Village Council Meets Tuesday Night Hydro Business is Discussed at Length

Chesterville council met in session Tuesday of this week for the September meeting. Present were all councillors and the reeve. Clerk H. C. Hummel was present.

Hydro affairs took some time. The new installation to be made on Mill Street to service Messrs S. Barrie and Sons was discussed at length. Due to the installation of a 30-h.p. motor at the mill, heavier wire conductors and new, heavier transformers will be needed to supply the mill needs from the town system. The work is going forward at once.

The commission received notice that the yearly cost per k.w. had gone up from the first of September. The cost increases from $39.25 per k.w. per year to $43.75 per k w. per year.

Rehabilitation of the village system is complete for the year. The final bill of $4,829.22 was on hand to make a total expenditure of around $10,000, as was planned for 1955.

Discussion arose about the hydro truck and the outcome was the appointment of a committee of two, Messrs Sharkey and Arnold, to check the truck and costs of repair with a view to get it into more presentable shape. It was also noted that from now on the truck was to be stored in the municipal and hydro building at night. Snow removal from the driveway would be looked after by the town.

To facilitate the testing of service meters for the town, the tester was given permission to instal a testing board in the hydro office. To do so will mean that the hydro building will finally be wired for lights.

Council affairs took little time. After the reading of the minutes, Fire Chief John Hehir presented a bill for the Len Moran bog fire that threatened the dwelling there. The fire will cost the township $75. Mr Hehir re-opened the question about having some alterations done at the fire hall. It was decided to have the clerk get estimates on lowering the hall ceiling, having the end of the hose drying tower removed so the truck can back straight from the street and find out the cost of widening the main door again.

A supplementary estimate for roads and bridges was passed asking for grants on an expenditure of $4,000.

Among the monies received by the town in the past month was a cheque for $1,641. This was the per capita grant that comes each year. The town population is up the necessary seven per cent from the last payment so a further small cheque will be arriving. Fees and fines came to $58.05 for July from Magistrate Donald Smith.

Councillors noted the passing of Daylight Saving Time on September 24 at midnight and at 10 p.m. locked up and went home.

School Patrol — To Be or Not To Be?

School opened here on Tuesday and as is always the case, the old town suddenly comes to life. After summer drowsiness, the sudden rush and lively voices of the children on the streets is refreshing and awakening. It is easy for us to forget now the unhappiness at having to go back to school after an easy summer on the farm, and a couple of hatfuls of years away from school would seem to make the return to the old halls of learning a desired thing. Unfortunately we can't think the same at school age.

Last Spring much time was spent in organizing a school patrol. Its announced purpose was to keep the streets patrolled and clear at noon hour especially. It was intended to have the organizing completed by the beginning of thes school term.

Convention Time Again

Each year about this time members of the fourth estate in the weekly field get the bug to attend a convention of themselves and their wives. It is the yearly get-together of publishers and editors and their wives from all across Canada. They gather under the banner of the Canadian Weekly Newspaper Association and when all the strays are gathered in it is called the largest family gathering in Canada.

This year the convention is scheduled to take place in Hotel Vancouver, Vancouver, B.C., from September 12 to September 14. This writer and his wife will be on their way to attend the convention as these lines are being read by the Record's readers.

We hope to send back a few impressions of the trips—if the postal service is prompt enough.

Idylls of a Suburbanite

There was a time when, if a man wanted his lawn watered, he stood on it with a hose. Now he sets out a sprinkler. This showers the lawn in great circles. All the man has to do is turn the tap on and off, and move the sprinkler from time to time so that the circles overlap. He may have even less than this to do, for there are sprinklers which creep their own way across the lawn, watering in neat rectangles. And some folk have piped sprinkler systems to do the whole job at once.

The advent of such household robots has long permitted the man to leave certain chores to them while he does others. But the multiplicity of robots now takes care of these others. This permits him to do something else.

The dinner dishes, maybe? But an electric dishwasher can take care of those. Obviously the man is coming into that ennobled state in which he can devote his leisure hours to contemplation. But as with every Utopia, the beautiful simplicities of this one vanish as it is approached.

Thinking, musing, ruminating seem less delectable pastimes when there is nothing to interfere with them. And they are more difficult to do well when one is liberated from other activities. What has become of the thoughts the man had while watering the grass by hand now that he is merely sitting watching the sprinkler do it?

It is nice to watch a sprinkler sending drops toward you in an arc with a sweep like horses coming over high hurdles. But it does not exercise the thought the way using a hose does. It does not suggest problems in military strategy as when the man soaked first one side of an area, then another, and then closed in victoriously from both sides.

Nor does hearing the electric dishwasher turn itself off start the thought working—as on ways to escape being asked to dry them. For the contraption will do that, too.

If it were not for the ball game coming over the radio, what would the man do to keep himself feeling like part of a living, moving, exciting world? But there is, at least the radio. And if he wants to hear the ball game he must listen for himself.

And that is why the man's wife, bringing him a cold drink as the game goes into the sixth inning, decides to take the drink back to the refrigerator, pulls down the blinds, shuts off the radio and tiptoes out of the room, smiling.

He Keeps Them Under Wraps

If you were to ask Norman Burkhim, "Wrap it up please," you might need a truck to haul it away. Then again, Burkhim would probably wrap the truck for you as well.

Since the 54-year-old San Francisco-born Burkhim began wrapping things during the war, he's literally packaged everything from "a feather to a locomotive."

Like most unusual enterprises, Burkhim's was born of necessity. Because 87 per cent of all materiel shipped into the Pacific in the first year of World War II was destroyed due to faulty packing, Burkhim's career in packing was launched. Since then his loss because of packaging has been less than one-tenth of one per cent.

For the Office of War Information, under direct Presidential command, Burkhim used highly tehnical methods to pack electronics equipment together with complete radio stations and towers.

One of his outstanding packing jobs was the delivery of over 300 tons of materiel to a jobsite 700 miles up the Yangtze River in China without loss or damage.

His plnat, now called Pacific Ports Industries, covers 5¼ acres and employs an average of 200 people. Facilities include a complete box-making and woodworking factory.

As well as wrapping hundreds of items for the government. Pacific Ports packs all products for the University of California Radiation Laboratory at Livermore, Calif., which is contracted to the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. They also wrap helicopters and parts for the armed services as well as shipping the commercially for Hiller Helicopters to all parts of the world.

They have just completed shipping the 20th helicopter to the Police Department of Bangkok. The Bangkok police use the ships for crowd dispersal and border patrol.

Because it would take almost two hours to truck a helicopter from the Hiller plant to Palo Alto, pilots ferry the ships across San Francisco Bay in 15 minutes, dropping the "whirly-birds" right in Burkhim's back yard.

They are immediately dismantled and wrapped in parts. Cockpit, motors and tail sections are specially vacuum-wrapped and separately crated. One 'copter takes three huge boxes, with 50 pieces being individually wrapped and preserved.

Because metal parts, such as bearings, have been known to be ruined by acid from a human fingertip during shipment, Pacific Ports maintains a fingerprint removal department. They also use such unusual-sounding pieces of equipment as vapour degreasers and derusting tanks.

Burkhim's life has been unusual as the business that now occupies his time. During World War I he joined the French Army and saw service with an air squadron as a buck private. When the U.S. entered the fracas he transferred to Pershing's forces—still a buck private.

Although he did not know a ring post from a boxing glove he tried his hand at fight promoting in the early thirties. He became a publicity man, a salesman and even spent some time script writing for Warner Brothers in Hollywood.

But now he's all wrapped up in his big business. He may not use fancy ribbons like the gifl in the department store but if you say, "Wrap it to last 10 years, 10 years later it'll be as good as new.

Light Along The Way

It has been said that man is a creature of habit. Much of his conduct is governed by the pattern he has fallen into, at one time or another, and become so fixed that it is him. Thus some say grace before meals, as a matter of course, and others do not, for the same reason. Some car drivers 'remember' to signal when they are about to make a turn, others do not because they have not got into the habit of doing so.

It is true that many of the habits which people develop appear very insignificant on examination. However, it is the contention of all those who have thought about the matter that the complexity of a man's personality is largely the result of the habits he has developed. Hannah Moore wrote: "Small habits well pursued betimes may reach the dignity of crimes." John Dryden put the same thought in different words: "Ill habits gather by unseen degrees/As brooks make rivers, rivers run to seas."

While most men are not criminals, thank goodness, they would, nevertheless, be better men if they gave themselves to the building up of those habits which yield the best for life. The criminal represents the end result of bad habits, so the good life is the result of good habits. This is what John Tyndall said: "The formation of right habits is essential to your permanent security. They diminish your chance of falling when assailed and they augment your chance of recovery when overthrown.

Habits wield far more power over us than we usually recognize. The Bible says: "Ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein." It goes on to describe the Master Himself as one who leaned heavily upon habit, for: "As his custom was, He went into the synagogue . . ."

OBEYED REGULATIONS WOULDN'T CROSS TRACKS

A railroad wig-wag signal stopped a Greyhound bus for two hours the other night at Modesto, Calif., although there wasn't a train in sight.

The signal had stuck. It wagged and wagged. The bus driver refused to cross the tracks. Thirty passenger, at first incredulous, became angry as minutes ticked away. "Come on! Let's go!" they shouted to the driver, Darrel W. Dreier, Pedro Valley. He said "No" and cited State Public Utilities Commission rules.

After a half hour's delay, police and railroad people started a search for William Brown, the signal maintenance man. He could not be found. Automobiles arrived frequently at the crossing. Drivers sighted up and down the line, drove around the bus and across the tracks.

Finally a switch engine came puffing along the tracks, moved a freight car standing on the wigwag signal's foot, and the bus went on its way.

DUST LAYING MATERIAL UNDER TESTS

The Ontario Paper Company announced that it has developed a dust-laying material as a by-product from its newsprint mill at Thorold.

The company calls the product "aqualig" and says it is a neutralized lignin sulfonic acid containing some wood sugars. Most of the wood sugars have been removed, however, so treated road surfaces won't become sticky when wet. It is said to be non-corrosive to running gear, bodies or tires of autos.

Officials said the new product proved effective in a year of testing on parking lots, gravel roads and playgrounds, principally in the Niagara peninsula. The city of Hamilton used it in swimming pool areas and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario on haul roads for its Niagara Falls power development project.

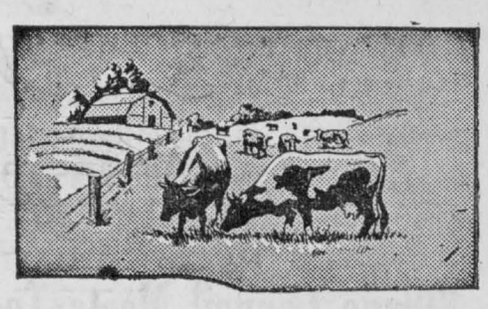
FRENDLEE FARM CHATS



By Lillian Allison

I wish I could get all the Canadian people between the ages of 6 and 18 in one place for half an hour this week and hypnotize them sufficiently to make them sit still and listen to me. I know they wouldn't appreciate what I'd say but at least I'd have the satisfaction of saying it.

First I'd try to impress upon them the privilege that is their's in being able to attend our Canadian schools. I'd tell them about other countries — India, Africa, China—where only one child in a hundred or maybe a thousand has the opportunity to learn to read and write. How they have to work in the fields for long hours every day and never know what it is to be able to write their own names.

I'd tell them how thankful they should be that they can attend schools. One time, even in a progressive country like England, only children whose parents were rich could learn to read and write, for education cost a lot of money and the poor couldn't afford it. Now schools are free and the very poorest of our families can send their boys and girls to school for little or nothing until they've completed their High School course.

I would advise the group to be co-operative. Although there are a few teachers left who are hateful and tyrannical most teachers are good and interested in the progress and well-being of their pupils. They're anxious to see their classes get ahead and the least those classes can do is to try. There is nothing to be gained by skipping homework and attempting to get by with a minimum of work. It isn't the teacher a pupil is gyping, it is himself.

Then I'd say: Don't be a problem student. I'm not against fun, of course, and I think most teachers can take a joke now and then. But don't be a smart-aleck—the one who is always creating trouble. If you are naturally mischievous learn to control yourself during the schoolday. For self discipline is really a more important part of your education than learning to spell and multiply.

Then I'd tell that group of young people to get the most they possibly can out of their school days. They only last for a sixth or a seventh of their life span so they should be lived to the hilt. Play on the ball team, I'd say. Enter into the sports programme. Sing at the Music Festival. Help with the Christmas concert or the commencement and do your best.

Do your best in your day-to-day work too. If the teacher says to answer two questions, answer three. If the course demands that you read four books, read eight. Don't just learn 200 lines of memory work, learn 400. You'll never be sorry that you did. I wish now that I had done it that way.

Don't be discouraged, I'd warn them, if you aren't at the top of the class. And don't be too proud if you are. "There's no glory in outstripping donkeys." The person to beat is yourself. Be proud when your average is 10 per cent better than it was last time. That is progress.

And then I'd tell them to stay by it. The person I'd love to lick is the student who can pass examinations with apparent ease and then stops school at Grade X to get a job. Don't be satisfied with anything but all the school has to offer. Keep at it if it kills you until you get your Sr. Matric. You're still young enough to go out into the world on your own. You'll have to make your living for a long time so don't be in too much of a hurry to get started.

And when I came to the part about choosing a vocation I'd urge them to choose well. There are so many things that people can do these days the choice is extremely difficult. But choose the job you want to do before you ask about the salary, I'd advise. The satisfaction you will derive from doing the work you like is of much greater value than the blue cheque you will carry home in your pocket.

And if the job you desire requires a college education and you have the capacity to absorb a college education don't stop until you've been through university. That part isn't free but if you want it you can have it whether you're rich or not. You'll have to work for it but you'll appreciate it more.

Then in closing I would say to all these boys and girls, whatever you do get an education. You'll never regret it. I've lived quite a while now and I've never heard anyone say he was sorry he hadn't stopped school earlier and got a job. I've heard dozens, though, wish that they had a Sr. Matric. or a college degree.

Outdoor Roundup

with Joe Foster

There is an old saying to the effect that "if you want to find out about a man, get him in a poker game or take him hunting." Very few gunners like to hunt alone, and most of them welcome any opportunity to team up with a congenial shooting partner. They are, however, somewhat reluctant to run the risk of getting stuck for a day in the bush or the duck blind with some thoughtless or careless character who persistently violates the unwritten laws of sportsmanship. They make that mistake with the same individual only once. Each fall a new batch of nimrods take to the woods, fields and marshes for the first time, more often than not accompanied by a friend who is an experienced hunter. For these new hunters and for some old hunters who should know better—a word of caution.

Watch Your Step

If you get yourself invited to go hunting with an experienced gunner who knows how and where to take game, watch your step carefully. You can rest assured that your every action is being observed and while your friend will in all probability make every effort to give you the best of everything, you can just bet your bottom dollar that you're on probation with him just the same.

The Right Sort of Guy

There are a few little courtesies which, if observed, will put you in solid with your hunting companion. Their importance may not be immediately obvious but the observance of them will make the day afield far more pleasant, not only for your host, but for you too. Above all things never take a chance. Observe all the rules of safety, even though your companion doesn't. You'll impress him with your caution. Give your companion all the breaks. The accepted practice is to alternate the single shots. Easiest way to incur the wrath of your hunting host is to try to 'wipe his eye.'

Don't Be a Claimer

Don't claim birds you are not absolutely sure you killed. If there is the slightest doubt, don't run the risk of being branded a 'claimer.' If your companion is built that way, you'll soon enough find it out. Notice which side your friend shoots from . . . then take the other side. Never shoot at birds flying across a gunner's front unless you know his gun is empty. Then explain your action to him.

If You Value Frienship

Don't try to handle your companion's hunting dogs. And never criticize the dog's faults. Rather praise his good work and ignore the bad. Give the dog a chance to retrieve your bird and look for it yourself only if absolutely necessary. One last DON'T and this harangue is ended. Never, but never hunt in your friend's favourite spot which he has shown you, unless he is along or you have his consent. Violation of this courtesy has led to the ending of many a friendship.

Nobody Wants to Get Wet

Least of all the duck hunters—water's usually cold and the hunter muffled from head to toe in chill-

PRESS AS YOU SEW

Home-sewn garments can have a professional look, if you press as you sew.

Gladys Meloche, clothing speciadist at the University of Wisconsin, says the trick is to press each part of the garment before it is joined another. After making a seam, open it and press it flat before going to another seam. Press it in the same direction as stitched.

Curved areas which fit the rounded parts of the body need to be shaped. That is done by using a pressing cushion to get rounded darts and sleeve caps.

Rastus: "Quick, Sam, a wildcat just ra into the house where your wife is."

Sam: "Well, he'll just have to getout the best way he can, that's all."

WAILING BANSHEE JUST A ROOSTER

A. Holden Wood's rooster had a "very peculiar crow," a neighbour complained in court.

It was "like the wailing of a banshee," and worse—"when it starts crowing just after 5 a.m., you have to get up and make a cup of tea. You can't sleep again until it stops crowing at 8.30 a.m."

Holden, who claimed the bird's forebears came to England with the Roman Conquest, was fined 1 pound in a Manchester, Eng., court for failing to obey an order to abate a nuisance.

"It's strange, but this is the first morning the rooster hasn't crowed," the neighbour said as the case closed.

STORKS DISAPPEARING BEHIND IRON CURTAIN

The storks of Denmark, for centuries famous in legend as Denmark's traditional birds, are disappearing behind the Iron Curtain and nobody knows why.

Half a century ago, there were more than 4,000 pairs of storks which migrated each year to Denmark and made their nests there. Last year, only 210 couples and 30 lone birds were counted.

Hans Christian Andersen, the great Danish story teller, often wrote about storks in his famous fairy tales, and ornithologists believe that during his lifetime, as many as 18,000 pairs arrived every year in Denmark. The legend about storks bringing babies is believed to have started there.

The 210 pairs last year produced between them 449 young storks. In 1953 only 177 pairs were found, with 307 young. In that year, 80 unmated storks made the long migratory flight to Denmark alone.

While the number of storks in Denmark has shrunk to a small proportion of what it was within living memory, stork migrations to the Iron Curtain countries, according to Danish scientists, have greatly increased.

Professor Hans Johansen, of the Danish Zoological Musueum, says: "The decline is found not only in Denmark but also in other Western European countries, where these birds were formerly seen in large numbers, although not so frequently as in Denmark."

Reason why the number of storks visiting Denmark and other Western European lands has declined is not known.

Ornithologists know that they prefer marshy moors and open spaces. As a result of the greater utilization of the land in Denmark, these have become fewer. But even under its present intensive land cultivation, it is believed that several thousand storks could easily live there, if they wanted to.

MORE THAN EXPECTED

An ex-navy cook now driving a laundry truck in Atlantic City, N.J., became a near millionaire at the expense of the government—but only temporarily.

James J. Johnson, 23, was discharged from the navy after serving four years. He already received one $100 cheque towards his mustering-out pay, and expected another.

When the government cheque arrived, however, it was made out to him for $800,100.

Johnson said he returned the cheque to the navy in Philadelphia where it was issued, pointing out the obvious error.

"It was a little bit more than expected," he said.

Make it Stick With Proper Glue

The other day a housewife tried to mend a broken china plate with ordinary vegetable glue. The project literally "fell apart." The moral of this story is that you can't do a good job unless you have the proper tools.

The easiest way to determine whether a glue is the best one for your purpose is to read the label on the tube or the jar. The lady who wanted to mend the broken plate would have been successful with a pyroxlin-base household cement.

As its name implies, household cement is about the most useful glue to have around, since it sticks to almost anything except rubber. It's good for mending broken china, glass, wood, metal, pearl and ivory, as well as repairing tears in leather, paper and fabrics.

Cementing plastics together is a little more tricky. Plastic glues generally don't work well on plastics. In most cases, a rubber-base cement or adhesive will do the job best.

However, plastic glues do work well on wood. Plastic resin glue is used extensively in the manufacture of furniture, pianos and boats. These extremely strong plastic adhesives are especially good for close-fitting wood joints. They are moisture-resistant and, because they're light-coloured, there's no danger of staining the wood.

Remember, the idea that any glue will glue anything is wrong; there's a specific glue for each job.

Boy: "Mother, I wish you would quit caling me 'little lamb' when people are around."

Mother: "Why, lamb?"

Boy: "Because it makes me feel sheepish."

The car, left in reverse gear, backed out of the driveway and into a parked car.

ANY MONEY IN HOGS?

Well, a lot depends on the size and sort of litter you get—and raise, doesn't it? Get a good big litter of good big thrifty pigs and you're well away. Get your sow in condition to give them lots of good milk, and you're away still better. That's why we rec-ommend steady (not heavy) feeding with Purina Sow & Pig Chow, both before and after farrowing.

Ever see a farm with 120 sows or so? That's what they have at the Purina Research Farm. They aim at two litters a year, and keep full figures—birth weight, weaning weight, and so on—on all of them. Some undertaking! Altogether, they have studied over 3,500 farrowings and raised over 35,000 pigs. That gives you some idea of what's behind Purina Sow & Pig Chow.

Condition counts on a sow just the same as on a cow. If she's going to milk well, she has to be in condition to milk. And you know how important a good supply of good milk is for the little fellows. Steady (not heavy) feeding of Purina Sow & Pig Chow both before and after farrowing will help her deliver the goods.

Purina Research Farm figures on relationship between weight at birth, weight at weaning, and weight later on show a very significant correlation. They saved for more of the pigs (2½ lbs. and over and got far more weight on them by weaning time, and got them to market weight considerably sooner. Points up the need for good balanced feeding of the sow before farrowing, doesn't it?

CAUTION ADVISED IN CHOOSING A NAME

A couple had twins. They wanted one christened Peter and the other "Repeter."

Another couple had twin girls. They wanted one christened Kate and the other "Duplikate."

So says the Rev John Jackson, vicar of St. John's Church, Birmingham, Eng. In each case, he said in a letter to his parishioners, he persuaded the parents to drop the idea.

Mr Jackson said he thinks the Church of England should lay down rules banning absurd names at baptisms and so prevent children from going through life with a grudge "because of the labels tacked on their helpless heads."

Quebec Women Earn Money From Hand-Looms

A shop in the heart of old Quebec is helping farm women earn money at their hand-operated looms.

The co-operative store, founded nine years ago, sells the woven and knitted goods produced by country wives during the winter months when farming chores are light.

Some 175 women from this district produce the colourful garments, draperies, bedspreads and table linens which attract the tourist's eye.

Florence Lanthier, a 25-year-old employee, said visitors to the city "look on their handicrafts as answers to their prayers. The Americans, particularly, are impressed with our woollens."

Each item which carries the tab of the shop La Co-operative d' Arts Domestiques— is marked by simplicity of design and brightness of colour. For patterns, many of the farm women rely on Quebec rural scenes and work in pictures of habitant homes.

Although the rural women turn out the fabric on old-fashioned looms, they do not spin the thread themselves. It is purchased at discount rates from the shop.

The weavers pay $50 fees for membership in the co-operative and their goods are sold at a 50 per cent mark-up.

The shop, first of its kind in the province, was founded by farm women's clubs with the co-operation of the provincial department of home economics.

Its purpose is to develop small handicraft industries in rural areas by providing an outlet for the goods.

The farm women have little difficulty in adapting the old techniques to modern fashions. Some of their skirts, for both mother and child, have brightly-coloured bands woven at the waist or hem.

Small items, such as crocheted purses, hand-made ties, rag dolls and even some ceramics, also are carried. Some of the cloth in heavy weaves is sold in bolts to be finished later into draperies and bedspreads by the buyer.

HE CURES WARTS BY BUYING THEM

Two British doctors said recently they cured children's warts by "buying" them for a few pennies each and telling the children the blemishes would soon disappear.

And, believe it or not, Dr D. G. Aitken reported in the medical magazine, "The Practitioner," they really do disappear. Now he wants to know why.

"The result has been quite astounding," wrote Aitken, a general practitioner in Cumberland. "Although I have not kept complete records, successful response has been found in over 60 per cent of the cases. I usually offer sixpence for the largest wart of the group and tell the child the clearance will take three weeks."

In the same issue of the magazine, Dr David Williams, physician at the skin department of King's College Hospital, confessed he uses the same treatment. He said he knew one physician who was just as successful with an X-ray whether the current was on or off.

HONESTY PAYS

Kerel Reyneke, Johannesburg, South Africa, found a leather bag containing a 2,500 pound payroll. He returned it to the firm that lost it. Said the foreman: "You are the most honest man I have ever met" and offered him a five shilling reward.

proof clothing. Still there's always just the odd chance you may get dumped and even the strongest swimmer runs the risk of losing his life. This poses a bit of a problem that can, of course, be solved by the wearing of a life jacket, but I have yet to meet up with a shooter who wants to bother with one of these cumbersome garments. Now you can get around this situation by wearing one of the new emergency life preservers that clip to the breast pocket of your hunting coat and are no bigger or bulkier than a packet of cigarettes. The one I like best goes by the name of ResQpak and is instantly self-inflating. To inflate all you have to do is squeeze hard then release. Inflated, this life preserver will support up to 250 pounds of man in the water. Worth looking into and a natural for fishermen too.

Men, materials... and money

When a business lands an order or a contract, it is likely to go to a chartered bank to arrange some of the financing. It may need bank credit to meet payrolls, to buy materials or to cover other costs that arise before it is paid.

That's why businesses both large and small can take on many jobs they would be unable to handle if they had to depend entirely on their own financial resources . . . And why, every day and in every part of Canada, the chartered banks are lending money to producers, manufacturers, processors and other commercial customers.

Commercial loans are only one of many banking services available at a branch of a chartered bank. You will find it is a convenient banking service-centre where you can attend to all your banking needs.

Only a chartered bank offers a full range of banking services, including:

SAVINGS ACCOUNTS
Keep your money safe; pay you steady interest; encourage the habit of thrift.

TRAVELLERS CHEQUES
Protect you against theft or loss of cash. They are readily negotiable anywhere.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS
For many worthwhile purposes, adding to progress, efficiency and the comfort of farm life.

PERSONAL LOANS
To finance your personal needs; repayment in regular instalments from your earnings.

Name "Longue Sault" Approved for Town No. 2

The Canadian Post Office Department has approved the name "Longue Sault" for New Town No. 2 which will replace the hamlets of Mille Roches and Moulinette.

This was announced by Garnet E. Derousie, president of Mille Roches-Moulinette Chamber of Commerce who said approval of the place name was disclosed in a letter he received from J. N. Craig, director of operations, for the Post Office Department.

Some time ago the Chamber forwarded the name to postal authorities for consideration.

For some time past it has been the concensus of Mille Roches-Moulinette residents that the name "Longue Sault" should be preserved. The nearby rapids bearing that name will disappear within a year or so as a result of St. Lawrence power project construction work.

NO-PARKING SIGNS COME IN HANDY

The best place for a police cruiser when there's an accident is not in front of a no-parking sign, two Montreal constables learned the other day.

Constables Rene Maillaux and Joseph Piche were testifying against Joseph Pink, 35, charged with dangerous driving after his car struck their police cruiser while they were investigating another accident.

The constables said there weren't any no-parking signs at the spot where they parked the cruiser.

But Pink's lawyer produced photographs showing the street lined with the signs.

The case against Pink was dismissed.

Tooting Your Own Horn—the World Over

The deep voice of the alphorn, famous for its echoes in the high mountains of Switzerland, will soon be heard in an unexpected role—calling school time in rural England.

In the windswept, hill-and-moor country of west Yorkshire, schoolhouses are scattered and telephones scarce. One teacher noticed that pupils of his irregular classes were often forced to make long unnecessary hikes when schedules changed too fast for routine announcements. So he asked for an alpine horn to blow the word about the neighbourhood.

Reverberations reached all the way to the Swiss Government. Result: 14-foot gift horn is now being made, together with an appropriate costume, for presentation to a Yorkshire tootler.

The traditional Swiss alphorn is made of a young pine trunk, split lengthwise, hollowed cut and bound with wood fibre. Some are 18 feet long.

Broadening to an open-mouthed curve at the end, the alphorn looks like a giant smoking pipe. Usually the tree from which it is formed has grown on the side of a precipice, developing the special surve that gives tone and volume. Blown while resting on the ground, the horn gives out a blast resembling the hoarse cry of a foghorn. It can be heard for miles.

From the 12 century at least, Swiss shepherds and herdsmen have sounded their oversize horns in gathering their flocks at evening time.

Where church bells cannot reach, horns announce th evesper hour. They are even able to echo and re-echo simple hymns through the high valleys.

Used Around the World

Around the world isolated peoples often communicate by horns. In the lofty Himalayas, Buddhist lamas call followers to religious festivals by blowing a huge instrument remindful of Europe's alphorn but without its curve. Sometimes two Buddhist priests combine lung power to send a mighty roar through a pair of horns, supported by a wooden framework.

The aborigines of Australia delight in their didjeridoo, a big bamboo stem, taller than a man, whose core has been burned out by fire sticks. Ornately decorated, it produces weird, far-reaching humming noises as the operator mouths words and vibrates his lips.

Araucanian Indians, of south-central Chile, still cling to their ancestors' trutruca, another long bamboo tube, this one ending in a cow's horn. When its woody pieces have been dried, split, rejoined and covered with a piece of horse intestine, it moans a rhythmic monologue essential to Araucanian ceremonials from birth to death.

Horns—curved, straight and serpentine—are among the oldest and most popular of man's noise and music-making instruments. They have been used in battle, hunting, and religious rites, to signal friends, warn of invasion, enliven parades, perform in symphonies and to frighten off evil spirits. They have been made of animal horns, gold, silver, ivory, glass and seashells.
