openings for my culvert", Pelletier said Monday. "I can't say if it's a direct result of the meeting or not."

He said the timing of the work crew's arrival may have been coincidental because mild weather made it necessary to clean out the drains before the flooding became worst.

But Pelletier's more serious backyard flooding won't be dealt with until council has a chance to look over the situation, said Reeve Jim Cook.

Cook said council would have to look at the situation in Pelletier's backyard and other yards in the Faubert Street subdivision before deciding what to do.

"We promised that council would look at the yard when the ice and snow was gone," he said.

Cook had advised Pelletier during last Wednesday's council meeting not to do anything about the flooding until council looked at the problem.

He also advised Pelletier against using drainage tile as a solution to the flooding. Cook said drainage tile doesn't work effectively in winter conditions.

Pelletier said the flooding in his back yard only began last fall. Although he wouldn't say what might have caused the flooding, Cook said in council that Pelletier's two closest neighbors had higher lots which may prevent his back yard from draining properly.

Pelletier said he and his family have lived on Faubert Street for five years and up to last fall never had any drainage problems in his backyard.

He said the flooded portion takes up to five meters of his lot on one corner and tapers off to a metre at the other corner.

Pelletier was reluctant to lay blame for the cause of the flood in his backyard. He said he hoped council would be able to help him resolve the matter.

Dora Dillabough, a neighbor of Pelletier's said she was aware of the flooding problem her neighbor had.

She said she didn't have any flooding problems on her yard, but thought her lot was as low as Pelletier's lot.

Scouts involved in trees for Canada

CHESTERVILLE — With some Boy Scout groups involved in a paper recycling program, in part to protect our forests, they plus other scouting groups from Prescott, Cardinal, Irqouois, Morrisburg, Williamsburg, Chesterville, Winchester, Kemptville, Oxford Mills, South Mountain and Spencerville are embarking on the annual Trees For Canada program.

Ron Pyl, St. Lawrence District Trees For Canada co-ordinator recently described the program to all district scouting leaders. He said the national program began in 1972, and since that time over 35 million trees have been planted coast to coast and increasing at a rate of 2 million a year. In the St. Lawrence district he said we are into the fifth year of the program with an average plant of 6,000 trees per year.

Pyl said the program does a number of things: it helps beautify Canada and provides a renewable resource for future generations, members of the organization, (Beavers, Cubs, Scouts, Venturers and Leaders), receive practical training in conservation and reforestation and will see the results of their work for years to come.

Pyl said Trees For Canada is also a fund-raising project. Youth members go door to door canvassing for pledges on a per tree planted basis. Each member will be involved he said, in the planting of 40 trees on May 6.

Mr. Pyl said 70 per cent of the funds raised will be used locally to assist each participating group improve their respective programs. They will be used to subsidize camps, purchase tents, train leaders, etc. Some of the money is used to support International Scout programs designed to help Scouts in Third World Countries learn about "village technology" so they can help their families and communities. Projects such as fish farming, planting trees on the edge of the Sahara and learning trades are a few examples that were described.

Pyl said the results of a successful "Trees" program sees scouting members "learn by doing". And he said it teaches everyone to be concerned not only for themselves, but for their country and for those less fortunate around the globe.

Pyl reported that groups in Grenville county will be planting their trees on property along the service road, east of Highway 16. This will be done through the co-operation of the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources. The groups situated in Dundas County will plant on a piece of property north of Williamsburg, and will be assisted by the South Nation Conservation Authority.

Quack grass awareness week

EMBRUN — This spring marks the beginning of a quackgrass awareness campaign that organizers hope will create a greater understanding of what has been described as Canada's most underestimated weed.

The campaign, "National Quackgrass Week," will consist of a number of activities all coming to a peak during the week of April 3, 1989.

Participating locally in the program is Rejean Gregoire, manager of La Co-Operative Agricole in Embrun.

"Quackgrass is a very serious problem," Gregoire explains. "Every year it robs Embrun farmers of thousands of dollars in lost yield. It's estimated that overall in Canada, farmers may be losing $200 million annually to the weed," Gregoire says.

That loss is the result of a combination of factors, Gregoire says. "Many farmers aren't aware of how damaging quackgrass can really be, some are unaware of the latest information on control methods and still others have resigned themselves to accept quackgrass as an inevitable part of farming."

But campaign organizers hope to overcome as many of these problems as possible. Quackgrass can be effectively and economically managed, they contend, which is the main point they hope to make during this spring's campaign.

Some of the activities scheduled as part of National Quackgrass Week are educational meetings, quackgrass literature distribution through ag-products retailers and mailing of new material to newspapers, farm publications and radio stations.

Supporters hope that focusing the attention of the farming community on the quackgrass problem will create a higher level of awareness of technical and educational resources available to farmers.

Farm women organize lobby group

Yves Cossette
Record Staff

CRYSLER — Organized farm women across Ontario united March 21 to form an umbrella lobby group aimed at promoting women's issues in agriculture.

Dorothy Middleton, of Crysler and one of six regional directors with the Ontario Farm Women's Network said the new organization was born out of 17 separate women's organizations across Ontario.

She said Farm Women's Network "will act as a voice for the farm women of Ontario. Every farm woman in Ontario can join."

She said the group plans to lobby on a wide variety of issues such as farm education for women, child care and family law.

She said plans to deal with education for women in agriculture pleased her. "One of my great pushes is education for farm women."

Middleton said she favored the introduction of agricultural courses that were gender oriented. She felt this was needed because most women who wanted an education in farming feel intimidated in the male dominated courses. She wants to lobby for courses that will specifically cater to women.

Carol Rock, the secretary-treasurer for the new organization said, the Ontario Farm Women's Network was partly funded by membership fees and federal government grants from the Secretary of State Women's Programs.

The actual three day conference held from March 20 to 22 was sponsored chiefly by the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food, the Ontario Women's Directorate, and the federal Farm Women's Advancement Programs.

Middleton said she was optimistic the new lobby group would have considerable clout at federal and provincial levels of government.

Middleton said a lot of people doubted that the farm women would be able to emerge from the conference united.

"They had some extremely good speakers to start them off, looking for strength, looking for action," she said. "And they (said) they were going to be a very active organization."

Formed out of seventeen smaller groups, Middleton said, the conference was able to bridge the gap between the different groups, languages and product divisions.

Middleton said even before the farm women's groups across Ontario had united they had considerable clout.

She said women's groups were responsible for farm women getting salaries and pensions. "Farm women are very active," she said.

Middleton works on a dairy farm with her husband just outside Crysler and has in the past actively pushed women's issues.

Workers picket home

WINCHESTER — A spirit reminiscent of the '60s was present in Winchester on Saturday as protesters carrying placards and chanting union songs marched through the rain-soaked streets to confront their employer at his home.

Over 60 protesters for the Dundas County Association for the Mentally Retarded braved the weather to bring their cause to public attention and the attention of the director of the DCAMR board George McGowan.

McGowan appeared overwhelmed by the presence of 60 strikers at his door. However, he accepted their petition and agreed to talk to them.

McGowan said he had gone to the limit with his latest offer of a 4.5 per cent wage increase and would budge no further because he is unable to get more funding from the Ontario government.

McGowan astounded union president Rejeanne Lacroix and other workers when he said he was not sure why the workers were on strike, adding he did not think it was because of money. He went on to say that he doubled if there was one person in the crowd who was earning only $6.71 an hour - the wage the strikers are claiming the average group home worker is paid.

Brenda Fraser, a certified social worker, told McGowan she earns $6.49 an hour or about $13,000 a year.

Lacroix and Steve Backes, the local CUPE representative, feel that McGowan should resign his position as director of the association.

"McGowan hasn't a clue as to what is going on," said Backes. "He is on the bargaining committee. He should realize what these workers make."

If McGowan does not resign because of his poor handling of the situation, Backes added, then he should at least step down to show the government that something is wrong with the system.

The provincial government is currently in the process of de-institutionalizing the mentally retarded because most can function normally in the community with little assistance.

Backes said the grievances with funding are province-wide. Currently, three associations are on strike and five more are considering strike action. The only solution Backes can see to the strike and other potential strikes is for the government to step in with increased funding.

The Dundas workers do appear to be in for the long haul and the protest Saturday was a way for them to boost their spirits as well as keep their strike in the public eye.

Spirit-boosting also took the form of an Easter party that the workers held prior to the march. There was face painting and egg decorating for the children and petition signing for the adults.

As well, cheers rang out through the crowd as union leaders read out the donation list with unions such as the Carleton University Teachers' Association and the workers of the Regional Municipalities of Waterloo and Niagara making donations to the strike fund, ranging from $100 to $500.

In addition to lost wages, the 33 DCAMR strikers are concerned with their clients' treatment at the hands of the "scab" According to one of the strikers, John (who did not want his last name mentioned), a female resident of one of the group homes was taken to hospital last week with frostbite after one of those working during the strike left her outside unattended.

Lacroix was also concerned about the rumor that those crossing the picket lines, most of whom are unqualified and unaccredited, are being paid more to keep the group homes operating than the 33 workers were before they went out on strike about nine weeks ago.

McGowan denied that "scabs" are being paid more money and getting perks such as transportation costs.

Home levelled

A fire about two kilometres south-east of Dunbar Sunday levelled a two-storey home valued at $65,000. The fire is being investigated by the Ontario Fire Marshall's office which is treating the blaze as suspicious.

Fire in Dunbar under investigation

DUNBAR — The Ontario Fire Marshall Office is investigating a "suspicious" fire that destroyed a two-storey house Saturday night.

"We're treating it as a suspicious fire," said Gene Szabo, an inspector with the provincial fire marshall's office. Szabo is investigating the blaze of a house on Weegar Road, located southeast of Dunbar.

Morrisburg OPP requested the assistance of Szabo in determining the cause of the fire which started at about 8:30 p.m.

The Ontario Fire Marshall Office is only called in to assist in investigations dealing with fires involving a fatality, gaseous explosions, damage in excess of $500,000 or where arson is considered, said Szabo.

The latter is the case in this fire, he added.

Eight Williamsburg firemen battled the fire but were unable to save the building. The house, which was owned by Brian Elliot, was insured for $65,000, Szabo said.

The house was "completely engulfed in flames" when the firemen arrived, said Fire Chief Lyal Kehoe. The firemen spent about two hours extinguishing the fire.

There were no injuries.

Jimmy Wise, a resident of Chesterville, had been planning to move into the house shortly. Wise had been moving some of his belongings into the house on Saturday, according to Szabo.

The house was also broken into Saturday afternoon, Szabo said.

With the house totalled, there is little physical evidence to work with in determining the cause of the fire, he said.

Szabo said he hopes to have the case wrapped up in three or four weeks but added it could take closer to two or three months to decide how the blaze was started.

Glen-Stor-Dun Lodge to be replaced

CORNWALL — Construction of a new United Counties home for the aged to replace the existing Glen-Stor-Dun Lodge here could start as early as this fall.

The City of Cornwall has agreed to buy the home site, and after the agreement is signed between the city and counties, the project will be ready to proceed.

Counties clerk treasurer Raymond Lapointe said it may be too optimistic to hope for a construction start this summer. But he said the project could be started by the fall.

County councillors gave the project the go ahead last week, despite questions over what type of outreach services will also be provided with the home.

The province has promised $5 million for the construction of the home for the aged and another $3 million for outreach services for the elderly in the three counties.

"I don't know what's going to happen there," Lapointe said about the outreach program Monday. But he said the program, which will involve ways of providing elderly care in their own home areas, won't be implemented until next year.

The counties will be hiring a co-ordinator to combine all the studies done on the needs of the elderly in SD&G into one study before a decision is made on services.

The co-ordinator is being hired at the request of the province, which is to provide a maximum of $45,000 for the person's wages.

Lapointe said the co-ordination of the studies should take less than a year.

Probably the only complaint right now is with the speed things are moving at, he said.

Township agreement

But township reeve Donald Shane said last week the trade off between dump use and fire protection for the township should be kept the same. The township shouldn't have to pay more for fire protection, he said.

"It seems like Finch village wants quite a bit more money than we usually pay them other years."

Under the present agreement, the township pays the village fire department an hourly wage for time spent fighting fires and also pays it a standby fee.

He said if the village wants more money for its fire protection, they should get more money for the use of their dump. "I guess they want more money, and I think we should have more money for our garbage too," he said.

The two sides may have to work out individual rates for fire protection and use of the dump and just charge each other according to the amount each service is used.

"I don't know just how we're going to come out at it. I think what we're going to have to do is pay them so much for their fire protection and we'll charge them so much for their garbage disposal," he said.

The cost of disposing waste is going up as well, he said. Operating the landfill site for the township and village of Finch last year cost $28,000, he said. "This garbage is an awful expense too."

He said the village's request for extra funds may indicate the village is too small to support a fire department. "I think their town isn't big enough to look after the fire truck."

The township has already had one meeting with the village over the fire agreement, but wasn't able to reach a deal.

Finch village Reeve Lynden Hough couldn't be reached for comment on the negotiations. Village councillor Barry Brownlee was reluctant to comment on the agreement before the two sides met again.

"It'll be straightened out once we sit down," he said. "We've never had too many problems" working out a deal.

The village has invested in a large amount of new equipment over the last three years and the township, as well as the village will benefit from it, he said.

"We've updated our equipment quite a bit within the last three years, since the last agreement was signed," he said.

"We're bringing our standards up because we're selling protection and we feel that the agreement should be renegotiated."

Open door policy

Everyone has their own method of parking when it comes to making a quick run into a store for a purchase. One person who decided to leave his vehicle in the Bank of Nova Scotia entrance on King Street in Chesterville, last week decided to try an open door policy for parking. The driver managed to get back to the car without much trouble but not before one car pulled behind him and the driver honked his horn in disapproval of the parking technique.

Ice creating problems in South Nation Valley

Greg Kielec
Record Staff

BERWICK — While flooding hasn't posed a problem yet for the South Nation River Conservation Authority this year, it is having its problems with ice.

The authority removed several logs from the dam on the South Nation River in Chesterville last week, when ice became jammed under them, causing water to escape through the dam.

The authority had noticed the water level behind the dam had dropped considerably last week. The ice, which had jammed several logs up and out of place, was the cause of the problem, said Sandra Plank, junior engineer with the authority.

She said the authority usually lifts up the affected logs and lets the ice flow through, when it becomes jammed at the dam. But last Monday the ice was jammed so bad the logs had to be removed and replaced.

"I would think the main problem would be with if the water's allowed to go through it could lower the water level behind the dam quite a bit. That's actually what alerted us to the fact that there was a problem at the dam," Plank said.

The authority monitors the river's level daily and noticed on Monday the water level was dropping. While investigating the reason for the droppage, they found that jammed ice was the culprit.

When there is a problem at the dam, the authority usually finds out through its water level readings. "We take readings at the dam every day so we do have a fairly good handle on what the water level is like," Plank said.

The water must be kept at a certain level for the Nestle Enterprises Ltd. plant water intake, Plank said. "If it got too low I imagine they would be experiencing problems."

"We do have kind of a range we like to keep the water levels between. At the dam there are alarms that will go off if the water gets too low or too high," she said.

"If we take the readings, we can get a fairly good idea how close the water level is coming to approaching that situation."

Plank blamed the jamming problem on the extra thickness of the slabs of broken ice, compared to other years.

"The ice was quite a bit thicker than it had been in previous years," she said.

In fact, ice jamming will likely be more of a problem than flooding from spring runoff, she said.

"What we're looking at in that case is possibly some problems with ice jamming rather than strictly the amount of water that is running off."

She also warned that people should stay off any ice that is left on the river. "I would strongly recommend people stay off the ice and certainly don't go on the ice that is heaved up."

The ice may appear to be solid, but it is constantly being eroded from underneath by running water. "It may look like the ice is staying at the same level, but it's actually getting thinner," she said.

WI marks 60th

OSNABRUCK CENTRE — On April 6, 1929 seven ladies met in Osnabruck Centre with the thought of organizing the Osnabruck Centre Women's Institute. Before the year was out 15 more ladies had joined.

One of the ladies main concern over the years has been the upkeep of the Pleasant Valley Cemetery which at that time was in a bad need of repair.

The ladies began raising money immediately for this purpose; houses were canvassed and donators were listed in the local newspapers. At one meeting Mr. Alexander, who is still a cemetery trustee, represented the plotholders. All of the secretary treasurers of the cemetery over the 60 years have been from the Osnabruck Centre W.I.

During the 60 years this branch has reached into 140 area homes. The W.I. members have kept abreast of events, dealing with current items like helping the fire victims of Osnabruck Centre in 1931.

The history of the local villages and surrounding area were discussed and the local Tweedsmuir History book was begun.
