It will pay Farmers handsomely to feed and care for their Poultry Flocks.

Farmers of Canada lose millions of dollars annually from bad methods of producing and handling eggs. Considerable loss is preventable because it is due to partial hatching of the fertile eggs which have been allowed to become warm enough to begin to incubate

Heat is the great enemy of eggs both fertile and infertile. Summer heat has the same effect on fertile eggs as the hen or incubator. Farmers are urged to follow these simple rules, which cost nothing but time and thought, and will add dollars to the poultry producers' returns.

1—Keep the nests clean and provide plenty of clean straw in and around the hen house.

2—Gather the eggs twice daily.

3—Keep the eggs in a cool, dry room or cellar until the collector calls for them.

4—Market the eggs at least once a week.

5—Sell, kill or confine all male birds when the hatching season is over.

6—Make application for membership in the Dundas Co-operative Association, Limited, and participate in the profits on the sale of your eggs and poultry.

MORRISBURG'S ROYAL WELCOME TO HER FIGHTING MEN

CITIZENS CO-OPERATE WITH WOMEN'S INSTITUTE AND SCORE COUNCIL PRESENTS GRATUITY OF $25.00 TO EACH MAN—HORTICULTURAL DISPLAY WAS GOOD TOTAL RECEIPTS, $1922.42

The Women's Institute (who did the fighting of a mental nature during the war) with the co-operation of the Citizens, some few months ago decided that Labor Day afforded a splendid opportunity to give outward expression of our appreciation of the valuable services rendered by the boys from the good old town of Morrisburg, on the battle line, to whom we owe our thanks that Canada today occupies a place among the free and victorious nations.

Moved by an impulse of pride and joy at seeing our boys return, the ladies organized, naming the several committees to carry on the scheme of entertaining all returned men. Consequently, a program of track, field, acquatic, and platform events was arranged. From the very beginning the work was taken up with great enthusiasm by men, women and children. This entailed considerable labor, and as a consequence, the Secretary, Miss Grace D. Merkley, put in a number of busy days, and to her skillful management, and keen foresight hinges one of the most gratifying successes in the history of merry-making days in Morrisburg.

The Fair Grounds presented a veritable "Fairy Land" and it has truly been stated, that seldom has the grounds presented such an inviting appearance as it did on this occasion. At the conclusion of the entertainment, many soldiers marched up and thanked those in charge for the grand reception extended to them.

Our City Fathers are to be commended on the part which they took in making the day a complete success. Realizing that as worthy representatives of the citizens, it was their duty to rise to the occasion, a resolution was put through in council providing for a cheque of $25.00 for each Morrisburg returned soldier. The presentation was made at a banquet held at the St. Lawrence Hall in the evening, where some 65 soldiers, officers and members of the Council were present. The menu was a sumptuous one, and a joyful atmosphere of good fellowship reigned, and it was quite evident that those who undertook this portion of the reception were not wanting in experience.

A few short remarks were made by Mr. I. Hilliard, M.P.P.; Col. A. G. F. MaeDonald, and Reeve Brown, was givenbgkqj mfwyp hrdl mfwyp the latter announcing that each man would be called, in order, to receive his cheque, and as he proceeded to the door-way, he was given a great ovation, which testified the appreciation of the honor, and the Reeve's popularity with the men.

The following constitutes the names of the men who received the cheques.

After having been handed their instructions by the Council, a committee composed of Messrs. R. F. Lyle, I. Hilliard and Arthur Flynn, reported as follows, and the following returned men from overseas, whose names are herewith appended, received the $25 gratuity.

Report

"According to the information we could gather in the short time allotted to us we find the following soldiers were domiciled and resident in Morrisburg at the time of their enlistment and actually went overseas.

"Under our instructions we had to eliminate those who were away from Morrisburg, earning their own living at the time of their enlistment, but students who were away from Morrisburg at the time of their enlistment are included."

If any oversight in this list has occurred, the Reeve stated at the banquet that application should be made to the Council to have the matter righted.

In the evening, the Music Hall was literally packed, the S.R.O. sign being displayed shortly after the box office opened. 'hT'e Welcome Home Concert" was enjoyed by the vast audience from start to finish. The Smiths Falls Boys' Band opened the program by rendering the National Anthem, followed by a popular two-step. The chairman of the evening, Sir Charles Gordon, was introduced by the Reeve, Mr. Geo. L. Brfown, C. E., the Clergy and other prominent men were seated on the platform. Then followed a long and varied program by prominat artists. Among those taking part we might mention, Mrs. Warfield, Prescott; Miss Taylor of Kingston; the Misses Cook, Morrisburg; Mrs. (Dr.) Gorrell, Morrisburg; Mr. Cowan, Montreal; Mr. Fagan and Mr. Dextra, Cornwall. Space does not permit us to give a detailed report of each number, but we wish to mention the singing of Mrs. Warfield who has a richly endowed voice, and her first number, "When the boys come home" was most appropriate and heartily appreciated. Among the most enjoyable numbers of the program was the violin playing of Miss Taylor and Miss Cook. The amazing ease and freedom of playing, and the pure and beautiful tones, made the numbers rendered by thes young talented young ladies so pleasing that they were obliged to respond to encores time and aagain. At the intermission Sir Charles Gordon gave a very instructive address on the work done by Canada in the war and paid our boys a very pleasing compliment. Between the numbers of the program the drawing took place. The Committee wish to express their thanks to all those who helped to make the concert a success.

NOTES

While it would be invitious to single out any individual for praise for the success of the day, we've got to hand it to the Weather Man.

..Overheard—"Say, if any returned man has any fault to find with this day in Morrisburg, he ought to be examined—there's something wrong with him.

On reaching the grounds, first thing which met the eye was a placard "Register Here."

After registering men were presented with cards which entitled them to free admission to grounds, grand staand, concert, refreshment booth and "Coney Island Red Hots"

There can be no question about the success of the day, it is only another of those magnificent efforts put forth by the women of Morrisburg, who, during all the years of the war did such practical patriotic work.

CHAP. I.—(Cont'd.)

The gate creaked noisily under his hand but no barking dog opposed his entrance. Following the neat gravel path he approached the rear of the house, brushing clumps of vivid asters which shone gayly against their dark foliage. There were no lights in the kitchen; and no answering footfall broke the silence which followed his knock. He knocked more loudly a second time. If there were sleepers about he resolved to awaken them. The dull gnawing at the pit of his stomach made him desperate. Drifting clouds swallowed the pallid moon; rain began to fall heavily once more. He took refuge from its pitiless pelting under the vine-clad verandah, pressing close against one of the darkened windows. The instinct of the animal desperately seeking shelter prompted him to try the window. The flimsy fastening yielded to his strong upward shove.

For an instant he stood trembling, listening intently. The words of the hotel proprietor seemed to echo in his ears: "How do I know but what you are a burglar!" He thrust his head into the dark square of the open window; a faint warm smell of dried rose-petals breathed against his face. Should he step over the low sill? The act would brand him a criminal.

Or should he close the window and go back to the muddy road over which the night and the storm had dropped an impenetratable curtain? A long shudder passed over his chilled body. He must—he would go in, come what might.

Moving cautiously, his feet making no sound on the carpeted floor, his groping fingers encountered a table; here were books, a framed photograph, a lamp with a wicker shade, and matches! The sharp spurt of the lighted match revealed a comfortable room; his swift glance took in a piano, a couch with gay pillows, books in low cases, shadowy pictures on the walls. The match flared, flickered and went out. Somewhere about the house a loosened shutter slammed with a muffled thud. The unexpected sound froze the intruder into rigid immobility. After a breathless minute the sound was repeated, and he recognized it for what it was. Grown bolder in the reassuring silence, he was about to strike a second match when a soft, light touch smote him on the hand. With difficulty he repressed a yell. The touch was repeated lingeringly. He almost laughed aloud: it was only the muslin curtain, fluttering in the breeze from the open window.

Deliberately he lighted the lamp and closed the window. Something in the heavy warm air of the house reassured him. He sat down in a wicker chair by the table and removed his muddy shoes.

"No use messing things up," he told himself.

There were candles in brass sconces, flanking a dim mirror; he lighted one and started on a noiseless tour of inspection. Next to the parlor was the dining room. He stared curiously about him at the quaint, old-fashioned furniture and at the portrait of a white-bearded man over the mantel; the old man's eyes seemed to follow him sternly as he moved softly about the room. All at once his sharpened perceptions told him of something which brought his heart to his throat with a bound. A bowl in the centre of the table contained flowers, mignonette and sweet peas. He decided after a breathless pause that the flowers had been gathered some days before. He proceeded to inspect the upstairs rooms. By that token of the fading flowers there might be food in the kitchen; but first he must find out whether he was alone in the house.

The door of the front chamber stood wide. He peered in at an unruffled white bed; then stepped softly inside. Never had he seen a room like this—white, all white, bureau, dressing table and chairs, against a wall of dim rose sparsely hung with pictures. Mechanically he noticed a photograph in a silver frame. It was that of a young man, the frank clear eyes gazing directly at him. As he softly set the picture in its place, he caught a glimpse of himself in the mirror and shuddered at the contrast: sodden clothing, dishevelled hair, grimy skin, deep hollows under the haggard blue eyes.

"Say!" he muttered to himself, "I sure do look like a tramp!"

It occurred to him with sudden sick realization that he was, in fact, a tramp. He had broken into a house; he was sneaking about premises he had no right to enter. He set his lips in a sullen line of defiance, as he recalled the money with which he had started on his journey.

"Somebody stole it," he repeated doggedly. "If it hadn't been for somebody robbing me, I could have stopped at the hotel. I shan't hurt anything."

He broke off the thread of his thoughts with decision. Regrets of any sort were useless. Besides, there were other rooms to be inspected before he could search for food. He made quick work of this: the other bedroom was furnished simply in dark oak. There were tennis rackets on the wall and a college pennant or two. Gay neckties hung from a rack over the dresser. There was a picture of a smiling girl on the mantel. A pair of gay slippers seemed waiting comfortably for their wearer beside the bed.

He thrust his aching feet into them with a sigh of relief. No use in being squeamish now. The house was empty of any human presence save his own; he made doubly sure of this before he sought the kitchen. If he could find something there with which to satisfy the intolerable pangs of hunger, he would go away and no one would know of his clandestine visit. A clock in the hall struck nine, confirming the mute evidence of the faded flowers that the house had not long been unoccupied and the owners might return at any moment. He made a way of escape for himself by means of an open window in the kitchen; then fancying he hear the sound of a motor far up the road he extinguished the light in the parlor. Returning to the kitchen once more he began an eager search for food. An odd childish fancy buzzing in his exhausted brain suggested that the gay slippers on his feet were at home here. They should guide him. Yes, the brown jar on the second shelf held cookies—spicy ginger cookies of a satisfying thickness—"the kind a fellow goes for when he is hungry." On the shelf close at hand there was half a loaf of bread in a tin box and a thick wedge of cheese under a wire screen. And oh, joy! the half of an apple pie on a china plate. The slippers knew!

The boy sat down on a wooden chair near the table and ate till he could eat no more. He had somehow lost the guilty feeling which had haunted him for days past. As he swallowed the last delicious mouthful of apple pie he recalled seeing a blue-and-white bath-robe lying over a chair in the room where he had found the slippers. Sleep was already clouding his senses. He thought drowsily that he must remove his muddy shoes from the parlor. Someone might find them there and scold. But, no; the maker of those satisfying big cookies could never scold! Still, he would carry the shoes upstairs with him. How soft and comfortable the many-pillowed couch felt to his tired body! He would rest for half an hour—not longer—then he must go on. Daylight should find him miles away on his vague quest. But some time, years later, perhaps, he would return and confess his theft of the pie and cookies. He would be a rich man by then and he would give the lady of the white bedroom a—a diamond—as large as—a brown cookie——

BANKRUPTS IN GREEN CAPS.

How France Discouraged Habit of "Liquidation."

A curious custom was prevalent in France during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Anyone who found it necessary to liquidate his affairs was obliged to wear a green cap—a humility to himself and a warning to others.

Those who make a hobby of getting rid of their indebtedness by way of the Bankruptcy Court should at all costs steer clear of China. Bankruptcies are almost unknown in that country, as they entail immediate execution.

A similar drastic punishment used to be meted out to delinquents in Japan.

To come nearer home, one need only go back to a little before the Act of Union to find that debtors in Scotland were obliged to wear garments of diverse colors, a suit of grey and yellow being the most common.

In Siam, a man unable to meet his liabilities was put in chains and compelled to work as a slave for his creditor. Should he escape, his wife, children, father, or other relative were seized in his stead.

At one time bankrupts were considered criminal offenders even in England. As a matter of fact, certain cases of fraudulent bankruptcy have incurred the death penalty in this country. Any concealment of books or the secreting of property by a debtor was so punished. Under this law a man called John Perrot was hanged in 1761.

It is said that no bank failure has occurred in China for over nine hundred years. When such an event last happened an edict was promptly issued stating that in future any such failure on the part of a bank would entail the severest punishment on all responsible officials. The heads of the cashier, president and directors became forfeit.

August.

Shorn of their wealth, the harvest fields
Lie silent in the sun;
Weary, beneath the languorous haze,
Their generous labor done.

The dreamy river trails its length
Across the breadth of gold;
Slow-creeping, till it find its way
By cedars grim and old.

Gone are the lilies, but the leaves
Float sullen on the stream;
Above the shimmering underflow
Where water-grasses gleam.

The flashing pickerel snaps the fly
Which careless skims the wave;
And circles widening to the shore
The rooty margins leave.

The turtle warming on the log
Prolongs his length of days;
Unheedful of the empty nest
The puffing cattail sways.

Now, slow before the lowering sun
A lucid vapor spreads,
Drifting in hazy coolness o'er
The mallow's rosy heads.

Nature holds close and tenderly
Her drowsy children dear;
This is her hour of full content—
Her "rest-time" of the year!

Canny Finance.

A man from the north of Scotland was on holiday in Glasgow. On Sunday evening he was walking along Argyll Street when he came upon a contingent of the Salvation Army, and a collection-bag was thrust in front of his nose. He dropt a penny into it.

Turning up Queen Street, he encountered another contingent of the Salvation Army, and again a smiling "lass" held a collection-bag in front of him.

"Na, na!" he said. "I gied a penny tae a squad o' your folk roon' the corner jist the noo."

"Really?" said the lass. "That was very good of you. But, then, you can't do a good thing too often. And besides, you know, the Lord will repay you a hundredfold."

"Aweel," said the cautious Scot, we'll jist wait till the first transaction is feenished before we start the second."

Motor Traffic in Trinidad.

It is stated that, for the last four years, the importation of motor vehicles into Trinidad has averaged 165 per annum, and this rate is likely to increase, as not only are stocks of new cars practically non-existent in the country, but their popularity is growing rapidly. Estate owners in Trinidad are beginning to realize the advantages of motor transport for conveying their produce to the railway or coast, and are eager to obtain commercial trucks for this purpose. At present about 600 miles of roads suitable for motor traffic exist in Trinidad, and lately there has been a pronounced movement towards the improvement of highways.

Authors Who Wrote in Bed

There is a photograph, with which most of us are no doubt familiar, of Mark Twain at work in bed—holding his writing-pad on his knees, and having the things he needed for his labor disposed about on tables on either side. But the idea of working in bed was not original with Mark. Many eminent men before him did the same thing. Indeed, no small part of the world's literary treasures has been produced between the sheets by physically indolent although mentally active men of genius.

One of the best known lines in English poetry came into its author's head when he was actually asleep. While visiting at Minto, Thomas Campbell one evening went to bed early, with his mind full of a new poem. About 2 o'clock in the morning he suddenly wakened repeating, "Events to come cast their shadows before." Ringing the bell sharply, he summoned a servant. The man found Campbell with one foot in bed and one on the floor."

"Are you ill, sir?" he asked.

"I was never better in my life," said the poet. "Leave the candle and bring me a cup of tea."

Seizing his pen he put down the happy thought, changing "events to come" into "coming events," and over the noninebriating cup, he finished the first draft of "Lochiel's Warning."

Longfellow's "Wreck of the Hesperus" came to him as he was sitting by his fireside, the night after a violent storm. He went to bed, but could not sleep; the Hesperus would not be denied; and as he lay the verses flowed on without let or hindrance until the poem was completed.

One at least of Rossini's operas was composed in bed. It was when he was young, poor and unknown, and lived in wretched quarters. After writing a duet, the composer allowed his manuscripts to slip off the sheets and fall under the bed. Rossini was too comfortable to get out of bed, and moreover he believed it would be unlucky to pick the sheets up; so he went to work to rewrite the duet. To his disgust he could not remember it. It was, therefore, necessary to write a new one. This he had finished when a friend entered.

"Try that," said the composer, "and tell me what you think of it." The verdict was favorable.

"Now," said Rossini, "look under the bed. You'll find another duet there. Try that, too."

The friend did so, and declared that the original composition was much the better. Then both were sung again—Rossini in bed and his friend sitting on the edge. Both arrived at the same conclusion touching the merits of the two compositions.

"What shall you do with the other one?" asked the friend.

"Oh, I shall turn this into a terzetto," said Rossini, and he did.

Woman's Sphere

Englishwomen's Work at the Canadian Memorials Exhibit.

Three Eng. women had the honor of being commissioned by the Canadian Government to paint canvasses to be used as mural decorations for the great War Memorial Building which is to be erected at Ottawa, and the three pictures which are the happy result of these commissions hang in a conspicuous position at the Canadian War Memorials Exhibition which this year forms an interesting part of the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto.

Each of these canvasses depicts a typical scene in army life, in which the figures are of heroic size, and they are the very last pictures in the entire collection that one would imagine to have been painted by women, for they are all three distinctly "masculine," both in the subject and its treatment.

The most striking of the three is called "The Boxers," and was painted by Laura Knight, a very well known artist in England, especially famous for her figure painting. Two Canadian soldiers stripped for combat stand out against a background of bright blue sky and heavy white clouds, surrounded by their khaki-clad comrades.

Mrs. Knight is a woman in the early thirties, whose husband, Harold Knight, is also a well known artist. Their studio is in a charming, out-of-the-way village in Cornwall.

If, as now seems probable, the conservative old Royal Academy decides at last to open its sacred portals to women painters, Laura Knight is named as the most probable candidate for the honor of being the first of her sex to affix the magic letters "R. A." to her name.

The "Cookhouse" of the 156th Canadian Infantry is the second picture. This picture is the work of Miss Anna Airy, another Englishwoman, whose work is very well known in her native land. It shows the huge caldrons of "chow" being prepared for the soldiers by the white-capped chefs, and it is all in greys and white, with the exception of here and there the brilliant yellow of the flame under the kettles.

Because of the success of this canvas, Miss Airy has recently been appointed by the British Minister of Munitions to paint a series of pictures showing the workers in the different branches of munitions making for the Imperial War Museum in London.

The third war canvas is by Claire Atwood and is called "On Leave." It shows the inside of a Y. M. C. A. hut at one of the great London termini at the hour just before the dawn. Here the Canadian soldiers have come for breakfast and a cigarette before taking the train. Some have a few days' leave before them and some are on their way back to the trenches. A Canadian soldier in the uniform of the celebrated Black Watch is seen in the foreground giving his sergeant a light from his cigarette.

Cooking for Threshers.

According to the testimony of the men themselves, some threshing day dinners are to be remembered for their excellencies, and others are to be remembered for other reasons. But if the energies of workingmen are to be kept at par, they must be well stoked. Workingmen appreciate plenty and a good flavor. The good flavor is attained by cooking to the right degree and seasoning carefully.

Preparing the threshing dinner is a heavy task for the housewife and she should have plenty of good help. Presumably she is informed beforehand when to expect the threshers and to make her preliminary preparations. Then she must decide on her bill of fare. Here is one meant not to be arbitrary, but suggestive: Bread and butter, chicken pie, mashed potatoes, cottage cheese, new beets, fresh or canned fruit, fresh tomatoes, fried cakes, apple pie, tea, coffee and milk.

The day before the threshing all the baking except the chicken pie should be got out of the way, plenty of white bread, half a dozen pies, a lot of fried cakes, a big loaf or jelly cake, or two small ones.

On this day also the chickens should be killed, dressed, and cut up. Thus the flavor of the meat will be improved and time and labor for the next day saved. Reckoning the proportion of chicken to the number of persons, there should be one good sized chicken to each six persons. The number of men required to run a threshing machine varies with the conditions and neighborhood. Some need twenty men and others get along with fourteen or fifteen.

To accompany the chicken, rice may be cooked according to the Japanese method. This is delicious served with chicken gravy. Wash the rice in cold water over and over again until the water runs off clear. Then add cold water enough to stand in the pan three times as high as the rice, and salt. Cook fast until nearly dry. Then remove the lid and allow to dry on the back of the stove. Thus the grains will stand out white and flaky. Add no milk or butter or anything else, this would only spoil it.

The chicken should be cooked tender, boned, and made into pies because in this way it will go farthest. And everybody likes chicken pie. But it should be so managed that there will be plenty of good rich gravy for the potatoes and rice.

If the threshing is to be prolonged to the supper hour, there must be another hearty meal. But by this time the housewife is very tired. So in the forenoon, while the other foods are cooking, she should have a big pan of beans boiling. These can be baked for supper and if well prepared will be appetizing.

The following supper menu is suggested and will not require a great deal of work: Bread and butter, baked pork and beans, roast potatoes with milk gravy, cabbage salad with sour cream dressing, apple sauce, cake, tea, coffee and milk.

If the men with the machine stay all night, the breakfast may be the most awkward of all the meals. But that is because it crowds upon so many other early duties of the day. It can be managed by simply expanding the family breakfast.

Value of College Training.

Many parents are working hard and denying themselves in order to send their children to college. The sacrifices are worth while provided the girl or boy is willing to work out his or her education. A college education not only enables its possessor to obtain better business positions, but it enriches and enlarges the life in every way, if the student has made the most of his opportunities. But parents should be sure their children want an education and not merely a good time when they send them to college. If a solid groundwork of character and elementary knowledge has been given the child and the child is willing to work and study for an education, there need be no fear of the effect of college life on him.

The Homestead.

O wanderers from ancestral soil,
Leave noisome mill and chaffering store;
Gird up your loins for sturdier toil,
And build the home once more!
Come back to bayberry-scented slopes,
And fragrant fern, and ground-mat vine;
Breathe airs blown over holt and copse
Sweet with black birch and pine.
What matter if the gains are small
That life's essential wants supply?
Your homestead's title gives you all
That idle wealth can buy.
All that the many-dollared crave,
The brick-walled slaves of change and mart,
Lawns, trees, fresh air and flowers you have
More dear for lack of art.
Your own sole-masters, freedom-willed,
With none to bid you go or stay
Till the old fields your fathers tilled,
As manly men are they!
With skill that spares your toiling hands,
And chemic aid that science brings,
Reclaim the waste and outworn lands,
And reign thereon as kings.

Hotels For Babies.

The babies' hotel is becoming a feature of the English national life. There is one at Bexhill, and there is another at Hampstead, and more are to follow, says the Manchester, Eng., Guardian. Parents are strictly excluded, and the babies engage rooms, subject to the control of nurses and governesses only.

Generally speaking, the babies' hotel is in miniature both as to beds and as to chairs and tables. The indignity of the highchair is past, and it is the grownup who has to adjust herself to the new conditions. Meals are run on strictly nursery lines.

On the Same Job.

Bill and 'Enry had not met for some time, when they quite unexpectedly came across each other in the street. Noticing that his chum was looking downcast, Bill clapped him on the back and said:

"Hallo, 'Enry; how are you gettin' on? Still working for the same people?"

"Yes," was 'Enry's sad reply. "Wife, mother-in-law and ten kids."

LOUIS BOTHA PASSES AWAY

Strong Unionist Premier of South Africa Victim of Influenza.

Pretoria, Union of South Africa, Aug. 28.—General Louis Botha, Premier and Minister of Agriculture of the Union of South Africa, died suddenly early this morning, following an attack of influenza.

Right Honorable Louis Botha was born in Greytown, Natal, in 1863. His family was of mingled Dutch and French blood, descended from some of those Hugenots who went to South Africa after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes.

In 1907 Botha became Premier of the Transvaal, and three years later he became Premier of the South African Union. From the beginning he was a warm advocate of the union. He attended the Imperial Conference in London in 1907, and was a member of the South African National Convention, afterwards visiting England with the other delegates in order to assist the Secretary of State in the passage of the South Africa Act through the Imperial Parliament.

When the great war broke out Botha elected for the Empire. By diplomatic means he sought to hold the irreconcileables in check, and when rebellion came he crushed it quickly. Then came his campaign against the Germans in Southwest Africa. The campaign was a masterpiece of rapidity and efficiency. He took a force of from 40,000 to 50,000 men over sandy wastes of waterless country at a speed that seemed almost incredible. He won the campaign, and destroyed another German dream.

BOOM HINDENBURG FOR GERMAN PRESIDENCY

Berlin, Aug. 28.—The National Liberals are booming Field Marshal von Hindenburg for the Presidency in the first elections to be held under the new constitution.

The directorate of the party urges the obliteration of party lines in the initial election for President of the new Republic, and calls upon the voters to rally round the man whose name has been an "epitome of faithful service to the country in war, in victory and in the hour of need."

PRESENTED A BIBLE TO THE PRINCE OF WALES

Upon his recent visit to Toronto his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales graciously accepted the gift of a Bible from the Upper Canada Bible Society.

The presentation was very fittingly made at the Exhibition grounds, where for many years the society has had a booth for the disposing of Bibles to visitors at the Erhibition.

The Bible was presented by Dr. N. W. Hoyles, K.C., LL.D., president of the society, in a few well chosen remarks.

90 DAYS TO REDUCE PRICES

Time Likely to be Given Government to Prevent General Strike in Country.

Washington, Aug. 28.—Industrial peace in the United States depends on the results the Government can show in the next 90 days in its campaign to reduce the cost of living.

That time limit was tacitly set today by the Executive Council of the railroad shop crafts in suggesting to union locals throughout the country that President Wilson's compromise offer in response to their demand for higher wages would be accepted, pending the outcome of the effort to restore a normal price level. If the cost of living does not come down, the 500,000 members of the shop crafts would reserve the right to strike for more money, and with them probably would be associated the remainder of 2,500,000 railroad employes, all of whom have been considering the same problem.

The letter of the Executive Council served to compose somewhat the uneasiness felt in official circles over the immediate labor situation and to focus attention on the legal measures being directed by Attorney-General Palmer and his assistant, Judge Ames, to take the inflation out of prices by punishing hoarders and profiteers.

CANADA'S WELCOME GRATIFIES BRITAIN

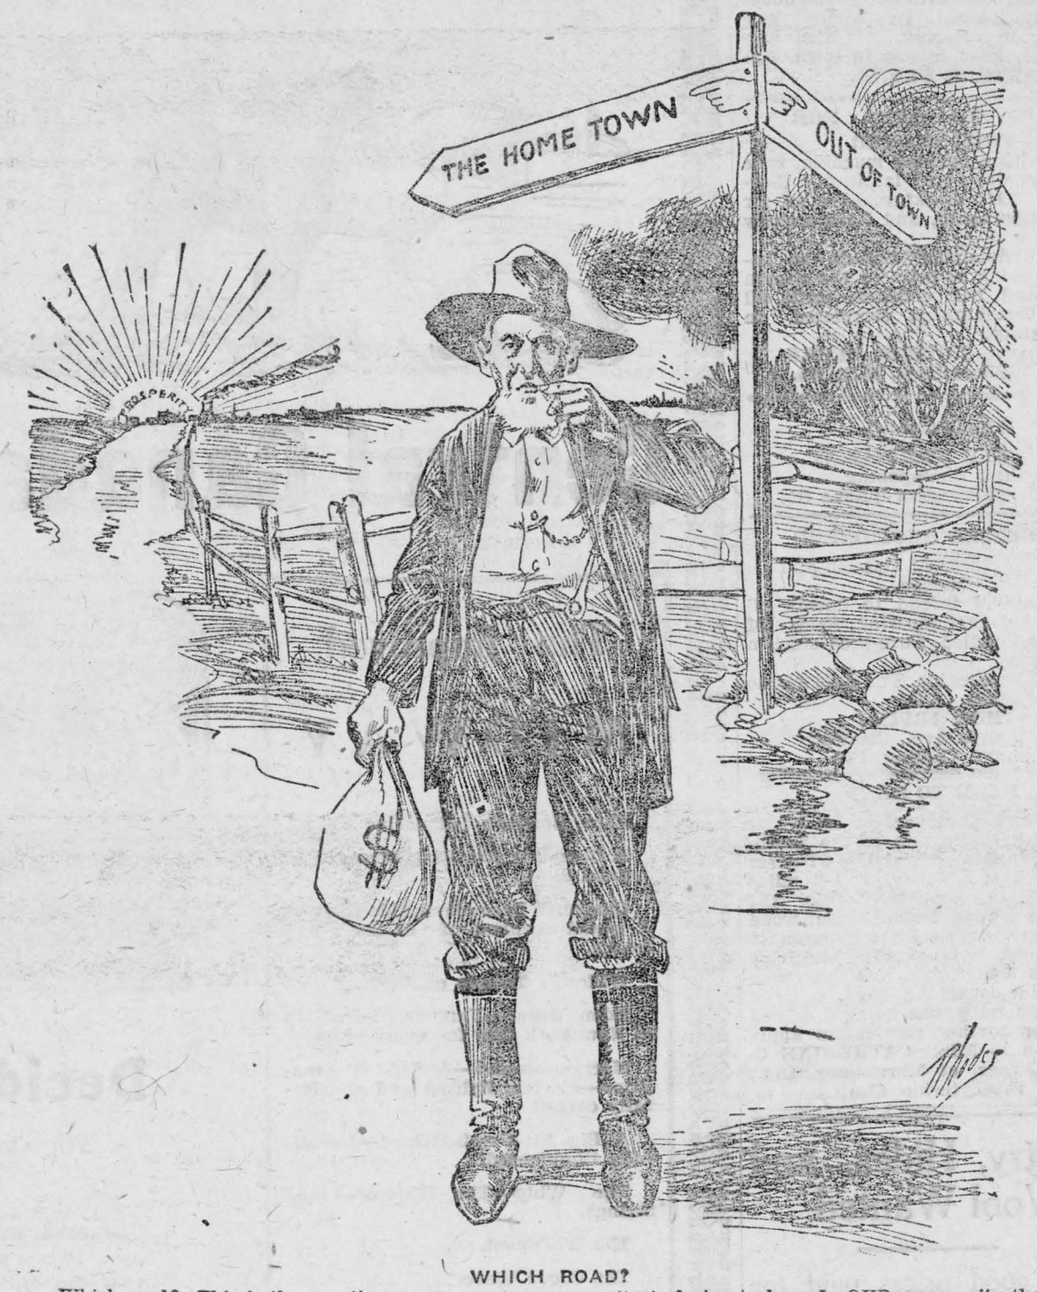
"People of the Dominion Are Surpassing All Expectations."

A despatch from London says:—All London newspapers are featuring the extraordinarily enthusiastic welcome the Prince of Wales is receiving in Canada. The Westminster Gazette says:—

"No one ever doubted that the Prince would receive such a welcome; his position, his personality and the part he played in the struggle wherein the Canadians bore so great a share were sufficient to assure that. But the people of the Dominion are surpassing all expectations by the heartiness of their welcome and by the keen pleasure they are obviously taking in the Prince's visit. In the midst of all these manifestations of public interest and of his own popularity, the Prince is bearing himself well, displaying that quiet courtesy and modesty which have already endeared him to the people at home."

GERMAN PRISONERS WILL BE RELEASED

Paris, Aug. 28.—An agreement has been reached between the French, British and Americans, by which the German prisoners held by the British and Americans may be released immediately.



WHICH ROAD?

Which road? This is the question every country community is facing to-day. In OUR community there are only two kinds of people. And they travel on just TWO roads. There are the "HOME TOWN patriots" and the "Out-of-Town patrons." There is the "Trade at Home" road and the "mail order" road. Which class are YOU in? What road are YOU taking? It should be EASY to decide. Every time we fail to patronize HOME INTERESTS we are boosting an outsider. Every time we take the mail order route we are boycotting our home town. Which ROAD? The only answer for US is the ROAD TO THE RIGHT.

THE ADVENT INTO CANADA of H.R.H the Prince of Wales, K.G.

Hail to our bright young Chieftain,
Joyous envoy from the Motherland.
Scion of a reign beloved,
And heir to far-flung realms,
Of valour proved on Victory's fields,
Yet gentle, kind and lovable.

Canada welcomes thee,
With open arms and loyal hearts
To her rich and vast domains.
A free people acclaim thee
By God's grace our future king,
Our Empire's hope and bond.

May the Laurel of Peace
Encircle thy brow!
And righteousness and truth
Guide, help and preserve thee.

In these happy moments
May Canada adopt
Thy motto, "Ich Dien."

—Hamilton McCarthy.

TO GIVE TO PRINCE FREEDOM OF NEW YORK

New York, Aug. 28.—Mayor Hylan received a telegram from the Prince of Wales to-day accepting the Mayor's invitation, sent by airplane mail, to visit New York and accept the freedom of the city. The Prince said he expected to come to the United States in November.

A Personal Question.

"Person" in the dictionaries is described as "an individual human being." But it is not so in England from a legal standpoint, as women do not come within the class. This was revealed recently when the Royal Astronomical Society of London decided to admit women as fellows of the council. The plan was found to be impossible until the society had its charter altered.

SLAUGHTER OF CHRISTIANS IN WAR

30,000 Martyrs in North-West Persia—Children Hacked to Pieces.

A despatch from London says:—A terrible story of the martyrdom of the Christians of Northwest Persia is told in the Daily News. It is narrated by one of their number, Dr. Yonan. Soon after the war began, Dr. Yonan says, the Russians came to Urumyah, in the province of Azarbaijer, and induced the Christians from Assyrian battalions to fight against the Turks. There was a battle in Urumiyah in February, 1918, in which the Christians were victorious. After this the heroic, but small, Christian force fought fourteen battles with the Turks and Persians and routed their enemies. But no help came from the allies and the defeat of the Armenians cut off the Christians from the Syrians. By the end of July, 1918, their ammunition was exhausted, and the Turks were at the gates of Urumiyah. The Christians who dwelt at Salmas, a fertile plain on the north side of Lake Urumiyah, had been massacred and flight was the only course left to those of Urumiyah.

So 75,000 men, women and children left their homes, in a vast procession, taking with them such property as they could collect hurriedly. Those who could not escape sought refuge in the American and French missions. Here terrible scenes were enacted. Monsignor Sonteg, head of the French mission, died a martyr's death and his brethren in religion were also murdered.

Children were laid on the pages of open Bibles and hacked to pieces. Meanwhile the fugitives were attacked by the enemy at four places and thousands were cut off and massacred. Children were snatched from their mothers and dashed to the ground. Hundreds of women were carried away to Mussulman harems. In all, 30,000 were killed, lost or captured.

Reproducing Rare Carpets.

Carpets now on display in a London shop will, in the opinion of the Times, surprise those who are unacquainted with the strides made in the manufacture of carpets by British factories during the war. The carpets are claimed to be exact reproductions of rare eastern carpets and are being offered at prices not much higher than those of ordinary loom production. The most remarkable feature about them is considered to be the true rendering of that eastern lustre which has hitherto defied successful copying. Some of the most notable reproductions are those of the seventeenth century coronation carpets which were made for the Shah of Persia; the Khorassan rug, and the famous carpet manufactured for the Sheik Ismail, the original of which hangs in the Victoria and Albert Museum of London; and there are copies of others from the cathedrals and art galleries of the world. The carpets vary in size and have all been made in a British factory during the past three or four years.

"Housewives' Shoulder."

Doctors have been puzzled by numerous cases with symptoms resembling rheumatism among patients who have not hitherto suffered with rheumatism. The sufferers are nearly all married women and the pains of the new ailment are confined to the shoulder.

The doctor who discovered the nature and the cause of the new pain is a deductive man with Sherlock Holmes in his method of diagnosis, who practices in London. He noted that almost all his shoulder-pain patients dwell at some distance, with an uphill climb from the shops. He questioned his patients and elicited that they have to make several trudges home weekly with baskets of household provender that the tradesmen cannot deliver.

"You have not got rheumatism," he told them; "you have strained the shoulder-muscles through carrying awkward weights. Your trouble is 'housewife's shoulder.' The cure? Make your husband take his turn."

Sergeant—"Now, then, are you the four men with a knowledge of music I was asking for?" Chorus—"Yes, sergeant." Sergeant—"Right. Parade Officers' Mess 11.30 to move grand piano to marquee—distance 500 yards—for concert this evening."

The house was very tastefully decorated with flags and flowers. Refreshments were served to guests numbering about sixty. Owing to the illness of the president, the address was read by Mrs. H. A. Hayunga, and Master Allan Scott made the presentation of a pair of Military Brushes, the gift of the Red Cross.. Pte. Smith made a suitable reply, thanking the Red Cross for their many kind rememberances. An enjoyable evening was brought to a close by singing the National Anthem.

IN Memoriam

In sad but loving memory of our dearly beloved mother, Mrs. Ira Sullivan, who departed this life two years ago today, August 29th, 1917.
Two years have passed, our heart's still sore;
As time goes on we miss you more.
Your cheerful voice, your welcome face—
No one can take our mother's place.
When days are dark and friends are few,
Dear Mother, how we long for you.
Inserted by
Mrs. Elgin Harriman.

Jesse M. Seeley Case Dismissed

. . . . . (Contributed)

Jesse M. Seeley of Dundas County on reporting to Kingston, No. 3 District Depot for final discharge, Aug. 7th, 1919, was charged with being a defaulter under the M.S.A. Act. The Military Officials would not allow him to return home nor would they give him his discharge until the evidence against him on file was thoroughly gone over.

On Friday, the 29th of August he was tried before Police Magistrate Bradshaw of the County Court of Kingston. It was shown that when he was ordered to report for discharge last January that he was sick with Influenza, and at that time the Military Authorities were telephoned to and written to by his brother Orval Seeley. The reply received, according to the evidence given was that he would be sent another transport ticket and instructions which did not come.

Magistrate Bradshaw dismissed the case with the costs of the court on the Kingston County. Mr. Irwin Hilliard, K.C., M.P.P. of Morrisburg, capably defended Seeley, who is now home having been granted his military discharge.

A few moments after, Mr. Jamieson handed his wife of fifty years, a very handsome cheque and also a good-sized cheque to each of the six girls., each of whom made short replies. Canada's National Debt - - -	$1,670,263,691

THE WORLD is staggering with debt. Some of the leading countries are verging on bankruptcy.

Five years ago Canada had never dreamed of the financial burden she carries to-day.

Canada entered the Great War with a National Debt of $337,000,000, or $42 per head of population. Canada emerges with a National Debt to date of $1,670,263,691, which is expected to approximate $2,000,000,000 by the end of the fiscal year—or about $250 for every man, woman and child in the country. Interest charges alone will eat up nearly one-half our present national revenue, and soldiers' pensions will have to be provided as well.

Can Ontario Afford to Spend $36,000,000 a Year on Booze?

PREVIOUS to the Ontario Temperance Act the drink bill of the Province approximated $36,000,000 per year, an amount about equal to Ontario's share of the Annual interest on our National Debt. In the face of our financial responsibilities alone, is this the time to repeal the Ontario Temperance Act or relax a single one of its restrictions upon waste of money and man power? To every question on the Referendum Ballot vote—

"No!"—Four Times—"No!"

No Repeal—No Government beer shops—No intoxicating beer in Standard Hotel bars—No Government beer and whiskey shops. Be sure you are on the voters' list. Be sure you mark your ballot four times—X—X—X—X—in the column headed No.

Soils and Crops

Why It Pays To Disk the Stubble Land.

It will pay to disk stubble land that is to be plowed later, just as soon as the shocks are removed. This disking will conserve moisture, and make it possible to plow this land long after similar undisked land is too dry to plow. It will also kill insects and destroy their eggs, and this effect is especially important where insects have been a great pest. One can disk the stubble land rapidly, and can make good wages doing it.

The early preparation of a seedbed for wheat or for alfalfa is especially important. In tests on the seedbed preparation for wheat the best results were obtained by deep plowing early in July, and the profits steadily decreased as the plowing time was advanced. It frequently happens that a drought comes in July and stops the plowing at just the time it should be done, and it is then necessary to wait until the rains come later in the fall, which is frequently as late as September. It is very rare that the weather conditions are such that a good seedbed can be made on September plowed land.

When the stubble is disked, a loose mulch is formed that retards the evaporation of moisture very materially, and also allows the capillary connection between the plowed land and the subsoil to be restored much more quickly after plowing than on undisked land. The disking mixes the trash and stubble with the soil, and it is an easy matter for the plowed land to form a union with the soil that is not stirred. And it is absolutely essential that the capillary connection be restored in good shape before the wheat is planted.

Soil that does not have a mulch will crack when it gets dry, and these cracks are the lines on which the clods are formed. A mulch on the surface will prevent this clod formation, and the labor of seedbed preparation after the plowing will be less. Dry, cloddy soil is a hard proposition when it comes to making a proper seedbed. As a contrast with this, take land that has a good surface mulch before it is plowed. There are but few clods in this case, the soil is mellow and loose, and it is easy to prepare the field in ideal shape to receive the seed.

If you wish to see how capillary attraction works in pumping the water out of the soil, take a cube of sugar and dip a corner of it in your coffee and see how quickly the liquid climbs up. It is being moved by capillary action. If you put some loose sugar on top, you will see that the coffee does not climb up through it so quickly. The reason is that the grains are so far apart that capillarity has been destroyed; the grains are not in a condition so the liquid can be raised. Soil grains are placed in a somewhat similar condition when the surface is disked, and the evaporation of the much-needed soil moisture is checked.

When one considers the great amount of moisture necessary to mature a crop properly, it is easy to understand the great need for conserving the supply. It takes more than 500 pounds of water to make every pound of dry matter found in the oats plant, and it takes about 400 pounds with wheat. A little less, or sometimes as little as 300 pounds, will do for corn. Unless great attention is given to storing the rainfall in the soil, and putting the land in condition so it is not lost by capillary action, there is apt to be a deficiency at just the time it is most needed.

Good Points on Marketing.

Success in farming depends to a considerable extent upon success in marketing, and marketing has come to be a highly specialized business. It involves an understanding of human desires. The consuming public gauges its demand for a product according to the degree in which that product satisfies its tastes. Taste to a considerable extent is influenced by appearance. This is especially true in the case of perishable and semi-perishable products such as fresh vegetables, berries, apples and potatoes.

Competition is keen in marketing. The farmer who wishes to sell his product at a high price must learn the demand of public tastes, and put up his product in a way that will give the consumer reasonable satisfaction. Most goods sold in fairly large quantities pass through the hands of a middleman or dealer. These men because of their constant touch with the trade have learned the desires of consumers. Whether a farmer sells direct to the consumer or through a middleman, it may pay him, if he can do so, to visit a marketing centre and spend some time in the wholesale produce district watching how sales are actually conducted. He can then talk with dealers about the methods of preparing products for market, visit their grading and packing rooms and observe how that process is done.

If a personal visit to the trade is too expensive and the farmer sells through a dealer, he should write to him, questioning him carefully about how to sort, grade and pack a product, so that it will bring the highest price.

When a shipment is made, it pays to load goods carefully. If possible learn from some reliable source how to arrange material in cars so that it will best withstand the journey. An itemized account of the number of boxes or packages in the shipment, the different varieties, and amount of each, will be a great help to the dealer and a record for your own use. Send this statement to the dealer at once, together with a letter of explanation, stating the number of the car, the date it is to leave and the road on which it is to be shipped.

Prompt settlements usually follow approved methods in handling bills of lading. It is customary if goods are sold for cash, to have the bill of lading made out to yourself, endorse it over to your local banker, and instruct him to send it to his banking correspondent at point of destination with attached draft for the amount to be collected. Upon payment of draft, the bill is surrendered to the dealer. If inspection is allowed this should be stated upon bill of lading. If goods are sold on time or shipped on consignment, have the bill of lading made out to the dealer, and send it to him at once. When an advance is to be made for part of the consignment the procedure is the same as when the goods are sold for cash.

When putting up goods for market, experiment upon how best to combine quality and attractiveness. These are potent factors in determining price.

It is not advisable, ordinarily, to ship to several dealers on the same market at the same time, for they may compete against one another for buyers, thus bringing your product into competition with itself, and forcing down the price.

The farmer who sells to a dealer, finds it best to co-operate with him in handling his goods, for the more money the dealer gets for a product the more will he in turn be able to pay the farmer. If you sell by that method, communicate with your dealer regarding the condition of the trade, a few days before your shipment is ready and learn from him whether he is able to handle the shipment to advantage.

In all cases act promptly in forwarding the dealer records of shipments that he may not be delayed in getting possession of goods. Market conditions often change from hour to hour. In a very short time a considerable fluctuation in price quotations may occur.

Marketing perishable farm products is a business in itself, and co-operation between the buyer and seller is an essential principle of successful business relationship.

How It Paid Us to Buy an Ensilage Cutter.

One of the problems that is met every fall among silo owners is the timely filling of the silo. In some cases it is a serious one, and a considerable amount of money is lost by the owners of the silo because a cutter cannot be found to do the work when it is most needed.

When four of us, whose farms are adjoining, bought silos at the same time we had this silo-filling problem to solve. One day an agent came along, and after an hour or so we bought a small-sized cutter.

The cost of the machine was $285, which, divided among four, was not much of a burden for anyone. On the whole it is a cheap cutter. It has a 13-inch throat. On an average, with good power, it will run from 6 to 8 tons of silage an hour. One can usually figure that a cutter or any other machinery will do from 10 to 50 per cent. less work than the salesmen claim, and this was no exception. This size is not what would be called a custom machine. It is for local filling only, and is big enough for that work. With this size we are told that there is less settling afterward, because there is more time to tramp it down well, and also more time for it to settle while the filling is going on. According to some writers this is an error, and we should not tramp it at all. I am not sure about this point.

The great advantage of this privately owned cutter is that we can get our silos filled when the corn is ready. Corn must go into the silo at the proper time to make the best food.

Another great advantage of owning a cutter is that a silo is easily refilled after settling, because it does not leave the neighborhood after the silos are filled. And to the man who wishes to utilize the full capacity of his silo this is of considerable importance. A silo that settles down six feet has that much wasted space, and that part of the investment must be added to the overhead expense of the part of the silo which is filled.

A Spinning Wheel.

The front gate clicked, and a woman looking up from her sewing beside the window, saw a tramp walk round the house to the back door. She waited for the knock, then opened the door. Before her stood a young man. He was not nearly so old as she had supposed from seeing his slouching gait as he passed the window.

He asked for food, and the woman brought him in and seated him at the table while she prepared some plain fare for him, for he appeared hungry and discouraged. As he ate she learned his story.

At seventeen he had left home and had been away for nearly four years. This was his twenty-first birthday. He had run away from home because of the monotony of life there and the hardships that he thought fell to his lot.

"And still, it was not so much the hard work," he said. "I wanted a change, so I went away. My parents were kind, and they loved me; but I didn't think of that then, although I have thought of it many times since. I'm more tired of this wandering life than I ever was of the continual grind at home. A fellow like me might as well give up the job of living and drop out."

The woman was silent for a moment; then she pointed to a family heirloom that stood in the corner of the sitting room. "My grandmother used that spinning wheel for many years," she said. "My mother has told me that she used to hear her mother working away and humming an old-fashioned song after the other members of the household had gone to bed. Most of the wool that went into the clothes of the family was spun on that wheel. It served its generation well, and still it never did anything except go round and round. But to go round and round was what it was made to do. There it stood in the same corner of the room, year after year, singing its little tune and spinning out its slender thread. It was a monotonous life, and yet the spinning wheel has a place of honor in our home now. We love it because of the service it performed for those we love."

The young man finished his meal and, rising from the table, started to go. As he stepped out on the porch he turned back again and said, "Thank you for the story of the spinning wheel. I'm going home again. I've covered one big circle of several thousand miles in four years; if I had stayed at home and had gone round my little circle of daily living. I should have a home of my own now and not be begging bread at back doors. When I've learned to spin without breaking thread, I'll write to you. Good-bye."

The woman went back into the room, gave the spinning wheel a pat with her hand, and dusted it carefully. As she took up her sewing again by the window she said to herself:

"I believe I, too, needed the story of the spinning wheel. I'm glad I have dresses to make and stockings to darn and food to cook. I'd a thousand times rather be a spinning wheel in a home that I love than a wanderer without a friend or an abiding place."

Hands and Help.

"How did you lose your hand?"

"I lost it working with an engine. I was reaching in for a loose bolt when it got caught and drawn into the cogs. I have another good hand left, though, and I get along pretty well with it. One hand will do pretty good work for a man if he knows how to use it."

"Help! Help! A man is overboard and drowning!"

An officer on deck seizes a life preserver and throws it to the sinking man. It reaches him and holds him up until a boat is lowered, and the man is brought back safe on board.

The telephone rings in a farmhouse. A neighbor's voice is recognized as he asks, "Can you come over to-morrow and help fill my silo?" The farmer answers, "No, I can't come myself, but I'll send my hand. He will do as much as I could."

The Bible teaches that each part of the body, filling well the place that it is meant to fill, is honorable in that service, whether it be a hand or an eye. But the Bible teaches that it is honorable to do well the highest work that we have the ability to do, and dishonorable to continue to be merely a hand when we might be a whole man doing a strong man's work.

The service of a life preserver is honorable in its place, but it would be shameful to remain only a deck hand, a helper, even a life preserver, which hangs on a hook for months and then performs its service of helping to save one life, if you have it in you to be the captain of a great ship and bring her across the sea full of ten thousand soldiers with their equipment, to fight for the freedom of the world.

It is not a disgrace to do any lowly work if you do it well, but it is wrong to continue at lowly work that a thousand others might do almost as well as you when you have the ability and the opportunity for training yourself to difficult and exacting work of great responsibility that not one person in a thousand could ever learn to do well.

Abraham Lincoln was, perhaps, the best rail-splitter in the State of Illinois, and he was proud of the fact that he could split a good rail; but the world could not have measured its loss if Lincoln had been satisfied to split rails always when God had given him the greatness of soul to save a nation in the hour of its peril.

It is honorable to be a hand or a helper if that is what God made you to be. But it is wrong not to be a mind or a leader of men if God has put the possibility of such within you.

Too Much of a Good Thing.

A London physician, learning that many children of the poor of that city were starving, determined to investigate; and he found indeed some such cases. But in the majority of the families he visited the children were suffering not so much from lack of food as from too much sweets and starches. Their appetites were disturbed, their digestions were deranged and they in consequence evidenced much anaemia, and their teeth were as a rule very bad.

Candy is a good thing so far as it goes, but it provides only heat units and is not a tissue builder. Candy develops energy; and if we were to eat candy alone we would be like a fire that must sooner or later burn itself up to nothingness. Meats, milk, vegetables and eggs must have their fit and right place in our dietary.

Cakes and other sweet foods are usually compounded of flour and eggs, butter or other fat and plenty of sugar. They are nutritious for both young and old; and many can consume them with impunity. But many other people have heartburn, and other evidences of indigestion, after eating them immoderately. One cause of such indigestion is the fat saturating the flour. Another, and a principle one, is excess of sugar. Besides the objection to sugar mentioned, excess of it leads to a disproportionate secretion of mucous. This hinders digestion by enveloping the food and preventing the gastric juice from penetrating to the latter through the superabundant mucous. Especially should people prone to dyspepsia or people with delicate stomachs avoid sugar, jam, marmalade, syrups, sweet cake, and other food sweetened with sugar. Less likely to cause dyspepsia are honey, molasses and maple syrup. And yet these sweets should also be taken in moderation, especially in the summer time.

Questions and Answers.

I am troubled greatly with my eyes. During the day my eyelids become very heavy and the moisture on my eyes dries up causing the lid to tighten on the eyeball. My lower lids are inflamed and when I awake in the morning the hairs are all stuck together. Until I was 14 years of age I suffered almost constantly with severe headache which appears to have had its origin in the eyes. Sometimes now I am bothered with acute pains which appear to be up in the top of my eyeball.

Answer—Your malady appears to be Xerosis or dry lids. This is a contracted dry condition of the conjunctiva, the membrane which lines the lids and which folds over like an envelope, and covers the whites of the eyes. It is uncommon and a serious ailment which occurs mostly in people of below par constitution. Hot compresses and lotions must be applied to the eyes. You must put yourself in the hands of a good eye doctor. Have the kidneys examined. No doubt the origin of the headache is in the eyes. Almost all headaches are referable to that organ, the eye.

Clothesline-Post Games.

The following are games that can be played with clothesline posts:

Post Tag—Each player has a post for a goal. The player runs from post to post. The player who is "it" must tag one of them between posts.

Ring the Post—Players stand ten feet from a post and try to ring the top of the post with a hat, cap or hoop. The scores are kept as in other games.

Sitting Tether Ball—Use any small, inflated ball like a tennis ball, or a ball made from a piece of cloth. Fasten it to a string tied to the top of the post. Two players sit on opposite sides of the post, and each tries to wind the string round the post by batting the ball with the hand in the direction opposite to that in which his opponent bats it. The player wins who winds the string up until the ball touches the post.

Hit the Post—Two players start from the same post, and each places one foot against the base and tries to hit the next post with a ball or bean bag. If he throws at the post and fails to hit it, he must pick up the ball or bean bag, run back to the post from which he made the throw and make another trial. When he hits a post he picks up the ball or bean bag, advances to the post that he has hit and tries for the next; and so on in turn until he has hit every post. Whoever first makes a circuit of the posts wins. In a variation of this game the players use a croquet mallet and ball or a golf stick and ball, and advance from post to post in the manner described.

Races Round the Posts—Players may run in competition with one another by starting each from a different post, running round all the posts to the starting point one or more times, as they may agree. The most exciting races are relay team runs. Each runner of a team takes his turn in covering the course, but he must not start until the preceding runner of his team touches him at the starting post of that team. If there are many posts, it is better to assign only two adjacent posts round which to run. To prevent starting too soon, require each runner to carry and to pass on to his successor a stick or other article. Variations such as running backward and hopping add to the interest of the races.

The general manager of a big manufacturing plant was talking about some of the problems of his business—particularly the problem of men.

"Our office manager resigned some time ago," he said, "and last week he came in to say good-bye.

"He was obviously pleased with himself. Things were in such good shape, according to his way of thinking, that his successor would find little to do.

"I wished him luck; I had arranged already to put in his place a live young fellow from the West who had made a record in office management.

"A couple of days later the young fellow came in to report on his survey of the office. He threw up his hands.

" 'It's terrible!' he said. 'I never was up against a more discouraging proposition in my life. Give me a few weeks, however, and you'll begin to notice the difference.'

"There you have it," the general manager continued. "The condition that was so absolutely satisfactory in the eyes of one man was utterly inexcusable according to the standards of the other.

"There was nothing definitely wrong in the character of the first man: he was neither dishonest or lazy. But he just never finished anything. The office was nothing but a bundle of good resolutions unfilled.

"The other man, thank Heaven, belongs to that little company of folks who have the habit of seeing the thing through, of making a finished job of what they undertake. They are rare birds; what wouldn't I give for a few more of them!"

Every employer of men has frequent occasion to echo that sentiment. We talk and write about success as though there were some mystery in it. But it is a very simple proposition. All the world asks is that a man should take hold of one task—any old task—and complete it, and then pass on to another.

It is very illuminating to read the lives of great men on this point.

Charles Darwin made his reputation with a single book. And how long do you think he was engaged upon it?

On my return it occurred to me, in 1837, that something might perhaps be made out on this question by patiently accumulating and reflecting on all sorts of facts which could possibly have any bearing on it (he says). After five years' work I allowed myself to speculate on the subject, and drew up some short notes; these I enlarged in 1844 into a sketch of the conclusions which then seemed to me probable; from that period to the present day I have steadily pursued the same object. I hope I may be excused for these personal details, as I give them to show that I have not been hasty in coming to my conclusion. My work is now (1859) nearly finished; but as it will take me many more years to complete it, and as my health is far from strong, I have been induced to publish this abstract.

Twenty-two years of sticking to the thing, working always toward the day when it could be called "finished"—it is such work that the world rewards with its highest honors.

"At the Day of Doom," says Christian in Pilgrim's Progress, "men shall be judged by their fruits. It will not be said then, 'Did you believe?' but, 'Were you doers or talkers only?' "

It's a very good thing to look forward occasionally to the end of the chapter—to the day when your work will be done and you must accept the record as you have written it.

Talk, good resolutions, things begun and left in the middle—all these are pretty unsatisfactory items to show up in the final report.

It's the things you have started and finished—great or small—that look good when you get to the end.

Let's join the company of finishers: let's be able to say at the end: "Such and such things I did, and finished. They are my monument—the evidence that it was worth while for me to have lived."

TWO MARVELLOUS VOYAGES

The growing light of the autumn morning greying the eastern sky showed to scared watchers on the beach three strange ships that had, apparently, sprung from nowhere during the night. And the watchers on the beach were scared, too, for though this was the year 1492, not one of them had ever seen a ship before in his or her life.

Then stranger things commenced to happen. Something dropped from one of the ships—caravels, their crews called them—and into it stepped men. Then it commenced to row ashore. This the watchers understood, for they used small boats themselves. Slowly it made its way towards the tiny islet standing like an outpost of the New World, a tall, gaunt man, verging on middle age and dressed richly in scarlet, standing in its bow, with a gold-bedecked flag dropping from its staff in his hand.

The boat touched land, and the tall man, in an ecstasy of joy, with his great eyes glinting with pride, flung himself to the sand. Presently he kissed the dry ground; then, with tears of deep emotion rolling down his cheeks, drew his sword, raised his flag, and proclaimed that he annexed the land as part of the dominions of his Majesty Fernando, King of Spain.

After a Perilous Voyage.

He was Christopher Columbus, the doyen of all Transatlantic voyagers, a dour personage, who, during his forty-and-one years, had "undergone trials not a few."

Behind him lay a voyage of seventy days, wherein he had seen no land or anything made by men that floated on the sea. His high-bowed and high-sterned caravel, Sancta Maria, driven by snowy sails with a scarlet cross emblazoned on them, had carried him at a slow eight knots across the hitherto uncharted waters, the sport of the tides, dependent upon Nature's winds for her propulsion in the right direction.

Columbus' crews were unwilling explorers. It is on record that some were felons brought from prisons to make up the companies of the three ships. A few crude navigation instruments and the sun and stars were all his aids in the keeping of a due-west course, and the caravels had neither speech nor sight of their fellow-men until, seven months after they set out, they once again made Spain. Only then could those who granted Columbus permission to make the venture be told of its success or failure.

And the only authentic record of the trip is contained in a hand-printed book made at the dictation of Columbus months after he had recovered from the fatigue and exhaustion ensuing upon his truly epoch-making Transatlantic voyage.

The Pioneer of the Airway.

But to-day school children learn that Christopher Columbus discovered America on October 12th, 1492, and how the path blazoned by Sancta Maria and her two frail consorts countless ships come and go with the commerce and travellers of the Old and the New Worlds.

The grey light of a wind-driven sky almost hid the cigar-shaped hull of the great ship that had suddenly sailed into the purview of the thousands of eager eyes watching for her advent. Steam-whistles hooted and syrens yelled, while the waiting crowds sent up cheer after cheer to welcome this pioneer of aerial navigation.

Then the great ship of the air stopped, and hovered at a height of two hundred feet above the huge field which had been specially made ready for her reception. Suddenly a small speck detached itself from one of the microscopic carriages slung under her belly, and fell perhaps twenty feet like a stone.

Then it seemed to stop, and a parachute opened out, revealing to the astounded watchers a British officer descending to the ground to supervise the berthing of his Britannic Majesty's Airship R-34.

This pioneer from the clouds carried a flag, nor could he annex land in the name of the sovereign to whom he owed allegiance. He did not kiss the earth, though he was unfeignedly glad to feel it beneath his feet, nor did he cry with joy. Instead, he set about seeing that the specially-trained mooring parties of American aviation mechanics made R-34's anchors properly fast to her moorings.

Then the great airship commenced to sink lower and lower till her belly almost touched the ground, and from her gondolas there stepped less than a score of men.

With Every Scientific Aid.

Behind R-34 lay a voyage of 3,130 miles, performed in 108 hours and 12 minutes, or just over four and a half days. The great airship, 675 ft. long, had fought baffling gales and atmospheric storms, and nosed through fogs at an average speed of nearly thirty knots per hour, despite the fact that her petrol supplies were growing alarmingly short. Never had she been the sport of the winds, nor had she been compelled to grope her way, for skilled navigators, armed with ultra scientific instruments, had guided her on the shortest route across the trackless wastes of air.

Her crew were all volunteers—indeed, one of them was so eager to make the passage that he stowed himsef away. Never was R-34 for a moment unable to establish communication with her starting point and destination, for at intervals her wireless told of her progress, and even summoned aid to stand by her when her fuel threatened to give out.

And in less than a minute after she had touched ground, wireless telegraphy told the whole world of her feat. And hundreds of cinema cameras filmed her as she hovered and landed, and thousands of people the same night witnessed in photographs the thrilling scene.

And in the days to come the school children will be taught that Airship R-34 made the first voyage from Great Britain to America, and reached New York on July 6th, 1919.

Sancta Maria, under Columbus' orders, opened up the ocean pathways to and from America; R-34, commanded by Major Scott, R.A.F., has opened up the aerial tracks, and surely it is not too much to prophesy that airships will, in the not-far-distant future, be as numerous in the air above as surface ships are on the broad bosom of the Atlantic.

A LOVER WHO WAS ABSENT-MINDED.

A great many stories have been told of the extreme absent-mindedness of learned men, but none is more amusing than that told of Ludwig Bruggemann, whose vivid imagination helped to put him in a very embarrassing situation.

Bruggemann, a scholar, who was in 1817 a councillor of the consistory at Stettin, had got some reputation by his clever work with statistics. For many years he had been a widower, and since he found single life lonely, he began to look round for a wife. When the thought of marrying again first came to him, he immediately confided it to one of his friends. The latter gave him every encouragement, and even went so far as to mention a certain charming little widow, who was certainly attached to him, and would make him a most devoted wife.

That night Bruggman went to bed in a happy state of mind, thinking of the lovely widow. In his dreams he still saw her, and even proposed to her. Did she refuse? How could she! And he spent the remainder of the night dreaming of the happiness they would enjoy as man and wife.

When he awoke, it was a glorious Sunday morning. He dressed himself in his best and wasted no time in handing to the minister the announcement of his engagement, to be read in due form at the morning service. The announcement was made without a question. Hardly had the words been uttered when a little scream was heard in the rear of the church; the widow, shocked at hearing herself so unexpectedly disposed of, had fallen in a swoon.

The blunder could never be satisfactorily explained, and the visionary engagement remained visionary. The lady might not have refused an honorable proposal from the councilor, but she never could be convinced that he had not made intentional game of her.

A MOTHER'S TRIALS

Care of Home and Children Often Causes a Breakdown.

The woman at home, deep in household duties and the cares of motherhood, needs occasional help to keep her in good health. The demands upon a mother's health are many and severe. Her own health trials and her children's welfare exact heavy toils, while hurried meals, broken rest and much indoor living tend to weaken her constitution. No wonder that the woman at home is often indisposed through weakness, headaches, backaches and nervousness. Too many women have grown to accept these visitations as a part of the lot of motherhood. But many and varied as her health troubles are, the cause is simple and the cure at hand. When well, it is the woman's good blood that keeps her well; when ill she must make her blood rich to renew her health. The nursing mother more than any other woman in the world needs rich blood and plenty of it. There is one always unfailing way to get this good blood so necessary to perfect health, and that is through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills make new blood abundantly, and through their use thousands of weak, ailing wives and mothers have been made bright, cheerful and strong. If you are ailing, easily tired, or depressed, it is a duty you owe yourself and your family to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial. What this medicine has done for others it will surely do for you.

Chinese Medicine.

Dried frogs and asbestos are common ingredients in the "order" which the Chinese doctor prescribes for his patient. For the sake of variety he may include in the prescription any of the following for which the patient perhaps may express a preference: Scorpions, rhinoceros skins, wood shavings, flies, crushed pebbles, moths, centipedes, toads, lizards, caterpillars, powdered snakes or wasps.

She'd Learned.

The puppy had been punished, and was sulking in a corner.

To him came the small daughter of the house, to administer, not comfort, but advice.

"You may just as well be good first as last, Spot," she admonished. "Everybody that belongs to mother has got to mind. I've been through it all—and I know."

MULTIPLE THINKING.

It has been asserted that the brain can function directly upon only one thought at a time and that the apparent multitude of matters considered by the mind in a minimum of time is due to the rapidity with which thought moves from one to the other. For instance, two objects that form one mental picture, as two horses, may be visualized at once; yet distant things, as a city and a mountain, are entertained by the mental faculties, not at the same instant, but in rapid succession.

Take the example of a man seated at a piano and singing. Before him is the sheet of music, perhaps new to him. In the lines and spaces the notes have different meanings or places in the octave of the keyboard, according as they are in the bass or the treble clef. The player's two hands are busied with these two lines of music, which are thus of slightly different meaning and are altogether different in performance, having in common only harmony and time. There are also the composer's annotations, or directions for emphasis, to which the player gives regard or not, as he pleases. Then there are the printed words of the song to be read and to be sung. Also the player's foot must sometimes operate the pedal, which, in addition, it is the experence that unrelated thoughts enter his mind; the probable pleasure or dislike of the audience and even memories recent or far in the past. With all that the music must be executed in proper time.

Thus at the same instant the performer may be busied with four lines of text; two of the notes, one of the musical annotation, one of words; his foot operating the pedal, his two hands finding the notes on the keyboard to which he occasionally looks, while his voice is engaged in song, and his emotions enter into the singing and playing, together with thought of external, unrelated matters.

It seems too much to allow the argument here that the entire reading is done with infinite rapidity between the playing of the notes, and that the mind then directs the hands to press the keys and the voice to sing at the proper moment, and then releases itself from that part in order to sweep across the four lines of text for the next measure or part of a measure. It is true that the muscles have some automatic powers, yet there must be some mental supervision simultaneously directed over the complete performance.

Weeping Potatoes.

Traveller (to Irishman): "Well, Pat, I see you have a small garden."

"Yes, sorr."

"What is it set with?"

"Nothing, sorr. I set it with potatoes last year, and not one of them came up."

"That's strange! How do you explain that?"

"Well, sorr, the man next door to me set his garden full of onions."

"Well, had that anything to do with your potatoes not growing?"

"Yes, sorr. Bedad, them onions was that strong that my potatoes couldn't see to grow because of their eyes watering."

Lost Arms Without Pain.

Our story of a man being blown away, unhurt, by the explosion of a bomb which he did not hear must seem incredible to many people. Here is something like an analogy.

King Edward once brought together at his dinner table Rustem Pasha, who had had half his right hand and part of his arm torn off by a bear, and Sir Edward Bradford, who had had his left arm up to the elbow mulched away by a tiger.

The two men compared notes. Neither had felt the least twinge of pain at the time. They imagined that their intense desire to save their lives dulled all other senses.

Under-Sees.

The little man made his way back to the box office. This seat number sounds like a German submarine; it's U-19," he said.

"You don't want to exchange it merely on that account, do you?" asked the ticket man.

"No, but I thought you might be able to supply me with a periscope to see over the big woman just in front."

BITS OF HUMOR FROM HERE & THERE

A Mysterious Language.

A Frenchman who was learning English read a little every morning in an English newspaper. One day he was sorely puzzled.

"What ees this?" he asked a friend. "Your English ees a puzzle."

The friend took the paper and read: "Should Mr. Binks, who sat for the Mudville constituency in 19—, consent to stand again and be run, he would probably have a walk-over."

No Such Mistake For Him.

The stingiest man was scoring the hired man for his extravagance in wanting to carry a lantern in going to call on his best girl.

"The idea!" he scoffed. "When I was courtin' I never carried no lantern. I went in the dark."

The hired man proceeded to fill the lantern.

"Yes," he said sadly, "and look what you got."

Too Bad.

Little Bobbie (to sister's sweetheart): "May I climb on to your knee, Mr. Drabble?"

Mr. Drabble: "Yes, Bobbie, if you like. Want to pull my moustache, eh?"

"No; I want to see if I can find that word."

"What word?"

"Why, I heard my sister say that if ever a man had the word 'noodle' written on his face it was you."

Misplaced Sympathy.

There were two Browns in the village, both fishermen. One lost his wife and the other his boat at about the same time.

The vicar's wife called, as she supposed, on the widower, but really upon the Brown whose boat had gone down.

"I am so sorry to hear of your great loss," she said.

"Oh, it ain't much matter," was the philosophical reply. "she wasn't up to much."

"Indeed!" said the surprised lady.

"Yes," continued Brown, "she was a rickety old thing. I offered her to my mate, but he wouldn't have her. I've had my eye on another for some time."

And then the outraged lady fled.

Too Slow.

"Please, mother says these matches won't strike!"

From behind his counter the grocer looked down on the child with the air of an insulted saint.

"Won't strike?" he said." "Why, look here!" And he struck one on his leg.

The child departed home to tell his mother of the mistake she had made. But in a very short time he was back at the shop with the matches, which he laid on the counter with an air of finality.

"Mother says she hasn't time to come and strike matches on your trousers!"

Tells how to loosen a sore, tender corn so it lifts out without pain.

Good news spreads rapidly and druggists here are kept busy dispensing freezone, the ether discovery of a Cincinnati man, which is said to loosen any corn so it lifts out with the fingers.

Ask at any pharmacy for a quarter ounce of freezone, which will cost very little, but is said to be sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You apply just a few drops on the tender, aching corn and instantly the soreness is relieved, and soon the corn is so shriveled that it lifts out without pain. It is a sticky substance which dries when applied and never inflames or even irritates the adjoining tissue.

This discovery will prevent thousands of deaths annually from lockjaw and infection heretofore resulting from the suicidal habit of cutting corns.

An Exception in Daylight Saving

The daylight saving laws effective in many countries have never been placed in operation in the Panama Canal Zone. This is for the reason that there is very little seasonal change in the time of sunrise and sunset for this latitude (approximately 9 degrees north).

The earliest sunrises, occuring in May and June, are approximately 6 o'clock, and latest, in January and February, about 6.35. The earliest sunsets, in November, occur at about 5.50, and the latest, in June and July, at approximately 6.40. The usual working hours in the Canal Zone being from 7 in the morning until 5 in the afternoon, the morning margin of daylight before work varies from twenty minutes to one hour. The evening period of light between 5 o'clock and the beginning of twilight (sunset) varies from fifty minutes to one hour and thirty-five minutes. To advance the time one hour would throw the 7 a.m. workers into the twilight period and tend to reduce rather than increase their hours of daylight labor. The morning twilight period is about half an hour the year round, the evening twilight slightly longer.

In the latitude of Southern Ontario, sunrise varies from about 4.20 a.m. in June to 7.35 the first part of January, or three hours and a quarter, as compared with a variation of thirty-five minutes through the year in the Canal Zone. Sunset varies from about 4.25 p.m. in December to 7.40 in June and July, three hours and a quarter, as compared with the fifty minutes variation in the Canal Zone between earliest and latest sunset. The twilight period is about the same. Daylight hours are about eight hours and fifty-five minutes at the least in southern Ontario, and approximately fifteen hours and twenty minutes at the most. In the Canal Zone the hours of daylight range from approximately eleven hours and thirty-five minutes to twelve hours and thirty-five minutes.

The office of the chief hydrographer of the Canal Zone has recently furnished the police stations with charts showing the daylight, twilight and darkness periods through the months. They are of use for occasional reference in testimony as to the degree of light existing at the time under investigation, as in traffic accidents, or where the possibility of having witnessed an occurrence is questionable by reason of the degree of light at the time. The street lighting schedule is also to be arranged by the charts.

PICKLES

ThePic kling season is now on hand and Mullin Bros. will as usual have a full stock of Pure Spices and Vinegar. This is the one department where quality counts. It is a false economy to waste time and material on low grade spices and vinegar for Pickling. We could buy some grades at half what we pay for them and consequently sell them at a lower price, but the Public would not get the satisfaction that they get in buying the best spices and vinegar.

SPICES

We carry all the varieties ground and whole spices used in pickling and the best pure spices that we can procure.

VINEGAR

We carry Wilsons Pure white spirits and cider Vinegar which we sell at a reasonable price.
