These marks represent the standing of some of our students on the recent Civil Service examinations. As these subjects are the most difficult in the curriculum, the foregoing feat at once explains why our record—FIRST, SECOND and FOURTH places for the whole of Canada—has never been equalled.

We not only give a superior training but also assist our students to good positions.

Saving Daylight

A prominent bank official of western Canada, who is taking a keen interest in the utilization of vacant lots for the growing of garden crops, says,

"It seems to me that the 'daylight saving scheme' would be one of the greatest factors in helping on the kitchen garden movement. It would give everyone from Halifax to Vancouver an hour's more time to work in the garden in daylight than they would otherwise have and it would be a great thing for the health of the nation to have an extra hour for outdoor recreation, and last, but by no means least, there would be a wonderful saving of light, electricity, gas and oil. The one hour extra daylight would mean that by the time darkness came it would be pretty nearly bedtime, going by ordinary rules."

Clean-up Day, May 14th.

The village will have its annual "clean-up" day on Friday, May 14th. Residents are requested to have their premises and road side in front cleaned by that time. Carts will call and remove all rubbish that cannot be burned.

Hurt While Hitching Colt.

Last Thursday evening Mr. Samuel Kittle of The Boyne met with a rather serious accident. He was hitching a colt and at the time was standing directly in front of it when the animal jumped suddenly knocking Mr. Kittle down and severely injuring his left arm and shoulder. and although no bones were broken it will be some time before he regains the full use of them.

What For ?

President J. G. Kilt of the Ottawa & Morrisburg Railway, and Engineer E. E. Malone of the Ottawa & St. Lawrence paid a flying visit to this section last Thursday, but a line on the purpose of the visit was not forth coming. It is surmised that the interests of those two roads have come together and would not be loath to dispose of the information collected by them to the Hydro Commission for use on the projected radial line.

Prizes For Flowers.

The Chesterville Horticultural Society has arranged to supply flower seeds of pansies, petunias, sweet peas and asters to any home in the town or district, where flowers will be grown from them. Later in the season a couple of exhibitions will be held when bloom from these seeds will be exhibited for prizes offered by the society. Applications should be made to Miss Moad not later than next Wednesday, May 12th for a supply of seed.

Ottawa Artist In Chesterville,

Miss Maria Recardi of Ottawa is a grand daughter of the late Hon. T. N. Gibbs of Oshawa, Minister of Inland Revenue without portfolio and Senator under the John A. MacDonald regime.

Miss Recardi received her early musical training under the tuition of Sister Alexandrine of the Rideau Street Convent, Ottawa.

Miss Recardi made her first appearance in operatic music at Aeolian Hall, Bond St., singing the soprano role of the sixtette from Lucia di Lammermoor and immediately made for herself a sure place in the music loving hearts of her English audience.

Miss Recardi sang before the late King Edward in Brighton and before the Duchess of Westminister and many other people of note in England. Her first recital in Aeolian Hall Bond Street was under the patronage of the late Lord Strathcona and so many admiring Canadians attended there was standing room only, and the floral offerings were so numerous a special cab had to be hired to remove them.

Miss Recardi's voice has been likened to Melba's for pure tone and tremendous range and she treasures a large book of English press notices such as should fill all Canadians with pride in the gifted artist who calls Canada her place of birth and her homeland. That Ottawa is not slow in its appreciation was shown by the audience which packed the Russell Theatre recently to hear the Ottawa Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Mme Catherine Goodson, Miss Recardi and Miss Helen Langdon.

Their R. H., the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and H. R. H., Princess Patricia, were present. Miss Recardi received an ovation after her singing of the first number L'Amero Aria from Il Re Pastore, Mozart, with violin obligato by Mrs. Donald Heins. Miss Recardi was sent for to be presented to their Royal Highnesses, and received high praise for her work from the Duchess of Connaught who said her singing that evening "had afforded her the greatest pleasure" and she considered it the best music she had heard in Ottawa.

Want Road Wound Up

Ottawa, May 2.— A number of shareholders in the Morrisburg and Ottawa Electric Railway Co., Ltd, want the company wound up. They profess to be dissatisfied with Mr. J. G. Kilt, of Ottawa, as president, and R. S. Bishop, of Ottawa, secretary-treasurer, and to be tired of paying money into the treasury of the company.

A meeting of over 200 of these disatisfied shareholders, including a number from Montreal district, was held in this city on Saturday afternoon. Several stated in unequivocal terms that they were tired of paying instalments on their stock without being given more satisfactory assurance that they would receive a return for their money. The outcome of the meeting was that a committee was named to take steps to appeal against the decision of Judge Reilly, of Cornwall, ordering eleven shareholders in the company to meet the calls for payment of the stock they hold. The cost of the action will be paid by the shareholders opposed to the present board of directors. The railway is projected from Ottawa to Morrisburg, but little work has so far been done although $75,000 has been paid as stock subscriptions.

Many of the shareholders who spoke were in favor of winding up the road, but nobody could suggest a method of doing it or of displacing the directors before the next annual meeting. Ex-Controller Thomas Clarey, one of the shareholders, said he did not think there was anything in the scheme, and it was his opinion the directors did not intend to build. "I was offered a mouth organ and a 'housewife' for my share," he said. "My advice is to put out the directors and wind up the company."

In Memoriam.

In loving memory of our dear mother, Mrs. Jacob Merkley, Chesterville, Ont., who departed this life May 12th, 1914.

Oh, do not ask us if we miss her;
Oh, there's such a vacant place;
Oft we think we hear her footsteps
And see her pleasant, smiling face.
Call not back our dearest mother,
Anchored safe where storms are o'er,
In that bright home we will greet her,
Soon to meet and part no more.

NOT ENOUGH CHILDREN

ever receive the proper balance of food to sufficiently nourish both body and brain during the growing period when nature's demands are greater than in mature life. This is shown in so many pale faces, lean bodies, frequent colds, and lack of ambition.

For all such children we say with unmistakable earnestness: They need Scott's Emulsion, and need it now. It possesses in concentrated form the very food elements to enrich their blood. It changes weakness to strength; it makes them sturdy and strong and active.

Cookery Points

Some Coffee Pointers.

Not long ago there was published a coffee making recipe which said, "Follow directions for making which accompany each style of coffeepot." This is good advice and necessary for all but boiled coffee, and people regardful of health do not make boiled coffee.

The aroma, the flavor, the cheer of coffee are very dear to thousands of people at the breakfast hour. From the true safety first standpoint, which means at the railroad crossing that you may cross nine times without injury, but the tenth you lose your life, perhaps no one should drink coffee. The strength of the habit of coffee drinking is an argument against it. No human being who prizes his self control will allow any habit to dominate him, and bad food habits often have as fatal results as real vices. But millions drink coffee all their lives, some of which are long.

It is easy now to get the circular coffee roasters, but not so easy as formerly to get the finest green coffee to roast in them and grind while hot. There is great economy of aroma and flavor by this method.

Cafe au Lait.

A large part of the cosmopolitan world drink the French "cafe au lait," or coffee made with milk. In lunch rooms this is called Boston coffee and in many cases is made probably with about half water and half milk and is often served with cream. The essential utensil outside of some good enameled vessel is the asbestos mat. Not for one minute must the milk and coffee be allowed over the straight fire—nay, not for a second. Take the usual allowance of coffee per cup—many people take a very large tablespoon, but some use a small one—add a cup of cold milk for each person, putting in a little first and wetting the coffee thoroughly, then set over the asbestos mat with a small fire under and very slowly raise just to the boiling point, stirring once or twice if the coffee is all on top, as it should not be. Strain into a hot pot for serving. Add a little cream to each cup to give food value.

Some Choice Woods.

Ebony of the best quality comes from India, Ceylon and other tropical countries, where it is obtained in logs sometimes 15 and 20 feet long. The very word ebony means dark, and the darkness of the wood increases with the age of the tree. It is a very hard wood and hence it is desirable for fine furniture making. Its unique color, too, makes it always worthy of notice, and it was combined with ivory by the Greeks to bring out its color.

Satinwood is produced both in the East and West Indies. It is another very hard wood, of fine, light grain—almost canary yellow in color. It is used for cabinet work and nowadays very largely for the backs of hair brushes and clothes brushes. It takes a very high, satiny polish.

Lignum vitae, another very hard wood, comes also from the West Indies. It is so hard that it is used for making pulleys and other things that require great strength. It has a flower like the hepatica, which comes in clusters.

New Lord of Bedchamber.

Lord Ranksborough, the new Lord of the Bedchamber in place of Lord Wimborne, has had his name less frequently in the papers than any other peer in the realm. That is because he only got his title last year. Before then, as John Fielden Brocklehurst, he was Equerry-in-Ordinary to Queen Alexandra. He gets $3,500 a year in his new position, and has to put in about seven weeks of waiting on the King.

No German "Gentlemen."

There is no equivalent in the German language for the English word "gentleman." "And, that being so," said an English lady who has returned to her native country after a painful experience, "I was not surprised to discover that German gentlemen do not exist."

A Lesson From the Aeroplane

The force that makes the aeroplane—a heavier than air machine—overcome the law of gravity is the propulsive power of the motor. Stop the engine and gravity exhibits its law

In much the same way the propulsive power of advertising makes a business triumph over dragging-down tendencies, personal inertia, quiet times and general business depression.

Advertising is the propeller. The merchant is the pilot. His business is the machine. His community is his sustaining medium.

If you want businoss to soar, start the motor of advertising.

In apportioning to the various living stallions their places in the ranks of speed Axworthy at three years, 2.15½, the sire of Crystal Worthy, becomes the living head of the wonderful branch of the Wilkes family established by that greatest trotter of his time, Axtel at 3 years, 2-12. Not only does Axworthy get the honor without dispute, but he also ranks as one of the three greatest living sires of extreme speed today, the placing of the three, differing with different judges, Axworthy's standing in the 2.10 list has to do entirely with performers of the trotting gait, as not a single one of his extremely fast performers is a pacer, his list as will be seen is headed by the world's fastest race trotter, Hamburg Belle, 2.01¼. Hundreds of other cases could be given when Axworthy's Get has produced early speed and has left its influence on this great sire. Its in the blood and its bound to come out, it will pay any breeder to watch families that sire early speed, also sires with good size and constitution, as the old saying is like begets like.

After Nine Months War

The ninth month of the war has closed with conditions in the main fields of operations such as to fully justify the grave words that have recently been spoken by the statesmen of Great Britain. More men, more munitions, more sacrifices, will be required to ensure that at any early date the Allies will be in a position advantageously to discuss terms of peace. At the start it was clear that the struggle would be such as the world had not seen. The armies were vaster than had ever been gathered, and their equipment was efficient beyond what had been imagined. It was felt that the fighting would be heavy and the losses great. It may be doubted if many foresaw what was actually to happen. The war has become a siege. The British, Belgian, French, Serbian and Russian allies are operating along lines some fifteen hundred miles in extent, defended everywhere with works and batteries, behind which are the Austro-German armies, fighting to keep their territory intact as far as they may. In the western field, with minor dints and bugles here and there on five hundred miles of front, there has been little change in months. The Germans pushed forward their line at Soissons, and the French pushed back their enemy in the vicinity of Verdun. At Neuve Chapelle the British won and held territory from the Germans, and near Ypres the Germans drove back a section of the British and French line, to be in turn driven back and deprived of part of what they had dearly bought. In the eastern field it looked up to last week as if the huge armies ranged along the Carpathians, the Vistula and the Niemen had fought each other to a standstill. The weather may have had much to do with the partial cessation of the more savage fighting, however, and the renewal of Russian efforts to drive through the Uzsok Pass into Hungary are reported, with apparent gains being made. On the other hand the Germans are pushing a new movement into the Baltic provinces of Russia, supported by a naval force, apparently with the object of compelling the Czar's strategists to call men from the fighting lines in Poland and Austria. Twice before German armies have attempted like operations, have won success, and meeting the heavier forces of Russia in chosen and defended positions, have had to retire. The expierence may well be repeated. Meantime the movement prevents the Russians from doing all that they might to the war into Germany and so help the Allies in the west Serbia seems to have been broken by war and disease and is not now heard from. The renewed attack on the Dardanelles has progressed so far well, and is promising.

Such are the facts of the situation stated as they should be by any who who would understand what has been done and what is required to be done to gain the Allies' object. Germany and Austria have been weakened by the war, economically and financially, as well as by waste of men and material. Neither is beaten. Each holds some of its enemies' territory. Events have recently shown how costly is the work of recovering the lost ground. The seriousness of the conditions is seen by those in the high places. Lord Derby, a creditable member of the great family which has given England a succession of able statesmen, the other day declared he had Lord Kitchener's authority for saying that "the time will come, "and come sooner than people ex- "pect, when he will ask for addit- "ional and redoubled sacrifice. It "is very plain that this country "will have made to it, in a very ,'short time, an appeal to which "none will be able to say nay. I "advocate national service now to a "far greater extent than I ever ad- "vocated before. I believe that a "compulsory demand will very "shortly be made on the men of "this country."

These are grave words. They mean, with other things that have been said by authority, that France's strength is all in the field or needed to maintain the lines of men that are facing and fighting the Germans, and that the extra force that will avail to overcome the German armies must be raised within the British Empire. There is meaning for Canada as well as for the United Kingdom in the conditions presented. The prestige, if not the continuance of the British Empire, depends on the war being fought to a satisfactory ending for the Allies; and Canada's interests and fortunes are those of the British empire.

War Summary

An undertone of pessimism is apparent in the public mind regarding the progress of the war which is not warranted by the facts. There can be no reasonable doubt as to the outcome of the struggle. The only thing regarding which uncertainty exists, as Mr. Lloyd George stated in presenting his second War Budget yesterday, is its duration. Very few British experts now look for a decision before the late fall, the chief factor in delay being the lack of enough surplus ammunition for a sustained offensive. Everything possible is being done to secure the necessary reserves. Mr. Asquith yesterday told of conditions in Newcastle, where between three and four thousand women are now engaged in shell-making, a work formerly done entirely by men. It is evident that the armies Britian proposes to put in the field are ready whenever supplies are forthcoming. At least a million men can be placed in the firing line, with more than million in reserve to provide for the wastage of war.

The Germans have anticipated the increase of the Allies on the western front, and have brought into the field at least half a million fresh troops. For the past month there have been frequent reports of the westward movement of troop trains across Belgium from the Rhenish provinces It began shortly after the battle of Neuve Chapelle, and reached its height a few days before Langemarck. Looking back at that glorious, but tragic, struggle, the historian will probably see in it the most perilous incident for the Allies of the long campaign in Flanders. The Germans are still hammering away around Ypres and along the canal, and claim that they are making progress. General French, in an official statement issued last night, admits that the Germans now hold ground formerly included within the British lines. They do so not because they drove the British out, but because "the loss of ground which resulted from the unexpected use of asphyxiating gases by the enemy last week necessitated a readjustment of our line in front of Ypres. This readjustment," adds the Commander-in-chief, "which has been in progress in the last few days, was successfully completed last night. The new line runs to the west of Zonnebeke."

A Red Cross Appeal to the Farmers.

Our country, with its Allies, is waging a great war for justice, for the protection of small nations in the enjoyment of their rights, for continued and growing freedom, and for the maintenance of its pledged word of honor. Much destruction and desolation are being caused Lives are being lost by the thousand. Canada's first contingent is now in the thick of it. Some will fall sick; many may be wounded; some will pay the last full measure of devotion to their country and its cause.

The Red Cross Society exists to succor the sick and wounded in war. The need of Red Cross Service is great and growing greater as the war goes on. The price of progress towards lasting peace is very, very dear. It cost lives, homes, health and much besides. Canada's part in the process of payment, through giving for Red Cross work, is mercifully light and easy, even when all have given to the extent of really feeling it.

The soldiers and sailors pay the price exacted by the desolating struggle from week to week. What they paid in blood and did in sacrifice a month ago was not enough for them. Shall we say it was enough for us? What they are doing and suffering and achieving have put aside, for the time, all their thoughts and plans for individual welfare, comfort and safety They don't hesitate to establish precedents. But they are precedents of heroic sacrifice for our country and its cause, for our principles and ideals that they may be upheld.

Farmers, individually as well as through their Institutes, Clubs, and Cheese and Butter Factories, are in a position to help very greatly. Their business does not suffer from the war. Prices of nearly all farm products have gone up. While labor is scarce there is time to think of the boys at the front and to send the Red Cross Society a gift to be spent for the sick and wounded.

Farmers are generous in sentiment and generous in giving when their hearts and heads point the way. This is a case when they do so point clearly, persuasively and urgently. In this crisis, in the lives of nations and in the lives of stricken soldiers, none can pray too much, do too much or give too much.

I appeal to farmers to send me sums from $1 to $50, during the first week in May. Every $50 provides one additional hospital bed with the giver's name over it. By sending me about $10,000, you would serve your country well, bring credit to yourselves, and make all of us very proud of you. For the sake of the wounded boys, make the gift substantial. It will be an investment towards the recovery of some Canadian soldier who stood in our stead that our cause might be held.

Faithfully your friend
JAS. W. ROBERTSON,
Chairman,
Red Cross Society at Ottawa.

Cause of Allies is Our Cause Say Irish.

Paris, April 30.—Ireland's sympathy with France in the present war was voiced here to-day by a delegation of leading Irishman headed by T. P. O'Connor and Joseph Devlin, president of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. The delegation, comprising leading members of the Irish party in the British parliament, was received by President Poincare and Cardinal Amette, archbishop of Paris. Addresses outlining the Irish position were presented.

Joseph Devlin then read an address, which said in part: "Ireland always has considered France the greatest Celtic nation. France always granted asylum to exiled Irish chieftans. Ireland is truly grateful. Now that the ancient quarrel with England has been settled, Ireland is fighting with England, fighting always for liberty and the rights of small nations and for universal justice. Ireland to day stands by France in her great struggle against invasion by a militarist nation. All Ireland joins to-day in the cry 'Vive la France.'"

President Poincare, deeply touched by the address, expressed himself greatly pleased over the assurance that Ireland sympathized with his beloved country.

The address made to Cardinal Amette is by far the strongest utterance yet made by a Catholic organization on the present war. In part it read:

"The Ancient Order of Hibernians, in convention assembled, resolved to offer through Cardinal Amette an expression of their profound sympathy for France in this hour of dark trial. The ties between Ireland and France have existed for ages. Through the darkest hours of our persecution and suffering we have always kept dreaming that help would come from France. After centuries of conflict France and England to-day are united in alliance for liberty and justice. Parliament's concession of the right of self-government to us has reconciled the mass of the Irish to Great Britain. The Entente Cordiale between France and England also exists between France and Ireland.

"The cause of the Allies is our cause. The success of the Allies will be a step forward from barbarism of militarism to a new era of progress and hope."

THE CANADIAN ABE LINCOLN

A Sketch by H. F. Gadsby, in his "Who, How and Why" Series, of Andrew Broder, M. P., and published in The Record by courtesy of "MacLean's."

Tony Lumpkin wears his hair ruffled up like that; a warning to expect good comedy. His whiskers generally need mowing. The back of his neck is fuzzy. He favors a linen collar with a flannel shirt. His necktie is never on straight, being either rucked up at the back or slewed round to one side. His coat fits as it please, his vest buttons are careless, his trousers bag at the knees, and his shoes are apparently built for a man with twelve toes.

Comfort, that's what his dress spells—comfort and the sort of unshorn strength one notices in geniuses and self-made millionaires. This man treats clothes as a husk. His head is too busy to think of brushing and combing. The twinkle in his eye, bright diamond-like—an Irish twinkle on his father's side and his mother's side too—is the Celtic fire made manifest, the beacon of a keen mind, the incandescence of a glad heart, the outward sign of an inward glow that has kept the snow off his soul for seventy years.

What the deuce am I raving about? Why, Andy Broder, of course. I'll introduce him more formally if you like — Andrew Broder, M. P., for Dundas in the Canadian House of Commons—but everybody else calls him Andy and he'll be hurt if you don't do it too. Andy is a title of love and honor. It means that the people have taken him to their bosoms and shortened his name as they usually do with their hearoes and idols.

Andy Broder has been Andy to all and sundry ever since he can remember. The boys at school called him Andy and when he grew up human nature was so strong in him that they called him Andy still. Until public life caught him up in 1875 and perhaps ten years after that he was a farmer and a general merchant; and he was always Andy to his customers. When he becdme Collector of Customs at Morrisburg in 1886 he still went by the name of Andy—no amount of official dignity could discrown him—and when he ran for Parliament in 1892, having first taken an eleven years' course in the Ontario Legislature, the voters turned out and elected him simply because he was the Handiest Andy at repartee in those parts.

What's in a name asked Shakespeare? If it's a nickname, everything. In the case of the member for Dundas it has led straight to a pinnacle of glory which he occupies yet, although of late years he has been not unanxious to change his pinnacle for one of a more permanent nature with a larger salary.

I think if you trace it back you will find that that name Andy has its roots in the land. Andy Broder's humor is racy of the general store, the shrewed mother wit of the soap box, the sugar barrel, and the embattled village philosophers who chew tobacco, whittle sticks and settle the affairs of the notion. Andy's humor, I repeat, is of that sort, the cream of common sense, long experience, plenty of time to ponder and revolve and a whimsical imagination.

And Andy himself knows the source of his strength for, booked though he is for the next fat commissionership, he keeps his farm near Morrisburg and thus maintains his contact with the good, brown, inspiring earth. What's more he is a real farmer not a limousine farmer who raises scenery and and a week-end taste for solitude, nor a Sabine farmer who raises sonnets and a mortgage, but a practical farmer who grows hay and potatoes and mangold wurzels and things like that. And best test of all—he makes 'em pay in money as well as anecdotes.

The reward of virtue has been very ironical in Andy Broder's case. He gave up a good Government job to become a member of Parliament, lightened the darkness of Opposition for fifteen years with his merry quips, and then, when his party achieved office in 1911, he was told that the Government had nothing good enough in its gift for a good man like him. Andy was modest about it. He would have been satisfied to be a plain, ordinary Minister of Customs or something like that, but Doctor Reid was pounding at Premier Borden's door about that time so Andy went home to the farm, taking nothing with him but hope. Three years later a railway commissionership fell in which would have filled Andy's simple wants but again they told him to wait because it was better on before. Brune Nantel was translated to the railway commissionership and Pierre Edouard Blondin, who can walk a tight rope quite as cleverly as his famous namesake, became Minister of Inland Revenue, thus appropriating the vacant shoes that should have belonged to Andy. In spite of these blows of fate, Andy reckons that his blessing is only postponed until after the next general election. He hopes to land something five years this side of the grave and when he is sick of hope he follows Solomon's advice—goes back to the farm and comforts himself with apples.

However, the sun shines on and the lark sings and Andy Broder is as joyous as ever though a Government in power hasn't quite as much use for a ray of sunshine as an Opposition that is lost in the wilderness. One understands how Sir Wilfrid Laurier leans on the buoyant mirth and high spirits of George Graham and Rodolphe Lemieux, how he warms his courage at their lambent wisdom, how he finds them a lamp in the window on a stormy night, but one does not understand where Andy Broder comes in officially when his party has got all it wants. One doesn't understand, I repeat, and that one is Andy Broder. He seems to have got lost in the shuffle but he is the same old bubbling, big-hearted Andy still. He can't change his nature simply because his party has changed its spots—that is to say has gone from a wet spot to a dryer one higher up.

Andy Broder has been called the Abe Lincoln of the Conservative party. That is to say, he has the gift of pertinent anecdote. He can drive a point home with a funny story. Serious statesmen, who are not big enough to survive their own jokes, invariably put their good things on Andy Broder, just as they used to do on Abe Lincoln and John A. Macdonald. It's the old game of duck-on-the rock—Andy is the rock and the saucy sayings they pelt him with are the ducks. A man needs to be a colossal humorist to shoulder all the bon mots of his day and generation—some of them not so darn bon at that. Andy Broder classes up with Abe Lincoln and John A. in this respect at least. He may have fallen below them in political achievement but he ranks high as a raconteur.

There are as many varieties of raconteurs in the House of Commons as there are of pickles but Andy Broder is an easy first. To vary the metaphor he always bats .300 or over. He is a clean hitter. His stories can be told in the National League, the Federal League, the American League or the Epworth League, and they will also raise a wholesome laugh. They can be told in a drawing-room. Worse ones have been heard from the pulpit. Better ones do not circulate in the smoking-room of any sleeping car on the North American continent They are good stories at any time of the day or night, in any company. The Lord's Day Alliance could listen to them without scorching their ears. In fact they are not unlike parables. They not only adorn a moral but they put a tack in it. They smack of Socrates and Mark Twain and Theophrastus and a lot of other fellows that were wits in their day and will be wits for some time to come; but they are Andy's own. There are only seven original jokes in the world so Andy must embroider these permutations and combinations of smiling fancy himself. It is given to him to make these old lamps look new. Epigrams come as natural to him as breathing. He lends them a rustic touch—as if Rochefoucald might be working in overalls. If the Government won't do anything else for Andy Broder they ought to make him honorary colonel of the Short Story Club.

Colonel Hugh Clarke, M.P., who is by way of being Plautus with a dash of Congreve himself, vows that Andy Broder is the Human Liver Pill of Room 16. He works gently, no griping. His humor drives away dull care and dispels the vapors. It is good medicine for spring lassitude, fulness after eating, spots before the eyes, clogged nostrils, sore feet, pain in the frontal region, falling hair, backache, that oppressed feeling, palpitation of the heart, singing in the ears, hiccups, gloomy outlook, unsettled opinions and many other ills that flesh is heir to. Voters cry for it. No political meeting is complete without it. It can be taken with or without water. It will keep in any climate. It combines tonic and alterative qualities and can be used externally as a liniment. It will cure nearly everything except an ache in the Dominion Treasury.

Colonel Clarke gives this testimonial unsolicited and will forward his pictures, before and after taking, if necessary. The after-taking picture is particularly good. It shows the tremendous effect of Andy Broder's Laugh Cure. The patient's eyes sparkle, his head is thrown back, his teeth gleam, his whole frame is convulsed with irresistible cacchination. The French sign-painter had it about right when he hung this motto over the platform at a meeting in Estevan in far-off Saskatchewan: "Andre Brodeur looks good to us."

And indeed he looked good to everybody on that famous tour. The cast consisted mostly of heavy tragedians and they took Andy along as comic relief. As it turned out he was more than that—he was the mounted infantry and the artillery reserves. He saved the day, or rather the night, perhaps a dozen times by his funny wheezes. People don't mind being instructed, but they like a certain amount of entertainment with the unpalatable facts—some orange juice, as it were, to disguise the castor oil. That was where Andy Broder came in.

I was present one night when Andy threw his spell over a restless audience. The unfortunate people had been bored to death by a tea meeting chairman who introduced every speaker with a speech as long as the one the speaker might be expected to make himself. It was a point of honor with that chairman to cap speeches with the visiting orators. He was out to show that imported rhetoric had nothing on the local talent. He not only made as many speeches as the rest of the performers put together but he added a few opening remarks, perhaps an hour in length in which he traced the history of the party from the time it entered the ark with Noah down to the present election. He got a great deal off his chest that night and, when he had finished and the other fellows had had their say and Andy Broder rose to speak, it was well on to midnight and the audience was reaching for its overcoat.

"Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen," said Andy in clear, bell-like tones, "I think we are all feeling like Lady Godiva after her long ride through Coventry—anxious to get to the clothes, but—"

Andy had stilled the rising wave. The audience sat down right there and prepared to laugh its head off. Whereupon Andy told them another about an Irishman who was badly wounded on the field of battle and a Scotchman who wasn't "Get on my back," said Sandy to Pat, "and I'll carry you back to the trenches." Deed and I'll not," replied Pat. "I'd get a bullet where it wouldn't look well and you'd get the Victoria Cross." After which Andy proceeded to ram more points home with more good stories, pouring out of his treasures of mirth and eloquence, while the house rocked with glee and even the war-worn reporters could scarce forbear a smile. It was one o'clock in the morning when that meeting broke up, and at that, the audience had to be shooed out by the janitor. If Andy ever plays a return engagement in that town his stunt will be the head-liner and the heavy thinkers will have to take what's left. Wherever Andy performs the people yell for more. Such is the charm of humor on breasts made savage by campaign speeches.

Curiously enough, for a man of his gentle nature, Andy Brodeur has distinguished himself since 1911 chiefly as an abolisher. Only twice in three years has he risen to his feet in the House of Commons and each time it was to abolish something. The members listen to him, vote on it, and turn him down—not that they have any grudge against Andy but rather that abolishing is a drastic step and not expected of a humorist. A sincere abolisher, such is their argument, would abolish the thing he likes best—in Andy's case it would be jokes—and mortify the flesh that way. But when a man proposes to abolish something the other fellows think he is carrying his personal convictions too far. I don't pretend to follow this reasoning but I have often heard it used.

At all events Andy's first attempt at abolishing was the cigarette. The cigarette, as everybody knows, is a curse which afflicts all ages, classes, creeds and conditions of servitude. From the King on his throne to the laborer in the ditch the world has its fingers stained brown with the evil. Confirmed sinners roll 'em themselves. Cowboys, six-feet-two in their boots—their growth stunted by the noxions thing—range the prairies with cigarette in mouth, another behind each ear, and the makings of a dozen in their hip pocket. From ocean to ocean, from the 4th parallel to the North Pole, the smoke arises. Cautious persons have suggested abolishing it a little bit at a time that being the way of legislators who do not wish to get too far ahead of the public opinion—abolishing rice paper for instance, or shredded tobacco, or matches, or the pernicious act of inhaling which makes the cigarette deadly. Others have suggested that something be done to the five-cent cigar first, which has been losing flesh and gaining poison with every increase of the tarriff.

But these half-measures did not suit Andy, who has never smoked a cigarette in his life. Headed by Andy the anti-cigarette mothers stormed Parliament and Premier Borden, who rather likes a whiff between the acts himself, read them a lecture—something to the effect that if the homes were made more attractive the clandestine cigarette would lose its charm. After that there wasn't much to Andy Broder's anti- cigarette bill. He made a characteristic speech, star-scattered with gems of thought, but he was backing a loser and the bill never got beond its second reading.

Andy Broder's second attempt at abolishing dates from this session of Parliament. He would abolish the votes of the civil service. As usual people have said he was going too far. Wouldn't it do just as well to abolish civility, or, if that was a dead-letter already, to abolish service. But Andy Broder doesn't look at it that way. He believes that, if you abolish the votes, you will increase civility and improve the service because then the man with a Government job will have no excuse to meddle in politics and will have more time to mind his own business. What Andy aims at is to make the sheltered life of the civil servant more sheltered than ever by relieving him of his last annoying distraction. If his vote is taken away he won't need to worry whether he should cast it for the Government that keeps him in his job or the remote Liberal benefactor that gave it him. Andy would leave the civil service only one thing to kick for—a bigger pay-envelope at the end of the month.

Strangely enough the civil service does not see eye to eye with Andy Broder on this matter. It makes an awful uproar about being neutralized. However, Andy will see the bill through as far as it goes—which will probably be the Privileges and Elections Committee.

"It is a pleasure to me to inform you that after suffering from Chronic Constipation for 2½ years, I have been cured by "Fruit-a-tives". While I was a student at Berthier College, I became so ill I was forced to leave the the college. Severe pains across the intestines continually tortured me and it came to a point when I could not stoop down at all, and my Digestion became paralyzed. Some one advised me to take "Fruit-a-tives" and at once I felt a great improvement. After I had taken four or five boxes, I realized that I was completely cured and what made me glad, also, was that they were acting gently, causing no pain whatever to the bowels. All those who suffer with Chronic Constipation should follow my example and take "Fruit-a-tives" for they are the medicine that cures".

Canadian Eye-Witness Describes How Our Soldiers Saved Ypres

London, April 30.—The following communication is from Sir Max Aitken, the Canadian record officer now serving with the Canadian division in France, and its publication is authorized by the War Office:

The recent fighting in Flanders, in which the Canadians played so glorious a part, cannot of course be described with precision of military detail until the time has made possible the co-ordination of revelant facts, and the piecing together in a narrative both lucid and exact of much which, so near the event, is confused and blurred, But as long as brave deeds retain the power to fire the blood of Anglo-Saxons, the stand made by the Canadians in those desperate days will be told by fathers to their sons, for in the military records of Canada this defence will shine as brightly as in the records of the British army the stubborn valor with which Sir James MacDonnell and the Guards beat back from Hougoumont the divisions of Foy and the army corps of Reille.

The Canadians have wrested the trenches over the bodies of the dead and earned the right to stand side by side with the superb troops who, in the first battle of Ypres, broke and drove before them the flower of the Prussian Guards.

The salient of Ypres has become familiar to all students of the campaign in Flanders. Like all salients it was, and was known to be, a source of weakness to the forces holding it, but the reasons which have led to its retention are apparent, and need not be explained.

On April 22 the Canadian division held a line of roughly five thousand yards, extending in a north-westerly direction from the Ypres-Roulers railway, to the Ypres-Poelcapelle road, and connecting at its terminus with the French troops The division consisted of three infantry brigades the first was to reserve, the second was on the right, and the third established contact with the allies at the point indicated above.

The day was a peaceful one, warm and sunny, and except that the previous day had witnessed a further bombardment of the stricken town of Ypres, everything seemed quiet in front of the Canadian line. At 5 o'clock in the afternoon a plan carefully prepared was put into execution against our French allies on the left. Asphyxiating gas of great intensity was projected into their trenches probably by means of force pumps and pipes laid out under the parapets. The fumes, aided by a favorable wind, floated backwards, poisoning and disabling over an extended area those who fell under their effect. The result was that the French were compelled to give ground for a consideroble distance.

The immediate consequence of this enforced withdrawal was, of course, extremely grave. The third brigade of the Canadian division was without any left, or, in other words, its left was in the air. It became imperatively necessary greatly to extend the Canadian lines to the left rear. It was not, of course, practicable to move the first brigade from reserve at a moment's notice, and the line, extended from five to nine thousand yards, was not naturally the line that had been held by the allies at five o'clock, and a gap still existed on his left.

The new line, of which our recent point of contact with the French formed the apex, ran quite roughly to the south and west. As shown above, it became necessary for Brigadier-General Turner, commanding the third brigade, to throw back his left flank southward to protect his rear. In the course of the confusion which followed upon the readjustment of position, the enemy, who had advanced rapidly after his initial successes, took four British 4.7 guns in a small wood to the west of the village of St. Julien, two miles in the rear of the original French trenches.

The story of the second battle of Ypres is the story of how the Canadian division enormously outnumbered, for they had in front of them at least four divisions, supported by immensely heavy artillery, with a gap still existing, though reduced in their lines, and with dispositions made hurriedly under the stimulus of critical danger, fought through the day and through the night, and then through another day and night; fought under their officers until, as happened to so many, these perished gloriously, and then fought from the impulsion of sheer valor because they come from fighting stock.

All through the following day and nights these battalions shared the fortunes and misfortunes of the third brigade. An officer, who took part in the attack, describes how the men about him fell under the fire of the machine guns, which, in his phrase, played upon them "like a watering pot" He added quite simply, "I wrote my own life off," but the line never wavered. When one man fell another took his place, and with a final shout, the survivors of the two battalions flung themselves into the wood The German garrison was completely demoralized, and the impetuous advance of the Canadians did not cease until they reached the far side of the wood and entrenched themselves there in the position so dearly gained.

The fighting continued without intermission all through the night and to those who observed the indications that the attack was being pushed with ever-growing strength, it hardly seemed possible that the Canadians, fighting in positions so difficult to defend, and so little the subject of deliberate choice, could maintain their resistance for any long period. At six a.m. on Friday it became apparent that the left was becoming more and more involved and a powerful German attempt to outflank it developed rapidly. The consequences if it had been broken or outflanked need not be insisted upon. They were not merely local.

It was therefore decided, formidable as the attempt undoubtedly was, to try and give relief by a counter attack upon the first line of German trenches, now far advanced from those originally occupied by the French. This was carried out by the Ontario first and fourth battalions of the first brigade, under Brigadier-General Mercer, acting in combination with a British brigade. It is safe to say that the youngest private in the rank as he set his teeth for the advance, knew the task in front of him, and the youngest subaltern knew all that rested upon its success.

It did not seem that any human being could live in the shower of shot and shell which began to play upon the advancing troops. They suffered terrible casualties. For a short time every man seemed to fall but the attack was pressed even closer and closer. The 4th Canadian battalion at one moment came under a particularly withering fire. For a moment, not more, it wavered. Its most gallant commanding officer, Lieut.-Col. Birchall, carrying, after an old fashion, a light cane, coolly and cheerfully rallied his men, and at the very moment when his example had infected them, fell dead at the head of his battalion.

With a hoarse cry of anger they sprang forward (for, indeed they loved him) as if to avenge his death. The astonishing attack which followed pushed home into the face of direct frontal fire, made in broad daylight by battalions whose names should live forever in the memories of soldiers, was carried to the first line of German trenches. After a hand-to-hand struggle the last German who resisted was bayoneted, and the trench was won.

Major Norsworthy, already almost disabled by a bullet wound, was bayoneted and killed while he was rallying his men with easy cheerfulness. The case of Captain McCuaig, of the same battalion, was not less glorious, although his death can claim no witness. This most gallant officer was seriously wounded in a hurriedly constructed trench. At a moment when it would have been possible to remove him to safety, he absolutely refused to move, and continued in the discharge of his duty. But the situation grew instantly worse, and peremptory orders were received for an immediate withdrawal. Those who were compelled to obey them were most insistent to carry with them, at whatever risk to their own mobility and safety, an officer to whom they were devotedly attached. But he, knowing, it may be, better than they, the exertions which still lay in front of them, and unwilling to inflict upon them the disabilities of a maimed man, very resolutely refused, and asked of them one thing only, that there should be given to him as he lay alone in the trench, two loaded Colt revolvers to add to his own, which lay in his right hand as he made his last request. And so, with three revolvers ready to his hand for use, a very brave officer waited to sell his life, wounded and racked with pain. In an abandoned trench.

On Friday afternoon the left of the Canadian line was strengthened by important reinforcement of British troops, amounting to seven battalians. From this time forward the Canadians also continued to receive further assistance on the left from a series of French counter-attacks pushed in a northeasterly direction from the canal bank.

Seven-Million-Ton Pyramid.

The greatest monument in the world is the Great Pyramid of Egypt, which was built nearly 6,000 years ago. It was built by Cheops, King of Egypt, and according to Herodotus, the ancient Greek historian, 100,000 men were at work on it for twenty years. It covers an area of thirteen and a half acres, and contains 7,000,000 tons of masonry. It was built in layers, over 200 in number, and then the edges were filled in to make the sides smooth. The stone used varied in weight from two tons to sixty tons. When it was built it was about 480 feet high, and the sides were each 775 feet long.

Woman Charged With Witchcraft.

Practice of witchcraft is the unusual charge on which Fanny Dismal, an aged negress widely known as "Old Jewel," has been ordered held for trial at Guysboro, Nova Scotia. It is said to be the first case of the kind in the history of the province. The woman was arrested under a section of the criminal code which provides at least one year's imprisonment for "anyone who pretends to exercise or use any kind of witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment or conjuration."

A Slight Difference.

What is the difference between a jeweler and a jailer? One sells watches, and the other watches cells.

Woman So Weak and Nervous Could Not Stand Her Children Near Her — Vinol Changed Everything for Her

Plant City, Fla.—"I wish I could tell everybody about Vinol. For nine years I was in bad health. I got so I could not sleep, and I could not stand it to have my children come near me. I could not even sew or do any heavy housework. I was simply tired all the time. I tried so many medicines I could not recall them all, but nothing did me any good. One day a friend asked me to try Vinol and said it was the best tonic she ever saw. I did so, and soon got the first good night's sleep I had had for a long time. Now I sleep well, my appetite is good, my nervousness is all gone and I am so strong and well I do all my housework and work in my flower garden without feeling tired or nervous. Vinol has made me a well and happy woman." —Mrs. C. H. MILLER, Plant City, Fla.

The death of Miss Petrie, a highly esteemed resident of Finch, occurred on Wednesday last at the home of her nephew, Mr. T. J. Hamilton. The funeral took place on Saturday when the remains were taken to Ottawa for burial in Beechwood cemetery.

The anniversary services of Trinity Methodist Church are being planned for May 23rd and 24th. The sermons will be preached by the Rev. Geo. W. McColl, B. A., B. D., of Fairmount Ave., Methodist Church, Montreal, one of the leading ministers of the Montreal Conference.

A couple of Merrickville men, J. Clarkin and George Lewis, were out hunting the other day and brought down a couple of birds which they think are wild pigeons. In shooting them they only winged them and brought them home alive. They are male and female and so far are thriving in their captivity. The wild pigeon is believed to be extinct. They used to be here in great numbers, flying oftentimes in such large flocks as to almost darken the sun. Then they were missing. They did not gradually diminish in numbers, but they disappeared completely all at once from every part of the country, and no man knows to this day what became of them.

Pay Up Day

Thanks to the ingenuity of some men or women we have a great many new kinds of days to keep track of now, such as mother's day, dollar day, tag day. arbor day, sock day, clean up day etc. And still there comes from a little town in Wisconsin the suggestion of yet another day—"Pay-up day." The idea is that every village or town or other community should select a certain day for the payment of all accounts. The Wisconsin town tried it, and hundreds of bills were paid on the day fixed, with the result that the town had its most prosperous year and many other places are going to try it. The philosophy of the plan is simply this; that by paying your bills, the other fellow is enabled to pay, and so on in a sort of endless chain, which finally comes around to you again, with you out of debt ond no one owing you. Thus all are quits, the commercial skies are clear, and everybody feels better. The idea of a 'pay-up' day is excellent and should be helped along. The wider it extends, the more sound and stable will be the business of the country.

Ottawa Exhibition

The Minister of Militia has assured the directors of the Central Canada Exhibition Association that the soldiers now training and mobilizing on the Ottawa Fair Grounds will be away from there by July. The mobilization on these grounds, last year, caused some rumors that would hinder the 1914 Exhibition being held. In order to prevent a recurrence of similar reports regarding the 1915 Exhibition, President Bate and Manager McMahon intervied General Hughes. Besides assuring the Exhibition officers that the troops would be removed in midsummer, the Minister asserted that the militia authorities would place the buildings in the same condition as when they took possession of them. Several alterations had to be made for the accommodation of the troops.

The Ottawa Exhibition this year will have the benefit of a $5,000 Dominion grant. This follows the action of the Department of Agriculture in substituting, for the former Dominion Exhibition grant, a much larger sum to be distributed among several fairs. The management of the Ottawa Fair is devoting all the new bonus to increasing the prizes in the utility classes of live stock, comprising horses, cattle, sheep, swine and poultry.

The first herald of the 1915 Ottawa Exhibition — a lithograph hanger—has gone forth. The figure of a khaki-clad soldier, waving the British flag, and partly hidden by a profusion of grain in sheaves, illustrates the motto of this year's Exhibition — Patriotism — Production. To promote enterprise in production, the Central Canada Exhibition Association is increasing prizes in farm products as well as adding the $5,000 Dominion grant to live stock premiums, also continuing the policy of paying freight on animal exhibits from two provinces.

Lieut. Commander Walter Hawthorne, a naval reservist called from Cornwall, at the outbreak of war, where he had been in business for five years is reported drowned in the North Sea, where he was in command of the gunboat Columbia.
