Races at Chesterville a Success.

The weather on Thursday and Friday of last week was all that was desired to ensure a good race meet in Chesterville, and they had it. Quite a crowd of people were present at both days and some good finishes were witnessed.

A great deal of interest centered in the free-for-all trot or pace on the last day of the meet. Three horses appeared for this money, viz; Wilkwood C., Banner Boy and Deveras. The followers of Deveras were of the opinion that he could win and claimed foul on the part of the other two horses, but when the heats were finished, Wilkwood C. proved the winner. We are informed that money was bet that same evening between admirers of the two stallions, when they are supposed to start at Winchester fair on Sept. 8th and 9th.

The following events were contested:—

BUSH FIRES.

We think that it is about time that some protest should be made against the setting out of fires during the months of July and August. The wind on Tuesday was so high that on all sides of Chesterville, the homes of many farmers were threatened. This is not only true of Winchester township, but the same may be said ot the adjoining township of Finch. Is there not a law against the setting out of fires? If so, will not some one invoke the strong arm of the law, and see what can be done to suppress this habit of setting out fires in a dry time.

OPENING OF THE NEW CHURCH AT FINCH.

The beautiful new Presbyterian church at Finch, erected to replace the one burned over a year ago, was opened for public worship last Sabbath morning. Rev. W. D. Reid, B. D., of Montreal, was the preacher at both services. He was ably assisted in the dedication ceremony by the Pastor, Rev. W. D. Bell and Rev. N. H. McGillivray of Cornwall. Crowded congregations listened to the forcible addresses of the preacher and the people of Finch will not soon forget his inspiring messages.

On Monday a Harvest Home Dinner was held in the church grounds. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Messrs. Reid, McGillivray, Stewart of Finch), McIntyre of Ogdensburg. McIntyre of Caron Sask.. Mason, Lundie, Mingie, Stewart of Morewood, and Messrs. Pringle M. P. Kerr, Smith and Mulhern of Cornwall.

The addresses were short and to the point, brimful of humor and containing a word of encouragment for both pastor and people and congratulations were the order of the day from both preachers and politicians as they spoke of the progress of Presbyterianism in Finch during the past twenty years.

In the evening a concert was held in the church when over 400 people listened to the "Iroquois Quartette" of Ottawa, who furnished the musical part of the program.

Rev. W. D. Reid delighted his hearers with an illustrated lecture on a trip through Ireland.

The people of Finch are to be congratulated on the success of all the services. The gross proceeds of the day were over $600.

The bride was supported by her sister, Miss Jessie, while Mr. Howard Annable assisted the groom. The wedding march was played by the I. O. O. F. band, who, during the evening, played quite a number of selections. The presents were beautiful and numerous and testify to the popularity of the young couple. About 40 guests were present. After partaking of a bountiful supper, Mr. and Mrs. Annable left for Winchester, where they took the evening train for Toronto and other western points.

The RECORD joins their many friends in wishing this couple much happiness.

A SHADOWED PATH;

Or, The Curse Of The Family

"I will satisfy her," remarked Doctor Duvard, "but now tell me, could you not manage to return to your old quarters?"

"No,—I am safer here—safer in this large lodging-house, than I should be in that quiet suburb. He would never think of looking for me here—besides he knows my old name of Gilmore, and if I changed it, the people down at Ashford Row would think there was a mystery hanging about me; and then, the place is damp. I cannot bear damp, latterly; there is something Doctor, catches me here, every few minutes—what is it?"

"You must keep quiet," he returned; but there was a grave anxious look about his eyes, when he followed the movement of her hand to her chest—which Judith caught at.

"There is consumption in our family," she remarked, in a quieter tone.

"You are nervous and fanciful," said her friend, "but we will soon set you to rights again—I should now like you to go to bed; and after I have seen this woman, I will return home, and call early again tomorrow morning."

It was late before he was able to leave the house; for the interview with the raw-boned individual, who had Mrs. Mazingford, as she phrased it, "under her thumb," lasted for a considerable period. From her he learnt many particulars he was desirous of knowing; although he would have scrupled to ask Judith concerning them; and when at length the woman departed, she left him in possession of the horrors his patient had passed through; of the name of the asylum—of the actual state of Mrs. Mazingford's health.

"I have arranged matters with her," were the words Doctor Duvard traced on a sheet of notepaper and sent in to Judith by the hands of a servant; and having heard that his patient was tranquil, and inclined to sleep, he walked more gently than is the wont of doctors, down-stairs, and had his foot on the hall doorstep, when a hand was laid on his arm—

"Doctor Duvard, I believe!"

The person so addressed raised his hat in acknowledgment of the justice of the supposition.

"Would you be kind enough to favor me with a few minutes' conversation?" pursued the stranger; and Doctor Duvard acquiescing, he led him into a dining-room more handsomely furnished than apartments in lodging-houses usually are.

"Pray be seated," said he; and his visitor having done so, had leisure to scrutinize the appearance of his new acquaintance.

"Under sixty, and odd," was the mental summary he made—whilst Mr. Gartmore opened proceedings, by asking how the lady was.

"Very ill!" answered Doctor Duvard.

"Dangerously?"

"I hope not," was the reply.

"Pray, sir, do you know who she ?" demanded Mr. Gartmore, with directness which might have another man off his guard ctor Duvard answered ange of countenance.

Gartmore, roughly; but as his visitor turned the lock of the door, he held out his hand to him, and said in a straightforward point-blank sort of way—

"Upon my soul, I believe you are an honest fellow."

"You do not know what I might be, if I were tried," retorted Doctor Duvard, who saw that if he fenced the old man it must be with his own weapons.

"Sharply put!" replied Mr. Gartmore, laughing. "When you want anything else come to me."

"I do not think I shall—but if I do, I will, as you seem to desire it, knock first at your door!" and Charles bowed himself somewhat stiffly out, for he did not like to be condescended to—and he did not approve of being cross-questioned. Besides, was Mr. Gartmore not Sir John Lestock's brother, and did he not hate Sir John Lestock cordially?

When Judith greeted him next morning, he saw with even more distinctness than on the previous night, the ravages a few months had made. Her eyes were sunken and her cheeks thin; but in better spirits she laughed her ailments aside, and telling him she was almost well again, commenced speaking eagerly of her books.

"Books, indeed! Do you want to kill yourself?" demanded Doctor Duvard; "I forbid your holding a pen for months to come—write, it would be as much as your life is worth."

"My life is not worth much in one way, though it may be in another," she answered. "I am not happy enough yet to die—my whole existence has been an out-of-joint, contradictory, contrary sort of drama; and I have firm faith that I shall never be claimed by death, until I learn to care for and enjoy life; you will call this superstition, Doctor, and I suppose it is so—but presentiments you know often make their own fulfilment; and as for not writing, I must write to provide myself with every-day necessaries. What I wanted, principally, to say to you was, that I have a completed manuscript if I could get it sold—that woman supplied me with the materials secretly, and we are to share the profits, that was our agreement—would you try to dispose of it for me to advantage?—you must not take it to Mr. Mason, and you might have it published under the name of any friend of yours—I should like it to be fairly copied out in a different hand than mine, and then presented to Mr. Larocca; he pays the best, I think, of any person in the trade, when once you can get the book accepted by him. It must be presented as a first, you understand—might I tax your friendship and kindness so far?"

There was hardly anything she could have asked him to do for her he would not, and, accordingly, by dint of persevering attentions to the publisher, Charles managed to get the work into print, paid for and reviewed within the miraculously short space of three months from date of delivery, and during the lapse of those thirteen weeks, Judith's health rallied so much that Doctor Duvard began to hope great things for her. The prospect of more money kept her tormentor quiet, judicious treatment and perfect quietness stilled and soothed her nerves into a state of tolerable tranquility. A shadow of her former loveliness came stealing back into her face. With trouble behind her—relieved from the incubus of its immediate presence, she grew sometimes even cheerful, able template her actual position act, and think, and judge nce more.

she was far from ard never felt so f that fact, as ect the adreviews, e bither tion, even whilst he felt she ought to have greater rest than ever. But then hers was a spirit which knew no repose.

"It is not that I like work," she said, on one occasion, when he remonstrated with her more seriously than usual, "only there is a little piece of machinery in me which forces me to labor—often against my inclination. It has never been still for a moment, oh, not for years past—and I suppose it will never let me be quiet until I am lying in my grave—I think I must have lived as much in three or four years, as many an one in sixty—I have hurried on, always so fast."

Meantime every line she wrote, drained away a life-drop from her. He saw this and told her so; but the proud spirit that had remained unbroken by sorrow, remorse, hardship, and cruelty, would not yield itself captive to pain. She laughed when he told her she ought to go to Maderia, and asked if he thought she could delay the fiat one hour.

On one point alone was she vulnerable, viz., the horror of detection—every shilling she made was shared with the wretch who held her liberty in her hands, and whose demands grew larger day by day. It was in vain Doctor Duvard suggested flight—she seemed to have a nervous horror of the woman, a fear of having two persons pursuing her instead of one.

The incubus was weighing her down to the earth, and at length having made such inquiries as satisfied him Mr. Gartmore was not one of the same heartless species as Sir John Lestock, Charles determined to lay the state of the case boldly before him, and demand at once advice and assistance. Doctor Duvard heard he suspected everybody who approached him of sinster motives; that he detested his niece, Miss Lestock, who was continually paying him visits—that he had no faith, no trust, no love in, nor for any one—that he was, in brief, a misanthropical old man, to whom money had proved a curse, and life a valueless, unimproved, profitless gift.

And yet he had his redeeming points. When he could make sure that he was not flattered or sought for his money, he was kind and liberal, though, perhaps, a little roughly so. The upper surface was only a crust, a very hard and tough one certainly, but still, after all, only a crust, covering many a good, and tender, and generous emotion. He was more sick of the world than worldly, more suspicious than cold-hearted, had been, perhaps, more sinned against than sinning. Besides, had he not desired Charles to come to him, when Judith needed aught at his hands; and was it not at any rate a scheme worth trying to free the unhappy woman from persecution and the presence of a perpetual dread?

Dr. Duvard had made up his mind to this course of action one afternoon, when he was summoned to attend a pressing case in his own neighborhood.

"Mrs. Bling, sir, has been taken with cholera. Could you go over at once to her? and here is a letter just come for you."

"Say I will be with her in five minutes," he replied, tearing open the envelope, which enclosed a note for Judith. It was forwarded by her publisher, and directed to her under her nom de plume; but Dr. Duvard started, when he looked at the superscription.

Never in his life had he felt so tempted to pry into another person's private affairs. His fingers positively itched to break the seal; and he had to lay the missive down before he could persuade his own conscience he had no right to look at Judith's correspondence.

Then he thought he would go to her; but afterwards, remembering his patient, duty got the best of the struggle with inclination, and tracing the words—"If you can help me to find the writer of the enclosed, for eaven's saks do," he folded the missive up out of sight, and despatched it by a special messenger to the hands of Judith Mazingford.

"What on earth can the man mean?" she soliloquized, when she read his petition. "Is he looking for an absent wife, too? or is he in love? or what?" and even as she wondered, she opened the note, and looked to the name at the end.

"Alice Crepton" was the signature.

"Why, good gracious! that's my cousin!" said Judith, absolutely out loud in her amazement, "and it is dated from where? 63, Upper Emery Street;" and when she arrived at this point, her astonishment grew too great for words, and he betook herself in very bewilder- to a perusal of the epistle, contained, first, many apolo- the liberty taken in writ- , an explanation of the and wishes of the detail of how Mr. d to speak in he had not last, a if the not

Yours truly,

"ALICE CREPTON.

"63, Upper Emery Street."

Judith repeated the name and address over again, ere she betook herself to a second perusal of an epistle, which would, probably, never have received an answer from any other individual. After she had finished the last reading, and drawn her own conclusions from it, she rang the bell, and asked the servant who appeared in answer—

"Pray, Mary, how many lodgers have you in the house?"

"Why, ma'am, besides yourself, I think we have seven."

"Only seven! Are you sure there is no one else? no younger lady than any you have mentioned, either staying with some of your lodgers or else living alone?"

"Oh! yes, to be sure, ma'am, you are right—the young lady in the third floor. I always forget her, because she gives so little trouble and is out all day. Miss Crepton, ma'am, you mean?"

"Precisely. How long has she been here?"

"I cannot say exactly. We never think about her; she is so quiet. I heard her talking once, a long time ago, to my mistress about music pupils—so I suppose she teaches."

"While her mother drives up to the door three times a week in her barouche and pair," thought Judith bitterly—then added out loud — "Do you know if Miss Crepton is within at present?"

"Oh! she is never out so late as this, ma'am," returned Mary, who had an intense respect for Judith, and whose opinion of Alice went up a hundred per cent., after hearing her inquired about by a lady of Miss Leake's appearance. "Do you wish to see her? Can I take any message up to her?"

"No, thank you," said Judith. "Wait a moment, however. I want to write a note to Mr. Gartmore."

NEW RICHES FROM ALASKA FOR THE FARMER.

Hard Wheat From Fall Sowing — Yields Up to 222 Bushels to the Acre!

When the United States paid eighty millions for the Territory of Alaska, it was to the fur the purchasers looked for a return on the investment. When gold began to pour in from that great country the investment was pronounced good. But not in gold alone was Alaska destined to repay those early statesmen for their real-estate speculation. Years after the yellow metal was discovered, there came an aged farmer to that far northland, and took back to the States the basis for wealth to his country by the side of which the gold from the hills and icy river-beds should pale into insignificance, writes Oscar F. G. Day in the Saturday Evening Post.

It was in 1903 that Abraham Adams, a native of Kentucky, who had gone with the "star of Empire" to the great West to farm it, was taken with a desire to try his fortunes in Alaska. Leaving his ranch in northern Idaho, he made a trip to the land of promise and of gold, but nothing came of his attempts at discovery. Turning his attention then to exploring, he drifted along the coast of eastern Alaska, where the Japan curren flows near the shore and makes of the land from coast to mountain eternal spring. Many miles he explored, investigating the possibilities of that country for future farming and grazing, preparing himself for a report to the farmers of his community.

He found many beautiful bays, splendid beaches, sweeps of timber, and meadows heavy with juicy grasses. Here and there were traces of gold, but not of promising quantity, and then he chanced upon

A SURPRISING DISCOVERY.

Lodged in a nook under protecting rock, sheltered from the winds, was a little familiar patch. Interested at once, he investigated and found that here a patch of wheat was growing, far from any living human that could have planted it. On hands and knees he pulled away the matted straws. Yes, it was certainly wheat that was just ripening. The explorer sought among the thick stems for some heads, but the wild game had been before him, and he was just about to give up when he discovered one head of wheat almost intact. A gigantic head it was! Fully four inches long with ough bearding, and broad in ion.

unknown region, where it grew native, and coming to Alaska deposited the seed in a fertile spot. And yet it was only curiosity that moved Abraham Adams. He never dreamed of his find being of any value except as an experiment for his own pleasure.

In the fall of 1904 Mr. Adams planted his head of Alaska wheat on high and all-too-dry land — the natural soil of Idaho. It grew rapidly when the spring opened its founts, and in the summer he had seven pounds of wheat from this one head. That was startling. He hardly dared tell a farmer of it. He examined the kernels. Four times as large as ordinary wheat, and in color—instead of the homely brownish-gray of wheat of commerce — the prettiest cream color without a darker spot.

SEVEN POUNDS OF WHEAT

from one head, and the finest-looking wheat mortal had ever seen! Abraham Adams began to dream.

Having tested the grains as winter wheat, Mr. Adams saved his seven pounds to try as spring wheat, and in 1906 he planted the whole seven pounds. Sturdily it grew, and when it was harvested he weighed 1545 pounds. His Alaska find had broken the world's record for wheat yield! More than two hundred and twenty-two bushels to the acre was the ratio of yield, and that without any special petting or manipulation. With the world's average yield 12.7 bushels to the acre, and a fair yield for exceptional land of twenty bushels here was the prospect of a miracle; a revolution in the wheat industry of the world. But still there was something that might dash every hope of a wheat miracle. Was this Alaska wheat of good quality? Would it make good bread?

With this last idea in mind the experimenting farmer carried a small quantity of his wheat to the Idaho experiment station at Moscow. He knew he had a wheat that yielded past any belief. He had something marvelous in a wheat that yielded equally as well planted winter or spring. Did he have a good wheat? The chemists and experts at the station tested it and pronounced it a good quality of hard wheat. Hard wheat! That was sufficient. But Adams knew he must have patience for another year.

In the fall of 1906 the 1545 pounds were planted in fields by the side of the famous Blue Stem and Club wheat grown in that section. Watching their comparative growth, Mr. Adams picked on the same day green heads of Club wheat and gren heads of his Alaska wheat, the latter so many times larger than the ordinary wheat that the Club wheat seemed hardly started.

THE FARMER WAS JUBILANT.

Then Nature took a hand, and hailstorms of the worst kind came, beating down the ordinary wheat until it was not fit to harvest. The farmer, discouraged, went out to his Alaska wheat-fields and saw that the sturdy stems had partly withstood the storms, and he finally harvested 53,000 pounds of seed.

Now was the time to make his final test. He had enough for a test from winter-grown. Taking this to the experimental station, he soon received a report which made him for the first time that he had something worth giving to the public. The station chemist wrote:

"The kernels from the fall-sown wheat were plump and sound and doubtless will grade No. 1. Judging from the chemical and physical condition of this sample, it will probably take rank with the best grade of Blue Stem for flour.

"The sample grown from spring-sown wheat showed by chemical analysis a somewhat higher protein content (this being an indication of its probable strength for bread-making purposes). I am inclined to think that the wheat that you have here is the equal, if not the superior, of our Blue Stem for flour-making purposes. I should like to make a mill test whenever you can send me a sufficient quantity for that purpose."

These are the facts about the wonderful wheat of which the world will soon be talking. Farmers do not believe it; wheat speculators do not believe it; but those who have traveled to see it do believe it. Mr. Adams had his fields surveyed and has absolute proof of the yield from each field. Te has tried his wheat in other lands, and in some places it did better than in Idaho. Alabama raised wheat from it with leaves seven-eighths of an inch broad,

GROWING LIKE CORNSTALKS.

As a last test, Mr. Adams sent single heads of wheat to other parts of the country where he had men he could trust to plant and ascertain the result. Reports are just coming to him, and he finds that in other States his Alaska wheat does better than on its home soil. In Alabama a head was planted December 31, was up January 30, waist-high April 1, with leaves seven-eighths of an inch broad, and July 7 was harvested. It showed to be hard wheat of a fine quality, and the one head yielded the same as the first head planted in Idaho.

Under ordinary soil conditions the new wheat will yield two hundred bushels to the acre, under extra conditions above that.

What will be the outcome? Had all America had Alaska wheat to seed this year, the American crop alone would have been five billions of bushels. Does that not mean a revolution in the wheat industry? Will the food of the poor become so cheap that there will be no famines? Or will farm property rise in value with the capacity for the yield? All this is conjecture, but these things are certain:

That wheat Alaska has given will withstand hail if not too h

It will withstand frost.

It grows hard wheat fr all sowing.

It yields up to 222 bushels to the acre.

It will grade up to No. 1 hard.

And, last and best of all, it will bring back wheat-raising to the worn-out farms of the East where, with wheat-yields two hundred bushels to the acre, farmers can af ford to use manures and chemic and make a profit.

It is difficult to make first-class butter in midsummer, and impossible unless the pastures are free from weeds and the water good. Cows in their haste to fill up in hot weather will even eat many weeds with grass, whose bitter taste would at any other time cause them to reject it.

The Baker's Son

RAT-A-TAP! Rat-a-tap! Rat-a-tap-tap! Sharply the great brass knocker battered upon the massive door giving entrance to the school.

It was a little boy who knocked—a little boy in well-worn blouse and dress. The towhead was far below the level of the knocker, to reach which the boy stood on tiptoe and strained desperately upward.

In response to this vigorous summons there shortly appeared the schoolmaster, who beamed kindly over his horn-rimmed spectacles at the little fellow standing upon the threshold.

"What is it you wish, my little man?" asked he.

"Please, sir," eagerly began the towheaded youngster, "I came to know if you wouldn't let me study in your school. I'd try ever so hard, and I do so want to learn how to read big books and to write."

A tiny smile curled around the corners of the old man's mouth as he bent down from his stooped height. But as he laid his hand upon the boy's tousled locks he said quite gravely:

"I'm afraid you forgot to ask permission of your mother to come here, my boy."

"I didn't ask mother," murmured the boy, slowly. Then he quickly raised his head. "But I'm sure," said he, "that mother would be glad to have me learn. Besides, though I'm not too little to study, I can't do much at home."

"I fear you are too young even to enter school; so I think you'd best go back to mother and wait just a little while longer," gently replied the schoolmaster to the disappointed lad.

"HERE ARE SOME BREAD AND ROLLS TO BE DELIVERED IMMEDIATELY"

So, in this year of 1777, the little son of the baker of Nancy was turned away from the French schoolhouse, because he was only a baby 3 years old!

Twelve years later a boy was leaning upon a shelf in a bakeshop in Nancy. Before him lay a well-thumbed volume from which he read with deep interest.

"Antoine, here are some bread and rolls which should be delivered immediately to our customers."

The lad started at the sound of his mother's voice. Then he promptly laid aside the book, raised with one hand the basket indicated and with the other gathered up several school books.

"I'll hurry, mother," said he, cheerfully; "and I'll surely have the work done by school time."

With lessons over and chores done the day, Antoine whiled away the ning hour of twilight with study, of any kind would have seemed ible with nine very noisy brothd sisters making commotion one, but Antoine appeared unof the disturbance.

young men assembled. But although Antoine flushed, he went forward steadily and took a seat.

Then it was that every one was astonished. As Laplace asked question after question, the boy replied correctly and with the utmost readiness. In vain Laplace tried to find something Antoine could not answer. At last the great man rushed forward and embraced the boy, crying:

"You are the first to be promoted, my lad!"

And those who had laughed but a few moments before, now crowded about the baker's son to express their admiration and to congratulate him.

Antoine, the baby who had knocked at the schoolhouse door; Antoine, the boy who had studied by the light of the moon when other light was denied him; Antoine, the simple-looking country lad, who was promoted with highest honors to the School of Artillery, had started upon his career.

And the baker's son, Antoine Drouot, became one of the greatest figures in the first empire of France.

The path to success is paved with good intentions that were carried out.

THE RULER OF TURKEY

FEW MEN ALIVE WHO HAVE BEEN SO MALIGNED.

Mistrust of Subjects — Some Peculiar Stories Concerning the Sultan.

There is probably few men alive to-day who have been more maligned than has Abdul Hamid, the Sultan of Turkey; yet, in spite of his unenviable reputation he has continued to sit on his perilous throne for over thirty years, says a writer in M.A.P. Abdul Hamid is one of the strangest mixtures of bravery and cowardice, cunning and simplicity that it is possible to imagine, and so much has been written and said about him that to obtain anything like an accurate idea of his real character is almost impossible. Like most autocratic Monarchs he goes about in hourly dread of assassination, and it is said that he spends as much as £180 a night to have his bedroom securely guarded.

The Sultan's mistrust of his subjects has sometimes led to curious results. A few years ago he was on his way to the mosque, when he suddenly noticed that some new telegraph wires had been stretched across the roadway. No one to this day knows what he thought would happen, but he gave orders for the royal procession to halt, and messengers were sent off post-haste to the telegraph company to fetch men to cut down the wires. After considerable delay this was actually done, and then the Sultan and his retinue proceeded on their way. Not content with merely having the wires destroyed. Abdul Hamid also commanded that they were on no account to be replaced.

"ONLY MY VOICE."

The Sultan's love of ruling was once exemplified in an extraordinary manner. He had purchased a parrot, of which he grew very fond, and he spent many hours in teaching it to speak. The bird was an apt pupil, and learned to imitate its august master's voice to perfection. One day the parrot was hanging in its cage in the Sultan's private apartment, when it suddenly called out the name of his Majesty's favorite attendant. The latter came at the summons, but Abdul Hamid flew into a towering passion. Tearing the unfortunate bird from its cage he killed it on the spot; then, turning to the frightened servant, he said: "Understand that in future only my voice shall command here!"

But Abdul Hamid has a softer and altogether nobler side to his character, and those who know him intimately have spoken eloquently of his kindness. His own dread of physical pain has made him thoughtful of the welfare of others, and he has had a hospital built which is kept up entirely at his own expense. This hospital is principally for the use of women and children, but anyone is eligible for admission, and every patient is treated entirely free of charge. Even foreigners and strangers are admitted, and the whole concern is run on the most- up-to-date lines.

DIPLOMACY.

The Sultan is a born diplomat, although occasionally his diplomacy is hardly comfortable with English ideas. The story is told of a certain Ambassador who while walking in the streets of Constantinople saw one of his Majesty's closed carriages, closely guarded from the prying eyes of the populace. The Ambassador was indiscreet enough to endeavor to peep into this vehicle, but he quickly repented of his folly when he received a stinging blow of the face from an attendant. Mad with rage, he demanded an audience of Abdul Hamid, which was granted. After listening quietly to the Ambassador's tale of woe the Sultan smiled and said:—"I have carefully considered your case, and see exactly how the matter stands. You are, of course, a gentleman, and you would never have committed such a breach of good manners as you allege took place; therefore, your Excellency, no attendant could possibly have struck you. The whole affair must be a product of your fancy. Let us then dismiss it." What the Ambassador thought has not been recorded.

FISHING ON HORSEBACK.

How Squid are Caught on the California Coast.

On the California coast they fish on horseback. After a big blow enormous numbers of squid are sometimes seen washing about among the pounding breakers.

When such news comes to the town every man or boy who can beg or borrow a horse goes galloping down to the beach armed with a six-foot bamboo, at the end of which is a strong steel hook.

They dash into the surf and driving the sharp steel into the squirming jelly-like creatures haul them ashore one by one and leave them lying high and dry upon the beach, pumping ink and water with their long, sucker-rimmed arms coiling about like snakes. Squid sell for a couple of shilling apiece.

Their flesh is good for bait; the pen, a long, opal tinted bone which extends from the tip of the tail to the neck, forms the cuttlefish bone of commerce, and the eyes, which when dried look like large dull pearls. find a ready sale among curio dealers.—Fry's Magazine.

COULD SAY THAT MUCH.

"How is my boy getting along in college?" asked old Mr. Richley. "I hope you find him quick."

"Oh—er—yes, Mr. Richley," replied the college professor. "He certainly is fast."

"Good morning, Mr. Highprice!" greeted the friend, entering Mr. Highprice's furniture store. "I saw your ad. in the newspaper saying that you would be pleased to have your friends call in on you before going elsewhere to buy, so I thought I'd call." "Very good!" returned the appreciative Mr. Highprice, rubbing his hands. "Now what can I sell you?" "Nothing. I told you I was going elsewhere!"

DUNDAS LIBERALS MEET.

Organizer Mowat Addresses a Mass Meeting at the Springs.

(From the Iroquois News.)

A mass meeting of the Liberals of Dundas county was held at Winchester Springs yesterday to elect officers for the ensuing year and nominate a candidate to carry the party standard at the forthcoming Dominion elections.

There was a large and enthusiastic attendance from all parts of the county, indeed it was said to be the largest turnout for many years.

W. L. Redmond, reeve of Iroquois, and president of the Reform Association, occupied the chair, and called the meeting to order at 1.15 p.m. In a rousing, impassioned speech he set forth the objects of the meeting. Mr. Redmond was suffering from a severe cold which made it difficult for him to be heard at the back of the hall.

Secretary Flynn read the minutes of the last annual meeting, which were adopted on motion of Messrs. Beckstead and Carter. The financial report was also read, which showed a balance on the right side of the ledger. An appeal for membership fees followed, when $60 was raised in a few minutes, adding 120 new members to the county organization

The chairman then called upon J. Macdonald Mowat, of Kingston, nephew of the late Sir Oliver Mowat, and organizer for Eastern Ontario. He gave them what he regarded as good family counsel, and advised deferring the nomination of the candidate until they could see the whites of the enemy's eyes, when the executive could call a meeting of delegates from the several municipalities and select their candidate. The majority of those present fell in with Mr. Mowat's view, although some were for leaving the selection to the popular vote of those present. Mr. Mowat also made it clear that the grab bag of the Government would no longer be held by the candidate who went into the contest with one eye on the grab-bag and the other on the goal. Unless the candidate went into the field to win, and was deemed by the Government of the winning sort, he needn't look for anything but cold feet. The patronage had been shamefully abused in Dundas county he was informed, which remark was greeted with applause It was not the number of votes the candidate polled in the riding, but his ability "to make good," to stretch his legs under the Government seat at Ottawa that counted. This last remark prompted a gentleman present to timidly remind Mr. Mowat that probably he didn't understand the conditions in Dundas county.

Brief addresses were delivered by Wm. Mullin, Geo. Smith, J. S. Carter, Geo. L. Brown, C E., W. G. Smyth, C. E. Cameron, Mr. Laflamme, Thos. McDonald, J. H. Meikle and many others present. Mr. McDonald stated that he was satisfied that fully 600 Liberals didn't poll their vote in the last election in which he ran. Longer time for organization was also urged by some speakers. Mr. Mowat said the organization work should be done by the executive and not left with the candidate. Mr. Smyth said the best results could be got by the candidate supervising the organization.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President—W. G Smyth, Iroquois.
Vice President—Geo. Smyth, Rowena.
2nd Vice—Frank Dwyer, Chesterville.
Sec'y.-Treas.—Arthur Flynn, Morrisburg.

Directors—Matilda, Robt. Thompson; Williamsburg, James Barry; Mountain, Ben Storey; Winchester village, W. J. Laflamme; Chesterville. W. R Fulton; Winchester township, David Melvin; Morrisburg, J. Smyth Carter; Iroquois, C. E. Cameron.

Associate Directors—J. H. Meikle, Morrisburg; Malcolm Beckstead, Williamsburg; Richard Gibbons, Matilda.

From a canvas of a number of the leading Liberals present, there seemed to be no doubt that C. E Cameron, of Iroquois, was the choice of the convention had the vote been put. The majority interviewed favored a young man with real ability and force of character and with no party sins to atone for.

Mr. Laflamme moved that no candidate be placed in the field, that Messrs. Broder. the likely Conservative candidate, and S. S. Reveler, Independent-Conservative, of Winchester, be left to fight it out themselves. The motion was received in silence, not one present suppporting it.

Somebody must have dropped a flea into Mr. Mowat's ear, judging by his attack on the reptile Tory press, with a covert reference to The News representative present. Private enquiry was also made by the chairman as to who was responsible for bringing Pelton to the meeting. It had a bewildering, disconcerting effect upon Uncle Reuben for a second or two, although satisfied that he could prove his innocence if given time. The fact of the writer be born in North Oxford, where Grits thick as shad flies, and where in thful days he listened to the of its representative, the d-daddy of Mr. Mowat, him that that riding ild brand of Tories rged with being; litical atmos survive type, rian

MASKED DESPERADOES ROB BANK.

Montreal, Aug. 20.—Five desperadoes broke into and robbed the Provincial Bank at St. Eustache about 2 o'clock on Saturday morning, getting clear away with twelve thousand dollars in bank bills. So far, no definite traces of the robbers has been discovered, although they have been traced as far as St. Rose, and it is thought that they were heading for Montreal, with the intention of getting across the boundry as soon as possible.

The men were apparently experts at the bank-cracking profession. They broke into the premises, which are in the largest building of the village, the post-office and other offices being in the same block, shortly before two o'clock. The noise they made awoke the postmaster and other citizens, but when they came near they found that three men, with a couple of revolvers apiece, were standing outside, while the other two were inside, blowing the safe open. The citizens did not care to get too close to the guns, and did not interfere with the operations of the quintette.

In a few minutes the men inside had drilled a hole in the door of the safe, poured in a charge of nitro-glycerine, ignited a fuse, and then came outside to await the explosion. So confident were the robbers that they did not take any precaution to muffle the sound, and when the charge exploded it not only wrecked the safe, but broke a number of windows in the building. The two then returned to the bank and broke open the drawers, the explosion having torn the safe door completely off. In the vault were $12,000 in bills and a large quantity of checks and other negotiable paper. The robbers did not touch this, but took all the bills, even leaving the silver money in the safe, as too heavy to be handled with comfort.

Having secured the money they started off in the direction of the C.P.R. tracks, apparently in the direction of Montreal. Some of the citizens tried to follow them, but they were warned by the robbers to keep back or they would shoot. The night was unusually dark, and all the robbers were masked, so that no description of them could be secured.

I was unable to eat but a few things and had a craving for acid. I gave up treating with the doctors because they did not help me and on the advice of a friend used Ferrzone. It not only cured me of Dyspepsia and Biliousness, but has built up my strength to what it was before I had the Grippe. I can recommend Ferrozone as an ideal restorative."

The Work of the Sisters of Charity of St. Paul.

The Sisters of this Order, who arrived from England last Fall, have at the request of the Archbishop of Westminister, and the Bishops of England, and with the approbation of His Grace the Archbishop of Ottawa, taken over the work of the Catholic Emigration, whose headquarters are at St. George's Home Hintonburg, Ontario. As many of our readers aware, the children are brought from the Old Country during the summer months of the year. The boys are placed to work on farms, and the girls to domestic service before a child is emigrated from England, great care is exercised in its selection, and only those of good physical and moral characteristics are accepted by the Association for emigration.

The children sent to Canada usually range in age from 11 to 18, but occasionally children of a younger age, who would be available for adoption are in special cases sent to Canada. They are placed out under conditions varying according to their age and capability and the amount of work required. They are possessed more or less of ordinary childish faults and failings. Impossibilities in the way of perfection must not be expected. The children are selected from Institutions in England where they have been under observation for some years, and in whom there is every confidence that they will do well. In fact it is made a reward and a favour to be brought out, and great care is taken not to send children in order to get rid of them Unstrained waifs and strays are not sent to Canada. The records show plainly that of the children placed during the past seven years, have turned out unsatisfactory. When a boy or girl shows a bad or depraved character, he or she is deported rather than be detained in the country, to be a menace to the good name which others are endeavoring to keep up.

This being so the Association is persistant in enforcing the fulfilment of the obligations assumed by the employer of one of its wards, and also requires that the child shall receive proper treatment. While the Association recognises that all the children are not equally satisfactory, they require an employer, who may have an unsatisfactory child in his care, to return such child to the Home, when they will replace same at their o expense, rather than subject treatment which might be into cruelty or harshness application containing ion for the guidance ing for children, application t

BROCKVILLE BIGAMIST DIES

John E. Anderson, School Inspector, and Local Preacher.

A despatch from Kingston says: Wednesday afternoon, John E. Anderson, the bigamous Brockville school inspector and local preacher sent to the penitentiary to serve a seven-year term, died in the hospital of the institution. In April last he married the daughter of a Renfrew clergyman, furnished a fine house in Brockville, where he was school inspector, through forged certificates, and in May his bigamous act was exposed through his real wife's family in Toronto. He was arrested at the Renfrew home of wife No. 2. After a week in jail he admitted his crime, and was sent to the penitentiary for seven years.

Since his incarceration he has been a sick man. The disgrace broke him down, and a malignant sore throat soon put him into the hospital, where he failed, till death released him on Wednesday. He was 52 years of age, though at the time of his second marriage he said he was but 39. After his sentence, Queen's University made enquiries, and learned that he claimed to be a graduate and specialist of the college. It was found that he had forged the necessary documents to make the showing.

MAIL BAGS RIFLED.

Evidence of an Extensive Robbery Near Montreal.

A despatch from Montreal says: What appears to have been an extensive robbery of mails in transit from this city came to light on Friday morning, as the result of the patrol of pickets of the federated trades, now on strike against the Canadian Pacific Railway. Two mail bags, ripped and cut across, were found by pickets lying on the ground near the C. P. R. tracks, a little west of Montreal west. With them were a number of opened letters, and torn papers, among which were found cheques to the value of close upon $7,000. The strikers immediately reported their find to headquarters, where it was decided to consult Mr. L. J. Gaboury, assistant postmaster, and the cheques, torn bags and fragments of letters were taken to the post-office. The search for the money appears to have been done on the spot where the bags were found, and at night, as wreckage was left littered around in a way that would have been very liable to attract attention in daylight before the thieves got very far off. It is at present impossible to tell whether the robbers got away with any large sum in cash or negotiable securities. The bags were not registered.

A despatch from Guelph says: The Scottish agriculturists who are now touring Canada arrived in Guelph on Wednesday morning and spent the day at the O. A. C., inspecting the province's agricultural institution and being shown around by President Creelman and his staff. They had lunch at the college, and expressed themselves much impressed with what was being done. One of them stated that Canada was ahead of Britain in the matter of agricultural education, and expressed the hope that the Imperial Government would awake to the importance of the great benefits of such institutions as Canada could boast of.

The frost of the 20th does not appear to have injured the wheat much. Barley is cut and a large acreage of oats is also cut. The grain crops on the experimental farms are very heavy. The winter wheat and early varieties of spring wheat are cut."

A despatch from Ottawa says: The Canadian Government cruiser, Arctic, which sailed from Quebec last month, is under instructions to push its way through Lancaster Sound and Melville Sound, if the ice permits, to Bank's Land, and to take possession of that territory and other islands in the vicinity. If the ice blocks the passage westward, the vessel is to visit the Gulf of Boothia, and may either return in the fall of 1909 or stay over until 1910. Captain Bernier is under strict injunctions to take no course which might result in international complications.

SHOT BY MASKED ROBBERS

Midway, British Columbia, Hotel-Keeper Murdered in His Hotel.

A despatch from Phoenix, B. C., says The town of Midway, 12 miles from here, was the scene of a sensational hold-up on Wednesday night, when Charles Thomet of the Midway Hotel was shot and instantly killed by highwaymen. Two masked men entered the hotel at 9 o'clock, and at the point of a gun four men, including Thomet, were told to throw up their hands. Thomet, being behind the bar, put his hand on a revolver and opened fire on the intruders, wounding one. The strangers retaliated, Thomet receiving a bullet in the shoulder and abdomen, after which he staggered through a side door into a room. The desperadoes got into the room through another entrance and shot three more bullets into the body of the dying man. They then made their escape. Bloodhounds are being brought from Spokane to put on the trail of the criminals. One of the desperadoes is thought to be seriously wounded.

ATTEMPT TO WRECK TRAIN

The C. P. R. Switch at Junction Tampered With.

A despatch from Montreal says: What is thought to have been an attempt to wreck a C. P. R. freight train was discovered on Sunday morning at Jacques Cartier Junction, where the lock of a switch had been broken off and the switch thrown so as to side-track approaching trains. A freight came in at a good rate of speed with signals for a clear line, and it was suddenly turned into the siding. Fortunately no cars were in the way at the time, or serious damage would have resulted. The switch was then examined and found to have been tampered with, which it is said has happened for the third time.

There was $10,000 in the bank at the time, but half the amount was buried under debris caused by the explosion. The bank carries an insurance in an English company, who will make good the loss. Ten Thousand Dollar Prize for a Montreal Man.

A despatch from Montreal says: Some time ago $10,000 worth of rings and diamonds were found in the C. P. R. station by a man named Augustus Cooper. He was arrested on a charge of stealing them, but now they will become his property. This is the effect of a communication received from Mr. Ulric Lafontaine, Clerk of the Crown, who is returning from England, where he was sent as special commissioner to inquire into the case. Mr. Lafontaine in his letter states that Mr. and Mrs. Burrows of London, the supposed owners of the diamonds, refuse to give evidence, and waive all claim to the jewels. The diamonds are at present in the possession of the police, but will be turned over to Mr. Cooper.

Harry Cline, of Ingersoll, is a Little Hero.

A despatch from Ingersoll says: Harry Cline, the little thirteen-year-old son of Mr. W. A. Cline of this town, is being looked upon as a young hero. While swimming across the Thames River, east of here, on Wednesday, with his eight-year-old son, Melvin, on his back, Harry's father was seized with a cramp. He became unconscious and sank with the youngster. Harry, who was on the bank, stripped off his clothing, and, diving, rescued both father and brother from the fifteen feet of water that is found at that spot. Mr. Cline and his three boys were out fishing, and were attempting to cross the river in order to make a short cut to town when the accident happened. The younger lad could not swim.

THIRTY MINERS SUFFOCAETD

They Were Entombed by Fire in a Oklahoma Coal Mine.

A despatch from McAlester, Okla., says: More than thirty miners were suffocated on Wednesday morning in Hailey, Okla., coal mine No. 1, near Haileyville, fourteen miles east of McAlester, when fire destroyed the hoisting shaft and air shaft and cut off air from the men below. Twenty-five mules were suffocated and some of their bodies were burned.

Explorations in the channels on Wednesday afternoon revealed that none of the men met death by burning, but that all were suffocated.

After the miners had gone down in the cage a fire broke out, occasioned by the ignition of a barrel [illegible]il which a miner was trying to [illegible] The flames spread at once to the moisting shaft and the air shaft, and all communication with the top was cut off. The first indication the people at the surface had of the trouble was the flames and smoke coming out of the top of the shaft.

Hundreds of miners rushed to the scene and tried to get into the air shaft, but this was impossible as flames and smoke were coming up that way with such force as to drive them back. Then an effort was made to operate the cages running up and down the hoisting shaft, but it was found that the cages, the cables and the guides had been burned. There was absolutely no help for the imprisoned miners. The property loss may reach $50,000.

LONDON LANDMARK GOING.

200-Year-Old Scottish Church in Covent Garden Coming Down.

The most famous London building in the hands of the housebreakers at the present moment is undoubtedly the old National Scottish Church in Crown Court, Covent Garden, a little alleyway which runs north out of Russel street, opposite the stage entrance to Drury Lane Theatre. It is—or was—a veritable London landmark. It has, however, for long been too big for the calls upon it, and has been paying under stress a very large ground rent to the Duke of Bedford. It will be rebuilt upon the same spot, but on a much smaller plot of land. Meanwhile the services of the church will be conducted in the Newton Hall, Fetter lane.

The old church in Crown Court was originally built about one hundred and ninety years ago. It realized the designs of its founders in a normal fashion for a long while. Then suddenly came a time when it was famous. John Cumming, who had been licensed to preach in May, 1832, by the Aberdeen Presbytery, was acting as tutor in Kensington, when he was invited to preach in the old church in Crown Court.

In August of the same year he received a "call" from the church. It was then small and inconvenient, and the minister's income was not over £200. But his preaching soon attracted a huge congregation, and the church was rebuilt in 1847 at a cost of $5,000. It was opened in 1848 with sittings for a thousand persons. The income from pew rents reached £1,500 per annum, but Cumming refused to accept more than £900, the remainder paying off the debt incurred for rebuilding. The church has remained, strangely picturesque and grimy, until to-day.

Now the fashionable congregation has drifted westward to the new church in Pont street, Chelsea, and the old Manse, or dwelling as they call it, built for Cumming, is being pulled down with the rest of the building. The big organ is to be sold and Lady Frances Balfour, one of the last patronesses, has, it is understood, secured the possession of some of the woodwork, which is beautiful and valuable, in the Manse.

Sure Regulators.—Mandrake and Dandelion are known to exert a powerful influence on the liver and kidneys, restoring them to healthful action, inducing a regular flow of the secretions and imparting to the organs complete power to perform, their functions. These valuable ingredients enter into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, and serve to render them the agreeable and salutary medicine they are. There are few pills so effective as they in their action.

Costing about as much as a good horse, the camel's speed is equally great, and his life much longer. He is, moreover, able to carry three times as much as one horse.

It will be noticed in the Singer Sewing Machine Company's advertisement that there are three addresses at the bottom of the announcement. Any one writing will please address them at the nearest one of the three places to his post office.

If our neighbors would only praise our virtues once in a while we might be willing to overlook their faults.

They Wake the Torpid Energies.—Machinery not properly supervised and left to run itself, very soon shows fault in its working. It is the same with the digestive organs. Unregulated from time to time they are likely to become torpid and throw the whole system out of gear. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills were made to meet such cases. They restore to the full the flagging faculties, and bring into order all parts of the mechanism.

BLESS HIS HEART!

My neighbor's child just will 'estroy;
He takes delight in breaking;
Plain mischief is his greatest joy,
He ought to have a shaking.
My little man pulls things apart
To see what's in them, bless his heart;
Much fault with him one cannot find,
It's just his bright, inquiring mind.

HOT WEATHER AILMENTS

A medicine that will keep children well is a great boon to every mother. This is just what Baby's Own Tablets do. An occasional dose keeps the little stomach and bowels right, and prevents sickness. During the hot weather months stomach troubles speedily turn to fatal diarrhoea or cholera infantum and if a medicine like Baby's Own Tablets is not at hand the child may die in a few hours. The wise mother will always keep a box of Tablets in the house and give them to her children occasionally to clear out the stomach and bowels and keep them well. Don't wait until the child is sick—the delay may cost a precious little life. Get the Tablets now and you may feel reasonably safe. Every mother who uses these Tablets praises them and that is the best evidence that there is no other medicine for children so good. And the mother has the guarantee of a government analyst that the Tablets contain no opiate or harmful drug. Dealers sell the Tablets at 25 cents a box or you can get them by mail from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHAT GEORGE MEANT.

MOTHERS!

Give the Children a Chance

Spanking does not cure children of bed-wetting. There is a constitutional cause for this trouble, Mrs. M. Summers, Box 100, Windsor, Ont., will send free to any mother her successful home treatment, with full instructions. Send no money, but write her to-day if your children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child, the chances are it can't help it. This treatment also cures adults and aged people troubled with urine difficulties by day or night.

An African woman, to be considered beautiful, must have small eyes, thick lips, a large flat nose, and an intensely black skin.

In the treatment of summer complaints, the most effective remedy that can be used is Dr. J. D. Kellog's Dysentery Cordial. It is a standard preparation, and many people employ it is preference to other preparations. It is a highly concentrated medicine and its sedative and curative qualities are beyond question. It has been a popular medicine for many years and thousands can attest its superior qualities in overcoming dysentery and kindred complaints.

In 1840, ninety-six million eggs were imported into Great Britain, while in 1906 the number had grown to nearly 2,265 millions.

LOVE'S AWAKENING.

He criticised her puddings, and he didn't like her cake; he wished she'd make the buscuit that his mother used to make; she didn't wash the dishes, and she didn't make a stew, and she didn't mend his stockings—as his mother used to do. Ah, well, she wasn't perfect, though she tried to do her best, until at length she thought her time had come to have a rest. So when one day he went the same old rigmarole all through, she turned and boxed his ears, just as his mother used to do.

Though something about her struck him when first her form he scanned, that something, you may rest assurred, was not her darling hand. Alas! that rough awakening from love's delicious dream; it soured the milk of mutual love to anger-cotted cream. So o'er the tiff they parted—a thing that oft occurs. He went home to his mamma, and she went home to hers.

WEEKLY LETTER.

A. J. Pattison & Co., Toronto, state that the recent failure of A. C. Brown & Co., of New York will not affect Canadian investors, as their business was carried on in Canada through Canadian brokers, and if the firm do not pay in full the brokers will be the losers. The New York market has been active and prices advanced beyond any immediate warrant—with recent recessions. However, every one knows that Wall Street anticipates events, and there is certainly marked improvement in trade conditions, which promises to not only increase, but to be permanent. The well-established dividend paying stocks are undoubtedly a safe investment and at present prices will pay a good rate of interest. They will sell higher after the Presidential election—if not before. In the Toronto market the advance in Mexican Power which we recommended to our clients at 50 to 75 and San Paulo to 150 are the features. The buying at these prices is probably foreign. The English and French investor are more favorable to South and Central American investments than the Canadian. The settlement of Dominion Coal-Steel differences will not now be long postponed, and we look for a substantial advance in the price of this stock.

The mining market has been exceedingly active, large numbers of shares changing hands. Prices have advanced slightly, but dividend payers are still selling under their market value from the standard of earning.

The American investors are purchasing heavily. Our reports from the Larder Lake Gold fields are highly encouraging the permanence of the Camp is stated to be assured and the extent of the gold-bearing belt if confirmed will make this camp the greatest gold field in the world. Why not. Cobalt is now in its partially developed state, the greatest Silver Camp—and they are only a short distance apart.

According to Lord Avebury, the most important things in the world are good air, good water, good food, good health, and a good conscience; and they are not costly.

Holloway's Corn Cure destroys all kinds of corns and warts, root and branch. Who, then would endure them with such a cheap and effectual remedy within reach?

Gentleman (indignantly) — "You praised your kitchen coal up to the skies, and said it was most economical. Why, it won't burn at all!" Coal-Dealer (coolly)—"Well, what could you have more economical than that?"

1. The Difference in Sewing Machines

¶ It is a mistaken idea that sewing machines are pretty much alike, when as a matter of fact there is a vast difference.

¶ There is but one machine that sews better than any other—and that one is the Singer.

¶ This is because the Singer idea is distinctive—every year shows improvement in that idea.

¶ This is because the Singer factories are not only equipped with tools and machinery better calculated to make good sewing machines than any other, but this equipment is unique and not to be found elsewhere.

¶ This is because a half century has been devoted to training and specializing men, each to do one thing best in sewing machine construction. The Singer's superiority—its lifetime-lasting value—does not appear on the surface.

¶ One machine does sew better than any other—and that one is the Singer.

Harvest Home Concert.

The concert given in Foster's Hall last Thursday evening under the auspices of the Ladies Aid and Epworth League of the Methodist church here was a decided success artistically and financially.

The program was one of exceptional merit and every number was well received by the large and appreciative audience, which enthusiastically encored nearly every number and were rewarded in most instances with a response on the part of the performers

Miss Hazel Saucier opened the concert with a brilliant piano solo. This young lady certainly has a musical career before her as she shows decided improvement on each occasion that she appears before the public.

Miss Margaret Cross of Vankleek Hill, a young girl of fifteen summers, astonished and delighted her hearers by her violin playing. Her selections were good and still simple enough to be understood by the audience. Miss Cross, with a few years of study, will certainly develop into one of the finest players on this musical instrument. Should there be concerts held here in the future and Miss Cross be on the program the success of the entertainment is sure.

Mrs. R. H. Knox, so well and favorably known in this section, captivated her audience with her first number. One so well known as Mrs. Knox scarcely needs to be reported, but we must say that the years seem to deal very kindly with her and her voice, if anything, is better than on her last appearance in Chesterville some years ago.

Mrs. Ernest Thomas of Merrickville, was heard in recitation and pleased her audience by her splendid elocution. Her numbers were well selected and faultlessly rendered.

Mrs. Watson Munro and daughter Bernice, accompanied by Miss Saucier, appeared in vocal duett and gained fresh laurels by their excellent rendering of a rather difficult selection

Rev'd W. F. Crawford, Rev'd A. E. Runnells and Mrs. W. G. Bolster gave a vocal trio in a satisfactory manner and responded to an insistent demand for more.

Miss Della Earl of Winchester, a pianist of excellent repute, accompanied Mrs. Knox in her selections in a most artistic and sympathetic manner.

Rev'd Mr. Runnells in a few well chosen remarks thanked everybody implicated and the evening's entertainment was brought to a close with the National anthem.

Suit Against Thaw.

Poughkeepsie, N.Y., Aug. 29 —John C. Gleason, the New York lawyer has sued Harry K. Thaw for $60,000 counsel fees. Papers in the action were served on Thaw by United States Deputy Marshal Gebhard of New York, the suit having been brought in the United States Circuit Court for the southern district of New York.

Gleason in the papers accuses Thaw of fraud and misrepresentation, alleging that the defendant made statements to him, which were untrue, to the effect that he owned interests in his father's estate or derived therefrom and other property interests more than enough to pay all expenses of the trial, and in any event he would be able to arrange with his mother to have her pay the bulk of the expenses as a gift to him and chargeable only against his share on her estate.

In the Dutchess county jail to-night Thaw denied that he made any misrepresentations to Gleason or agreed to pay him the amount claimed.

COWS MUST PAY.

Poor Producer Should Be Eliminated

It simmers down to this; If we milk a cow at all, says the Farmer's Advocate, she must, to be profitable, yield liberally. Whether dairy bred, scrub or what dual-purpese, the three and four thousand pound milch cow is a poor money-maker and he who milks such a one must be content to work for small wages. When we advocate dual-purpose cows, we should always be understood as meaning cows that are capable of yielding six to twelve thousand pounds of milk a year—cows like the first-prize Dairy Shorthorn at the Royal, illustrated in our July 30th issue; cows of the class represented by the exceptional eleven year-old Shorthorn, Darlington Cransford 5th, that out classed all competing breeds at the Royal snow, at Newcastle, a few weeks ago with a milk yield, made 83 days after calving, of 78.12 pounds in 24 hours, testing 4 per cent. butterfat, and a butter yield of 3 pounds 1 ounce; cows such as the splendid type of Shorthorn grades that used to be the pride of our stables and pastures. Cows of this kind are very scarce now, thanks to the folly of the Shorthorn breeders, who neglected milking quality in a concentrated ambition for perfection of beef type.

In the absence, or rather in view of the extreme scarcity, of such cows at present in Canada, and the still greater rarity of Shorthorn bulls calculated to perpetuate in their heifer get what insufficient milking quality the dams possess shrewd farmers have forsaken the old breed of their choice, and wisely gone in for the special-purpose dairy breeds. Of course, there may be a limited number so situated that they can afford to cut the milking out entirely, and allow the calves to suck the cows. Such a system, however, yields a meager return per acre of land. Those who follow it must be in a region of very cheap land rents, or at least contiguous to large areas of cheap pasture. The worst of it is that the system tends to cheapen, rather than to enhance, the value of land, and to depopulate, rather than settle, the district in which it is generally pursued. It would be a setback for Canadian agriculture, and a hardship to consumers of beef, were such a system ever to become extensively adopted. The rank and file of farmers will be wise to insist on keeping cows that milk abundantly. If one or the other had to be given up entirely, we could far better dispense with the beef than the dairy breeds. In fact, we have not much need in Eastern Canada for a special-purposedairy breeds, and a dual-purpose breed—a real dual purpose breed—not a beef breed called dual purpose by courtesy.

Four Miles in the Air.

London, Aug. 30,—Miss Viola Spencer the famous parachutist, has had a thrilling adventure and a most remarkable escape from death.

On Thursday Miss Spencer was engaged to make a parachute descent a sports meeting near Nottingham, but when the baloon rose to a height of about 2,000 feet she found herself unable to liberate the parachute. The result was that she was carried helplessly by the baloon for a distance of thirty miles. She managed to keep her frail seat until the baloon descended by which time she was almost perishing from the cold. At one time the baloon rose to a height of about 20,000 feet, or about four miles.

"I had a horrible feeling," said Miss Spencer yesterday, "that I should be frozen. How I wished I had brought my wrap or coat, I had only a muslin blouse and a blue serge coat. I felt the cold keenly when I was up in the air a height of 10,000 feet, but at 20,000 it was unbearable. My hands were quite numbed, and and I had to knock them against the wooden ring of the parachute to restore the circulation.

"And next," Miss Spencer continued, "I had an awful fear that the baloon would be blown out to sea; but happily I escaped that fate, but, where of all places in the world, do you think we did come down?" she asked. "Actually in a clover field! Could it have been better? Talk about landing in clover!" and the fair parachutist laughed merrily.

"But I felt confident after a time,"

Miss Spencer declared "that if I could only manage to keep my seat in the parachute the baloon would come down alright. What alarmed me most was the possibility that I should faint from cold and fall off. At one time before I had gone up very far, I tried to console myself by humming snatches of a comic song, and a queer idea struck me to sing Up in a Balloon, Boys but I stopped short, because in view of my dangerous position I thought it was improper and imprudent. Unfortunately, I could not recall any hymns" she added.

Miss Spencer then described the scene as it appeared to her in the clouds.

"I remember being impressed with a sense of awful stillness around," she remarked. "It was terrifying. But I got accustomed to it. The moon was shining clearly, and all around was bathed in its pale light. It was impossible to ...e trees, but one of the most beauti... I saw was the reflection of the ...ver as we passed over it. showed me that the baloon was coming down was great.

"I dropped near a little village called Thrussington, near Rearsby, in in Leicester. I immediately jumped off, and scarcely had I done so before the baloon started off again, and I chased it across two fields. Seeing a house; I gave up the hunt, and I stayed at an adjacent house for the night. At 5 o'clock next. morning I discovered the baloon half a mile away. It had dropped in somebody's back garden, and not only scared but half stifled the people in the cottage with its escaping gas."

In the ordinary way Miss Spencer said she would have descended with her parachute in ten minutes. The crowd at Heanor, near Nottingham, where the sports and gala were held, anxiously waited to see her come down. When she failed to do so there was a search for her all night long, in which several motor cars were engaged.

Although Miss Spencer has made 300 parachute descents, this is the first time such an accident has happened to her.

A Chat with the Girls.

I heard somebody, perhaps it was a prude, say the other day that fashionably accomplished young ladies consider it a disgrace to enter a kitchen or know how to make a loaf of bread. Now we know some sensible girls who do not consider themselves disgraced if they are found helping their mothers, and moreover we know that what the above mentioned prude said is true in many instances.

Society at the present day demands that girls shall be what they call accomplished; and to fulfil this demand the mothers of Christendom teach their daughters that a knowledge of all that belongs to life's duties at home is not one of the requirements, that manual labor must be consonant with drawing room cultivation. And so their lily hands slip idly over the piano keys; they waltz in the most approved style; simper a little French or German, quote poetry—and society says they are accomplished. Doubtless they are, and by and by, as all modern fashionables do, they win a husband.

Now is there one of their boasted accomplishments that will help to make another home? We know that music is pleasant. and home is not home where there are no songs or sweet harmonies but a knowledge of the piano will not help a woman discharge her wifely duties, and a smattering of French or an ability to waltz gracefully, will do but little towards preparing a palpatable dinner for a husband when he comes home hungry.

Modern girls have not less ability than our grandmothers had; the evil all lies in the principle imbibed in early years. If mothers will teach, by word and deed, that idleness is an accomplishment, then what we may expect? Where shall we look for the true women, the blessed homes in the years to come? They who would fill life's station nobly and well, cannot learn to much. If she fails in her home she will fail in all; for there rests the basis of her ultimate success.
