WATERWAY PACT HEARINGS TO OPEN

Washintgon, Nov. 10—Hearings on the St. Lawrence waterway treaty were scheduled yesterday to start next Monday before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. Postponement of the hearings from today, the date set last summer, until next week was announced by Senator Borah, insurgent Republican of Idaho, chairman, after he had ascertained upon his return to the Capital that most of the subcommittee members were unable to reach Washington in time to start the sessions earlier.

The Senator declared he intended to keep the hearings going continuously in order to have the matter completed prior to the convening of Congress next month. He regarded it as imperative that the committee sessions be out of the way in advance because of the prospective burden of work to be done during the short session.

Senator Borah said he was not advised whether the State Department desired to be heard during consideration of the treaty which it negotiated with the Dominion of Canada. He assumed that the State Department had much information that would be of value to the committee and to the Senate in its consideration of the question, and added that, of course, if the State Department wanted to present any of its data, it could have the opportunity any time suiting its purposes.

The committee chairman explained that he was uniformed as to the probable amount of testimony that would be received, but he explained that he was aware of earnest opposition as well as support for the proposed deep waterway. This being true, he observed, "neither side is likely to be content without having made the record complete as to its views".

Frank P. Walsh, New York, chairman of the New York State Power Authority, said today he was "anxious to expedite" consideration of the proposed St. Lawrence treaty between Canada and United States.

If ratified, the treaty would permit construction of a vast hydro-electric power development on both sides of the mighty St. Lawrence, and development of a waterway for sea-going vessels between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean. Each country would spend $543,000,000 on the project.

Walsh suggested the members of the sub-committee make a personal inspection of the power sites at Massena.

POLICE COURT NEWS

Seabert White, who was associated with David Clark in the assault on Elgin Brisbois, Winchester service station proprietor, on the night of July 22nd last, and who has evaded arrest ever since, was arrested in Ottawa by provincial police on a warrant issued by Magistrate McCormick. He was given into the custody of the local provincial officer, Frank Rose, and appeared in police court at Winchester this week. He pleaded guilty, was convicted and sentenced to three months at hard labor in the Cornwall jail.

During the past few months, a number of thefts have taken place in the Melvin Settlement, about 3 miles east of Winchester. A few days ago, a complaint was made to Provincial Constable Frank Rose, who visited the community, made an investigation and, after a careful check-up, arrested Henry Desmoreux, 23, who resides north of Ormond. In his possession were found a number of stolen articles which were identified by the owners. The young man was brought before Magistrate McCormick, together with much of the loot. He pleaded guilty to the theft of many articles, covering a period of five months. He was convicted and sentenced to one year determinate and six months indeterminate in the Ontario reformatory.

MINUTES OF COUNCIL

Regular meeting of Council for November was held in the Town Hall on Nov. 7th at 8 p.m.

Present—Messrs Foster, Dain, Beckstead and Link.

There being no errors or omissions in the previous meetings as read, the Reeve declared them adopted.

Moved by Mr Dain, seconded by Mr. Link, that the Hydro Electric Power Commission be granted permission for the right-of-way along Rose Street to erect a pole line as an outlet for their distributing power line to East Williamsburg.

Moved by Mr. Beckstead, seconded by Mr. Dain, that a new pole line be constructed along Laurier Ave. from the King's Highway to the tack factory with provision male to carry the Hydro Electric Power Commission's currents over the regular standard basis of one dollar per crossarm per pole per year, and twenty-five cents per pole per year for secondary attachments.

Moved by Mr Dain, seconded by Mr. Link, that Herbert Clark be instructed to make a corrected list of all places housing tourists, said list to be approved of by the Council and charged commercial rates for the use of electricity.

Moved by Mr. Dain, seconded by Mr. Link, that the list of arrears for light and water accounts as filed with the Clerk be placed in Town Solicitor's hands for collection.

Accounts to the amount of $12,-358.79 were passed.

IMPORTANT SHOE DEAL COMPLETED

Final agreements were completed on Tuesday of last week, between United States shoe manufacturers and officials of the Lockewedge Shoe Company, of Perth, of which Mr. G.H. Ansley is one, for rights to manufacture "Lockewedge Shoes" across the border. These shoes bear the recommendation of Dr. Locke, of Williamsburg, whose recent wide publicity was indirectly responsible for the large contract completed this week. The Perth Company hold Canadian patent rights for the manufacture of the new shoes. S. Gilhuly, Williamsburg shoes merchant, was also connected with the negotiation, which had been under discussion for several days, numerous offers having been received.

This is the first time, states Mr. Ansley, that the most prominent shoemen in the U.S. have invaded Canada to secure the American rights for a Canadian product.

JUVENILE MAGISTRATE

John Ferguson McKinley, of Ottawa, has been appointed by order-in-council to be deputy police magistrate for the Counties of Prescott, Grenville and Russell, the appointment dating from the 11th October.

Mr. McKinley is to have jurisdiction over cases coming under the headings of the Children's Protection Act, desertion of wives and children, minors' protection and parents' maintenance, married women's property act, assault of husband or wife, etc., and cases of non-support.

It is not stated how the machinery of the law intends to operate in these cases, whether there is to be a central court or district courts, as heretofore. One thing appears to be certain, however, the police magistrates will have the burden of these cases taken off their shoulders, and be no longer placed in a position where they had reluctanly to put the County to expense in the case of minors. Mr. McKinley has had a vast experience in this type of work and should prove a valuable addition to the machinery of the law.

MR. R. W. HENDERSON

Robert Wesley Henderson, a lifelong resident of Winchester Township, died on Monday evening, aged 48, after an illness of nearly two years.

Mr. Henderson had spent his life engaged in agricultural pursuits and was well and favorably known throughout the district.

He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, Winchester Springs, and a quiet but ardent supporter. For many years he was a member of the Williamsburg I.O.O.F. lodge

In 1907 he married Miss Ida Kirkwood of Winchester Springs, who survives, with one son. Also surviving are his parents, four sisters and two brothers.

The funeral was held from the family residence on Wednesday, to the Presbyterian Church, Winchester Springs, and burial was made at Maple Ridge cemetery.

MR. W. W. BECKSTEAD

The death occurred on Saturday Nov. 5th, of Wm. Wallace Beckstead in his 75th year. He was almost a lifelong resident of the township of Williamsburg, where he had been in business for many years. He was a staunch member of the former Methodist church. In 1880 he was united in marriage to Augusta Casselman, daughter of the late Ira W. and Eliza Casselman, of Williamsburg, who survives, with two sons and three daughters, viz: O.M. Beckstead of Redwood, N.Y., C.M. Beckstead of Ottawa; Mrs. H.E. Reddick, town, Mrs. Archie Holland, Newington and Mrs. Lester Newton, Oswego, N.Y. Two brothers, J.A. Beckstead, Montreal, and A.P. Beckstead, Depeyster, N.Y., also survive.

The funeral was held at the home of his daughter Mrs. H.E. Reddick, town, on Sunday, at 3.30 p.m. Interment was made in the family plot in Fairview cemetery.

The Green Murder Case

BY S. S. VAN DINE.

SYNOPSIS.

Philo Vance, with a hobby for solving mysteries, becomes interested in the Greene murders when District Attorney John Markham and Sgt. Heath are called in after the fatal shooting of Julia Greene and the wounding of her younger sister, Ada. Old Tobias Greene's widow, together with five children, Julia, Chester, Sibella, Rex and Ada (adopted) live in the old Greene mansion. Police investigations reveal nothing; then Chester is found shot dead seated in a chair in his room. Again footsteps are found to and from the entrance of the mansion. Ada goes to Markham's office and informs him that Rex has not told all he knows. Five minutes later word comes that he has been shot. A few hours later Dr. von Blon reports a theft of poison from his satchel.

Vance continued: "I see in this whole affair a carefully worked-out plot that's been in preparation perhaps for years. We're dealing with the persistency of an idee fixe, and with the demoniaca logic of insanity. And—what is even more hideous—we're confronted with the perverted imagination of a fantastically romantic mind. We're pitted against a fiery, egocentric, hallucinated optimism. And this type of optimism has tremendous stamina and power. The history of nations has been convulsed by it. Mohammed, Bruno and Jeanne d'Arc—as well as Torquemada, Agrippina and Robespierre—all had it. It operates in different degrees, and to different ends; but the spirit of individual revolution is at the bottom of it."

"Hell, Mr. Vance!" Heath was uneasy. "You're trying to make this case something that ain't—well, natural."

"Can you make it anything else, Sergeant? Already there have been three murders and an attempted murder. And now comes the theft of the poisons from Von Blon."

Inspector Moran drew himself up and rested his elbows on the table.

"Well, what's to be done? That, I believe, is the business of tonight's conclave." He forced himself to speak with matter-of-factness. "We can't break up the establishment; and we can't assign a separate body-guard for each remaining member of the household."

"No; and we can't give 'em the works at the police station, either," grumbled Heath.

"It wouldn't help you if you could, Sergeant," said Vance. "There's no third degree known that could unseal the lips of the person who is executing this particular opus. There's too much fanaticism and martyrdom in it."

"Suppose we hear those wills, Mr. Markham," suggested Moran. "We may then be able to figure out a motive. You'll admit, won't you, Mr. Vance, that there's a pretty strong motive back of these killings?"

"There can be no doubt as to that. But I don't believe it's money. Money may enter into it—and probably does—but only as a contributory factor. I'd say the motive was for fundamental—that it had its matrix in some powerful but suppressed human passion. However, the financial conditions may lead us to those depths."

Markham had taken from his pocket several legalized sheets of closely typed paper, and smoothed them on the table before him.

"There's no necessity to read these verbatim," he said. "I've gone over them thoroughly and can tell you briefly what they contain." He took up the sheet and held it nearer to the light.

"Tobias Greene's last will, drawn up less than a year before his death, makes the entire family, as you know, the residuary devisees, with the stipulation that they live on the estate and maintain it intact twenty-five years. At the end of that time the property may be sold or otherwise disposed of. I might mention that the domiciliary stipulation was particularly strict; the legatees must live in the Greene mansion in esse—no technicality will suffice. They are permitted to travel and make visits; but such absences may not exceed three months in each respective year. . . ."

"What provision was made in case one of them should marry?" asked the inspector.

"None. Even marriage on the part of any of the legatees did not vitiate the restrictions of the will. If a Greene married, he or she had to live out the twenty-five years on the estate just the same. The husband or wife could share the residence, of course. In event of children the will provided for the erection of two other small dwellings on the 52nd street side of the lot. Only one exception was made to these stipulations. If Ada should marry, she could live elsewhere wihout losing her inheritance, as she apparently was not Tobias' own child and could not, therefore, carry on the blood line of the Greenes."

"What penalties attached to a breaking of the domiciliary terms of the will?" Again the snspector put the question.

"Only one penalty—disinheritance, complete and absolute."

"A rigid old bird," murmured Vance. "But the important thing about the will is, I should say, the manner in hich he left the money. How was this distributed?"

"It wasn't distributed. With the exception of a few minor bequests, it was left in its entirety to the widow. She was to have the use of it during her lifetime, and could, at her death, dispose of it to the children—and grandchildren, if any—as she saw fit. It was imperative, however, that it all remain in the family."

"Where do the present generation of Greenes get their living expenses? Are they dependent on the old lady's bounty?"

"Not exactly. A provision was made for them in this way: each of the five children was to receive from the executors a stipulated amount from Mrs. Greene's income sufficient for personal needs." Markham folded up the paper. "And that about covers Tobias' will."

"You spoke of a few minor bequests," said Vance. "What are they?"

"Sproot was left a competency, for instance—enough to take care of him comfortably whenever he wished to retire from service. Mrs. Mannheim, also, as to receive an income for life, beginning at the end of the twenty-five years."

"Ah! Now, that's most interestin'. And in the meantime she could, if she chose, remain as cook at a liberal salary."

"Yes, that was the arrangement."

"The status of Frau Mannheim fascinates me. I have a feeling that some day ere long she and I will have a heart-to-heart talk. Any other minor bequests?"

"A hospital where Tobias recovered from typhus fever contracted in the tropics; and a donation to the chair of criminology at the University of Prague. I might mention too, as a curious item, that Tobias left his library to the New York police department, to be turned over to them at the expiration of the twenty-five years."

Vance drew himself up with puzzled interest.

"Amazin'!"

Heath had turned to the inspector.

"Did you know anything about this, sir?"

"It seems to me I've heard of it. But a gift of books a quarter of a century in the future isn't apt to excite the officials of the force."

Vance, to all appearances, was smoking with indolent unconcern; but the precise way he held his cigarette told me that some unusual speculation was absorbing his mind.

"The will of Mrs. Greene," Markham went on, "touches more definitely on present conditions, though personally I see nothing helpful in it. She has been mathematically impartial in doling out the estate. The five children—Julia, Chester, Sibella, Rex and Ada—receive equal amounts under its terms—that is, each gets a fifth of the entire estate."

"That part of it don't interest me," put in the sergeant. "What I want to know is, who gets all the money in case the others pass outa the picture?"

"The provision covering that point is quite simple," exclaimed Markham. "Should any of the children die before a new will is drawn, their share of the inheritance is distributed equally among the remaining beneficiaries."

"Then when any one of 'em passes out, all the others benefit. And if all of 'em, except one, should die, that one would get everything—huh?"

"Yes."

"So as it stands now Sibella and Ada would get everything—fifty-fifty—provided the old lady croaked."

"That's correct, Sergeant."

"But suppose both Sibella and Ada, as well as the old lady, should die: what would become of the money?"

"If either of the girls had a husband, the estate would pass to him. But, in event of Sibella and Ada dying single, everything would go to the State. That is to say, the State would get it provided there were no relatives alive—which I believe is the case."

Heath pondered these possibilities for several minutes.

"I can't see anything in the situation to give us a lead," he lamented. "Everybody benefits equally by what's already happened. And there's three of the family still left—the old lady and the two girls."

"Two from three leaves one, Sergeant," suggested Vance quietly.

"What do you mean by that, siri?"

"The morphine and the strychnine."

Heath gave a start and made an ugly face. He struck the table with his fist. "It ain't coming to that if I can stop it!" Then a sense of helplessness tempered his outraged resolution, and he became sullen.

"I know how you feel." Vance spoke with troubled discouragement. "But I'm afraid we'll all have to wait. If the Greene millions are an actuating force in this affair there's no way on earth to avert at least one more tragedy."

"We might put the matter up to the two girls and perhaps induce them to separate and go away," ventured the Inspector.

"That would only postpone the inevitable," Vance returned. "And besides, it would rob them of their patrimony."

"A court ruling might be obtained upsetting the provisions of the will," submitted Markham dubiously.

Vance gave him an ironical smile.

"By the time you could get one of your beloved courts to act the murderer would have had time to wipe out the entire local judiciary."

Michael

Upon the forest-side in Grasmere Vale
There dwelt a Shepherd, Michael was his name;
An old man, stout of heart, and strong of limb.
His bodily frame had been from youth to age
Of an unusual strength: his mind was keen,
Intense, and frugal, apt for all affairs,
And in his shepherds calling he was prompt
And watchful more than ordinary men.
Hence he had learned the meaning of all winds,
Of blasts of every tone; and oftentimes,
When others heeded not, he heard the South
Make subterraneous music, like the noise
Of bagpipers on distant Highland hills.
The Shepherd, at such warning, of his flock
Bethought him, and he to himself would say,
"The winds are now devising work for me!"
And, truly, at all times, the storm that drives
The traveller to a shelter, summoned him
Up to the mountains: He had been alone
Amid the heart of many thousand mists,
That came to him and left him, on the heights.

—From Wordsworth's poem, "Michael."

Honor British Racer

Daytona Beach, Fla.—A lasting tribute to the memory of the late Sir Henry Segrave, famous British race car driver, is underway here.

The city has begun work on a new avenue to be named in honor of the sportsman, who twice established world speed records on the ocean speedway here before he was killed in a motorboat accident at Lake Windermere, England.

Birthdays

Most people celebrate their birthdays as only so many victories over time, with not a recollection of the many good and gentle hopes and thoughts they may have wounded or destroyed in the battle.—Wise Sayings.

400 Prehistoric Walls Found

Some four hundred prehistoric fortress or castle walls, many of them well preserved, have been found in the Province of Bradenburg. The oldest of these walls date from the Bronze Age (900 to 600 B.C.)

Wheat 3,500 Years Old Found

More than half a pint of wheat believed to be 3,500 years old, was found during excavations at Hembury Fort, England.

Reminiscences

Among the many good stories Geo. Jean Nathan tells about his literary friends (in "The Intimate Notebooks of George Jean Nathan" — emphasis on "intimate") is this one of Sinclair Lewis:

"One afternoon a year or so ago," chuckles Nathan, "our hero (Lewis) called me up and somewhat mysteriously hinted that I had better be at his house in West Tenth Street (New York) at seven o'clock that evening if I didn't want to miss something good. Since he is generally as mysterious as a traffic cop, my curiosity was aroused and at seven promptly I was on the scene.

Three other male guests, as mysteriously summoned, they told me, were already there .... After a cocktail or two, we were bidden to sit to dinner. In the middle of the meal, our host arose and excused himself. Returning a few minutes later, he informed us that he had to have a minor operation performed and had just telephoned the surgeon to come over. We had been invited, it appeared, to stand around and be company while the operation was going on. Protests being of no avail, we had to entertain Lewis while the surgical performance was in progress.

"'Looking at you guys, gives me such a pain,' he observed, 'that the other one in comparison won't seem so bad.'"

One night Nathan and Theodore Dreiser sat together "contemplating the literary scene." Presently they got around to George Bernard Shaw. Said Dreiser:

"The old fellow makes a sad idiot of himself trying to convince himself through other people that he's still young and spry. I had lunch with him in his flat when I was last in London and guess what he did!

"After each course, he jumped up from the table, grabbed hold of two chairs, placed them some five and a half feet apart, adjusted his chin on one and his feet on the other, and then — in a horizontal position — chinned himself up and down on them for a couple of minutes. When lunch was over, and I was safely out of the place, he probably had to go to bed and rest up for twelve hours from the exertion of having impressed me, as he believed, with his remarkable youthful vitality."

The saying, "putting on side" has an interesting origin. It seems that one of the first farm wagons had movable side boards. These sideboards were slid into place only when the driver had a good load, and then taken out again when the wagon was empty. But some of the less prosperous farmers tried to give the impression of taking great loads to market when the yield was really light—says Marion Nicholl Rawson, in "From Here to Yonder":

"Hank's got his side-boards on and hasn't got any load," a canny neighbor would chuckle.

That was shortened into "putting on side"—to describe an acquaintance who is giving himself "airs" with nothing to warrant it.

In the days of my youth a visit to Sanger's Circus was three parts heaven and one part awe. Awe because the proprietor was "Lord" George Sanger.

It was not until years later that I discovered there was nothing in the "Lord" business. That it was a self-assumed, empty title. And I learned the truth from the "Lord" himself as to how he came to take it.

It seems—according to "Seventy Years a Showman" (being the memoirs of "Lord" George Sanger)—that he got into a legal conflict with Buffalo Bill, and that during the trial of the suit the constant reiteration of the phrase "The Honorable William Cody" got on his nerves. At last he said:

"Hang it! I can go one better than that, anyhow. If he's the Honorable William Cody, then I'm Lord George Sanger from this on."

And so he was ever after.

Speaking of titles, some years ago, John Galsworthy — his new novel "Flowering Wilderness" is due this month—was offered and refused a knighthood. That is to say, he preferred to remain plain Mr. John Galsworthy instead of becoming Sir John Galsworthy. It was quite a rarity for a man to refuse a proffered handle to his name, inasmuch as it is tendered him in the name of the sovereign and thus takes the nature of a royal command. The usual procedure is for some one interested to sound the person so to be honored. As a rule, it is unnecessary to do much sounding.

But in the case of Mr. Galsworthy some one blundered, for his name actually appeared in the honors list published in the newspapers as "Sir John Galsworthy." Explanations followed, but just what they were I have forgotten. It is not usual, however, for authors to turn down a title. Possibly Thomas Hardy and Rudyard Kipling may have turned a deaf ear to the voice of the charmer—at all events, it is generally believed so.

Since the typewriter has almost done away with handwritten manuscripts and collectors find them increasingly difficult to obtain, galley proofs of the works of modern authors, corrected by them have acquired a considerable value. Not long ago a first corrected proof of an old Kipling short story brought $360 in a New York salesroom. Kipling, for one, has long been aware of the commercial value attached to his handwriting and does not scatter it around promiscuously. I am told that his contracts contain a clause requiring the return to him of all manuscripts to which they relate, typed or otherwise.

Once when a group of Wall Street bankers asked the late Iver Kreuger, spectacular Swedish "Match King," at a week-end party why he did not fall in love with some American girl — "a nudge prompted no doubt with an eye to business as well as romance," says Earl Sparling (in "Kreuger's Billion Dollar Bubble")—he smiled and said:

"I prefer a Swedish match."

Kreuger was fond of performing "little miracles," says Mr. Sparling. For instance:

"He met some American women at luncheon in Stockholm one day. The spring had been late and cold. The American visitors spoke sadly of the absence of flowers on the countryside. 'Ah,' said Kreuger, 'you have not been to the right places. You will come with me to one of my country places for tea this afternoon.' When they arrived at the country house that afternoon they found the walks lined with rosebushes in bloom. Between luncheon and tea time Kreuger had ransacked the hothouses of Stockholm to provide them."

Mr. Sparling who—as an American newspaper correspondent in Stockholm—knew Kreuger, quotes him as once saying:

"My success can be attributed to three things. One is silence. The second is more silence. The third is still more silence."

"I am often asked," adds Sparling—apropos Kreuger's reputation for silence and his shunning of publicity—"if a dislike of publicity, after one has ostensibly courted it, is a Viking inheritance, since it appears in individuals of Swedish ancestry from Lindbergh to Greta Garbo."

Giant Frogs

The largest frog known is the giant Bull Frog of Africa. It weighs ten pounds. The smallest species of frog is found in Cuba. It is so tiny that its weight is hardly equal to that of three grains of wheat. It would take twenty thousand Cuban frogs to equal the weight of one bull frog.

Eyes of true blue are becoming comparatively rare, as most so-called blue eyes contain a certain proportion of brownish-black or yellow pigment.

Jack and Jill House

Jack builds, Jill decorates. At least that is the procedure in the house built and decorated by a high school class in Illinois. In previous years the boys have translated their theoretical knowledge into the actual construction of a saleable house, but this is the first time the girls have participated by decorating and furnishing its rooms.

The trim English cottage, sturdily constructed, artistically landscaped and tastefully furnished, which the pupils have just completed, is eloquent testimony of their capabilities. According to the American Home Magazine, the house is, in every way, as finished as though mature architect, builder and workmen, instead of boys, had assisted in its construction, while the artistic, quiet atmosphere which the girls have achieved with little money, but with good taste and common sense, would do credit to a professional decorator.

The "Jack and Jill" house is an attractive six-room English cottage, with a spacious lawn, shrubs and pine trees. Inside, one finds the wall and floor coverings harmonious, and the chairs, tables and oter furniture practical. Decorations and furnishings seem to "belong." Several pieces of furniture claim attention because they are usually well built—a davenport, two large stuffed chairs, a walnut dining table and chairs, and a sewing cabinet.

In each case, the boys have made the furniture. The girls for their part, have made the smart overdraperies and curtains, bedspreads, lamp shades, sofa cushions, and have attended to the many other details which make of the house a comfortable and restful home.

School projects of this and of similar nature make it very clear that educators in ever-increasing numbers are finding it is a good and useful thing for students to learn to use their hands as well as their eyes and ears.—The Christian Science Monitor.

It is the Only Way

Severe penalties for reckless driving are being imposed by magistrates in the United Kingdom. One 20-year-old driver of a motor van was disqualified for 25 years from driving any motor vehicle, and fined $15 and costs. He had been driving a motor van which swerved across the road, mounted the sidewalk, knocked down a lamp standard, and killed a pedestrian. His explanation was that a "jar" wrenched the steering wheel of the van out of his hands. Another young man, son of a former Secretary of State for the Dominions, was fined for reckless driving and deprived of his license to drive for five years It is the only way to deal with those who so flagrantly abuse the convenience of a modern amenity and turn it into a menace.—Ottawa Journal.

Rioting is Futile

The unfortunate incidents in London and Belfast show how useless demonstrations of this kind are to settle our present difficulties. Baton charges and revolver shots are certainly not going to provide food for the hungry and drink for the thirsty. Everyone knows how the people are suffering. In unhappy days like these they are always inclined to lay the blame on the social order of the day and the detonating action of a few agitators is enough to cause an explosion. Imbued with revolutionary ideas, the latter take advantage of bad times to excite the passion of the crowd. They egg it on against the authorities and forcible repression becomes a necessity. While honest and brave fellows are being killed, they sneak away and hide in cellars and sheds.—Le Soleil, Quebec.

Autumn Weather

If the British Isles could be blessed in October with Canada's weather the health and energy of its people would greatly benefit. Who that has ever nhaled the fine keen October air in Canada will deny this! If the tired professional or business man could only ealize the extraordinary health-cure a nonth in the Canadian woods can give here would be heavier steamship bookings and increased longevity for he health-seeker. In its wonderful autumn climate Canada has an asset and an attraction of great value. It is vastly appreciated in the United States, as is shown by the great tourist traffic but it is not at all sufficiently known in the Mother Country.—Canada, London.

Inalienable Advantages

Recent evidence goes to show that Canada, despite some discouragements in the last few years is certain to retain and enhance her prestige as a wheat exporting country. Export figures issued recently show that Canada's output practically dominates the market.—Fort William Times-Journal.

Five Real Fathers

Five fathers of Reigate, Eng. have been awarded certificates by the town council for their proficiency in knowing what to do with a fretting infant, how to detect mumps and measles, and other skill in tending their small offspring. These awards indicate that fathers can be adept in babycraft if they try.—St. Thomas Times-Journal.

A Bountiful Crop

The prices of farm produce may be low, but the harvest is large. Everything that the farmer raises has been produced in abundance this year. He may not have much ready money, but he need not go hungry. Nature has been prodigal this year. Taken as a whole, the principal field crops in Canada have seldom attained such total volume as during the present season or been of a higher quality. Yields were generally satisfactory in each of he provinces, despite sectional reverses due to weather conditions or other causes.—Gananoque Reporter.

Rest and Change

The editor of the National Revenue Review tells a good one about a member of Parliament for one of the Montreal constituencies. The member spent a vacation at a fashionable resort this year, and, when he returned, someone asked him if he had enjoyed the change and rest. "I really can't say," replied the M.P. "The bell boys got most of the change, and the hotelkeeper got the rest." — Border Cities Star.

Vehicles in the Dark

Another case is reported from Cadillac, where a farmer on the road with a waggon was run into by a car and one of the horses either killed or badly injured. Cases of this kind are happening all over the province and they will continue to happen until lights are carried at night on all vehicles. A few more deaths and casualties will likely have to occur before a proper law is put on the statute books. Going out at night without lights on a busy highway is flirting with disaster.—Regina Leader-Post.

THE EMPIRE

The Ottawa Agreements

The Ottawa agreements are in many respects experimental, and we make no prophecies about them. Only experience will show their value. But a certain measure of fairness is required of all who presume to discuss them.—Leeds Mercury.

Modern War

Whatever happens, the mood that declares statesmanship to be helpless and war inevitable must be fought at all points. It was precisely this kind of fatalism which paralyzed the will to peace before the great war. But there is a difference between then and now. The pre-war statesmen had at least the excuse that they did not know what the war was going to be. The only war which the war-makers had in mind was the war of the Schlieffen plan, the short sharp struggle which was to lead to victory "before Christmas." Post-war statesmen have no such excuse. They know that modern war is a sentence of doom for victor and vanquished.—London News-Chronicle.

The Australian Loan

By increasing taxation, cutting down all public expenditure to the bone, reducing internal interest rates, lowering wages and salaries all round, and drastically restricting imports, Australia has managed to meet in full her obligations to her overseas creditors. It is now the business of those creditors not only to show their appreciation, but also to help her to carry on the unequal struggle, by co-operating whole-heartedly in her efforts to reduce the burden of her overseas debt by well-judged conversion operations. By so doing they help not only Australia but themselves as well, for in these difficult times a wise creditor will make it as easy as possible for his debtors to meet their obligations. —London Times.

Peiping or Nanking?

As things look in China to-day, the question of the site of the capital would no longer seem to be of any great practical importance. The Kuomintang party is losing its influence nd power from day to day, and the hole country is breaking up, and will nost likely end in some loose federaion of independent states. That is to ay, for a long time to come there will be numerous sub-capitals but no cenral capita' at all. Under the present onditions, therefore, the British and other Governments will be very ill-alised to listen to the advice of those who wish them to move their legations rom Peiping.—W. Lewisohn in The National Review (London).

Arms and the League

To bury one's head in the sand is not n intelligent policy. On the other hand, to try and recognize the facts as hey are courts the danger that a bad endency may be fortified and set upon an irrevocable course. Those who before 1914 steadily foretold the Great War did their bit in producing it; for war is the climax of a general state of fear. By the same token faith is proved to be a practical weapon in human affairs. It follows that it is every serious person's duty to cultivate confidence in peace and to encourage others to a like confidence. But faith against the light is difficult. When a man sees that the League of Nations whose essential object is the encouragement of a general belief in peace, has become so enmeshed in the olicies of those particular politicians who least believe in peace, as itself o provoke an active sense of fear mong large sections of the people of the world, then it seems wise to look acts squarely in the face with a view o mending them.—George Glasgow in The Contemporary Review (London).

Recommend Return To Gold Standard

Experts Urge Step in Report for World Economic Conference

Geneva.—Return to the gold standard throughout the world will be advocated by monetary experts in a preliminary report being prepared for the London Economic Conference, it was learned last Friday.

Re-establishment of the gold standard should follow fulfilment of certain preliminary conditions, the experts will say. These conditions include:

1. Restoration, to a reasonable degree, of freedom of trade.
2. A solution of inter-governmental private debts.
3. Central banks undertaking to prevent gold movements influencing either the country losing gold or the country receiving it by changing the discount rate or by open market transactions.

Hunting Conditions Best in Ten Years in North

Sudbury. — Hunting conditions in the north woods are better this season than they have ever been in the pass 10 years. With snow from six to nine inches deep in the bush and all trees save the evergreens stripped of their foliage by the frost, deer and moose are easily tracked. The ground has a firm bottom, as it was wet when the snow came and froze with the sagging temperature. In the Sudbury district there was little demand for hunting licenses owing to the mild weather when the season opened. But with this week's snow there has been a regular stampede for permits, and issuers disposed of 316 deer licenses and 24 moose licenses in Sudbury alone. A large influx of hunters is expected after the elections in the United States and plenty of game awaits them.

To Purchase Cotton Mills

Blackburn, Eng.—Workers of Audley Hall Mills, Blackburn, Lancs., have decided to purchase three mills and run the looms on a co-operative basis, providing work eventually for 400 people.

The mills, which were closed a year ago, contain more than 2,000 looms, and were to be sold by auction, but the workers and their friends have raised sufficient funds to get a first option on the purchase.

Paralysis Cases 59 For October

Ontario Report Includes 20 From Toronto — Five Deaths in Province

Toronto—A slight flurry of 59 cases in October, 20 of which were reported from Toronto, has brought the incidence of infantile paralysis in Ontario up to 153 cases for the year to date.

This number, while 12 cases higher than reported in the first ten months of 1931, falls far below the figures of 1929 and 1930, when the dread disease reached epidemic proportions, and 477 and 671 cases, respectively, developed.

There have been 11 deaths this year, against 10 last year.

Up to the end of July this year, only 10 cases with two deaths had been reported; 26 cases with three deaths occurred in August; 53 cases and one death in September; and then October with 59 cases, as previously stated, and five deaths. According to Hon. Dr. J. M. Robb, Minister of Health, there is no need for alarm over the October situation, inasmuch as in October, 1930, 174 cases were reported.

The October cases were pretty well spread over the province. York Township reported six, Forest Hill Village one, Scarboro Township one, Ottawa eight, Elizabethtown Township four, Smith's Falls one, Kingston two, Leeds and Lansdowne one, St. Marys-Yonge Twp. two, S. Crosby three, Port Hope one, Athol Twp. one, Dundas one, London one, Nottawasaga Twp. one, Teck Twp. one and Kapuskasing two.

Brantford Motor Record Broken Over Week-End

Brantford.—The first motor fatality in Brantford traffic in three years was recorded Sunday with the death of Robert Buchanan, 11, in hospital.

Old Prospector, John Foote, Dies

100 Years Old, He Had Lived Half-Century in Wilds

Toronto.—Old John Foote will never see the north country again. The 100-year-old prospector who spent more than half of his life in the wilderness, died Sunday with his dreams unfulfilled—the dream that he would live to see the day when the 1,100 acres he owned would yield the gold and silver which he always swore lay there in unlimited quantities.

In a little room at 831 Dundas Street east the old man slipped quietly away early Sunday afternoon. With almost his last breath he spoke of his beloved north country, of the riches in gold and silver which he always claimed he had seen many times while prospecting 22 miles north of Parry Sound. His death removes one of the few remaining old-time prospectors, one whose name is known by all in the northland.

Miss Sarah Stephens, an elderly lady who had looked after him for 20 years, ever since old age prevented him from continuing the rigorous life of the seeker after gold, told something about John Foote's life. There were many gaps in the story and much of it was hazy and indefinite, but one fact stood out clear: John Foote had made a sizeable fortune in the California gold rush and had invested most of it in mining properties in Northern Ontario.

Penetrated North

Born of United Empire Loyalist stock—his parents had come from Long Island, New York—John Foote first saw the light of day on May 20, 1932. What he did in his youth is not known, but in the middle twenties he left Napanee, his birthplace, and started out as a prospector. In the middle of the last century Northern Ontario was a wilderness. But young John Foote penetrated the wild country and staked out numerous claims in what is now known as Hagerman Township. He took up Crown land and bought adjoining properties. He played a lone hand. With his axe and a few other implements he prospected for gold and his story in later years was that he found plenty of it.

Miss Stephens, who claims to know more about John Foote than any other person, said Sunday night he had often told her of losing some valuable properties through some crooked deal.

"He loved the North and always hoped to return there some day and die," said Miss Stephens. "He always told me the North was richer in mineral weath than any part of Canada and he said that some day its discovery would stagger the world."

The veteran of the north built roads into his properties, cleared the land of lumber, put up buildings and dug primitive mines. Miss Stephens showed blue prints of his claims and registry deeds dating back many years. Asked if the old man owned the properties at the time of his death, she stated that as far as she knew most of it had gone for unpaid taxes.

Several rocks, purporting to contain veins of gold and silver, were produced by Miss Stephens. These, she declared, had been brought back from the north by Foote when he was no longer able to withstand the rigors of that country.

For some years Foote ran a second-hand store on King Street. To his new friends here he told many stories of his life in the wild districts of Ontario. He believed that some day he would go back and with backing develop the properties which he had staked out in his youth. Whether those properties have any value is not known, but in the mind of the centenarian they represented a great fortune.

Age rarely brings wisdom; about the best it can do is to teach us what brand of folly we like best.

Careful Car Drivers To Receive Bonus

"Poor" Driver to be Penalized — Basic Liability Rate Increased

Toronto.—Becoming effective this month, changes in automobile insurance rates provide for a 10 per cent. bonus or discount to insured drivers in Ontario with clear records in connection with claims or infractions.

This is in line with recommendations of the late Justice Hodgins, who recommended that some form of demerit rating be introduced for penalizing careless drivers. The new plan applies to all passenger automobiles not part of fleets, where the driver has previously been insured.

Changes in rates approved by the members at their annual meeting are summarized as follows:

Public Liability—Rates increased approximately 15 per cent. in all territories except rural and Northern Ontario where they remain unchanged.

Property damage—Rates decreased approximately 15 per cent. in all areas except Northern Ontario and in the 18 medium sized cities of Ontario known as territory "B". In both areas rates remain unchanged.

Collision—all rates dropped approximately 20 per cent. in all territories except Northern Ontario where the rates remain unchanged.

Theft—All rates cut 20 per cent. in all territories except Northern Ontario where rates remain unchanged.

Fire—No change in rates.

MEANS REDUCTION.

Net result for the majority of Ontario drivers, who qualify for the bonus, will be a reduction in premiums, it is stated. In Toronto, Hamilton and Windsor, for public liability and property damage, the rates are compared:

Ford	Old	New
Public liability	$15.00	$17.00
Property damage	11.00	9.00
	$26.00	$26.00
Less 10 p.c. bonus		2.60
	$26.00	$23.40
Buick
Public liability	$19.00	$22.00
Property damage	15.00	12.00
	$34.00	$34.00
Less 10 p.c. bonus		3.40
	$34.00	$30.60
Packard
Public liability	$23.00	$26.00
Property damage	19.00	16.00
	$42.00	$42.00
Less 10 p.c. bonus		4.20
	$42.00	$37.80

FOR OTHER CITIES.

In 18 other cities the reductions will be respectively 20 cents, no change, and 1.60; while in Northern Ontario small towns and rural areas they are $3.60, $5.20 and $5.60 respectively.

Another change which will also become effective with the new rate schedule is a slight downward revision of rates where the standard limits of $5,000 and $10,000, in the case of public liability, are increased. This change will apply to both private and commercial vehicles. A further change in the charge for excess public liability coverage will probably be made in the near future in regard to public vehicles, some rates being apparently due for downward revision and others for an increase.

Soviet Honors Pioneer In Aeronautical Theory

Moscow.—The seventy-fifth birthday of an airplane inventor whose achievements, it is claimed, antedated those of the Wright brothers, has been celebrated throughout the Soviet Union.

Fifty years ago Constaontine Tsiolkovsky, a provincial teacher, began experiments and calculations on flying. Despite his advanced age, he still is actively at work on these investigations, with the full support of the Soviet government.

The press devoted much space to his work and the government loaded him with honors. In his laboratory in Kaluga the old inventor is busy perfecting two of his life-long interests: an all-metal dirigible and a rocket for investigating interplanetary space.

Long before the Wright brothers announced their ideas, Tsiolkovsky had published a theoretical article urging the possibility of the airplane, with detailed mathematical calculations which since then have been confirmed.

Only the backwardness of the Czarist government, it is said now, robbed Tsiolkovsky of the credit which should have been his. He not only received no assistance, but was hindered in his work.

Tsiolkovsky's model of an all-metal dirigible has been adjudged practicable and the airship will be built in the near future, it was announced on the occasion of his birthday.

It may serve as a comfort to us in all our calamities and afflictions that he that loses anything and gets wisdom by it is a gainer by the loss.—L'Estrange.

PRESENTATION

On Friday evening last, a very enjoyable time was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Casselman, Rowena, when about one hundred friends and neighbours gathered at their home in honor of their daughter, Addie, whose marriage took place last Saturday. The evening was spent in music and games and social intercourse. About midnight, the bridal couple were called to the floor, and the following address read by Miss Helen Smyth:

Dear Addie:

It becomes my pleasant duty, in behalf of your friends and neighbours assembled here tonight in view of the fact that you are about to become separated from your friends here, and to make new friends in your new home, to express our regret at your removal from our midst and our best wishes for your future happiness in your new life. You will be sadly missed in your home, Sunday school and church work, but we are consoled with the fact that what is our loss is another's gain.

We ask you to accept these gifts, not for their material value, but as an expression of our regard, with every best wish for your and Mr. Henry's future happiness.

Signed on behalf of your friends.

Mrs Henry responded in a few well-chosen words, and thanked her friends for their lovely and useful gifts, their attendance and also their best wishes, and invited them all to come and see her in the future.

Before dispersing, all joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows".

GEORGIAN VISITS MIRACLE MAN

(The Dalton Journal)

(By Martha Lin Manly)

Acting on that proverbial and time-honored theory that "seeing is believing," Mrs. J.A. Crawford, postmistress at Dalton, Ga., stepped into her automobile recently and set out to call on Dr. M.W. Locke, at his home in Williamsburg, Canada. With her grandson as driver, and several friends as companions, she drove 1,300 miles to see for herself what truth was to be found in the miraculous and alluring tales which have spread abroad of the cures for rheumatism, neuritis, arthritis and such ailments, effected by Dr. Locke through his singular method of treating the feet.

Mrs. Crawford read in a recent magazine a feature article about this "miracle man," as he is called by most of his patients. Although Dr. Locke is decidedly opposed to any such title, he carries on one of the largest private medical practises in the world. Mrs. Crawford thought that this treatment might be of help to her, and she discussed the matter with her two sons, Louis Crawford, United States marshal, and Will Crawford, both of Atlanta.

The sons were a bit skeptical, doubting if the visit to the doctor would be worth the money and trouble of such a long trip. Undaunted, Mrs. Crawford recalled the amount of money she had already spent, and apparently without avail, in travelling to various places noted for the cure of rheumatism. She thought of the upstairs rooms in her own lovely home, which stands on one of Dalton's prettiest residential streets, rooms that she had not visited since last March because a view of them was not worth the effort and pain caused by going up and down stairs! She thought of the long days and nights of the past summer that she had spent flat on her back in bed.

Thinking of all this, she was determined to go to Williamsburg, knowing that she had nothing to lose and everything to gain. She and her party arrived in the little village, early one Friday morning.

"My heart sank," Mrs. Crawford said, "when I saw the lines of cars extending in every direction down the village streets, and the hundreds of people waiting around Dr. Locke's house. There were cars of every kind and description," she continued, "from limousines with waiting maids and chauffeurs, to the most dilapidated of T-model Fords."

Dr. Locke works in the open, holding his clinic in his own front yard, the grass and flowers of which have long since been banished by the trampling feet of the thousands who have come seeking relief from suffering. While the other members of the party went in search of lodging accommodations which they finally found in a pleasant farmhouse four miles in the country, Mrs Crawford waited her turn to see the doctor. It finally came and she took her place in one of the fifteen chairs which encircle the revolving chair in which Dr. Locke sits in the center. As he turns from one patient to the next, shoes are quickly removed and feet outstretched and placed on the doctor's knee. After a moment's swift and expert examination, this unique doctor gives each foot that peculiar twist which seems to "do the work".

"I could feel bones crushing and cracking," Mrs. Crawford said, "and my feet felt like they were being pricked with pins for a while.

"The treatments are given in three stages," she continued. "From this circle of fifteen chairs, where sometimes as many as seventy-five patients were waiting in line behind each chair, I was told to go to the barn, and it must have really been the barn, too, by its looks. Here I had to lie down on a couch and have both feet jerked back over my head. I knew when they did that it would either kill or cure," she added.

The third stage followed immediately, when the patient was seated on a low chair, and told to lock her hands behind her neck, while her elbows were bent mercilessly backward. Then another young lady attendant took her seat unceremoniously in Mrs. Crawford's lap, as ballast, so to speak, while the patient was bent backwards to the floor.

That was all. Those three brief treatments, twice a day, and for the six the price is $1. Nobody gives any more than that. It is said that Dr. Locke once refused a check for $10,000. The poor who can't afford even a dollar are treated without charge. And as you give the doctor your dollar in the morning, he stuffs it in his pocket and remembers when you come again in the afternoon that you have paid your assessment. There are no secretaries, no bookkeeping.

As for the doctor himself, he is rather reserved and shy and unpretentious. He does not claim to be any miracle man—simply a doctor applying his theories that lots of ailments, like arthritis, are caused by faults of the feet. He received his training in Canada and in Scotland, taking his M.D. from an Edinburgh university. He has a pleasant smile, and though everything with him is strictly business as treating fifteen persons in five minutes' time would necessitate, he does take time to reply to some remarks, as was evidenced by one short conversation which Mrs. Crawford overheard. To the rather caustic comments of a woman in reference to certain conditions in Williamsburg which did not suit her, Dr. Locke replied: "Madam, we did not send for you and are not keeping you."

In explaining the theory on which his treatments are based, Dr. Locke said that rheumatism, neuritis, arthritis and sciatica can frequently be traced back to flu, or severe colds. The colds weaken the entire body, with the result that the patient, in walking, may displace some of the bones in the feet—in other words, suffer from fallen arches.

The strain in the feet tends to throw the entire body off balance, and the pain consumes nervous and muscular energy, so the body loses some of its power to throw off poisons and combat disease. Dr. Locke believes that by correcting the feet he can remove the cause of the strain, so the body will regain sufficient strength to correct other ailments.

But Dr. Locke does not spend all his time twisting the toes of visitors. He is a true country doctor, whose first consideration is the welfare of his regular patients. It is said that he charges a set price of 25 cents a visit, and when his telephone rings, he is likely to leave a hundred cash customers waiting while he drives away to attend the ailments of a neighbor. The villagers claim that he has never lost a mother or child.

But to return to our patient. As we said, she arrived in the little Canadian town on Friday, very early in the morning. After Saturday afternoon's treatment, she says, she felt no pain at all. On Sunday she drove with her friends to Ottawa, where she visited the lovely parliament buildings and other places of interest, going up and down steps as if she'd never heard of such a thing as rheumatic twinges, which had made getting up and down out of a chair, even, a terrible ordeal for the past eight months!

Mrs. Crawford remained at Dr. Locke's for nine treatments. After the last, he told her to go over to the store and have "cookies" put in her shoes.

Laughingly, Mrs. Crawford said: "I thought to myself, well, if I have to take nourishment through my feet, too, this IS a doctor!"

The cookies, however, turned out to be little braces, fastened inside her own shoes, with another little contraption sewed inside the sole. Special shoes are sold there, too, to those advised to get them, though they are not required for all who are treated at this unusual clinic.

Mrs. Crawford spoke of the people she saw—the terribly crippled and pathetic ones who waited patiently with hope shining in their eyes; of those who pushed ahead, unwilling to wait their turn; people of every type and from all classes. The one thing that impressed her most about this mixed crowd was its friendliness—the individuals of which it was composed being drawn together by a common bond.

Whatever the explanation of Dr. Locke's treatments, Dalton's popular postmistress knows that her 1300-mile journey was not in vain. She suffered terribly before she went to Williamsburg, and now she is home, going where she pleases and doing all those things a busy day's work requires.

Marveling, herself, at the change in her state of health, Mrs. Crawford said: "Maybe I saw others in so much worse condition than my own, that I've just forgotten how bad I felt." But be that as it may, she can now walk up and down the stairs of her home with ease.

Another Miniature Coach Building Competition

"I want to see the educational people and the industrial people of Canada come closer together, and the Fisher Body Guild for young craftsmen is a step in that direction. I think it is a wonderful thing to encourage our boys to work with their fingers, and I am going to urge the 60,000 members of our Scout organization to take a bigger part next year."

This statement is from Mr. John A. Stiles, Chief Executive Commissioner of the Boy Scout Association of Canada, and indicates that our organization will be more deeply concerned with the Fisher Body Guild activity during this 1932-33 program.

Last year Lone Scouts took a keen interest in the Fisher Body Guild, but possibly due to the late start made by many of the members, none was fortunate enough to appear among prize winners who earned valuable awards and enjoyed a wonderful trip from all parts of the Dominion to Toronto and Detroit to attend the Guild's Annual Banquet.

We are all interested in learning that the Guild awards have been increased from $75,000 to $85,000 for the coming competition, and what is more important, two 4-year university scholarships, valued at $5,000 each, have been set aside for the two best boy craftsmen in Canada. This is a rare opportunity for young Canadians and should appeal to every Lone Scout. The building of a miniature model Napoleonic Coach may mean for you a life-time career.

The second Annual Competition is now on. Enrollments made be made through the Boy Scout Association; through local sponsoring newspapers, or through any General Motors dealer. Undoubtedly there will be many Lone Scouts who will want to enroll in the Guild. It is certain they will find it a very precious privilege and a stirring experience. Its inevitable effect will be to make them better boys—better Scouts—better men.

B.-P. to Retire When 115 Years

Lord Baden-Powell has finally announced the date of his retirement from the leadership of the Boy Scouts. He will retire when 115 years old. Today he is 'just a lad of 74.' The statement was made when twitting Sir Edward Elles for quitting at 85.

A Wooden Shoe Trophy

A Dutch wooden shoe was the trophy awarded the 4th Winnipeg "A" Rover Scout team as winners of a 24-hour hike contest. Ten teams participated, including a Sea Scout team from Fargo, North Dakota.

Swimming Pool Built by Scouts

A Scout Troop of Warlingham, Surrey, built and are now operating a well patronized public swimming pool. It is 66 feet by 30 feet, and the excavating and concrete work took the boys three years.

A "Flag Incident," Scout Style

The drawing aside of a Union Jack by an American Scout and the Stars and Stripes by a Canadian Scout unveiled a memorial cairn at the opening of the International Peace Garden on the Manitoba-North Dakota border.

Scouting Would Ensure Peace

"If every man were a Boy Scout there would be no need for international peace conferences," said Mr. Justice J. B. M. Baxter, former Premier of New Brunswick, in a radio broadcast in connection with Saint John's big Scout Apple Day.

Boy Scouts in Other Lands

There are 5,127 Boy Scouts in Burma, 143 in Uorth Borneo, 821 in British Guiana, 5,885 in Ceylon, 2,197 on the Gold Coast, 7,700 in Malaya, 2,658 in Nigeria, 983 in the Sudan, 1,649 in Uganda.

What Are Lone Scouts?

A Boy Scout in his smart uniform has become a universal figure, and stands for smartness, alertness and readiness to cope with emergencies and to help others whenever he can.

He is well known and all intelligent people are ready to assist him whenever possible. Many prominent business men believe that the training which a boy receives as a Scout fits him more adequately for the later life in business or elsewhere.

But What is a Lone Scout?

A "Lonie' is a Scout who, not being able to join a regularly organized troop of Scouts, has nevertheless been inspired with the desire to make himself a better "all round' boy, ready, when he grows up, to make the most of his opportunities, and therefore he has decided to be a Scout even though there is not a Troop in his neighborhood.

Thus, he has joined the Lone Scout Department of the Boy Scouts Association. His task is a little harder, perhaps, as he must work and study all alone in many cases, but he finds many things to interest him, and most Lonies vote it as "lots of fun."

There are Lone Scouts in all parts of the world, but in Ontario they have been organized into four Troops. Troop No. 1 looks after Western Ontario, and is presided over by Scoutmaster Jack Lawton, of London, Ont.

Troop No. 2 takes care of the centre of the province, and is in charge of Scoutmaster Don Hutchison, of Toronto. Troop No 3, under Scoutmaster George Emery, of Toronto, looks after the Lonies in the Eastern Counties, whilst in the Northern territory we have Troop No 4, under Scoutmaster T. Albert Gray, of North Bay.

At Headquarters in Toronto, where the Lone Scout Department is located at 330 Bay Street, we find Commissioner Capt. John Furminger, M.C., who is ably assisted by Mr. Art Paddon of the Headquarters Staff.

The Lonies are in constant touch with their Scoutmasters, who do all in their power to assist and advise them in their Scout Programmes, and once each month an interesting little paper is published and issued to all Ontario Lone Scouts from Headquarters. It is called 'On Lone Scout Trails."

Boys between 12 and 18 years of age living on farms and in small villages, etc., are eligible to become Lone Scouts, if they cannot belong to a regular Scout Troop. There are many things to learn, and lots of new friends to make, and with it all there is a great deal of fun.

Why don't you become a Lone Scout? A note to Headquarters at Toronto will bring you all particulars without any obligation. Don't put it off, but write to-day.

More beautiful than ever in widow's weeds, Jean Harlow is shown here as she appeared in court at Los Angeles during probate proceedings of her husband's will.

Women

You women are so kind, and in your kindness have such wise perception; you know so well how to be affectionate and full of solicitude without appearing to be; your gentleness of feeling is like your touch—so light and easy that the one enables you to deal with wounds of the mind as tenderly as the other enables you to deal with wounds of the body.—Charles Dickens.

Sunday School Lesson

November 13. Lesson VII—Making a Living—Amos 5. 11-15; Luke 19: 16-23. Golden Text—Not slothful in business.—Romans 12: 11.

ANALYSIS.

I. EXPLOITING PERSONALITY, Amos 5: 11-15.

II. DEVELOPING PERSONALITY, Luke 19: 11-26.

INTRODUCTION—After many years humiliation at the hands of her enemies, Israel began to recover. Under Jehoash (2 Kings 13: 14-25), and still more under Jeroboam (2 Kings 14: 23-29), her fortunes rose to great heights. During this era of peace and expansion the upper classes became increasingly wealthy, careless and luxurious, Amos 2: 6-8. The downtrodden lower classes became increasingly poor. Meanwhile external religion flourished. The sanctuaries were crowded. The people were self-satisfied and proud. They congratulated themselves that it was to them God had said, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth," Amos 3: 2.

I. EXPLOITING PERSONALITY, Amos 5: 11-15.

Into the midst of this godless society, the herdsman and vine-dresser of Tekoa hurled his denunciation. Driven away by the indignant priest at Bethel, Amos committed his message to writing.

He could never be accused of indulging in that safe but futile preaching which deals with general principles without making the obvious applications; or with vague denunciations of sins which touch no one. He was in earnest and courageous, therefore definite and practical. The rich (v. 11) were wealthy landowners. They made their money by excessive rentals. Over against the splendor of their ivory-adorned stone houses rose the dark shadow of poverty, made even darker by their heartless oppression. God had planned that these people should be "brothers all," but a relatively small group of the strong, aggressive members of the family had exploited the vast majority of their brethren for their own gain. This method of making a living, so characteristic of our own day is the "apex of atheism." The rotten social structure of Israel, unheeding the prophetic warnings, fell. What about our own, already tottering?

II. DEVELOPING PERSONALITY, Luke 19: 11-26.

Jesus, discovering that his hearers (v. 11) were still expecting an earthly kingdom to be set up immediately, told this parable in order to stimulate their activity and faithfulness. Behind it as an historical occurrence. On the death of Herod the Great, his son, Archelaus, went to Rome to secure his on appointment as successor. At the same time the citizens of Jerusalem sent a strong delegation to oppose him (vs. 12, 14), but they were unsuccessful, v. 15.

Life, Jesus says, deals fairly with every man. While some have greater advantages than others, yet, in the most important sense, all are born with an equal chance. "To each man he gave a pound," v. 13. "I had no opportunity," some one cries out, poor, ill, suffering from some handicap. "Nonsense," replies conscience. "You had an equal chance with your more richly-endowed neighbor—the chance to do your best with the gifts you had. He had no more." The world measures you by the rung of the ladder on which it finds you. God, your own conscience, considers how far it was you climbed.

The man who gained ten pounds (v. 16) is the one who used his opportunities to the full. Note the praise, "because thou hast been faithful."

The five-pound man (v. 18) made a showing with his life that the world may well have applauded. But his own conscience told him that he could have done twice as well had he really put himself into his work. He did not have the joy and satisfaction that come from the knowledge that a man has done his best. The praise of v. 17 is missing.

The man who was afraid to trust his money even to the bank (v. 20) represents the great number of people, endowed with gifts of hand, heart and brain who make no use of them. They know that life's law is "use or loss" (vs. 21, 22) yet they refuse to develop their possibilities. Failure to do so brings, not an arbitrary loss, but an inevitable loss. The muscle unused becomes eventually impotent, the brain unused deteriorates, the soul unfed dies.

It was the Master's intention that these men, each in his own place in life, should develop all his powers. It is our Father's will that the world's business should be carried on so that men may grow to a full, well-rounded out life.

An economic system based on the profit motive prevents that. It is estimated that only one-third of the population in our highly-industrialized countries are comfortably above the poverty line. A Christian social order will so distribute the rewards of labor that every man who does his best will become all that God intended.

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

It's time to be considering some of the smart swagger type sheer woolen dresses for early fall.

Today's pattern is a particularly chic little affair. It's so youthfully becoming.

It can also be carried out in crepe satin, rough crinkled crepe silk and dull silk crepe, so exceedingly modish.

Style No. 3081 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38 and 40 inches bust. Size 16 requires 3 yards of 39 inch material with 1½ yards of 35-inch contrasting.

It's an excellent type for the school girl and college miss carried out in wine-red tweed mixture.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS.

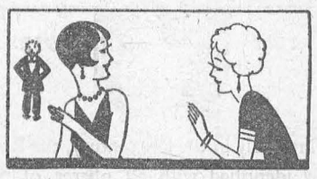
Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 15c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Spain Welcomes Help of Foreigners, Club Told

Madrid.—Miguel Maura, former Minister of Interior, told the American Club that republican Spain "welcomes foreign capital and technical direction of its reconstruction programs."

"Spaniards are still deeply steeped in tradition and legend and do not understand huge co-operative enterprises,' Deputy Maura explained. He said there would be no possible mutual loss involved in commercial and cultural interchange between the old and new countries.

Robert Pell, representing the American Embarry in Paris at the World Telegraph and Communications Congress here, urged the co-operation of American colonies in foreign capitals in spreading the doctrine of a free, uncensored press as against the government-control theory.



"What is your husband's religion?"

"Golf, I guess. It's the only thing he does on Sunday."

E.B.—What kind of soil is best adapted for barley? Would you lime the land for this crop? What about fertilizers for barley? I have a light silt loam field and have a clay field about the same size. Which would be best to use?

Answer.—Answering the last part of your question first it is generally claimed that lighter soils grow a better quality of barley for malting than do heavy soils. Heavy soils, however, have given the largest yield per acre in the co-operative tests which the Department of Chemistry, O.A.C., has conducted throughout the province during the last four years. In the last analysis, the yield of barley depends upon the physical condition of the soil and its supply of plantfood. In my opinion, the field you would choose would depend largely upon your object in growing barley. If you hope to sell it for malting purposes indications are that the light field would probably produce the better quality stock; if for feed, the clay field would be the preferable one.

It is not likely that the soil will need lime in order to prepare it for the growth of barley. However, if on testing your soil you find that it is acid in reaction, and if you wish to sow alfalfa or clover mixture with barley as a nurse crop, it would be well to apply the amount of lime that the test indicates desirable in order to have the reaction correct for the growth of legumes.

In our fertilizer tests with barley, largest yields were obtained from 375 lbs. per acre of 2-16-6. This gave 34.8 bushels weighing 42.7 lbs. per bushel. 0-12-10 gave 34.1 bushels weighing 44.2 lbs. per bushel, against no fertilizer which yielded 25.1 bushels weighing 42.7 lbs. per bushel. From these results you will see that the 2-16-6 made a gain of 9.7 bushels per acre and the 0-12-10 a gain of 9 bushels per acre, but the 0-12-10 increased the weight per bushel, 1½lbs.

We find that all fertilizers are best applied through the fertilizer compartment of the combined grain and fertilizer drill. This works the plantfood in at a depth where it may be readily used by the crop.

M.F.—I am thinking of growing three acres of onions next year. The piece I figure on using is a little lower than the rest of the farm; is well drained. There are patches of black soil throughout but the main part of the field is medium gravelly loam. What shall I do to have it in best shape?

Answer.—I assume that the ground is already plowed. This will give it a good chance to break down and come into shape where you can readily produce a deep, mellow seed bed. You do not speak of what rotation you follow, nor as to whether or not you have applied manure to this soil. If you have a supply of fairly well-rotted manure, I believe it would be well to apply from 5 to 10 loads per acre next spring as soon as the soil is sufficiently dry, and work it thoroughly into the soil as you disk and harrow it. The type of soil you mention should be quite favorable for the growth of onions.

In recent co-operative tests on soils of this description, best results have been obtained from the use of 1000 lbs. per acre of 4-8-10 fertilizer. This should be either sown on top of the seed bed or better, applied with the grain drill in the same way that you would apply it for wheat. After the application of the fertilizer the soil should be thoroughly harrowed so as to mix the plantfood with it. From this point proceed as usual with the handling of the crop.

Give the New Flock a Chance

Before the new flock of pullets of laying age go into the permanent houses be sure that the houses are clean, well drained and well ventilated. The birds should be examined for evidence of parasitism, and should such be found, treatment should be given before they go into the permanent laying house. Those poultry owners that neglect to do this will pay the penalty in poor condition of birds, death losses and decreased egg production. Treating to remove the parasites after laying has started may mean a check in egg production, so this work should be done early. Light birds with dull plumage, lameness, blindness and diarrhoea are some of the symptoms of worm infestation. See bulletin 363, Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Truck Highway For Italy

Rome.—Work has been started on the great motor-truck road which is to connect Genoa, Milan and Turin. This highway differs from the other highways which have been built in considerable numbers in Italy, as it is intended, primarily, for motor trucks.

The new road will enclose the most intensely industrial area in Italy, connecting it with the port of Genoa. It is therefore expected to give considerable impulse to industrial activities in Northern Italy.

The government has appropriated 32,000,000 lire (more than $1,500,000) for the work this year. The undertaking is expected to cost about $25,000,000.

Royal Furnishings Sold To Save Palace Upkeep

Munich.—Days of pomp and grandeur were recalled when the contents of a royal palace here were auctioned because the upkeep involved a $20,000 annual outlay in local taxes alone.

The heirs of Prince and Princess Leopold of Bavaria sold out rather than risk further deficits in the family budget.

Princess Leopold, formerly Archduchess Gisela of Austria, was the Emperor Franz Joseph's eldest daughter.

Chinese Seek Deportation

Mexico City.—Wholesale expulsion of Chinese and other Orientals from northwestern Mexico has caused a new problem on the United States border which may result in international complications. Many of the Chinese cross the border clandestinely, but with the hope of falling into the hands of United States immigration authorities and thus obtain free transportation to the coast and passage to China as undesirable aliens.

First Overhead—"That's nothing I had two vice presidents and a sales manager removed at one time, and that was only a month after I had lost eight of my clerks and half a dozen stenographers."

Second Overhead—"You don't say! Well, I have been on the table three times during the last year. The doctor made pretty deep incisions every time, too. They say that I may have to have another operation soon; there is a swollen condition in one department that ought to be reduced."

First Overhead—"Isn't it sickening Now when I had three of my salesmen taken out, I thought I'd never get over it, but I feel fine now. It is a dreadful nuisance, but I guess it's all for the best."

Second Overhead—"I suppose so. Did I ever tell you about the time they cut off my branch office?"

The Doctor—"When Adam's side was opened to take out a rib to make a woman—that was the first surgical operation."

The Architect—"Yes, but when the earth was made of chaos, before Adam's time, there had to be building plans—and an architect had to make them."

The Bolshevist—"You are right, but who supplied the chaos?"

Backfire

One thing you can say about a bicycle is that you don't have to crank it. The thing rarely backfires. The biggest money problem confronting women these days is how to extract it from their husbands. Another good mental test is to figure out what becomes of the money you save since living costs became cheaper.

Judge—"How did you come to cause all this disturbance?"

Woman on Trial—"Well, it was like this. John and I were sitting at the fire. John was reading his newspaper and I was thinking. Then I turned to him and said: 'John, sheep are awful stupid, aren't they?' And John said: 'Yes, my lamb'."

Bride—"I tried a cooking idea of my own, and my husband said I'd better try it on the dog first. Wasn't that cruel?"

Friend—"Very! And I thought your husband was very fond of dogs."

Inland Village

This is their world; this portion of the earth
Means much to them—nay, do not mock nor jeer;
This spot has held the things to them most dear;
Their earliest dreams, their sorrows and their mirth.
Who enters it must never count the worth
Of homes in terms of gold, lest he appear
As one whose heart is sadly out of gear—
Who holds no reverence for their place of birth.

Evenings come gently, housewives turn to light
Their lamps and spread the table's simple fare;
Then comes the friendly clicking of a gate
That marks the day's soft blending with the night,
And all the little houses seem to wear
A peace unknown to mansions of the great.

"John and Mary and Tommy," a book of verse for children by Lady Eleanor McLaren Brown, and which is just being brought out in this country, will deservedly attain and hold a very distinct place for itself in the affection of Canadian children of all ages from coast to coast. The book is published in Canada by the Oxford University Press, Toronto.

The book is the story of John, age eight, Mary, almost six, and Tommy, two; three Canadian children, and how they spent a summer holiday in England. The voyage across the broad Atlantic, the delights and wonders of London, and the gallant adventures enjoyed during a month's stay by the sea at Hove, are all described in delightful verse written in easy story form.

Eleanor McLaren Brown, authoress of this entertaining new work is Lady McLaren Brown, the brilliant wife of Sir George McLaren Brown, European General Manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and the book, apart from its lively message to children everywhere is a further feature of the patriotic and imperial work Lady McLaren Brown is continually engaged in towards the closer and kindlier relationships of Canada with the Motherland. The illustration shows the authoress and a few of the sixty delightful drawings by that admirable artist, P. A. Staynes.

Apple Maggot Reduces Export of N. B. Crop

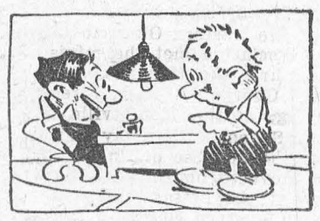
Saint John—Eighty-five per cent. of that portion of this year's New Brunswick apple crop which would normally be available for export, will be unable to gain entrance to the British market because of the wide prevalence of apple maggot in the orchards of this province.

A statement to this effect was made last week by W. W. Hubbard, of Burton, N.B., president of the New Brunswick Fruit Growers' Association and also president of the recently formed New Brunswick Orchards Limited, a co-operative marketing body.

Between 7,000 and 8,000 barrels will be affected. "The situation is decidedly serious" Mr. Hubbard said, "and is particularly to be regretted in view of the fact that this year, owing to organization and proper grading and packing facilities, New Brunswick growers were on the threshold of establishing a valuable export business."

While there is a complete embargo in effect against United States apples until November 15, a special arrangement exists between Canada and Great Britain by which Canada may export from certified maggot-free orchards.

"I believe that immediate steps should be taken by our Provincial Government to deal with this matter," Mr. Hubbard said. "In my opinion the growers will do everything possible to carry out any regulations imposed."



"Have you been studying the science of efficiency?"

"Yes. I had to quit reading about it. Got so interested that I found it was interfering with my regular work."

GIRL OF 20 WHO WEIGHED 196 LBS.

Tells How She Took 50 lbs. Off

AND IMPROVED HER COMPLEXION

Are you the young lady of whom people are remarking, "How she is filling out!"? (That's a good-natured way of saying "getting fat.") If fat is slyly and stealthily distorting your youthful figure, you should grapple with it at once. At 20 years of age this girl was in its toils. Read how she unburdened her young body of 50 superfluous pounds.

"About 12 months ago I was considerably overweight, being on the small side and weighing nearly 196 lbs. at 20 years of age. I was also troubled with headaches and pains in the small of my back; heaviness on rising, with a very poor complexion which broke out in spots every so often. Since taking Kruschen Salts all these conditions have disappeared. I have now gone down to normal weight, being 146 lbs., have a lovely complexion, and rise in the morning with no heaviness whatever."—(Miss) H.P.

The formula of Kruschen represents the residual salts of those famous European Spas whose waters have been taken from time immemorial for excess fat. These salts ensure a perfectly natural clearance of undigested food substances and all excessive watery waste matter. When this wastage is allowed to accumulate, the body's chemistry is liable to store it up out of the way in the form of fatty tissue. Once Kruschen gets into your blood, disfiguring fat commences to melt away from your ankles and calves; your double chin commences to vanish, hips become slender; you won't lose 4 or 5 lbs. a day or anything foolish like that, but almost before you realize it pound by pound disappears—until you finally have the fashionable figure you have always desired.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

Horse Loses Battle in Chile

Santiago, Chile.—The "back to the horse" movement in Chile has met with a reverse. Replying to a petition from the Horse Cab Association, which dreams of a comeback now that motor buses are being driven from the streets by lack of gasoline and the high price of accessories, the Mayor of Santiaga declared that he could not permit the establishment of a horse-bus line between the centre of the city and the suburb of Quinta Normal.

This was a reversal of the policy of the municipality which recently stored 230 modern American garbage trucks and substituted horsedrawn vehicles, thus increasing employment and helping to reduce the country's gasoline bill.

At present the Central Bank holds so few drafts on foreign countries that it has been forced to touch its greatly diminished gold reserves to import gasoline, which is still being sold at normal prices, in order to pacify taxi-buses now survive in Santiago out of a total of 1,200 existing two years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. F.J. Barlow and sons, George and Frederick, of the "George Frederick" tourist home, returned Wednesday from a delightful visit through the New England States. The party, during their visit, met a number of acquaintances, who during their travels in Canada had made their homes at the "George Frederick." Mr. Barlow speaks very highly of the hospitality extended to him by his American friends, and of the beautiful homes they occupied.

Do you know where and how to turn the water off in your home, and how to drain the plumbing system? If not, we'll gladly show you. If you go away and leave your home unoccupied for a few days, without taking the necessary precautions, a "freeze-up" will prove an expensively bitter lesson.—S.E. ERRETT, Phone 218, Morrisburg.

Winter is a hard time on your plumbing and heating systems, and a time when repairs are most inconvenient. Before a severe season arrives, be certain your systems are in first class shape.—S.E. Errett. Phone 218, Morrisburg.

Cornwall tells of how a local woman was called upon by a "mother in distress" who had three children half clothed and no food in the house. The good woman told her caller to sit down and she would gather some clothing and food for her. During her temporary absence, the caller searched the pockets of every garment in the hall and closet, and departed not only with her gifts but with what she stole. The theft was discovered some time later, the woman arrested and the goods recovered.

Found to be unfit to stand trial on a charge of murder, arising out of the death at Brockville on April 23 last, of her ten-days-old daughter, Flora Lentz of Prescott, was committed on Tuesday at the Brockville Assizes to the custody of the Lieutenant-Governor, involving her transfer to a mental institution. Dr. J.S. Stewart of the Ontario Hospital at Orillia, and Dr. G.W. Kells of the Provincial institution at Brockville, both of whom had examined Miss Lentz, testified that she had the mentality of a child of 8 or 9 years of age. The jury brought in a verdict that she was unfit to stand trial.

The National Anthem must be played at the close of each performance in all theatres of the Province, an edict issued at Queen's Park on Wednesday declares. Officials have found in many instances that "God Save the King" was being played at the beginning of the show and not at the end, as the Theatres and Cinematographs Act demands. Recently, in a theatre in Windsor, officers discovered that the National Anthem was being played at noon, and not again during or at the end of the show. The manager contended that it was his right to have the Anthem played before the performance began. Shown the act, he was surprised to learn the law gave no alternative than to have the Anthem played to conclude the performance. Queen's Park officials will now rigidly enforce the statute.

FOURTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMISTICE

National Remembrance Day Services under the auspices of the local branch of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League, were held at the Monument at 10 o'clock this morning. In addition to a large number of returned men, the M.C.I. Cadets marched in a body. The services were conducted by Rev. Jenkins Burkholder and Rev. A.M. Russell. At the conclusion of the services, several wreaths were placed at the foot of the Monument.

It is now definitely announced that Morrisburg is to have a talking picture theatre. It will be located in the premises formerly known as the Star Theatre, on Main Street, the building having been renovated to meet the requirements of the Government at a large cost. If the attendance warrants, it is the intention of the management to extend the building at the rear to make room for several more seats. It is expected that the new Theatre will be in operation in about a month, at which time the management will announce its opening date.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Eastern Ontatrio Dairymen's Association met the minister of agriculture, the Hon. T.L. Kennedy, and George H. Barr, director of dairying, at the Kemptville Agricultural School Thursday afternoon, for the purpose of finding out the best move to obtain government help toward the betterment of this industry in Eastern Ontario. It was finally decided that more could be accomplished by the placing of a proven sire in each cheese factory center by means of bonusing all factors interested. The meeting adjourned to be summoned upon the receipt of more information. The annual meeting of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association will be held in Perth on January 4 and 5.

M. C. I. COMMENCEMENT

In the Assembly Hall of the Morrisburg Collegiate Institute, the annual commencement will be held on Thursday and Friday evenings, November 17 and 18, at 8.15 p.m. In addition to folk dances, school choruses, athletic stunts and the presentation of graduation diplomas, a three-act play entitled "Come Out of the Kitchen," is being presented by a student caste. The scene of the play is Virginia. The typical southern Daingerfield family are beset by financial difficulties, and the ingenious Daingerfield children's attempt to solve their problem by renting their home to a northern millionaire creates a situation wherein romance and humor are combined. Musical selections will be rendered by the Collegiate orchestra. Admission 50 cents.

LET FAIR PLAY PREVAIL

(Cobourg World, 6th Oct., 1932)

After reading over the pamphlet published by the Catholic Taxpayers' Association of Ontario, on the Separate School situation in this province, there seems to be little doubt but that the arguments put forth are sound and reasonable. The wonder to our mind is that Catholic ratepayers have waited so long in making any real effort to acquaint the public with actual facts as they exist to-day, and have existed for over half a century.

It seems that practically every dollar of school taxes from Corporations and Public Utilities are paid to the Public School Treasuries, the only exception being in the case of the former, where the directors have taken the trouble to ascertain the religious belief of their shareholders, a practical impossibility in most instances, and then decide to avail themselves of a "permissive" clause in the Act, which enables them to pay some proportion to the Separate School Treasury. The result is that practically no taxes are allowed to be given by Public Corporations to the Separate Schools, and none at all from Public Utilities, even though the Separate Schools are educating a large percentage of the school children of the Province. In fact it may truthfully be said that the Separate School System is a branch of the Public School System, the only difference is that the Catholic religion is taught in the Separate Schools, while little, if any, religion of any kind is taught in the Public Schools, otherwise the course of study and regulations are exactly the same.

The pamphlet put out by the Catholic Ratepayers' Association claims that the taxes from neutral firms (stock companies, etc.) should be divided between the public and separate schools on a basis of the school populations of the municipality. This, to our mind, seems perfectly fair and just, providing the school populations to be used in determining the basis of the division of these taxes be that school population which the law of the province says must attend school—that is, all children attending the schools between the ages of eight and sixteen. The only taxes that this would affect would be that of companies and corporations. The taxes of private citizens would be handled in exactly the same way as it is to-day.

The law states that every child between the ages of eight and sixteen must attend school. The law should also insist that every child, whether Protestant or Catholic, receive the same financial assistance from the State. In the province of Quebec it does, in justice to the Protestant minority, and to the credit of the Catholic majority. Surely we, and especially those of us who are Protestant, do not want to allow it to be said that Catholic Quebec is more generous, broader-minded, and a greater lover of justice and fair-play than Protestant Ontario!

Of course, if we were back in the middle of the Sixteenth Century, when conscientious Christians of both faiths seemed to believe that killing each other was the best way of carrying out Christ's command to love thy neighbour as thyself, it might be different. But this is the twentieth century, and surely we have advanced a little out of the mire of hateful prejudice. Let us at least be as big as Quebec in respecting the rights and privileges of the minority.
