On Thursday evening Miss Hersey and the members of the Staff of the Royal Victoria Hospital, of Montreal, gave a bridge and shower in honor of Miss Annie Smith, who is shortly leaving them to be married.

The Dominion Department of Agriculture reports that average conditions in the Kingston, Iroquois, Morrisburg, Dundas and Mountain districts are for an apple crop about double that of last year, which should amount to about 10,000 barrels. But it is reported that prospects indicate only about 15 per cent of the crop will be worth grading and packing in closed packages, The principal variety grown is McIntosh's.

Leg Badly Bruised

Mr. Frank Cross Maple Ridge, had his legs badly bruised Wednesday afternoon, when caught in at cave in a the gravel pit. Although there were a number working in the pit, he was the only one caught, but all had narrow escapes. Fortunately no bones were broken.

Miss Kettle and Miss Walker assisted Miss McQuaig in opening the gifts and read the greetings accompaning each. She was the receipient of several pieces of cut glass, china, silver, and linen all lovely remembrances of her many friends in this community. Miss McQuaig then thanked her friends in a very pleasing manner for their great kindness to her extending an invertation to all present to visit her in her new home. Candy was then passed hnd the guests numbering about seventy registered their names in the Brides Book and a very enjoyable evening was brought to a close.

Assault Case

An assault alleged to have been committed by a gang of twelve men upon Harold Finnerty, aged 29, a well known farmer residing seven miles east of Kemptville, has deeply stirred the country around there, and resulted in a court case here on Saturday.

It is alleged that while Mr. Finnerty was calling upon a young woman on Aug. 19, he heard a noise in the yard and going out found a number of men engaged in shoving his automobile out of the yard. These men, some of them, it is claimed, relatives of the young woman, it is alleged attacked Finnerty who put up a fight, resisting their efforts to drop him into a tank of water. It is alleged that Mr. Finnerty's clothes were torn off and he was dragged up a road covered with cut stones, and suffered painful injuries. His assailants, it is asserted, demanded that he promise that he would not call on the young woman again, but this promise he refused to give.

Before Magistrate John McCormack at Winchester, the following were charged with assault causing bodily harm to Finnerty, Wm Carlyle, Lorne Carlyle, Weldon Carlyle, Robert Carlyle, Hamilton Carlyle, Chas Carlyle, Melvin McConnell, Mansel McConnell and Oliver Stotheston. Mr. T. K. Allan, of Kemptville, was counsel for Finnerty, and Mr. Gauvreau of Ottawa, appeared for the accused. The magistrate reserved his judgment, and the accused were allowed their liberty upon furnishing $500 bail each.

The magistrate is to render his decision at 10 o'clock Thursday morning.

At the re-opening of the trial this morning the nine prisoners elected to be tried at Cornwall and were committed to stand their trial there. Bail as before was to be arranged for their appearance at the fall assizes.

A Presentation

There was a gathering of friends in the school room of the United Church on Tuesday evening, principally members of the Sunday School, to say farewell, and make presentation to Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Strader, who leave this week for Ottawa, where Mr. Strader has been engaged in one of the public schools. Mr. A. Sweet acted as chairman, and before the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Strader there was a programme of several selections by the school orchestra, a recitation by Mrs. B. L Carr. On the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Strader, Mr. J. D. Stewart, Superintendent of the Sunday School, told of the splendid services rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Strader in the work of the Sunday School, and while he knew that all regretted the going away of such estimable citizens they all wished them the greatest success and future prosperity. As a mark of their appreciation of the willing services rendered, and of the high esteem in which they were held, he desired on behalf of the school to present them with a dinner set of dishes. The basket filled with the beautiful dishes was then brought in by Messrs Mills and Carkner and presented to Mr. and Mrs. Strader. Mr. Strader, on behalf of Mrs. Strader and himself then thanked their many friends for their great kindness, and for their handsome gift, which came as a complete surprise. He valued more highly, however, the kindly spirit and friendly sympathy that prompted the presentation. It had been a pleasure their sojourn in Winchester, and he was glad that they were not going far away, and he hoped that they would all in time find their home in Ottawa where the door would be always open to welcome them. There were short addresses by Messrs J. H. Ross, J. A. Carkner and Geo Earle, after which refreshments were served, and a very pleasant social time spent, when all joined hands in singing and saying good-bye.

We your neighbors and friends have gathered here to night to welcome you in our midst as man and wife, and to wish you all that is good and true in so doing. There is no reluctant feeling whatsoever but rather one of joy and gladness by feeling that we have gained a friend.

As for you Howard you have always played your role effectively in helping to build up our social life and have proven a congenial companion for all of us, with the result that you have won a place in the hearts of many, as a friend you have always been true and faithful sharing our sorrows and lightening our joys.

As for you Mrs. Biccum, we feel that you will prove likwise and we extend to you the right hand of fellowship and good will. We welcome your coming among us and are assured that our affiliations with you will be pleasant and helplul. We furthermore wish to express ourselves tangibly by asking you to accept these gifts as tokens of our high esteem and good will toward you both, and lastly by saying

Health and wealth is what we wish you
May your bright lights always shine
Every good gift God can give you
And His blessings tho' all time."

Signed on behalf of friends and neighbors Helen Darling, Madeline Hutt, Frank Barclay.

They were presented with a library table and a fern stand. Mr. Biccum replied in a few words in behalf of his wife and himself. Afterwards refreshments were served and the singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows" etc. brought the evening to a pleasant close.

Mme. Sun Yat-Sen Explains Women's Struggle in China

She Says They Bear Double Burden of Liberating Their Country and Themselves

In her speech to the delegates of a number of foreign labor organizations attending the recent Pan-Pacific Trade Union Conference in Hankow, Mme. Sun Yat-Sen, widow of the founder of the modern Nationalist movement in China, expressed "the appreciation of China's women for the encouragement, support and wise counsel you are bringing to us."

Mme. Sun Yat-sen has been actively assisting in carrying on her late husband's campaign of "ridding both China and women of the bondage that has kept them enslaved for centuries." Recently her temporary withdrawal from politics was announced, and in this speech she indicated the reason.

More than 10,000 Chines women assembled to welcome the foreign visitors—to welcome them in the name of the awaking female toilers of the Far East. Mme. Sun Yat-sen, who was educated in the United States, spoke in English, beginning her address with the salute, "Comrades." As given in the Communist press, the more important portions of her speech were as follows:

"You are here as the representatives of the oppressed classes of the West, of the working classes of India, America, England and France. You have come to bring a message of understanding and co-operation to the oppressed people of China. You come to us as comrades, and as comrades we welcome you.

"I wish to speak to you a few minutes in the name of China's women. You, who are familiar with the burdens and problems of the oppressed, will, I know, be able to comprehend the extent of the oppressions borne by the women of China. Everywhere where women and men are suffering from oppression it is the women who are suffering most. Working women share with their men the economic oppression of their class.

Woman's Manifold Struggle.

"But this is not the extent of their burden. In addition to the oppression of economic exploitation which makes the problem of keeping alive a perilous gamble, women in most lands suffer from other bondages. They are deprived of political rights. Social laws discriminate against them. Women, partly by law, but oftener by custom, are kept in a narrow rut of small duties and forced to lead restricted, starved lives.

"The struggle of women is manifold. It is against economic exploitation, which often, even among the poorest classes, grinds down the women even more than the men. Even where wages of men are so meagre that life is almost impossible, women often get still less. So their struggle is to work with the men for a better chance in life and sometimes against the men for an equal chance in life. Their struggle is for equality in many fields—in wages, in the rights of citizens, in social relationship.

"It is not easy to be a woman, and perhaps it is harder to be a woman in China than in any other place in the world. Our economic oppressions have been greater. We have been completely disqualified politically. Education has been reserved almost entirely for the men. Socially our life has been more circumscribed, more bound by customs that have been designed to make a free life the unique heritage of men and an unfree life the heritage of women, than has been the life of women in perhaps any Western land.

Chinese Women Emerging.

"To-day Chinese women are emerging. To the outsider it seems quite miraculous, but although we who are working for the emancipation of the Chines women recognize the miracle that makes this rebirth possible at all, at the same time we recognize the stupendous difficulties involved. The whole weight of traditional forces is against us — traditional economic forces, traditional international forces and in addition traditional social and family forces.

"It is not easy to be a leader of Chinese women to-day. We are beset not only by the obstacles in the way of national and economic emancipation, but also by great obstacles of criticism; personal attacks, the open disapproval of the conservative classes who feel that woman's life should be spent, as it always has been spent, either in the drawing-room or in the kitchen of the house of her lord.

"We women of China, however, are fortunate in one respect. The Kuomintang, which is leading us, is determined that our oppression, like the oppression of all exploited peoples and classes, shall end. Our program for emancipation receives complete support.

Militarists Dominating.

"Yet the task ahead of us is great. In it individual desires, individual emotions, must be forgotten, merged into a common struggle. It is a time in China when great liberating movements that are above and beyond personalities are taking shape, and Chinese women leaders, from Canton, the birthplace of the revolution, to Peking, the stronghold of reaction, are throwing themselves wholeheartedly into the battle to rid both China and women of the bondage that has kept them enslaved for centuries.

"You, delegates from the workingmen of the West, have, we know, come to help us in this task. You bring to us a message of co-operation from the exploited millions of other countries. I wish to tell you, in the name of the women of China, how much we appreciate your coming; how much we expect to profit by your help and advice and to ask you to take back to the workers and to the women of your homelands the greetings of the women of China."

In announcing her withdrawal from political life to the Associated Press, Mme. Sun Yet-sen said that the Kuomintang was becoming the "tool of militarists," and that she preferred to be outside the active movement until "wiser councils prevail."

Bottomley Out After Five Years in Prison; Villagers Welcome Home Former Editor

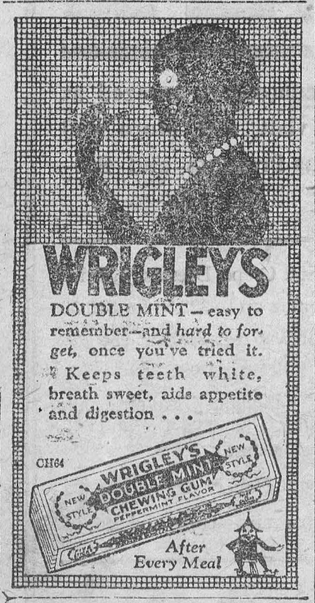
London—The gate of Maidstone Prison swung wide for Horatio Bottomley, founder and former editor of the London weekly, John Bull, former Member of Parliament and violent critir of the United States, who has just completed five years of his seven years' sentence for the theft of the funds of a Victory Loan bond club.

To avoid a demonstration planned by many friends of the 67-year-old prisoner on his release, the prison authorities let him out some weeks earlier than anticipated. He appeared in excellent health and eager to try to come back. According to his friends, his plans have been laid on the scale of his old magnificence

When Mr. Bottomley arrived at his home at Dicker, near Eastbourne, by motor, he was greeted affectionately by his wife and their servants. An ex-laborer on his farm who was nearby when he alighted from the automobile, spread the news of the return of Mr. Bottomley, who was the Squire of the village. The villagers immediately suspended work, hung flags from their houses and stood in groups about the Bottomley mansion. As the news spread, neighborhood "rubberneck" wagons full of the curious began to converge on the ex-prisoner's home.

Mr. Bottomley, however, received only a few callers. To one he said: "It has been a terrible experience, but I am so certain of my rehabilitation that I would not have missed it. It has taught me much of life. I never felt fitter."

The ex-editor has writen a book entitled, "My Life as Convict Thirteen." It is understood that he intends taking up the publishing business again. He has received hundreds of invitations to lecture on his prison experiences as well as many offers to go on the stage.



Inspection of Immigrants

Manitoba Free Press (Lib.): As a matter of fact, as at least all of the four western provinces on testify, the need of greater thoroughness of medical inspection, especially in Europe, ("in all the countries from which Canada is receiving immigrants") is vastly greater than it is in Great Britian. It is an open secret that peoples from these countries anxious to get to the Land of Promise are drilled and coached that they may pass the medical examination, which examination is conducted en masse. It is small wonder that Canada, especially during the past two years, has been receiving immigrants who, quota law considerations entirely to one side, could not even get a look into the United States.

Triumphs of M. Jonquelle

by MELVILLE DAVISSON POST

THE THING ON THE HEARTH.

BEGIN HERE TODAY.

Mysterious, incredible tragedy had been the fate of Rodman, the world genius, whose tremendous brain power had been centred on the commercial manufacture of precious stones. The scientific world was startled when the preliminary papers of Rodman showed that by synthetic chemistry he was about to turn out sheets of emeralds and rubies weighing several pounds at no more cost than the manufacture of ordinary window glass.

The Orient was shocked. It meant tremendous destruction of wealth. Then one day, bearing a gift worth thousands, there came a strange creature from the Shan Monastery in Asia. Powerful, intelligent—weird—this man had been delegated by his religious order to serve the great genius and protect him from evil.

Then came the tragedy. The one man in the world needed to solve the mystery was M. Jonquelle, greatest of French detectives.

GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER II.

As soon as France could release Jonquelle, it sent him. Rodman's genius was the common property of the world. The American government could not, even with the verdict of a trial court, let Rodman's death go by under the smoke-screen of such a weird, inscrutable mystery.

I was to meet Jonquelle and come here with him. But my train into New England was delayed, and when I arrived at the station, I found that Jonquelle had gone down to have a look at Rodman's country-house where the thing had happened.

It was on an isolated forest ridge of the Berkshires, no human soul within a dozen miles of it—a comfortable stone house in the English fashion. There was a big drawing-room across one end of it.

Rodman used the drawing-room for a workshop. He kept it close-shuttered and locked. Not even this big, yellow, servile creature who took exclusive care of him in the house was allowed to enter, except under Rodman's eye. What he saw in the final scenes of the tragedy, he saw looking in through a crack under the door. The earlier things he noticed when he put logs on the fire at dark.

Time is hardly a measure for the activities of the mind. These reflections winged by in a scarcely perceptible interval of it. They have taken me some time to write out here, but they crowded past while the big Oriental was speaking—in the pause between his words.

"The print," he continued, "was the first confirmatory but it was not the first indicatory sign. I doubt if the master himself noticed the thing at the beginning."

He paused.

The master was sunk in his labor, and while that enveloped him, the first advance of the lure would have gone by unnoticed—and the tension of the pressure. But the day was at hand when the master was receptive. He had got his work completed; the formulae, penciled out, were on the table. I knew by the relaxation. Of all periods this is the one most dangerous to the human spirit."

He sat silent for a moment, his big fingers moving on the arms of the chair.

"I knew," he added. Then he went on: "But it was the one thing against which I could not protect him. The test was to be permitted."

He turned sharply toward me, the folds of his face unsteady.

"Excellency!" he cried. "I would have saved the master, I would have saved him with my soul's damnation, but it was not permitted. On that first night in the Italian's tent I said all I could."

His voice went into a higher note.

"Twice, for the master, I have been checked and reduced in merit. For that bias I myself was encircled. I was in an agony of spirit when I knew that the thing was beginning to advance, but my very will to aid was at the time environed."

His voice descended.

He sat motionless, as though the whole bulk of him were devitalized, and maintained its outline only by the inclosing frame of the chair.

"It began, Excellency, on an August night. There is a chill in these mountains at sunset. I had put wood into the fireplace, and lighted it, and was about the house. The master, as I have said, had worked out his formulae.

"He was at leisure. I could not see him, for the door was closed, but the odor of his cigar escaped from the room. It was very silent. I was placing the Master's bed-candle on the table in the hall, when I heard his voice. . . . You have read it, Excellency, as the scriveners wrote it down before the judge."

He paused.

"It was an exclamation of surprise, of astonishment. Then I heard the master get up softly and go over to the fireplace. . . . Presently he returned. He got a new cigar, Excellency, clipped it and lighted it. I could hear the blade of the knife on the fibre of the tobacco, and, of course, clearly the rasp of the match. A moment later I knew that he was in the chair again. The odor of ignited tobacco returned. It was some time before there was another sound in the room; then suddenly I heard the master swear. His voice was sharp and astonished. This time, Excellency, he got up swiftly and crossed the room to the fireplace. I could hear him distinctly. There was the sound of one tapping on metal, thunping it, as with the fingers."

He stopped again, for a brief moment, as in reflection.

"It was then that the master unlocked the door and asked for the liquor." He indicated the court record in my pocket. 'I brought it, a goblet of brandy, with some carbonated water. He drank it all without putting down the glass. . . . His face was strange, Excellency. . . . Then he looked at me.

"'Put a log on the fire,' he said.

"I went in and added wood to the fire and came out.

"The master remained in the doorway; he re-entered when I came out, and closed the door behind him. . . . There was a long silence after that; then I heard the voice, permitted to the devocation, thin, metallic, offering the barter to the master. It began, and ceased because the master was on his feet and before the fireplace. I heard him swear again, and presently return to his place by the table."

The big Oriental lifted his face and looked out at the sweep of country before the window.

"The thing went on, Excellency, the voice offering its lure, and presenting it in brief flashes of materialization, and the master endeavoring to seize and detain the visitations, which ceased instantly at his approach to the hearth."

The man paused.

"I knew the master contended in vain against the thing; if he would acquire possession of what it offered, he must destroy what the creative forces of the spirit had released to him."

Again he paused.

"Toward morning he went out of the house. I could hear him walking on the gravel before the door. He would walk the full length of the house and return. The night was clear; there was a chill in it, and every sound was audible.

"That was all, Excellency. The master returned a little later and ascended to his bedroom as usual."

Then he added:

"It was when I went in to put wood on the fire that I saw the footprint on the hearth."

There was a force, compelling and vivid, in these meager details, the severe suppression of things, big and tragic. No elaboration could have equaled, in effect, the virtue of this restraint.

The man was going on, directly, with the story.

"The following night, Excellency, the thing happened. The master had passed the day in the open. He dined with a good appetite, like a man in health. And there was a change in his demeanor. He had the aspect of men who are determined to have a thing out at any hazard.

"After his dinner the master went into the drawing-room and closed the door behind him. He had not entered the room on this day. It had stood locked and close-shuttered!"

The big Oriental paused and made a gesture outward with his fingers, as of one dismissing an absurdity.

"No living human being could have been concealed in that room. There is only the bare floor, the master's table and the fireplace. The great wood shutters were bolted in, as they had stood since the master took the room for a workshop and removed the furniture. The door was always locked with that special thief-proof lock that the American smiths had made for it. No one could have entered."

It was the report of the experts at the trial. They showed by the casing of rust on the bolts that the shutters had not been moved; the walls, ceiling and floor were undisturbed; the throat of the chimney was coated evenly with old soot. Only the door was possible as an entry, and this was always locked except when Rodman was himself in the room. And at such times the big Oriental never left his post in the hall before it. That seemed a condition of his mysterious overcare of Rodman.

Everybody thought the trial court went to an excessive care. It scrutinized in minute detail every avenue that could possibly lead to a solution of the mystery. The whole country and every resident was inquisitioned. The conclusion was inevitable. There was no human creature on that forest crest of the Berkshires but Rodman and his servant.

But one can see why the trial judge kept at the thing; he was seeking an explanation consistent with the common experience of mankind. And when he could not find it, he did the only thing he could do. He was wrong, as we now know. But he had a hold in the dark on the truth—not the whole truth by any means; he never had a glimmer of that. He never had the faintest conception of the big, amazing truth. But as I have said, he had his fingers on one essential fact.

The Gift of Reading

The gift of reading, as I have called it, is not very common, nor very venerally understood. It consists, first of all, in a vast intellectual endowment—a free grace, I find I must call it—by which a man rises to understand that he is not punctually right, nor those from whom he differs absolutely wrong. He may hold dogmas; he may hold them passionately; and he may know that others hold them but coldly, or hold them digerently, or hold them not at all. Well, if he has the gift of reading, these others will be full of meat for him. They will see the other side of propositions and the other side of virtues. He need not change his dogma for that, but he may change his reading of that dogma, and he must supplement and correct his deductions from it. . . . Something that seems quite new, or that seems insolently false or very dangerous, is the test of a reader. If he tries to see what it means, what truth excuses it, he has the gift, and let him read. If he is merely hurt, or offended, or exclaims upon his author's folly, he had better take to the daily papers; he will never be a reader.—R. L. S., in "Essays on the Art of Writing."

French Youths Yearn to Fly

Airman Back From Syria Complains of Check Put on "Daring and Enthusiastic Spirits"

Paris.—The feelings provoked in French aviators by the recent triumphs of American transatlantic pilots were well expressed by a young flier returned from the fighting in Syria. They are sentiments of admiration for the Americans, mingled with a natural desire to undertake similar ventures.

"Why aren't we allowed to do like Lindbergh?" axclaimed the restless airman of the French Army. "We have a whole team ready to take off with planes of the latest model, but we run up against inexorable orders. France has her aces, our admirable precursors, and she does not permit us to play the great game without them.

"America lets its youth fly, while we champ at the bit. There are in France plenty of daring and enthusiastic spirits that are held in check. Yet with good luck they could be Lindberghs too. I saw them at work not long ago in the Near East.

"There is, for example, a hero of whom nobody has spoken—my comrade, Cauchois. During he operations in the Djebel Druse last year he made thirty-two trips in his plane, saving sixty-four wounded men and taking them to the hospital. Coming back in the evening from the last trip he had a breakdown and had to land behind the enemy's lines. He had two wounded men with him. He hid them in a cave and, taking with him all his instruments, set off on a run to throw the enemy off the track, dropping bits of cargo along the way to attract his pursuers.

END OF THE ADVENTURE.

"About fifty Druse cavalrymen followed him. The flier took refuge in another cave and during a whole night held off his pursuers with an automatic rifle. The next morning he sent up flares to signal his comrades. Freed at last, he went back to his plane, repaired it and took the two wounded men to camp.

"During one of the fights at Leja last March we were ordered one morning to make a reconnaissance in the region of Dakir, where a group of 200 Druses had been reported in revolt the night before. Two Syrian squads, commanded by our officers, were seeking them. We left the camp at Damas on a beautiful spring morning. The oases were green, the sky was calm, the weather marvelous. We flew at about 150 feet altitude in order to be able to distinguish the cavalrymen, whose brownish cloaks were nearly the color of the ground.

"Suddenly above a cavern we heard the crackle of a machine gun. It must have been operater by some European gone over to the enemy, the firing was so precise. A bullet went through the lower left wing of the biplane without doing any damage to the machine. But it pierced an artery in the leg of the pilot. The plane began a dive. I grabbed the controls. It took forty-five minutes to return to camp. My comrades greeted me with shouts of joy, little suspecting that I brought back a dead man.

"Personally I don't want to try to repeat the exploit of Lindbergh, which soon will become commonplace, but I should like to try for an endurance record. It is not so hard. Our planes are ready. The only thing is not to be afraid of risks."

Anglo-American Relations

Leo Maxse in the London National Review: Partly from their school books, from popular newspapers, and from their politicians the Americans have acquired an impression of this country, of its statesmanship, its ambitions, and its achievements, which, though in some respects flattering to British amour-propre, is responsible for the development of an anti-British sentiment that not only militates against any political co-operation between the English-speaking nations in any part of the world, no matter how intimate or identical their interests, but which actually endangers any Administration that is even suspected of leaning in that direction.

Americans Interested in Canadian Locomotives

Interest taken by American railway officials in the advance of Canadian locomotive construction is emprasized by the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been asked to send their finest passenger engine to Baltimore to be placed on exhibition at the coming Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Centenary Exhibition and Pageant to be held September 24 to October 8. President Coolidge has intimated that he will be present at the opening day.

Canadian Pacific officials have sent word to Baltimore that they will be represented there by the latest type of their "2300" class passenger locomotives. The compact design of this engine is one of its striking features. In construction the weight was kept to a minimum even though an increase of 50 pounds per square inch was attained, bringing the boiler pressure developed up to 250 pounds per square inch. This was accomplished by the use of a special nickel steel boiler plate, the first of its kind used in boiler construction on the American continent.

The coming Baltimore Centenary Exhibition is expected to be the most complete outdoor and indoor exhibition of transportation ever collected, including the earliest and latest types of locomotive from the North American as well as the European Continents and the British Isles.

Expedition Seeks Forgotten Jews

Colony in Abyssinia Reported Dwelling in Isolation

One of the most interesting ethnological expeditions that have been planned for many a day is that which is going "off the map" in the wilds of Abyssinia, to investigate the Falashas or Black Jews, large numbers of whom are reported to be dwelling in an isolated little world of their own behind the ranges, writes a traveller in the London Daily Mail.

Americans are supplying the main part of the capital and undertaking the leadership, but some Palestinian Zionists are co-operating and British Jewry has been invited to send learned represetatives to join the party.

Queer things have happened to more than one straggling colony of The Chosen People when it got cut off from its base.

Do you know, for instance, about the 300 Chinese Jews, herded together at the city of Kai-feng-fu, in Honan province, sadly contemplating the ruins of their synagogue, and carrying on, by word of mouth, the teachings of their last rabbi, who died 80 years ago? They are very poor and dejected. None of their wealthy fellow communities elsewhere in the world lends them a hand, nor does any museum or archaelogical institution take steps to preserve what remains, and records are still to be found there. The British Museum, at all events, knows about them, for it has a number of Hebrew manuscripts from Kai-feng-fu, and there are some, I believe, in the Bodleian Library.

How the Black Jews happened to get cut off in a remote part of Abyssinia has still to be ascertained. The origin of the Chinese Jews is known; they themselves have commemorated it. They were camp followers of a Persian king who was driven out of his country and energetically pursued by the armies of the Caliph Othman, 1,300 years ago. They lost their way and failed to keep in touch with what was left of the Persian army when it ventured to go home. There is to-day a stone in the ruined synagogue that records the construction of the first place of worship in 1163, and its rebuilding about 355 years ago.

It would be a matter for keen regret if this extraordinarily interesting, and diminishing, group of marooned representatives of an ancent civilization were allowed, through sheer ignorance and apathy, to disappear without any steps being taken to make a thorough investigation of their relics and recollections.

British Families to Get Canadian Farms

London.—Five hundred British families are to be given farms in New Brunswick in the next six years, under the Anglo-Canadian agreement just made public. Advances up to £300 will be given to each family by the British Government ,repayable together with the land cost over 25 years.

The New Brunswick Government co-operates in this agreement, which officials here hope may be the beginning of a big movement for attracting suitable British immigrants to the maritime provinces of Canada.

Ottawa.—Co-operation between the British Government, the Canadian Government and the Government of New Brunswick is shown in a plan announced by the Department of Immigration and Colonization for locating British settlers on farms in New Brunswick. This marks the first concrete step toward combined Dominion and Provincial action in co-operation with the British Government toward providing farms for the placement of British settlers in Canada and is one of several settlement schemes arranged by Hon. Robert Forke, Minister of Immigration and Colonization, when he was recently in Great Britain.

Arrangements which have just been signed on behalf of the respective governments provide for the placement of 500 British settlers and their families on improved farms in New Brunswick during the period from March 1, 1928, to March 31, 1934. The plan follows the general scheme of the 3,000 Brtish families settlement plan which has already met with so much success, except that in this case the Canadian co-operation will be given by the province and the Dominion working together instead of exclusively by the Dominion Government.

The Dominion Government, through its Department of Immigration and Colonization, will recruit and select the settlers in the British Isles and, co-operating with the Government of New Brunswick, will locate the settlers in that province and extend settlement service through its Land Settlement Branch. The Government of New Brunswick will acquire the necessary farms and will sell them to the settler on terms calling for 25 annual payments with interest amortized at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum The British Government will provide funds for acquiring stock and equipment, and for seed, feed and initial payments on farms, which sums will be payable on the same terms as the price of the land.

Settlers under this agreement will have the advantage of the special £2 rate of transportation from the British Isles to Halifax or St. John arranged by the Department of Immigration for selected British settlers, and including free transportation for children under seventeen. A man, his wife, and several children may therefore make the journey from a British port to Halifax or St. John at a cost of less than $20.

Women Settlers

London Times (Ind.)—(Women are occasionally deterred from settlement in the Dominions by the fact that they are invited by Dominion notices to undertake work as domestic servants or household workers). There is a natural commonsense feeling against crossing the world to scrub floors. . . . (But) the truth is that that homely phrase "household workers" denotes what is the beginning and not the end of the career overseas. Behind its drab suggestion lies a new world offering almost boundless scope. It is, so to say, the way for the assisted settler to matriculate into the life of the Dominions. It is the field in which she gives her proofs that she can make a sound contribution to the common life of her new country. We can understand what seems at times the over-exacting attitude of Dominion officials when we remember that they are taking to their country the future mothers of their people.

We can quite sympathize with the salesman who was asked by the old lady if she could have one of those wireless fans she had heard about, because her room was so stuffy in summer.

The Modernized Motorcycle

The "modernized motorcycle" is the description given the 1928 Harley-Davidson, by Walter Andrews, Toronto, Ont., agent for that line of motorcycles. In pointing out the many new features on the 1928 models, Mr. Andrews is particularly enthusiastic about the fore-wheel brake, which is of the internal expanding type. This additional breaking surface when used in conjunction with the present rear-wheel brake, affords the ultimate in safety for all road and traffic conditions. Another improvement of importance is the all-speed oiler which is controlled from the throttle. As the speed is increased through opening the throttle, the oil pump is caused to feed more oil to the motor. The 1928 models are on display at Walter Andrews, Ltd., 346 Yonge St., Toronto, and should be seen when visiting the Exhibition.

Teach Children Kindness

This teaching kindness to animals may seem a simple thing; but the more one looks into its merits the more penetrating this spiritualizing influence proves to be, causing a change of conduct, inspiring justice and compassion in the place of selfishness and cruelty; training the mind to apprehend, and the heart to sympathize with the needs of the lowly creatures who form the theoretical object lesson of such surpassing interest to the young; obviously the 'protectinng sympathy' which a child may be taught to feel towards its helpless dumb companion, may in after years inspire the life of the philanthropist.

"How much teaching is needed is demonstrated by the incredibly cruel deeds perpetrated by children even of tender years, which call forth neither remonstrance nor reproof from parent or guardian"'—Miss G. Kendall.

LIFE WAS A BURDEN

Restored to Health Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"It is a pleasure," says Mrs. Ross Boulter, of Victoria, P.E.I., "to tell you of the new health and strength I got through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before taking the pills life was a burden to me. I was so badly run down that I did not know what to do. My blood seemed to have turned to water, I was very pale, constantly tired, and was losing flesh. It was a trial to attempt housework. Added to this I had a bad cough and my husband and friends thought I was going into consumption. The medical treatment I was taking did not appear to do me any good, and I had about given up hope when a friend urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I got six boxes and found so much benefit from them that I got six more boxes. Before these were all taken I was a new woman restored again to good health. I gained in weight, the cough left me, my appetite returned and I once more had a good color. Better still, I was able to do my housework without fatigue. Needless to say I always recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to ailing friends, and I hope this will be the means of pointing the road to good health to some other sufferer."

Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for anaemia, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervousness. Take them as a tonic if you are not in the best physical condition and cultivate a resistance that will keep you well and strong.

If you will send us your name and address a little book, "Building Up the Blood," will be mailed you prepaid. This book contains many useful health hints.

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Catbird

"Yow, e-yow! squawk!"

Such a grating, unmusical cat-call! Surely the sound did not come from that graceful, dark gray bird there in the shrubbery? Watch a moment.

There he sits, beautifully formed, bright-eyed, black-capped, blacktailed, his only enlivening color being the patch of bright chestnut under the tail coverts. His wings, some 2 inches shorter than his tail, are folded. His head is small and sleek.

Hark! what song s that? A thrush, a mockingbird? No, it is our gray bird in the syringa, who a few moments ago sounded true to his name, catbird. Now his song swells forth gloriously.

A pause—a short flight to the cedar hedge. There he slumps, head and tail drooping. "Me-ow! row!" he croaks dismally.

The catbird is a most interesting neighbor. He imitates many of the other birds, and it is hard to tell what song, if any, is really his own. He belongs to the mockingbird family and is sometimes called the black-capped thrush.

The catbird pays more attention to his personal appearance than most birds, spending much time in preening and primping. He is about nine inches long, slightly shorter than the robin, and not as plump.

He is frequently seen in shrubbery near houses, and builds his nest, sometimes in hedges or shrubs in the dooryard, sometimes in wild berry bushes or thickets.

Catbirds are not in the least particular as to what building material they use, and scraps of anything available go into the carelessly woven nest—bits of paper blowing about the lawn, roots, threads, grass—but fine black rootlets seem the favored material for lining. The four or five eggs are dark greenish blue.

The catbird has a fondness for the small cultivated fruits, and in consequence is considered something of a pest by those who raise them. But once hear him sing at his best and you will not grudge him what he takes.. He eats insects, also; grasshoppers, ants, crickets and beetles.

He has a broad range over the United States and well up into Canada, being, however, somewhat rare west of the Rockies. Winters he spends in the Gulf States, Cuba and Central America..

Perhaps at the next disarmament conference they can arrange to have less conference and more disarmament.

Geographic Society Will Co-Operate With Byrd's Expedition

Washington.—Full co-operation will be extended by the National Geographical Society to Commander Richard E. Byrd in his proposed Antarctic flight and a contribution of $25,00 from the society's exploration fund will be donated toward the scientific equipment of the expedition.

In making this announcement recently it was said the society's trustees believed that a thorough exploration of the Antarctic regions offered a rich field for collection of scientific data as conditions in the south territory were in marked contrast to those of the Arctic.

For his work in the Arctic, Commander Byrd already has receved the Hubbard Gold Medal, the society's highest award, which is held only by eight men.

"Among the important problems to be worked out by Commander Byrd," the society said, "are those relating to the meteorology of the southern continent and its effect on world weather, especially that of the Southern Hemisphere. Observations have been taken on the ground along the Shackleton, Scott and Amundsen routes, but nothing is known of conditions on the other side of the Pole or in the air above the continent."

The good old pastime of archery is being revived. At the Exmouth butts the target is distant 75 yards. Robin Hood's record, we understand from the old ballad, was a mile and an inch. Both he and his chronicler seem to have been experts at drawing the longbow.

These Two Found Relief by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Ayer's Cliff, Quebec. — "I have been teaching for three years, and at the end of the year I always feel tired and have no appetite. I was awful sick each month, too, having pains in my back until sometimes I was obliged to stop working. A friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and I heard many women telling how good it was so I thought it would help me. And it did. Now I take six bottles every year and recommend it to others." — DONALDA FANTEUX, Ayer's Cliff, Quebec.

"Unable to Work"

Canning, Nova Scotia.—"I had irregular periods and great suffering at those times, the pains causing vomiting and fainting. I was teaching school and often for some hours I would be unable to attend to my work. Through an advertisement in the papers I knew of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has been of great benefit to me, the troubles being completely relieved." —LAURA J. EATON, Canning, King's County, Nova Scotia. C

Shut off your HERMETITE oven and go to church

—when you return the roast will be done

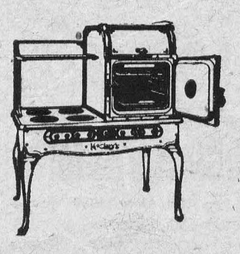
"HOW can I go to church and cook dinner at the same time?" the housewife of old used to say. "It simply can't be done."

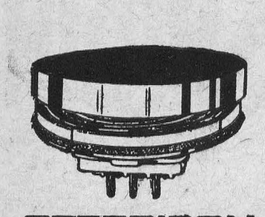
But what couldn't be done a few years ago is done by thousands of Canadian women today. With roast and vegetables baking in McClary's Hermetite Oven you can attend to your other activities, feeling perfectly confident that the whole meal will be deliciously cooked.

The reason is "stored heat". McClary's Hermetite is doubly insulated. The walls are packed with heat-proof material and surrounded by dead air space—the best insulation known to science. You have only to close the door to make the oven almost hermetically tight. The heat is thus retained inside the oven long after the current is turned off. Your foods go on baking without using up a bit more electricity.

You'll be as charmed with the other time and money-saving features of McClary's Electric Range as you are with the Hermetite Oven. You'll be delighted with its all-white, porcelain enameled finish—its great economy—its famous Speediron Elements.

Made in the very style and size you require, and sold at a price you can afford.





SPEEDIRON

McClary's Speediron Element is the greatest electric range improvement of modern times. Unlike old-fashioned elements, the coils of the Speediron are protected. If coils burn out after long service you simply lift the element out and have coils replaced easily and quickly—at the cost of a few cents. The only renewable, reparable protected element on the market.

Children's Reading

So much depends on what is read in the formative years that it is impossible to give too much care and thought to the influences to which the child is subjected in literature. But for the maximum of good to result from the oversight of parents and teachers in this respect it is important not to forget that a book which interests a child at one point of his reading career may fail to grip him at another.

A definite succession of clearly marked stages may be traced in connection with the reading interests of the child. Before the age of five the infant does not normally read for himself but he loves to listen to nursery rhymes, and simple fairy and nature stories. He likes to attribute human significance to the doings of living creatures on land and in water and to project himself into imaginary conversations between the various objects in his natural surroundings.

During the next two years the first attempts at actual reading take place. He still enjoys fairy stories, but he now likes his nature stories to include accounts of actual adventures of familiar animals and pets. By the ge of eight he combines a more intense fondness of the fanciful element, and a keener interst in tales of the actual habits and doings of animals with a desire to read about other children and other lands.

A long step forward takes place between eight and ten. The child now begins to read longer books, to becom absorbd in them, and to elevate reading to the level of a prime intrst. The books in demand will now include stories of historical characters. Differences begin to manifest themselves between the reading tastes of boys and girls. Girls tend to preserve to a later stage the liking for fairy stories, while boys begin to choose adventure stories.

By the age of eleven, with its wider outlook and greater experience, the child becomes a reader, and tackles all kinds of literature within his limits of difficulty. Interest in nature stories loses its keenness, while books dealing with travel and invention become popular. Childrn begin now to want their own books. They take a pride in their possession, and will lend and borrow. Between the ages of 11 and 13 occur the reading years when almost everything is fish that comes to the net. At this age reading becomes with many children a predominant interest. They especially like books of mystery, invention, school, stories, heroic adventures and the weird. Girls like at this age what are described as boys' books, but they show a marked tendency, too, to read sentimental stories.

This stage is followed, at 14, by an interest in periodicals and in literature dealing with hobbies and nterests. The desire for fiction loses some of its intensity. For the boy books and articles which help him to make things, or to keep pets become popular. Girls are absorbed in sentimental literature, and an interest in poetry develops at this age.

Parents are often perplexed by an unaccountabl dropping off of interest in reading on the part of their children between the ages of 14 and 16. But this is a normal stage and one which is explained by the enlargement of the scope of activity and interest which taks place at that age. They become occupied with the world around them, the higher stages of school life, the initial stages of industry, sports, juvenile clubs, companions and current events. In their preoccupation with the world of reality they lose interest in the world of books. Many young folk drop their reading at this age for the want of tactful guidance on the part of someone who understands their needs. If, however, the love of reading survives this stage, it becomes firmly fixed and remains a source of stimulus, delight and solace.

The aim of the parent and teacher at every stage should be not to thwart th natural interests which the child displays, but to make use of them and guide them aright. At the stage when adventure is the child's ruling interest and he is in danger of becoming addicted to the trashy and cheap periodicals which are published to supply this want, he should be introduced to Ballantyne, Marryat and R. L. Stevenson. Similarly with every stage through which he passes. If the best of each type of literature be put in his way, he will be more likely to levate his taste while satisfying his desire. Even the chld who seems to prfer outdoor life, nature study, or other active occupations need not be allowed to escape from the influence of literature. His understanding and enjoyment of nature will be enhanced by Gilbert White; and for very activity into which he may enter is a library of books to which he may profitably be introduced.

The difficulty of the undesirable book is one that is best met by the supply of literature of the better kind. The good will drive out the bad—provided it is there in plenty and at the right moment.—Christian Science Monitor.

"Foreign Devils!"

N. Y. in the London New Statesman—Most of us have an inherited suspicion of foreigners. Their faces are different from ours, and we read mischief in them. The very sound of their language suggests a world of which we have not the bearings. When we live among them, we discover that most of them are decent selfish people with much the same vices and virtues as are to be found at home. But, when we see great crowds of them together, the difference of their manners, their clothes, their features and their gestures is brought home to us and makes them seem not quite human. The Chinese expression, "foreign devils," is an accurate description of the universal foreigner as seen through the eyes of the natural man.

Triumphs of M. Jonquelle

By MELVILLE DAVISSON POST

THE THING ON THE HEARTH.

BEGIN HERE TO-DAY.

Did some occult power of the Orient cause the mysterious and incredible tragedy which had removed from the world one of its greatest intelligences—the brain of Rodman, who had startled scientists with his paper on the manufacture of precious stones by synthetic chemistry?

Rodman was dead. His attendant, that strange Oriental from the Shan monastery in Asia, told a story weird and incredible. Finally

M. Jonquelle, greatest of French detectives, was called to America and the Oriental rehearsed the story of what took place on the night when the man who could manufacure rubies and emeralds as cheaply as glass, met his death.

GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER III.

The Oriental as going on with a slow precise articulation as though he would thereby make a difficult matter clear.

"The night had fallen swiftly. It was incredibly silent. There was no sound in the Master's room, and no light except the flicker of the logs smouldering in the fireplace. The thin line of it appeared faintly along the sill of the door."

He paused.

"The fireplace, Excellency, is at the end of the great room, directly opposite this door into the hall, before which I always sat when the master was within. The fireplace is of black marble with an immense black marble hearth. And the gift which I had brought the master stands on one side of the fire, on this marble hearth, as though it were a single andiron."

The man turned back into the heart of his story.

"I knew by the vague sense of pressure that the devocations of the thing were again on the way. And I began to suffer in the spirit for the masters safety. Interference, both by act and by the will, were denied me. But there is an anxiety of spirit, Excellency, that the uncertainty of an issue makes intolerable.",

The man paused.

The pressure continued—and the silence. It as nearly midnight. I could not distinguish any act or motion of the master, and in fear I crept over to the door and looked in through the crevice along the threshold.

"The master sat by his table; he was straining forward, his hands gripping the arms of his chair. His eyes and every tense instinct of the man were concentrated on the fireplace. The red light of the embers was in the room. I could see him clearly, and the table beyond him with the calculations; but the fireplace seemed strangely out of perspective—it extended above me.

"My gift to the master, not more than four hand-breadths in length, including the base, stood now like an immense bronze on an extended marble slab beside a gigantic fireplace. This effect of extension put the top of the fireplace and the enlarge dandiron, above its pedestal, out of my line of vision. Everything else in the chamber, holding its normal dimensions, was visible to me.

"I have said, Excellency, that my angle of vision along the crevice of the doorsill was sharply cut midway of this now enlarged fireplace. From the direction and lift of the master's face, he was watching something above this line and directly over the pedestal of the andiron. I watched, also, flattening my face against the sill, for the thing to appear.

"And it did appear.

"A naked foot became slowly visible, as though someone were descending with extreme care from the elevation of the andiron to the great marble hearth, under this strange enlargement, now some distance below."

The big Oriental paused, and looked down at me.

"I knew then, Excellency, that the master was lost! The creative energies of the Spirit suffer no division of worship; those of the body must be wholly denied. I had warned the master. And in travail, Excellency, I turned over with my face to the floor.

"But there is always hope, hope over the certainties of experience, over the certainties of knowledge. Perhaps the master, even now, sustained in the spirit, would put away the devocation. . . . No, Excellency, I was not misled. I knew the master was beyond hope! But the will to hope moved me, and I turned back to the crevice at the doorsill."

He paused.

"There was now a delicate odor, everywhere, faintly, like the blossom of the little bitter apple here in your country. The red embers in the fireplace gave out a steady light; and in the glow of it, on the marble hearth, stood the one who had descended from the elevation of the andiron."

Again the man hesitated, as for an accurate method of expression.

"In the flesh, Excellency, there was color that would not appear in the image. The hair was yellow, and the eyes were blue; and against the black marble of the fireplace the body was conspicuously white.

"But in every other aspect of her, Excellency, the woman was on the hearth in the flesh as she is in the clutch of the savage male figure in the image.

"There is no dress or ornament, as you will recall, Excellency. Not even an ear-jewel or an anklet, as though the graver of the image felt that the inherent beauty of his figure could take nothing from these ostentations.

HE KILLED RODMAN SIMPLY BY CRUSHING HIM IN HIS ARMS.

"The woman's heavy, yellow hair was wound around her head, as in the image. She shivered a little, faintly, like a naked child in an unaccustomed draught of air, although she stood on the warm, marble hearth and within the red glow of the fire.

"The voice from the male figure of the image, which I had brought the master, and which stood as the andiron, now so immensely enlarged, was beginning again to speak. The thin, metallic sound seemed to splinter against the dense silence, as it went forward in the ritual prescribed.

"But the master had already decided; he stood now on the great marble hearth with his papers crushed together. And as I looked on, through the crevice under the doorsill, he put out his free hand and with his finger touched the woman gently. The flesh under his finger yielded, and stooping over, he put the formula into the fire."

Like one who has come to the end of his story, the huge Oriental stopped. He remained for some moments silent. Then he continued in an even, monotonous voice:

"I got up from the floor then, and purified myself with water. And after that I went into an upper chamber, opened the window to the east, and sat down to write my report to the brotherhood. For the thing which I had been sent to do was finished."

He put his hand somewhere into the loose folds of his Oriental garments and brought out a roll of thin, vellum-like onion-skin, painted in Chinese characters. It was of immense length, but on account of the thinness of the vellum, the roll [illegible] inches in thickness.

"Excellency," he said, "I have carefully concealed this report through the misfortunes that have attended me. It is not certain that I shall be able to deliver it. Will you give it for me to the jewel-merchant Vanderdick, in Amsterdam? He will send it to Mahadal in Bombay, and it will go north with the caravans."

I put the scroll into my pocket and went out, for a motor car had come into the park, and I knew that Jonquelle had arrived.

I met Jonquelle and the superintendnet in the long corridor; they had been looking in at my interview through the elevated grating.

"Jonquelle," I cried, "the judge was right to cut short the criminal trial and issue a lunacy warrant. This creature is the maddest lunatic in this whole asylum. The human mind is capable of any absurdity."

Jonquelle looked at me with a queer, ironical smile.

'Perhaps," he shrugged, "there is some explanation in the report in your pocket, to the Monastic Head. It's only a theory, you know."

He smiled, showing his white, even teeth.

We went into the superintendent's room, and sat down by a smoldering fire of coals in the grate. I handed Jonquelle the roll of vellum. It was in one of the Shan dialects. He read it aloud. With the addition of certain formal expressions, it contained precisely the Oriental's testimony before the court and no more.

"Ah!" he said in his curiously inflected voice.

And he held the scrool out to the heat of the fire. The vellum baked slowly, and as it baked, the black Chinese characters faded out and faint blue ones began to appear.

Jonquelle read the secret message in his emotionless drawl:

"'The American is destroyed, and his accursed work is destroyed with him. Send the news to Bangkok and west to Burma. The treasures of India are saved.'"

I cried out in astonishment.

"An assassin! The creature was an assassin! He killed Rodman simply by crushing him in his arms!"

Jonquelle's draw lengthened.

"It's Lal Gupta," he said, "the cleverest Oriental in the whole of Asia. The jewel-traders sent him to watch Rodman, and to kill him if he was ever able to get his formulae worked out. They must have paid him an incredible sum."

"And that is why the creature attached himself to Rodman!" I said.

"Surely," replied Jonquelle. "He brought that bronze—Romulus carrying off the Sabine woman—and staged the supernatural to work out his plan and to save his life. I knew the bronze as soon as I got my eye on it—old Franz Josef gave it as a present to Mahadal in Bombay for matching up some rubies."

I swore bitterly.

"And we took him for a lunatic!"

"Ah, yes!" replied Jonquelle. "What was it you said as I came in? 'The human mind is capable of any absurdity!'"

Another M. Jonquelle story, "The Fortune Teller," will follow this.

The Two Fleets

J. L. Garvin in The London Observer (Ind.)—The question of naval relations between the United States and Britain is permanent; it is as permanent as the sea; it is fundamental; and as we said, there is no more momentous question i nthe world. Let no one think we exaggerate. Anyone who thinks so knows little of America to-day, and still less of the new conditions indispensable to the existence of the British Empire. It is of life-and-death importance for the whole future of English-speaking relations to determine what are to be the future relations of the fleets.

"Why on going out does one get dressed up?" asks a writer. Exactly, and why on returning home does one get dressed down?

"More deaths are due to motor-racing than to any other of our national sports," declares a contemporary. Unmuzzled bridge players will regard their partners with less dread on reading this.

German Aviatrix Gets a Ducking

When her motor went dead at just the wrong time Fraulein Thea Rasche, German stunt aviatrix, and her mechanic, Hans Von Rheudner, fell into the Hudson river at Poughkeepsie,, N.Y. She was attempting to fly under the Poughkeepsie bridge. The craft dived upside down into 62 feet of water, but the aviatrix and her companion escaped unhurt.

The Man Who Guards the German Republic

A Discussion Arose Among Newspaper Correspondents

"Why is it," one of us asked, "that Hindenburg has been picked for leadership in peace just as he was in war? He hasn't a pleasant personality. He isn't politically clever. He isn't diplomatic. The battles and campaigns for which he gets credit were undoubtedly planned by Ludendorff. He has a face that would scare a child. Why, then, do soldiers die for him and civilians cry for him? What is there about Hinderburg?"

To which another, who had kept quiet during the discussion, replied:

"I'll tell you, in one word: Character."

We nodded our heads. "Yes," we all chimed in, "he has character. That's it."

The correctness of this estimate of Paul von Hindenburg, instantly apparent to us when he had just begun his term as President of Germany, is doubly so now that he, approaching his eightieth birthday, has two full years of his term behind him.

Character. That is indeed what has made Hindenburg. Character has served him better than shining armor and rattling sword served his master. William Hohenzollern; than ambition and brains served his colleague in war, Erich Ludendorff. There is about Hindenburg a genuineness, a solidity, a ruggedness, which make men instinctively trust him. If a block of granite could be imbued with life it would be like Paul von Hindenburg. His rugged, unornamental qualities gave him fame in war; now, after two years in the Presidency of Germany, they have added to it a fame in peace which history may rank higher than his military laurels.

Two years ago we American correspondents in Berlin looked upon President-elect von Hindenburg with apprehension. Were we very much to blame? Consider the position:

In the early part of 1925, some of the most uncompromising reactionaries among the German Junkers—including that bewhiskered war veteran, Grand Admiral von Tirpitz—had got together in secret conclave and decided that their ends would best be served by having old Hindenburg emerge from retirement a second time and become President of the German Republic. So they went to the forbidding old war-dog at the villa in Hanover where, Hindenburg thought, he was anchored until the end of his days, and prevailed upon him to accept the nomination.

He was duly elected by an overwhelming majority. The Junkers, the die-hards of Germany, the former officers of the Kaiser's World War armies, who had sheather their swords with reluctance, crowed with delight, waved swords and banners, openly showed their conviction that the hour of vengeance against the Entente victors in the war would soon strike.

Throughout Germany one seemed to hear the clank of arms and the thud of the goose-step. The Entente nations, especially France, looked on warily, ready to strike at the first signs of trouble. The peace of Europe seemed to hang by a precarious thread. Were we American newspapermen in Berlin so much to blame if we did not like the looks of Field Marshal Paul von Hindenburg, President-elect of the German Republic? And said so in thousands of cabled words?

But those jubilant Junkers had failed to take into consideration a little scene which had occurred at old Hindenburg's villa at Hanover. Surely imagination may be permitted to picture that scene—though Hindenburg played it alone, without witnesses.

And here the writer gives rein to his fancy and offers us this conjectured reconstruction of the old soldier's debate with his conscience at a crisis in German history:

An old man—a very old man—seated, rugged and frowning, in silent nocturnal vigil among the modest heirlooms of his modest home, and thinking as follows:

"They want me to be President of the German Republic. I am not a Republican. I am a Monarchist. But they tell me that the best way for me to serve the Fatherland is to run for President. If I am elected, I must take a solemn oath to uphold the Republic.

"Well, if I take that oath, I shall take it fully and sincerely, without mental reservations of any kind, and I shall keep it, so help me God, to the end of my Presidential term, no matter what anybody thinks of me. That's that."

The upshot of that silent vigil of the Old Man of Hanover was that he decided to run for President of Germany. And to-day more than two years after he came to that decision, he who is now known in his native land as the Old Man of the Wilhelmstrasse can look back upon an oath kept squarely and uncompromisingly; upon a German Republic immensely strengthened by his keeping of that oath; upon a German Fatherland rescued from new perils and a world preserved from new war threats by the way he has kept it. The consciousness of duty done against obstacles will be the pesent which Paul von Hindenburg will give himself on the second of next October when he completes his eightieth year. And those who know him best feel assured that, from then until the end of his Presidential term, there will be no deviation from the narrow path which the old warrior has set himself to tread. Character—that is what has done it..

It would have been easy for President von Hindenburg to have acted otherwise. He could have done so with only a slight quibbling with his conscience, such as politicians indulge in every day when they wish to justify questionable tactics—snaky wrigglings out of tight places. There were plenty of old Junker counselors around Hindenburg to show him the way to such quibbling.

But throughout two years and more he has been reat to their siren songs. He has turned his mind's eye to that oath which he swore, and he has stood firm.

Soon after his accession to the Presidency he could have met the wishes of the reactionary elements in Germany, of those who dream night and day of a return of monarchy and militarism, by declaring himself dictator and thus undermining the growth of German democracy at the very outset of his career. The path to a dictatorship in the German Republic is easy. All the President need do—Hindenburg's stanch predeccor, Ebert, did. it—is .to. declare. a .state .of emergency, dissolve the Reichstag and rule over the land without parliamentary interference. This state of affairs can be prolonged month after month by insisting that the emergency still exists and postponing again and again the date for new Reichstag elections.

An Age of Alloys

Tools of iron probably fashioned the granite blocks of which the Pyramids are composed. . The Pyramids still stand; the tools have vanished, a prey to rust. How many relics of this age of steel will remain for the cditical examination of the archaeologist of the year 6000 A.D.? Our massive bridges, our gigantic electrical generators, our ships and their engines—what will be handed down to them if so little of the iron of antiquity has descended to us? If our skyscrapers had skeletons of gold, if golden locomotives ran on golden rails— in short, if gold had been the world's most abundant metal and if it had the strength and other physical properties of steel—the archaeological future could be left to shift for itself.

Iron and steel are popularly synonymous with durability. Only the chemist thinks of rust in terms of oxidation. Translated into the vernacular, the process of oxidation is nothing but a burning. Billions of tons of steel in buildings and machines are being slowly consumed by a flameless fire. A sum comparable with the national debt of a minor European State must be expended periodically for paints and protective devices. No less an authority than Sir Robert Hadfield of Sheffield has estimated that 29,000,000 tons of steel rust away in the world every year at a cost to civilized mankind of $1,400,000,000.

For nearly a generation the problem of the flameless fire that destroys iron and steel has been regarded as one of the most pressing that confronts not only industry but a civilization erected on engineering. The chemist knows the cause of rust and many of the factors that control its formation. Yet we see structural steel, barbed wire and neglected machinery encrusted with red barnacles—products of combustion as truly as are the ashes in a furnace. Despite this evidence the authorities who addressed the Institute of Chemistry at Pennsylvania State College last week looked forward optimistically to a rustless future. Co-operative research is the touchstone to be applied. Already the petroleum industry, compelled to add a rust charge of one cent to the price of a gallon of gasoline, is formulating plans for a nation-wide study. Corrosion losses in the refrigerating industry have been reduced 80 per cent. by co-operative research in two years at a cost of less than $8,000, Dr. Spelled assured his institute audience.

If we read the authorities aright, this corroding "age of steel" will give way to the "age of alloys.' Each industry according to Dr. Walter M. Mitchell, will develop its own corrosion-resisting metal; for "no single alloy will probably "ever be found that is universally applicable."

Here the new science of X-ray analysis steps in. A new chemistry has sprung into being. From a single X-ray picture the chemist will deduce at once whether or not a new metal will resist the tooth of the moist atmosphere. Gone is the necessity of waiting the outcome of a test lasting months and years. Indeed, Professor Wheeler P. Aavey, a leader in this field, predicts that alloys will be endowed with properties specified as precisely as an engineer specifies th required strength of the girders he needs for a bridge."

The Samoan Mandate

Manchester Guardian (Lib.)—In a territory so completely lacking in representative institutions as Samoa it is immensely difficut to judge how far criticism of the Government is widespread and justified. But at least the New Zealand Parliament is sufficiently satisfied with Sir George Richardson's execution of its mandate to strengthen his hand; and since New Zealand has been more than once commended by the League for its work in Samoa it would seem that no great wrong has yet been done.

CANADA AND THE ST. LAWRENCE

The publication of the note from the Prime Minister of Canada refusing for the present to enter into negotiations over a convention for the execution of the St. Lawrence waterway project is a sharp reminder that the famous proposal is, after all, an international affair. It is a point which seems sometimes to be overlooked by the American proponents of the plan. When, after a long series of studies extending back over many years, the second point engineering board fially brought in its favorable report at the end of last year, and when Mr. Hoover, as chairman of the American advisory commission on the economic and national aspects of the project, had presented this report to the President with the recommendation that an agreement should at once be negotiated with Canada it seemed that the greatest obstacles to the project had been overcome. The economic and engineering practicability of the scheme appeared to be promising, opposition in the Eastern sections of the country was fading before the distresses of the West and the support of the Administration was definitely pledged. All factors were favorable except one thing—the opinion in Canada.

It was noticed that the reception of Mr. Hoover's report in Canada was not enthusiastic. Mr. King's Liberal government, which had just extricated itself from disaster, found its most solid support in Quebec Province, and Quebec has consistently opposed a project which is thought to threaten the supremacy of its chief city. It has even been argued that the Canadian government could not legally carry out the canalization without the assent of the province. At the time Montreal newspapers pointed out that the joint engineering board was divided as between the American and Canadian representatives, and that the Canadian advisory commission, unlike the American one, had failed to bring in its report. Difficulties were emphasized; it was said that Ontario could find the power which it wants elsewhere than in the St. Lawrence, and that the Western wheat provinces were more interestd in the Hudson Bay than the St. Lawrence route. The Canadian railroads, which carry some 150,000,000 bushels of grain annually from the upper lake region, were not favorable.

Against this background it is easy to understand Premier King's hesitation. The differences between the American and Canadian mmbers of the engineering commission to which he points do not in themselves seem a very formidable obstacle. But as American opinion has been growing more favorable Canadian opinion seems to have been growing more cautious. Since the Hoover report there have come suggestions that the Canadian government might use the St. Lawrence as a bargaining point in other issues with the United States, such as those raised by our tariffs or the drainage canal controversy. And there have been fears lest the United States gain too much control over Canada's national river highway.

The St. Lawrence canal is an international project, containing the seeds of difficulty which international projects frequently do contain. When the Canadian advisory commission has reported we shall have a better understanding of their importance, but in the mean time we must not forget that this is a joint enterprise with another nation and that in prosecuting it the other nation's wishes will always have to be studied.—N.Y. Herald-Tribune.

Guns Replace Wedding Bells

The bang of many guns took the place of the conventional wedding bells when Miss Viola Hamilton, of Oshawa, and Bert M. Robinson, of Edmonton, were married recently in front of the Banff Gun Club House.

The happy couple had planned to be married in the evening but enthusiastic marksmen attending the Alberta Trap shooting championships refused to be denied and fired volley after volley in honor of the couple, who drove immediately to the Banff Springs Hotel for their honeymoon. The ceremony took place on the very spot where the groom had just finished a run of 25 straight targets.

The philosophers urge us to step onward and upward, but the modern world is mostly interested in stepping out.

Captain Thomas Drake, of Seattle, Washington, who sailed alone from Charleston, S.C., April 2th, in a 25-foot boat and landed in Plymouth, England, June 20th, pulled a stunt that is not to be sneezed at.

Let's Smile.

A smile is quite a funny thing,
It wrinkles up your face,
And when it's gone you never find
Its secret hiding place.
But far more wonderful it is
To see what smiles can do;
You smile at one, he smiles at you,
And so one smile makes two.

He smiles at someone since you smiled
And then that one smiles back;
And that one smiles until, in truth,
You fail in keeping track.
Now, since a smile can do great good,
By cheering hearts of care,
Let's smile and smile and not forget,
That smiles go everywhere.

The test of greatness is the number of kinds of soap, tobacco and hair oil named for you.

CHECKING UP ON QUAKE

Death Toll in China Last May May Be 100,000

Pekin—An unofficial, unconfirmed report from the remote province of Kansu reaching the China International Famine Relief Commission in Pekin recently led officials of that organization to the opinion that the death roll in the earthquake of May 23 may have reached 100,000.

At the present time there is no communication between the Pekin Government and the Kansu provincial regime, as the latter is dominated by Gen Feng Yu-hsiang, allied with the Nationalists. Moreover, the stricken area is far from Liangchow, the provincial capital, and it is unlikely that reliable reports have reched even Liangchow, as Chinese local authorities are notoriously apathetic in such disasters.

It is believed the quake was of unusual severity but that the damage was confined to the northern Kansu region in the vicinity of Liangchow. There is no means of making an authentic check, however, since the commission's Kansu committee, mostly issionaries, has dispersed because of foreign evacuation of the province. There are no other agencies capable of compiling estimates of casualties. The only foreigners in Lianvchow at the time were Mr. and Mrs. William Alpdus Belcher and Dr. Rand of the China Inland Mission, Britishers. They are known to have escaped injury.

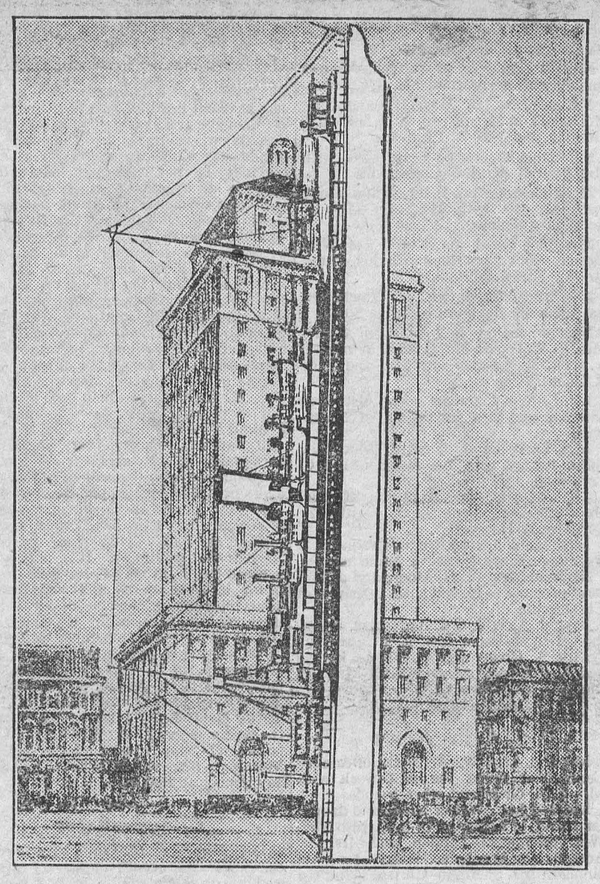
Liner's Length Compared



Few people realize the length of an ocean liner as they see the ship in port or at sea. The above illustration shows how, if turned on end by some giant hand, a 14,000-ton Cunard Canadian Service liner would top by some 150 feet the new 23-storey Royal Bank of Canada building, now under construction in Montreal. The bank towers 395 feet from the street level and is the tallest office building in the British Empire. The Cunarder Berengaria, one of the world's largest ships, is 919 feet long.

WEAK AND NERVOUS

The Condition of a P. E. I. Lady Who Again Rejoices in Good Health

"I can most heartily recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to all weak people," says Mrs. Augustin Arsenault, Wellington Station, P.E.I. "Before I began their use I was very weak and nervous. I had always worked hard, with no thought of my health, until suddenly my strength left me. I began to feel tired and depressed, and did not sleep well at night, feeling just as tired in the morning as when I went to bed at night. I began to feel discouraged when I would think of the work necessary for me to do. I got some medicine from the doctor whom I consulted, but it did not appear to meet my case as I showed no improvement while taking it. Then a neighbor advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I got a supply of this medicine. I very soon found they were helping me, and I continued their use until I was well again, and I have been strong and well ever since."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do one thing—and do it well. They build up, purify and enrich the blood, and as the blood supplies the whole body, new life is given to the entire system. Better sleep, steady nerves, improved appetite, increased vigor—all these can be yours by taking Dr. Williabs' Pink Pills. Begin to-day. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Only Son.

The Character of an Only Child is Often Marred by the Misplaced Kindness of the Parents

The modern baby is a heavy burden. His mother says so, and she ought to know. The young rascal, with that cheerful exuberance of personality which is the feature of this age, monopolises all his mother's time. Her energies are absorbed in supplying his needs, real and supposed. He is fussed with from morning till night.

His lightest cry brings his mother flying to his side like a fox-frightened her. The "drae precious" must not be allowed to scream lest something dreadful happen to him. "With a girl it's different, but a boy must never be allowed to scream." So the "dear precious," finding he can get anything he wants by shouting for it, shouts vigorously all day.

He is pampered in a manner which would have made his great-grandmother stare with amazement. His bath water must be gauged with a clinical themometer, instead of being tested with the back of the hand. His victuals are all scrupulously weighed, and compounded with due regard to their vitamines. He must her. The "dear precious" must not of the pips, or that because it might set up appendicitis; and this will give him stomach-ache, and that will induce hiccups.

Dust and dirt must not soil his dainty body. Therefore crawling on all fours, that delight of children of other generations, is forbidden to him.

"I couldn't dream of letting the darling crawl about," his idolising mother says. "The doctor tells me there are millions of germs in floor dust, and the dear sweetums might get all sorts of diseases."

All his toys must be of the hygienic variety, safe and uninteresting. Not for him the—

"purple monkey,
"Climbing up a yellow stick."

There is too great a fear in his mother's mind that he would—

"suck the paint all off,
"And make him deathly sick."

He must not play with the little boy and girl next door. They may be sickening for scarlatina or chickenpox; or, even worse, they may teach him bad manners.

So the embryo citizen begins life in glorious isolation.

One day the autocratic stranger, who is only about the house at weekends, issues a fiat.

"Come now, old girl, that youngster must start school."

Floods of tears from mother and boy.

"He shan't go to a disgusting elementary school, so there."

Mollycoddled to 'Manhood'

The autocratic stranger compromised, and feminine snobbery trimuphs.

The tearful mamma finds solace in the prospectus of a dame school at the end of the street, offering "Refined instructions to little boys and girls, by staff of Gentlewomen. Manners and deportment Prominent Features."

Though his destination is but a couple of hundred yards off, his fond mother must see him to and fro. When the sun shines, her darling boy must keep his hat on, lest he gets a sunstroke. In light rain he is sheathed in oilskins.

Later on, she will choose everything he needs, buy his underclothing, and tell him when to change it.

He will have to refuse any billet which will take him too far from home; and she will choose his wife, if, indeed, she allow him to have one at all.

Overdrawn? Not at all. Scores of such cases exist in every town. It is a dangerous concentration of the mother-complex.

NO BETTER MEDICINE FOR LITTLE ONES

Is What Thousands of Mothers Say of Baby's Own Tablets.

A medicine for the baby or growing child—one that the mother can feel assured is absolutely safe as well as efficient—is found in Baby's Own Tablets. The Tablets are praised by thousands of mothers throughout the country. These mothers have found by actual experience that there is no other medicine for little ones to equal them. Once a mother has used them for her children she will use nothing else. Concerning them Mrs. Charles Hutt, Tancock Island, N.S., writes: "I have ten children, the baby being just six months old. I have used Baby's Own Tablets for them for the past 20 years and can truthfully say that I know of no better medicine for little ones. I always keep a box of the Tablets in the house and would advise all other mothers to do so."

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by all medicine dealers or will be mailed upon receipt of price, 25 cents per box, by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

U.S. AND ENGLAND

London Discusses Proposed Treaty for Peace With U.S.A.

London—Suggestions have been revived for negotiating 100 years' peace treaty between Great Britain and the United States, and it is understood that the actual treaty has been privately drafted by an eminent legal authority here on suggestions made by Americans in a private capacity

There is some reluctance in British official circles, however, to admit the necessity for such a treaty or to sponsor it. Naturally all are for peace between the two countries, but it is argued that as there is never any thought of any other condition than peace there is no reason o "put peace into harness." It would be preferable, many think, to leave relations as they are as the best guarantee of peace between the two nations.

After the failure of the Geneva conference, the British Government is naturally reluctant to open negotiations with the United States for 100 years' peace treaty because of the fear that such negotiations might fail, and failure, it is pointed out, would be interpreted as meaning that the relations between London and Washington were not so happy as they would seem.

For the time being at any rate the Government is not likely to make any move, the British United Press understands.

The railroads would like to see automobile trucks taxed heavily, but the railroad operators should look a little further ahead—it won't be long before airplanes carrying perishable freight will be the hottest competition the railroads have ever had.

Why Gum-Dipped Mileage Costs Less "Per Mile"

The demand from car owners for Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires has given Firestone Dealers a large increase in volume that enables them to sell these tires to you at the lowest prices in the history of the industry.

The Firestone Balloon Tread, scientifically designed three years ago, and unchanged today has the wear-resisting qualities that give thousands of extra miles.

This tread must be placed on a carcass that has the qualifications to withstand terrific flexing. The Firestone carcass is made of cords dipped in rubber solution which not only saturates and insulates every fibre of every cord, but unifies sidewalls with carcass, eliminating any possibility of separation under the extreme flexing of low-pressure tires.

The Firestone Dealer in your locality will gladly explain the Gum-Dipping process, the scientifically designed tire tread, and other advantages that only Gum-Dipped Tires can give. See him today.

Life's Darkest Moment.

The return to the home town of the "local boy" who has made good in the big city is rarely, we have understood, what it might be. In connection with this we have to report the particularly sad experience of a young banker who, after eight years of absence, alighted at the station of the town of his birth. There was, despite his expectations, no one on the platform whom he knew. No one. Discouraged, he sought out the baggage master, a friend since boyhood. To him, at least he would be welcome, and he was about to extend a hearty greeting, when the other spoke first.

It Rid the System of Rheumatism

Lasting relief was obtained when the uric acid poisons were cleansed from the system by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

After all there is nothing like Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to get rid of the poisons in the system which cause pains, aches, lumbago and rheumatism, Dr. Chase's Liniment affords relief from the pain but to get rid of the cause it is necessary to go deeper and regulate the action of kidneys, liver and bowels.

Mrs. Ada Kincade, Drayton, Ont., writes:—

"For years my husband suffered from rheumatism. He tried treatment from many doctors, but received little relief. He also tried several remedies recommended, without avail. Two years ago after he had been unable to move or turn in bed for several weeks, a neighbor came in and recommended Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I went down and purchased a box of these, which seem to have entirely relieved him, for he has never had an attack since. I take great pleasure in recommending these pills to anyone suffering from rheumatism."

The United Church

(Contributed)

Rev. H. M. Servage's forcible and helpful messages on Sunday were much enjoyed. He took John 13 verses 34 and 35 as his morning text. He said that our great task is the winning of the world to Christ. There are about a thousand million people who have not heard of Jesus and His love. We have the great task of Christianizing Canada where there are thousands of people outside the church. The reason of this may be that there has been a tendency in our churches to emphasize formalism and creed and we forget the great theme of love. All through Christs teaching he emphasized love. Mr. Servage referred to the continual strife between capital and labor and quoted N. W. Rowell as saying "The task of the church is to create an atmosphere in which these problems can find solution." We were urged to go forth in the spirit of good will because love is the great uniting force. Miss Annie Walker gave a new and interesting rendition of "Rock of Ages." Rev Mr. Adams assisted in both services.

The evening text was chosen from Psalm 121 verses 1and 2. Mr, Servage said that natue plays a very important part in our life. He said it is well always to turn away from the ordinary task and look up. He spoke of the spiritual mountains, classifying them as ranges of of service, mountains of sacrifice sheltering and saving hills, challenging us to be the best that we can be. It is only as we get into the hills that we are able to go down into the valley and help others Jesus must take possessions of our hearts if we are to be successful. He paid a fine tribute to the high temperance principles of Winchester in days gone by, and told of the influence this had upon his life.

Rev. Mr. Servage made a fine impression at his first appearance here and he will be gladly heard again. Next Sunday the pastor Rev. J. A. Waddell will be home and have charge of the service Morning service will be at 10:30 and Sunday School at 2:30 p. m.

Gilmer—Bates

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Archie Bates, was the scence of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday p. m. at 3 o'clock August 24th when their younger daughter became the bride of Mr. Earl Gilmer of South Mountain.

The home was beautifully decorated with streamers and cut flowers. The bride looked charming in a gown of Tangerine georgette and cut velvet. She carried a bouquet of sweet peas and maiden hair fern and entered the drawing room leaning on the arm of her father, to the strains of Lohengreine wedding march played by Mrs. Clarke Hyndman.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. D. McLeod pastor of the church where the bride has always been an active worker.

After the singning of the register and receiving the congraulations of the assembled guest all sat down to a sumptuous dinner, after which cars were in readiness to take the entire party to the station where the happy bride and groom took the evening train to Ottawa amid showers of good wishes and confette. The bride travelling in a brown crepe gown with hat and coat to match. The display of gifts testified to the populiarity of both Mr. and Mrs. Gilmer. On their return a reception will be held at the home of the groom's parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilmer have the best wishes of a large circle of friends for a long and happy married life.
