LOCAL AND GENERAL

School re-opens on Tuesday next.

Every teacher on the High School Staff this year is a specialist.

They should have kept the Exam results until after the schools re-opened.

How about a local Bowling Tournament (Doubles) for prizes, some day within the next two weeks.?

When you see a town wobbling along on low gear like an auto on a muddy road you will find a town where the residents send out their money to build up the big cities.

Senator John Ried, of Prescott, Ont., died on Monday from a stroke of paralysis. He, for some years, represented Leeds and Grenville in the House of Commons.

What an utter fool he was! Maybe only that one minute, He may have been sensible before. He probably is now. He went up a little hill on a broad road right over on the wrong side. He met a sane driver at the top of the hill. Two cars smashed to smithereens. Three women badly hurt. One man a fool one minute did it.

We wish to extend congratulations to Orville Ault, who taught in this district and who has won the scholarship of one year's tuition at New Edinburg University, Scotland, valued at $1,500, recently won at Toronto University. Mr. Ault intends to take advantage of the opportunity by sailing for Scotland in the early autumn.

Sent to Asylum

The young man Courtney, arrested for taking a young girl near Iroquois to Ottawa and passing her off as his wife, has been pronounced insane and sent to an asylum.

Had Great Sale

Mr. Hart Melvin, selling agent for the Chev. Cars, returned on Monday after a week of "high time" guest of General Motors at a big hotel in Muskoka. Everything was like silk, Hart says, and we certainly had a great time. The new six cylinder Chev. has been a great seller, and General Motors have put out over one million cars at Oshawa, since Jan. 1, 1929. Just think of it, one million Chevs. means that there are more Chevs. on the road than any other car. "They are the greatest car for the money" Hart says, in the world.

Smashing Windows

Boys from Winchester who go to the Nation River to swim, are charged with smashing the windows of the school house about a mile on this side of Cass Bridge, as they pass there, using catapults. The names of some of the boys have been secured, but the trustees do not wish to bring the boys before a magistrate unless forced to do so, and have asked the Press to issue this kindly warning. If any more windows are broken there will certainly be trouble. Last year it cost the Trustees over $5. to replace broken windows in the school.

A Correction

In our report of the Temperance Convention held here last week, the Press reported Mr. George Smythe, M. P. P. as having said that one half the Liberals in the Legislature were for Prohibition and one half in favor of the Liquor Control Act. Mr. Smythe informs the Press that he was either misquoted or misunderstood. He further assures us that there are only four Liberals in the Assembly favorable to Government Control, the other seventeen being very much opposed to the L. C. A. We are very pleased to make this correction and certainly misunderstood Mr. Smythe's reference.

A Good Display

The front window, north of the main entrance to T. O. Keyes' store, is drawing a great deal of attention these days, and it is certainly worth gazing at, for in it, he has on display one of the most colorful and beautiful array of school supplies ever witnessed in the village. There are about fifty different kinds of exercise books, all with beautiful covers, and these he has placed for a background and it sure adds to the attractiveness of the window. Then on the floor of the window there are all the different kinds of High and Public school text books, writing exercises, pens, pencils, etc., all of which is artistically arranged. Mr. Keyes says that his new scribbler called "Keyes' Special" is larger and contains half as many more pages than the average five cent scribbler, yet it is the same price, five cents or six for 25c. When passing take a look at this display, it will be well worth your while, and as Mr. Keyes says, "we are here to serve the school children in the best possible manner we can."

One Year In Reformatory

The young man John Canty, 19 years of age, who was last week arrested by Constable Helmer for pointing a revolver at Nellie Billings, aged 14 years, and making improper proposals to her, was tried in the town hall here on Tuesday afternoon, behind closed doors, by Magistrate McCormick, with Crown Attorney Harkness prosecuting. The only witnesses were the young girl Nellie Billings, her mother, and Mrs. Hummell of Chesterville who positively identified the prisoner as the one who came to her home on Aug. 7th, and at the point of a revolver he demanded money and also made improper proposals. The prisoner admitted having climbed into the rig that the Billings girl was driving, and refusing to go away when told to. He also admitted pointing the revolver at her, but denied taking any money from her or using any violence with her. His account of his wandering after leaving the employ of Mr. Hyndman at Hallville was not very satisfactory, and was not believed by the Magistrate. In passing sentence Magistrate McCormick said that he had made inquiry as to his character, and the general opinion given was that he was unreliable and did not always tell the truth. He regretted that he had to find him guilty, but society had to be protected, and it was his duty to impose a sentence. He thought that would meet the ends of justice and that the young man would come out of the Reformatory a better man. The revolver found on the prisoner was identified by Mr. Dwyer as one that had been taken from his home and was restored to him.

LOCAL AND GENERAL

There will be a celebration of Holy Communion next Sunday in St. Matthia's church at 10.30 a. m.

Last week the Press said that Miss Ruby Davidson had been engaged on the public school staff at Merrickville. We should have said on the Continuation School Staff at Merrickville.

Arrangsments have been made for a representative of the prohibition union to occupy the pulpit of the United Church here on Sunday Sept. 1st. Rev. Mr. Waddell will be home for the following Sunday.

Magistrate McCormick had two men before him Tuesday afternoon, one on a charge of vagrancy, the other on running an auto without a permit. The first was warned to get busy and the latter assessed $10 and costs.

Rev. Mr. Graham, former pastor of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church here, writes the Press from Toronto that he has not accepted the call to Colborne. He says there is a distinction between receiving a call and accepting a call.

An enjoyable feature of the service in the United Church, Brinston, on Sunday, Sept. 1st at 7.30 p. m. will be the singing of the Spencerville Double Male Quartette who have accepted on invitation to be in attendance at the service.

There passed from this life on Saturday, August 17th, an old and highly respected resident of Second Concession, Matilda, in the person of William Savor Deceased, who was in his 81st year, spent practically all his life on the farm where he died.

Mr. Thos. Johnston, Cass Bridge, met with an accident last week when stretching a wire fence with his neighbor, Mr. Baldwin, when in loosening the stretcher he was struck on the eye and suffered a very painful injury.

The death occured suddenly at her home at Haddo on Saturday evening, August 17th, of Ruby E., only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Stone, aged six years. The little girl had been in apparent good health, playing around as usual but took suddenly ill and passed away one hour later.

Mr. H. B. Fetterly and daughter, Miss Jean, returned home on Saturday last from a two week's motor trip to the Eastern Provinces, visiting Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. They covered over 2500 miles. The Press hopes for a descriptive account of their trip for next issue.

Rev. J. H. Miiler, president of the Montreal and Ottawa conference of the United Church in Canada, will be inducted into pastoral charge of Huntingdon by members of the Montreal Presbytery at Huntingdon on Friday evening. Rev. Jacob I. Hughes, M. A., B. D., late minister at Huntingdon, who was to have been inducted in the near future at Kemptville, is still very ill at the residence of his brother, near Winchester.

Sprained Ankle

Mr. Robert Rennick is laid up on a couch and is likely to be out of running races for some weeks, because of a sprained ankle he is suffering from. He did not watch his step as he came out of the back shed, and stepping on a loose plank, he turned his ankle and broke it. It's a painful fraction, and it takes weeks to get over it, so that Mr. Rennick, when he is able to leave the easy chair, will get about on crutches for a time.

Struck Cow, Rolled Over

Mr. Thos. McConnell, of McConnell's Garage, had a narrow escape from serious injury on Saturday last when returning from Ottawa, a few miles north of Greely. At a cross road two cows came on the road and Mr. McConnell at once applied the brakes. One of the cows stopped, and Mr. McConnell in his attempt to avoid the other cow, swerved to the side, but the cow suddenly turned and he hit it on the rump. His car turned over twice in the ditch on the side and for a minute Mr. McConnell didn't know whether he was going heavenward or in the other direction. His son, aged 21 years, was with him, and singular to say neither were seriously hurt. The fenders and the top of the car were damaged but not a window broken. The cow which belonged to a Mr. Michael Fagan, had to be destroyed, as its hind leg was broken. Mr. McConnell at once called up the County Constable at Ottawa, who came out and viewed the situation and he left it to Mr. McConnell and the farmer to arrange the matter between themselves.

Rupert Helmer Opens Church and Meets with Accident

The following is taken from Estavan, Man., Murcury, of last week, and refers to Rupert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Karl Helmer of Winchester.

"The first service in the new United Church at Outram was held on Sunday last. Mr. Helmer the student in charge of the Outram and Torquay Missions conducted the service. It was expected that Mr. Helmer would have the support of Rev. C. B. Lawson of Estevan, at this service, but Mr. Lawson was unable to come at the last moment. However, Mrs Lawson very kindly drove out and assisted in the musical part of the program by singing two anthems. There were about eighty people in attendance. Whilst this was the first service it will not be considered the official opening date of which will be announced later."

"A very painful accident happened to our local preacher, Mr. Helmer, on Monday last. Mr. Helmer was visiting at the Gardiner from during harvesting operations, when in jumping off one of the wagons a ring he was wearing on his left hand caught in a nail on the side of the wagon and the force of his weight stripped the ring and all his flesh completely off his finger. Charlie Gardiner immediately took the unfortunate man to the house where Mrs. Gardiner rendered first aid, after which he was taken to the Estevan Hospital where it was found necessary to completely amputate the injured finger. The sympathy of the whole community is with Mr. Helmer."

THE BARGAIN WIZARD

an astonishing revelation of ability and value

IF you love beauty, you'll revel in the impressive modern styling of Oakland Six. If you like to be comfortable, you'll rejoice in the roomy luxury of Oakland's Fisher Bodies.

But the two most astonishing discoveries you'll make about Oakland Six are when you experience the thrill of its performance . . and when you learn the lowness of its price.

Oakland Six is a car of superb abilities . . of power, speed and smoothness every bit as unusual as Oakland's matchless beauty . . of driving ease as restful as Oakland's deep-cushioned interiors.

And Oakland Six is a car of amazing value . . a car that challenges comparison . . not alone with all other cars in its price class, but with those selling at hundreds of dollars more. Before you spend your money for any car, make your own test of the sensational Oakland Six.

THE CHALLENGER

first prize for reliability

Motordom is given conclusive proof of the outstanding reliability and performance of Essex the Challenger, in the 15-day running of the famous "Tour de France." The two Essex entries finished the race without a single penalty, winning by a great margin over the strong field of high-priced American and European cars.

Not only the Grand Prize, but the Ansaldo Cup, for quick getaway; the Lyonnais Cup, the Pyrenees Cup, the Atlantic Cup, the Cup of Brittany, the Cup of Normandy and the Cup of the North were also taken by Essex the Challenger.

"Our opponents themselves were astonished at the speed, performance and reliability of Essex the Challanger," said M. Lamy, Parisian distributor. "We did not experience a single mechanical fault during the entire Tour."

The same sort of experience, the same sort of reliability, in the hands of 200,000 owners, has made Essex the Challenger everywhere known as "The Reliability Car of the Year."

What Happened Before

Remember Steddon, a pretty, unsophisticated girl, is the daughter of a kindly but narrow-minded minister in a small mid-western town. Her father,

Rev. Doctor Steddon, violently opposed to what he considers "worldly" things, accepts motion pictures as the cause for much of the evil of the present day. Troubled with a cough, Remember goes to see

Dr. Bretherick, an elderly physician, who is astonished at the plight in which he finds her. Pressed by the doctor, Remember admits her unfortunate affair with Elwood Farnaby, a poor boy, son of the town sot. As Remember and Dr. Bretherick discuss the problem a telephone message brings the news that Elwood has been killed in an accident. Dr. Bretherick accordingly persuades Remember to go West, her cough serving as a plausible excuse; to write home of meeting and marrying a pretended suitor—"Mr. Woodville"—and later to write her parents announcing her "husband's" death before the birth of her expected child. Unable alone to bear her secret, Remember goes to her mother with it.

Her mother agrees with the plan of the doctor. Mem leaves town. On the train Mem accidentally meets Tom Holby, movie star, traveling with Robina Teele, leading lady in the movies, who are the cynosure of all eyes. The train comes to an abrupt halt, a disaster having been narrowly avoided, and the passengers get out and walk about.

At Tucson Mem meets Dr. Galbraith, a pastor, who knows her father and takes an interest in her. She miscalls Tom Holby "Mr. Woodville" in order to make her fancied suitor seem more real. While the Galbraiths are away, she writes them as well as her parents that she has married "Mr. Woodville" and that they are to live in Yuma—for which place she buys a ticket.

Mem decides to kill off her imaginary husband by saying he died of thirst in the desert, meanwhile she starts off for another town to get a job as a servant. On the way she runs into the movie company of Tom Holby. Tom insists that she become an extra, and is most cordial to her. She finds herself in the movie game.

Now Go On With the Story

Close-up of individuals were taken, the most striking types being selected and coached to express crises of feeling: "You go mad and babble, old man, will you? Tear at your throat and let your tongue hang out? . . . You, miss, will you fall back in your mother's arms—you be mother, will you, miss, and catch her—you are to die, you know; just roll your eyes back and sigh and sink into a heap. And you, mother, wring your hands and beat your breast and wail. You understand — Oriental staff, eh? . . .

"And I'd like somebody just to look up to heaven and pray for mercy—somebody with big eyes—You, the young lady overe there—will you step out? Oh, it's Mrs. Woodville, isn't it? I met you this morning. Here's your chance. Do this for me like a good girl, and give yourself to it. Look up to heaven; if the sun brings tears to your eyes all right, but let them come from your soul, dear, if you can. You see, you have seen your people dying like flies about you, from famine and hardship. You look up and say, O God, you don't mean for us to die in this useless torture, do you, dear God? Take my life and let these others live. Won't you, dear God?"

Mem stood throbbing from head to foot with embarrassment and with a strange inrush of alien moods. The fierce eyes of the director burning through his dark glasses, the curious instigation in his voice, the plea to do well for him, quickened her magically.

Folger took her by the arm and murmured:

"Now, dear! Let your heart break! Look round and see your dying people. That's your father over there just gasping his life out. Your mother lies dead back there; you've covered her poor little body with sand to keep the jackals from it. Can you do it? Will you? That's right. Look round now and let yourself go!"

She felt herself bewitched, benumbed, yet mystically alive to a thousand tragedies. Her eyes rolled around the staring throng, and made out Tom Holby gazing down at her from his camel and pouring sympathy from his own soul into hers.

Then she flung her head from side to side in a torment of woe, cast her head back, and heaved her big eyes up into the cruel brazier of the skies, seemed to see God peering down upon the little multitude, and moved her lips in supplication.

She felt the words and the anguish wringing her throat, and the tears came trooping from her eyes, ran shining into her mouth, and she swallowed them and found them bitter-sweet with an exultation of agony.

There was such weird reality in her grief that the director's glasses were blurred with his own tears; the camera men were gulping hard.

As her upward stare again encountered Tom Holby's eyes she saw that tears were dripping from his lashes and that his mouth was quivering.

The sight of his tears sent through her a strange pang of triumphant sympathy, and she broke down sobbing, would have fallen to the sand, if Leva Lemaire had not caught her and drawn her into her arms, kissing her and whispering: "Wonderful! Wonderful!"

She felt a hand on her arm and was drawn from Leva's arms into a man's. Her shoulders were squeezed hard by big hands and she heard a voice that identified her captor as the director. He was saying:

"God bless you! That was the real stuff! You're a good girl! The real thing!"

Then she began to laugh and choke, became an utter fool.

"God bless you. That was the real stuff. You're a good girl."

This was her first experience of the passion of mimicry. She was as ashamed as glorified, as drained yet as exultant, as if a god had seized her and embraced her fiercely for a moment, then left her aching, an ember in the ashes.

The director was already calling the mob to the next task. She could not help glancing toward Tom Holby. His camel was moving off with the crowd, but he was turning back to gaze at her. He was nodding his head in approval and he raised his hand in a salute of profound respect.

* * * *

Mem's sin had led her to the edge of paradise, and then drawn her back by the hair.

She was doomed to spend a certain time in increasing heaviness, and then to die or to go about thenceforth with a nameless child holding on to her hand an anchoring her to obscurity.

She found a place as maid in the home of a storekeeper at such wages as he could afford. She began the sordid routine of her tasks, but, contrasting them with the glamour of playing tragic roles, she felt herself entombed.

Then the summer heat began and grew so fierce that her employer and his family went to the seashore.

She spent much thought upon the letter home that she had not yet written, that she must write if ever she were to go home again. The whole purpose of this long, long journey into loneliness was to be able to write that letter; and it had not yet gone.

Every time she made the begining her hands flinched from the lying pen. But one night in a frantic fit of histronic enthusiasm she dashed off her fable, sealed it in an envelope, and dropped it after dark in the mail box.

Darling Mamma and Papa:—

How can I write the terrible news? I can hardly bear to think of it, let alone write about it. But my darling husband passed away in the desert. I cannot write you the particulars now, for I am too agitated and grief stricken and I do not want to harrow you with details. I know your poor hearts will ache for me, but I beg you not to feel it too deeply, because I am trying to be brave. And I remember what you taught me, that the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. * * * I cannot write you more now. I am in no need of money and I will come home when I get a little stronger. All the love in the world from

Your loving
Mem.

After she had slipped the letter irrevocably into the mail box she realized that the postmark of Palm Springs would be stamped on the envelope. Her place of concealment would be disclosed.

Still, it would not matter. She was a widow now in the minds of her people and she could go back to them and face the future in calm.

The mountains had a beckoning look always, and on this afternoon, when a clouded sky gave a little shelter from the sun, she set out to obey an impulse to climb as far as her strength would take her.

The exertion of climbing was more than Mem had bargained for. The steeps that looked so inviting from a distance were ragged and forbidding. The burnt-almond mountains were hot and sharp-edged gridirons to her feet. The sun came blazing forth and seemed to spill upon her a yellow hot mass of metal that slashed her about the head and rolled over her shoulders in blistering ingots.

A stone rolled under her foot and shook her from her balance. She wavered, clutched at nothing, whirled, struck, bounded from the hard rock, fell and fell, and then—a smashing blow, blackness, silence.

A young Indian girl chasing her stray pony about the sand had seen Mem stumble, then fall; had heard the thump of the body on cushioning sand; had run to the nearest house and told what she had seen. Mem was taken home. The village doctor did all that his skill could do.

Though she had never dared to visit him, he knew of her, and knew her as a widow. When she was strong enough to be talked to he prepared her for bad news.

"Am I to be crippled for life?" she cried.

"No," he sighed. "You will bear no marks of your accident. But you will not—but your other hopes and expectations—will not be realized."

She was dazed and he was timid, and he had some difficulty in making her understand his bad news; that she would not be a mother.

She bore this blow with a fortitude that surprised him.

* * * *

And now Mem was weak and woebegone, at the bottom of the cliff of life. She had never climbed very far, but she had fallen far enough to give both soul and body an almost fatal shock. She was a drudge in a poor family in a scorched settlement abandoned by all that could get away.

The only inferiors she could see were a young widow named Dack and her five-year-old boy, Terry. Mrs. Dack took in washing.

The boy Terry was of the Ariel breed. His fancy girdled the earth in forty minutes. He mimicked birds and animals and often covered his mother with terror and amused chagrin by imitating her clients with uncanny skill.

Once the child caught cold—in all that heat!—and Mem sat by his bedside through several smothering nights, while the back-broken mother slept. Mem exercised her skill in making up little dramas to while away the tedium of the long nights and to keep the wakeful child's mind from his cough.

During his illness Mem received a letter from Leva Lemaire, saying that she had just seen in an old paper a paragraph describing "Mrs. Woodville's" fall from the mountain and her miraculous escape from death. Leva expressed the utmost sympathy and prayed that her beauty had not been marred. She added:

"But if it has, you can still find something to do in the movies. I've given up trying to be an actress and taken a position in the laboratory projection room, correcting the films. It's cool and dark and interesting. I think I can get you a place, if you'll come up. There's no excuse for a woman of your education and charm wasting your sweetness on the desert air. Do come! I've sent my three children out to their uncle's ranch. You could live here with me and my friends."

The thought of working in the dark and the cool was a hint of Paradise to Mem.

H.47–Why is This Outrage Permitted

The Necessity For "A Positive Insistence on the Elimination of the Submarine From the Armoury of War"

What a great thing it would be if we could persuade the nations of the world to abandon the submarine as a weapon of warfare."

The Right Hon. A. V. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty.

The sinking of the submarine H. 47 with its appalling loss of life is responsible for a passionate plea by Mr. A. R. Gardiner in the "Star." He writes:—

Aeroplanes are a weapon of war, but they have also added enormously to the useful and harmless equipment of society. But the submarine is unmitigated devilry. Apart from its uses as a weapon of war it is entirely worthless, and if it were outlawed tomorrow there is not a single healthy human interest which would suffer loss.

"The fact that it is a sneak that strikes in the dark, a criminal that hits below the belt, and nowhere else, would rob war of its last rag of decency and honour, if such a rag remained to it. InI this vile furtive monster, that slays indifferently both friend and enemy the savagery of war touches its basest note, and its existence in an offense against the most elementary conditions of a civilised society.

"Why is this outrage permitted to destroy the innocent and affront the conscience of the world? All the nations have solemnly outlawed war. Why cannot they give evidence of their good faith by outlawing this most infamous weapon of war? It is said that it is the only weapon of defence available to the small nations themselves. It is not the small nations like Sweden and Norway that are building submarines, and it is common knowledge that if the matter rested with these Powers the submarine would be banned to-morrow.

"The responsibility is not with the small Powers, but with the great Powers, the Big Five of the Sea. And of these, two at least, and three almase certainly, desire its elimination. This country made a proposal to that effect at the Versailles Conference. It made it still more formally and urgently at the Washington Conference in 1921 when it was supported by the United States. Since then America has independently, through its President, repeated the proposal. I think I am right in saying that Japan is in full accord.

"With this powerful backing by the two greatest sea Powers in the world why is the infamy not abolished? The answer is that France blocks that fought the proposal at Versailles, and fought it still more obstinately at Washington, on which occasion Lord Balfour addressed to M. Briand one of the most impressive warnings ever directed against a nation in public by a responsible stateman.

"It was uttered in vain, and to-day, eight years after, the competition in submarines is proceeding as though no League of Nations existed and no Kellogg Pact had been signed, and France is in this respect as predominant in Europe as she is in the air and on land.

"It is time that this sinister fact was faced and challenged. The case of the submarne is the acid test of the armaments problem and it must be applied with candour and directness. It can be so applied with the utmost propriety and force. Both this country and the United States have repeatedly signified their wish to ban the submarine, and they have given abundant notice on the subject. Hitherto they have failed to act out of consideration to the opposition of France.

"That opposition should now be met with a positive insistence on the elimination of the submarine from the armoury of war. Such as insistence would be endorsed by the whole moral sense of the world and by the overwhelming vote of the non-naval nations. If resisted, the issue should be carried to the League of Nations. Nothing but good would result.

"France and Italy would either have to yield to the public opinion of the world or they would be gibbeted as the protagonists of a weapon that every consideration of humanity and of peaceful intention is concerned to outlaw and abolish. If Mr. MacDonald and President Hoover is their momentous meeting decide to make the elimination of the submarine an article of their common policy the victory will be won."

Just at the moment when the public has been following with painful anxiety the efforts—eventually abandoned—to salve Submarine H.47, there has been published a bood which enables the layman to realise the dangers and difficulties to be overcome and the heroism needed for such an undertaking. That book is on the bottom, by Commander Edward Ellsberg, of the United States Navy (Constable, IOS.).

It tells of the salving of the American submarine S.51, which was rammed by the S.S. City of Rome in September, 1925, and which sank in 135 feet of water in one of the stormiest sections of the North American coast. It was determined that no effort should be spared to give back to the bereaved relatives the bodies of their dead, but the task of raising the submarine under such conditions, was so difficult that no private salvage company could undertake it. Eventually Commander Ellsberg conceived a plan, but the Navy Department was sceptical, and it was only after fighting hard for it throughout a conference lasting a whole night that he was allowed to carry it out.

The wreck-master of a salvage company could undertake it. Eventual ly Commander Ellsberg conceived a plan, but the Navy Department was sceptical, and it was only after fighting hard for it throughout a conference lasting a whole night that he was allowed to carry it out.

The wreck-master of a salvage company, when leaving the conference, declared: "I don't know who is going to do this job, but whoever he is, he'll wish before he gets through that he had been born a girl-baby."

The story of the terrific struggle with the elements which followed is told in a vivid narrative which is a great epic of the sea. The reader will follow with breathless interest the details of the operations which make it easy to visualise every operation and to understand its purpose. Above all, it is a plea against the iniquity of the submarine.

Paper Suit Favored To 'Liberate' Men

Chicago—How men can obtain a more comfortable form of summer attire, a question that has brought forth advocates of everything from pajamas to barrels, has another answer. It comes from Waldemar Kaempfert, director of the Rosenwald Industrial Museum, Men's enslavement to fashion, says Mr. Kaempfert, will be broken by paper suits, costing about $2 a piece and thrown away after about two week's wear.

"The fibers," Mr. Kaempfert says, "will be made of paper, and will be spun like cotton or wool, then woven into attractive patterns. Instead of being sewn together, the woven paper will be glued. A man will step into a clothes shop, where an expert tailor will in a few minutes drape strips of paper about his form and then fasten them with fish glue.

"Such a suit—unlike a paper tissue towel—will be unaffected by rain and hold its shape for at least two weeks, after which it can be thrown away.

"There is no question that present clothes are maddening. But we are slaves of convention. Although a thousand men marching down to work in pajamas would liberate us from the present style tyranny, it is impossible to find a thousand such men. The paper suit is our only hope."

Examined Wild Life Around James Bay

Dominion Botanist and Biologist Will Report at Ottawa

Ottawa.—A. K. Porsild, botonist and biological investigator, and F. H. Ketto, D.L.S., of the department of the interior, who have been investigating wild life matters in the James Bay region returned recently.

The areas dealt with were Akimiski island on the west coast of the bay and Charlton island on the east coast. These surveys are in connection with wild life propagation and other matters. The investigators went north early in June to the end of steel on the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway and thence by canoe down the Abitibi river to Moose Factory. The voyaging about the bay was done with a small sailing vessel with auxiliary gasoline engine. The return journey was over the same route. They will immediately prepare their reports for presentation to Hon. Charles Stewart, minister of the interior.

"The United States of Europe"

Truth (Lodon). Briand has not chosen his moment very well in reproducing his scheme for the "United States of Europe". I say reproducing, for the idea is one which has been moving in the back of his mind for many years past. Indeed, some four years ago he first voiced it in the lobbies of the League of Nations at Geneva. The fact that at the present moment he should have thought fit to come out into the open with his plan is perhaps an indication that he at least is aware of the incresing isolation of his country.

Contentment

Contentment is not to be caught by long and foreign chases; he is likeliest to find who sits at home and daily contemplates those blessings which God has placed within his reach.

Health Units and Tax Payments

The Reasons Why Taxes Should Be Spent For Maintaining Efficient Public Health Departments

By DR. GORDON BATES
(General Secretary, Canadian Social Hygiene Council)

"Why should my taxes be spent in maintaining an expensive department of health?"

One occasionally hears that complaint ,even nowadays. There are still a few people who point out that a department of health does not produce anything and therefore, they suggest, does not justify its existence.

But does anybody claim that we could get along without a police force —despite the fact that it doesn't produce anything either? And the lifeguard at a summer resort. He isn't a producer yet if he saves half a dozen lives during a summer, we deem him well worthy of his hire.

During the year ,1928, 1933 lives were saved by the Medical Health Department of the City of Toronto. I quote Toronto figures because they are readily available. Hamilton, Ontario, furnishes quite as good an example. Nearly two thousand people, at least. People in all walks of life. Enough to populate a whole village. Here is how that figure is arrived at.

In 1910, when Toronto began to spend a good deal of money to protect its health, there were 15.1 deaths every year, for each thousand people. In 1928, only 11.8 died, out of every thousand. Working that out in terms of Toronto's many thousand population, a distinct saving of 1933 lives is shown. And even that figure mark you, is not fair to the department, which is actually saving many more lives than that every year.

That figure is based upon the improvement in the department since 1910—not upon the difference between the death-rate of 1928 and the death-rate as it would have been if Toronto had had no department at all.

And what is responsible for this? How does the department operate to save all these lives?

First of all, the water supply is safeguarded against all water-borne diseases; typhoid, dysentary, diarrhoea, etc. To-day Toronto's death-rate from typhoid is .9, while that of rural Ontario is 6.43.

Then milk. A veritable lake of milk is poured into Toronto every day, and all of it excepting less than one-half of one-percent. is pasteurized. The result is that bovine tuberculosis —tuberculosis of bone and gland—is virtually eliminated from Toronto, and septic sore throat and all other communicable diseases are reduced. Everyone is familiar with the ordinary routine of a health department —the checking-up of communicable diseases, quarantining, etc.

But there is another branch of this work, and possibly the most important of all, that is not so generally appreciated. And that is the saving of infnts and school children. This begins with the expectant mother. She is being taught the importance of pre-natal care. She is being urged to see her doctor frequently before the birth of her child, or to regularly attend clinics maintained for her health and safety. Public health nurses call upon her, and tactfully stress the importance of doing so.

Two weeks after the birth of the child, the nurse again calls, the mother is directed to "well-baby" centres, where her child is examined, weighed, any defects noted and the mother referred to her doctor to have these remedied.

The newest development in this science of child-saving is the "pro-school-age" clinic, for the physical examination of children before they start to school.

And all during the school life of the child, regular physical examinations are provided for it, health educational material is sent to parents, teeth are carefully examined, and hygiene education thoroughly and systematically carried on by the teacher.

All of these things contribute to the saving of many more than 1933 lives in Toronto last year, as well as to the preventing of untold sickness, misery, and economic waste—and all of these things point clearly to one inescapable fact. that the effectiveness of any public health department, and the number of lives and the sickness and the economic wastage that it will save any community depend entirely upon the amount of money spent upon it, and carefully expended by it, under the direction of competent public health officials.

A certain injustice is indicated here. In big Canadian cities death rates are being steadily reduced through the efforts of public health departments. But rural Canada is not sharing in this march towards social health ,to nearly the same degree.

The reason is, that rural Canada has not the money to spend in safeguarding its health, that urban Canada has. In place of the splendid health organization serving Toronto, the work of which I have just roughly outlined, the average rural community has to get along with one official, and a part-time official at that —a medical officer of health who is miserably unpaid, even for his part-time work, and who cannot conceivably do the work that should be done. Provincial departments of health are doing a great and important work to stem the tide of rural disease and premature death, but until rural communities are surveyed by small-full-time counterparts of the health departments that are succeeding so well in cities ,anything like complete success is impossible.

Experimets with such rural health departments, or "country health units" as they are usually termed, have succeeded far beyond expectation in Quebec, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, and to-day one of the largest tasks facing the public health worker in this democrtic country is to educate public opinion to the end that governments ,federal, provincial and municipal may be justified in spending public money on the establishment of adequately financed and staffed health county units, over the entire Dominion.

Bandit and His Cache Located

Smithers, B.C.—After guarding all highway exits from this district for nearly two weeks, since a bandit held up the Royal Bank staff here and escaped with twenty thousand dollars, police, directing a posse ,surprised him asleep in a wild country near Walcott.

He gave his name as James Wesley Burt, from Ontario.

Indian trackers located eleven thousand dollars and a revolver bidden in brush near where he was captured.

In police court he pleaded guilty to a charge of robbery with violence and now awaits trial at the Assises.

Unemployment Stirs the West

Influx of Immigrants Adds to Problem in Western Towns

Edmonton, Alta.—As a result of a conference between members of the Alberta Cabinet and Robert Forke, Federal Minister of Immigration, a survey of the unemployment situation in this Province will be made. This will be undertaken in view of the serious condition likely to occur this winter with the increasing number of unemployed men in the province. The survey will ascertain their number, their former home, how long they have been in Canada, how and by whom they were brought out, and what are their occupations. Both rural and urban districts will be covered in the investigation.

For several years there has been an influx of harvesters into Alberta, and when the crop is garnered, these transients decide to remain for the winter, and come to the cities and towns in large numbers where no work is available. This has become a serious problem to the province and municipalities, as the men must be provided for by the taxpayers, who feel their taxes should be used for the relief of their own citizens who are in need and not of outsiders. The situation is intensified by the number of immigrants coming West, ostensibly as farm laborers, and these add greatly to the unemployment problem, as they do not remain on farms, but drift cityward to look forwork where the introduction of machinery is rapidly eliminating the need of manual laborers.

Sparrows Play Joke on Geese

Desirous of Reaching Newfoundland from Cape Breton, and Being Underpowered, Are Said to Avail Themselves of Geese Backs As Means of Transport.

Ottawa.—Albert Schreiber, who stowed away on the French monoplane "Yellow Bird," has nothing on nature's aerial straphangers, if the story told to Fred Woollven of Armore, Penn., and repeated to Clyde L. Patch of the National museum is true.

Mr. Woollven says in a letter that maritime friends have told him how sparrows on Cape Breton island, wishing to get to Newfoundland, and underpowered for the trip themselves, perch on the backs of migrating geese and make the crossing over Cabot Strait as blind baggage. One of his friends claims to have seen as many as ten sparrows alight from such a stolen trip.

There arises the question of the goose's eraction to the prospect of becoming a free transport to the lowly sparrows. The chances are that the goose would not care for it. Like Assolant, Lotti and Lefebvre, he might find himself forced down short of his destination owing to the added weight which has had not figured on prior to his final meal taken preparatory to a hop-off on the long overwater trip.

The Bacon Hog And Grading

The more the producer of bacon hogs knows about hogs and the requirements of the market to which he is shipping the greater will be the satisfaction and profits derived derived from the business.

The standardization of hogs was a necessary and logical step in the further development of the bacon hog business but hogs cannot be bred and grown to a standard type unless the producer has a thorough knowledge of the requirements of the standard.

For this reason handbook on the "Bacon Hog and Hog Grading" sed editin of this pamphlet has been printed.

The reason for producing a bacon enable him to fill market requirements no matter how discriminating they may be.

All breeders of hogs should secure this pamphlet from the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, and if there is any further information desired the hog graders at the stock yards, the live stock promoters, on the Dominion Live Stock Branch, Ottawa will be glad to answer entuiries.

San Blas Chief Gets Rank Of 'Brigadier General'

Loyalty Recognized by Government of Panama

Panama,—Chief Inapaquina, considered the most powerful as well as the most colorful of the San Blas Indian chieftains, now rules over his domain as a "brigadier general" by appointment of the Department of Government and Justice. Chief Inapaquina recently visited the capital of pay his respects to President Arosemena. It was during this visit that he received his appointment.

The appointment was in recognition of the chieftain's loyalty to the Panama government. During the San Blas uprising under the American Richard O. Marsh a few years ago, Inapaquina refused to join the movement and was instrumental in restoring peaceful relations between the Indians and the government.

Chief Inapaquine is a chief in the modern manner. His clothes are of the latest English cut. Wherever he travels, a secretary and an interpreter accompany him.

League of Nations Does Big Business

396 Treaties Have This Year Been Registered Making a Total of Over 2,000

Geneva—Open covenants, or international treaties, characterized as ephemeral when Woodrow Wilson first demanded them at the creation of the league, have become startlingly close to reality. The secret compacts of pre-war days may indeed still exist, but they have no binding value on the peoples of the governments which made them.

Furthermore, no treaties made between any of the members of the league are valid until they have been omcially registered. Once they are transmitted to the treaty section of the league they are public property.

During the past calendar year, according to the report which the secretary-general, Sir Eric Drummond, will submit to the assembly in September, there have been 382 treaties registered by members of the league and the United States has voluntarily sent to the secretariate for publication 14 treaties negotiated by Washington during the year.

To date, according to the report, the treaty section has compiled and printed, in their original languages and in French and English, 1,850 treaties—80 volumes of about 450 pages each. The total of treaties thus far deposited at the league surpasses considerably the 2,000 mark.

Radium Coated Hooks Lure Fish

New York Naturalist Makes Experiment at Bermuda

New York.—Science gave fishermen something new to play with when word arrived from Bermuda of successful use there recently of radium as a lure for deep sea fisbing.

The radium was used by William Beebe, New York naturalist, as a luminous coating on hooks attached to scunding wires about a mile long, in depths where no daylight exists. The first catch was a squid, a member of the octopus family. It was large enough to fill a fair-sized fruit basket.

Before leaving here on his expedition Beebe said that as far as he knows radium-luminous fish hooks never before have been used. He outfitted with glow-hooks nearly a foot long, hoping to land some of the powerful creatures from lightless depths that in past expeditions have broken out of the nets that brought up smaller scentific specimens. He said that occasional presence of huge scales in the nets indicated the possibility of great fish.

Britain Greatest Trader In World

London Newspaperman Says Inter-Empire Trade is Essential

In an address to the Advertising Club at the Mount Royal Hotel, Montreal, recently Charles E. Luke of the London Times, stressed the fact that a greater attempt must be made on the part of both Canada and the British Empire to develop an Inter-Empire Trade. "Britain," he said, "has come back to the industrial position she held before the war in spite of the terrible odds she has had to contend with. At the end of the war, and in the early days of 1921, Britain's debts and the condition of her industries were in such a terrible state that nations throughout the entire world thought her attempts to recover her status would be in vain."

"Great Britain pays out per annum one hundred and fifty million dollars on the sinking fund of her war debt and another three billion two hundred thousand on the annual budget of the navy. Still, she has pulled right ahead and to-day can be classed as one of the greatest if not the greatest trading nation in the world."

He ended his address by stating that if on his arrival back in his own country he found that he was able to at least familiarize British manufacturers with greatness of Canadian industries and to accentuate the importance of establishing their trade in Canada, he would feel that his efforts had not been in vain.

New Power Plant Is Joint Project

80,000 Horsepower Is to Be Developed on Ottawa River

From Montreal come news despatches that 88,000 horsepower is to be developed jointly at Chats Falls, on the Ottawa, by the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, operating on the Ontario side of the river, and by I. W. Killam of Montreal on the Quebec side.

The despatch also stated that Mr. Killam's surplus power would be purchased by the Hydro, for distribution in Eastern Ontario, provided a suitable price—laid down in Ontario—could be secured, and provided the Quebec Government's approval to the scheme is forthcoming.

Work of erecting the joint dam and power plant would start, the despatches stated, early this fall.

Commenting on the report Premier G. Howard Ferguson said: "The whole question of developing power at Chats Falls is a matter of negotiation. We have been discussing it for some time and hope to reach a satisfactory conclusion before long."

Wood Ashes For Potash

The use of wood ashes as a fertilizer is historic and their use for clover, grapes, fruit trees and leafy crops generally is recognized the world over.

Canning, pickling, preserving and ject of Pamphlet written by Dr. F. L. had on application to the Publications Shutt Dominion Chemist, which may be had on application to Publications Ottawa.

In this Dr. Shutt says that wood ashes contain also 2 per cent phosphoric acid and from 20 to 30 per cent carbonate of lime, enhancing their fertilizing value and making them, in a sense, an all-round fertilizer for supplying the mineral elements required by crops. And, further, they correct acidity, a condition detrimental to the thrift of most farm crops. Muriste and sulphate of potash are of no value for neutralizing acidity.

Naturally, genuine wood ashes are somewhat variable in composition, depending partly on the nature of the wood producing them and partly on the care with which they have been collected and stored. Wilful adulteration of a gross character has been occasionally detected in commercial samples, addition of sand and other inert matter and leaching being the most common forms of adulteration.

There is a general belief that ashes from hard woods, as a class are richer in potash than those from soft woods but our analyses scarcely confirm this impression. As might be expected, woods differ very considerably in their potash content and the ashes of twigs and boughs are much richer than those of trunk woods. Pine and other soft woods as a rule contain less ash than the hard woods. and are much lighter in character and it is this latter quality or property we think that has given rise to the common belief referred to. According to our results we cannot find that weight for weight, the ashes of soft wood are much, if any, poorer than those from hard woods.

The pamphlet also deals with commercial sources of potash, manure, seaweed and the uses of potash.

Skirl of Pipe Isle of Skye

Portree, Isle of Skye, Scot.—The annual Mod, or Gaelic musical festival, which has terminated at Portree, has once more revealed the musical talent of the "misty isle." Here there is found true Gaelic singing in an island where the Gaelic tongue still prevails. On both days the Mod was well attended, some of the country folk coming from towns 50 miles away, and evidently much appreciating the music.

The first day of the Mod was children's day. One of the tests was an essay on the wandering of Prince Charles in Skye; another the translation of a Gaelic prose passage.

No fewer than 200 children entered for these competitions, and the standard was high. The senior competitors were tested on the second day of the Mod in singing, piping and violin playing. The excellence of the piping competitions was a notable feature of the tests, being due largely to the skilled instruction of William MacDonald during the winter months. Of last year's class, four are now pipers in the Scots Guards, one in Camerons, one in the Glasgow Police Force.

None of the vocal competitors was accompanied on the piano. The scale of Gaelic music is not adapted to the modern piano. The harp is the instrument most suited to the accompanying of Gaelic songs.

The classical "Cha til MacCriman" or "MacCrimmon's Lament" was heard in unison singing by choirs from Uig, Strath, Dunvegan, and Portree.

"A loud dresser always wears bangs and noisy wraps."

Habits

The habit of half doing things, of doing things in a sloppy, slovenly way; the habit of aimless, purposeless working, has ruined more careers than almost anything else. System, order and concentration, coupled with industry, will make a success of a one-talent man, while the habit of half doing things will ruin the biggest brained man in the world. Efficiency is the only path to success.

Pride

It has been well said that the thing most likely to make the angels wonder is to see a proud man, but pride of birth is the most ridiculous of all vanities; it is like the boasting of the root of a tree instead of the fruit it bears.

A Gift

Blessed are they who have the gift of making friends, for it is one of God's gifts. It involves many things but above all the power of going out of oneself and seeing and appreciating whatever is noble and loving in aother.

OUR HEALTH PRESERVERS

As an illustration of the alertness of our Provincial Medical Authorities, and the system with which the branch of the Health and Disease Department of the Provincial System is being looked after, the case of Infantile Paralysis reported here on Saturday last is a good example. It appears that the serum used in cases of Infantile Paralysis is very rare. When Dr. McLaughlin, our local Officer of Health, telephoned to Dr. Maloney, the Provincial Officer, to see if he could secure a dose of the necessary serum, he learned that so far as he (Dr. Maloney) knew, there was not a dose in that city. Toronto was at once communicated with, but Toronto had none. Dr. McLaughlin decided to take the case to the hospital at Ottawa in the hope that he would be able to get a dose of the serum. In the meantime Kingston Hospital was communicated with, and it was found they had two doses there. Dr. Hay, who has charge of that branch of the Medical Dept. at Kingston, at once volunteered to go to Ottawa with the serum, by way of an areoplane. They happened to discover however that they had one dose of the serum at Ottawa and this was used on Dr. McLaughlin patient before the serum sent and Dr. Hay arrived. Dr. Hay then left with the Ottawa Hospital one dose to replace the one used, and took the other back to Kingston. It appears that this serum is prepared from the blood taken from one who has been afflicted with Infantile Paralysis and recovered. There are a number of such in this locality, and they may be called upon to part with a few ounces of their blood for the sake of others.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS

Automobile accidents do not seem to grow less, notwithstanding the many warnings issued and care taken to inform the people as how to advoid them. With too many there appears to be a reckless carlessness when behind the wheel that if it does not lead to an accident it is pure luck. The pity is, the careful driver is too frequently the victim of the reckless driver. Some day the Government will lay down a set of rules to be observed, and find a way if enforcing them that may make the roads safer for those who really enjoy motoring. During the past week many accidents have occurred, and many lives lost, and in some cases the fault was not that of the victims. The tragedy east of Cornwall, a few days ago, where a party of five, two men and their wives, and the daughter of one couple, were wiped out of existence in a most appaling manner. They were tourists from the United States, and proceeding along the highway that skirts the Soulanges Canal. There was a collision, and the American car was thrown into the Canal, and all five occupants drowned. Last Saturday a Mrs. Lewis and daughter, of Rochester, but former residents of Ottawa, were returning home from attending the exhibition. Somewhere near Rochester they had to cross a railroad track. They were evidently engaged in earnest conversation, or careless as to their driving, because a farmer tried to warn them of the approaching train, but without success. They were both killed. A few days ago three cars meet in collision on an overhead railroad bridge, there being a slight ascent on either side. In the crash the cars all tumbled over the side to the tracks below. There were eleven in the autos, one killed, all but one injured, and all the living saved from death by the one uninjured who saw a train approaching, and was able to give warning so that so that the train was stopped within a few yards of the wrecked autos. And so we might go on, each day records similar accidents, similar falatities. Are they to continue?

The United Church

Good cngregations were present on Sunday to hear the deeply spiritual messages of Rev. J. Hurst. He spoke from 1 Kings 22 verses 7 and 8 in the morning showing that the popular prophet at that time was the one who spoke easy smooth things. The true prophets were in the minority and were looded upon as pessimists. He referred to the public demand for popular preachers. There are things in the world that rebuke us. There are places, e. g. churches, and there are people. We were urged to be very careful about our choice of companions. Do not choose those who flatter us. Our greatest enemy is ourself. No man can live to-day without Jesus. We must be ready to pay the price. Dare to be unpopular. Jesus did not preach smooth things and they crucified Him. The path of glory lies ahead of the man who faces difficulties and overcomes them.

The evening text was Rev. 22:11. Rev. Hurst said there is one common qnestion on the lips of every man and woman, when anyone dies: "How much was he worth? Jesus suffered, bled and died alone but no man ever left behind so much. He left the power of His Spirit. A man is worth just what he is and not what he has. Who was the better because that man lived? A man's worth is not always rewarded with a share of this world's honor. The worth of Jesus Christ is found in the sacrifice He made on the cross, the worth of Paul in the organization of the christian church and in the preaching of Christ and Him crucified. "What are you worth?" was the practical question with which Mr. Hurst closed his message.

Mr. Roy McVeity of Kingston, who has been heared with pleasure here before, did not disappoint his hearers in his rendering of that beautiful solo: 'Alone," which was so much in keeping with the message of the evening. The choir contributed an anth m in the morning.

How To Keep From Growing Old

Always drive fast out of alleys.

Always race with locomotives to crossings. Engineers like it; it breaks the monotony of their jobs.

Always pass the car ahead on curves or turns. Don't use your horn; it may unnerve the other fellow and cause him to turn out too far.

Always demand half tl e road—the middle half. Insist on your rights.

Always speed; it shows people you are a man of pep even though an amateur driver.

Never stop, look or listen at railroad crossings. It consumes time.

Drive confidently, just as though there were not eighteen million cars in service.

Always lock your brakes when skidding. It makes the job more artistic.

Always pass cars on hills. It shows you have more power; and you can turn out if you meet a car at the top.

In sloppy weather drive close to pedestrians. Dry cleaners appreciate it.

Never look around when you back up. There is never anything behind you.

EZRA'S RETURN TO JERUSALEM

Ezra 7:6-10; 8:21-23, 31, 32

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D.

About 80 years after the first return to Jerusalen from Babylon, under Zerubbabel, Ezra led a second expedition of size. There was the constant urge upon the devout Jew to have part in the restoration in the land which had been given him in perpetuity by Jehovah. This work of leadership had become a matter of conscience to Ezra as he meditated on the entire situation, for he "had set his heart to seek the law of Jehovah and do it, and to teach to Israel statutes and ordinances."

Authorization had been obtained from King Artaxerxes and special royal favors were granted. There is a fine admixture of faith and prudence in Ezra. Though much treasure was carried no armed escort was requested. Such a request could not be made in view of the way in which he had declared concerning the keeping power of Jehovah. A survey stop was made at the river Ahava. When the census was taken it was discovered that not a Levite was in the company. From of old this tribe had furnished those who ministered in the worship of sacrifices and offerings, and these were very elaborate. At once chosen men were sent back to the brethren and thirty-nine descendents of Levi were found who became emergency men to go with the expedition. They also secured 220 Nethenim, whose duties were less formal in the worship but highly essential.

Money and valuables to the extent of nearly $5,000,000 had been given by the king and fellow Hebrews. Ezra did not assume the responsibility for its care but appointed twelve priests and ten laymen as custodians.

Ezra took three days to size up the general situation and then reforms began, for base things had been established in the comparatively few years of residence by the earlier pilgrims. They had intermarried with the Canaanites and seven other named nations (9:1). Herein had been the basic cause of the former idolatries which made the Captivity necessary. Ezra tore his garments, hair and beard and then "sat down confounded." Now the others could take in the situation and Ezra was joined by those "that trembled at the words of the God of Israel." Heathen wives were put away. The penalty for any return to such alliances was to be punished with national ostricism. Ezra made it clear that the Lord's favor could be reckoned on only when He was truly obeyed. His working principle is stated in the Golden Text "The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him."

The Day Slips By

The day slips by, and here am I,
Just where I was this morning,
For so the days go on their ways,
And hardly give us warning.
It's nine, it's ten, it's noon again,
The sun begins declining,
It's one, it's two and day is through,
And futile our repining.

For time's a thing on fleeting wing,
And swifter than the swallow;
The dawn is here, the noon is near,
And night is sure to follow.
And men, and maids, and arts and trades
However great and clever,
Must know to-day is here to-day,
Tonight is gone forever.

To seize the hour that's in your pow'r,
Its plumage bright and gleaming,
The day's for toil, if bench or soil,
The night will do for dreaming.
For hands may hold like treasured gold
The hours they give to duty;
When sets the sun the thing well done
Lives on in all its beauty.

British Dominions In The Atlantic

The possibilities of inter-Empire trade are dealt with by Rev. Alexander Sharpe in a series of articles published in the Western Morning News and Western Daily Mercury of Plymouth and Exeter, England. In the issue of that newspaper of July 11 last Rev. Mr. Sharpe discussed "The British Empire in the Atlantic: A Vast and Splendid Realm," which is hereby reproduced so that Canadian readers may realize the extent of the Commonwealth of Nations of which Canada is an importnt member.

In previous articles, writes Rev. Mr. Sharpe, viewing the British Empire in the oceans, I have briefly described its territories in the Pacific and the Indian. In this I deal with those which have fronts on the Atlantic. Although the Atlantic is the home ocean of our race, and the earliest efforts to create a British Overseas Empire were made in its waters, strange to say, it is in the Indian Ocean that our Empire has its vastest aggregate of separate territories, and parts of the great Dominions, and our far-off Pacific Empire is not far behind that in the Atlantic.

Our Atlantic Empire is a vast and splendid realm. It occupies more of that ocean's shores than any other Power. We see there a wonderful family of free and prosperous British States, extending from the Arctic Ocean right down to the Antarctic.

I here omit any notice of the British home country, whose people have built up this gigantic realm, except to remark that it is to-day not only the strong heart of the Empire, but the real heart of the world, politically, commercially, and socially. Our concern at present is with the outer British countries in the Atlantic only.

Following in the track of the first pioneers of Empire on its waters, we look first up to the Far North. Here we find big, dreary Baffin Island, of the Dominion of Canada, an unexplored territory as large as France, which we may be sure, has its wealth to reveal. Passing into the great arm of Hudson Bay, a Canadian Mediterranean, we find three of Canada's chief provinces, reaching up to and possessing more than a thousand miles of its shore, Quebec, the size of Persia; Ontario, as large as eight Iowas; and Manitoba, equal in area to three Minnesotas. In the last named, which, although in the heart of North America, is thus not only a prairie, but a maritime province as well, we see the Empire's, and the world's, newest port, Churchill, now a railway terminus, and likely to become one of the world's great grain ports.

Labrador and Newfoundland

Emerging into the open ocean, we sight Labrador and Newfoundland, with their 1,500 miles of coast, the latter the Empire's oldest colony, whose fishing grounds are probably the richest in the world, and whose vast wealth of forest and minerals is only now being realized. Their areas are equal to that of Germany.

Entering the Gulf of St. Lawrence, Prince Edward Island greets us. Canada's smallest province, but as large as Delaware, nd the most fully cultivted province or state in North America, fitly called the Garden of the Gulf. To te north, extending inland along the mighty St. Lawrence for a thousand miles, to Canada's big metropolis, Montreal—the world's greatest inland port, its greatest grain port, and the greatest general port in all North America, except New York—we again sight Canada's largest province, Quebec.

A second time coming out into the open sea, Nova Scotia appears, as large as Holland and Belgium together, a very important part of Canada, with its coal and iron and fishing industries. Then, looking into the Boy of Fundy, we discover New Brunswick, a peculiarly fine and naturally-rich province the size of Scotland.

Out in mid-ocean once more, and looking south, little Bermuda rises like an enchanted garden in the wide waste of waters, a great pleasure resort for North Americans, the world's most northern coral formation, and one of the great naval stations of the Empire. Farther south, we come to the 3,000 island and islets of the Bahamas, twice the size of the County of Norfolk, extending through 500 miles, one of which, San Salvador, was the landfall of Columbus in the New World. The Bahamas also are now a favorite winter resort.

Passing through the Yucatan Channel, we enter upon the romantic British Caribbean world, stretching through 2,000 miles. Here we touch first, British Honduras, the possession of which makes the Empire a Central American Power. It is as large as Wales, with great forests, and rich, untilled lands, and is one of the most interesting parts of the Western World archaeologically, because of its monuments of the ancient Maya civilization. From there we cross to Jamaica, formerly Britain's most valuable tropical possession, a rich and very beautiful island, about the size of Connecticut, with glorious mountain scenery.

Islands of the Atlantic

Then come the Leeward Islands, Anegada, Montserrat, Antigua, St. Christopher's Nevis, Dominica, and others, and, contiguous to them, the Windward Islands, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Grenada, and the rest. All these are among the insular paradises of the world. Then there is Barbados, the Little England of the West Indies, as it loves to call itself. Last of the islands is Trinidad, next to Jamaica in area, with Tobago, "Robinson Crusoe's Island," the former the most go ahead of all the Empire's estates in those waters just now, and the Empire's greatest petroleum producer.

A short distance away from Trinidad, on the Spanish Main, we find the Empire's largest, and, potentially, richest West Indian possession, British Guiana, Raleigh's El Dorado, as extensive as Great Britain, with vast forests, fertile lands, and mineral wealth, but also entirely undeveloped, known as the Magnificent Province. The world's highest great waterfall, Kaieteur, is one of its wonders.

Next, far in the remote south, 6,000 miles away, we find the Falkland Islands, twice the size of Devonshire, a healthy, pastoral country, largely peopled by Shetland Islanders, a real little bit of Britain in Patagonian waters, with South Georgia the centre of the world's greatest whale fishery.

Next, turning north-by-east, across the oceon on our way to Africa, we sight Tristan d'Acunha, the world's loneliest settlement. Africa is reached in the Cape Province of the great Union of South Africa, a territory as large as Texas, or Germany and Italy together, with vast resources of many kinds, the splendid premier provinces of the great African Dominion. North of this we view the thousand-mile coastline of South-West Africa, largely desert, with extensive stock-raising areas, and rich diamond mines. This country is equal in size to New Mexico, Arizona, and Nevada combined. Still farther northward, we get sight of St. Helena, the last home of the world's most famous soldier, and then Ascension Island.

Next in order we see Nigeria, a potential empire in itself, equal in size to the combined areas of Germany and Italy the most populous country in all Africa, and rich beyond measure in natural resources, an African India. Farther on, again, we come to the Gold Coast, twice the size of Portugal, producing half the world's cocoa, and to-day one of the most prosperous tropical lands. Pursuing our way north, we sight Sierra Leone, a valuable country, the size of Ireland, with great agricultural possibilities, and having the best harbor on the whole West African coast, associated with Great Britain's earliest efforts for raising the African race. The little territory of Gambia, half the size of Massachusetts, our oldest African state, famous for its ground nuts, from which our margarine is made, closes the survey of our overseas Atlantic countries. Before bringing our gaze home again, however, we behold the British flag waving over Gibraltar, the world's most famous fortress, and the gate of the Mediterranean.

Some of the Chief Cities

A list of some of the chief cities and towns of these many and differing lands and islands is instructive, and striking in its variety. Following the order we have observed, we may note—Churchill, St. John's, Charlottetown, Quebec, Montreal, Sydney, Halifax, St. John, Hamilton, Nassau, Belize, Kingston, Roseau, St. George's, Bridgetown, Port of Spain, Georgetown, Stanley, Cape Town, Luderitzbucht, Jamestown, Lagos, Takoradi, Freetown Bathurst and Gibraltar.

This brief sketch will give some idea of the vastness variety, wealth and wonders of our outer Dominions in the Atlantic. The British Empire there is, indeed, a tremendous fact. Scattered here and there, from Pole to Pole, we behold countries and provinces the size of kingdoms and empires in almost every part. Great regions of the temperate zones, huge territories in the tropics, big parts of the Arctic world, as well as innumerable islands, go to make up this wonderful kaleidoscopic British family, the homes of many millions of people, white and black, Eskimo and Indian.

As to the commercial possibilities of this immense estate, they can scarcely be estimated. If only wisely utilized, our Atlantic Empire alone could supply the home countries with practically all the grains, fruits, cattle, cotton, and timber they require, besides a dozen other products which we now foolishly buy mostly of countries which put heavy duties on our manufactures, and in some cases almost shut them out altogether. We could be, and we should be, the most self-supporting Commonwealth in the world, for no country can compare with the British Empire in natural resources.

She: Goodness, I have a spot on my bathing suit. Will you help me remove it?

He: Y'mean the spot?

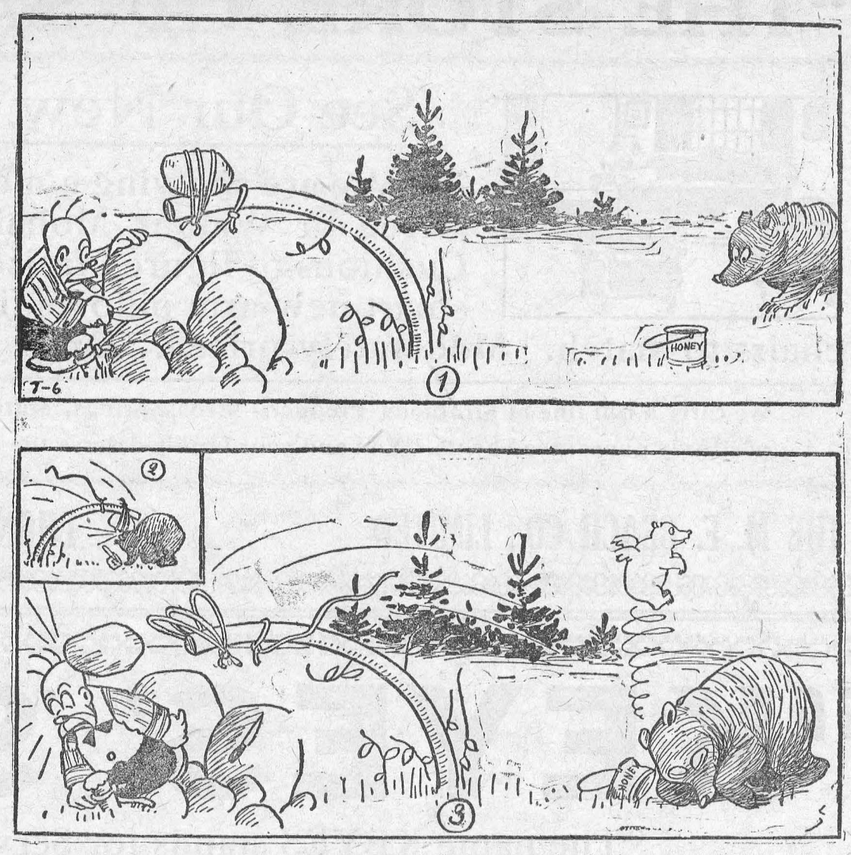
ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson.



Canning Vegetables

The following general rules for the canning of vegetables by the cold-pack method are laid down in bulletin 77 entitled "Preserving Fruit and Vegetable in the Home."

Select freshly gathered vegetables.

Avoid using very dirty vegetables.

Can if possible the day they are picked.

Do not use wilted greens for canning; if only slightly wilted let stand in cold water until they become crisy again.

Wash thoroughly with a brush such vegetables as beets, carrots, etc.

Can only a small quantity of vegetables at a time, especially in hot weather. It is necessary to carry on the various steps in the canning process as rapidly as possible to prevent loss of flavour, and the development of flat sour, which is very injurious to health.

Grade as to size, shape and degree of tenderness and colour. Where vegetables are sliced or cubed, the piece should be of uniform size and shape.

All vegetables should be blanded or scalded as described on page 9. This must be followed by the cold-dip. It is advisable to blanch such vegetables as spinach, swiss chard, best green in steam rather than in boiling water, as there is loss of valuable mineral matter. Pack carefully into tested, hot, sterilized jars and add ½ teaspoonful of salt to each pint jar. Fill to overflowing with boiling water. Rubbers and caps are placed in position and the same method as given for fruit is applied.

Canning, uickling, preserving and the hundred and one things that can be done with fruits and vegetables are included in this bulletin which will be sent on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

WISE IGNORANCE

A great art of life to-day is the cultivation of selective and discriminating ignorance. Every morning, newspapers deluge us with a Niagara of information. The wireless is eternally pouring out a mass of things to attract the attention. Books, especially books of fiction, come forth from the presses of the world in a Nile-like flood and tends to distract attention fro mthings of major importance to things trival. The only kind of knowledge worth having is the knowledge that can be used in solving the important proble msof life. All others knowledge is excess baggage. It is surplus weight. The man who tries to absorb all the miscellaneous and indiscriminate interests which modern life thrusts upon him is sure to become intellectually and spiritually obese. To be educated means to know how to be wisely ignorant. —Henry Nelson Wieman.

Obstinacy

Obstinacy is an absurd weakness. If you are right, it lessens your triumph; if you are wrong, it turns your defeat into shame.—Sterne.

It has been ten years since Prohibition was adopted by Uncle Sam. And you've seen the way some adopted children are treated.

GRACEFUL WRAP AROUND.

It's graceful, modish and slender in fashionable wrap around silhouette, quite the newest idea of Paris. It's one-piece too! This makes it most interesting for home seamstress, because it takes so little time to make. The surplice vest adds a bit of contrast in white silk pique to floral print in silk crepe in vivid red tones sketched in Style No. 494. Pattern can be had in sizes 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. Note in miniature diagrams one-pc ebckiea ffsnNk?iæAo diagrams one-piece back; two front sections with circular flounce joined to right front. In the 36-inch size, 3⅛ yards of 40-inch material with ½ yard of 40-inch contrasting, is all that is needed. It will also make up splendidly in featherweight woolen, georgette crepe, printed cotton foulard, and plain silk crepe with suede finish. Price 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred). Wrap coin carefully.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto. Patterns sent by an early mail.

Back came the reply: "Dear Madam —I see no reason why I should pay your rent. I can't pay my own."

Come over some time and help me sing my new song: "You May Look Like Cut Glass to Somebody Else, But You Look Like a Crock to Me."

Flaming Red With A Dome of White

Traveling for hours and hours across the desert of southern Peru, dunes a few scattered brown plants against a background of the barren mountains, one is hardly prepared for the sight which greets him so suddenly.

The train turns a curve and reveals Mt. Misti, a flame of red, capped with white. The view takes one's breath! The effect could not be more starling if one looked at the scene through red glases. Other mountains seem to shrink into insignificance. Mt. Misti, a flaming red mass with its dome of snow, stands in lonely splendor.

As the train winds in and out, it sometimes leaves Mt. Misti behind and brings into view a narrow green valley, with a clear stream winding through it. The barren, brown earth rises abruptly on both sides of this fresh valley, seeming to protect it, like a treasure.

Another turn and Mt. Misti looms before one, now a glowing red. Its setting has merged into one dark purple shadow, giving hints of mystery in its repths. Mt. Misti draws still more apart, towering above all else, its dome of snow set off by the darkening sky.

When one sees the valley again, lights appear in the little thatched huts of the Indian laborers. A sudden turn discloses the bright lights of Arequipa, only a few miles away. Just when one's eyes are becoming accustomed to the lights, one loses them again. Then for the last time, one saw Mt. Misti, a veil of cloudy purple enveloping it. Eyes are keen for a last glimpse,—a last breath, almost,—of the passing beauty. Such grandeur, however, does not fade away. It remains a beautiful picture for everyone who has been fortunate enough to see it,—Mt. Misti at sunset,—flaming red with a dome of white.

A Transcontinental Highway

Three Rivers Nouvelliste (Cons.): The roads in our province have been built with the money of the Quebec taxpayers. Those of Ontario have been built with Ontario money. It is the same in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Is and. Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have spent comparatively little on modern roads. If we were to build a transcontinental highway, that part of it which traversed Ontario and Quebec would be found to have been already built. The western portion would remain, and Quebec, Ontario and the Maritime Provinces would have to contribute to this.

Life's Debtors

Life is only puzzling to be person who gives nothing to it. The doctor tending the sick does not wonder why he is alive and what it is all about. The mother bringing up her children to strong and clean citizenship is not worried by the futility of life. It is life's debtors, those who take everything and give nothing, who find themselves faced with a sick perplexity of the soul.

Butterflies as Pets

By N. TOURNEUR

With kindness and patience almost every living thing can be tamed and made a pet—even butterflies, than which there are no creatures more "light-headed" and irresponsible for their movements. Yet, when treated patiently and assiduously, even the butterfly replies to human kindness.

Some years ago a lady was presented with two butterflies in the pupae stage—that is, they were yet in the form which insects take as they change from the state of caterpillar or larvae, and before they burst out into their winged or perfected condition. Now she is of a sweet and gentle nature, and it came to her it might be possible to have butterfly pets.

She laid the pupae on a tiny bed of cotton wool, and placed them in a cabinet with glass door, standing where the sun shone into her well-warmed bedroom. Day after day she gave a look at the little chrysalides, and, in time, she saw to her immense joy a yellow butterfly had appeared during the night.

She was greatly puzzled as to how to feed it, for it was still early spring, and flowers and blossoms were lacking. Thinking about this she went into her greenhouse, and there a small so-called "fairy rose" took her eye. She snipped off the rose, dropped a little honey and water upon it, and put the rose into the cabinet. The butterly that was fluttering slowly around, almost immediately settled on it, and, attracted by the fragrance of the honeyed petals, it took its first meal there and then, right before her eyes. Within a fortnight, when she called it, "Psyche," the butterfly, would rise, flutter a little, then settle on her outspread hand. After a time, it would fold up its wings, and rest there in full confidence.

Already the other chrysalis had come to life, and a lovely peacock butterfly, so called on account of its markings like the peacock, had appeared. It was fed like the first, and soon it also delighted in being talked to. Most of all, did the two enjoy being slowly, softly wafted through the air, and danced gently up and down and round about, while they were being supported on the hand of their mistress.

As spring passed into early summer, she opened her windows, but for several days neither of the butterflies went farther then the window-sill. And aye they came back when their mistress called their names, "Psyche" and "Eros."

Then one sunny forenoon she saw them take flight, and join some butterflies hovering in the flower garden beyond the window. With them her pets fluttered. She called to them, and they knew her voice, and came home. The next morning, they again flew into the garden, and that night they both returned, settling on her hand as she stood on the garden called. Her two pets came not. Next two butterflies fluttered forth, and away over the garden and lawn. That afternoon, their mistress called and cled. Her two pets came not. Next day, it was stormy and thundery, and after the weather had cleared a yellow butterfly was found lying on the bedroom sill. But two specks on the left wing, it was recognized. But the other pet butterfly was never again seen.

As Sir John Lubbock, one of the most trustworthy of nature men, has said, "Kindness and patience conquer all nature." And Sir John made close friends with wasps!

French and World Policy

Wickham Steed in the Review of Reviews (London): In no respect has French policy been less clear-sighted than in regard to the United States. Crious incapacity to understand the America point of view has seemed to afflict French statesmen. Equally remarkable has been their want of perspicacity upon Anglo-American relations. If any country on the Continent of Europe would be likely to profit by the removal of all misunderstandings between Great Britain and the United States it is France.

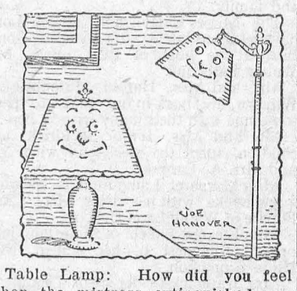


Table Lamp: How did you feel when the mistress extinguished you last night?

Bridge Lamp: I felt very much put out.

Stockings Are Important

Although many girls are quite prepared to spend a good deal of money on stockings, not many seem to give as much care as they should to their item of clothing so important, and girls cannot be too particular about their stockings, especially if their legs are not their best point.

A shiny silk stocking is, for instance, always ugly and certainly adds to the size of the leg. A medium-weight silk is better for day-time wear than a very thin silk, unless the thin silk be a particularly good one. Very fine silk stockings look best at night. A heavy silk cannot, for instance, be worn with a very filmy gown.

Points to Remember

When a very thin silk stocking is chosen see that the double part of the heel at the back does not pop up too high. If the double piece at the back comes fairly low to the shoe the stocking will look much better on; a high piece looks ugly. The same rule applies to the slipper heel, usually supposed to have a slimming effect on the thickest ankle. This it does if the point of the triangle does not rise too high.

The slipper heel, for some reason or other, is not so satisfactory in lisle and very thin makes of silk. In many cases it seems to make the seam go awry.

Other points to remember, particularly when you think you are picking up a bargain, are the length and type of clocks (very elaborate or very long clocks are not attractive looking). Then, some stockings are a good deal shorter than others, and this should be remembered if you like your panel of silk to stretch well over your knees.

As Nice as Silk

Many people prefer buying a few pairs of very good silk stockings and more pairs of very good lisle stockings, to wearing indifferent silk all the time. It is quite a good plan, for, of course, silk stocking are not always suitable or necessary. There is, too, a very good make of French lisle on the market which looks every bit as nice as silk, is well fashioned, finished off beautifully, and made in all the newest shades. It has all the sheen of chiffon lisle with a little more substance behind it, and it is of course, infinitely more durable.

Britain's Bright Young People

W. H. M. in the Nation and Athenaeum (London): Every age that ever was has had its bright young people, and ours are not a singular blessing to us.....There were "The Souls." They were probably the immediate predecessors of the present "bright young people."....And then, long before this, there were the "macaronies" who made a great affectation of being foreign and, for some reason or other, wore two watches. This kind of thing done by some of us always annoys the rest of us. It is indeed part of the fun that it should, and, when the times are serious, the protesting party is not only annoyed but alarmed. The protesting party is reminded of Nero fiddling while Rome burned. It is reminded of Charles 11 and his ladies chasing a butterfly all over the furniture while a Dutch admiral with an uncouth name was coming up the Thames. And now a "bid and bottle" party —in Knightsbridge—with things as they are—a Labour Government in—not, indeed, with an independent majority, but still in!

The Test of Service

Geoffrey Popham in the National Review (London): For this generation of Englishmen there remains one acid test of a man's standing—namely, whether or not he served England in the war in whatsoever capacity his age and circumstances permitted; and for non-combatants to occupy the peace which the fighters won at an uncounted cost, in belittling them and their service, and the inspiration of their service, serves chiefly to emphasize the gulf that yawns between deeds and worlds.

British Sportsmanship

Albert Shaw in the American Review of Reviews. The enthusiasm for sport, extending from the King and the Prince of Wales to the humblest apprentice in the coal mines i sa unifying influence that has its great social value. Undoubtedly the betting habit has spread beyond bounds, and it should be curbed if possible by moralists and by statesmen. But the British fondness for sport, as such, is a wholesome thing. It may be studied to advantage in relation to the shortening of working hours, the improved standard of health, and the rise in every way of the British democracy.

Heart to Heart Talk

By Dr. John Joseph Haines

CHILDHOOD GEMS

One of the first "thrillers" of my youth was a story, wherein a boy of about my own size killed a ferocious giant with a small round pebble hurled from his sling. This giant was a double-dyed villain, and, needed killing. The boy became a king, and a hero; his name is, even yet, among the best known of earth. . . . My mother told me this story first; and, she assured me of its absolute truth. I have never questioned it to this day. She told me God was with young David; that I must keep Him with me, so that giants could not harm me.

Another favorite was the story of an American boy, who thoughtlessly hacked down his father's prize cherry-tree; it, too, will stay with me always—just as true as when my mother read it to me. Its wonderful moral lesson, more potent for good than most of modern teaching—"I cannot tell a lie!" A liar is just a thief in other dress—and more to be despised. You can padlock against the thief, not the liar.

Those dear old books! There were only about four of them; we read them over and over again, committing much of their content to memory. One had to be careful handling them; many a time I washed my hands before being entrusted with the treasured volumes.

Now comes the—what shall I call him? Critic? Modernist?—who tells the world those stories are false! I do not know what he expects to gain by such allegations. Certainly he cannot make the world better with such heresy, for it is nothing else! I could excuse a political muck-raker, but not the vandal who seeks to tear down the beautiful, the good, the inspiring ideals which my dear mother implanted within me to stay. I am writing just as I feel: If more of our boys were fortified against lying—if more of them were given practical illustrations of God's power, we might have a more law-abiding people for our future. Shame on the defamer of ideals!

About Permanent Waves

Now that summer is here more and more women will be interested in the type of wave called "permanent," for the warm, moist weather of summer is inclined to take every bit of life and "body" out of naturally straight hair so that it lies limp and dank and unattractive.

A permanent wave in this weather proves a real hair blessing, as both heat and dampness affect it as they do naturally curly hair, making it curlier than ever.

The term, permanent, is of course misleading, since no artificial wave is ever permanent. But the good so-called "permanent" wave lasts usually from six to eight months, according to the type of hair to which it is given. And this is longer than any other type of wave lasts, except of course, a natural one.

Contrary to the belief of many women, the good permanent wave does not injure the hair, if it is in a healthy condition. I know women who have had at least fifteen permanent waves and whose hair is soft and lustrous, quite as healthy and normal as hair that has never been waved at all. Of course a great deal depends upon the operator.

If you are thinking of "waving" be sure, first, of two things—that your hair and scalp are in a healthy condition, and that you know a skilled operator who can be trusted to do the work well. The hair should not be twisted in wrapping it around the little rods that are baked to give the wave or curl. It should be wound flatly and smoothly to insure a perfectly natural, smooth, flat wave. When it is twisted a frizzy, irregular curl is the result.

Before you go to have your wave prepare your hair for the event by giving it several weekly, or semi-weekly, hot-oil treatments, using sweet oil or olive oil or a specially prepared balsam oil. Part the hair into sections and massage the oil into the partings thoroughly. Then brush the hair vigorously to stimulate the circulation and strengthen the tiny muscles at the roots of the hair. This will nourish the scalp and prepare it for the heat of the waving process.

THE HUMAN BRAIN.

Nature's Masterpiece, With All Its Failings, Is Man's Brain.

In the second of a course of lectures, given in the theatre of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Sir Arthur Keith said that man's brain, with all its failings, represented nature's masterpiece.

Recently a distinguished Viennese neurologist, Prof. Constantin Economo, had made a more exact census than any made hitherto of the living units within the cortex of rind which was the essential part of the human brain. He found that a European with a brain of forty-eight ounces—a common size—had about fourteen thousand millions of living units or neurons, as they were named, in the grey matter or cortex of his brain. The brain, stated Sir Arthur, was "wired" to an extent far beyond the wildest dreams of the most modern of telephone engineers, the wires or nerve fibres being living filaments drawn from the bodies of the neurons. Let an engineer think of an organ wired as the brain was, with messages volleying along each wire at a rate of some forty or fifty a second, and travelling at a rate of two hundred miles an hour, and he would have some faint conception of the tide of traffic handled by an efficient brain in the course of a morning.

It was plain, Sir Arthur added, that mere mass must be a very insecure guide to capacity. A brain might have mass and yet lack of organization or fail in a hundred other ways; the brain of the elephant and of the whale, for example, far exceeded man's brain in mass, but, in their case, the neurons were of a vegetative order.

The fact, however, remained that mass of brain did usually count. If the human brain fell short of thirty-two ounces, its owner was an imbecile; to this no exception had been known. Craniometrical investigations, moreover, had shown that, in all gatherings made up from leading men, the average mass of brain was distinctly higher than that of groups which represented manual laborers.

The most striking generalization which had emerged from recent research on the brain was to show that all the cortex behind the central fissure had to deal with the receipt and manipulation of messages streaming in from the sense organs of the body and all that lay in front was executive or controlling in function. General opinion, which had long favored an ample forehead as a mask of ability, was receiving some degrees of justification from modern enquiry.

ALL IN FAVOR.

Governor of B. C. Pulled a Boner on the Kids.

School children welcome the visit of distinguished men chiefly because this means a holiday, ostensibly granted at the request of the guest.

His Honor R. R. Bruce, Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, who does more travelling over the great province than any of his predecessors in office, follows the usual routine in this respect after addressing a few kind words to the children in every little town he visits. It is so much part of the ceremony that the request for a holiday has become automatic with him.

At Keremeos, not far from the boundary line, he gave his short talk to the assembled children recently, and then informed them that he had the privilege of declaring a holiday.

"Those in favor will please say 'Aye,'" suggested his honor facetiously.

The response was amazingly disappointing.

"What's the matter?" inquired the Lieutenant-Governor. "Don't you want a holiday?"

"Please, sir," piped up a shrill voice, "a holiday is no good to us to-day. This is Saturday and there's no school anyway."

"Then suppose we declare a holiday for Monday," suggested the quick-witted Mr. Bruce. "All in favor says 'Aye!'"

The motion carried with splendid enthusiasm.

BADGES FOR BARTS.

King Authorizes All Baronets to Wear Badges.

Scots who talk of "injustices" to "puir auld Scotland" will be interested in a recent news item. It is the announcement that the King has authorized all baronets, other than baronets of Scotland, to wear a badge consisting of a shield of the Arms of Ulster, surmounted by an imperial crown, and enclosed by an oval border embossed with gilt scroll-work.

The Scots mustn't jump to conclusions, however, says Answers. The reason why baronets of Scotland are not provided for is that they have had a badge of their own since the days of Charles I. The English baronets then demanded a badge, too, but without success. So, if there is any injustice now revealed, it is England that has suffered from it for about 300 years.

The new badge is to be worn round the neck, suspended from an orange ribbon with a narrow dark blue edge on each side.

Good Baseball

One of the best, if not the best game, of baseball ever played in Winchester was that played on Wednesday night, when the Champion team from Riverside, Ottawa and Winchester contested for the championship suburban League of the E. O. B A. The first game was played at Ottawa on Saturday last when Winchester was defeated by a score of 10-3. But our local boys were not discouraged, and believed they could play as good a game as their opponents. And notwithstanding their defeat by a score of 10-7 they certainly played as good ball, and made as few arrows as the team from Ottawa In the first five inning Winchester had the advantage. By pure luck the Ottawa team managed to get several safe runs after they had two men out. If there is any distinction the Ottawa team is a little better at the bat than our local boys, and their pitcher Galarneau, in the latter part of the game had the home boys guessing. The home team have every reason to feel satisfied with their exhibition and although beaten they were not outclassed. There was a large attendance, and the game was an exciting one from start to finish.

Flints for the Home
by Nancy Hart

One of our foremost decorators whose rooms at exhibitions receive special mention for their fresh, clean-cut color and composition, sends an interesting message to home-makers of modest means.

She urges them to create beauty in the home by easy stages, adding here a little bit and there a little bit, instead of longing vainly for the time when the room can be re-done as a whole, or costly new pieces bought.

One beauty spot may make an entire room inviting, as she plans it. Let us say the room lacks decoration. She will place a simple console table before a window, give it a cover of silver fabrikoid, perhaps, and plan there a group of exquisite though simple things. One such group included a quaint colorful porcelain figure standing in the shade of smart, modernistic-looking cacti in yellow pottery jars, with related plants in colors harmonizing with the dress of the figure. Beautiful shells, old colored glass, a small collection of pewter or porcelain—all these treasures when staged effectively do much to make an interesting room.

Italian Rice

Mix 4 cups cooked rice with 1½ cups tomato juice, ¾ cup grated cheese, 2 teaspoons salt, ½ cup chopped pimentos, ⅛ teaspoon pepper and pour in buttered baking dish. Cover top with pulp left from straining tomatoes. Bake for 30 minutes in moderate oven and serve hot.

Plum Conserve

Cook 5 lbs. plums until tender in 3 pints water. Strain through colander and measure. Add ¾ lb. broken English walnuts, juice and pulp of 3 oranges, 2 lbs. chopped seedless raisins. Add ¾ lb. sugar to each pound of fruit; cook until the consistency of marmalade.

Raspberry Julew

To 1 cup water add ½ cup crushed raspberries and a sprig of bruised mint. Stand on ice for 2 hours. Take out mint, strain and serve over crushed ice.

When Sealing Jellies

Melt your paraffin in an old enamelware teapot it is handy to pour over jellies and can be set on stove to reheat each time without waste.

Refurbishing the Velour Hat

For rain-spotted hats of velour, try the following method of restoring the nap to its original softness:

Set a hot iron on hand and over it place a wet cloth, keeping it wet to supply a good flow of steam. Hold the hat down over this steaming iron and brush it vigorously with a good bristle.

Removes Lime from Kettles

A solution of 30 grams of borax in 1 quart of water containing a few drops of ammonia will remove the lime deposit from the inside of kettles or pans.

Albert E. Glasgow

Morewood, Ontario mourns the loss of one of its most promirent citizens, Albert E. Glasgow, who died at his home there last Thursday, after a somewhat lengthy illness. The late Mr. Glasgow was known throughout Morewood and Finch township as the organizer and propietor of the A. E. Glasgow private telephone company which covered Morewood and Finch township. Mr. Glasgow was a member and a staunch supporter of Morewood United church, and was one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of the town.

Born in Winchester township on March 23, 1866, the son of John A. Glasgow and Esther McConnell in 1901 he married Mary Jarvis who survives him. He also leaves one son, John William, a daughter, Mrs. Kenneth Reid, a brother, W. C. Glasgow and two sisters, Mrs. S. Gardner all of Finch township and Mrs. J. E. Scott of Smith Falls.

McLean—Allison

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Friday August 23, at the United Church, Morewood, when Miss Clara Mae Allison was united in marriage to Mr. George E. McLean of Manotick. Rev. Mr. Armstrong officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was becomingly attired in white brocaded satin, the skirt of which was three tiers of silk lace. Her tulle veil was held in place by a dainty wreath of orange blossoms She carried a shower bouquet of sweetheart roses and lily of the valley.

The bridesmaid, Miss Florence McLean, sister of the groom, wore a gown of orchid georgette trimmed with gold lace, with shoes to match. She carried a bouquet of roses and sweet peas. The groom was accompanied by Mr. Harold Allison, brother of the bride.

The wedding march from Lohengrin was played by Miss Louva Allison. During the signing of the register, Rev. Roy P. Stafford of Lachine, sang "All Joy Be Thine" Mrs. Stafford played the accompaniment.

The wedding supper was served on the lawn at the brides' home. About one hundred guests were present. Misses Mabel Waddell, Jean Stewart, Evelyn Fennel Evah McQuaig, Frances Eagleson, Vivian Lee, Phyllis Henderson, and Jean Melvin, former pupils of the bride, assisted in the serving.

Amid the best wishes of their many friends, Mr. and Mrs. McLean left on a motor trip to Toronto. Guelph, and the Muskoka Lakes. The bride travelled in a smart honey beige crepe gown, close fitting felt hat with gloves and shoes to match. She carried a beig leather bag, the gift of the groom.

The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a white gold filigree bracelet, to the best man, suede gloves to the soloists a book, and to the pianist a rhinestone bracelet.

Guests from a distance were, Mr. Edward McDonald, Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. H P. Allison and family. Smith Falls, Mr. Robt. Drumnond, Montreal, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Stafford, Lachine, Dr. and Mrs. Durant, Vankleek Hill, Mr. Harold Lane, Aultsville.

For Gossipers

This is an old fable, but it is worth repeating:

A peasant with a troubled conscience went to a monk. He said he had circulated a vile story about a friend, only to find the story was not true. 'If you want to make peace with your conscience," said the monk, "you must fill a bag with chicken down, go to every dooryard in the village and drop in each one of them one fluffy feather." The peasant did as he was told. Then he came back to the monk and annonnced he had done penance for his folly. "Not yet," replied the monk. "Take your bag, go the rounds again, and gather up every feather that you have dropped." "But the wind must have blown them all away," said the peasant. "Yes, my son," said the monk, "and so it is with gossip. Words are easily dropped, but no matter how hard you may try, you can never get them back again."

Glorious Days by the Sea

These are glorious days on the Maine coast. Youth is renewed in the brilliant snnshine on these silvery sands. There is fun for all, grown-ups and children alike, building castles and playing pirate, dashing into the surf with a challenge to the breakers. Modern hosteleries for those who like them so; quiet homelike surroundings for those who seek a leisurely seclusion.
