Y. P. U. Training School Well Attended at Week End

First of Classes Held at Trinity United Church From Friday Evening To Sunday Evening's Service.

The young people of the Dundas-Grenville Presbytery Union held their first week-end Leadership Training School in Trinity United church, Chesterville, last week end. Over 50 young people met to enjoy the study, fellowship, and fun of this school. Among the unions represented were Merrickville, Actons Corners, Oxford Mills, Spencerville, Roebuck, Prescott, Ventnor, Shanly, Hallville, Reids Mills, Mountain, Winchester, Inkerman, Hulbert, Morrisburg and Chesterville.

Three courses in leadership training in young people's work were given. "Young People's Organization" was given by Mr. W. H. Scrivens, of Ottawa, convenor of Leadership Training for the Montreal-Ottawa Conference, Young People's Union; "Christian Citizenship" led by Rev. R. D. Smith, Morrisburg; "Christian Fellowship under the leadership of Rev. D. T. I. Forsyth, Montreal. The school was under the convenorship of Mr. J. Ralph Colquhoun, Morrisburg, Leadership Training Convenor of Dundas-Grenville Presbytery, Young People's Union.

The school opened at 8 o'clock Friday evening with an impressive worship service conducted by Arthur Hewitt, followed by words of welcome from Reeve W. H. Casselman, Harry Allison, and Rev. R. C. Tait. The chairman, J. R. Colquhoun, then introduced the group leaders, and a few minutes later the three groups entered their first study period.

On Saturday afternoon, the delegates enjoyed a visit to the Nestlé's Food plant. At 5.30 a supper was served in the church by the ladies of Chesterville. Following this the young people presented a most enjoyable half-hour musical programme which included several Irish numbers.

The Sunday morning service was in charge of Rev. R. D. Smith, who gave an excellent address on the Palm Sunday topic, "The Coronation of Christ." At the closing session of the school on Sunday evening, Rev D. T. I. Forsyth gave a most challenging message, "Young People in Action." He urged young people to take this business of being Christian seriously, to make it mean something, to do something about it. He said, "You must be willing to go the way of Him who said 'Follow me!' and went the whole way, even to the Cross." "

A choir composed of young people from the Chesterville group assisted with musical numbers under the leadership of P. G. Hewitt.

Mr. Scrivens brought the school to a close with an inspiring re-dedication service. At one part of this closing worship period an electrically lighted cross served as the only illumination for the auditorium, when Mrs. Allison Graham effectivey rendered the solo "Beneath the Cross of Jesus."

The challenge of the evening service, and indeed of the whole school, was voiced in the last verse of the final hymn:

"Lift high the Cross of Christ,
Tread where His feet have trod;
As brothers of the Son of Man,
Rise up, O men of God!"

The following entertained the young people from out of town:

Dr. A. B. Clayton—Phyliss Moffatt and Jennie Bruce, Actons Corners.

W. H. Casselman—Luella Allison, Winchester, and Georgie Cherry, Russell.

H. J. Fulton—Marjorie Young and Laura Hyndman, South Mountain.

REGULAR MEETING OF I.O.O.F.

Due to the heavy snow storm, the attendance at the regular meeting of the Chesterville Oddfellows' lodge was so small the intended exemplification of the initiatory degree was impossible. After a few more meetings, N.G. Bro. Geo. Gillard will have his degree team in such a shape that new members now waiting to be admitted will be able to receive their initation.

The regular business was attended to and a light lunch was served to assist the brethren present to wade through the deep snow on their way home.

The lodge meets the first and third Thursday of every month.

CARE OF FARM EQUIPMENT.

Agricultural implements and harnesses represent a capital investment of from $800 to $2,500 on many farms in Eastern Canada. To secure the greatest amount of service from this equipment, it is very important that it be kept in good state of repair. A little attention and a minimum annual expenditure will be found well worth while. As a rule, there is sufficient time available during the winter to examine all agricultural implements and put them in good order for the spring and summer operations. All temporary repairs should be gone over to make a good and lasting repair. Care should be taken to protect all equipment by liberal use of paint and oil for those parts that cannot be painted. On the Farnham Experimental Station the old oil removed from the tractor and automobile is kept and the parts that cannot be painted, such as ploughshares, harrow disks, and cultivator shovels are oiled. This layer of oil given with a brush is an excellent protection against rust.

Every winter an examination is made of the harness which is washed, oiled and finally greased. All broken unsewn parts are repaired. In this way the harness is in order when the spring work begins and there is no loss of time.

If this examination is made and the implements and harness repaired, it is surprising what little cost is entailed, and the impression will be given that new equipment had been purchased. During the rush periods of spring and summer it will be found handy to have the harness and implements in good order and ready to use.

OTTAWA VALLEY SEED FAIR.

There is every promise that the 10th Annual Ottawa Valley Seed Fair to be held April 1 to 3, 1937, inclusive, in the New Machinery Building, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, will be even more successful than any of its predecessors. Already many entries have been received by W. M. Croskery, Secretary-Manager, 295 Albert st., Ottawa, and the closing date for all entries is Wednesday, March 24. The prize money to be awarded will total $1,000.

On the afternoons of Thursday and Friday, April 1st and 2nd, a programme of lectures and demonstrations has been arranged, which will be of special interest to farmers. The speakers include George W. Muir, Dominion Animal Husbandman, whose subject will be "Home Grown Feeds;" George Knowles, the Field Husbandry Division, Central Experimental Farm, who will speak on "Weeds and Their Eradication," which will be illustrated with lantern slides. "Vegetable Seed Production" will be the subject of an address by T. F. Ritchie, Horticultural Division, C.E.F.; Dr. L. H. Newman, Dominion Cerealist, will speak on "Cereal Seed Production;" G. A. Scott, Botany Division on "Diseases in Relationship to Seed Production," and F. Dimmock, Forage Plants Division, on "Production of Soybeans."

From 4 to 5.30 on Friday afternoon the Animal Husbandry Division will parade the dairy cattle and horses at the Central Experimental Farm and arrange for the visitors to make a tour of the piggery and other buildings.

On Friday evening, April 2nd, the annual banquet will be held in the new William Saunders Building at the Farm at which Hon. James G. Gardiner, Dominion Minister of Agriculture will be the chief speaker.

On Saturday, April 3rd, all seed exhibited at the Fair will be sold by public auction in bulk lots according to grades and varieties.

TREAT YOUR SEED FOR SMUT CONTROL.

All grades and classes of wheat, oats and barley should be treated for the control of smut. This means registered seed as well as all other grades of seed. There can be no exception in the matter of treatment if smut is to be kept under control.

Seed time is almost with us again. Speaking of seed time reminds us it is necessary to make preparation to treat wheat, oats and barley seed for the control of smut.

There are several good materials on the market that, if properly used, will give good results. Whatever treatment is used, the results obtained will depend upon the thoroughness of the treatment. Thus the first important step is to learn exactly how the treatment should be applied and then follow exactly the method recommended. If instructions as to the proper method are not followed, it is a waste of time and material.

Formaldehyde is still popular with many farmers, but this material must be properly applied to give good results. Some of the methods of applying this treatment are absolutely useless. For example, the placing of a teaspoonful of formaldehyde in the top of a sack of grain, then turning the sack upside down, is a complete waste of material. About the only effect obtained is to weaken the germination of the few seeds which come into contact with the liquid. Upon exposure to the air, formaldehyde vaporizes into a gas. This gas is heavier than air, so that turning the sack upside down merely prevents the formaldehyde from coming in contact with the seed.

Copper carbonate and mercurial dusts are becoming quite widely used. These dust compounds give very satisfactory results when properly applied Copper carbonate gives best results with wheat, but is not so well suited for use with oats and barley. The mercurial dusts are suitable for the control of seed borne diseases in a wide range of seed, because they control a large number of seed borne diseases besides smut. For this reason they are to be recommended for use with crops of wheat, oats, barley, peas beans, etc. There is some evidence to indicate that the treatment of pea seed with mercurial dusts controls to some extent the development of certain diseases common to peas. The effect of the treatment apparently results in some increase in the number of plants that live through, and a reduction in the degree of disease that may be found in the crop. Where the control measure is effective, increased yields occur.

NOTICE! NOTICE!

The Canadian Seed Growers' Association draws attention to a practise which is very misleading to the general public. In advertising, some growers and agencies refer to bulked unsealed seed from a registered crop as being registered seed. This is not correct and is very misleading to purchasers of seed. Seed is not registered unless it comes from a crop which has been registered by the C.S.G.A. and the seed is tagged and sealed in proper containers by the Dominion Seed Branch. Seed from a registered crop sold without being graded, tagged and sealed by the Dominion Seed Branch, is not registered seed, irrespective of whether it comes from a registered crop or not. Registered seed growers should make every effort to prevent the improper use of the term "registered seed."

The same applies to elite stock seed. It is not proper to call seed "elite stock" unless the crop has been covered by the C.S.G.A. with elite stock seed certificate and is tagged and sealed with the proper tags and seals provided for this purpose.

A tramp had been knocked down by a motor car. When he opened his eyes he heard a stern voice say: "Stand back, and give him air."

"Lumme, mister," he protested, "haven't they got nothing else? I've lived on that for a week."

—o—

He was endeavouring to impress the girl at his side. "I'm in the carpet trade," said he. "We manufacture them, you know."

"But," queried she, "is there much money in that?"

"Why," said he, "even in carpets there is a 'pile' to be made!"

A witness in a case started to pour out all he knew in a perfect torrent of words. The judge pulled him up, telling him he must first take the oath.

"Now," said the judge, "tell me what you have to say."

"Well," said the witness, "after the limitations you've placed on me, I guess I've nothing to say."

MRS. A. McNAIRN IS BURIED.

Young Man Succumbs After Month of Illness

Clarence A. Burnham, Gloversville, N.Y., Passed in His 24th Year.—Following Appendix Operation.

Death came suddenly to Clarence A. Burnham, of Gloversville, N.Y., Friday, March 12th, in his 24th year. He was stricken with a severe pain while in his home on February 14th, and as his condition became worse, Dr. McKillip was called. Later he was taken to the Nathan Littauer hospital at Gloversville where an operation was performed. It was found his appendix had ruptured, and later an abcess formed which also was removed.

Clarence A. Burnham was born at DeKalb Junction, N.Y., October 15th, 1913, the youngest son of the late C. R. Burnham and his wife, Ruth Mae Flight. He married October 7th, 1935, Mrs. W. Rose E. Curry, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Reddick, of New York City.

Left to mourn are his widow and one stepson, Charles M. Curry; seven sisters and one brother: Alice (Mrs. L. Denny), Heuvelton, N.Y.; Susanna (Mrs. H. Guay), Canton, N.Y.; Mildred (Mrs. A. Rivet), Massena, N.Y.; Sara (Mrs. C. A. Adams), Watertown, N.Y.; Margaret (Mrs. B. Erwin) Lisbon, N.Y.; Miss Mary Burnham, Lisbon, N.Y.; Grace (Mrs. C. Green), of Ogdensburg, N.Y., and Mr. Guy Burnham, of Watertown, N.Y., as well as several nieces and nephews. All sisters and the brother were present at the funeral.

The casket was covered with beautiful flowers, showing the high esteem in which he was held. There was a pillow from his wife and step-son; wreaths from his sisters and brother, from Mr. and Ms. C. M. Reddick, Mr. and Mr. P. B. Reddick, Amsterdam, N.Y.; sprays from Mrs. Alberta Newvine, New York City; Mr. and Mrs Blood, his employers, Mr. and Mrs. Briggs, Mr. and Mrs. Fredericks, and from his fellow workers at the Mapleholm Dairy and Poultry Farm where he did milk testing and pasteurizing, and the Broadalburn school where his stepson attended.

His spiritual needs were attended to by Rev. Mr. Schaertel, pastor of the Ev. Lutheran church at Gloversville, who visited him often during his illness. The funeral was from Rogers and Young Funeral Parlours, thence to Watertown, N.Y., where the remains were interred in family plot at Watertown cemetery.

The late Mr. Burnham was a quiet but very pleasant man, well beloved by all who knew him, and will be missed by his loved ones and fellow-works. Throughout his suffering he endured patiently and his ever-ready smile was much in evidence.

FINANCES IN BETTER LIGHT

IN the light of the Auditors' Report of the Village of Chesterville, the Financial Statement for 1936 fo the Village Council was unecessarily pessimistic and did not truly reflect the current financial position of the Village.

BELOW GROUND FLOOR.

WE note in the description of the new Toronto Stock Exchange building which will be opened in that city this week that there are two floors below the street level, which may possibly suggest to some buyers of new mining stocks that it does not mean much when they are assured they are getting in on the ground floor.

SPEED LIMIT GOES; AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE UP

WITH the Legislature about to eliminate speed limits on country roads, comes an announcement from the Canadian Underwriters' Association of an advance in the cost to the motorist in rural districts of the cost of coverage for property damage and collision coverage. Could there be a better argument for the retention of speed limts on all the province's roads?

A PROMISING SIGN.

AMONG the many farm auction sale bills turned out from this office in the past four or five years, there were very few which granted credit for several months to the buyers of stock and implements. Now we note an odd one coming along without the "Terms—Cash" stipulation on it, which to us is a more impressive sign that the depression is over and conditions are almost normal than any other feature.

For many years the joint-note given in settlement for purchases at farm auction sales was considered the very best of security and we can remember the Saturday Evening Post carrying a long story from the pen of Senator Beveridge extolling its virtue to the United States public before the turn of the century.

NERVE WRACKING ALSO FATAL.

WHEN a level crossing is spoken of as a dangerous place it usually means that it is dangerous for vehicular traffic, particularly for motor traffic in these days. Since pointing out the effective means of eliminating the white crossing west of Chesterville in a recent issue, several have dropped into this office to discuss the re-routing of the Ridge Road to the south side of the railway tracks and entry to the village by way of Queen street.

One lady said the deaths that have occurred at that crossing are always on her mind every time a train whistles for the crossing, not only by day but by night. When the whistling is more prolonged than usual or in any way out of the ordinary, she visualizes another fatality and has repeatedly urged her husband to go and make sure that all is well.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

- By -

MISS HELEN LACEY, B.H.Sc.

THERE IS MORE THAN ONE WAY TO COOK AN EGG.

EGGS ARE ONE of your most valuable foods. One egg gives as much power to work as half a glass of milk or an ounce of meat or a quarter of a pound of fish. When you eat an egg you are getting all the materials for building the body. Next to milk, eggs are the cheapest food we can buy and they can take the place of more costly foods, especially meat. When trying to cut down the food budget, save on meat, but not on milk or eggs.

SWISS EGGS.

2 tablespoons butter or other fat
½ to 1 cup grated cheese
1 cup cream or milk
Salt
Pepper
Mustard

Spread the bottom of a baking dish with fat. Sprinkle a layer of grated cheese over it and break the eggs on the cheese, being careful not to break the yolks. Pour the cream or milk over the eggs and sprinkle with the remainder of the cheese. Season with salt, pepper and a light sprinkling of mustard. Bake in a slow oven until the eggs are set. Serve at once in the baking dish.

SPINACH & POACHED EGG.

In this recipe either fresh or canned spinach may be used. Place two large tablespoons of the cooked spinach on a slice of toast and on this place a poached egg. Serve at once, seasoned with salt and pepper.

EGG TIMBALES.

6 eggs
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon grated cheese
1 teaspoon chopped parsley
Cayenne
2 cups milk

Beat eggs just enough to mix yolks and whites; add salt, cheese, parsley and cayenne. Mix well and add slowly, stirring thoroughly, the milk. Turn into greased moulds (gem pans or earthen or pyrex custard cups). Place in a pan of hot water and bake in a moderate oven until centres are firm. Unmold carefully and garnish with a spring of parsley.

SCRAMBLED EGGS with CHEESE.

½ cup cream or milk
8 eggs
1 tablespoon parsley
Salt
Pepper

Beat eggs slightly, add cheese, cream and seasonings. Pour into a well-buttered frying pan and cook slowly until cheese is melted, stirring frequently. Serve at once on buttered toast.

FOAMY OMELET.

4 eggs
½ teaspoon salt
Few grains pepper
4 tablespoons butter
2 teaspoons butter

Beat egg yolks; add seasonings and milk. Beat whites until stiff. Heat frying pan, put in butter, being careful to butter sides and bottom thoroughly. Cut and fold whites into the yolk mixture. Turn omelet into the hot pan, spread evenly, reduce heat. Cook slowly until omelet is set; place in a moderate oven to dry slightly on top. When done, remove from oven and with a spatula fold omelet over, sliding the spatula under the part of the omelet nearest the handle. Slide onto a plate; garnish with chopped parsley and serve at once.

HARD-COOKED EGGS.

To hard cook an egg, use one pint of water for one or two eggs and one cup of water for each additional egg. Place eggs in boiling water, cover set back on stove and allow to stand where water will be kept hot (but not boiling) for 30 minutes.

A second method for hard cooking eggs is to place eggs in cold water and slowly heat to the boiling point; set back where water will keep hot; let stand for 20 minutes.

When to be used for garnishing, hard cooked eggs should be plunged into cold water after cooking. This will prevent or lessen the green colour on the outside of the yolk.

An egg of average size contains 75 calories, 27 of which are protein and 48 fat. Eggs do not contain any carbohydrate.

* * * *

Eggs should never be boiled as this toughens the white and makes the yolk mealy.

* * * *

To test an egg for freshness, place it in a glass of water. If it falls to the bottom of the glass and lies on its side, it is fresh; if the large end rises slightly, the egg is somewhat stale; if it stands on end or floats it is very stale.

* * * *

An unbroken egg yolk will not harden if covered with cold water. And a egg white may be kept covered in a cool place.

* * * *

Eggs are used in cookery for different reasons. For flavour; to incorporate air as in foamy omelets, soufflé, cakes,etc.; to thicken, as in custards; to bind foods together as in croquettes, and as an emulsifying agent in mayonnaise.

* * * *

Most of the fat of an egg is contained in the yolk and the white contains scarcely any. For this reason desserts made with egg white are excellent for those desiring to lessen their weight.

* * * *

An eggnog between meals is an excellent way in which to supplement the regular meals of the underweight, run-down individual.

BLACK BEAR IS SOUGHT.

Twice seen in the Morton section of Leeds county, within the past two days, a large black bear is being hunted by residents of that district. Bears are infrequent visitors to the Morton area.

FUNERAL OF JOHN F. GIBSON.

Large numbers attended the funeral at Morrisburg of John F. Gibson, prominent Winchester man who died suddenly. The cortege left the residence of his sister, Mrs. C. C. Stubbs, and proceeded to Knox Presbyterian church where service was conducted by Rev. W. D. Turner, of Winchester, assisted by Rev. Jenkins Burkholder, of Morrisburg, and by Henderson Lodge No. 383, A. F. and A. M., Winchester, under Worthy Master Hugh Graham. Honourary pall bearers were D. G. M. Gorrell, Herman Hummel, F. M. Duvall and H. B. Tindal, Morrisburg, and Frank Davidson, Dr. Sherwood and Thomas Scott, of Winchester. Active pall bearers were Eldon Fennell, J. J. Gray, J. D. Stewart, Arthur Christie, Rev. G. O. Davies, Winchester, and B. L. Carr, Morrisburg.

Pat was told by his lawyer that his best course was to plead guilty to the charge against him.

He stepped into the dock with a determined air, and when asked by the judge if he pleaded guilty or not guilty replied with vim: "Guilty, me lord, an' I've witnesses here to prove it."

FIRST SHIPMENT FROM NEW PLANT GOES TO ENGLAND

Brockville.—The condensery here of Libby, McNeill and Libby (Canada) Limited, made its first shipment of evaporated milk Monday since the opening of the plant some weeks ago. The shipment comprised three car-lots consigned to London, England.

WANT HIGHWAY REBUILT.

The Municipal Council of Morrisburg has sent a request to the Ontario Department of Highways that five miles of No. 31 (Ottawa-Morrisburg) highway be built, starting at the Carleton county line and running north. The town believes such construction would benefit tourist trade and Eastern Ontario business in general. Relief workers would also benefit. The council of the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry also sent a similar resolution recently.

A man who was running for public office found the first half of his speech in the local paper. He went to the editor and wanted to know why they didn't print all his speech. The editor replied, "We ran out of capital I's."

An elderly woman who had never been in the city was very anxious to go to the theatre. On arriving she was rather late. When she got to the ticket office, she was told the seats were all taken but a box. "A box!" she exclaimed. "Oh, well, bring it along. That'll do me."

By Flashlight

"YE'D BETTER PUT UP. It's goin' to rain."

"Thanks, no. I can beat the rain."

Dolph drew his camera straps tight, snapped his carrying case shut, mounted his wheel and was off down the lane. At the gate he turned to wave good-bye to the family who were still standing in front of the old-fashioned farmhouse, a little awkward and ill at ease in their Sunday garments.

"Good-hearted folks," he said to himself, "and I suppose they seldom see a stranger. The visit of a picture man seems to be a big event in their lives. Well, we'll make them the best family group we can, and when the pictures are 'drawed off,' as these hill folks say, they'll have something to show their grandchildren."

The young man bent himself to his handlebars, standing on the pedals and straining hard to get up momentum. Across the narrow valley the smooth, green ridge of Spring Gap Mountain lay in the shadow of advancing clouds, and a subdued mutter came from behind it. The ten-mile ride back to Paw Paw lay over that ridge. Carey, his college chum and partner in their summer venture of photography, would be expecting him back there that evening with the load of photgraphic plates he had made during his two-day trip through the mountains — family groups, farmhouses, babies, pet animals. Dolph pedalled hard past farms and villages until the road entered the deep pine forest at the foot of Spring Gap; there he dismounted to push up the long ascent.

Hastened by the growing blackness in the west, dusk was settling rapidly; when Dolph finally trundled his machine into the short level stretch at the top of the last grade the whole valley below him was shrouded in a murky veil. Pausing only to wipe the streaming perspiration from his face, he mounted for the long descent.

Down he whirled through the dim forest lane, checking sharply at the turns, doding the dark spots that might be holes or boulders and straining his eyes to make out the path in the gathering darkness. The muttering increased to an angry rumble that grew louder until the air was filled with a continual roar. It was quite dark now, but frequent flashes of lightning enabled him to keep the road at lessened speed.

A rush of damp wind swept up to meet him, and he knew that the rain was near. Once in an open spot where the road rounded the shoulder of a cliff and the forest wall fell away abruptly below him he caught in a flash of lightning a view of gray rain-drenched valley and knew that Paw Paw was already in the downpour. He remembered no farmhouses in the vicinity. He would have to protect his plates as well as possible and "see it through." At the foot of the mountain four miles from Paw Paw he could take to the railway track and push his bicycle.

A prolonged flash showed him the last straight descent ahead, and in a crash of thunder, amid roaring and rocking pine trees and beating rain he rode down into the valley road. The wind was hard against him, and the flooded road was impassible for a bicycle. Quickly he unstrapped his poncho and slipped it on. For a moment he stood sheltering his case; then he started on across the low ground that bordered the railway.

Suddenly a flash of lightning showed him a place of refuge. He had forgotten the old weather-beaten schoolhouse that stood low, log-built and lonely in a clump of trees near the road. The door was fastened only by a hook made of baling wire. Thankful for his good fortune, Dolph let himself in and thrusting the blade of his jackknife through the crack of the door replaced the hook on its nail so as to shut the door against the rain.

He shook the water from his poncho on the rain-spattered floor and then by the glare of the almost continuous lightning he trundled his wheel to the dryer end of the room and opened his pack. The plates were dry; so was his flashlight outfit. His camera, which was strapped to the handlebars, he did not remove, but opened the front and drew out the lens to make sure that the bellows were not wet.

Then he settled himself on one of the long recitation benches to wait. The glare of the lightning interested him; he had often experimented with various lights and had taken views of still life by moonlight. An interior of the mountain schoolhouse illumined by lightning wouldmake an interesting picture, he thought, and, acting on the idea, he adjusted his camera to command a good view of the room, set the distance scale by guess, slipped in a plate holder and drew the slide. He would count the flashes and guess at their length to guage the exposure. Perhaps he should not get a picture, but at any rate he would be making an interesting experiment. He set the diaphragm, opened the shutter and again lay down on his bench.

Counting sheep is one way of putting yourself to sleep when you are not sleepy. Counting lightning flashes serves the same purposes—at least it did in Dolph's case; the droning of the storm faded from his consciousness as the flashes grew fainter and farther apart. Sleepy and tired as he was, he counted few of them that night.

He was roused by voices. In a dull, vague way he strove to remember where he was and why. Suddenly he became fully awake. Who could be in the old building at that time of night?

A faint glow pervaded the room and grotesque shadows played on the ceiling. The back of his bench prevented him from seeing the source either of the light or of the shadows. He cautiously lifted himself on one elbow and peeped over. Three figures kneeling around a lighted candle near the door were engaged in subdued but excited conversation. Dolph heard the rustle of paper and the rattle and the chink of metal.

He could not see their faces or hear their words distinctly, but he comprehended that they were eagerly dividing money. It was in bills and coin, and there seemed to be a lot of it. He also noticed a rifle that gleamed against the wall; as one man rose, Dolph saw that he wore a brace of ugly looking revolvers.

The young photographer's heart was beating wildly now, and he struggled to calm his thoughts. He had not been discovered. Should he lie still, or should he make a dash for the window? Evidently the men were desperate and would not hesitate to silence forever anyone who discovered their presence.

They were stuffing their booty into their pockets now. The second man rose and reached for his rifle, and as he did so turned in Dolph's direction The boy dodged down instinctively, but a creak of the rickety bench betrayed him, and all three men jumped.

"Who's there?" It was a rough voice, and there was no mistaking its meaning. "Come out o' that, or I'll ——" The threat ended with a volley of oaths. Yet the men did not advance.

In a flash Dolph realized the advantage that he had over them. He might be a detective for all they knew, and he might have them covered. The impulse came to him to say, "Throw up your hands!" but he realized that the bluff would fail; he could not remain out of sight indefinitely.

It seemed an age—though it could have been scarcely a second after the voice demanded, "Who's there?" — before Dolph's quick wit came to his rescue. As he dropped behind the bench his hand came in contact with something, and instinctively he had grasped it. Now the thought came to him, "My flash pistol! Loaded!"

"Come out of that, you!" repeated the voice, and suddenly Dolph came. He came with a bound, and the three figures with upraised guns were horrified at the blinding white flash that flooded the room as the boy fired his magnesium charge.

In the still more blinding darkness that followed, one of the men sent scattered shots rattling in the direction of the bench, and another got the door open. "Beat it!" he yelled as he dashed out, and the others followed.

As Dolph stumbled across the room, too late to see the disappearing riders, hoofs splashing down the wet road announced the men's retreat. He stood for a moment at the door, listening as they galloped out of hearing. Then all became still again. The stars were out, and in the air was the faint suggestion of coming dawn, though there was yet no light in the east.

The boy recovered the candle and by its light picked up two masks, a handkerchief and a small handbag that proved to be empty. There was nothing that would give the slightest clue to the identity of his visitors, and, wondering, he gathered his things together and folded his poncho.

He had forgotten his experiment, and now, wondering still more, he sprang the shutter of his camera, replaced the slide and drew out his plate-holder. He did not put it into his case, but slipped it inside the bosom of his shirt. Then he set out, pushing his wheel and carrying the handbag and other abandoned articles.

The sleepy operator at Paw Paw roused as Dolph stepped into the station in the graying dawn. "Sitting up nights now, Joe?" inquired the photographer.

"Did last night. Big mess up the line. Two men hold up number forty-nine just over the Hogback. Shot the fireman and made the engineer uncouple the express car and run her down to the big tunnel. The messenger was killed in the fracas, and they got away with the loot. Left the engineer unconscious. Brakeman ran all the way back to Heno and wired the chief. They had cut the line this way. Chief telephoned two hundred miles around for me to block 'em here, but they'll never try to get away on the engine, and forty-nine ain't in yet."

"Detectives are out, I suppose?"

"You bet they are. Hope they'll get 'em! Mangin's too good for that kind of cattle!"

"And the third man must have taken the horses to the rendezvous," said Dolph half aloud.

"Wasn't no third man. Was only two of them. Got it straight from the chief."

"Say, Joe, you wire the chief to send a detective down here quick as you can. I've got evidence."

The operator stared.

"I mean it," said Dolph. "I've got evidence. Get him down here in a hurry."

"You, you'll stay around?" asked the operator uneasily.

In the tent Dolph stepped carefully over the form of his sleeping partner and with some misgivings entered the dark room. His hand trembled as he lighted the ruby lantern. Then he closed the door softly.

When he emerged later his face was radiant. He jerked the blankets from Carey. "Get up, you sleeping beauty! We're going to have company for breakfast. Come in here and see what I shot in the hills."

And, bringing forth the still wet negative, he related his adventure to his partner.

The negative had been dried and the proof printed when the railway detective appeared on the belated forty-nine. Dolph watched the man's face eagerly as he scanned the print, which showed three roughly dressed men with upraised guns standing before a background of flat, soiled wall, with a few school desks and a rickety stove in the foreground. The features were startling in their distinctiveness. Even the expressions of the bandits were perfect; they could not have posed better. The few flashes of lightning and the faint light of the candle had not fogged the plate where the faces appeared.

"Um-hum," muttered the detective slowly. "I know those birds. They've scattered now, of course, but I know their hang-out. "Say, boy," he continued hurriedly, "I've got to go. I'll take care of this picture. And believe me, the railroad will take of you!"

The railway did take care of him. When the three bandits were at last behind the bars Dolph received a cheque that astonished him. He insisted on sharing the reward with Carey and would listen to no proposal that it be unequally divided.

"We're partners, aren't we?" he asked.

LEAD POISONING.

CONVULSIONS in young children are serious and naturally cause much alarm to the parents. Many parents do not know that lead poisoning is a common cause of these convulsions otherwise they would take greater care to guard their children against biting on painted toys and playthings.

Many babies develop a habit of biting on anything within reach and unless the parents are aware of the dangers of such habits and keep painted articles away from the child's mouth convulsions or even blindness may result. For this reason children should be restrained from putting any painted objects in their mouths. New enamel cribs or other articles of children's furniture are not dangerous in this way because recent government legislation has made it compulsory for lead-free paints to be used in their manufacture. Old cribs and cots that have been repainted with ordinary house paints are on the other hand quite dangerous, since the soft layer of paint may be easily nibbled off and cause lead poisoning. Window-sills, kitchen chairs and verandah railings are other places where lead-containing paints are frequently used and a young child who is romping about the house may get paint from any of these sources.

A doctor was recently called to see a child of 17 months of age who was in an unconscious state and having frequent convulsions. The doctor suspected that the convulsions were caused by poisoning with lead paint but on questioning the mother was advised that she had not noticed the child biting the paint from the cot or from any other painted furniture or toys. Not being satisfied with this negative evidence, however, an inspection was made of the child's home and it was found that a considerable amount of soft paint had been bitten off the verandah railing during the summer. The child was just beginnng to walk and was tall enough to reach the railing and nibble the paint. If the mother had been conscious of the danger she would have noticed this habit and the child's life would have been saved.

The responsibility rests with the parents to prevent these serious cases of lead poisoning, which occur all too frequently in young children.

A merchant sent home to his wife a very clever parrot. It arrived just before he himself was due and on the same day that his wife had gone out, ordered a chicken, and told the cook: "There is a bird coming for to-night's dinner. Cook it."

The parrot arrived first, and was cooked. Then the husband arrived.

"What's this?" he asked at dinner.

The parlour maid explained the mistake the cook had made.

"This is awful," said the merchant, "why, this bird could speak eleven languages."

"Then why didn't it say something?" asked his wife."

The Beginning of Morewood

The following story was written by Miss Sybil Smirle, pupil of S. S. No. 12, (Morewood), and won her First Prize in a recent examination.

MOREWOOD is the most northern village of Winchester township. The township was named after an English city. Here and there little groups of "shanties" sprang up and the most northern group became our native village. It was said that a list of names was brought from Ottawa, or Bytown as it was then named, by one of the early settlers. This man, glancing at the magnificent trees about him, and then happening to look at the list of names and noticing the name 'Morewood," there chose that as a very fitting name.

In the early sixties, a saw mill was constructed here by Messrs. Carlyle. Soon there were also added a shingle mill and a grist mill, which were operated by the Moffat brothers, and a large number of men were employed.

The mill yard was that property now occupied by J. W. Marcellus' residence and garage and extending south to the residence of Mrs. Steinberg and Mr. G. Weaver.

In 1862 the first post office was opened and the late Alex McKay was the first post master. The mail came only three times a week. Stores soon sprang up to suit the need of the growing village, followed by blacksmith shops, harness shops, tin shops, shoe shops, and many other business places. Some of the first merchants were W. Wallace, Joseph McKay, Thomas Reveller and A. D. Hunter.

The first school was a small log building situated on what is now T. E. Coulthart's lawn. When the number of pupils increased, another school was built where Mr. W. Swerdfeger now resides. This school, with its high, uncomfortable desks, and shiny, cracked blackboards was used for many years. The words of the old song, "Reading and Writing and 'Rithmetic, taught to the tune of the hickory stick," were indeed true of this. Soon it was necessary to add another room, so the frame house now occupied by Mrs. H. Stuart was built. In 1898 the present comfortable school was built and the high school subjects were taught for about fourteen years. Some of the first teachers were H. H. Loucks, T. Shaver, B. McKewen, P. Jordan, D. L. Collison, F. Weaver, J. Bailey and Hugh Loucks. The first inspectors were Brown, Greer, Ferguson, Forrester, Fetterly, Froats. Mr. Stewart is now inspector.

The first church in Morewood was a small white Methodist church situated across from the south cheese factory where the cemetery is. Many years later it was moved down near the St. Albert Station. The Presbyterian and Methodist churches were situated a mile east of Morewood. After 1925 a new United church was erected at the west of the village, adding greatly to the appearance of the street.

Morewood, being situated in the midst of a dairy district, greatly needed a cheesef actory. The first one was built south of the village. The earlier cheese makers were Messrs. Hitsman and Martin. A few years later the white factory below Morewood was put into operation.

We have still some pioneer homes left among us. The McKay homestead where J. B. Loughridge lives, is one. At one time on this farm Mr. McKay owned a wonderful deer park just opposite where Mr. Donald McLeod now lives. This deer park was bounded by an extremely high board fence and in this bush deer were raised and kept. Many people came to Morewood to see this interesting sight.

Great changes have taken place in our village since its humble beginning. The old days, the old homes. and the old customs have vanished. These early settlers by their hard work and intelligence have left to us a fair heritage. May we, the boys and girls of to-day, be worthy of these blessings and profit by them.

INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT THIS CANADA OF OURS.

Soya Beans.

THE discovery of new uses for the soya bean is a remarkable chemical and matellurgical feat. From the humble soya bean of tropical Asia have been manufactured window frames, gear shift knobs, horn buttons and electrical parts for automobiles. It also goes into automobile enamel. People were thrilled when we began to make vegetable ivory from nuts got in Brazil, to take the place of the rapidly diminishing supply of natural ivory, but the interest in the soya bean discoveries is even greater. How far it will go in taking the place of steel is a question.

It is said that the cost of soya bean plastics is greater than steel per pound, but the finishing of steel brings the final cost of many steel parts in excess of that for the finished product manufactured from the soybean material.

The soya bean has a great variety of uses. It is a source of oil for margarine and soap. In Japan they make from it concentrated milk, flour and a piquant sauce; in China, flour, milk, bread and cheese; in Cochin-China, milk, cheese and casein.

For six years the soya bean has been cultivated in Ontario and last year 10,000 acres were under crop. They are now grown extensively in the United States. Our imports are very large, running to over 300,000 gallons of oil and sauce, 53,000 cwt. of cake for cattle feed, and 260,000 bushels of beans.

Mother had just given Marjorie and Bobbie each a helping of dessert with meringue on top. Marjorie looked at Bobbie's dish and then protested.

"Mother, you put more suds on Bobbie's pudding than you did on mine."

"Here's something queer," said the dentist, who had been drilling into a tooth. "You said the tooth had never been filled, but I find flakes of gold on the point of my drill."

but... are you sure?

Nothing gives so much for the little it costs as the telephone, and it keeps on giving all the time. It keeps you in touch with markets and buyers; it ends isolation; it is an ever-present sentinel in times of illness or danger. Many a valuable animal has been saved by a timely call to the vet. Many a pleasant social evening is arranged the same way. The value of telephone service grows as you continually find new uses for it.

Nothing yields so much for what it costs as the TELEPHONE

(Missed From Last Issue)

Mrs. R. C. Tait and Mrs. O. L. King and their committee of the Ladies' Aid of Trinity United church, were hostesses at a very attractive tea and miscellaneous shower on Tuesday afternoon at the parsonage when a large crowd of ladies filled the rooms. The house was prettily decorated with foliages and baskets of daffodils.

Mrs. C. W. Casselman and Mrs. A. E. Bolster received the donations of money and miscellaneous articles in the diningroom. Mrs. G. W. Reaburn Mrs. W. N. Fulton and Mrs. Tait received the guests at the door.

The programme, which was in keeping with St. Patrick's Day, began with community singing. Solos were given by Mr. Tait, Mrs. Fulton and Miss Addie Campderros; a reading by Mrs. Lyle Marcellus was much enjoyed, as was an Irish contest.

Very delicious refreshments were served by ladies wearing green aprons and caps. This successful shower was the last of a series in preparation for the bazaar.
