Henry's Shorthand School
Ottawa, Ont.

On the May Civil Service Examination, this year, we passed more stenographic candidates than the other local business colleges combined.

It is a common occurrence for Henry-trained students to get 100% in Shorthand 100% in Typewriting, and 95% in Composition.

These subjects being the most difficult on this examination, our record of FIRST, SECOND and FOURTH places for the whole of Canada, is at once explained.

During the past two years, more than 235 students have come to us from other ocal business colleges.

Does it not prove that we have a superior school ?

Our instruction being individual, you may start at any time.

Allen—Biever

St. Mary's Church. Alton, Iowa was the scene of a pretty wedding on Wednesday March first at 8.15 A. M., when Thomas Allen, son of Mrs. James Allen and Regina Biever daughter of Mrs. Helena Biever were united in marriage by Rev. Father Anthofer.

The bride was attended by her sister Miss Philomena and the groom by his cousin Frank Allen. The bride was beautifully gowned in white silk chiffon over pussy willow taffeta with criptal trimming and veil draped in bonnet-like manner caught with lilies of the valley. The bride's maid wore a yellow chiffon over pink silk and both carried bouquets of roses and ferns. After the ceremony the wedding party consisting of near relatives and neighbours of the couple went to the home of the bride where a grand reception awaited them.

The bride who was a milliner by trade is well and favourably known in this community and Eastern Iowa where she was engaged for many seasons and is in every way fitted to grace the new home. The groom is an industrious young farmer who came from Chesterville, Ontario, Canada five years ago. They will make their home on a farm near Dell Rapids South Dakota. The Alton Democrat extends congratulation and best wishes.

Ayrshire Men Organize.

A very enthusiastic meeting was held at South Mountain on the afternoon of March 24th. The purpose of this meeting was to consider the question of organizing an Ayrshire Breeders Club for the District. A large and representative gathering of Ayrshire Breeders were present. Every township in Dundas and two townships of Grenville County being represented by men who were enthusiastic in proclaiming the merits of their breed and also in advocating the formation of a Club to advance their interests in this district.

Mr. W. F. Stephen, Huntingdon, Que. sec. of the Canadian Ayrshire Breeders Association was present and outlined the many advantages that would be derived from a Club of this kind both in the breeding and disposal of pure bred stock. After some discussion on the part of the breeders present, all of which was favourable to organizing, the meeting took the form of an organization meeting, and nominations for the various offices was called for by Mr. E. P. Bradt, Morrisburg, these resulting in the election of officers as follows:

Hon. Pres.— James Ballartyne, Chesterville.

President— Wesley Hamilton, Chesterville.

Vice Pres.—Elgin Montgomery, South Mountain.

Sec'y-treas.— Arthur Christie, Winchester R. R. 2.

Auditor—Herbert Walter, Winchester, R. R. 3.

The newly formed organization is to be known as the Dundas-Grenville Ayrshire Breeders Club.

It was decided by the newly appointed officers to hold an Ayrshire Judging Demonstration during the summer months, the date and location of which will be announced at a later date.

Any Ayrshire Breeder in the district wishing to get further information in connection with this Club or wishing to become a member should communicate with the secretary, Mr. Arthur Christie, Winchester, R. R. 2.

(Financial Post.)

Late in 1914, under pressure and inspiration of the newspapers, backed up by very polite but definite instructions from Prime Minister Borden, our Federal Department of Agriculture got to work—rather late, it is true—on a campaign for greater production.

The object was to show the farmers how, without much greater but with more intelligent efforts, they could make more money out of their farms. The Campaign was marked by unbusinesslike and inefficient methods' but climate conditions were abnormal, and we had the greatest crop on record.

The department used three methods of informing the farmer.

First, a volume entitled "Patriotism and Production" was hurriedly thrown together and distributed. To-day nearly all important busiuess concerns have an advertising department, but no advertising manager could turu out a book like that and hold his job. This does not mean that there were not some goods things in the book; there were a number of excellent things, but they were ineffectively presented.

Second, lecturers were engaged to address meetings of farmers. Some of the best men in Canada were employed in this work, but a great many were necessarily inferior. It was pointed out in these columns at the time that such a policy would be ineffective and that an average of not more than 25 per cent. of the farmers in the district could be induced to attend these meetings. The attendance proved that we were right. At one meeting in Ontario, for example addressed by one of the most eminent agriculturists in Canada, assisted by two other excellent men, in one of the richest farming districts in the province, uine persons only, including women, were p esent.

Lastly, posters were put up throughout the farming districts. It was pointed out at the time that experience of successful advertisers proved that posters in rural districts were not found profitable and seldom used excepting to catch the eye of probable transient buyers who do not see local papers.

The Financial Post pointed out time and time again that the methods used by the Department of Agriculture were unbusinesslike and wasteful and urged them to adopt plans based upon the actual experience of successful business concerns. This, we said, was to assemble at Ottawa the best agriculturists in Canada. and get them to decide upon a line of action that would be the most profitable for Canadian farmers to pursue. A series of weekly talks bringing out these points should be prepared and inserted in local weekly newspapers read by farmers right across Canada; this to be supplemented by booklets giving information in detail to be sent only to farmers who were interested enough to write for them.

Parliament has been very generous in its allowance to the Department of Agriculture, but the Department of Agriculture has been lavishly wasteful in their expenditure of this money. They have given large sums to the provinces for expenditure. A million dollars was appropriated for Ontario, and it was common gossip in that Department of Agriculture that they were having difficulty in finding avenues for spending this windfall.

All Canada has a deep interest in this question and particularly the class represented by The Financial Post. Canadian investors and business men depeud for their dividends and success in business chiefly on farm production.

As the Department of Agriculture, though officered by some of the best men in the Civil Service, seems unable to learn the lesson of successful experience, Parliament should deal with it and give clear instructions as to how the estimates should be appropriated. A million dollars spent in the right weekly talks to the farmers of Canada could easily cause ten, twenty or fifty times that much increase in revenue.

Everybody Smiled

The following amusing passage took place between counsel and witness in a disputed will case:

"Did your father give you no parting admonition!"

"He never gave much away at any time."

"I mean to say, what were his last words?"

"They don't concern you."

"They not only concern me, sir," remarked the barrister severely, but they concern the whole court."

"Oh, all right," was the reply, 'Father said, 'Don't have no disputin' when I'm gone, Jim, 'cos lawyers is the biggest rogues unhung."

Drcinage For Wetness and Drought.

How shall we obtain the most satisfactory soil moisture condition throughout the year? The great factor in moisture control is drainage, natural or artificial. Few farms are sufficiently drained by natural means, nearly all require some artificial drainage.

The problem then is, "where shall we place our drains?" "How deep shall we put them?" "What size of tile shall we use?" The position of the drains depends largely on the slope of the field; the depth on the kind of soil; the size of tile on the extent of the area drained and the fall or grade given the tile.

If you are uncertain about these points or anticipate any difficulties the Ontario Agricultural College will send you a drainage surveyor who will, if necessary prepare a map of your farm showing the location of your drains, the size of tile to use, and the grades and depths of the drains.

The cost to you for these services will be the travelling expenses of the surveyor, and as several surveys are made on one trip the charge is seldom over three dollars for each survey.

Those who have had their farms surveyed and have installed part or all of their drains may have a new plan prepared free of charge if they will return the old plan after marking in all changes made in the original system.

On the same terms as those for surveys the College will send a man to give you a start on the installation of your drain if you have had no previous experience. He will show you how to set grade stakes grade the ditch bottom, make the junctions of main and lateral, lay the tile and assist you in any way required.

If you contemplate draiuing during 1916 or are planning for 1917 and need assistance write to the Department of Physics O. A. College, Guelph, or your District Agricultural Office, state your difficulties and request assistance.

Must Pay For Milk According to Its Nourishing Value.

Toronto, March 25.—Legislation to reform the methods of buying milk from farmers by cheese factories will be introduced this season by Hon. Jas. Duff. At present factories buy at a specified rate per 100 pounds under what is known as the pooling system. This has proved unsatisfactory, since the proportion of fat and other values varies in different milk.

The result has been that the farmer producing good milk has got no more for it than the man whose cows give milk poor in quality.

The proposed legislation will prohibit buying on the pooling system, requiring cheese factories to purchase according to the fat, casein and other values in the milk marketed.

Dog-Proof Sheep

Thomas Somerton of Pakenham is, says the Almonte Gazette, a strong believer in "preparedness." At Easter time there is always a demand for lamb, and he has now twenty February lambs on the way being prepared for the Easter market. He is also a warm admirer of the Dorset horned sheep, and for a number of reasons considers them the best to raise. For one thing they are "dog-proof." He has been keeping them for a number of years and his flock has been practically immune from injury from dogs. Another thing, they are prolific breeders, and the lambs come strong and healthy and are easily reared. The wool is fine and the fleece good, and the mutton well flavored.

Smuggler Caught at Brockville.

Brockville, Ont. March 27.—For several days the ice bridge between here and Morristown, N.Y., has afforded excellent crossing for foot passengers, and hundreds of Brockville residents have taken occasion to visit the American burg. The local customs staff, assisted by a special lady officer from Ottawa, made a round-up among the smugglers, who were caught in all directions, both night and day. The seizures are said to have been quite extensive.

How About Old Clothes.

A man once was talking about hard luck, and his friend was listening with a sour expression.

"Why, you don't know what hard luck is," said the friend. "I have always had it. When I was a kid there was such a bunch of us in the family that there had to be three tables at meal times, and I always got the third one."

"What's hard about that?"

"Why, says his friend, "It was 15 years before I knew a chicken had anything but a neck."

The Mysterious Mr. Allison.

No word of J. Wesley Allison! He may have been in New York a few days ago, although Carvell said he was. New York is not a good place for an honorary colonel to hide. Canada would be better. He might lose himself easily here in the whirl and swirl of colonels. There seems no chance that he is lost in Europe in the wrack and welter of war. Canada offers no allurements to him now that his only friend is gone to England. The General has very strong human passions. He is a healthy hater, but he sticks by his friends when they are under attack. He trusts men and puts them in responsible positions, who have not always the confidence of others. Allison is a case in point. He may be a good, straight, honest fellow, but I know only man who thinks and says so. Around Morrisburg, where he lives, he would never be convicted by a Dundas jury, if he were charged with being an unselfish patriot sacrificing his time and energy to save the country $50,000,000. They "don't care if he never comes back," but they would like to hear his story, just to know what it is and not with any intention of believing it. They remember him when he was in the tin plate business. All he promised them then was tin plate and he gave them gold brick. Ever since then they are interested in fiction. Perhaps in time Morrisburg will see him as Sir Sam does, but at present Morrisburg is as big and skeptical as Missouri.—From the letters of an M.P., in Toronto News.

May Have Municipal Hotels After Ontario Bars are Closed.

Toronto, March 27.—There will be no limitation upon the amount of liquor a druggist may sell upon a doctor's prescription according to the revised draft of the Ontario Temperance Act. The draft introduced on Wednesday placed a limit of six ounces on a sale but this will be removed.

It is pointed out that a six ounce limit would be impossible in many cases as a prescription calling for port or other liquor for invalids or convalescents. There will be, however, some limit placed upon the amount of liquor a druggist may keep in store.

Legislation providing machinery for maintaining hotel accommodation after prohibition goes into effect will probably be brought down this session according to an intimation given by a member of the government. The bill will probably make provision for the establishment of municipal hotels and for the tax exemptions to hotel keepers who remain in business.

"An' ye fell from a window, Jerry? How far was it ye fell?"

"Tin stories."

"Well, well, there was a great fall! And what did ye think of on your way down?"

"Whoi, I didn't think of nothin' until I passed the fifth storey. Thin I remimbered I left me poipe on the window sill."

SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

Britain's Greatest Composer is a Cheery Optimist.

Emerging from a temporary retirement, Sir Edward Elgar has delighted many admirers by recently appearing in the conductor's chair at the London Coliseum and conducting some of his greatest compositions, and, in addition, has written the music for a new play, "The Starlight Express," which Miss Lena Ashwell is producing at the Kingsway Theatre. Undoubtedly Sir Edward stands as the foremost of England's composers and musicians of the present day.

From an early age he displayed exceptional musical talent, although he never had a lesson in orchestration, and, indeed, is almost entirely self-taught. It is safe to affirm, however, that Sir Edward, whatever his earliest ambitions might have been, little dreamt when he started life in a solicitor's office, gave lessons on the violin, and played in the local orchestra at Worcester, his native city, where his father was an organist, that he would one day attain his present fame.

He had not much money in those days, but he was determined to learn. Nearly every week he used to journey to London from his native city, in order to attend the Saturday night concerts at the Crystal Palace. Now and then a small composition of his was given in his native district, and this local fame led to him being made band conductor in 1879 to the County Lunatic Asylum, where he spent his time coaching players recruited from the attendants.

It was while he was acting as band conductor to the asylum that he became familiar with practically every instrument, ranging from the French horn to the organ. Indeed, it would be difficult to name any instrument which Sir Edward cannot play. It was in those early days that he added to his income by composing dance music, for which he received special payment, while now and then he arranged accompaniments for nigger minstrel ballads for the use of the asylum inmates, for which he received 1s. 6d. each.

Possessing a keen sense of humor, Sir Edward Elgar is nothing if not an optimist. Not long ago he gave some good advice to an audience of musicians.

"Above all," he said, "let us be cheerful. Good music need not be dull. I know it is an old problem whether a dog howls because it is happy or miserable."

Birds and Disaster.

Tradition has it that a late swallow brings luck to the hostel he favors, and many country people still regard the bird as semi-consecrated, and refuse to allow its empty nest to be interfered with during the winter months. With the spring, the birds return to their original eaves, and it is a sign of impending misfortune if they neglect last year's nests. A swallow at sea brings disaster in its train, but a sand swallow is considered a mascot by the surrounding countryside.

Even the little hedge-sparrow may lay claim to some share of notoriety, for illness attacks the occupant of the room into which it gains access. A dead wren is another little treasure, and the superstitious Manx fishermen would never set sail at one time without one. A live wren will not work the same result, but a dead wren can vie with the renowned caul among sea superstitions. It is said that the wren averts a storm. Long ago, an evil spirit haunted the herring fisheries, until it suddenly assumed the form of a wren and flew off.

An Indian Marriage.

It seems almost incredible to an English girl that her little Indian sister never sees her husband until after the marriage ceremony. The parents choose the wife for the son of the house without consulting either party. Sometimes the bride is as young as fourteen. The child is gorgeously dressed, and placed on a dais behind a sheet; the women of the family being in attendance.

On the other side of the sheet is the bridegroom and many of his young men friends. The groom keeps throwing over jewels attached to flowers, which the women on the brides side remove and place in her lap or on her person.

This first ceremony is called the Shahdee, and although a man is allowed four wives, no other ever holds the same position as the first chosen for him. The others are of little importance, living their lives more or less as servants to the first wife. As the first wife gets to middle age she is known as the Begum.

Alverstone as a Musician.

The late Lord Alverstone was passionately fond of music. For many years he was a prominent member of the choir at St. Mary Abbots Church, Kensington, and he played the organ like a professional.

He could sing a good song, and not infrequently did at the Savage Club, of which he was a member. In 1900 at the club he asked Robert Martin, of "Killaloe" fame, to sing "Ballyhooley."

"Divil a note will I sing for the Lord Chief until he sings, too," said Martin.

The Lord Chief Justice took up the challenge, and led the way with "The Heart Bowed Down" and the Judge's Song from "Trial by Jury."

WILL WE EVER WALK ON AIR?

Train Of Thought Inspired By a Letter About "Fruit-a-tives"

MR. D. McLEAN

Orillia, Ont., Nov. 28th, 1914.

"For over two years, I was troubled with Constipation, Drowsiness, Lack of Appetite and Headaches. I tried several medicines, but got no results and my Headaches became more severe. One day I saw your sign which read 'Fruit-a-tives' make you feel like walking on air. This appealed to me, so I decided to try a box. In a very short time, I began to feel better, and now I feel fine. Now I have a good appetite, relish everything I eat, and the Headaches are gone entirely. I cannot say too much for 'Fruit-a-tives', and recommend this pleasant fruit medicine to all my friends". DAN McLEAN.

JESS WILLARD GOT DECISION OVER MORAN.

New York, March 25.—Jess Willard, champion heavyweight of the world, easily outpointed Frank Moran in a ten round bout here tonight. Willard had the better on points in every round except the third, which went to Moran by a narrow margin, and the eighth and ninth, which were even.

The conqueror of Jack Johnson claimed to have broken all the bones in the back of his right hand during a slashing rally in the third and it was noticeable that he did not use his right to any extent in the later rounds. Occasionally he uppercut to Moran's body or jaw with hand, but it lacked the punishing power shown in his training work.

The chief feature of Moran's battle was his gameness. Although he could make no impression on Willard with his hardest swings, he fought steadily and courageously under a fusillade of left jabs and hooks which battered his face and almost closed his eye toward the end of the bout. Several times Moran was dazed by the champion's smashes, but Willard, fighting with his usual lack of aggressiveness, did not appear to try particularly for a knockout. The champion never was in danger from Moran's blows, although a number landed with crashing force on his jaw and body. Most of them, however, either were blocked or avoided by the Kansas cowboy, who took full advantage of his great height and extraordinary reach.

Referee Charley White said after the the bout that it was one of the cleanest at which he had ever officiated and that he had to caution the boxers only once. Moran landed dangerously low on Williard at one time at in-fighting, but the blow was unintentional and did not appear to distress Williard seriously. The crowd which witnessed the bout was the largest that has ever seen a glove contest here. The Garden from the floor to the upper gallery, was jammed until there was hardly room to stand. Although women spectators were encouraged to see the bout, few responded, and not more than 200 of them were seen about in the arena boxes. Well known men in all walks of New York life, however, were grouped about in evening clothes and gave the boxing match as much tone as a night at the opera. A few of the woman spectators wore evening clothes, but the greater part of them were clad in the smart new spring suits which fill all the city's finery shops.

Moran opened hostilities with a light left to the head, then tried a left to the body, which was blocked. Willard kept jabbing with his long left, Moran boring in swung an overhand left high on the head and then was driven back by several left jabs and a short right hook to the ear. Willard held him off with another straight left and uppercut with his right. The champion was cool and grinned at Moran's futile attempts to reach his jaw.

The third and only round in which Moran had the advantage opened with the Pittsburger landing a hard left on the body. Willard sent his right with full force to Moran's ribs and put a straight left on the latter's nose. Frank rushed in again with three swings, landing his right three times overhand on the head, but he did not seem to be hurting the cowboy. Moran then swung his right to the body, and rushing in again with his head down, swung his left to the head, following with a right to the other side of the head.

Willard held him away again with his long left jabs, but Moran got in close with both hands. This was Moran's best round, and after the bout was over his advantage was explained by Willard's manager, who stated that the champion had broken some bones in his right hand during the round. If Willard met with an accident he did not show it, as he used his right occasionally, but not forcefully, during the next three rounds.

In the seventh, after Willard had inflicted a good deal of punishment on the challenger, Moran, in a wonderful rally, landed his left and four rights in succession on Willard's head and forced the champion to the ropes at the bell. Moran's face was covered with blood from his eye and nose in the eighth round, but he withstood several hard jabs and doggedly kept on boring in on Willard. He swung both hands to the head, but Willard was still too cool with his long left for Moran's blows to take effect. Moran landed a good left swing on Jess's ear as the bell sounded and earned an even break in this round.

Moran persistently rushed in the ninth but several of his swing were blocked. Jess kept jabbing with his left, but Moran tore in with a swinging right to the body and swung his left to the head. Then Willard jabbed him at will, but Frank rushed again and landed two right swings before he was met with a right uppercut, which forced him against the ropes, from which he sprang with a high right swing on the head, finishing the round, the honors of which were again even.

In the final session the champion kept working left jabs to the face, planting six of them without a return, although Moran was trying hard to land an overhand blow. Willard blocked another rush and jolted with right and left as Moran bored in. At close quarters Willard drove a half arm right to the wind and sent two short lefts and two rights to the head. Before the round ended he planted at least half a dozen short arm blows on Moran's face.

The awarding of the bout to Willard on points was virtually unanimous among the experts about the ringside, although all gave Moran credit for his gameness and continual efforts to land a punch on the Champion that would bring down his gigantic opponent. Promoter Rex Rickard announced that the gate receipts amounted to $151,254. Of this amount the state received 7½ per cent of the gross receipts which amounted to $11,344,05. Willard's share was $47,500, and Moran's $23,750.

Combined with the percentage taken by the state and the $7,500 paid for the rental of the Garden, the expenses totalled $90,094,05.

To this must be added other expenses, which probably will bring the total up $100,000, so that Tex Richard and his partner in the enterprise, Sam McCracken, will clear close to $50,000 profit on the bout.

Moran refused to make any statement after the bout other than to say there would have been no fighting if he had not taken the aggressive throughout the ten rounds.

Dr Lewis Morris, who later attended the champion at his hotel, said that Williard had suffered a slight fracture of the joint of the first index finger of his right hand early in the fight. He added, however, that the big fellow otherwise was in good condition, and that the injury to the finger would not trouble him more than a day or two.

Richard said after the fight: "Moran put up a good fight. He's a darn good boy. Willard was much slower than I thought he'd be. If he broke his right hand, as it is said he claimed he did, it did not seem to make much difference. He didn't seem to need his right a good part of the time.

Blow From a Steer Restores His Memory.

St. Thomas, March 24.—Malcolm P. Johnston, senior member of the shoe firm of Johnston & McCormick, who has just returned to the city after an absence of twenty months, tells an interesting story of his experience. A few weeks after recovering from a fractured skull, sustained by a fall down a cellar stairway in the summer of 1914, he remembered walking along the streets of St. Thomas, but recollects nothing between that time and when his memory returned while at work on a cattle ranch 50 miles from Tulsa, Oklahoma. How he got to that far-away State he has not the slightest idea.

When his memory returned a month ago he was helping to brand cattle. Mr. Johnston had charge of a fractious young steer, in handling which he received a sharp blow on the forehead. He was stunned by the shock, and his comrades dragged him from the enclosure to prevent the cattle from trampling over him. Upon recovering his senses he also recovered his memory of St. Thomas, his partner, business and friends here, but his mind was left a blank as to the events of the past twenty months. Soon after this awakening Mr. Johnston left for his brother's home near Chicago to spend a few days to recuperate before coming on to St. Thomas.

Peculiar Accident Results in Death

William H. Remus, an Arnprior delivery boy in the employ of Henry Steel, drove into the yard in rear of his employer's shop, when the horse's head caught in the clothesline. This, says the Watchman, relieved a wooden prop, which in falling struck the driver in the left eye. The injury, though painful, was not thought to be of a serious nature but a few days later inflammation set in, and from this time forward intense suffering was endured. The brain became affected and paralysis set in. The patient lost all control of the jaw action and frequently the jaws would close with such suddenness as to bite the tongue. Everything known to medical skill done to relieve the sufferer, but to no avail, and death came as a happy release.

HAVE YOU WEAK LUNGS?

Do colds settle on your chest or in your bronchial tubes? Do coughs hang on, or are you subject to throat troubles?

Such troubles should have immediate treatment with the rare curative powers of Scott's Emulsion to guard against consumption which so easily follows.

Scott's Emulsion contains pure cod liver oil which peculiarly strengthens the respiratory tract and improves the quality of the blood; the glycerine in it soothes and heals the tender membranes of the throat.

Drank Bay Rum and Died.

Jas. Sheedy, who conducted a barber shop on Coe Hill, died on Monday night, February 28th, from the effects of drinking a bottle of bay rum. He had been on a prolonged spree, and in his efforts to sober up he first disposed of a bottle of Peruna. This did not have the desired effect, and he next tried bay rum, with the result that he died in about an hour. He is survived by a widow and two children. "Jimmy" Sheedy was well known all through this district. He was in business in Craigmont and Bessemer in their palmy days, and was a splendid musician, but he had a weakness for strong drink and it proved his undoing.--Bancroft Times.

Irish Wit Again

A lady of great beauty and attractiveness, who was an ardent admirer of Ireland, once crowned her praise of it at a party by saying:

"I think I was meant for an Irishwoman."

"Madam," rejoined a witty son of Erin, who happened to be present, "thousands would back me in saying you were meant for an Irishman."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of muscous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Chesterville Public School Holds Best Record,

The Record begs to differ with both the Iroquois News and the Winchester Press as to their conclusions on this matter. In the first place it is no mark of prominence for the largest school to have the largest number of successful Entrance Candidates—if it were the Cornwall Public School might claim the honors for the United Counties. In the next place, the Press claims the total number of successful candidates at Winchester for the Winchester P. S., whereas Inspector Greer distinctly explains on page 6 of the Report at the top of the page that "In the table above there were rural candidates writing at each viliage centre. These last percentages are therefore not obtainable from this table." The only fair comparison is to take the total number of pupils enrolled in each school, and note the percentages of passed candidates. This information is available from the table at the bottom of page 6, and the table on the last page of the report, and we present it in tabulated form.

	Total Enrolment	Passed Entrance	Per Centage
Chesterville	142	17	11.97
Iroquois	189	26	13.75
Morrisburg	239	12	5.02
Winchester	273	18	6.59

It is worthy of consideration that by dividing the enrolment of pupils by the number of teachers we find the average number per teacher to be, Chesterville 47, Iroquois 37½, Morrisburg 40, Winchester 45½.

Taking everything into consideration, the honors seem to be equally divided between Chesterville and Iroquois.

It may be explained that a portion of the Township of Matilda is attached to Iroquois Public School and a portion of Winchester Township to the Winchester P. S., which accounts for some of the disparity in enrolment, while the children of Chesterville are divided between the Public and Separate Schools.

Farm Life The Best

The four hour debate in the Can. Order of Foresters' parlors last evening on the subject of "Farm or City Life," was well worthy attendance. As a guest I could not but admire the ease and facility with which these young men are able to express their opinions at public meetings. There is no doubt that the rules and practices of the Courts of this Brotherhood are a course of education to every man who is a member, and it will by its environment and associations develop a man to be a better citizen.

Each and every one of the speakers, pro. and con. gave his argument, in a clear and logical manner. Mr. Stevens, leader in behalf of City Life, after showing the beauty and advantages of the city made it appear that Farm Life was little less than Sherman said about war "It is h—l." Mr. Hynes, of Ottawa Bank and Mr. Cass, Barrister. also Mr. Campbell approved of City life.

On behalf of farm life were Messrs. Willie Hummel, leader, Larry Jordon, Ed. Flynn and W. Munroe. Larry was enthusiastic in showing the pleasure, contentment and happiness, and high standard of education which can now be obtained by the farmer's child, and the days of drudgery are gone.

He made a great point in proving that farming is now only a two-man job with the Deering Machinery, DeLaval Separator, and the Sharples Milking Machines. Of course he is agent for all these. He also appealed to the judges not to be carried away by our silver-tongued orator, Lawyer Cass, who did exceedingly well.

W. Hummell and Ed. Flynn scored a goodly number of points in favor of farm life.

There is a large membership of this order in town, in fact the largest of any Fraternal Society in town, having 146 members. They have beautiful spacious parlors in the Baldry Block and have a full orchestra of their own, who attend each meeting.—Com.

A Word For Captain Baker's Squad.

We feel it our duty as citizens to compliment the men of the "Roll of Honor" in Chesterville. Their manliness, uprightness and dignity of character are certainly marked, and any individual who has seen them on parade and at drill cannot fail but admire them. To Captain Baker much credit is due. His authority in instruction and discipline is exorcised with firmness and gentleness, and Captain Baker is doing his utmost in bringing out all the good morals in each of his men, as he earnestly sets the example to them. We congratulate him on his success, and in the near future hope the platoon will be formed.

One Enemy Aeroplane Passed Over the British Lines at the Dardanelles and Diving Over a Cliff Made Straight for a Destroyer and Raked It Fore and Aft—The Two Seaplane Officers Who Dived for Each Other.

"HUMORS of War in the Air" is the subject of an interesting article in the London Daily Express by Mr. C. M. Grey, editor of the Aeroplane, in which he narrates an aviator's version of the old farce "Box and Cox" and some incidents of Turkish "cheek."

"A story that appeared in a Turkish communique the other day relating how a Turkish aviator dropped bombs near one of the Allies' cruisers and caused her to change her course, after which he attacked a destroyer with his machine gun," he writes, "is probably something of an exaggeration, but it would be quite a mistake to put it down as an absolute fabrication because people who have returned from the Dardanelles have quite a high opinion of the Turks as fighting men and even respect their aviators. The Turkish communique refers to the aviator as a Turk, but the pilots of the Turkish aeroplanes have been Germans chiefly.

"There is one incident, however, related to me by an officer who has just returned from Gallipoli of which the hero was more likely to have been a Turk than a German, for the German, although he may on occasion fight quite well, does not apparently believe in taking chances purely as a sport.

"One night when things were fairly calm both in the air and on the ground the sound of an aeroplane engine was heard approaching the British lines. It drew nearer and nearer, and it was evident from the sound that the aviator was flying very low. Suddenly he appeared over a certain part of the British camp so low that he could have been hit with a revolver if anybody had seen him in time. As he went he dropped several bombs, which did no particular harm. Half a dozen officers rushed out of their tents and began firing at him. The sound of his engine stopped, and his machine was seen to throw up its tail and dive down over the cliff at the edge of the plateau on which the camp stood.

'Everybody thought he had been hit and had fallen into the sea or on the sand just over the cliff edge. Much to their surprise, a few seconds afterward his engine was heard running again, and a minute or so later there was a burst of firing a mile or two out at sea.

"Next morning a destroyer came in and said that, hearing the noise of bombs in the camp some of the officers had come up on deck and were looking up at the shore when suddenly an aeroplane dived off the cliff, flew straight at them almost level with the water, and as it passed them raked them from end to end with a machine gun.

'The seaplane pilots also have their humorous incidents. Some little time ago one of the smaller seaplanes was getting off the water when a wave struck it, and it turned over on one side and dived head first.

"As the machine struck the water the passenger was thrown clear, but the pilot, who stuck to his lever, went under with the machine and was more or less trapped. The passenger naturally came up first, and, not seeing the pilot, took a long breath and dived under the wreck to his help. Meantime the pilot, having freed himself from the machine, came up to find himself under one of the wings. He worked along this till he got to the edge and came to the surface apparently just about a second after the passenger had dived. Not seeing the passenger he also took a deep breath and dived to rescue the passenger.

'By this time the passenger had reached the limit of his diving capacity and came up again for breath after the pilot had again disappeared. After again taking in fresh air he dived for the pilot just as the pilot came to the surface for the second time only to find that his passenger was still apparently in the wreck. In this way each of them dived four or five times until finally one of them came to the conclusion that the other must by this time have been drowned, so he sat on one of the floats to wait mournfully till he was picked up by one of the boats which was coming out from the shore.

'A second or two afterward up came the other officer, also convinced that his friend was dead. Each was naturally surprised at the wonderful capacity of the other for stopping under water till explanations made clear what had happened, after which they both nearly fell into the sea again laughing at one another."

Hopeless Case.

I see he has a bun."

THINK ENEMY MAY TRY A RAID ON EAST COAST.

London, March 27.—The sinking of the Greif is not our only naval secret, the Manchester Guardian significantly states, "There are others much more important still to be told," says the paper.

The possibility of a German raid on the east coast has been daily more freely discussed. The Times naval critic points out something like a concentrated German effort is apparent to the southern waters of the North Sea.

If anything in the shape of a raid is contemplated it must be seen, before Germany wants some of her naval forces for use in Baltic, or the attempt will become still more hazardous.

The Daily Telegraph's military correspondent declares our military chiefs quite rightly refuse to eliminate the chances of a German landing on the east coast as impossible. The Germans have got to find a way to a decisive victory and a successful invasion would immediately solve their problem far more rapidly than other conceivable military success.

German strategists are prone to rashness, says the Telegraph. They know our best troops, and what is more important our best officers, are abroad, so they probably reckon on an easy victory if once they can put ashore some half dozen army corps.

The Telegraph urges that the command of the troops for the defence of Britain shall be entrusted to competent generals with competent staff officers at whatever cost to the army in the field. It urges that the home army should be adequately equipped with artillery and cavalry, our air defences be completed and the break downs which have occurred in the work of the administrative as well as the executive staff be guaranteed against in the future.

The protests against Runciman, who is a free-trader, representing Britain at the Paris trade conference, have been effective. Bonar Law is also going.

British Smash German Line Before St. Eloi.

The British and Germans have been fighting fiercely in the region of St. Eloi, just south of Ypres, and the British, through the explosion of a big mine and by infantry charges, have captured or destroyed a considerable portion of the German trenches.

The British infantry stormed and took first and second line trenches along a front of six hundred yards, and that "casualties were caused among the company occupying the position."

Again the bombardment has become intense in the northwest and northeast of Verdun, and considerable activity by the big guns also has been shown in the Woevre region, southeast of the fortress. The time seemingly is not ripe, however, for an infantry attack, and the men of both sides have lain idle in their trenches awaiting the moment for attack and counter-attack.

Converted Cruiser Came on Scene While Battle Was On.

London, March 28.—The British converted cruiser Andes gets the credit for sinking the German raider Greif in the North Sea February 29, in additional details of the battle published to-day. After the British armed merchantman Alcantara had engaged the Grief and been rendered helpless by a shell which shattered her rudder, one of her consorts the Andes, appeared and made it impossible for the Greif to escape. Shells swept the deck of the German raider, driving the men from some of her guns.

The raider fired several torpedoes, which the Andes escaped through skillful handling. While thus engaged, a third British vessel of the light cruiser type, attracted by the sound of firing, appeared on the scene. Although at a great distance, the cruiser had already joined in the action, her gunners finding the range and hitting the target with remarkable precision.

But the Andes had the Greif afire fore and aft and the raider blew up with a terrific explosion, the theory being that she carried a cargo of mines which ignited when the fire reached them. The captain of the light cruiser congratulated the Andes and gave the credit for sinking the Greif.

Giant Pirate Appears.

Copenhagen via London, March 27.—A German submarine, says the Christiania correspondent of the Politiken, bigger and speedier than any submarine previously seen, and carrying a crew of eighty, has appeared off Utsire, on the southwest coast of Norway. The captain sent a wireless message that he had torpedoed the Norwegian barque Lindfield, on March 17, and had taken the crew of thirty on the submarine, where he kept them for four days and then transferred them to the Norwegian barque Silas.

CONQUEROR AT NANCY SAVIOR OF VERDUN.

Paris, March 28.—The curtain veiling all questions of leadership of the French troops is allowed to be slightly lifted today by the republication here from the well-informed Lausanne Gazette of the story of how the Verdun situation was handled. Here is the story:

"As soon as the seriousness of the German effort was made apparent General Joffre rushed General Castelnau, Chief of the General Staff, to Verdun with the mission to examine the situation and take all necessary measures.

"General Castelnau arrived at Verdun at 3 a.m., just in time to learn that the Germans had captured Fort Douaumont.

"In these circumstances, which would have been judged so tragically desperate as to plunge most men into despair, General Castelnau, with the strength of mind and military genius which always have distinguished him in difficult situations, took command of the battle

"Unhesitatingly he inflicted punishment where he deemed it necessary. He summoned Gen. Petain and, his army, meanwhile himself preparing and hurling the furious counter-attack which again gave the French the Douaumont position.

"This counter-stroke was perfectly organized and admirably timed, and it quite shattered the Teutonic onrush.

"Verdun was saved.

"History repeated itself in that the Kaiser was defeated at Verdun by the very man who checkmated him before Nancy in 1914.

"Both were unimaginably bloody battles; both were witnessed by the Emperor and on both occasions the Kaiser hoped to victoriously enter the cities upon which the attacks were made.

"When he arrived with his army Gen. Petain took command of all the troops engaged in the battles from Gen. Castelnau, and wiped out all further progress by the Germans, who, despite their superhuman efforts and most disastrous losses, have not gained a single important advantage from that moment."

SWEPT TO DEATH BY FRENCH FIRE

Paris, March 28—"The Germans would have it believed that their losses before Verdun were not greater than those of the French army," says a semi-official note issued this afternoon. The following example will show how great the German sacrifices were:

"On the forenoon of March 9 the 1st. battalion of the 19th Regiment reserve of the 5th German corps attacked the village of Vaux in columns of fours. The French allowed the first company to penetrate the village, where it was surprised by a violent machine gun fire and then charged with bayonets. The survivors—those able to do so—took refuge in houses, where they fell. This company, the 13th, was annihilated.

"The 2nd and 3rd battalions of the same regiment passed east of the village at the same time, going forward in squads to the first French trenches on the northern slope of the summit dominating Fort Vaux. The assailants were cut down a short distance from the trenches by the French, and fell back in disorder.

"The next day, March 10, the 64th Regiment of Infantry of the 6th division of the Third German army corps replaced, to the north of Vaux, the decimated 19th Regiment, but the 64th sustained such loss by the fire of artillery that the attack which was begun was countermanded.

"The Battle of Verdun, which has continued a month, has been made up of similar episodes. The Germans' sacrifices were absolutely out of proportion to their successes during the first days. It is known that the third and eighteenth army corps had to be sent to the rear after March 2, to be reconstituted. The third corps had to have two-thirds of its officers replaced and its gaps filled up with young recruits of the class of 1916, who were in a proportion of two-fifths in each company. Even then, these reinforcements, sent from the interior, were insufficient to bring the strength of the corps to what it was before March 2.

During their last attacks the third corps companies only counted about 120 rifles, instead of 200.

"These facts are a sufficient reply to the German allegations. Moreover, it must be admitted by anyone that resolute, well-armed troops, installed in defensive work with numerous machine guns and supported by an extraordinary quantity of artillery, as was the case of the French, are able to inflict the greater losses upon an assailant who constantly attacks in compact masses and whose chiefs are not dismayed by the bloodiest sacrifices."

SS. Manchester Engineer Sunk

London, March 27.—The British steamer Manchester Engineer, from Philadelphia March 11 for Manchester, has been sunk, according to information received by Lloyds. The crew were taken aboard a tug.

The Central News says that the Manchester Engineer was torpedoed today by a German submarine It was first supposed that the vessel was not badly damaged, but she foundered while making for port in tow. After the attack the Manchester Engineer sank by the bows and her stern rose considerably out of the water. Steamers came to the assistance of the injured craft, and began towing her by the stern, but her bulkhead apparently gave way, causing her to sink. Meantime the crew had been rescued.

What Fate Did

A Story of the Ideal and the Practical

By EDITH V ROSS

Barton Kenwood was a great disappointment to his father. He was an only son. His father had built up a good business and was extremely desirous of training the boy to take his place as its manager. But Barton's tastes were not for business. In the first place, he was too tender hearted for the management of a concern wherein many disagreeable things must be done for which the manager must take the responsibility. A customer whose credit is tottering is near failure: he must be jumped on and his ruin completed. Dull times come on, and persons dependent upon the concern for a living must be laid off. It is the manager's business to speak the word that deprives them of their daily necessaries and comforts.

Barton as a boy heard of some of these hardships—hardships for his father as well as the others concerned—and conceived a great dislike for what he understood business to be. But this did not satisfy his father, who considered it the part of a man to do necessarily disagreeable things when they came in the line of duty. When his son came to be eighteen years of age the father proposed to put him in his factory at the bottom of the ladder and elevate him as rapidly as he showed himself capable of being advanced. Barton demurred, declaring that he wished to go to college.

Here was a breach between father and son that was never healed. Barton went to college, and his father put in the place he had intended for him a nephew, Evan Swift, who gave evidence of possessing those qualifications which Barton lacked. Evan was a business man from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. He could say "No" when "No" was necessary. He could detect expenses that were unnecessary and cut them off, no matter who was hurt by doing so. He could figure profit and loss, and, no matter how hard the times, there was always some profit. By those who understood the requirements of the concern he was respected; by those whose minds were intent simply on their own interest he was hated.

Barton at college developed tastes that his father considered a waste of time to pursue. The bones of dinosaurs, the skulls of cave men, of cliff dwellers, of extinct lake men who several thousand years ago lived in houses built over the surface of tranquil waters, absorbed his attention. He also had a fancy for digging in the dirt to exhume ancient buried cities. He was as much delighted at discovering an earthen pitcher made 3,000 years ago as his father was at hitting upon a new article of commerce that could be manufactured at a profit.

When Barton was graduated from college he desired to go with an expedition to Asia to look for the lost site of a city that flourished a thousand years before the Christian era. His father, who considered the object useless if attained, refused to furnish him the necessary funds. But so important was Barton to the party that his alma mater supplied them. It was through Barton Kenwood's researches that the site was found.

There was a girl who had been a schoolmate of Barton of whom he had from the first made a confidant. Her name was Grace Bingham. Even as a child she showed evidence of both intelligence and practical common sense, in that respect resembling the elder and the younger Kenwood. At first she advised Barton to accede to his father's wishes, but before the break between them came about she realized that the two looked upon values from opposite standpoints and that Barton never could be made a business man. She therefore reluctantly advised him to follow that for which he was best fitted.

After Barton went away Evan Swift, who had entered his uncle's employ with a view to reaping the emoluments that his cousin had turned aside, began to pay attention to Grace Bingham. Grace from a little girl was predisposed to Barton, but after he went to the university she saw little of him. Whether during that period of rapid change between fourteen and twenty he passed out of her mind or lay there dormant is not to the point. What is pertinent is that at twenty years of age she found it time and a necessity that she should take a husband.

Swift was in all respects a desirable person. He had already been made second to his uncle in the management of the Kenwood Manufacturing company, and it was expected that he would soon assume full control. Mr. Kenwood's fortune was all in the business, was necessary to the business, and it was surmised that he would leave it to the man to whom he proposed to take his place instead of his son, who was considered to have sold his birthright for old bones.

Be these things as they may, Grace Bingham did not throw so favorable an opportunity for settling herself for life over her shoulder. But Swift was some time gaining her consent, and there were those who said that the reason was that the man she desired, for himself alone, was Barton Kenwood.

But, given a practical girl, a fine business man with a prospective fortune and a penniless delver for stone jugs, the result must necessarily be a union between the practical girl and the prosperous man.

Evan Swift was as much absorbed in the Kenwood Manufacturing company as his cousin was in old pots and kettles. Unfortunately, Evan was not very strong physically, and about the time he became engaged to be married his uncle's health showed signs of giving way, and he relinquished all control of the business to his successor. This threw a load of detail on Swift, and before he could reorganize the various departments of the business he broke down completely.

He was admonished by his physician to get as far away from the Kenwood Manufacturing company as possible and remain away till he had recovered his health. He refused to take this advice on the ground that there was no one to take his place in the business, but Grace Bingham told him that he was making a mistake common among managing persons and there were doubtless men under him who, if given an opportunity, would soon step into his shoes.

This is not universally true, but it proved true in this case. One of the heads of departments was advanced to the management, and Evan Swift said goodby to the business and his ladylove and started for the other side of the globe. I put the business before the ladylove in this case, for it is quite possible that if Mr. Swift were called upon to give up one or the other he would retain the business. As a practical man he would know that he would not be likely to get another business, but girls are plenty.

The situation in this quadrangular affair at this time was an old man at home sinking into his grave, a young man whose practical nature had led him to break down his health by overwork, seeking to restore it in sunny Italy; another young man whose impractical nature was keeping him in the open air digging for old bones, thereby rendering him perfect in health, and a girl—a cross between the ideal and the practical—who was waiting for fate to produce what was in store for her.

The first step fate took in the matter was to kill off the old man. Mr. Kenwood's death resulted in the discovery that he had left all his property to Evan Swift. A cablegram informed the latter of his uncle's bequest, but fate, which delights in complications, entanglements and the thwarting of intentions, had sent the newly made possessor of a fortune off to Egypt, and, being some distance up the river Nile, he did not receive the announcement till a week after it was sent. It reached him on his return to Cairo, when his efforts to keep himself alive were proving useless. He died at Cairo only a few days after his return there.

An announcement of his father's death was also sent to Barton Kenwood, who was in Trieste, having just returned with a dozen boxes of bones and other worthless articles gathered from a big hole in the ground in Asia Minor. The cablegram said nothing about his father's will, but as he was about to take his collection of exhumed articles to a museum in America he proceeded immediately homeward. He arrived at his destination at the same time that intelligence arrived of the death of his cousin in Egypt.

Barton found himself in a peculiar position. He learned at once that his father had left all his property to Evan Swift; but, Evan Swift having died without issue, Barton as heir at law would possess the property. He also knew that Grace Bingham was engaged to Swift, and had she been married to him she would have inherited the Kenwood fortune. In other words, the quick succession of events after his uncle's death had transferred the property from Grace to Barton.

Kenwood, who had given up the profits accruing to a large business and had expected that his father would ignore him in his will, found no difficulty in making up his mind to relinquish his fortune to the girl whom fate had deprived of it. He called on his old chum, and he thought she received him with a repressed fervor. It occurred to him that perhaps since he had the fortune she had expected her betrothed would have she might bring herself to take him instead of the man she had lost.

"Grace," he said, "my father did not intend to leave me his property. It was Evan's by right, and had Evan lived a little longer it would have been yours. I shall assign it to you."

Grace took a good deal of time in which to frame her reply. Indeed, it seemed hard to make it. Finally she astonished Kenwood by speaking as follows:

"Barton, if I am not disagreeable to you, you may keep your fortune and do what you think right by me at the same time."

"What do you mean?" asked Barton opening his eyes.

"A marriage between us would right all."

Barton's eyes were fixed on her intently for some moments. Then he took her in his arms.

"It's all right," he said, "but how could you do it?"

For reply she went to a desk, took up a document lying on it and handed it to him, saying:

"I received this last evening."

He unfolded and read it. It was a will executed at Cairo three days before Evan Swift's death, leaving her his sole heir.

Had Grace proceeded in the manner usual in such cases the affair might have had a different result. She realized that if it were known to Barton she and not he possessed the fortune he would not have proposed to her.

War Hits London Clubs.

War has worked a great hardship on all of London's clubs except those connected with the army and navy. Resignations pour into the miscellaneous clubs by members whose incomes have been curtailed, others who used to dine at their clubs now dine at home by reason of war economy and the no-treat and early-closing orders have seriously shortened the bar receipts. Moreover, the cost of food and service is steadily advancing.

General Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien, who has been given the supreme command of the forces in East Africa, joined the army thirty-nine years ago at the age of eighteen. He is idolized by his men.

Far Too Quick.

General Hugh L. Scott was talking about strategy.

"Too many stategists," he said, "jump at conclusions. They are too hasty. They begin a new movement before the ol' one is finished. Hence all manner of errors.

"These strategists are like the floor-walker whom a married man, having got separated from his wife in the crowd, approached and said:

"'Excuse me, but I've lost my wife——'

"'Coffins,' said the floor-walker, 'ninth floor back. Gent's mourning, eleventh floor front.'"

Jenny Lind and the Trill.

Jenny Lind after years of steady practice believed that the much coveted trill was for her an impossibility. She practiced hours a day, but was unable to accomplish the feat. One day, thoroughly discouraged, she was sitting in her garden when all at once she looked up into a tree. Above her a bird was trilling. She at once went to her piano and through some magic or power of imitation began the trill and from that day never had any further difficulty.

ROYAL YEAST

MAKES PERFECT BREAD

Retouching the Ready Made

It is not every woman's good fortune to be able to cut and fit and make her own clothes. Some have not the time, while others have not the ability, and many have neither. The busy woman especially hates to give her precious minutes to long hours with the dressmaker, and it is for such that the shops put on their racks and counters such a number of stylish ready made garments. For the fastidious woman, however, it is something of a shock to see herself, so to speak, coming down the street in the identical frock or suit she is wearing. For her there is nothing to do but to invest in the cheaper ready made garments and put the remainder of the allowance into fixings that will make the frock, suit or blouse partake of her own personality. After all, one's clothes should reflect one's personality.

For sheer tailored blouses there is a happy expedient that any woman can resort to with a few stitches, and that is to apply under the sheer material a length of figured or contrasting colored ribbon. This will "dress up" the blouse with the smallest possible expenditure of time and money.

The styles are so accommodating at present that a frock may be completely changed with very little trouble. An imported gown in a smart shop suggests a way of putting "the punch" into a cheap taffeta dance frock. The imported model had a very straight gathered skirt, which was turned under at each side for a distance of four or five inches at the hem to reveal a lace petticoat. This gave a bouffant appearance without interfering with the cut of the skirt. A girdle of old blue velvet contrasted beautifully with the flesh tint of the frock. A tulle scarf was suggested for softening the corsage. A cheap drop skirt on an otherwise good looking dance frock may be omitted entirely, the lace petticoat sufficing to give the fluffy appearance at the foot.

Leather collars and cuffs, from new leather to be bought at a leather house or from the arms of a good pair of kid gloves where the hands are worn out, will make a bought suit take on a different air. A leather belt added in place of the fabric belt will give tone to a Russian blouse coat. New lining will make a cheaper plush coat look much more expensive and dressy, as often the lining is where the manufacturer has saved his pennies to make his profit on the coat.

A large suit skirt may be shirred into fitting at the waist line, and a belt of material, which comes from the piece taken off the hem, added for style.

Braiding on pockets will dress up a plain suit, or the addition of new fur will often help out.

THE VEILED FUTURE

THE YEAR upon which we are entering is dark with mystery—we cannot forecast the events of a single day of it.

A new year naturally arouses anxious thought, but the disastrous war now raging adds to the prevalent anxiety as to what 1916 has in store for us.

Exposed to these uncertainties, is it not important that we should protect our homes and business enterprises with "the one thing sure"—life insurance?

Protected by Mutual policies the home is kept intact though the husband dies, the business is held together though the partner passes away.

There are no bonds or treaties in the world more binding than life insurance policies—no policies more immutable than those issued by

Always wanting to buy Butter & Eggs

Local and District News.

Roads are about as bad as they can be and strange as it may seem where work has been down on them they are the worst.

Coming to the Star Theatre, "The Conquest of Quebec" in five parts. Tuesday and Wednesday, April 4th and 5th.

Mr. Jacob Merkley was taken very seriously ill at the first of the week and grave fears are entertained for his recovery.

Whitteker, the Optician, will be at Winchester, Monday, April 10th; Chesterville, Tuesday, April 11th; Finch, Thursday, April 13th.

The snow is fast disappearing under a strong sun and while many localities report freshets from spring rains there has been no rain recently in this section.

If you break a lens or the frame of your eye glasses Mr. A. E. Bolster can fix it for you—day or night every day—at W. G. Bolster's Drug Store, Chesterville.

Mr. S. B. Lyon of Toronto is in town organizing Independent Order of Foresters. He has secured quite a number and intends bringing Grantley Court to Chesterville.

Robins apparently made a night trip to reach this section. Tuesday not a robin was to be heard while yesterday morning their merry song could be heard from many a chimney top.

Mr. Silas Swerdfeger of Williamsburg, was in town yesterday and gave The Record a pleasant call. Mr. Swerdfeger is now nicely recovering from a siege of sickness which practically kept him confined all winter.

Mr. T. O. Keys finds advertising in The Record to pay well. Last week he advertised a sugar making outfit for sale and promptly found a buyer, and as Mr. Keys says: "I sold to a man I never heard of before, from near Kenmore."

The Iroquois News got in wrong last week in extending congratulations following the announcement of the marriage of an Iroquois lady to a former resident of Winchester, which report was entirely without foundation.

The good roads movement is being encouraged in Williamsburg township and next week two meetings will be held when addresses will be delivered by Mr. Geo. Hogarth, Engineer of the Department of Public Highways for Ontario Williamsburg, Tuesday evening, April 4th and at Archer on Wednesday evening, April 5th.

Mr. James O. Beckstead has returned from Montreal after going through a very severe operation on his nose. Besides having a polyp cut from the nose he had a piece of bone taken from his right nostril. He was in the operating chair four times once for a stretch of three hours but did not take an anesthetic. Since Mr. Beckstead's return he is doing nicely and we trust he will soon regain his health.

Consult Mr. A. E. Bolster. If your case can be helped by the use of lenses, he can do it for you. Free test—day or night every day—at W. G. Bolster's Drug Store Chesterville.

An Interesting Letter from the Trenches.

In reply to a note Miss R. Eaman of Bouck's Hill put in a sock Pte. Hodges wrote the following letter. Miss Eaman can be congratulated on having knit 40 pairs of socks for the Red Cross.

Somewhere in Belgium
Feb. 28, 1916.

Dear Miss Eaman,

I was lucky enough to get a pair of your socks yesterday. I mean a pair you made, they are splendid. I can't tell you how much I appreciate your kindness.

The weather over here is very cold this last week, we have had some snow and it is very frosty, which is better on the whole than the continual rain and mud.

Some time ago we had the Saxons in the trenches opposite to us and things were rather quiet, not much doing on either side. The Saxons are not a bad outfit, they have not much sympathy with the Germans, but now the Prussians are opposite to us and there is not much love lost between us. Our bombers the other night made a raid on their trenches and put about 50 of the Germans out of business and took 3 prisoners. If the party had been larger, there would have been more, but after they were hoisted over the parapet they got away in the dark. We smashed up two of their machine guns, so it was not such a bad night's work. One of the prisoners was an officer and was very unwilling to be taken prisoner, so they assisted him over the parapet with a bayonet. He was very peevish the next morning, had a very uncomfortable night, found it very difficult to lie or sit down. Standing position was easier for him, although after while very tiring. The German authorities kept them very much in the dark concerning the true state of affairs. Mr. Officer was very much surprised when he was told they were sending him to England, he thought the Germans had control of the Sea and all the principal cities and towns, including London, were in ruins from their Zeppelins, and the people on the verge of starvation. He must have had a rude awakening.

Things are better over here than I thought they would be. After we come out of the trenches, we get a good bath and change of clothes, sometimes we have to march a long way to get it, it depends on where we are, but it is worth it. Our spell in the trenches generally lasts 6 days at a time; then we come out and do fatigue work. They generally have two outfits, a day and night gang, the day working party generally march to the trenches and do the fixing up where the parapets are down either from wet weather or from Fritz's guns, and drain the water off or build new dugouts and such work. We take our lunch with us and get back to our billets or huts about dark and the night party fix up the barb wire in front of the trenches. This may be all stale news to you, so I had better conclude with many thanks for the socks and best wishes.

Yours sincerely

MacGregor—Reveler

The marriage was quietly solemnized on Wednesday 22nd, inst at the Methodist parsonage Ottawa by Rev. Basil Thompson, chaplain of the Engineers, of Jennie M., eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Reveler, Cannamore, to Lieut. Geo. A. MacGregor of 154th Batt., son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas MacGregor, Morewood.

The bride wore her travelling suit of Belgium blue silk poplin with hat to match and carried a bouquet of white roses and maiden hair fern.

The groom's gift to the bride was a cameo pendant and to the bridesmaid, Miss Deltra Eamon, a pearl pendant and to the groomsman Thos. Reveler, a pearl tie pin.

On Sunday evening last addresses were given in Trinity Methodist Church, Chesterville, by Rev's Pte. Arthur Hummel and Lance Corporal Walter Mason of the Princess Patricia L. I.

LET US SHOE THE WHOLE FAMILY

BRING IN YOUR WHOLE FAMILY AT ONE TIME AND HAVE A "SHOE PARTY" IN OUR STORE. WE CAN FIT THEM ALL OUT AND FIT THEM IN STYLISH, COMFORTABLE LONG WEARING SHOES.

THIS WILL SAVE YOU TIME AND WORRY. THIS WILL SAVE YOU MONEY--BECAUSE WE WILL SELL YOU GOOD SHOES FOR LESS. ALL SHOES AT THE SAME PRICE ARE NOT THE SAME QUALITY.

There is a vast difference between "Empress" Shoes and other shoes for women. It is not difficult to detect this difference in "Empress" Shoes. There is a beauty and distinction, and with its beauty there is perfect ease and satisfaction.

The old way of bleaching linen was to spread the washed articles upon bushes or the grass for many hours, allowing the oxygen in the air to take up the coloring matter.

The new way. Science has discovered a skillful preparation of exygen which has the same action on linen as the oxygen of the air.

The finest cotton fabrics can now be bleached, without danger te the goods, in a very few minutes by using O M O.

A single trial, according to directions, will demonstrate the wonderful properties of O M O. and the work of hours will be done in almost as many minutes, resulting in pure white linen, bleached, cleansed and purified in one short operation.

Safe and sure for linens or cottons, but must not be used for colored articles, woollens or flannels.

TO MAKE HARD WATER SOFT

Use Wyandotte. Because it is so cleansing, and so harmless, it is recommended by Agricultural Colleges, Dairy Schools and Milk Inspectors.
It is a cleansing not a scouring powder.
