Oldest lady resident dies at Cornwall

Morrisburg's beloved historian and one of her oldest residents, Miss Isabella Kyle Farlinger, passed away on Sunday at the Cornwall General Hospital, following an illness of several months.

Many expressions of genuine regret were heard at the death of this gracious lady, a friend to everyone, who during her long life here, loved to receive guests in her beautiful ancestral home "Belmont" which was demolished a few years ago, in the path of the Seaway construction.

One of the very few remaining links with the historic past of this part of the country, she was born at Belmont, one of 13 children of the late Capt. Alexander Farlinger and his wife, Isabella Kyle. Her great grandfather was Nicholas Farlinger, one of the United Empire Loyalists who helped to settle Dundas County. Miss Farlinger was very proud of her historic heritage, and the necessity to leave her beautiful old home caused her much pain.

She attended local schools and the Ottawa Ladies' College. Though the major part of her life was spent here she travelled abroad frequently during her younger, more active years.

A talented writer and a keen collector of historical items of interest, she furnished many historical articles and items to newspapers and magazines, and since the establishment of the museum at Upper Canada Village, had been of immense assistance to officials, both with generous donations, and with her vast knowledge of a bygone era in Morrisburg.

She was a member of the I.O.D.E. and attended the Morrisburg United Church.

Surviving her are one brother, Mr. Ernest Farlinger of River Road West, and one sister, Mrs. J. C. Casselman (Florence), of Morrisburg. There are also 4 nephews and 5 nieces.

The body rested at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Farlinger, River Road West until Tuesday at 2.00 p. m., when a brief service was held for members of the family. At. 2.30 funeral service was held in Morrisburg United Church, conducted by her minister, Rev. J. Maxwell Allan, who took his text from John, 14. The hymns were the 23rd Psalm and "Forever With The Lord". Mr. Gordon W. Thom sang a beautiful solo, "In the Garden" accompanied by Mrs. George Smith at the organ.

Interment was made in the family plot at Fairview cemetery.

Honorary pall bearers were Fred H. Broder, Fred A. Graham, George H. Challies, S. G. Finnie, Roy Geach and George E. Beavers.

Active pall bearers were A. Farlinger Casselman, Alexander Farlinger, Fred Farlinger, Allan Farlinger, Arthur Wallace, and Magistrate Glen Strike.

HONOURED PRIOR TO DEPARTURE

Mr. and Mrs. Elisha T. McIntyre were honoured last Thursday at a surprise party, prior to their departure from Morrisburg for Brockville.

Mr. McIntyre for many years was caretaker at the Morrisburg High School where he made many fast friends. Teachers, students and friends gathered at the Legion Hall. Following a program of solos by Miss Marion Jackson, Mrs. E. Cornell and Mrs. W. Neild, an accordion solo by Miss Lynn Presley and a sing-song Mrs. McIntyre was presented with a corsage of red roses and Mr. McIntyre with a matching boutoniere. An address was read by Mrs. J. Vaughan and the couple received a purse of over $200 from the master of ceremonies, J. Harvey Johnston. Mrs. Johnston led in snging "For They are Jolly Good Fellows" and refreshments were served.

LITTLE LEAGUERS HAVE GREAT SEASON

Morrisburg's Little League Softball team, sponsored by the Morris-Police Boys Club, and with O. P. P. Constable Wm. Eady as coach-manager wound up a great season last Saturday. During the regular season these little fellows played 16 games and were successful in winning 14.

Last Saturday in a four team tournament at Winchester, they were not so successful being beaten by the youngsters from Williamsburg. They wer playing for the new trophy donated by Dalton Kenney, of Flora's Restaurant, Winchester. The team from that town beat Mariatown's young hopefuls in the prelims and then went on to defeat Williamsburg and take the cup. Warden John Fader, reeve of Winchester, threw out the first ball to get the tournament off to a rousing start.

The aspiring big leaguers and their mothers are very grateful to Constable Eady for his support and encouragment during the season.

Council wants sewer system corrected

At a meeting between the Morrisburg village Council and Mr. A. E. K. Bunnell of the Department of Municipal Affairs, council presented a detailed account of the three main physical problems eisting at Morrisburg since Seaway demolition. They listed sewage system, water system and sewage disposal system as most unsatisfactory.

Council also endeavoured to relay several economic problems existing in the village but Mr. Bunnell stated that he did not feel that he was in a position to discuss these matters. However, he expressed his willingness to prepare a brief in connection with sewage and water problems to be presented to Hon. W. K. Warrender.

At the regular council meeting on Monday evening, Mr. Parker Locke requested Council to support his request that the beverage room at the Loyalist Hotel be permitted to remain open until 12 midnight during the week and until 11.30 Saturday nights. Council agreed to pass a resolution supporting his request.

James Langabeer, representing the Loyal Orange Lodge, requested rights and privileges for concessions and co-operation of police and Hydro on the occasion of the Orange Walk being held at Morrisburg, on July 12, 1961. Reeve Thom pointed out that since another council would be in office at that time, Mr. Langabeer should again present his request in January. Reservation of the auditorium for the full day of July 12th was authorized.

Chief Constable Duvall presented the police report and requested that a cross walk at Maud St. on Highway 31, to protect children going to and from the schools.

Fire Chief Gordon Servage requested that 200 feet of hose be purchased to replace deteriorated equipment as per the Fire Marshall's instruction. Prices will be ascertained for this equipment.

A "Firemen's Ball will be held in the auditorium of the Civic Centre on Friday, October 28th, with proceeds to be used towards the purchase of uniforms.

DEMONSTRATION AT HORTICULTURAL SY.

Mrs. Dalton Merrill and Mr. Fred A. Graham addressed members of the Morrisburg Horticultural Society and gave visual demonstrations of dividig roots and re-planting iris and peonies.

Mrs Merrill explained that iris thrives in any type of soil that has no acid. Fertilizer produces a lush growth of foliage but few flowers. Bone meal used after the blooming season assures better flowering. Rhyzomes should be planted only 1 to 2 inches below the surface of the ground in well-drained soil; otherwise, crown rot may develop.

Mr. Graham said "a good general rule to follow in transplanting perennials is to take a date four weeks after flowering. To ensure bloom in one to two years with peonies at least five or six root buds should be present on the clump. They may be planted in any good garden soil in the open, never in the shade. Green manure is bad for any perennial. Peat moss and bone meal are beneficial".

An interesting meeting is planned for October. A group of horticulturists from Ottawa will present a programme of films, demonstrations and talks with a question and answer period. It will be hel dTuesday, October 11 at the Civic Building. Refreshments will be served.

PLAN WEINER ROAST FOR LADS AND DADS

Members of the Morrisburg Police Boys' Club will enjoy a weiner roast now being planned for Saturday, October 1st. The big feed will be free to club members; others must pay 50c. It is planned to hold the roast near the Nash Creek. The young club members will be accompanied by their fathers.

INSTITUTE HEARS TALK ON SAFETY

Constable C. D. Wilson of the O. P. P. detachment in Cornwall, addressed Morrisburg Women's Institute on the subject of "Highway Safety" at their meeting last Thursday, opening the new season.

The majority of traffic accidents, he said, are caused by speeding. It would appear that most frequently the good drivers are involved in accidents — not teen agers, and not women. Sometimes a young person is involved, but all in all they are not prominent. Considering the percentage of women drivers on the road today it is surprising how few become embroiled in accidents.

Many factors contribute, weather conditions, road conditions, faulty equipment but the chief causes are violations of the traffic act. Drivers must obey the rules of the road and show courtesy at intersections and danger areas.

Constable Wilson explained the point system, which has reduced the accident rate. Twelve points are allotted to a driver for a two year period. When six points have been lost for infractions of the law, the driver receives a letter of warning from the Department. At the nine point level he is called into Ottawa for an interview, and when he loses all twelve points, his driving privileges are cancelled. After two years lost points are erased from the record.

Law enforcement agencies do much to cut down accidents on the road, but other contributing factors are important. Service clubs sponsor safety programs, churches teach moral responsibility, parents teach their children by example and instruction and school safety teaching encourages the child to obey traffic laws at all times.

Mrs. Wm. Baker thanked Constable Wilson for his complete and understanding coverage of the problem.

A short course "What Makes a Good Officer" will be held at the Civic Centre on Wednesday October 5 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. This will be sponsored by The Home Economics Service with Mrs. Maynard in charge.

MORRISBURG SPOTLIGHT

BY TEE-PEE

The thought reading machine has been in operation for a few days. Some of the thoughts of some of the characters around town we could not publish. However some we have had tuned in are quite interesting. One person, who shall go nameless, has been thinking seriously about the municipal nominations this fall .The following is recorded. "Wonder who will be runnng....gee, this is a thankless job....I wonder if my wife will go for me seeking nomination again this year....wonder who is going to run for the reeveship.... well, there is one thing certain, after all the time and work you put in, all you get is a lot of abuse....some people even go so far as to say that the people in office do nothing.... they should have a go at it....well, I suppose I will run again....this stuff certainly gets in your blood.... the members of the council certainly get the works....why don't the people offer a little praise some time .....after all, someone has to do the job....costs of operation are going up all the time, and materials are getting very costly....how in the name of goodness are we going to lower the taxes? You tell me....all departments of town work cost so much....I wish someone would come forward with a real idea on how to reduce costs. Well, November will tell who the brave people are who will devote their time and energy to this thankless task."

From a news item we read in the city papers, it looks very much like a fact that Chalk River will be the chosen location for the new Police College. 35 acres of land has been made available for the project, and although the above named municipality has large Government works there, it looks like another case of "them that has, gets". Morrisburg will have to go all out to try to obtain some type of industry, or its equivalent, if we are to obtain any relief in unemployment, and help in the cost of maintaining the municipality on such a basis that property owners will be able to keep up the tax payments. This area is one of the hardest hit by the present lack of employment. We must soon get the relief we need, or the storekeepers will have a really tough time of it.

Please come to the RED CROSS BLOOD CLINIC

A Blood Donors Clinic to be held under the auspices of the Morrisburg branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society will take place in the Morrisburg Civic Building on Monday, October 3rd, 1960 during the afternoon and evening.

Anyone wishing to give blood at this time is urged to contact Mrs. S. G. Finnie, Chairman of the Blood Donors Committee for further details. Watch the local papers for further and more detailed information at a later date.

EUROPE AND THE UNITED KINGDOM

SOEST, West Germany — Our story this week will interest our pub lishers of weekly newspapers, and we hope, our readers. We visited "The Beaver", th weekly newspaper of the 4th Canadian Infantry Brgade Group and for once sinc arriving here found ourselves in our own element.

We sat in the editorial office at Headquarters, and we went downtown to the Soester Anzeiger where Herr Jahn prints the Beaver. We rev elled in the smell of ink and the clatter of the Linotypes and presses.

The Beaver had its beginning in The Welfare News, published in the early days by Herr Herbert Hertrampf. Working with the Welfare Officer, he devised the idea to acquaint the newcomers of services available ,theatres, radio and churches.

In May, 1957, Brigadier Roger Rowley assented to the establishment of the weekly newspaper, and in the first issue appealed for the fullest co-operation. The Beaver took on like wildfire.

As the Canadian weekly mirrors its town, The Beaver has carried that tradition in its service to the Canadian serviceman and his family in a foreign land.

Capt. "Jim" Mitchell of the Queen's Own Rifles, a former infantryman with The Winnipeg Rifles, is editor. His home background (and his pipe) fitted him for the job. In Winnipeg he wrote up the junior basketball and hockey leagues with which he was associated, and also the Manitoba Young Liberals of whom he was vice president. In fact, he said, he was in The Tribune office so much that most of the employees looked upon him as a member of the staff.

The second senior man next to Herr Hertampf, in terms of service with The Beaver, is a Scotsman whose life story makes a thrilling tale.

Dick O'Neill of Hamilton, Scotland served in Montgomery's old regiment went through Dunkirk, met the Canadians first at Falaise, secondly at a detention camp, served at the war crimes trials, and was a WO II at the Werl Prison, near here, where the German prsoners were impounded in cluding Kurt Meyer.

Dick is a civilian employee of the brigade and his fluent German makes h ma valued member of The Beaver, especally as advertising manager.

The other two employees are two German girls who speak excellent English. Ruth Held is Capt. Mitchell's "right hand man" at the editorial office and looks after the births column, an important section of The Beaver. Renate Milbradt assists with proofreadin gand writes "The Women's World". Last week she told the Canadian wives "It's Beer That Makes Your Thirst a Pleasure".

Beer is universal in Germany, and an old proverb says that a glass of beer a day is good for health and complexion. Can you housewives imagine Beer Soup — Homemade Style

The set-up of The Beaver is very much like our own weeklies. They have unit correspondents who take the place of our country correspondents. Regular features include "Community News" of Hemer, Werl and Soest, where the Permanent Married Quarters are located; The Sportlight, "Gunner's Salvo", radio programs of Canadian Army Europe and British Forces Network, Church Directory, Hussar Highlights, Sapper News, "Jimmy's Jotting", cinema programs at the several Forts, The Watchword (Black Watch), The Watchdog Beat (Provost Corps), camera, legal and travel columns, and news from back home.

Advertising runs from local car dealers (who do a land office business with the Canadians) to camera dealers (who likewise love the Canadians), sports equipment, national ads, the Bank of Montreal with branches in the three communities, and a full page from Maple Leaf Services which parallels the chain store.

The Beaver is printed in the shop of Soest's daily newspaper. If weekly publishers in Canada think they have troubles, not one of these Linotype operators knows any English, nor com positors nor pressment! Printer's measures are in centimeters, and German terms are used in proofreading and copy marking.

It was a wonderful afternoon, and we left wishing "Jim" Mitchell and his staff continued success.

DUNBRIK-JETS WIND UP WITH SHIELD

Edward A. Daughteray, sports director for the City of Ottawa was guest speaker at the banquet held in the Legion Hall for the Junior C softball championship team. Morrisburg Dunbrik Jets won the shield which was presented to the team captain, Catherine Merrill by Mr. Daughteray, secretary-treasurer of the Eastern Ontario Amateur Softball Association.

Mr. Daughteray, addressing the members of the team said "The aim of the Association is to give boys and girls of all ages an opportunity to play softball. Sport is a great leveller. It attracts people of all ages, classes and conditions. The spirit is there to get out and do the best with what one has".

Police Chief Thomas Duvall was master of ceremonies. He expressed his pride and that of Morrisburg in the achievement of the young ladies who wore the colours of the Dunbrik ets. Catherine Merrill then presented the shield to Fred Hill, sponsor of the team to keep on display for the forthcoming year.

Devera Baker and Irene Armstrong, on behalf of the team, presented gifts of combination pocket-t ble lighters to Chief Duvall, coach Gordon Organ, manager Lee Deeks and Aplin Street who had supplied transportation for out-of-town games

At the close of the banquet meeting, each member of the team recived a crest from Chief Duvall.

BROWN — McHAFFIE

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized by the Rev. Fry in the Presbyterian Church at Iroquois, on Saturday, September 3rd when Carole McHaffie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd McHaffie of Morrisburg, was united in marriage with Earl Brown of Williamsburg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stan Brown.

For her wedding the bride wore a beige dress wit hmatching accessories and a corsage of red roses. The attendants were Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Brown of Mariatown.

Following the reception which was held at Mr. and Mrs. S. Brown's, the couple left on their honeymoon for Niagara Falls.

APPLE BLOSSOMS AT UPPER CANADA VILLAGE

Mr. Fred C. Casselman brought to the Leader Office on Monday a sample of apple blossoms which he had picked on Sunday at Upper Canada Village. The blossoms were of the Duchess variety ,and came from a tree which had been transplanted to Upper Canada Village during the winter, while in the dormant state.

Neighbors Call Them "Salt Of The Earth"

Now we are in the season of long hot days and long hot nights. "Over a hundert yesterday," the farmers tell each other. Not complaining but with deep satisfaction, for this is ideal corn-growing weather.

This is the time of year when early rising is a joy. The world is fresh; the air is sweet with the smell of dew on growing things; and coolness is laid like a balm over the fields which will be roasting hot by noon.

Early as we may be, the Zaugg's breakfast-fire is already going, sending a thin, pale column of smoke up into the dawn-tinted air. "Another fine day in prospect," we say, for according to Amos, that reliable weather prophet, smoke always goes straight up on a clear day.

Dew sparkles on the hayfield, empty now of bundles, the hillside marked with spaces of lighter straw to indicate where they lay, and on the field of soybeans. To our eyes, nothing is quite so beautiful on the farm as a good stand of "beans," as they are casually referred to hereabout. Their bushy tops, vibrantly green, march in straight rows and stand straight as arrows. Corn at this season seems more like a decoration than provender, but soybeans from the start look as if they knew their mission in life and meant to fulfill it.

In the vegetable gardens the hot still days ripen the rosy globes of tomatoes and make the corn sugar-sweet. Field beans are ready for eating now, giving more substance, it seems, than the early bunch beans. In the South, field beans are usually cooked three hours with chunks of bacon for seasoning, and have ears of sweet corn or the cut-off whole kernels laid over them for the last thirty minutes. Here, corn and beans go into separate pots, but the result is equally delicious.

The rich coloring of the countryside is predominately yellow now. Yellow flowers are everywhere reflecting the glow of the sun: yellow clover, wild mustard, and lemon lilies line the highways, while out in the fields the sunny centres of oxeye daisies point the way to where the gian mullen thrusts its yellow candles toward the burning blue sky.

The fragile blooms of spring are gone, and the bloom of summer has given us a sturdier, richer beauty. The insects have come into their own. Butterflies are winging everywhere, their marvelous colors denying their grublike beginnings, and out in the mown hayfield the crickets seem to be holding a convention.

Ancient Orientals kept crickets in captivity for their music, and many ornate cricket cages" ch repose in museums roughout the country are proof f the fact. Yet one wonders how very starved for music they must have been to find a cricket's dry rasp pleasant.

If they had only captured bobolinks, we say. Out across the meadow comes the deliriously happy, sparkling song of this small bird. Perhaps he is sitting in the patch of sweet-scented crimson clover, or even flying. For this is one of the few birds that has the gift of singing as he flies. And his song is the most exciting of all bird music. It bursts forth as an explosion of melody.

This, too, is the tourist season, and our highways are filled with cars driven by people who wish to see the country known as Pennsylvania Dutch, with its lush green fields and rolling hills, its beautiful big barns decorated with hex signs. Tourists want to see the covered bridges, the farmers' markets, the old mills, the stone farmhouses, the shaded streams. But most of all they wish to see the Plain People, writes Mabel Slack Shelton in the Christian Science Monitor.

They have read such items as: "The Amishman is conspicuous by his broad-brimmed hat, square haircut, drab suit, and Brother Jonathan chin-patch. He lives plainly and prefers to barter rather than pay cash. He refuses to own any vehicle or piece of machinery that 'rides on rubber.' His chief mode of travel is horse and buggy, thought he will ride buses or make use of cars 'for hire.'" They are storehouses of information on Amish ways — yet so poorly informed about the people themselves.

We find ourselves wishing they could all hear what the rural postman has to say about the Amish along his route.

Along about eleven in the morning, the postman stops his car at the mailboxes in our vicinity. And what an important event in our lives that is! With one of the longest routes in the state to serve, he drives 86 miles six days a week over ridges, down valleys, on gravel or packed-dirt roads much of the way. Yet he is always friendly, courteous, and cheerful when we meet him at the box to buy stamps or a money order. And always he has some amusing tale to tell of happenings along his route.

'Just now helped Mrs. Kornhaus drive a bunch of pigs off the road. They'd escaped from the barn lot; the men were away, and she couldn't round them up by herself," he may say. Or it is perhaps some other incident that has enlivened his day — and ours.

Non-Amish himself, "the carrier," as he is called, is lavish in his praise of the Amish patrons he serves.

With these folk, the favors all go one way," he says. "Some other people leave notes asking for a hundred stamps, and add that I should put them on the hundred Christmas cards in the box. Or they telephone my home before I leave in the morning and ask me to shop the supermarket for them — in spite of the fact that my wife and I have a small grocery store of our own. But not the Amish. They are more apt to leave a thermos of hot cocoa in the box in winter, or cold lemonade in summer, with cake or hot bread wrapped in foil. One box has something good in it every Friday, baking day. That is the day my wife does not pack a lunch for me; we've come to count on it, and they never fail me."

It is impossible not be become involved with people whom you serve so intimately, and the job is a combination of many things, the postman says. "You get hard luck stories, and often hard words from customers who dislike having third-class mail left in their boxes, or unavoidable late deliveries, like the time I stopped the car to check on something and looked up to find I had settled into a hood-high snow drift.

"This makes the kindness extended by the Amish more appreciated than ever. You think everyone just takes the mail for granted; then these good people make you feel you are important to them. Take this family here (and he indicated the Zaugg farmhouse); they always sweep a path for my car so I don't have to guess where the road is in a drift. The Bible speaks of the salt of the earth, and to my way of thinking, that is what these people are."

How can one explain to tourists that straw-hatted, barefooted Amish boys are just as much fun to play with as other boys? Or that drab suits and old-fashioned dresses do not mean drab souls? We might borrow a few phrases from the rural postman and say, also, that the Zauggs and others like them have shown us paths we might not otherwise have found. They are indeed the salt of the earth, and the salt has not lost its savor.

TABLE TALKS

by Jane Andrews.

Everyone should have an Uncle Ralph. Mine was a tall, curly-haired man whose added years never dimmed his boyish zest and sense of fun. His geniality and kindness sprang not from theory but from a genuine and spontaneous affection for his fellow man, and everyone — relatives, streetcar conductors, store clerks—responded.

Uncle Ralph, like many men of his generation, was thoroughly at home in the kitchen. His wife was an excellent cook, but he could fend for himself when the need arose. He had a way with children, too: as a tot, I was disinclined to eat tomatoes, but Uncle Ralph corrected that. He sat me on his knee, piled an abundance of sugar on tomato slices, and coaxed me into trying them. Before I knew what was happening, I had discovered that tomatoes were much nicer than I had thought.

In later years I realized that Uncle Ralph had simply applied culinary knowledge: a bit of sugar adds immeasurably to the flavor of certain vegetables, not only tomatoes but peas, corn on the cob, turnip, and some others. It can be added to the cooking water, or used when you season the vegetables for the table. A little experimenting will tell you how much you like to use. Try starting with a teaspoon.

One of Unle Ralph's best contributions to cooks is his method of making corn bread. Every housewife knows that there are times when a hot bread will make an otherwise ordinary meal seem rather special. But, if the making of the hot bread is a long process, it often does not get made, writes Gertrude P. Lancaster in The Christian Science Monitor.

The special virtue of Uncle Ralph's method, I feel, is that there is no creaming process, and few dishes are needed. The first thing to do is to put together in a bowl a cup of sifted pastry flour, ½ cup of corn meal, ½ cup sugar, 3 teaspoons baking powder, and ½ teaspoon of salt. I find it very simple to sift flour onto a large piece of waxed paper; then when I have measured what I need into a cup, the balance can just be poured back into the flour container from the paper, and there is no messy residue to wash up from the shelf.

To the flour mixture add a beaten egg to which you have added a cup of milk. Stir in also 4 tablespoons of melted butter, pour into a greased pan and bake about 15-20 minutes at 400-425° F.

I use an 8-inch square pan. This gives corn bread about 1½ inches high, and will serve about six people — depending on how hungry they are! If the members of your family prefer thinner corn bread, use a 9-inch square pan or its equivalent.

This corn bread is not dry or crumbly. I always use yellow corn meal, and the bread is a golden yellow. If your sweet tooth is not active, you can use somewhat less sugar, but I'd recommend making it as described the first time, and see if you don't agree that this makes a superb product.

Chemical Warfare More Humane ?

The chemical plopped into the eye of the plump, white rabbit. Within seconds, the animal's legs buckled. He fell on his side, seized by uncontrollable convulsions. In two minutes, the rabbit was dead, a victim of nerve gas. Then Sparky, a friendly mongrel with long black hair, stepped into the glass cage. A colorless gas was blown into the enclosure. Instantly, Sparky was paralyzed and numb, a victim of an "incapacitating agent." It should have taken him three or four hours to recover, but a doctor injected an antidote and in two minutes he was up and running around.

These grim little scenes were put on last month as the U.S. Army offered newsmen their first look at the Dugway Proving Ground in Utah, where chemical and biological warfare agents (CW and BW for short) are tested.

CW and BW, banned from warfare by the 1925 Geneva Convention, have been the subject of a moral bombardment for years. One reason the Army is bringing its hush-hush program into the open, said Army Research Director Richard Morse, is so that "we can talk this over in an orderly, reasonable way."

As Col. Joseph Prentice explained: "This may be a more humane type of warfare. I've seen men die by a flame thrower — it's horrible. With some of these agents you go relatively easy . . ."

THE LAST STRAW

A jail inmate in San Jose, Calif., took offense when fans booed his decisions as umpire during a basketball game between prisoners and deputy sheriffs. He stomped off the field — and disappeared.

Drives His Car On Railway Tracks

Canadians do 85 per cent of their travelling by automobile, these days. In consequence, railway passenger services are suffering.

But a few wily railroaders are making the best of both means of transportation. A. R. Wilson, the Canadian National Railways' superintendent of the Belleville Division, in Southern Ontario, is a typical example.

He gets around his territory in "The Sputnik," a hefty, eight-cylinder station wagon that operates on both tracks and highways. Many a motorist, stalled in a traffic jam, has envied Mr. Wilson's ability to buzz along on uncrowded rails.

He gave up his private railroad business car three years ago. It could, to be sure, be coupled to any passing train and hauled to the next station where he had to transact railway business. But there were too many unproductive waits between trains to suit him.

So he got the station wagon and had his machinists put sets of flange wheels on it, fore and aft. These flange wheels are on rigid hydraulic mounts. For rail operation they are jacked down in close proximity to the tires, and hold the tires to the rail surfaces. Customary cruising speed on the tracks — subject to railways regulations of course — is 60 miles per hour.

On the tracks, it's a train. It can only be operated as such by a person who has written a conductor's examination. This posed no problem for Mr. Wilson. He set up many of the questions on this paper, having been a CNR inspector.

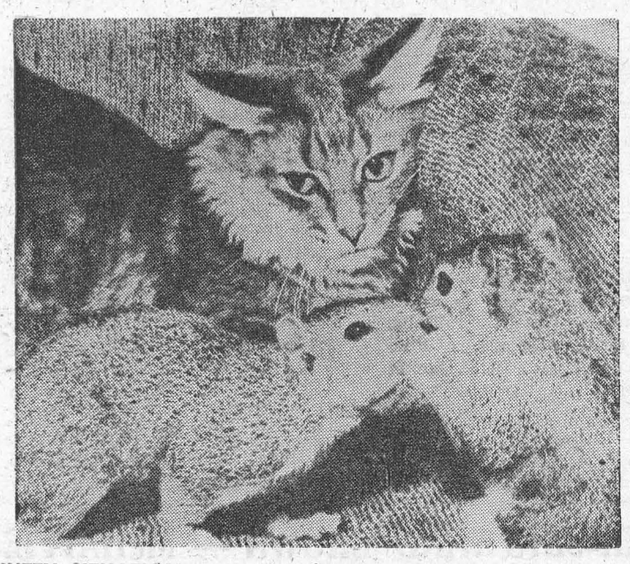
But the Sputnick must have the same running lights, at night, as a locomotive.

And it has a locomotive serial number painted on the transparent, illuminated dome on its roof. This leads to a bit of embarrassment, now and then. Citizens shout "Taxi!" when they see the Sputnik rolling by. They become irate if Mr. Wilson ignores their hail.

The machine spends about 40 per cent of its working life on the rails. Before it begins a railroad trip, though, Mr. Wilson has to check in with his despatcher and obtain a train order. But he doesn't make like the Super-Continental at crossings.

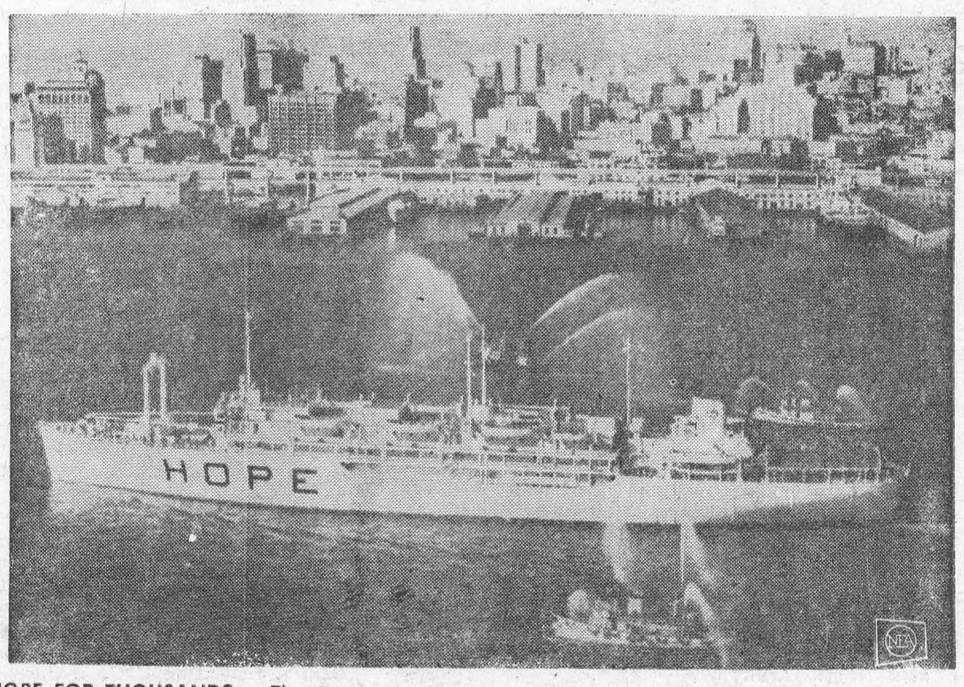
"Not me!" he insists. "The Sputnik is harder to spot from the highways than a train." (It's painted a bright yellow).

"I slow down for crossings whether I'm on the rails or the road. I'd rather keep my health than argue about the right of way!" — by Lex Schrag in "Imperial Oilways."



NUTTY SITUATION — It must be that animal magnetism has brought these three strange bedfellows together. Koko the cat adopted the 10-week-old squirrels after they were found abandoned.

THE WEIGHING SPOON — Measuring spoon in London, England, has tiny scale built into its long handle so housewife gets just the right amount of various cooking ingredients. It will accurately measure up to 8 ounces.



HOPE FOR THOUSANDS — The SS Hope, a wartime veteran rechristened in the name of international aid, arrives in San Francisco amid welcoming sprays from fireboats. The hospital ship will head for the Far East.

Bring all your personal credit needs under one roof

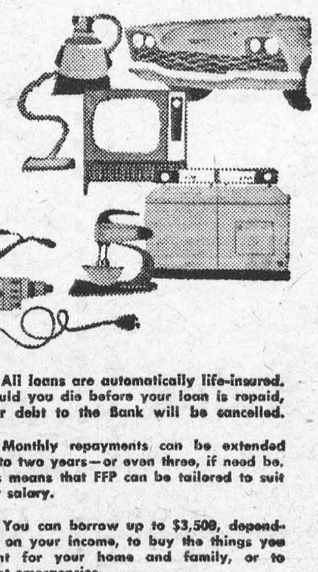
Here is the modern approach to finance the things you want to buy for your home and family . . . to take care of expenses for school, college, vacation and so on . . . and, of course, to meet emergencies.

The Bank of Montreal Family Finance Plan enables you to plan your purchases and helps you meet unexpected expenses under one single comprehensive plan.

Here are four good reasons why — whether single or married — you should use the Bank of Montreal Family Finance Plan . . .



"MY BANK" TO 2 MILLION CANADIANS B of M

1. All loans are automatically life-insured. Should you die before your loan is repaid, your debt to the Bank will be cancelled.
2. Monthly repayments can be extended up to two years—or even three, if need be. This means that FFP can be tailored to suit any salary.
3. You can borrow up to $3,500, depending on your income, to buy the things you want for your home and family, or to meet emergencies.
4. Planned repayments help you run your income — instead of letting it run you.

If you have a steady income and can make monthly loan-repayments without hardship, you can finance almost any useful purpose through the Bank of Montreal Family Finance Plan. Why not talk to the people at your neighbourhood B of M branch . . . you'll like their helpful attitude. Whether you are a B of M customer or not, you will find a warm welcome.

School Vandalism —Why It Happens

What makes children break into empty school buildings and destroy everything they can? Or throw rocks at the windows until all are smashed? The vandalism is not limited to over-crowded sections of big cities. Some of the most attractive suburbs — in which there are no "slums" — have similar problems.

A two-year study of vandalism in Syracuse (N.Y.) schools was recently completed under Dr. Nathan Goldman of Syracuse University for the U.S. Office of Education. The study, which differed from previous studies in that it was focused on the entire school situation instead of the problems of the individual vandal, came up with six "signposts" pointing to "fertile soil for the growth of vandalism." These are:

1. Disassociation of school staff, students, and parents from the school; 2. Poor relationship among students, school staff, and parents; 3. Inadequate school administration and leadership; 4. Rapid or extensive change in the school program, population, and staff; 5. Student and school staff dissatisfaction with school administration; 6. Community instability coupled with neighborhood deterioration.

Of these six signposts, Dr. Goldman singled out "dissassociation from the school" as the factor most closely related to property damage. "When members of the school group have a sense of belonging to the school, and when they feel that the school belongs to them, morale tends to be high and damage low," he said. "But where there is little sense of belonging, we can expect to find a greater amount of property damage."

"Boredom' was the reason most often given by teachers and pupils in high-damage schools. A reason turned up in low-damage schools was "revenge." High drop-out rates were strongly related to property damage. Where teachers seemed casual or indifferent, and pupils did nothing to improve the school, property damage was usually heavy, writes Millicent Taylor in the Christian Science Monitor

The report itself analyzes findings based on 1,170 students questionaires, 367 teacher interviews, and histories of 16 Syracuse junior and senior high schools. Although the study was focused on Syracuse schools, Dr. Goldman is convinced that "there is no reason to believe that these charcteristics would not be valid for other schools and communities."

The report made the following recommendations to educators concerned with cutting back school property damage:

1. Locate schools in communities where instability can be minimized; 2. Keep curriculum abreast of student needs; 3. Keep teachers attuned to the changing needs of students; 4. Select the principal carefully and allow him to exercise leadership; 5. Conduct a proper orientation program for teachers and students to the policies and routines of the school; 6. Establish easy two-way communication between all school personnel through student government and faculty meetings; 7. Involve students and teachers in the school through the leadership of the principal.

Piano Prodigy Lives A Dog's Life

For pooch-loving pianist Van Cliburn, 26, his second concert tour of Russia was a yowling success. Not only did Cliburn come home cuddling a three-week-old black puppy — a gift from Russian admirers — but he had met the Soviet space pups, Belka and Strelka, and they had snuggled right up to him. It happened recently in Moscow, where Cliburn and the dogs appeared on separate programs in the same TV studio. Afterward, Van was asked if he would like to see Belko and Strelka. "My word, yes, of course," he replied, and soon they were in his arms. "They were absolutely adorable," he said. "So affectionate."

Cliburn's trip netted him about $35,000, but, naturally, the Russians wouldn't allow him to take it out of the country. He left most of the money in banks, considered buying a custom-made car (Chaika) that had taken his fancy, but decided instead to donate $8,000 to Moscow's Baptist Church (which has a congregation of 4,800, is one of 5,290 Baptist churches in the U.S.S.R.).

Modern Etiquette

By Anne Ashley

Q. We've been having a little argument as to whose place it is to speak first when meeting on the street, the man or the woman. Will you please settle this for us?

A. Once upon a time, it was always the "lady" who spoke first. But today, if they are good friends, there's nothing at all wrong with the man's speaking first.

CHRONICLES of GINGER FARM

by Gwendoline P. Clarke

The date, as I write, is August 28; the temperature 82 degrees, and the humidity 85. So I need hardly tell you it is uncomfortably warm. It is strange, too, how dried up everything looks after just one week of hot weather. I would have thought we had had enough rain this year to keep everything green until fall. But apparently not.

However, weather notwithstanding, I am very happy. Partner is home from the hospital — came home yesterday and is now anxious to get back to his everyday stride again. He should have been out on the Tuesday but the incision developed infection so he had to wait until that had been taken care of.

We went to the main office of the hospital before he came home to settle up for any extra expenses that might have been incurred. The "extras" were $2.25, for the use of a telephone in his room! Wonderful. We have already got back more than we have paid into the Ontario Hospital Commission since it started. Of course there is still the surgeon, his assistant and the anaesthetist to pay. But having the hospitalization taken care of is a great help.

Now it is Sunday, still very hot, but do you know we actually had visitors here today who do not carry any kind of hospital insurance. I could hardly believe it. Actually it came about through a misunderstanding. Not wanting to be bothered with payments every three months they sent a cheque to cover the total for a year. The cheque was returned with the explanation that premiums could only be paid every three months. They were busy at the time and did not send a cheque either then or since. I told them in no uncertain terms how foolish they were — and still are.

Do you know what . . . I almost thought we were back on a farm last week. You know how farm folk help each other out in time of need. I remember out West neighbours coming in and harvesting our oats the time Partner took a finger off in the binder. And at Ginger Farm when I had a lengthy illness (no hospitalization then!) neighbours looked after the threshing meals for me, contributed canning and pickling and one neighbour came in every Friday and did a week's baking for us. Since then I have heard of many instances of rural neighbourliness but I didn't expect to find anything like it in suburbia. But I was wrong. Last Friday three young fellows in the neighbourhood came along with their power mowers and cut our lawns — almost an acre. They were most anxious Partner shouldn't be faced with grass to cut directly he got out of hospital. There was one piece the three young fellows didn't finish. A Polish neighbour noticed this and as we came back from the hospital he was just starting in with his handpropelled mower to finish the job. Such hard work on a hot day. Of course we wouldn't let him go on with it but we made sure he understood how much we appreciated the gesture. Isn't it nice to know how much friendliness there still is among neighbours, rural and suburban?

Letters from farm friends tell us of many such instances. But there is also another kind of farm help that is gradually making headway and of which a young farmer of our acquaintance is making good use. The idea originated in England, I believe. It is a Farm Help Service, operated by men experienced in every type of farm and field work and ready to take over the entire work of a farm for any given period should the owner find it necessary to be away, either through illness or for a vacation. I don't know what the financial arrangements are but I do know that all accounts are taken care of to the satisfaction of both parties.

My, how times change! In all the years we were farming we never knew what it meant to take a holiday together for more than a day at a time and during sickness we got along the best way we could — with the help of neighbours, as I said before. Without neighbours many a farmer would have been sunk time after time.

Well, we are now approaching the last long holiday weekend — and then the stores will start putting on the pressure for Christmas buying. It almost scares me to think of it — for two reasons. One to think that Christmas is less than four months away, and two, that time should pass so quickly. Where does it go to? Can you tell me? I wish I knew. But it has been a lovely summer, hasn't it?

Calamity On The Movie Set!

At 7:45 a.m., the sleek beige Cadillac came to a halt before Stage 8 of the Desilu Studios in Hollywood. The car was immediately surrounded by seven overweight employees, and the orange-haired boss stepped out and shouted a joyous greeting.

"Who is it," Bob Hope yelled from his dressing room, "Grandma Moses?"

It was, of course, Miss Lucille Ball, back on the set after recuperating from an accident that typified the harassments that have plagued the filming of "Facts of Life," her first movie in more than four years and her third with Hope.

Trying to leap aboard a yacht for a scene, Lucille had fallen into the 3-foot tank, and suffered a bump on the head, a black eye, and minor cuts and bruises. After that, the injuries came thick and fast: Hope smashed a finger; director Melvin Frank sprained an ankle on the golf course and was put on crutches; Don Defore, who plays Miss Ball's husband, was plagued by an old back injury and wound up in traction — and publicity chief David Golding came down with the mumps.

On the morning of her arrival back at work, Miss Ball spent two hours with her hairdresser and make-up men, finally emerged — assured that her injuries wouldn't show — and filming began. She put in one solid hour doing a single shot of herself looking first at a bed, then a door, and then a wrist watch. By 11:30 she was legging it to the nearby studio, where some 250 Desilu stockholders were assembled for the annual meeting, with her estranged husband Desi Arnaz presiding. After giving his report, Desi announced to Miss Ball: "You are excused by the chair."

"Where's the chair?" asked Miss Ball.

"Every minute you're here is costing us money," Arnaz complained.

Miss Ball departed, to applause. After a sandwich and a cup of coffee (Lucy to the waitress: "Written many letters with this stuff lately?"), she was back on the set, sitting in an auto, chewing ardently on a wad of gum.

Hope made his entrance. "All right, everybody out of the pool," he shouted, making his way past the tank into which Miss Ball had taken her tumble. He got into the car with her, and a cameraman interrupted to say that the light in Miss Ball's eyes wasn't right.

"I guess my eyes are too big for the movies," she said.

"I'll tell you one thing," Hope said. "Your eyelashes are keeping me well dusted off."

The set by now was jammed with visitors from the stockholders' meeting, and, as filming began, a small boy toppled noisily off a ladder, stopping the shot. "Kids are wonderful, but I like mine barbecued," Hope said through clenched teeth.

Director Frank took a position to one side, to show the couple where to look. "I'm a motel sign," he called.

"Then blink on and off," Hope barked.

When the scene was finished, an exhausted Miss Ball headed for her dressing room, muttering: "I wish I could get my adrenaline up."

Director Frank felt fine. "They're perfect together, real professionals," he said happily. "She knows what's going on every minute. When they're in front of the camera you can feel the magic."

A few days later a cut on Miss Ball's leg became infected and she had to commute to work from the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital. One day as she left the set the confused actress shouted: "How do you get out of this firetrap?" Sure enough: A few nights later the set caught fire and was partially destroyed.

Remember Rudolph? Some Still Do!

The usual legion of mourners — about 150, almost all women — filed softly past the duck pond and into the white-marbled mausoleum in Hollywood's Memorial Cemetery. The usual array of flowers — some twenty wreaths, sent by dogged romanticists from as far away as England and Italy — adorned the crypt. And the usual eulogist — 85-year-old former film star James Kirkwood — eulogized. The somber occasion: 34th annual memorial service for silent-screen idol Rudolph Valentino, who died at 31 in 1926.

Lived – A Phony But Died Gamely

The dream world of Stanley Clifford Weyman started taking its ghostly shape 67 years ago in Brooklyn. He was born there as Stephen Weinberg and grew into a short, thin, dark-haired man who convinced a great many people, including a U.S. President, that he was somebody else — a variety of somebodies else, in fact, and all of them important.

In the simpler years before World War I, he impressed persons great and small with gold-braided uniforms, which on one occasion won him a 21-gun salute from a warship. Later, in a world impressed with its sophistication, he discovered that a white coat miraculously made him a man of science.

Weyman was barely 17 when he posed as an attaché of the Serbian Embassy in Washington and as a naval lieutenant. At 22, he donned a naval uniform again and, introducing himself as Lt. Comdr. Ethan Allen Weinberg on special orders from the Secretary of Navy, inspected the battleship Wyoming in the Hudson River. In still more Graustarkian guise, as bogus consul general of Rumania, he told of taking a chief of state's salute of 21 big guns.

Weyman saved what was probably his finest exploit until 1921, when he found Princess Fatima, Sultana of Afghanistan, languishing in a New York City hotel, neglected by U.S. officials. He introduced himself as Under Secretary of State Sterling Wyman, took her on a bauble-buying tour of Tiffany's (with her own money), and escorted her to Washington two days later.

There, again wearing a naval lieutenant commander's shoulder boards along with an admiral's cap, he was photographed with President Harding and the Sultana at the White House. During the visit, Weyman pumped the President's hand and drew him aside to tell him a joke. Nobody ever brought charges against him for the impersonation. But he got a prison term—one of his very few — for beating a Brooklyn tailor out of the price of a uniform.

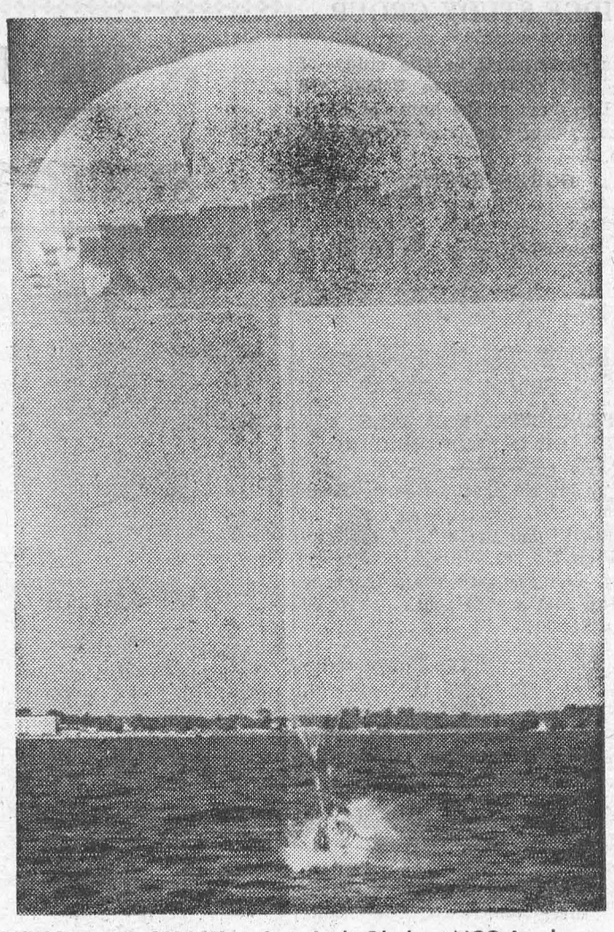
When Pola Negri came to New York in 1926 for the funeral of her friend, Rudolph Valentino, Weyman was well into his white-coat phase. He convinced the police that he was the actress' physician and, until Valentino's manager intervened, had actual charge of the actor's funeral arrangements.

If he rarely went to jail, Weyman rarely profited from his fantasies. Between charades he usually retreated to his Brooklyn apartment and took obscure clerical jobs. During World War II, though, Weyman turned his medical pose to some account: He ran an academy that tutored reluctant patriots in the art of avoiding the draft (by faking deafness, stupidity, etc.)

Weyman went to jail for that stunt. When he emerged in 1948, he sank again into Brooklyn quietude, emerging only for small postures as a U.N. press representative, and borrower on a non-existent home. A month ago, he landed an honest job as night manager of a motel in Yonkers, just up the line from New York. And there last week, without gold braid or white coat, Weyman played his finest scene.

As police reconstructed it, a young man walked into the motel lobby, pulled a pistol, and demanded the receipts. Weyman resisted. He was shot three times. When others reached the lobby, the bandit was gone and so were the receipts, all $200 of them. Stanley Clifford Weyman, fallen heroically to the floor — for once in the role of himself — was dreaming his last.

The timber wolf is also called the gray wolf, but its pelage is not always gray. It varies from brownish-gray to a creamy-white to almost pure black.



MAKING A BIG SPLASH – Sgt. Jack Glydon, NCO in charge of the para-rescue section hits the cold waters of Lake Ontario during practice for the Canadian International Air Show.

How Twisted Minds Get A Big Laugh

An undertaker rang the bell of a house in Broadstairs. "I've come to perform my sad duty in accordance with your instructions," he said to the man who opened the door.

Mr. Love, the householder, was obviously puzzled. "What instructions? I haven't given any."

It was the undertaker's turn to look surprised. "But, sir," he protested. "I received a letter from you saying that your little child had died, and that you wished me to come and measure him for the coffin."

Mr. Love gave a shout of anger. "This is insufferable," he snapped. "My child is seriously ill, but he is certainly not dead. Somebody — some cruel scoundrel—has played a terrible joke."

Shaking his head in bewilderment, the undertaker left. A few minutes later the bell rang again. This time a photographer stood on the doorstep. "Mr. Love?" he inquired in hushed tones. "Is it convenient for me to take a picture of your dead child now?"

At that Mr. Love nearly broke down. Who was responsible for these two macabre hoaxes? he wondered. Who had got such a grudge against him?

Poor Mr. Love soon became quite used to tradesmen bringing all sorts of goods to his house, which they swore he had ordered. Fowls, game, fish — especially fish — every variety from soles to smelts. His life became a misery.

That happened some years ago; but there have been hoaxes just as cruel since.

Death — and all the melancholy preludes to burial—seems to obsess people who plan annoyance to others. It exerts a morbid fascination.

In Kentish Town not long ago a man called at an undertaker's office. "My neighbour has died," he said. "Please go round to this address."

The other did so. But there was no dead neighbour. "You must mean my husband!" exclaimed the woman who answered the door. "He's alive as you are."

One day, recently, in the same district, it was raining heavily and a transport hire firm received a telephone message: "My lorry's broken down," said the caller. "I must have one first thing in the morning for deliveries." He gave the name and address of a well-known tradesman.

Although it meant a lot of inconvenience, the firm obliged. "You've been fooled," asserted the tradesman when the lorry arrived. "I don't want a lorry. Never use them. I don't even make deliveries!"

A man wrote to a coach firm on a film company's notepaper. "We require enough coaches to take a hundred and twenty-five actors to Ambridge, Warwickshire, for sequences we are shooting there," he said.

The coach proprietor studied a map to discover the best route to Ambridge, but couldn't find the place, so he rang the A.A. They couldn't help. "The only Ambridge we've heard of is in the radio programme, 'The Archers,'" They told him.

Baffled, the coach man dialled the number given on the letter-heading. "This is Bow Street police station," came the reply. He knew, then, that he'd been taken for a ride.

Funny? Only if you appreciate humour which causes endless trouble and worry to others. But almost everybody will smile at this one.

A man had just had a telephone installed. The bell rang. "This is the G.P.O., and I am the chief engineer," announced the caller. "We are checking your new 'phone. Please repeat after me — 'One — two — three four.'"

The man did. "Now," continued the voice, "say: Hickory, dickory dock. The mouse ran up the clock.'"

Again the man obliged. Then he was asked to recite four more nursery rhymes, and he did this patiently before he realized that he was being well and truly fooled!

In Paterson, North Jersey, a family had a coffin, which they hadn't ordered, delivered to their house. The hoaxer didn't stop at that. For weeks the unfortunate victims of his malice were disturbed at almost every hour of the day and night. Taxis arrived, and so did vans, even barrels of beer.

One of the cruellest hoaxes was at Dowlais, near Merthyr Tydfil. The "joker" rang a big store in Dowlais, and told the manager that three men whose addresses he gave had been killed in an explosion at a steelworks in Ebbw Vale, some eight miles away. "Can you let their wives know? I have been unable to contact the local police," explained the caller.

The sad message was conveyed to the three women. The results were heart-rending. One woman and both her young daughters fainted at the terrible news. Another wife, who had just returned from taking one of her children to hospital, also fainted. The third had recently been discharged from hospital. The shock was too much for her too. She collapsed, and it was some time before she came round. All because of a particularly vile and malicious hoax.

Unfortunately, the wicked person responsible for causing such grief and worry was never traced.

Lastly, an innocent hoax, one which may have caused exasperation, but no real harm. This was perpetrated at Brighton in 1804. It was announced that at a certain time in the evening a man would walk across the waves. Naturally, this gave rise to great excitement and speculation.

The cliffs and the sands were crowded with people eagerly waiting for the miracle to happen. But, of course, it never did. They stayed there for hour after hour, reluctant to miss such an amazing spectacle. Then at long last, realizing they had been duped, they repaired to the taverns to wash away their disappointment.

But not only the hoaxer got a kick out of that bit of work.

"For a moment it relieved the dullness of the place," said a London newspaper.

Too Much Fuss Over Little-Leaguers ?

The Little League World Series, drawing youngsters from all over the world to Williamsport each summer, is a brilliant spectacle. Almost every boy who participates in the Series relishes the experience — living in a Lycoming College dorm, playing before noisy capacity crowds, signing autographs for starry-eyed fans. But all the fuss and furor over the sub-teen-agers — with the adult-imposed emphasis on victory and hero-worship — raise a pressing question: Does success spoil Little Leaguers?

"No," say the men who run the international Little League program. "We teach the boys the value of sportsmanship, the importance of competition."

"Yes," says Joey Jay, the Milwaukee Brave pitcher, who was the first Little Leaguer ever to become a big leaguer. "I've known a lot of kids who were treated like little heroes. Afterward, they expected everything to be handed them on a silver platter — and it wasn't. They couldn't adjust."

Beyond any doubt, the boys in Williamsport last month were treated as little heroes, especially the Levittown, Pa., players, who beat Fort Worth, 5-0, in the final (as Joe Mormello pitched a no-hitter and struck out sixteen Texas batters). "This is a dream," said infielder Julian Kalkstein.

"I wonder when I'm gonna wake up," said catcher Brian Penington.

"If it's like this all my life," insisted Rollie Clark, a 4-foot 6, 80-pound second baseman, "I never want to wake up."

What A Single Vote Can Mean !

It is almost unbelievable that in this democracy there are literally millions of citizens who are disfranchised — voteless. The amazing thing is that it is voluntary. These millions just don't bother to register and vote.

The chief alibi, which no person who can add one and one should be guilty of, is that "my single vote won't make any difference."

Oh yeah?

Harry Truman carried California and Ohio in 1948 by less than one vote per precinct, and without those states he would not have won the election. An infinitesimal majority of 87 votes sent Lyndon Johnson to the Senate the same year.

There are plenty of other examples. But if one is not interested in voting, a bunch of figures doesn't mean much. Neither, presumably, does the future of the country. The fact is, not voting is in itself a form of voting. — Star Journal (Pueblo, Colo.)

How Can I ?

by Roberta Lee

Q. How can I most easily remove cat and dog hairs from upholstered furniture or car seats?

A. Simply by wiping lightly over them with a board which has been wrapped with adhesive tape, sticky side out.

Q. How can I eliminate the nuisance of sparrows' nesting under the eaves of my house?

A. Fill small cheesecloth bags with camphor balls and hang them from the eaves. Those disgusted sparrows will set up housekeeping elsewhere.
