WORKING ON OLD TOWN HALL.

Considerable progress has been made by workmen remodelling the old Town Hall to give better accommodation to the fire fighting equipment and Hydro, and also to provide a room for the accommodation of the Boy Scouts, Citizens' Band and Girl Guides.

The floor has been taken out of the street end of the hall so the fire reels may be run in and out easily, and the ground floor will be cemented. The partition has been run up with material from the old floor, and the stage removed. The flooring was found to be in perfect condition but some of the old cedar sleepers were in bad shape from dry rot.

Winchester Child Injured As Hand Caught in Wringer

When his arm became caught in the rollers of an electric clothes wringer, at his home in Winchester, Ronnie Graham, two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Graham, suffered painful injuries on Tuesday.

According to the physician who attended him, no bones were broken, but the arm was badly bruised and crushed and it will be some time before it will be completely healed.

The mishap occurred while Mrs. Graham was doing the family washing.

She had left the machine running while she attended other household duties, when the youngster climbed on a chair near the washer and turned on the wringer, with his left hand resting on the rolls. Before Mrs. Graham could come to his rescue, the little arm was drawn into the rollers as far up as the elbow.

EXTENDED POLICE RECORD GOES AGAINST SHOPLIFTER

Cornwall.—While the loot of two shoplifting expenditions in Cornwall stores comprised only three pairs of silk stockings and a snow shovel, Allan McEachern, no address, was sentenced in Magistrate's Court here yesterday to six months in jail on each of two theft charges. The terms were made consecutive. Magistrate P. C. Bergeron read what he termed as "McEachern's terrific record of convictions in United States and Canada since 1926," covering a wide variety of offences.

Leafs Lose Their First Game At Finch, Monday, 4 - 2

Chesterville's Maple Leaf hockey squad took a tumble at the hands of Finch Black Hawks Monday night and came home with a 4-2 defeat tucked in the duffle bags after they had got away to a 2-0 lead early in the game.

The local boys were without Dob Plantz and found an improved Finch squad who gave them a hard evening of competition. Two lucky goals put the Leafs in the lead and then two counters of the same brand brought the Black Hawks up even. A well-earned goal put Finch on top, and the final goal came in the last minute of the game on a breakaway from a Leaf ganging attack.

The win for Finch gave the diamond town boys their first points and gave the large crowd of fans a thrill after seeing their hopefuls down two goals soon after the start o f the game.

Chesterville's first goal came in less than 40 seconds after the face-off as Dwayne Munro caught Gamache napping on a blue-line shot after a pass from Bud Fyke who had won the draw.

Mille Roches Team Admitted To Central Ottawa League

With the admission of Mille Roches to the C.O.V.I. league, a revision of the three-team schedule has been made and two additional games will be seen here as the four teams fight out their double schedule which opened with Finch at Maxville last night.

Mille Roches is allowed to gather three players and a goalie from Cornwall and should put a good team on the ice. The first appearance of the new team here will be on Wednesday, February 1, and the schedule closes with the second visit of the St. Lawrence team here on February 15.

Two points for a win and one for a draw have been awarded in the first part of the three-team schedule just completed, and with the admission of the Mille Roches team, four points for a win and two for a draw will be given in the first home-and-home series that Mille Roches plays. The last half will see the regular award of points.

Maxville Millionaires make their second appearance here in a week tomorrow (Friday) night, and will not be back again until February 13. After the loss encountered by the Maxville team here last week which put the Leafs two up in the home-and-home series, the Millionaires will be out for a win and no mistake. Clark Hoople has a fine bunch of hockey players and he plans to leave the rink the winner.

A chimney fire burning out at the home of W. E. Marshall, King street, yesterday afternoon created some excitement as dense clouds of black smoke swept over the street. The fire was confined to the chimney and no damage was reported.

Local Amateurs to be Heard Over Radio in Near Future

When Miss Vivian LaSalle was awarded by popular acclaim first prize among the amateurs who appeared on the programme at the show sponsored by the Women's Institute in the Community Hall, Tuesday night, a Chesterville audience showed its appreciation of the outstanding talent of one of our own girls.

The show was presented with the original "Stars of Tomorrow" and the Homesteaders Orchestra from radio station CKCH in Hull, with prizes offered for the best local amateurs, the whole under the direction of Mr. Murphy of CKCH.

The large auditorium was comfortably filled and the programme by the orchestra and the singers and comedian was much appreciated, but the local amateurs striving for recognition held the audience at a high pitch, and when Miss LaSalle was acclaimed the winner, fairly raised the roof. She was immediately asked to appear on a radio programme at the Hull station as soon as arrangements can be completed. The Misses Boyd were winners of second place and were also invited to join a programme from an Ottawa station in the near future, following their vocal numbers.

All the local contestants did remarkably well, there being 15 of them, from wee tots up. Evelyn Thomas was called first, when she sang "Umbrella Man," followed by Patsy Barrett reciting "So Did I." Sheila MacMillan sang "Little Old Lady," Edmund Kelly sang "Old Apple Tree," Jean Curran and Avonne Moran tap danced as a team to the strains of the Irish Washerwoman, Vivian LaSalle sang "In the Hills," Neil Kelly gave a monologue, "Dinner in the Diner," Ted Fawcett and Vivian LaSalle gave a guitar duet, Mildred Merkley tap danced, Helen Servage danced "The Sailor's Hornpipe," Kay Barrett recited "Man in the Auto," Iona Stata, eight years old, chorded at the piano, Marjorie Elliott sang "Tonight As I Walk in the Rain," The Boyd Sisters sang a Medley "Old Folks" and "Chinatown," and the Desormeaux brothers contributed a song.

The orchestra, in about a dozen numbers, played everything from "Put on Your Old Grey Bonnett" to "The Devil's Dream," interspersed with vocal numbers by "Liza Jane," "Uncle Si," "Homesteader Ernie" and "Ken." The Murphy Sisters among other numbers gave their interpretation of "The Old Apple Tree."

It doesn't cost to advertise in The Record. It Pays.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 19TH, 1939.

THE RURAL CORRESPONDENT.

IN EVERY weekly newspaper, a large percentage of the news is from the villages and rural communities among which the town is centred.

This is true of The Record, as of any other weekly, and when the make-up of the paper is being considered, the budgets of our correspondents play an important part.

So, as did Tte Bowmanville Statesman and The Kincardine News recently, we salute our country correspondents and thank them most sincerely.

They are very valuable people; chroniclers of the simpler yet most vital events in the community and the nation. The public and unselfish service they gladly render their individual communities is on a par with that of the minister and the teacher although they are less in the public eye. However, you know them. They are the faithful but too often unsung correspondents who write the home-town and neighbourhood news items you look for in the paper; items that tell of the happenings in the communities in this area.

They record all the story of rural and small-town life, all the goings and comings, the church and other functions; the tribulations and successes of the school teacher, the minister, the farmer, and the general storekeeper—all are there.

Birth and baptism, graduations and weddings; troubles, reconciliations, accidents, and funerals; the coming of rain after the big drought, the first snow in autumn, and spring-time plantings.

All the joy and pathos, victory and defeat and romance of living in the great open spaces of a great and growing nation, are in the 700 weekly newspapers across Canada written by these faithful chroniclers of human life and living.

THE GUN LICENSE.

Game & Fisheries Bulletin.

PRIOR to 1926, there was no gun license in effect in the Province of Ontario, and as a consequence the carrying and indiscriminate use of firearms, especially in the denser centres of population, was quite a problem. This fact became obvious to sportsmen, and it was not surprising, therefore that the suggestion to control the situation through the imposition of a license was approved by the hunters themselves. A resolution that this be done was presented to the Game and Fish Committee by the Ontario Hunters Game and Fish Protective Association. The imposition of new taxes, however, has never been popular with the public, so it was felt that the time was inopportune for the introduction of such a policy on a general scale throughout the Province. Nevertheless, the situation in certain areas was such that something had to be done to restrict the promiscuous use of guns. In 1926, therefore, provision was made in the Act requiring hunters in Welland, Lincoln, Wentworth and York, populous centres, to purchase a gun license at a fee of $2. This regulation may not have been popular among certain classes in these areas, but it was effective in curtailing the general practice of gun carrying by every Tom, Dick and Harry who had inherited or could readily procure a firearm, and felt privileged to wander afield and shoot, in and out of season, with more zeal than discrimination. Next year the provisions were extended to include Peel and Halton counties. It was evident by this time that there were teeth in the regulation for licenses could be confiscated for breaches of the Act. In 1928 the Act was again amended to include more of the counties in Southwestern Ontario: these were Waterloo, Lambton, Essex, West Kent and West Elgin. A year later East Kent, East Elgin, Middlesex, Perth, Oxford, Norfolk, Brant, Haldimand, South Huron and South Wellington sportsmen found themselves under the necessity of conforming with the same requirement as their fellow hunters in the aforementioned counties. The effect of the requirement was twofold, in addition to providing revenue for development work, it was serving the purpose for which it was intended, that is, the control of firearms when used for hunting. Subdued murmurings began to be heard, however, as to cost, and suggestions that it was a discriminaory license in that it only applied to certain areas. Finally, in 1933, both objections were taken care of by making the provisions applicable to the whole Province and reducing the fee to one dollar.

It is quite obvious that for many years to come the southwestern part of the Province is destined to be the experimental field for advanced policies and regulations covering the proper administration and use of our wild life resources. This is because the area is heavily populated, and economic conditions are such that special regulations are necessary. The latest effort along these lines is the Township Regulated Hunting, which is a step further along the highway of co-operative control.

A BRAVE TERRIER.

Windsor Star.

WHEN a cow went berserk and broke away from an auction sale in London, Ont., a woman was saved serious injury, if not worse, by her small fox terrier. The bovine had jumped into the back yard where the woman was and made for her. But spunky little "Tippie" intercepted, and kept the cow off until the woman made the door of her house in safety.

Such incidents as this make dogs known as man's best friends. "Tippie," being a city dog, probably was as surprised as the mistress at the suddent advent of the cow. Yet the terrier was equal to the occasion. When the woman fell, it stood off the maddened bigger animal and saved the mistress from being trampled and gored.

THE HONEYMOON WAS OFF.

Australian Finds He Married Brother of the Bride, Through Error Made in Names by Clerk.

HAVING gone through a marriage ceremony in Paris, Ralph Spencer Wade, employed in the customs department at Fremantle, Australia, hurried to Marseilles with the woman he believed to be his wife, only to be told that she had no legal claim to be his bride, and that, in fact, it was her brother he had married. Thinking he was the object of a practical joke, the Australian insisted on his right to sail with his bride, but the authorities arrested both for making a false declaration and being without the proper papers. Then the explanation of the affair came out. The name of the bride-to-be was Marie Camille Dejean, and that of her twin brother, who acted as witness at the ceremony, Camille Marie. When the clerk came to write out the marriage certificate he confused the names and thus it was that the brother-in-law figured as the bride, while the bride was merely given as witness.

HOUSE MECHANIC.

Victoria Times.

SUPERINTENDENT JOHNSON of the Chicago public schools is replacing the old manual training and domestic science courses with new "home mechanics" classes designed to teach the child how to handle the many time-saving devices that fill the modern home.

Parents generally will applaud this enlightened move and many fathers and mothers probably would like to have the advantage of these courses.

The man of the house, these days, has to be a combination of auto mechanic, radio expert, electrician and plumber to keep the upper hand on the streamlined appliances and gadgets of the home. If he does not know what to do about them when they go wrong he is likely to find them more time-consumers than time-savers — more instruments of inconvenience than of comfort.

SIZING US UP.

Letter in The New York Times.

"THE CANADIANS are a people accustomed to liberty. They are expert in the difficult art of democratic self-government. They enjoy, as a matter of course, their rights to free speech, a free press, liberty of conscience, tolerance, justice.

'.Like ourselves, they are unable to conceive of a national life for themselves without these elements. On every moral question, in every political situation, their point of view is exactly the same as ours. Therefore—most important at the present time—their reaction to the conditions existing in Europe and Asia today is sure to be the same as ours.

"Finally, that country has in a time of great stress proved its ability to train and arm hundreds of thousands of troops—soldiers who earned their right as shock troops to stand shoulder to shoulder with—or confronting—the finest divisions of the armies of the world.

"So it seems to me that our northern boundary is not unfortified. Let us give thanks for fortifications of this kind; and work for more of the same on what we may call our frontiers in distant parts of the hemisphere."

PRINCIPLES OF GRADING.

THE GRADING of farm products is based on the principle that it is sound business to classify live stock in such a way that the consumer will be able to recognize and purchase quality products, and that the price premium which the consumer will pay for the better grades should be returned to the producer of them. Practice has proven the value of the theory involved in the grading principle. Grading activities have been a tremendous incentive to quality production, with resultant price benefit to producers.

QUALITY—THE TEST FOR FARM PRODUCE.

No Longer Are Eggs Just Eggs And Wheat Just Wheat. — Buying Public is Aware of Grades.

THE rapidly awakening public appreciation of the importance of quality in food products, combined with the keen competition for export markets, are factors which exert a definite influence on the merchandising of field and live stock products of Canadian farms, says G. R. Snyder, soil chemist. No longer are eggs just eggs and wheat just wheat, but are being thought of in terms of their protein, carbohydrate, vitamin and mineral contents. Recognized, too, is the fact that poor quality foods, resulting in faulty nutrition, are the cause of many diseases in plants, in beasts and man.

Even the dairy cow, if given the opportunity, will graze longer and more vigourously on pasture areas where the quality of the herbage has been improved by building up the mineral plant food supplies of the soil. Research workers who have studied nutritional problems and practical dairymen who keep close records of the production of their herds, agree that the cow not only prefers the high quality grass but actually produces more and richer milk from the improved herbage.

Fortunately, Canadian agriculture is today in a much better position than ever before to produce the type of product the market demands. New improved varieties of field crops, more efficient farm machinery and a better understanding of the factors related to well-balanced nutrition have made it possible to take much of the "sting" out of the one remaining uncontrollable production factor—the weather.

Alert farmers who are already fully aware of this growing demand for quality in farm produce are now planning their 1939 programme. Many have not waited for the new year but have taken advantage of the open fall and had the soil of their fields sampled and tested for possible deficiencies in lime, or in one or more of the essential plant food elements.

Of no less importance than well-balanced fertility in the soil is a supply of high quality seed, and the many seed fairs held during the winter and early spring months provide an excellent opportunity to obtain first-hand information from expert seed growers and government officials, regarding the merits of new varieties approved cultural practices.

Seed-borne diseases such as bunt or stinking smut of wheat, covered smut barley, smuts of oats, and root-rots, can be controlled by treating the seed with an ethyl mercury phosphate dust.

Better quality in crops is transmitted to the animals consuming them and to their produce; consequently, both have a definite influence on public health. The farmer whose products are of the highest grade benefits, therefore, both himself and the nation.

Diplomacy.

The women in the theatre were asked by the manager to remove their hats.

A few women in the audience completely ignored the announcement. Again the request was made and yet a third time, still without result. Then the manager announced: "Thank you, all the ladies have now removed their hats."

It worked!

QUEEN'S PARK CLOSEUPS

By PAUL FARRELL

The murder of Jimmy Windsor, Toronto bookmaker and dance hall operator, has stirred provincial police headquarters into a whirl of activity. There have been many murders in Ontario's crime history—but never before had gangland's executioners walked into a victim's home, Chicago style, and done their slaying under the eyes of his family.

The Windsor murder, too, hit heavily at Ontario's reputation for law and order. Somewhat too smugly, police chiefs and after-dinner orators have long declared that killers of the U.S. type would never show their noses inside Canada. "It can't happen here," they proudly boasted.

The Toronto slaying showed that U.S. gangster killings could happen in Ontario—and Ontario provincial police were none to happy about it. For one thing, they weren't called into the case by Chief Draper of Toronto, although Dr. E. R. Frankish, medico-legal expert for the attorney-general's department, was asked to identify the fatal bullet. The Windsor murder is just one more reason why all police forces in Ontario should be under the direction of one body, in an emergecy, Ontario police said. Arthur Roebuck, former attorney-general, tried to achieve this in the session of 1935 but he had to withdraw his bill in the face of bitter criticism.

Attorney-General G. D. Conant, K.C., believes that placing all municipal police forces under one head will be the final solution for this province's vexatious police problem. He explains, however, that local public opinion has not advanced sufficiently from the old "horse and buggy" police days to obtain the consent of the municipalities.

Such a move would end, too, situations such as that at Crystal Beach where a wide-open Sunday prevails. Places of amusement are in full blast all day Sunday and the casual shopper can buy even a suit of clothes. Municipal authorities do not ask local police to enforce the Lord's Day Act—and provincial police can operate only on request of Crystal Beach police.

Premier M. F. Hepburn has for some time past feared the invasion of Ontario by gang terrorism from the U.S. He has put no blind faith in Ontario's reputation for law and order; in fact, he personally has carried an automatic pistol on many a long motor drive, removing it from his right coat pocket only before addressing audiences, a fact not generally known.

When he assumed office in 1934, southwestern Ontario was in the throes of a crime wave. The Labatt kidnapping and the "X" blackmail prosecution at London, Ont., came almost together. Premier Hepburn played a personal rôle in the police activity in connection with both cases and as a result, received kidnap notes and threats against his life. General Victor S. Williams wanted to detail provincial police to guard the premier day and night but Mr. Hepburn, who has an immense fund of personal courage, wouldn't hear of it. General Williams prevailed upon him to carry an automatic pistol when driving outside Toronto, however, and supplied a second revolver to be carried by whoever Mr. Hepburn's companion of the journey might be.

Those were exciting days. Premier Hepburn, returning from an Elgin meeting one night, found unlocked a rear door which he definitely remembered locking before leaving his farm home. With a newspaper companion, he spent the next 15 minutes searching the house from cellar to attic, guns in hand.

He carried a gun again in the provincial election campaign of 1937, although he was careful to put it away before his speech at Oshawa, where he expected trouble because of his C.I.O. attitude. His followers were prepared, however. Lionel Conacher recruited several car loads of Toronto boxers and drove them to Oshawa. When the automobile workers arrived at the meeting place, the front seats were already occupied by well-dressed, quiet-spoken fellows...fellows like Frankie Genovese, former Canadian welterweight champion, for example. Needless tosay, there was no rush for the platform to exert any physical violence on Premier Hepburn.

HOGS ARE OVER-FINISHED.

Producers of hogs in Canada are reminded that the increase in the number of overweight hogs now being marketed is creating a very serious and acute problem in the export bacon and domestic pork trade. Farmers are therefore strongly advised to refrain from overfinishing and to endeavour to market their hogs before reaching a weight of 230 pounds at the farm.

Short Tale.

"Now, boys," said the schoolmaster, "the word novelette means 'a short tale.' You may now write in your copy books a sentence containing the word."

A few minutes later he picked up Johnny Brown's effort, and read aloud —"Yesterday I saw a fox terrier running down our street with a tin can tied to his novelette."

Leafs Come From Behind To Win Over Maxville 4-2

Chesterville Maple Leafs came from behind to take a 4-2 win from Maxville Millionaires, Friday night, here after spotting the visitors their two goals, one in the first and the second in the middle period.. The win brought the Leafs into a first-place tie with Maxville at five points. Before the game a minute of silence was observed in memory of J. Preston Elliott who died Thursday, and who for many years was on the executive of the Chesterville club.

The game was very fast and in the final after Chesterville had taken the lead, no less than eight penalties were handed out by Referee Mickey McIntosh who handled his game well. He was also called upon to give a stern warning to Clark Hoople, fiery manager of the Millionaires who struck the official on the head after "Doc" Munro was penalized in the final minute. Eleven penalties were charged up, five to the visitors and six to the locals Maxville failed on a penalty shot when Currier missed the net. Twice in the final the Leafs were short two players but Maxville were kept out.

Roger Lalonde put the Glengarry boys in the lead at 19.20 in the first period when he grabbed a pass-out dead in front that Shi Harper sent out from behind the nets. Pilon got Maxville's second after two minutes in the middle period when his rebound came out to meet him as he split the defence, then the Leafs came back with three in five minutes to go out ahead, and added another in the final.

Dob Plantz scored two goals inside of a minute to even the score, and three minutes later Pro Alford netted the winning goal with Bic Fulton getting assists on the two last counters. Pud Plantz got the other Leaf goal unassisted a few seconds after he finished serving his third penalty.

The Leaf forwards kept running through the Millionaire's rearguard until they finally cracked Art Dupuis' fine goal minding, and the brilliantly garbed visitors displayed a smart brand of combination plays but they couldn't get by Jimmy Fyke more than twice and then he didn't have a chance.

L. Currier took a penalty for dumping Dob Plantz on the right boards and just as his two minutes were half up, Dob got a pass-out, sailed in, took his time and drilled the puck home at 7.10. A minute later Dob got his second from Bic Fulton in a scramble around the visitors' nets. Bic set Pro up for the winning goal when he carried up centre from a forward pass and flipped the rubber to Alford as he drew the goalie out.

Bud Fyke took a penalty in the final for upsetting Grant after playing the Millionaires to a standstill inside their blueline; Dob Plantz and L. Coleman were banished; L. Currier gave Bic Fulton the knee and was sent to the penalty timers; Ab Munro followed with Bubbie Plantz the brother Perc who was back onl y a few seconds when he was shooed again. Currier and Munro for Maxville rounded out the last period penalty list.

The line-ups:

Maxville—Goal, Art Dupuis; def., Doc Munro and L. Currier; centre, Roger Lalonde; rw, F. Pilon, lw, H. Coleman; subs., McCallum, L. Coleman, Grant, Kennie Jamieson and Villeneuve.

Chesterville—Goal, J. Fyke; def., P. Plantz and M. Harper; centre, Bic Fulton; rw, Lyle Alford; lf, C. Plantz subs., Dwayne Munro, Ab Munro, F. Plantz, A. Fyke, Lorne Marcellus, Lyle Smith and Hubert Harper.

Referee—Mickey McIntosh.

IT WAS A MILLION-DOLLAR GAME TO WATCH.

Maxville Millionaires are a flashy looking outfit, both in play and with their brightly coloured sweaters that have big dollar signs on the front.

* * * *

The two teams were a fine looking bunch of boys as they lined up for the minute's silence for Pres Elliott who was a club officer for so long.

* * * *

Maxville's first goal was a heartbreaker for Fyke in the nets as the first period was almost up. Shi's pass out from behind fell right on Roger Lalonde's stick directly in front of the goal.

* * * *

Dob Plantz got revenge on L. Currier who had sent him down near the right boards. When Referee McIntosh turned to restart the play, Dobbin skated over and sent Currier to the ice.

* * * *

Darkey Fyke pulled a cola cola (the pause that refreshes) in the final when the Leafs were short two men and the Millionaires were ganging, as he made lengthy alterations to his ponderous pads. The rest settled the boys down and they kept their goal clear.

* * * *

Between periods we were in one of the dressing rooms and were asked by a player (not mentioning names) to lay off the "Percy stuff" which he thought too sissified. We agreed.

* * * *

To prove he was a he-man, he went out and got no less than three penalties, and with the last went into a tantrum, finally firing his stick across the ice. "Wah! I don't wanna!"

* * * *

The Millionaires played a good game and should have won as they had the advantage twice in the final with the Leafs two short, but they couldn't get by Darkie Jim.

* * * *

Another fine crowd saw the game. If this brand of hockey continues the team is assured of plenty of support.

MISCELLANEOUS SHOWER FOR BRIDE-TO-BE

A miscellaneous shower was held on Tuesday afternoon in the I.O.O.F. hall in honour of Miss Evelyn Steinberg, R.N., one of this month's brides, with more than 75 present. Contests were conducted by Mrs. Olive Craik. The bride-to-be was asked to come to the platform when an address was read by Miss Addie Swerdfeger and gifts were placed on the table. Miss Steinberg replied in her pleasing manner. Lunch was served by Mrs. Olive Craik, Misses Melba Steinberg, Addie Swerdfeger, and Maisie Bilow, and Mrs. Hume McConneli. Before leaving the hall, the guests signed the bride's book.

The address follows:

Dear Evelyn,—Your many friends have gathered here this afternoon to extend to you our very best wishes for your future happiness.

It gives us a great deal of pleasure to know you will be living among us permanently. All too many of our girls leave us when they go to their own homes and we do want to assure you of our pleasure in having you with us at home.

We missed you the last few years but realize how fortunate we are in having you back again. The training you received as a Registered Nurse will be of great benefit to you in your own home and we know our community will benefit as well because of your willingness to use your knowledge and training in any way helpful to those about you.

As a slight token of our esteem, may we ask you to accept these gifts.

We put our heads together
And this is what we got!
Results, perhaps, don't prove it,
But it took a lot of thought.
We hope you're going to like it
For the wishes it imparts
Are prompted not by just our head
But also by our hearts.

War Veterans to Act as Radio License Canvassers

Employment of war veterans, where available, as canvassers for radio licenses will be made mandatory as from April 1. This was made public Tuesday in a communication from the Transport Department.

One of the recommendations of the Rattray Commission, which investigated the unemployment problems of war veterans, was that this collection work be reserved for ex-service men.

Under present arrangements, radio licenses will continue to be issued by the agencies noted, but it will be compulsory that war veterans be named supervisors and canvassers wherever available.

Of $181,981 collected in commissions on the sale of licenses in 1937, approximately 36 per cent, or $65,500, went to house-to-house canvassers. Since then, both the number of receiving sets and the license fee, on which a 15 per cent commission is allowed, have increased.

FEEDING BROOD MARES.

Along With Proper Feed, Sufficient Exercise is Necessary or Weak Foals Will Be Dropped.

TO properly care for brood mares during the winter months, it must be understood that they should be given mild exercise each day but deep snow and the hauling of heavy loads should be avoided. It is particularly important that mares in foal are not allowed to be idle during the winter months, as they usually produce weak foals—no matter how they may be fed.

A brood mare's ration may be made up of a variety of feeds. However, it is essential that it be nutritious and contain a generous supply of protein and minerals. A good grade of mixed hay, oats and bran will supply all the necessary requirements. A few roots fed daily will also prove beneficial. The amount of hay and grain to be fed daily will depend upon the size of the mare, her condition and the type of work she is doing. Naturally the more she is required to do—the larger the daily ration. Young mares that have not completed their growth must be fed quite liberally.

After the foal is born, drinking water with the chill taken off is given to the mare. The mare's first feed after foaling is always a warm bran mash and the grain ration contains one-half bran for a week or more after the foal is dropped. By so doing, complications such as an oversupply of milk or indigestion are usually avoided. When mares are thin at foaling time, light feeding should only be continued for a few days. In such cases, the feed is usually increased gradually in order to ensure a good supply of milk for the foal. Mares that are required to work while nursing their foals will require liberal feeding, if they are to be kept in good flesh and provide a generous supply of milk for the foals.

Wants All Arms Contracts Investigated by Committee

Kirkland Lake, Jan. 17. — Colonel George A. Drew, Ontario Conservative leader, said in an address here tonight it was the duty of Prime Minister King to set up a Parliamentary committee, representative of all parties, to investigate all armament contracts.

Discussing the recent Bren gun investigation, Colonel Drew said the report by Mr. Justice Davis "exonerated no one." The report "merely summed up the facts of the inquiry and placed them squarely before the House of Commons for action."

The address was the fifth made by the newly-elected Conservative leader during a tour of Northern Ontario. Colonel Drew addressed a Board of Trade meeting here today and the Canadian Legion earlier tonight.

Robt. Bryan Is New Warden For Three United Counties

Robert Bryan, five years reeve of Mountain township, has been chosen Warden of the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry for the present year, when Oscar Beckstead, reeve of Williamsburg township, and W. J. McConnell, reeve of Winchester township, had withdrawn from the contest. Mr. Bryan has been a member of the Counties' Council for 16 years going there 12 times on acclamations. The new Warden was born in Mountain township 65 years ago and has lived there all his life. Isobel Cameron, of the same township, became his wife in 1892. Their family consists of two boys and a daughter. Mr. Bryan is a member of the United church.

The warden-elect was nominated by W. H. Casselman, reeve of Chesterville, and seconded by Robert McNaught, reeve of Charlottenburg township. Mr. Beckstead was nominted by A. A. McKinnon, reeve of Kenyon township, with O. A. Irvine, deputy reeve of Matilda township, acting as seconder. Wallace Gallinger, reeve of Osnabruck township, nominated Mr. McConnell for the wardenship, with Walter J. Campbell, deputy reeve of Osnabruck township, seconding the nomination.

Before nominations for the position were opened, A. K. MacMillan, counties' clerk, who occupied the chair, reminded members of the custom practiced for many years in selecting a warden. Clerk MacMillan, pointing out that last year a member from Stormont county had held the office, said the position this year was to be held by a reeve from Dundas. In his opening remarks, the clerk welcomed members of council and said he was pleased to see so many old faces within the council rail.

FORCE FAMILY LIE ON FLOOR WHILE SHOEMAKER ROBBED

Banditry again broke out in Toronto last night when two armed thugs robbed a shoemaker of $100, bringing the number of holdups to twenty-three in the first eighteen days of 1939.

The two men, unmasked and holding guns, walked into the shoe repair shop of John Smith at 467 Queen Street East, near Bright Street, robbed Smith of $100 and forced him and a family of three occupying a rear dwelling to lie on the floor while they made their escape.

The robbers snarled at and menaced Smith with their guns and showed a disposition to use them if he offered any resistance, Smith said.

Smith was engaged in repairing shoes when the men walked into the shop. One went behind the counter and the other stood in the shop and watched the proceedings, his gun held in readiness.

"Give me your money and hurry up," ordered the thug who went behind the counter.

"I have no money," replied Smith.

"Don't talk so much," threatened the gunman, shoving his weapon into the shoemaker's chest. The bandit tried to reach into Smith's pocket, but the latter backed away.

"Don't shoot," cried Smith. "Come into the back and I'll get you the money from my trunk."

ADVERTISING STUNTS.

Renfrew Mercury.

SMALL TOWN merchants are easy prey for many advertising schemes. After all there is no value in advertising unless there is a guarantee that the distribution reaches the people without offence.

Value of any advertising is contained only in the number of people who will accept and read it. That's what makes the paid-for newspaper the most dignified and less costly of all advertising mediums.

CITY WRECKED BY TROUBLE

St. Thomas Times-Journal.

MAYOR Nelson Sparks, of Akron, Ohio, is authority for the statement in an article in the periodical Liberty, that since John L. Lewis and his minions came into the city in their tactical drive against the motor car industry, 11,000,000 work hours have been lost by the wage earners and the rubber manufacturing interests, and here is the sum and substance of his story in brief paragraphs:

"The city that once gave full-time employment to 75,000 satisfied, prosperous workers now gives part-time employment to a frightened, intimidated 25,000.

"The city that once manufactured 67 per cent of the world's rubber goods now manufactures barely 30 per cent. The city that increased in population 360 per cent in 20 years is now rapidly liquidating.

"Real estate values have dropped 50 per cent.

"Homes are offered at public sale and find no bidders.

"Thousands of former highly paid rubber workers are now working on W.P.A. for sixty dollars a month, and eighty-six thousand persons, more than a third of the city's population, are on relief," he writes.

"The larger industries commenced to move away from Akron under the reign of C.I.O. terror."

I'm Afraid I'll Never be a Beauty

Condensed from "You."—By Cornelia Otis Skinner.

IT'S NOT that I don't want to be a beauty, that I don't yearn to be dripping with glamour. It's just that I don't see how any woman can find time to do to herself all the things that apparently must be done to be beautiful or how anyone without the strength of mind of a foreign missionary can keep up such a regime. To read the accounts of all the elaborate pains the well-known It-girls take to make themselves a menace to every happy home—how they pat their chins with one kind of cream, rub their temples with another, apply lip-rouge with a Japanese paintbrush and sit for hours with their elbows in fragrant oil—is indeed inspiring. But how do they do it? Maybe they don't have a husband who when they're in the midst of a little retiring facial yell out, "Aren't you ever coming to bed?" And maybe those same husbands on beholding them creamed and anointed don't utter cries of pain and tell them to go wash their faces.

I try. About three times a year I go in for one of those sybaritic debauches known as a "facial." I do it because, while it may not lift my face it does my morale. To recline in a boudoir fit for Peggy Hopkins Joyce while a creature who might be Miss 1938 slathers the face with scented creams and lotions is sheer opiate bliss. It is very helpful if the cook has walked out or if a Harvard senior tells you he likes you because you remind him of his mother.

When I am in this vulnerable state the young lady asks me just what I've been using on my face in a tone that implies she suspects it's scouring powder. She tells me that what my skin cells are crying for is their new "Wonder Crême," compose of water lilies and the female glands of South American turtles. She then dabs on something that feels and smells the way Marlene Ditrich looks, explaining how it turns wrinkles into dimples and creates such sex appeal that it can be employed only sparingly.

Then I'm covered in thick layers of goop and gently mauled until I almost fall asleep, thinking peacefully I'm glad I came after all. But suddenly sneaking up from behind, she clamps some pungent cloth over my face, ties it tightly over my head. I can't swallow. I can't see. There's one fearful moment when I'm afraid I can't breathe. And she goes away and leaves me in this horrifying beauty mask. But as I finally start to summon the manager, back she comes as though nothing had happened.

Quelled, I allow her to soothe me with a few more lotions, and lie there inert while she makes me as beguiling as Manon Lescaut with subtle eye shadow, subtle face powder, not-so-subtle rouge and downright hussy lipstick. When she finally permits me to look at myself in a mirror, I chirp like a newborn sparrow, amazed that this beauty is actually me. She sells me so hard on my own possibilities that invariably I leave with my arms full of creams and lotions and my soul full of determination to do right by myself. But I never do.

Whenever I do lie down for half an hour with a mud pack on my face and pads on my eyelids, the phone rings. Or if the phone doesn't ring, my child enters and on seeing me screams with fright.

However, I continue to have spasmodic attacks of beauty culture brought on by the cosmetic ads for which I am a complete sucker. These fall into two lines of sales talk, the "glamour" and the "scientific." The former presents the picture of some ravishing creature in an attitude that implies she's about to be yet more ravished. and in the blurb below, which is the "tropic-seas-night-of-love" sort of thing, the purchaser of the product has assurance of romance, seduction and general hell-raising. In fact, with every jar comes a free ticket down the primrose path.

In the "scientific" ad we see an enlargement of the cutaneous and subcutaneous layers, revealing the hungry little cells clamoring for their morning cosmetic. Below is the photograph of a research laboratory which has consecrated itself to bringing a perfect complexion within the reach of every woman. After years of research they have hit upon an ingredient that can be likened in importance only to the discovery of radium—and that extra ten bucks meant for the savings bank goes into a jar of "Dynavite Miracle" which in all probability I shall never find time to use.

One never-ending joy about these products is the wording of the directions that accompany them. The face is not cleaned, it is "cleansed." A skin softener is said to be "satinizing." Rejuvenation has been supplanted by the incredible word "youthifying," and even an old-fashioned pimple is referred to with averted eyes as an "acne condition."

Ah me! It is all most exquisite and I do wish I could manage to fit it in!

GREEN FEED FOR POULTRY.

Steeped Alfalfa Hay Proves the Most Successful Winter Green Feed For the Laying Flock.

AT ALL times of the year an abundance of green feed is essential to the health of the poultry flock. In summer it may be provided by free range on the farm, but in winter it must be supplied by some form of stored feed. Roots, cabbage, sprouted oats, and alfalfa hay are commonly used for winter feeding. Probably alfalfa is the most valuable element in the winter poultry ration, and if the following precaution is taken in feeding it may be used in unlimited quantity.

For several years it has been the practice at the Experimental Station at Harrow to chop fine the young alfalfa shoots for the baby chicks and to use cut alfalfa hay as the sole means of supplying the necessary roughage and greens for winter egg production. A good grade of second or third cutting hay is run through a cutting box in about half-inch lengths, steeped for 24 hours by entirely covering with cold water, strained, and fed in shallow tubs. For the best results it is fed immediately after the early morning grain and again late in the afternoon. Old stalks left should be thrown out where the birds cannot reach them or they may be the cause of crop trouble.

Fair results may be had by feeding good alfalfa leaf dry but the experience at this Station is that the steeped cut hay is better appreciate by the birds on account of its easy digestibility and because it is more palatable.

MORTGAGE REDUCERS FOR THE FARMER.

Well-Known Naturalist is Fooled By Maple Sugar Hoax While Dining With Farmer Friend.

NOT infrequently I have seen a farmer pay 10c for one of his own apples that he had sold 4 for 1c; and many times I have seen him pay from 5c to 10c for a potato which he had sold 5 or 6 for 1c....The other day I dropped into a farmer's place and was invited to stay for dinner. They were having the last of a huge gobbler (29 pounds) and the bones were in a kettle boiling, together with lots of celery, onions, carrots, parsley and last, but not least, dumplings, but I dislike dumplings, but I liked those as they were made of whole wheat flour. Yes, the farmer grew the wheat himself, and made his own flour in a fine-feed electric grinder....That was some rich and tasty soup.

At the end of the meal they passed around a platterful of black walnut meats mixed in with their own very dark brown maple sugar. It was a nice combination. I asked if they had a special hiding-place where they kept their maple sugar out of season; and my host told me that he, like Ernest Thompson Setton was working a hoax on me, and what I thought was maple sugar was only No. 3 brown, a pure cane sugar from which only the molasses had been taken out. However, it tasted as good as the best maple and that was satisfactory enough. By-the-way, I suppose you know there is no molasses in beet sugar. And do you know that some maple sugar manufacturers mix a quantity of brown with some real maple and sell it as maple-flavoured sugar....I am not trying to defend the farmer from humbugs or schemers—I am just telling you readers something that may enable you to have money so as to pay off your mortgage.

Do you ever go to the market and see how eagerly many Jews will pay 25c a pound for fresh carp? This fish, which reminds many of us of chewing flannel, the more intelligent Jews cook into a very tasty dish. Here is the point; any farmer who has a large weedy pond can raise an enormous quantity of carp. These fish eat the weeds in the pond; just grazing, like sheep, on the weed-beds....I know of a good big pond down in Oklahoma that is called Belle Isle Lake, where one can throw in a line baited with a piece of dough and pull out carp that weigh over 20 pounds each....It is too bad we Canadians don't like carp, as they multiply faster than any fish I know of. However, they sell well and they make a change of food for foxes and mink. Of course, if you had one running cold pond and one big stagnant pond you could haul carp out of one, grind them up and throw them in for food to cut-throat, brown, rainbow, steelhead or speckled trout — and thus change carp into a real dainty dish for your own tables. Speckled trout that are continually fed liver do not possess the good flavour that those fed on grasshoppers, crickets and other natural food do.

Speed Uses His Head

THE OLD CLOCK on the wall of the production department droned off the slowly moving seconds. Tick-tock; tick-tock; Do your work; do it well; do your work; do it well. It was a lazy spring morning, the sort that makes a boy restless under the restraint of having to take care of a job, even though it is a bully good job.

Speed Kane, the energetic young assistant, was going at his work with his well-known vigour, though there wasn't quite as much snap in the way he dashed off his memoranda, or in his voice as he talked over the telephone. He seemed to be getting satisfaction out of his work, but not a great deal of excitement. This was a morning to make a fellow feel like a plough horse rather than a fiery thoroughbred.

But it was perfect for Herb Rowe, the production manager, who genially permitted Speed to do all the work. Herb was sitting comfortably at his desk and deriving a large measure of solid comfort from his morning paper. It was a bit annoying, probably, to have to turn the pages, but there's always a something to bother.

Finally, Herb laid his paper aside, with a sigh of heart-felt regret. Thirty-six pages wasn't enough reading matter. He looked at Speed, thinking that perhaps he might prolong the satisfaction of his paper by some conversation. "I see the Babe got his smash over the fence again yesterday."

"Yeh," said Speed. He had read all about that smash at five-thirty yesterday.

Herb seemed philosophical. "That fellow Ruth is what I call a real guy. He knows what he wants to do; he knows how to do it; and he—"

"Aw, shucks! I wish Babe Ruth would come walking in this dump right now. That would be something to talk about. I'm getting hungry for excitement. I'm beginning to feel as cheerful as a 'Game Postponed' sign. If something doesn't happen pretty soon, I'm going to lose my pep, and this old agency will go to the dogs."

"Just be patient, kid. By the time you're forty you'll understand there insn't much in this world to get all hot and bothered about. It's this way ——"

And then Jim Sharpe walked in. He was a demon contact man, handling big accounts. Not very exciting, but usually when he happened in it meant that something had to be done that never had been done before, like making a cut in an hour, or printing some folders in a couple of days. He put pep into the production department, and his coming now caused Speed to brighten up quite a bit.

Jim dumped some papers on to Speed's desk, apologetically. "Nothing but a charity job this time, boy. Business is kind of dull with me."

"Humph!" and Speed's face fell. "I was hoping you'd have something interesting."

Jim swung into his usual business manager. "Now this full-page ad for the Y.M.C.A. membership drive—we are to make a cut for it. Can't spend any money, except for the plate. No drawing. I told Robertson — he's the chairman of the committee—that we could find illustrations somewhere. And it's up to you, Speed, to use your head. You know how, boy."

"Sure," admitted Speed. And he picked up the work with a measure of zest. At least, it gave him a chance to spend some time looking for illustrations in the magazine file. That would break the monotony of writing orders and checking deliveries.

"This man Robertson is a good client of mine, Speed," had been Jim's parting shot. "He's giving his time to the Y.M.C.A., and he expects to get the co-operation ofthe Hannibal Advertising Agency. So we've got to give him something snappy, if we can."

The title of the advertisement was —"Will Your Son Grow Up Into a Man or a Beast?"

Speed read it over a few times. "I'll say that's got a wallop, all right. Taking a heap of credit to themselves; but I should worry. Want cuts showing a Man and a Beast. Well—" And he made for the file-room.

Man or Beast! That was an advertising idea to conjure with. Speed decided that he'd show this bird, Robertson, how the Hannibal gang could really put over a sales argument.

His immediate job was to find an illustration that could serve as copy for making a cut — for two cuts, rather. One would have to be an up-and-coming business executive, Speed reasoned, and the other a no-account business man. It oughtn't to be so hard. In just a few minutes he discovered a picture that was a composite portrait of the two recent Presidential candidates. That ought to represent a real man, all right. Speed tore out the sheet. Now for the bum.

It seemed that pictures of bums were rather scarce. Finally, way back in a corner, hidden in the dark, Speed happened on a file of dusty old magazines. They must have been ten years old, at least. Maybe a hundred, for all Speed knew. He picked off the top one. It was about pugilism. Might be something here. He turned a few pages—and there before his eyes was the most perfect Beast he ever had seen in his life. It was a full-page picture of a so-called prize-fighter,— no name under it,— and opposite was the heading, "What Is the Cost of a Hundred Ring Battles." Apparently, the writer was using this portrait to show that a fighter couldn't get by a hundred ring scraps without having his map distorted almost beyond human characteristics.

Speed studied that picture a long time. It was just what he wanted, yet it was so perfect that he simply had to admire it. "Boy," he said to the fellow looking out at him, "they sure must have pasted you! If your old mother ever saw you looking like this it would break her heart. I wonder what you did to the other fellows."

No, there couldn't be any criticism of this picture. The fellow himself surely wouldnt care, even if he did find out. He did look like a Beast. And, anyway, Speed reasoned, that old magazine had been printed in Minneapolis, which was a long way from Cincinnati. Further, nobody would object to helping the Y.M.C.A. in its membership drive.

AND so the cuts were made, and everybody was delighted. Speed had used his head, all right. Jim Sharpe said the illustrations were perfect. Mr. Robertson declared they were the best he'd ever seen for such a purpose, and if the Hannibal Advertising Agency could give him such service in his own work he'd be better pleased. Then the advertisement appeared in the newspapers, causing its reasonable share of interest, and bringing into the fold of the Y.M.C.A. a very tidy number of enrolments.

"I'll buy you a good lunch one of these days, kid," promised the happy jim. "This is better than I thought it would be."

Which pleased Speed so much that he showed the ad to Judy McGann, the file clerk, explaining in full detail that he was responsible. "Isn't it a dandy?" he asked, holding up the proof so that the light would strike it just right.

But Judy, being perhaps a little immature for appreciating high-grade advertising-agency work, didn't react. She couldn't get her eyes off the Beast. "Ugh! I'd hate to have to look at a real person like that. I think fighting is terrible. You don't fight, do you, Speed?"

"Who? Me? I should say not." Then he considered the proof from his own viewpoint. "You just watch me, Judy. One of these days I'll be handling some real accounts of my own. Just you wait."

Which was all right. Quite all right. For it was a good piece of work, and justified such self-satisfaction. Yet, because of this fine example of advertising cleverness, there was gradually closing in upon Speed Kane the largest piece of trouble that had ever happened in his young and innocent life. This impending disaster was all the more terrible because Speed went on ahead enjoying his triumph without the slightest intimation of what was in store for him. Jim Sharpe ought to have known the danger. Mr. Robertson, the experienced advertiser, should have been cautious. Indeed, Speed himself should have had a hunch that trouble might come. But no—

Now, as a cruel fate would have it, there lived almost within a stone's throw of the office of the Hannibal Advertising Agency a man by the name of Joe Bang. His home was a squalid furnished room in one of those dingy apartment buildings that squeeze themselves so close in upon the business district of a large city. Joe Bang was an unknown figure — just came along; there he was. A sour, silent, fermented individual, looking out suspiciously and bitterly upon an unappreciative world. A mean, rotten world, he called it. It had left him broke, lonely, not even able to get a match. And he, the great Slugger Joe, the fighter who had gone through a hundred battles! Why, he'd have been the champ if they'd given him a half chance. But now—just a bum, with crooked eyes, shapeless lips, bulbous cauliflower ears; he was vindictive, poisoned with resentment and bitterness. And, of course, he saw the picture of the Beast in the advertisement which Speed Kane had so ingeniously produced. The picture that Speed had used was his picture!

The advertisement appeared Monday. One week later, Slugger Joe wandered into the reading-room of the city library to read the want ads, and saw it. Within ten minutes he walked into the office of the Y.M.C.A. "Tell me who put me pitcher in this here ad!" he growled.

The secretary's face went white. He sensed the impending disaster. "Why, my dear sir. why—ah—" Then an idea came to him. "Our advertising is handled by—"

"I want to see de guy what done this!" Slugger Joe was getting impatient.

"Well, you'll have to go and see the Hannibal Advertising Agency. They are entirely responsible for that picture." And the secretary made his information practical by explaining in detail how the office of the Hannibal Advertising Agency might be quickly and easily reached.

There followed an immediate call at the Hannibal office. Jim Sharpe was out. And so Slugger Joe Bang was soon leaning far over Speed Kane's desk, his ugly face pushing down in Speed's bewildered countenance.

"You de guy what put my pitcher in this here ad?" snarled the slugger.

"Why—" Speed felt like a toad facing a rattler.

"Did yu?"

"Why—" Speed couldn't manage any other word—not another word from the fifty or hundred thousand in use by the human race.

"If yuh did," went on the Slugger, in the most menacing voice ever heard in the whole world, "then I'm goin' to beat your smart Alec carcass int' a piece o' beefsteak. Get me?"

Speed looked around hurriedly and noted that Herb Rowe had gone out to lunch. He was utterly alone with his fate. He must do something. Just a glance at the horrible face and then at the advertisement that Slugger Joe held in his hand convinced Speed that this was the original.

"It's a insult!" The man waved the paper in clenched fist. "It's a dirty insult. I been insulted enough. I won't stand for any more. Now come out from behind that desk if yuh don't want me t'—"

Speed's fear was so overwhelming that he now had a sense of fortitude. His mind worked fast and furiously. "So you're the man who fought a hundred fights. Gee, you must have been a real fighter."

A look of statisfaction flashed into the cunning, beady eyes. The hard face seemed to soften a little. Then the old menacing glare returned. "Yeh, I'm th' guy what could've knocked the champ for a goal, if they hadn't double-crossed me. I'd 've knocked him silly just like I'm agoin' t' beat you. This is once I ain't goin' t' get cheated out of my win. Now—"

Speed sat hunched down in his chair, a sickly grin on his ashen face. "This isn't a good place to fight," he said.

"It ain't, eh?" and the brutal, battle-scarred fists began to take their position of combat.

"Now, here's what I'll do," continued Speed. "I'll meet you somewhere outside the office. Say out in the park, Eden Park, if you like, where there won't be any people around—" Silly words, and they awed Speed as he heard them coming from his lips. But they seemed a way out, and he continued desperately. "And then we can put on a real fight. That's fair, isn't it?"

After a moment, the Slugger's face appeared to relax a little, and hope came to soothe the troubled mind of Speed Kane. The brute had sensed wisdom in Speed's suggestion.

"Meet me at ten o'clock t'night in Eden Park by th' water tower. If yuh don't, I'll come back here an' give yuh twice as much maulin'. An' don't bring no pals or dicks. Understand?"

Speed nodded weakly, and the Slugger shuffled out of the room, leaving the production department assistant with his miserable thoughts.

Speed thought of many things. Why go there at all? Why not take a cop? No, he'd given his word. He might break his word, he reasoned in despair to save his life, but it would do him no good. He had spoken more truthfully than he reckoned when he said that Slugger Joe could come back to the office any time and find him.

SPEED was right in the muckiest part of his meditating when Jim Sharpe came in to report again about the advertisement. The total number of memberships, Jim announced happily, was 143. Wasn't that fine? Surely, Speed, would be delighted with the good news!

Oh, yes, indeed. Speed was so delighted that he looked like a tombstone. Jim caught the gloom, .and inquired.

"I've got troubles," said Speed. "A guy calling himself Slugger Joe Bang has just been in here raising Cain about my using his picture in that ad. He says he's going to—"

"Sore? Why, say, he's likely to sue the Y.M.C.A. for damages. We can't have that. It'd make us look silly with Robertson. You'd better take care of him."

"I will."

"Get a release from him somehow. Why, my heavens! He might sue the Y.M.C.A. for ten thousand dollars. Robertson would be off us for life."

"What's a release?" asked Speed.

"You know, a signed statement giving us authority to use his picture. You've got to get it, Speed."

Jim took pencil and pad and wrote a few lines. "Have that typed up and get him to sign his name. Then there won't be any trouble. Get it back to me tomorrow. Remember!" And Jim was gone, after having deposited more trouble on to Speed's already sagging shoulders.

What to do? Speed Kane had been in many difficult positions before in his life. He had always come through with flying colours. Yet he had never faced such a problem as this present one. The obvious next step for him was to think, to think as he had never thought before.

Half an hour later a gleam of light began to brighten Speed's face. He got up and walked about the room, wholly ignoring the curious stare of Herb Rowe. Then, suddenly, he grabbed his hat and shot out of the door. He was the old Speed again, on the trail of an idea!

Darkness descended over Eden Park even as it enveloped the rest of the world. The clock on the church tower over on Mount Adams said that it was one minute until ten o'clock. Slugger Joe leaned carelessly against the water tower.

Then two figures walked into the light. One of them was Speed Kane.

Slugger Joe turned to them with a snarl. "So yuh turned yel—"

But Speed didn't seem to hear. Obviously, he had changed his original plan of giving satisfaction to the gentleman of the cauliflower ear. He smiled amiably at the fighter. "Hello, Slugger," he said. Then hurriedly: "I've brought along another man, who has a good job for you. I know you'll like him. This is Mr. Kenwoody, athletic director of the Y.M.C.A."

Mr. Kenwoody held out a gracious hand, and Slugger Joe could do no less than take it, under the circumstances. It gave Speed a chance to continue. "I told Mr. Kenwoody what a fine boxer you are, Joe and he needs somebody to teach boxing at the Y.M.C.A. Somebody who knows what's what. I told him how you should have been lightweight champion. And he said you were just the fellow he needed. So I knew you wouldn't object if I brought him along."

"Sure," responded Slugger Joe, a bit darkly. Then the light seemed to dawn on him, and a smile broke over his face, making him appear almost human. "Gee! I ain't had a good job in a long time. I didn't expect nothin' like this."

"Then you'll take it?" asked Speed, showing obvious relief in his voice."

"Yeh. Just my dish. I reckon you've done me a good turn. All right, kid. I c'n see now that you mean well."

Then Speed pulled a sheet of paper from his pocket. He hesitated for a moment, looking at Slugger Joe's bright face for encouragement. "Just one more thing, Joe," he said easily. "Since you are working for the Y., you will want to make a little contribution to the fund campaign, won't you?"

"Huh?" asked Slugger Joe. "How much money have I got t' pay?"

'No money at all. Just sign this paper here. It states that you give permission for that one use of your picture. Of course, we won't use it any more. I've just been telling Mr. Kenwoody what a good scout you are."

And the Slugger signed.

Speed was whistling a merry tune the next morning when Judy McGann happened into the production department. "You're always so happy, Speed. You'd make a wonderful salesman."

"Salesman? Hmph! I could tell these birds around here a heap of things about selling that they don't know."

"Why don't you try it some day?"

"Some day? I reckon I've made some fine sales already. It's simply a matter of using your head. Using your head's better than using your feet."

He might have said fists, and he almost did, but July wouldn't have understood.

HOOF CAUGHT IN RAIL, HORSE IS KILLED BY TRAIN

A horse owned by M. Hall, Prescott, was killed by an eastbound freight train on the C.N.R. crossing north of Prescott, Friday night. Mr. Hall said he was coming into town with a load of hay and was passing over the track at Edward street, when the horse's hoof became wedged between the rail and tie. Efforts to extricate the animal's hoof being unsuccessful, he attempted to flag an approaching train.

The engineer, unable to stop the heavily loaded train, struck the horse and wagon carrying them about 100 yards.

Damage was estimated at $125.

Now It Can Be Told.

"That soda jerker mixes a nice soda. I wonder how he learned."

"Oh, maybe he went to Sundae school."

Motor Trip to Florida Covered Over 4,000 Miles

The thrills and beauties of a winter motor trip to Florida were described to Chesterville Rotarians by O. L. King, superintendent of the local plant of Nestlé's Milk Products (Can.) Ltd. at Tuesday evening's luncheon. Mr. and Mrs. King returned at the week-end from their 4,408 mile journey which started a couple of days before Christmas.

Mr. King completed 26 years with Nestlé's on Jan. 3, H. J. Slosser, told the members as he introduced the speaker. Starting at the bottom, he worked first at shovelling coal from the railroad cars, and by 1917 he had reached his first superintendent's appointment at Newville, N.Y. Mr. King has been in Chesterville as head of the firm's only Canadian plant for almost two decades, during which time the factory has made great progress.

The trip to Florida was taken in easy stages, and several days were spent in the southern state visiting points of interest and calling on relatives residing there and also on former residents of Chesterville. The journey home was by a different route so that they covered as much of the country as possible in the drive.

Leaving town Dec. 23, Mr. and Mrs. King spent Christmas at Enosberg Falls, Vt., with relatives, and left on Monday for the trip with the temperature 20 below, but with the roads perfectly clear of snow. Spending the night at Kingston, N.Y., in the morning a foot of soft snow covered the highway, and the cold spell continued as far south as Raleigh,, N.C., where sleet was so bad the windshield wiper was useless.

Jacksonville, Fla., was reached on the fourth night and beautiful summer weather was enjoyed. The splendid weather at St. Petersburg was extolled by Mr. King, who told of the newspaper that gives a free edition each day the sun fails to shine—last year only four were needed.

Florida, with beautiful weather, gorgeous flowers, orange groves and other attractions for the northerners, has not natural grass. White sand is everywhere, and only where irrigation is supplied will grass take root. The palms and flowers such as the poinsettia that have heavy root systems, thrive wonderfully in the eternal summer and are a delight to visitors.

Tarpon Springs with the world's sponge market was visited and a trip made in one of the boats to get first-hand knowledge of the sponge fishing industry that is done almost entirely by Greeks and which supplies 90 per cent of the sponges for commerce.

Mr. King made the visit south just before the opening of the winter rush which is so great that a city such as St. Petersburg jumps from 55,000 pomonths. Visitors are encouraged to register at the chambers of commerce gister at the ihambers of rommerce by the cities they visit where staffs of clerks list the names and home states or provinces and friends are often brought together by means of this register.

Southern hospitality amazed the visiting Rotarian who said that many of the residents in Florida are from northern parts and are anxious to see a face from home and one is greeted courteously on every side. Several former Chesterville residents now living in Miami were visited.

Sarasota Springs, the home of the Ringling Bros. circus for the winter months, is also the place selected by the late John Ringling for his three-million-dollar home and his art gallery which contains the finest collection in the United States and possibly in the world, valued at 28 million dollars.

The route home was made by the east coast of Florida up to Jacksonville. St. Augustine, the oldest city in the U.S. was visited, and the way then went to Winston-Salem, N.C., for the first night's stop. The down-route was not touched on the way home until after New York state was reached, so that a great deal of the country was seen by the travellers.

K. D. Lawson thanked Mr. King for his fine travel talk and asslred him that the members had enjoyed his description of the highlights of his trip.

Guests present were John Helmer and W. E. Marshall. Announcement was made of a meeting called for Jan. 27 at Brockville where an international celebration by Rotary will be planned to mark this summer the 125 years of peace between the United States and Canada. Two representatives from each club are asked to be present. An invitation was also read from the Smiths Falls Rotary club to a curling bonspiel for Rotarians.

CHARCOAL FROM WOOD WASTE

A Fact About Canada.

THE manufacture of charcoal from wood waste would help to solve the problem of the utilization of large quantities of wood waste that occur in lumbering operations in Canada, if a local market could be found to absorb it. But charcoal, because of its bulk, cannot be transported any great distance economically and there is but a limited demand in Canada, where it is chiefly used for lighting fires and for cooking. Other uses are in the manufacture of metallurgical products, chemicals, black powder and poultry food. It is also used in the purification of water, as a deodorizer and as a decolourizer.

In Europe successful attempts are being made to use producer gas from charcoal as a fuel for heavy trucks. Such a fuel is considerably cheaper than gasoline, and, if adopted in Canada, would increase the demand for charcoal.

When wood is heated in the absence of air it decomposes, evolving gases, and leaves as a residue, charcoal. The earliest known method of making charcoal was to stack wood in beehive-shaped piles and cover almost completely with leaves and earth. By kindling a fire and regulating the air supply, part of the wood is burnt, producing sufficient heat to convert the remainder to charcoal. This method is still used to some extent, but in modern distillation plants charcoal is produced by placing dry wood in steel ovens which are heated externally. The gases evolved, after passing through condensers, are further processed to yield valuable by-products, acetic acid and methyl alcohol.

The total production of charcoal in Canada during the calendar year 1936 was 41,305,000, of which 31,913,000 was made in the wood distillation industry and 9,440,000 in the charcoal burning industry.

NEEDLECRAFT COURSE CONCLUDES AT BRINSTON

A one-week course in needlecraft just concluded at Brinston has stimulated enthusiasm throughout the district for this feminine accomplishment.

Miss E. Fisch, of Toronto, conducted the course, which embraced needlepoint, smocking, hemstitching, weaving, various edgings, cutwork and Madeira. She answered numerous questions on the finer points of the work, and her instruction was much appreciated. The class had 35 members and many interested visitors.

Members will continue along the lines shown by Miss Frisch, having in view an enlargement of the work, such as applicatio of interior decoration, table linens and dresses.

At the closing session of the course, Miss Frisch was warmly thanked for her leadership, and gave an encouraging talk on the work.

The vote of thanks to the instructress was moved by Mrs. Irvine, president of the Women's Institute, and seconded by Mrs. H. A. Hanson. Miss Ruby Johnston gave musical selections.

Asked MacPherson: "What did Tam's wife get the jail for?"

'For rocking Tam tae sleep," replied McPherson.

"But they canna jail a wife for that!"

"Ye should hae seen the rock."

Mr. and Mrs. Mason O. Robinson, of Grantley, who spent a couple of months on an extended trip through Western Canada and the United States, arrived home last week.
