HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Prominent Chesterville Lady Passes Unexpectedly

Yesterday at the noon hour the citizens of Chesterville were shocked beyond measure as the news spread like wild-fire of the unexpected death of Mrs. W. H. Casselman, which had occurred in the midst of her household duties as she awaited her family to gather at the noon day meal. With a minor kitchen task half completed she complained of feeling faint and laid down on a couch in an adjoining room and expired almost before assistance could be summoned, as she was beyond earthly skill on the arrival of Dr. Casselman and Dr. W. A. Brown, who was in town, within a very few minutes.

The funeral will be held to-morrow afternoon at one thirty in Chesterville United church with interment following in Maple Ridge cemetery.

Mrs. Casselman has for many years been an outstanding figure in Chesterville's social and community life. Possessed of wide sympathies, foresight and unfailingly true judgment, her advice was sought in all walks of life on subjects affecting the welfare of the citizens. The needy received care at her hands, and the joyous were aided in their gaiety in various ways the most outstanding, perhaps, being her great musical ability coupled with skill in training the young on festive occasions in church and other occasions. Many young vocalists have to the accompaniment of Mrs. Casselman received that degree of confidence which has carried them to success and honours.

With all Mrs. Casselman's community activities she derived the height of her contentment in her horticultural work around her own home, inculcating the love of beauty in her own growing-up family with surroundings which have become the pride of Chesterville's citizens, and she never was so happy as when passing the wealth of bloom on to the less fortunate.

In church circles, in the work of the former Presbyterian church and latterly in the United church the place of Mrs. Casselman will be hard to fill; ardent, earnest and ever willing she gave freely of her best to the advantage of all concerned, and her passing will be regarded as a personal loss in the majority of the homes of this community.

Besides her husband, she is survived by two daughters and three sons: Marion and Olive at home, Ralph and Frank of Detroit, and Eric at home. Before her marriage she was Florence Carlyle, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Carlyle. Other members of the family surviving being Charles, of Calgary, Sidney, of Edmonton; William H., of High River, Alta., and Agnes, wife of Mr. W. A. McElroy, of Chesterville.

Airplane Makes Landing At Williamsburg

Many people from Williamsburg and district have had the pleasure of viewing an airplane. "The American Eagle" of Kansas City, Missouri,, piloted by Ross Manning, Lindsay, Ont., which was forced to land in a field at the farm of Ward Casselman last Thursday afternoon because of engine trouble. The plane had been in this village for the purpose of taking those desiring to do so on trips which extended as far as Ottawa. No one was injured in the forced landing.

Guides Have Enjoyable Camp

The Chesterville Girl Guides have returned from their camp along the Rideau River where they spent a most pleasant eight days under canvas with Miss Leila McGee, commandant, Mrs. Geo. Merkley, Lieutenant, assisted by Miss Edna McGee, Miss Rae Dixon joining the party for the last two days.

The Guides were divided into three patrols by lot taking new names, "Busy Bees," "Saucy Tars," and "Mosquitoes." These took turns in cooking, "messing" and looking after the sanitary conditions. The usual camp routine was followed each day with swimming, boating, fishing, hiking, picnicing and camp fires.

The Company wishes to express its thanks to all who helped make the camp a success, especially to Mr. H. McMurray, who made and presented a camp stove by which cooking was made easy in rainy as well as fair weather.

Hummel---Abercrombie

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Abercrombie, Perth, was the scene of a pretty wedding at eleven o'clock on Tuesday, August 12th, when their daughter, Elsie Luella, became the bride of Mr. Reginald Lorne Hummel, of Toronto, youngest son of Mrs. Martha Hummel and the late George M. Hummel, of Chesterville. Rev. Bunyon McLeod, D. D., officiated. The music was played by Miss Evelyn Bowes.

The home was attractively decorated for the occasion with a profusion of garden flowers and ferns. The dainty bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a charming gown of white lace made on long lines. She carried a bouquet of roses, lily-of-the-valley, and babies' breath, and wore the gift of the bridegroom, a rhinestone pendant. Her embroidered veil of soft tulle was held in place with a crown of pearls and orange blossoms.

Miss Muriel Abercrombie of Ottawa, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, wearing a lovely gown of shell pink chiffon and lace. The best man was Mr. William Lloyd Hagerty, of Toronto. The bridegroom's gift to the bridesmaid was a rosebud necklace, to the pianist a compact, and to the best man a white gold watch chain.

Following the ceremony a luncheon was served to the immediate relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Hummel left for a motor trip to the Muskoka lakes. The bride travelled in a rose ensemble with white hat, shoes, gloves and purse. On their return they will reside in Toronto.

The popularity of the young couple was attested by the numerous gifts received from friends far and near in honour of the happy event.

"At first Mary wouldn't say whether she loved me or not."

"And did you finally find out?"

"Yes; I squeezed it out of her."

Giant Dirigible Seen By Many Chesterville People

After facing a head wind that retarded its progress throughout its trip from Montreal, the British dirigible R–100 reached Ottawa at ten o'clock eastern daylight time Sunday night.

Many Chesterville people were among the thousands who had stood for hours on Parliament Hill awaiting the arrival of the giant airship and cheered as the silvery shape loomed in the night sky.

As the airship approached the Peace Tower in the Parliament Buildings ,the bells of the carillon clanged forth the notes of "Rule Britannia" as a greeting. As a salutation to Canada's war dead, the ship dipped its nose over the Peace Tower, which contains within its walls the chamber of remembrance.

During the next hour the dirigible circled over the city, its metallic hue made lustrous by the searchlights playing upon it. From the ground thousands of people craned their necks to gain a sight of man's greatest conquest of the air.

As the carillon played "God Save the King" the R–100 turned her nose towards the southwest and started on the second leg of her journey to Toronto. A few minutes after eleven o'clock the magnificent ship was lost to view.

Appearing at first as a dark shape on an only less dark sky, the details of the ship were clearly discernible when it came directly overhead. The lighting of the ship itself, aided by a dozen searchlights strategically placed on the east and west blocks of the Government buildings, enabled the crowd to see the monarch of the skies almost as well as if it had been daylight.

Flying low at first, the R–100 passed over the centre block of the Parliament buildings from the south, passed on over the Ottawa River and swung around over Hull. Returning to the south side of the city again, the ship came back to the buildings and this time passed directly over the tower, dipping its nose as a silent tribute to the thousands of Canadians who lost their lives in the war and whose names are preserved within the tower.

As the giant of the air swung back again and pushed off to the south, the crowd began to leave Parliament Hill, and the notes of "God Save the King" rang out from the carillon. The ship made another turn above the city, however, before passing out of sight on its journey to Toronto, in the course of which it passed over Carleton Place, Peterboro, Oshawa, and other points.

The delay in the early part of the trip from St. Hubert to Ottawa was due to detours to avoid a squall which centred near Montreal. A gorgeous rainbow was glimpsed after the storm area was passed, and was taken as a happy augury for the trip over Ontario.

Ottawa Exhibition Attractions That Have Wide Appeal

Many Novel Features in Addition to Unusual Exhibits and Competitions. New Midway Has Been Secured.

For the Ottawa Exhibition which will open on Monday, August 18, and continue for six days and six nights, the directors have planned to appeal to all classes.

Primarily, the basis of an exhibition is the display of live stock, poultry, agricultural products and industries and the educative value of the competition in the various departments. These have been given special prominence and the prize list was made so generous that there is an excellent entry in all classes. Many other educational factors will be found in the child welfare department, the pure food displays, the baby show, dog show, etc. Educational also will be the display of wild animals, birds and live game fish by the Ontario government and of gold and tropical fish by Anson Pratt. Then there will be the automobile show, merchants' and manufacturers' exhibits. Horse lovers will have a nightly show in the Coliseum and three programs of harness racing.

If the average music lover saw and heard nothing but Creatore and his band which will give two concerts daily, it is safe to assume that he or she would be more than satisfied with the exhibition. The band is said to be at the apex of perfection and this year includes exceptionally talented soloists, notable among whom are Pauline Talma, lyric soprano, and Mary Brubaker, brilliant harpist.

The stellar attraction in front of the grandstand each evening will be the Winter Garden Revue, an Edgar I. Schooley production, and comprising rows of pretty girls, beautiful costumes and gorgeous scenery, colour and harmony, fine character acting and pantomime dancing. Loud speakers will amplify words and music of the vocal numbers so that no one of the 11,000 spectators who usually crowd the grandstand nightly need miss any part.

Principals in the cast have been carefully selected from the best Broadway productions. artists whose names have figured in the alluring light of the "Great White Way." The scenic effects are the work of Ivan Orfullich, famous scenic artist of the Russian Art Theatre.

Novel Offerings.

Other grandstand attractions will be the Four Auroras, a super-thriller on wheels which has been brought to this continent from Europe, and in which athletes balance one another on ladders, while at the same time propelling bicycles; also the sensational Jacks, dare-devil intreped aerialists, who cause crowds to gasp as they do their stuff without safety devices on a 100-foot high rigging. Adele Nelson's baby elephants, which are appearing for the first time in America. will be another new and unusual offering.

In the Hollywood Horse there is an unusually novel and humorous offerig. It is a direct descendant of the Old Gray Mare and its dances and antics are a scream.

Another innovation will be the Five Ehtors, a quintette of beautiful girls who adopted Arabian tumbling as a profession stunts which had been regarded until their advent as exclusive to males on account of the staying power and endurance necessary for such work. A headline attraction, with bookings until 1933, demonstrates how far these girls have succeeded in their ambition.

DeMarlo and Marlette combine three acts in one in their offering. including diverting contortionist stunts and thrilling acrobatics.

Curtis' Animals, another of the famous animal acts of America. have also been secured and include two delightful little ponies, the delights of the juveniles, and nine dogs, popular with both old and young.

From these numbers it will be seen that no expense or effort has been spared by the directors of the exhibition to give patrons the best possible grandstand show in the out-of-doors.

A New Midway.

Then, of course, there will be the midway to which special attention has been given this year by the directors in view of previous comments. Midways have been criticized by some since their incepton, but even the critic insisted on a new midway this year. And it has been secured.

The wise ones are getting their tickets in advance, getting five for one dollar, a direct saving of seventy-five cents as the regular price of admission is thirty-five cents. These coupon tickets are limited in number and will not be issued after the opening of the exhibition. They may be secured at the exhibition office or in various stores.

No Zig-Zag Lightning

Literary Digest.—There is no such thing, declares Charles Fitzhugh Talman in his feature "Why the Weather' '(Washington.

Only within the last four or five years, he says, has the motion picture industry discovered the fact that lightning, however much it may twist and meander in its path across the sky, never turns sharp angles. Zig-Zag lightning was formerly the rule rather than the exception on the screen, just as it was once universal in the drawings and paintings of great artists, but it is unknown in nature. He goes on:

"The first person to call attention to the mistake of the artists in this matter was the Scottish engineer, James Nasmyth, who was the son of a landscape painter.

"At a meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, in 1856, he stated that 'in no instance among the many thunderstorms whose progress he had most attentively watched had he ever observed such forms of lightning as that usually represented in works of art; in all such the artists invariably adopt a conventional form, namely, that of a zig-zag combination of straight lines.' Nasmyth believed the error of the artists originated in the form given to the thunderbolt in the hand of Zeus as sculptured by the ancient Greeks.

"Some decades after these remarks were uttered the photography of lightning became common. and the photographs all showed that he was right in believing that lightning is never truly zig-zag. Its path generally includes many sinuous curves, and it often branches, but a sharp angle is very rarely seen in a photograph, and it is then doubtlees an effect of perspective."

The tramp eyed the joints displayed in the butcher's shop.

"You have meat to suit all purses, I presume?" he said.

"Yes," snapped the butcher.

"What have got to suit an empty purse?"

"The cold shoulder."

"Well, Willie, said the fond uncle, "how do you like the mouth organ I sent you for your birthday?"

"Fine, uncle, thank you!" said the child very politely.

"Can you play any good tunes on it?' 'asked the other.

"Rather, uncle, lots," said Willie. "It's easily the best present I've ever had."

"I'm glad to hear that," beamed the old gentleman.

"Yes, uncle; mother gives me a shilling a week not to play it," was the boy's reply.

Early History Revived By New Post Office

The opening by the post office department of an office known as "Port Johnstown," a few miles east of Prescott, to serve the men employed upon the construction of the terminal grain elevators, commemorates the village of Johnstown which was laid out there in the earliest days of Upper Canada history. It was the "capital" of the Johnstown district and a jail and court court house were established there before their removal to Brockville in 1808. There is record that malefactors were exposed in the stocks for comparatively trivial offences.

Selling Bibles in Paris

Rev. W. H. Rainey, secretary of the Bible Society in Western Europe, tells a unique story of how the Scriptures are sold on the boulevards of Paris. On Sabbath afternoons well-dressed people carry them in a wicker tray in which are displayed copies of the Word of God in different languages. As they pass slowly along the streets their slogan is, "The Bible in every language, only ten francs." In this way on one afternoon, 85 Bibles and 11 New Testaments, in nine different languages, were sold.

Kingston Police After Morrisburg Man's Record

The Kingston police may be able to lay claim to the bat-killing record for Kingston.

Just why the bats should pick out the city's "lock-up" to have their fling is a deep mystery, but during the past few weeks hardly a night has passed without one or two of these unwelcome invaders being captured in the police station and slain.

According to reports, bats have been causing a great deal of trouble all over Eastern Ontario this summer.

Dr. George M. Gorrell, or Morrisburg, claims the bat-killing record for Eastern Ontario. With the help of a neighbour, he has killed no fewer than 134 of them in a week's time.

Dr. Gorrell's cellar and attic suddenly became infested with bats and tennis racquet in hand, he descended to the former and killed thirty-eight in one night. The next night twenty were killed and the following evening sixty-nine fell before the doctor's battling arm. Dr. Gorrell's final onslaught resulted in fifteen bats being slain. The total now stands at 134.

Women Favour Labels for All

Women are joining in the movement urging the labelling of all the people of England, which was started recently. They believe that the plan would be of particular value as a protection to them. It is thought that it would help wives in identifying deserting husbands and in preventing bigamy, for the identity of both persons would have to be proved before marriage. If the plan of carrying identification cards or disks, such as are used in Japan, is adopted, the record of marriage would be made on the document. Another plan presented is the thumb printing of everyone. The labelling idea is expected to give additional protection to men as to women.

CANCER IN WOMEN

The question is sometimes asked as to whether more harm than good results from articles on cancer. We are told that through reading these articles people are needlessly worried, and that a number of them go to their doctors in fear of cancer, who have no real cause for their fears. We, however, can place against this statement the number who, because of what they have learned, have gone for treatment in the early stages of the disease, and have been cured.

With our present knowledge, it is possible, to a great extent, to reduce the number of deaths from cancer, providing cases come under treatment early. It is obviously impossible, however, for physicians to go out and look for such cases; the patient must come to the physician.

If every person were to go to his doctor regularly, once a year, for a health examination, this would allow for the detection of many early cases. That is one of many reasons why the periodic health examination is a good habit that should be cultivated by every one—men as well as women.

Failing the health examination, what brings the woman to her doctor? Symptoms. The earliest signs and symptoms should therefore prompt every woman to consult her doctor. The early symptoms of cancer are the same as those occurring in other conditions, and the physicians will decide as to what the actual condition is.

More than one-third of all cases of cancer in women develop in the uterus. We do not know the cause of cancer, but we do know that chronic irritation predisposes to its occurrence. During childbirth, injury to the lower end of the uterus—the cervix—is not uncommon. If such injury is not properly repaired, there is a part subjected to chronic irritation which apparently predisposes to cancer, as it is in the cervix that most cancers of the uterus begin.

The attention of women is frequently and rightly drawn to the need and value of pre-natal care. We would like to add that post-natal care is about the best form of life insurance for any woman. By post-natal care, we mean proper medical and nursing care after the birth of the child, and, as a part of the care, an examination by the physician after a period of some weeks, to determine if all the parts are normal or if any treatment is indicated.

Proper post-natal care and prompt attention to any discharge or irregular bleeding, particularly after the menopause, will do much to control cancer of the uterus. A complete examination by a physician is the way to secure such care and attention.

If in addition to the above-noted points, women would promptly consult their physicians about any lump on, or discharge from the breast, there would be a different story to tell about cancer. Early treatment of cancer is successful in a large number of cases. The real problem is to bring cases under treatment early, and the solution of that problem rests with the patient.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Chesterville Ball Tossers Step Into Play-Off

With two wins this week in the regular Dundas league baseball schedule, Chesterville with wins over Winchester on Monday evening by 8 to 7 on the local diamond thereby stepping into a tie for position with Morewood, and the rout of the latter on Winchester diamond last night by a 10 to 4 score, have come from behind to make a wonderful finish.

Both games furnished much excitement. Monday night, after letting Winchester get the jump on them to the tune of five counters, pounded out seven counters in the last two frames to carry off the honours. Watt pitched effective ball, accounting for nine men by the strike out route, with Boyce and Agnew of the visitors doing the big clouting against him, the latter getting two singles and a three-base clout, while Boyce connected safely twice and got a life on a high throw to first, which latter he converted into a counter. After scoring a couple in the first A. Preston started the trouble in the second when he poled a nice two-bagger to right and was followed by safeties by his brother Dan, McLean, Boyce and Agnew counting four runs.

Chesterville gathered their first counter after McAvoy singled to centre and Watt brought him home with a three-base smash to left. With four in the fourth and three in the final they went into a tie for second place.

The score by innings:

Winchester	2	4	0	1	0	—7
Chesterville	1	0	0	4	3	—8

The batting order:

Winchester—McLean, p; Boyce 3b; Agnew 1b; C. Summers ss: H. Williams, lf; G. McDonald 2b; L. Porteous rf; A. Preston cf; D. Preston c.

Chesterville—McAvoy ss; Watt p; Hanna 1b; Hamlen lf; Plantz c; Bourke rf; Olsen 3b; Harper cf; LaPierre 2b.

Morewood 4 ; Chesterville 10

Last evening in Winchester Watt pitched a beautiful game, holding Morewood scoreless in the first five frames. In the sixth Lyle Loughridge opened with a two-base smash to centre which was followed by a pass to James, a two-bagger by Moffat and a three-bagger by Feely, netting Morewood three runs after which Watt settled down and struck out the side. C. Loughridge hit to centre in the final, stole second, went to third on an out and scored when a bad peg to first left James safe. Wes. Loughridge fanned and the game ended when Olsen gathered in Moffatt's grounder and touched the bag.

Chesterville started out in a determined manner in the first when McAvoy made a nice single but was caught at second when trying to stretch it into a double. Watt was passed. Gillissie smashed a three-baser to centre, followed by a two-bagger by Hamlen to the same territory but was left on the bag as Plantz and Bourke whiffed. In the second Olsen grounded to pitcher, Lapierre lifted one to left and were both out before Harper reached first on a wild throw by Marcellus from short and McAvoy flied out to left. Watt smashed through second for a safety, Gillissie fanned, Hamlen scored Watt after the latter had stolen second, with a two-baser to centre and followed him home on Plantz's two-bagger to left, in the third. In the fourth the side went out in order, but the fifth, with five counters, was the big noise when the side batted around, Watt opening with a double, going to second when the catcher lost the third strike and had to make a throw, stole third and came home on a squeeze play when Hamlen laid down a perfect bunt, scoring after hits by Bourke, Olsen and Lapierre, whom Harper scored with a double to left. When Watt crossed the plate with his fourth run of the game in the sixth the ball game was packed safely away and Chesterville will meet Winchester in the play-off for the championship of the league, the first game being on Chesterville diamond at 5.30 shrap, Friday evening.

It's an easy thing to make a nasty remark about your home town, but it is difficut to stop that remark from travelling after it has once been uttered.

The monkey in the jungle swings from limb to limb and from tree to tree at remarkable speed, but the monkey is a snail compared to the caustic remarks and comments of a chronic pessimist.

The monkey does not berate either the limb or the trees, for they are his home—they mean safety and comfort to him.

The pessimist, however, is not as considerate.

His happiest moments are when he is slamming his home town.

Nothing is right.

None of its numerous citizens possess the ability to perform civic duties in the proper manner.

Other persons are unable to see the glaring defects that are so plain to him.

He lives in darkness and radiates gloom.

He is simply a pessimist, and the work of the pessimist is too often destructive.

But why be a pessimist? Why not an optimist?

Pessimism is worse than rheumatism. The one puts a few joints out of the proper working order, but the other is a drag to the mind, the body and the soul.

Station yourself on a street corner in a large city and watch the people go by for an hour. Nninety-nine out of a hundred will be happy, and cheerful and contented. They are optimists unawares. The rays of the noonday sun are not brighter or warmer than the smiles upon their lips or the humanity in their hearts.

The hundredth may be different. He may be the odd sheep in the flock, the cloud that dims the brightness of the community light. He is a pessimist, and he knows it. His soul is shrouded in gloom from which he never seeks to escape. He is a bore even to himself.

The pessimist is never happy—the optimist is seldom sad.

It is possible to be either, but never both.

Which appeals to you?

Stay With Good Dairy Practices

Of course we want to advise the elimination of the scrub cow and of the aged cow; but it does not follow that there isn't a good opportunity right now for the farmer keeping, feeding, and milking his good cows.

Those of us who know how difficult it is to avoid bringing in disease when we have to go out and buy new cows, I think will agree that it is good advice to urge the farmer to hold on to all the good cows he has, breed better ones, feed liberally, and produce good quality milk and cream.

We are stimulating a demand for very much larger quantities of milk, cream, butter, and cheese and, in my estimation, we probably will continue to get as satisfactory returns from dairying as from any other branch of farming.

I believe that we would make a mistake if we followed the advice of some economists who have recommended drastic reduction in the number of dairy cattle and discontinuance of liberal feeding. It seems to me that now is just as good a time as ever to stress the importance of good feeding.—J. H. Frandsen, Department of Dairy Industry, Massachusetts Agricultural College.

The Advantages Of Fall Ploughing

Fall-ploughing is generally considered a good practice in most parts of the country, if best results are to be obtained. In a section such as Northern Ontario, where the growing season is comparatively short, it is not only advisable, but it is imperative that the greater part of the ploughing be done in the summer or fall.

At the Dominion Experimental Station, Kapuskasing, Ontario, it has been found that mid-summer or early fall-ploughing has materially facilitated the completion of this work before the ground became too wet or was frozen.

Experiments have shown that practically all the common farm crops should be sown as early in the spring as the condition of the soil will permit and this is only possible when the land has been ploughed the previous fall, and better still if it has been ploughed sufficiently early to disk a couple of times and also open up proper water furrows before the freeze-up.

While it is true that all of the ploughing can not be done during the summer and early fall on account of some crops occupying the land, nevertheless, a start should be made as early as possible. Night pastures and old meadow lend themselves particularly well to early ploughing.

This not only assists materially in getting the ploughing completed, but it makes possible the cultivation of the land to some extent after ploughing and thereby partly takes the place of summer-fallowing. This gives an opportunity of keeping weeds under control and storing up a supply of moisture and plant food for the next season's crop.

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

The statement was made during the World's Poultry Congress in London, England, that British consumers pay sixty thousand pounds sterling ($300,000) daily for eggs and poultry at this season of the year. Surely there is a great opportunity for Canadian poultrymen in this great British market.

Fair Dates.

Central Canada Exhibition, Ottawa, August 18 to 23.

Canadian National Exhibition, Toronton, August 22 to Sept. 6.

Western Fair, London, September 8 to 13.

Interprovincial Ploughing Match, Stratford, October 14 to 17.

Royal Agricultural Winter Fair, Toronto, Nov. 19 to 27.

Isolation Essential in Abortion.

Abortion takes a large toll of the dairy industry and it is regrettable that so little is known about control measures. Vaccines of one kind or another have been sold and some of them seem to be fairly successful in some herds, but have little effect in others. One or two facts are sure: the spread of the disease is largely through germs expelled in the droppings and carried to the feed given to healthy cows or heifers. Probably the contagion is carried on the feet of the herdsman. This should be prevented if possible and infected cows kept away from the rest of the herd at calving time and for a short time after the cow has cleaned.

Lincoln Juniors Compete.

The Household Science Judging Competition conducted on July 25 at Beamsville, Lincoln County, was very largely attended. A total of 78 girls from thirteen different districts in the county were on hand to compete for the $200 in prizes which was offered. These prizes, consisting of $125.00 worth of silverware and $90.00 cash prizes, the latter being comprised as follows: $50 for the high girl in the county competition, donated by Major Burgoyne, manager of the St. Catharines Standard, offered to defray the expenses of the winner to the Boys' and Girls' Congress at Chicago at the time of the International Live Stock Exposition; $40 donated by the County Women's Institute, to be divided equally and be given to the coaches of the two highest teams of three junior girls in the county competition.

Better Bulls in North

In connection with the better bull campaign in the District of Temiskaming, it is of interest to note that since June, 1928, between fifty and sixty inspected bulls have been placed in the district. This is evidence of the interest Temiskaming farmers are taking in better live stock. The sheep population has trebled in the last three years.

Excellent Pea Yields.

Every year a greater acreage is devoted in Ontario to growing such crops as peas, beans, tomatoes, corn and cucumbers for the canning trade. Most of the growers find the returns satisfactory. this year promising to be better than usual. While the weather has not been favourable to all crops, it has been suitable for peas. In Lambton County farmers received $52 a ton for peas and procured a yield as high as two tons per acre. In Durham one farmer had a yield of 4600 pounds for which he received $126.50 and cleared $108.50 after paying for the seed. One grower in Essex reported a clean profit of $726 from this crop alone. Beans will soon be ready for canning and growers are being paid $55 per ton delivered at the factory.

Lack of Rain Costly.

Continued dry weather over a period of seven or eight weeks resulted in serious crop losses in Southwestern and Central Ontario. D. E. Carroll, of Elgin County, states that the corn and bean yield in that district will be greatly reduced. A water shortage has been experienced in some districts, although not as serious as last year. Harvesting is taking place two weeks earlier than usual. Threshing reports from Western Ontario indicate a good yield of barley. H. Graham, of the Kemptville Agricultural School, reports conditions in Eastern Ontario very satisfactory. Prospects are bright for a bountiful grain harvest and late crops are not suffering for lack of moisture as they have in Western counties. Northern Ontario is suffering from another extreme of weather—far too much rain. In Temiskaming particularly, prospects are very poor, owing to excessive rain fall in July. Farther north the situation is more satisfactory and crop prospects in the Cochrane area are about normal.

Keep Them Clean.

Elaborate barns and expensive equipment are not necessary in the production of clean milk although they do help. More important is the keeping of the stable clean and washing and sterilizing of the equipment in use. Following this there must be proper cooling of the cream or milk, and, if selling cream, frequent deliveries must be made, especially during the hot weather. No creameryman is in a position to make the highest grade of butter from cream that is not clean and of good flavour. A dairyman can greatly assist in raising the score of our Canadian butter. Of course there must be proper equipment and care in the creamery. Too often cream is held too long at the farm to make first-class butter.

Seek Increase in Yield.

A. D. Runions, agricultural representative for Lennox and Addington, in co-operation with the Department of Chemistry, O. A. C., is conducting fertilizer experiments with some of the county's most prominent growers in an effort to learn some method of hastening the ripening of tomatoes at a sufficiently early date and hence miss the possibility of danger through an early frost. The acreage of tomatoes has been considerably increased this year and in spite of a heavy loss in June from an early frost, the plants give promise of a heavy crop. A solution of the above problem would mean the difference between profit and loss for growers there. Four additional vining stations have been built this year in Lennox and Addington and yet they are unable to adequately handle the pea crop which is the heaviest every harvested.

Remodelling of Barns.

This is the building season on the farm. Although there will not be many new barns built this year, there will be the usual amount of remodelling of cow stables. The stables should be constructed to keep out cold and conserve the animal heat, at the same time letting the air move through the stable by some well designed ventilating measure. In most cases the barns having the poorest ventilation facilities are those where the inside temperature is too low. The following suggestions could be followed to good advantage by dairy farmers: Don't have the stable too high; eight feet to the bottom joists is plenty. Have as few doors as possible and have them tight. Four square feet of window lights per cow is sufficient. Insulate the walls. Warm stables are desirable from every standpoint—if well ventilated.

The Honourable Retirement of Constable Nehemiah Caxton

When the clock struck three times, Nehemiah Caxton opened his eyes, blinked at the ghostly half light outside his window and with a shiver put his bare feet on the cold, uncarpeted floor. He dressed, pulled on his boots ,and took from its peg in the old oaken cupboard his ancient shotgun. He shut the shed door behind him and, swinging the gun over his shoulder, plunged into a wood road.

His gray beard stuck out straight like a fender under his hooked nose; his blue eyes gleamed balefully.

"I may be an old man," he muttered, "but I'll show 'em! Guess the've forgot about the time I went up arter Jake Bingham!"

When after three hours' arduous travelling Nehemiah came to a little spruce nubble above the deep hole in Abol, he sat wearily down and leaned against the roots of a big tree. A fat red squirrel perched on a lofty limb and chattered angrily at the old man. An hour passed, then another, and another. From his pocket Nehemiah drew three bread and butter sandwiches. Presently he slept, for he was a very aged man.

Nehemiah had set forth on that cold gray morning to catch Jed MacKey in the act of dynamiting the big pool at Abol. Hiram Jeggs and Elnathan Griffin had said that such was Jed MacKey's intention. They had implied moreover, that for a long time Jed MacKey had been maliciously breaking the game laws, that he had shot deer out of season, trapped beaver and killed a cow moose. Nehemiah failed to consider that Jed MacKey was fat and guileless, and that Hiram mJeggs and Elnathan Griffin were the most inveterate practical jokers in the town of Sedgwick. He heard and believed.

One day, the week before Nehemiah had gone up the old wagon road to Wriggler Pond and laid in wait for Jed MacKey. Because Nehemiah's eyes were blurred by time, he had not seen, as he lay half asleep in the hemlocks, the big broad figure that crossed the dry clearing behind him, stopped suddenly on catching a glimpse of the recumbent officer, retraced its steps and lay down in the pine thicket until Nehemiah had gone. But Nehemiah had found in three different places indications that trout pools in Abol had been dynamited.

Had Nehemiah seen the big broad figure with the mop of yellow hair he would not have believed so readily that Jed MacKey was responsible for the nefarious deeds of which he had found unmistakeable signs, and he might have been more cautious in approaching the marauder. There was something pathetic in the faithful old man, worn-out by the long tramp, and asleep at his post. Possibly if the well-meaning but thoughtless jokers of Sedgwick could have seen him, they would have felt contrition for their heartlessness. Hiram Jeggs and Elnathan Griffin did not know of the mute evidence that had made their wild "yarn" plausible to Nehemiah.

At last the sun began to wane and the shadows to lengthen. Nehemiah slept on, but down from the thick scrub growth of fir and spruce slunk a big man with blue eyes and yellow hair. Making his way carefully to the brink of the deep pool, he unslung a pack from his back and laid it carefully on a patch of green moss. He looked cautiously upstream and downstream and behind him.

Then, taking something from the pack, he attached a long white fuse to it and, leaning over, lowered it into deep water. An end of the white fuse still remained above the surface. The man struck a match and bent forward.

The pool was as smooth as glass. It reflected every tree and shrub. A small bird fluttered across the river and alighted in the old pine under which Nehemiah Caxton lay asleep. The man ran back from the pool, crouched under a big rock and waited.

A muffled boom, not unlike the thud of a ball on a catcher's mitt, broke the silence. The water in the pool boiled and bubbled. It was roiled by sand and water-logged sticks; it rippled against the banks in eddying waves. Leaving the rock, the man crouched at the outlet where he could watch the surface of the stream. Just above him a fish with speckled sides and reddish-golden gills rose belly up. The man caught it in his hand and with a smile laid it high up on the mossy shore. Another fish appeared, and still another.

At the sound of the dull thud Nehemiah had stirred uneasily under the pine. He opened his eyes, and instead of the low ceiling of his own bedroom he saw the blue sky through lacy tufts of pine needles. He blinked and winked as he gathered his scattered thoughts. Slowly he remembered the taunts of Hiram Jeggs, the wickedness of Jed MacKey, his duty as deputy game warden, the purpose of the early morning start. Sighing as he thought of the futility of his great effort, he sat up slowly.

Suddenly he caught his breath and held his hand behind his ear. From the deep pool came the sound of something splashing in the water. Thinking it might be a duck or a small animal, Nehemiah scrambled cautiously to his feet and pushed aside the boughs that concealed him. His heart leaped; he felt strangely faint. Instead of a little wild beast, he beheld a big-boned, broad-shouldered man, with yellow hair and blue eyes. The man was picking up fish—dynamited fish!

The old man paused in an agony of doubt, for never in the history of Sedgwick had Nehemiah Caxton faced an unknown outlaw.

"By the great horn spoon!" he gasped, clutching at his gray beard. "He might ha- shot me!"

Then Nehemiah Caxton regained his self-control. With infinitely painstaking care he crept back out of sight and down from the nubble. He made his way noiselessly to the shore of the big pool.

At that very moment an astounding thing came to pass: from the depths of the water floated the grandfather of all trout. To the protruding eyes of the lawless fisherman that trout seemed longer than any yardstick; its great girth stood for pounds and pounds of sheer dead weight. It was a vast patriarchal trout. It was barely stunned! Its tail moved slowly; its fins twitched spasmodically. Before long it would revive and escape. It was the largest trout the yellow-haired man had ever seen, and his blue eyes covetously measured its shining length.

Running down to the rocky place in the stream, the man crossed quickly. His foot slipped and he stumbled knee-deep in icy water, but he did not hesitate. He fixed his eyes on that huge half-stunned fish, and ran straight up the bank until he could almost reach the prize. The fish flopped and turned nearly over—the man was afraid he should lose it. His fingers could not quite reach the speckled sides, but a little eddy was bringing them inch by inch close to the shore. The man waited breathlessly, so intent on that colossal trout that he did not hear the click of a boot heel behind him.

Nehemiah Caxton, trying to hold his breath because he feared that the sound of it might stir the stranger to a fit of uncontrollable fury, crept round the foot of a little hill. With his shotgun clenched tightly in his two hands he peered over a clump of dwarfed birches. Not two arms' length from him squatted the huge-fierce-faced man whose swelling muscles could have made short work of three or four old men like Nehemiah Caxton. The constable shivered with cold fear.

"By the great horn spoon," he said, so faintly that he could not be heard, "I dassn't shoot him! Sure as preaching they'd lock me up! What'll I do? What'll I do?"

As Nehemiah stared at the fish that was slowly being wafted to the stranger's reaching fingers, his anger at this violation of the law increased four-fold. He was an aged man, and he was afraid, but his courage transcended fear. He thought of the taunts and aspersions cast at him by Hiram Jeggs and Elnathan Griffin, of the waning reputation of his valour in the far-away town of Sedgmore, and of the monumental triumph that forty years before had crowned his entry into Sedgmore with the notorious Jake Bingham in his clutches. He peeped over the tops of the birches at the kneeling stranger, and determination steeled his heart.

Laying the shotgun on the ground, Nehemiah Caxton crept with infinite caution round the clump of birches and crouched like an old gray cat. At the very moment when the stranger's fingers clutched the colossal trout, Nehemiah sprang suddenly forward and rushed on the stranger with all his might and main. Nehemiah's bony right fist thumped on the stranger's back. As with a startled yell the stranger plunged off the rock into the deep, cold pool, the clutching fingers of Nehemiah's left hand catching his left heel. With an agility remarkable in so old a man Nehemiah grasped the stranger's feet, one in each hand, and soused him in the icy water of the Abol. The stranger bellowed and writhed and twisted in futile endeavour to get hold of his heartless captor, but Nehemiah ducked deeper still. The stranger gasped and groaned and grunted; but Nehemiah, whose hat had fallen off and whose face was terrible to look upon, yelled in fury:

"You would dynamite trout round here, would you? Wal, I'll larn you, by heck, so you won't never do it no more!"

"When the stranger's breath came from the water in big, gurgling bubbles, Nehemiah pulled him up so that he could fill his lungs before going down again, then soused him head and heels in the foaming river.

Suddenly the stranger twisted, turned, and clutched at Nehemiah's legs. A hard hand closed on Nehemiah's ankles. Two blazing eyes shot a glance of hate into Nehemiah's face. The stranger's grip was like steel. He drew himself out of the water; he arched his back; he wrenched his whole body so that Nehemiah, to save himself from pitching into the river, let go the stranger's feet.

With a grin that showed his long yellow teeth,—a gloating grin that boded evil for Constable Nehemiah Caxton,—the stranger slowly drew himself up on the ledge.

A minute before, Nehemiah Caxton had been afraid, but now it seemed to him that the time of his fear had receded into an almost prehistoric past. Nehemiah looked down at the stranger's big shoes, his massive legs, his broad shoulders. With unnatural coolness Nehemiah realized that if the stranger succeeded in climbing up the bank, the office of town constable of Sedgwick and assistant game warden of Piscataquis County would be vacant. Leaning over, he grabbed the stranger's nose. Exerting all the strength of forearm that he had gained from milking two or more cows morning and evening every day for over sixty years, Nehemiah Caxton squeezed the stranger's nose between his thumb and forefinger.

The stranger's face turned purple from wrath and lack of wind, but, breathing through his mouth and clutching frantically at the old man's legs, he continued to climb. Nehemiah, who had intended to smother his enemy into submission, turned white at this evidence of the man's resourcefulness. But as the stranger thrust out a knee to gain hold on the ledge, and reached toward his belt, where dangled an ugly dirk, Nehemiah suddenly conceived a masterly coup. Still holding the man's nose firmly with his right hand, he leaned over, filled his left hand with sand, and threw the sand straight into the stranger's open mouth. The stranger gasped, choked, coughed, let go Nehemiah's ankles, clutched vainly at the ledge and, fighting desperately for air, toppled off the rock and landed in the water with a terrific splash.

As the stranger had reached for the colossal trout, so now Nehemiah Caxton reached for the stranger. Nehemiah's lean fingers twined in the man's hair. When in impotent fury the dynamiter made a last grab for his knife, Nehemiah pushed him down into the limpid waters of the Abol. Bellows were converted into bubbles; the knife sank to the bottom of the river. For five minutes Nehemiah Caxton ducked the yellow-haired man; then he pulled him out, considerably more than half-drowned.

"Now, by the great horn spoon, you dynamiting scoundrel." said Nehemiah in a cracked, high-pitched voice, as he picked up his gun, "grab your bag and trot on ahead of me!"

The stranger was weak and sick, and loath to obey, but he looked once into the steely gray eyes under the bushy gray brows and, turning without a word, "trotted."

Bedraggled and weak though the stranger was, his face, could Nehemiah have seen it, would sorely have alarmed the aged official; the stranger's lips were parted in a crafty grin. Nehemiah's troubles were not over yet.

Back over the long ridge they laboured, up the rough trail that wound between great boulders; they climbed through the spruces and the white birches to the very summit of the ridge, and there, because Nehemiah was "winded," they stopped to rest. When the stranger glanced back at the swift, silent river far down beyond the alders, Nehemiah Caxton shoved the muzzle of the gun into his face and sharply ordered him to turn around and mind his own business; but, as the stranger turned, Nehemiah caught a fleeting glimpse of a vindictive smile.

Now that the brief excitement of the conflict was over, Nehemiah felt faint and weak and old, but he dared not rest too long. Down the long, straight wood road that dips beyond the ridge, ,he trudged with his prisoner. They passed the ancient logging yard in which are rotting logs and dry stumps; they passed the old North Branch Road and came at last to the old Smoches camp, where a man was standing in the underbrush. The man was short and fat; he had round, rosy cheeks and a furry little moustache. The man was Jed MacKey!

Nehemiah's heart sank like a leaden plummet. He had been anticipating a triumphant arrival at Sedgmore with this yellow-haired criminal, the confusion of scoffers, the retrieval of his reputation for valour, and a triumph that of the almost forgotten affair of Jake Bingham. The sudden appearance of Jed MacKey sent the house of dreams tumbling down on Nehemiah's gray head.

Jed MacKey eyed Nehemiah and the stranger closely, twitched his feeble little moustache, rolled his pale bue eyes, and advanced toward the two with the wabbling, peculiar gait that distinguished Jed from other men.

Nehemiah realized that he was under heavy odds, that two young men were arrayed against him and that rescue of the yellow-haired stranger was imminent, but he was no longer afraid. The fighting spirit of his early youth had come back to him. His veined hand was thin and wrinkled, his arm was feeble, but his nerve was steady and his head was cool. He watched Jed MacKey cross the old yard, he watched him approach through the alders: then, stepping back out of reach of the yellow-haired stranger, he turned the muzzle of his shotgun on Jed, and shouted, "Stop or I'll shoot!"

Jed MacKey, staring into the barrels of Nehemiah's old shotgun, turned pale. With a yell he fled through the alders. Jed was short and fat and clumsy. He tripped over the roots and crashed into logs, until finally he fell sprawling behind a huge pine trunk.

In the nick of time Nehemiah turned from the humorous spectacle of Jed MacKey's flight. With bent shoulders and squared jaw the yellow-haired stranger was crouched cat-like for a spring. Nehemiah whipped the muzzle of the shotgun into his face.

"Vamoose, ye durned varmint!" he cried.

Nehemiah's finger was on the trigger and Nehemiah's eyes blazed with fiery passion. Down the road the stranger plodded; behind him, gun in hand, trotted Nehemiah.

Jed MacKey, when he had recovered his wind, rose from his prostrate position behind the pine stump, twitched his moustache, and muttered, "Hoskins, who'd 'a' thought it!"

Presently he emerged from the alders and started down the road after Nehemiah. He was frightened, but he did his duty as he saw it. "By Hoskins!" he said to himself, "must be Nehemiah's addled his intellect. I'd best push along and see what I can do!"

Nehemiah did not look back at Jed. He jogged down the valley of Cedar Brook, over the swamp and up the long hill. But as Nehemiah and the stranger climbed the hill the stranger's smile grew broader, and the unpleasant twinkle flashed brighter in his eye. Over the tree tops appeared a slim white line of smoke. The tranger thrust two fingers into his mouth and whistled shrilly.

Nehemiah was no fool. "Stop!" he cried.

Then, when the stranger whistled again, Nehemiah realized that he must act; gritting his teeth, he lifted the butt of the old shotgun, rose on his toes, and with some caution but not too gently brought it down on the stranger's head.

The stranger dropped in a limp heap, but up the hillside came, running swiftly, a man who carried an axe. Nehemiah caught the grip of the shotgun and crooking his finger on the trigger ,tried to cock it. His thumb fumbled confusedly over the breech; his face turned as gray as his silvery hair; he had broken the hammer!

As the newcomer came rapidly nearer, Nehemiah felt older and feebler and more helpless than ever before, but then and there he made up his mind to die fighting. He threw the useless gun to his shoulder and squinted down the gray steel barrel.

"Stand whar ye be," he yelled, "or by the great horn spoon, I'll fill ye full of lead!"

The stranger laughed loudly. He had keen eyes, and he had seen Nehemiah fumbling for the broken hammer.

Nehemiah Caxton stood astride his prisoner clubbed his gun and faced his foe. As the man closed in, Nehemiah swung his gun. Axe and shotgun crashed together; the axe head flew in a glittering arc, and the rifle fell from Nehemiah's numbed hands.

The newcomer was large and powerful. He smiled as he reached forward to grapple with Nehemiah; his face was hard and cruel.

Out of the corner of his eye Nehemiah saw another short, fat combatant, with a little yellow moustache, running up behind the grinning stranger, and knew that the end was very near. It was to be a fight of one against three! Kneeling on his yellow haired prisoner, Nehemiah struck with clenched fists and grappled with the stranger's knees; but the other forced him on his back. Nehemiah felt great fingers clutch his throat; he struggled bravely, but he could not breathe; the forest reeled in great circles; the sun came down from the sky and seared his eyeballs. Then he was suddenly free! No one was attacking him! He gasped, felt of his bruised throat, and sat up.

His assailant was writhing on the ground with purple face and protruding tongue; Jed MacKey had thrown a belt round his neck and was pulling it tight.

"Hustle, Nehemiah, and tie his hands!" panted Jed. "I've got him now, but I don't know how long I can hold him."

Nehemiah sought no explanation. Without understanding in the least, he pulled out his handcuffs, forgotten until now, pulled off his suspenders to use for cords, and proceeded with all haste to tie the stranger.

"You see," Jed panted, when the two prisoners were revived and on their feet, "I thought you mus' 'ave gone crazy when you p'inted the gun at me."

Nehemiah chewed his tongue reflectively. "You didn't dynamite no fish?" he asked.

"No, sir! Not me!" exclaimed Jed.

"Wel, by the great horn spoon, there do be some liars in Sedgwick!" Nehemiah asserted as he ran his fingers through his beard. "Be that as it may, you two critters trot!"

Every step of the seven miles to Sedgwick one or other of the strangers felt the muzzle of Jed MacKey's revolver bumping against his back, but Nehemiah Caxton carried the weapon as befitted the constable of Sedgwick and assistant game warden of Piscataquis County. In the early evening the four marched into Sedgewick, straight to Hiram Jeggs's store, where were assembled the male citizens of Sedgwick, from Hiram Jeggs to Elnathan Griffin.

"Wal," said Nehemiah cheerfully, "I cotched 'em, and it wa'n't Jed MacKey, arter all! But Jed done some good work assistin' the officer of the law!"

The citizens of Sedgwick rose and stared in voiceless wonder, and their silence was the truest tribute ever laid at the feet of Nehemiah Caxton. Nor was their wonder less when, three weeks later, Nehemiah Caxton received from the hands of Hiram Jeggs, in his capacity of postmaster, a huge official document containing a draft for five hundred dollars in full payment of the reward for the capture of Carl Carlsen and Ole Andersen, desperadoes, who had fled to Abol from the Rangeley Lake region after killing a cook and terrifving all the country with their evil deeds.

That very week Nehemiah Caxton, having shared the reward with Jed MacKey, gave public thanks at Wednesday-night prayer meeting and resigned his office after his long career. A banquet was given to him by the town of Sedgewick and a silver medal by the Fish and Game Commission, and he is remembered as a brave and efficient officer of the law.

McLatchie---McMillan

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred S. McMillan, Saturday, August 9th, at ten o'clock when their eldest daughter, Olive Luvia, was united in holy bonds of matrimony with Capt. W. Lorne McLatchie, of Morrisburg. The ceremony was performed under an arch of evergreens and cut flowers by Rev. A. W. Morrison.

The home decorations were gladioli, phlox, cosmos and ferns. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, looked winsome in a dainty gown of rose all over lace, beige stockings and slippers, with silver bandeau and carried a bouquet of butterfly roses. She was attended by her sister, Miss Pearl McMillan, who was attired in a nile green ensemble with white taffeta hat and black satin slippers and carried a bouquet of sweet peas and maiden hair ferns. Mr. Milton Barkley, of Massena, acted as best man.

Mendolssohn's Wedding March was most effectively rendered by Mrs. W. A. Morrison. During ths signing of the register, Mrs. E. J. Mullin, sister of the groom sang very sweetly "I Love You Truly."

Following the ceremony a buffet luncheon was served to the bridal party after which the happy couple left amid showers of confetti and good wishes, for a motor trip to Toronto and Western points. The bride travelled in an ensemble of glorja strawberry crepe with beige coat and hat to match.

The groom's gift to the bride was a pearl and crystal necklace, to the best man a pair of white gold cuff links. The bride's gift to the groom was a handsome club bag, to the bridesmaid a signet ring, to the soloist, a compact. Many beautiful gifts were received.

Guests from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. A. McLatchie, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Mullin and daughters Irene and Evelyn, Morrisburg; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Reid and daughter Doreen, Cardinal; Mrs. M. E. Sargeant and Dorothy, of Toronto.

Hydro Cuts Rates In Smiths Falls

Reductions of approximately 12 per cent in domestic commercial and power rates, to take effect in the September billing, are given to Smiths Falls in the report of the local Hydro Electric Commission which was made public Tuesday. The recommendations of the local commission have been approved by the provincial commission in Toronto.

In addition to the reductions above noted a rebate totalling approximately $14000 is to be given in the form of credits on the 1930 billing. This rebate amounts to approximately one-sixth of last year's revenue. The reductions will mean a cut in the rate of approximately five dollars per horse-power.

IN MEMORIAM

Dillabough—In loving memory of my dear mother, Mrs. J. F. Dillabough, who died August 14th, 1929.
We are thinking of you, dear mother,
Thinking of the past,
Picturing you in memory
Just as we saw you last.
You suffered much, with patience bore,
Physicians were in vain,
Till God in His great love
Relieved you from all pain.
Ever remembered by Mrs. J. Myles Merkley.
