HON. GEORGE H. CHALLIES LAYS CORNERSTONE OF NEW PROVINCIAL BUILDING AT KEMPTVILLE, ONTARIO

Officiating at ceremonies and laying the cornerstone of the new provincial government local administrative offices building in Kemptville on Wednesday, was Hon. Geo. H. Challies, Chairman of the Ontario St. Lawrence Development Commission, formerly First Vice-Chairman of Ontario Hydro, and a member of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, for Grenville - Dundas 1929-1955. Following is the text of Mr. Challies' address on that occasion:

"I am deeply appreciative of the honour of being invited to lay the corner-stone for this practical and beautiful building. Having been proud and happy to serve my fellow citizens of Grenville Dundas for more than twenty five years, it is very gratifying to know that my name will remain, for many years to come, associated with a building devoted to improved public service for the citizens of Eastern Ontario. The choice of Kemptville as the location for local administrative offices for various Ontario Government departments indicates the importance quite properly attached to your town's key geographical situation in Eastern Ontario and your many and varied attractions and facilities. Those who share my own enthusiasm for local history will also see something appropriate in choosing the birthplace of G. Howard Ferguson as the site for an office of the Ontario Government. I feel that too few of our fellow citizens of Ontario are aware that each of the two counties which I represented in the Ontario Legislature from 1929 to 1955, provided an outstanding Premier of our Province: James Pliny Whitney, born in Williamsburg Township in Dundas County in 1843, and Premier of Ontario from 1905 to 1914; and George Howard Ferguson, born in Kemptville in Grenville County in 1870, and Premier of Ontario from 1922 to 1930. Through these two eminent political leaders and many other public spirited citizens, Dundas and Grenville have made valuable contributions to political life in Ontario.

The erection of this building provides additional tangible evidence of the great faith that the Government of Ontario has in the present and future importance of Eastern Ontario. Organizations, both urban and rural, and individual citizens will appreciate the greater convenience of obtaining assistance and information from representatives of Government departments readily available for person to person discussion and communication.

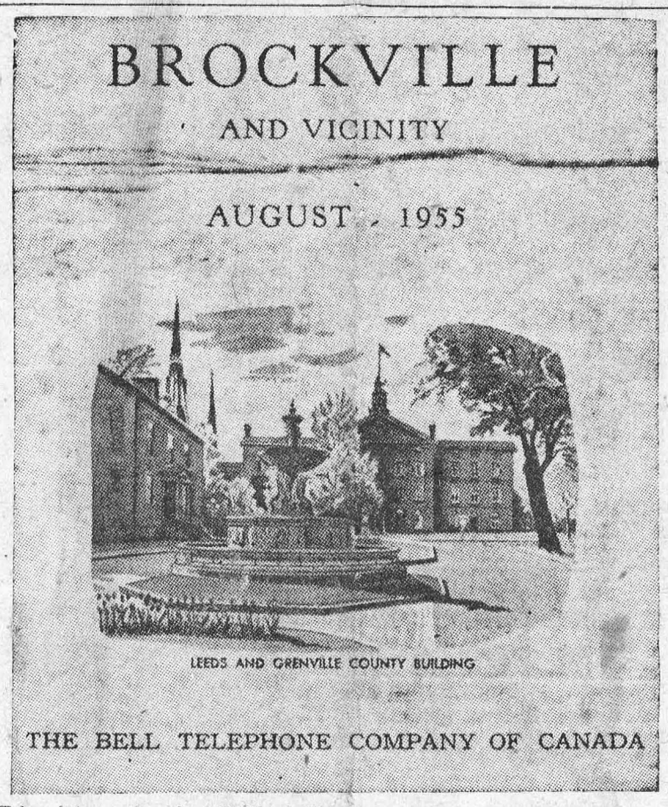
The Department of Lands and Forests, responsible for the administration of such valuable enterprises as your ever-expanding G. Howard Ferguson Forestation Project, will establish here the headquarters of its District Forester and there will be representatives of its divisions of Reforestation and Fish and Wild Life. Similarly the Provincial Attorney General, and the Departments of Agriculture, Public Welfare and Public Works will be represented, as will other Government Departments, should the need for such representation become apparent.

In conjunction with the buildings and facilities of the Kemptville Agricultural School this new building will form a centre of public service in Eastern Ontario toward which municipalities, organizations, and individual citilens will turn often for information, advice and assistance.

A similar demonstration of the Provincial Government's confidence in Eastern Ontario, and its determination to increase the availability of valuable Government services may be seen in the recent establishment of new offices for the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission in the heart of the Power Valley at Morrisburg. These offices provide on-the-spot facilities to assist the municipalities and individuals in resolving the varied problems that are bound to arise in connection with the rehabilitation of the Valley.

An important phase of the responsibilities placed on the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission, relates to the establishment of parks and recreational facilities along the shore line of the new lake that will result from the power development. These Parks must be a credit to the Province. They must be planned with an eye to the greatly increased population and the enlarged volume of tourist rtavel which are bound to follow from the development of the St. Lawrence. The parks must not only provide healthful, enjoyable recreation facilities for the residents of Eastern Ontario. They must also prove attractive to our neighbours in other parts of Canada and in the United States. Scenic highways, planned and controlled cottage communities, historic sites prominently marked and beautified, museums, and memorial centers to perpetuate the honour we pay to our pioneer ancestors — these features will all contribute to make the Canadian shore of the International Section of the St. Lawrence a beautiful and prosperous environment for the people of Eastern Ontario.

This pleasant town of Kemptville, situated within easy driving distance of the St. Lawrence Valley, vitally interested in the anticipated industrialized industrialization of the Valley, vitally interested in the anticipated industrialization of the Valley, and keenly aware of the value of an expanding tourist trade, has much to gain from the activities of the Ontario-St.-Lawrence Development Commission. The other Provincial Government services that will be made available to the urban and rural residents of Eastern Ontario through this building we officially dedicate today will also prove of great benefit, directly and indirectly, to Kemptville, and its citizens.



This picture showing Fulford Fountain with the Leeds and Grenville County Court House in the background appears on the new Bell Telephone directory for this area, replacing the familiar figure of the "Spirit of Communication" used on previous directories. The new directroy was mailed to customers this week.

BROCKVILLE SCENE IS A FEATURE OF THE NEW TELEPHONE DIRECTORY

A picture showing Fulford Fountain, with Leeds and Grenville County Court House in the background, replaces the well-known figure of the "Spirit of Communication" on the front cover of the- new Bell Telephone directory, which was mailed this week to telephone users in Morrisburg. The building, which is the centre of justice for the two counties is a familiar landmark to five generations of residents in this area.

J. W. K. Blair, Bell manager for Morrisburg, said his company felt that the use of this scene on the cover would appeal to residents of the area by giving the directory a definite regional flavor. This is the fourth Bell Directory in Canada to use such a scene of localized interest on the cover. Earlier this year, the Barrie, Kingston and Montreal directories came out with regional illustrations and it is planned to extend this practice to more directories in the future.

Except for 1940, when the Bell crest was used to commemorate the Company's 60th anniversary, the "Spirit of Communication" has appeared continuously on the cover of the telephone directory since 1938.

"As well as the change on the cover", Mr. Blair said, "there are about 2,210 new and changed listings in the alphabetical section."

Because of all these changes, the manager urged customers to throw away the old book once they get the new one, to avoid calling "wrong numbers".

Mr. Blair also suggested checking the Blue Book of Telephone Numbers against the new telephone book and making the necessary changes in this personal directory.

"The Blue Book is helpful too in placing long distanc calls", he said. "By listing out of town numbers, and giving the operator the number when placing a call, the telephone user can reduce by as much as half the time required to make the connection".

The number of copies distributed initially in Brockville, Morrisburg, Prescott, Winchester and surrounding territory is 13,575, compared to 12,785 last year.

MORRISBURG'S NEWEST INDUSTRY COMMENCED OPERATIONS THIS WEEK

Morrisburg's newest industry, the Kingston-Dunbrik Company began operations this week in their new plant on Allison Avenue. The new factory is housed in a building 45' x 62', of concrete block construction, faced with their own product, Roman (long) bricks, in sandstone color.

Their products are standard 8" concrete bricks and Roman bricks in various colours.

The new factory employs six workers now and this number will be doubled by the end of the year. Only a few thousand brick a day are being manufactured at present, but by the end of next week, when the factory is in full production, the output will be at least 15,000 daily. The original Kingston-Dunbrik Plant was established at Kingston, Ontario two years ago, and turns out 18,000 daily. Their products find a ready market in the territory from Trenton on the west, to Cornwall on the east, and north to Ottawa. This territory is protected by the Dunne Mfg. Co., of Holland, Mich., which will not instal similar machines in this area.

The company has three trucks in constant operation delivering their products, one of which can carry all the brick required for a complete house.

In the manufacturing process, which was demonstrated to The Leader Thursday by Fred Hill, vice-president of Kingston-Dunbrik and supervisor of the local plant, and Thomas G. Jones, Morrisburg, manager, sand and cement are dumped in measured quantities into a hopper at the base of the machine. These ingredients are then carried by an elevator to the mixer at the top of the machine, where, after a period of dry mixing, water and coloring materials are added. The prepared mix is then delivered by a chute to the brick forming part of the machine, where the bricks are formed on interchangeable pallets of the desired size, which are attached to an endless belt device, which in turn delivers the finished bricks to the operator. These are then placed on mobile racks in a steam "curing room", and are later removed to the outside air to finish curing.

Jogging Around

By the Editor

From an ex-official of a "sunbathing association" comes a suggestion for world peace, which, if it has nothing else to recommend it, is at least novel. Everyone in the world, he says, should embrace nudism. "After all", he says, "it is very hard to distinguish the enemy, when he cannot be indentified by his uniform".

Constant listeners to the popular CBC feature "Neighbourly News" on Sunday mornings, will be interested to learn that the broadcast on this Sunday (August 14th) will originate at the usual time in Iroquois. It will be preceded at 9.45 by a special "Salute to Iroquois" broadcast. Don Fairbairn will be the M.C. at both programs, which will include interviews with prominent Iroquois personalities and Reid Forsee will see that the programs are produced without a hitch. Both programs will emanate from the Iroquois Town Hall, and the public is invited to attend.

ANNE HIRST
Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hirst: Last fall, when my sweetheart was ordered overseas, he wanted to get married. We bought the wedding rings (which I paid for) and made arrangements with our priest. Then he called me up and said to forget it; he couldn't get enough time off!

"Two weeks ago he wrote me he wants to break our engagement. I told his family, who couldn't believe it. Because my parents had been helping so wonderfully with our plans, I can't bear to tell them this. I asked him if there was another girl and he replied No — but what could I do if there were?

"So it sounds like there is somebody else. . . . I simply cannot let him go, Anne Hirst, I love him too much. I haven't looked at another man since we got engaged. I'd do anything to get him back, but if I admit we are through, everybody will make fun of me! Yet should I give him up? And how can I tell my parents?

UNSIGNED"

HE GAVE YOU UP

I'm afraid you will have to face the bitter truth: It is not a question of giving the young man up; he has broken the engagement, and you can do nothing but accept it. Tell your parents and your priest immediately. They will be shocked, but at him, not you. They will help you through.

If you admit to your friends that you have been jilted, they will pity you. Why not simply say you have changed your mind and would rather not talk about it? I think your family will approve this.

Whether or not another girl is involved, there is no getting the lad back. He has made his decision, and no one with any self-respect would try to change it. Call on your self-respect now. Hold your head high. Look up boys you used to know and date them; whether the idea appeals or not, that will help you more than you believe today.

I am sorry. I realize how you must reorganize your dreams of the future, and the adjustment will be hard. But your attitude will prove what you are — a girl of character who shows the rest of the world how a lady behaves under stress.

"DOES HE LOVE ME-"

"Dear Anne Hirst: My trouble is that I don't know whether the boy I care for loves me or not. I am 18 and he is 22, and I want to marry him — but he has not asked me. One night he said he was the 'nearest to marriage' he'd ever been, but I've heard other boys say things like that.

"He only sees me once a week; his father died a year ago and he has a mother and sister to look after. He is bashful, but he's the settled type, too. If he is too shy to ask me, how can I let him know I love him? (I'm not the sort to ask a boy to marry me.) I know this letter isn't good enough to be printed, but do let me hear something soon.

GERRY"

You cannot know whether the boy loves you unless he says so. He may care, but with his responsibilities he cannot think of marrying, I expect, for quite a while, so he hesitates to commit himself. The surest way to embarrass him would be to imply that you love him. No matter how shy a young man is, he wants to take the initiative and he would resent such a declaration; it would put him on the spot, and that, of course, you would shrink from doing.

Time is your best ally. Try to be patient. Whether the idea appeals or not, I urge you not to forsake your other friends but accept their dates frequently. It will keep you better balanced emotionally and make you a more interesting companion to this lad as well.

When you feel your heart is breaking, keep it to yourself. Go through the motions of living, and before long they will have some meaning again. A letter to Anne Hirst can bring you comfort and courage. Write her at Box 1, 123 Eighteenth St., New Toronto, Ont.

UNAVAILABLE

Seeking to steer clear of the Soviet orbit, Eliezer Kaplan, the finance minister of the very young state of Israel, journeyed to America recently to float a five - hundred - million - dollar bond issue.

The directors of a conservative Wall Street banking house listened courteously to his story, and then the chairman asked him, "Would it be possible, Mr. Kaplan, to let us see Israel's last three annual balance sheets?"

Kaplan answered, "The last two, Mr. Chairman, I can produce without difficulty. The one before that, I am afraid disappeared when the Temple was destroyed in 586 B.C.!"

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM
by Gwendoline D Clarke

WRITTEN FROM East Anglia .

Well, I had to read through a carbon copy of last week's column to find out where I had been and where I said I was going next. So now we proceed to Bath. This was for the purpose of visiting my cousin—81—who lives in a private home for the aged, and also my aunt-in-law, 84, who lives in a big house by herself. I passed the famous Roman Baths but did not have time to visit them.

My trip to Bath was by motor-coach from Swanage—by way of Bournemouth, Christchurch, New Forest, Warminster, Salisbury, Bradford-on-Avon and smaller places. As we came through New Forest there were dozens of Forest ponies roaming the road. The coach-driver had to weave his way in and out among them as some of them would not budge an inch. One little foal was lying stretched out in the grass alongside the road. A fellow-passenger told me these ponies are often quite a nuisance to farmers in the district. They invade fields, barnyards and gardens. If gates and doors are left open they are quite likely to walk into any farm kitchen that is handy.

Every fall there is a round-up of ponies for identification. Some are banded, others have their tails trimmed in a certain way. Needless to say many farmers think the ponies are quite a nuisance but they are definitely a great tourist attraction. As I saw them wandering around the roads I wondered how long they would be tolerated by motorists on our Canadian highways! Speaking of motorists I don't think there could be better drivers anywhere than those I have seen in the English and Scottish districts I have visited.

The place where my cousin lives is in an isolated district off the main road, six miles from Bath, so I was told by the coach driver that I would have to get off the bus and take a local train!

"Aroona", home for the aged, stands amid acres and acres of its own grounds. It was once an old Manor House and the setting was breath-taking in its beauty. Every window looked out upon well-kept lawns and gardens and beyond the gardents trees and more trees growing on a grassy slope leading to a very high peak among the hills. There were birds everywhere I even saw a little wee English robin whose only resemblance to the Canadian robin was its red breast.

Of course the home itself was old and huge and accommodated the staff and twenty-two paying residents. The old people are well-cared for and comfortable. Theoretically they should be happy. Some of them are not. Their complain is—"too much isolation—nothing to see and very little to do." They said—"Just because we are old we don't want to be shut away from the world completely. We want to see and know what is going on around us."

One dear, contented old lady is 96. She asked if I were familiar with Fay Inchfawn's writing and was delighted when I told her I had several of her charming little books of homely wit and wisdom. "Then you must meet her," said Mrs. King, "I want you to do that." So cousin Mabel took me over to a lovely house just across the road—the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ward, the latter better known to the public as Fay Inchfawn—a lady of great charm and grace. To me the visit was most enjoyable. When we came away Mrs. Ward gave me an autographed copy of her latest delightful little book "As I Lay Thinking".

The Warden (matron) at the home was kindness itself and offered me a room for the night so I could have more time with my cousin. I give you these details so as to present a true picture of British hospitality. Incidentally, the Warden was with the Children's Aid Society in Toronto for six months about two years ago.

The next morning I visited my aunt-in-law in Bath. She is quite contented as she still has her own home — although the house is far too big for an eighty - four - year - old person. However, if every one could be as bright, energetic and happy as she is old age would never be a problem. We had lunch and a few happy hours together. Then it was back to Swanage for me—a five hour journey.

Next morning I went by train to Cambridge and here I am staying with a married nephew who was born after I left England 36 years ago.

Cambridge itself has altered very little. I was able to find my way around without any trouble. "Parker's Piece" is still here—with boys in white flannels (pants) playing cricket. On the main street there is an antique shop which the late Queen Mary often used to visit. "Boots", cash chemists is still on the corner of Petty Cury and two book stores that do a large foreign trade are in the same old location. Of course the grandeur of the Colleges has not changed except that some of the decorative carving and gilt work has been restored to its original colour and beauty. The famous "Backs" of the colleges are as green and restful as ever, and "The Bridge of Sighs" remains to capture one's imagination Grandchester, beloved by Rupert Brooke, is still an unspoiled village, with its old Rectory and thatched roof cottages.

The outskirts of Cambridge, like other districts, has mushroomed with Council Houses, new sub-divisions and industrial plants. There is very little difference between it and many parts of Ontario. I am staying in a built-up area on a road between Newmarket and Cambridge that I remember as a country road through the little village of Cherry Hinton.. Today we visited a cemetery where my sister-in-law was buried four years ago, and my brother two years ago. Part of the cemetery has been set aside as a cemetery for Air Force officers and men, killed during the last war. They and from all Allied countries, including Canada. Each grave is marked with a white cross bearing the crest of the country to which the officer or N.C.O. belonged. Needless to say all the graves are well cared for with roses growing at the foot of each cross.

Handwriting Is Health Barometer

If your handwriting's bad, beware! It could lose you a fortune.

An Italian won no less than $125,000 in a football pool a little while ago. But for a long time he could not be traced because his handwriting on the coupon was unreadable.

Graphology experts say that all over the world people's handwriting is becoming less legible. One of the main causes is the fact that life today is so hectic. Many people tend to write too fast — to scrawl, in fact.

A London professor has declared that our handwriting is a good health barometer. The healthy child is a better handwriter than the delicate child, he says. He mentioned a woman whose handwriting was week by week "a most sensitive barometer to her physical and emotional condition."

Another expert points out that a person who doesn't eat the right amount of nourishing food frequently writes illegibly. His writing lacks the buoyancy and clarity which distinguishes that of a well-fed man.

An Austrian psychologist who investigated the signatures and handwriting of 8,000 people, many of them famous, said: "You can disguise your voice, but not your handwriting. People who are told that large capital letters are a sign of vanity and who try to remodel their handwriting, find that in moments of emotion they go back to those bold flourishes."

Commenting on Sir Winston Churchill's handwriting, he said the fancy curved tails to his letter y's were a sure sign of powerful imagination.

Many famous men have written badly. Napoleon's handwriting was once called the worst in Europe. Actor Sir Henry Irving wrote so illegibly that an ex-employee of his who had secured a line or two of Irving's stage instructions with signature appended used the note for years as a free pass to a London theatre!

Wedding Rings And Their Ways

Wedding rings are never long out of the news. For instance, did you hear about the bad luck of a slim London housewife who lost her very valuable wedding ring in the garden while taking in washing a short time ago?

After a vain search, she had an idea. She asked some men of the Royal Engineers stationed not far off if they would come with their mine-detectors and search the garden.

Obligingly they came, unloaded equipment, and after dividing the lawn into sections with marking tape, got busy. An hour later they had found a fine selection of screws, rusty nails, nuts, washers and old clothes pegs — but still no ring.

That young wife need not despair, for lost wedding rings have a habit of turning up — sometimes years later.

A farmer's wife tells the story of how she was one day feeding a calf when the animal sucked her wedding ring off her finger and swallowed it.

Four years later the animal, grown to a fine bullock, was humanely slaughtered in the normal course of the farm's activities. Curiosity prompted the farmer and his wife to make a search and, sure enough, the ring — little the worse for its adventure — was found firmly embedded in the animal's stomach.

Another authentic story of a wandering wedding ring was revealed during the first world war when an English naval officer chanced to meet in a train a French naval officer who was in the seat opposite him. They chatted.

"Excuse me," said the Englishman. "But that's a very unusual ring you're wearing."

"Yes," said the Frenchman, "and I came by it in a very curious fashion before the war when ships of our Fleet were visiting England.

"We put in at Weymouth and I saw this ring displayed for sale in a fishmonger's shop. The fishmonger told me he had found it inside a fish while cleaning it. I bought the ring as a curiosity."

The surprised Englishman decided to explain his inquisitivness about the ring.

"By a coincidence," he said, "I once owned a wedding ring exactly like that and lost it while out with my wife fishing for mackerel off Weymouth in 1913. It can't possibly be the same ring, but all the same I'd like to know if it has the initials A.G.M. and H.K.M. engraved inside it."

The Frenchman took the ring off his finger—and there inside were the initials quoted.

Most wearers of wedding rings take special care of them, and many women never take theirs off, believing bad luck will follow if they do so.

The rather careless wife of a farm labourer in Peterswalde, Pomerania suddenly missed her ring, and in spite of hours of search could not find it.

That same evening her husband suddenly noticed she was not wearing it. Furiously, he asked her what she had done with it, but she said she did not know.

With growing suspicions, the jealous husband threatened divorce, but still his attractive young wife was unable to tell him what had happened to her ring. At length he calmed down sufficiently to attack the home-made sausage provided for his supper.

His rage returned when his teeth bit on something hard. It was the missing ring!

The wedding ring in the Middle Ages became a token of the wife's subjection to the husband and by ecclesiastical decree a bride had to fall at her husband's feet during the ceremony and then kiss his right foot.

Some refused — and got away with it.

Why the fourth finger was selected for the wedding ring has been debated for centuries. The old explanation was that to that finger came an artery from the heart, but this is anatomically inaccurate.

Perhaps a more logical explanation is that the ring was placed where it was less exposed to wear and tear.

The Hermits of Mount Dubose

They Guard the Water Tunnel for Kitimat in Northwest Wilds, and They Don't Have Much Hankerin' for People

By Douglas Larsen,
NEA Staff Correspondent

Atop Mount Dubose, B.C. — (NEA) — Talk about round pegs in round holes, Herb Skuce and his wife take the cake.

Their job is to sit up on this mountain, guard the flow of water through the intake of the 10-mile tunnel to the gigantic power plant of the Aluminum Co. of Canada's new smelter at Kitimat, give daily weather reports and be ready to shut off the reservoir water if necessary.

The Skuces have been up here more than a year and have only had a handful of visitors. They consider this an ideal working condition. The helicopter which brings up supplies and mail every two weeks frequently doesn't even shut off its engine, thus making conversation unnecessary.

"It's just that I don't have much hankerin' for people," Herb explains. "That's something we don't have much of up here, which makes it real nice for the few of us concerned," he points out.

One chore of his unique responsibility is chasing away curious pilots who land seaplanes on the big lake-reservoir near the tunnel intake. He has great talent for this.

"We're really not anti-social," explains Mrs. Skuce. "It's just that we find we like this kind of private life and don't need a lot of people around for company."

Herb is 55 and a native of Vancouver. He got the job from having been a guide in this part of Canada, slightly south of Alaska, when the Alcan first decided to build a new smelter five years ago. He was the first man on the job.

Mrs. Skuce is a native of Wyoming and has two married sons there and a married daughter in Colorado. She was a widow when she met Herb on a hunting trip several years ago. Their mutual interest in solitude, the outdoors and hunting and fishing makes it the ideal match.

In addition to relishing isolation Herb's special talents for the job include being an excellent mechanic, a good weather observer and a radio technician. He has a telephone connection with the power house but also has to relay many radio messages between distant points of the whole complex smelter project, which includes 5,500 square miles of lakes and mountains.

As far as Mrs. Skuce goes there is only one small annoyance about the assignment.

"At least twice a day I go fishing or out to inspect our traps and when I return I frequently find a bear on the front porch," she explains. "I don't like to shoot them when it's not necessary, but sometimes I have to get in the house," she says.

Most of them are fairly small black bears but there are a lot of huge grizzlies, too. Both Herb and his wife have had to kill several of the big ones in the past year.

The aluminum company, delighted with the couple's job, has given them the best equipment and furnishings possible. There are two two-storey quonset houses located about 200 yards from the lake. That's in case one should burn down or be damaged by the storms or snow.

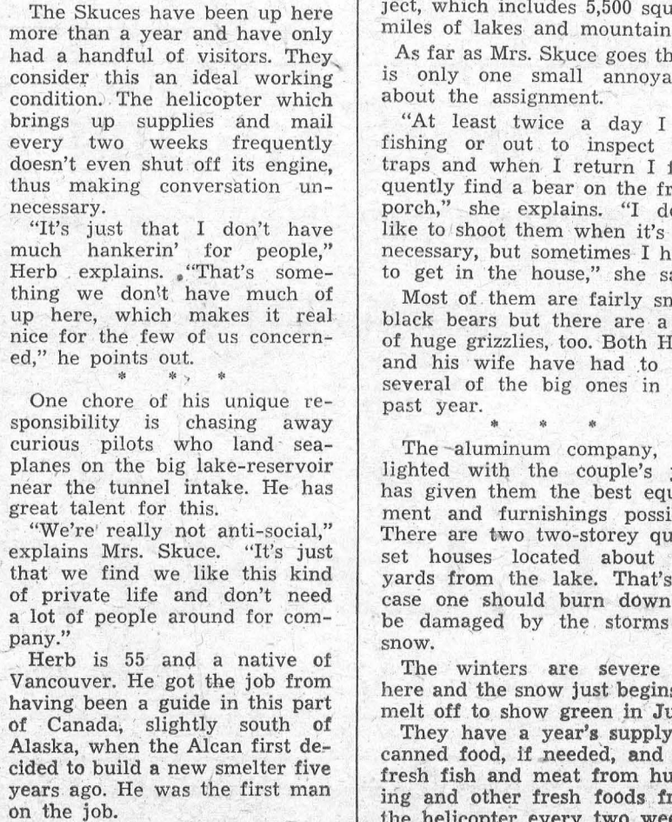
The winters are severe up here and the snow just begins to melt off to show green in June.

They have a year's supply of canned food, if needed, and get fresh fish and meat from hunting and other fresh foods from the helicopter every two weeks.

Equipment available to them includes a couple of power boats, two small trucks, a snow plow, a tractor, oil heaters, emergency generators and a virtual arsenal of small arms and ammunition.

Their hunting gives them a sizeable side income. The martens they trap in great numbers have top quality fur, for which there is a great demand. And what do they do for vacation?

"We've never thought about that," Herb says, "and when you get right down to it this is a sort of a vacation all year around."



HERB SKUCE AND WIFE: "We don't need a lot of people"

TOUGH GOING

A buxom lady tripped on the stairs and broke her leg. The doctor put it in a cast and warned her that she wasn't to attempt going up or down stairs until it came off. Four months later he removed the cast and pronounced her well on the way to recovery.

"Goody, goody," gurgled the lady. "Is it all right for me to walk the stairs now?" "Yes," said the doctor, "if you promise to be careful."

"I can't tell you what a relief it will be," confessed the lady. "It was such a nuisance crawling outside and shinnying up and down that drainpipe all the time!"

Natives Prefer "Tailor-Made" Smokes

World war does literally involve everybody — and after reading Colin Simpson's latest entertaining book, "Adam In Plumes," one realizes just how far the effects extend. In this instance we visit some of the inhabitants of central New Guinea, the Mt. Hagen tribes.

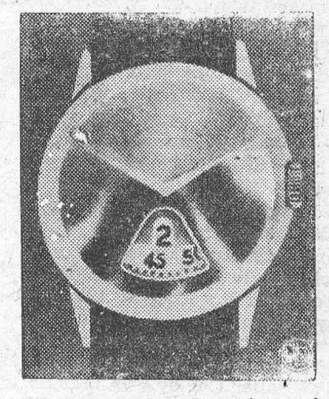
During the war the natives were introduced by the Americans to "tailor made" cigarettes, and liked them in preference to the sticks of trade-twist tobacco they earned, or the stuff they grew and rolled into dried banana-leaf cigarettes. Pipe smokers also became fewer — cigarette smoking was the vogue.

This habit set up a new system of economics when the Americans left, the natives by now had a definite liking for cigarettes — and paper covered ones at that.

Supply and demand for paper wrappings eventually arrived at the newspaper stage, and the established rate of exchange for the legacy of old newspapers left by the visitors, says Simpson, was as follows:

"For a quarter sheet of 'The New York Times': five pounds of sweet potatoes, or two six-foot lengths of sugar cane; or a big bunch of shallots; or eight ears of corn.

For a half-sheet of newspaper: a large bunch of bananas; or three or four bundles of firewood; or a half-day's labour cutting the mission station lawns.



LOOK, NO HANDS — That's the main feature of this new "direct reading" Elgin watch shown recently at the National Jewelry Fair. Instead of hands moving around to the figures, the new idea is to have the numbers move toward a fixed point, easing time reading.

TABLE TALKS

by Jane Andrews.

Too, hot right now to write any lengthy introduction; too hot, in fact to think of eating anything more substantial than a nice cool salad. So here are some salad recipes you may find useful.

SALMON SALAD

2 half tins Salmon, flaked
¼ cup vinegar or lemon juice
¾ cup mayonnaise
1½ cups diced celery
¼ cup sliced stuffed olives
¾ teaspoon salt
Dash of freshly ground pepper
4 peeled tomatoes
Lettuce
Mayonnaise
Sliced and whole stuffed olives

Gradually add the vinegar to the mayonnaise, blending well after each addition.

Lightly toss together the salmon, celery, ¼ cup of sliced olives, and seasonings. Add the mayonnaise mixture, blending it in lightly.

For each portion cut a tomato into three crosswise slices. Place the stem end slice of tomato on crisp lettuce, add a filling of the salmon salad, then the centre slice of tomato, another filling of salad and the remaining tomato slice. Top each with mayonnaise and a slice of stuffed olive. Garnish the plate with two whole olives.

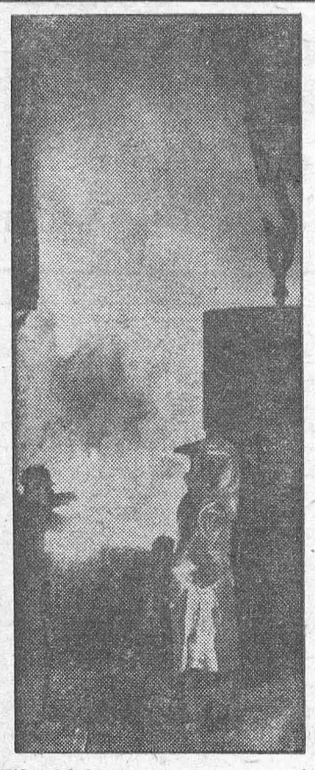
⅓ cup chopped celery
3 tablespoons mayonnaise or salad dressing

Combine all ingredients. Chill. Spoon onto beds of green lettuce. Makes 3 to 4 servings.



IT'S COOL — Next time the torrid summer weather gets you down, recall this picture—and cool off. These men are scant feet from the boiling hell of metal pouring from an open hearth furnace. At the time picture was taken, it was a frigid (in comparison) 94 degrees outside the plant.

Laundry Lament

Nine times out of ten, when you think your favorite television actor is wearing a white shirt, it's actually light blue or some other neutral color. The color white reflects a glare from the powerful overhead lights and casts an unflattering shadow over the actor's neckline.

With that thought in mind, Paul Hartman, who usually performs his burlesque routines in white tie and tails, ordered two stiff-bosomed evening suits in blue. The mystified shirtmaker followed instructions—at $25 per instruction.

Hartman used the shirts with conspicuous success, and then consigned them to the laundry. But they didn't come back with either that week's wash or the next. They finally were delivered, accompanied by a note from the unhappy laundryman.

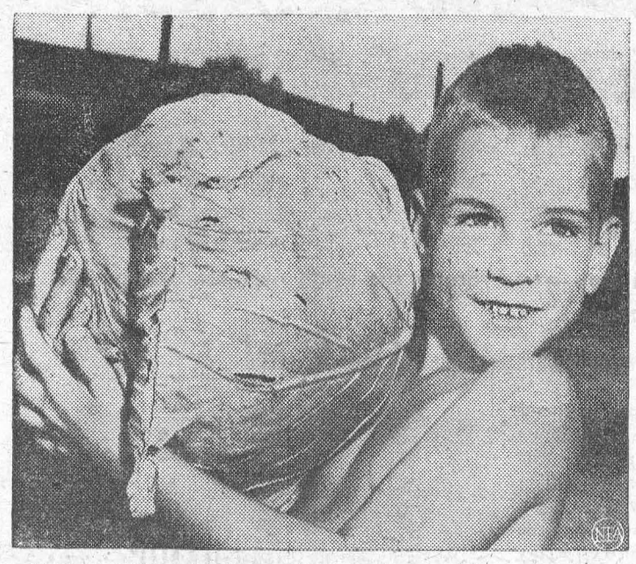
"We scrubbed and scrubbed these shirts," it read, "and finally succeeded in getting most of the blue out of them. If they are not absolutely white, please don't blame us."

Biscuit production soared to a record 115,364 tons in 1952, 55% more than in 1946, over double the 1938 output.

DUCK SOUP—That's what it is for the gosling, even though it might have been a nice snack of dog food for the pup. Despite his sad expression, the two are really fine-feathered friends.

Real Old-Timer Farm Exhibits—

The history of harvesting, from cradle to combine, is graphically portrayed by students from Michigan State University's agricultural engineering and drama departments. The students highlighted the role of power farming euipment on the efficient farm in a five-day Centennial of Farm Mechanization.



HE HAS A SWELL HEAD—With heads together are 5-year-old Charles Enochs and a 13¼-pound cabbage.

Tallest People Big Beef Eaters

Who are the world's tallest people? The distinction doesn't go to a white race, but to the Nilotics of Africa, though nobody knows for certain why these peoples should outstrip all others in stature.

The Nilotic tribes are tall, dark and very slender. They live in an around the basin of the Upper Nile—hence the name. While the average height of the men is about five feet ten inches, many tower a lofty seven feet and more. Their womenfolk are likewise tall and slender, with figures which would be the envy of many a white girl.

Like the men, they are on average from one to two inches taller than average members of white races.

Two of Nero's centurions are credited with first "discovering" the Nilotic tribes late in the first century A.D. Anthropologists say the Nilotics consist of twenty-seven tribes, who dwell on the banks of the White Nile and its tributaries, being found as far east as Kaffa and Gallaalnd and as far south as Uganda. The tribes have odd-sounding names, among the Shuli, Bonjak, Sofi and Jibbe.

Though of different tribes the graceful Nilotics have many characteristics in common. The womenfolk carry their babies on their backs and enormous loads of brushwood on their heads. They wear little, if any clothing. They have an inborn love of dance ceremonies, in which they leap and stamp with astonishing agility, flaunting monkey fur and tossing bright head-dresses. At their ankles bells jangle musically.

From these dance ceremonies, held frequently, comes no doubt their amazing ability as high jumpers. Using a foot-high termite mound as a take-off, they can clear a bar easily at seven and a half feet. They are skilled hunters.

Scientific evidence suggests two major reasons why they grow so tall.

The one first comes from scientific belief in evolution, and puts forward the theory that in the course of centuries the Nilotics have evolved long thin bodies because they are better adapted to dissipating heat in the dry tropic regions of the Nilotics' upland home country.

The second theory is they have grown tall because, as great cattle raisers, they are also great beef eaters. And the high protein value of meat is believed to have helped them to achieve their lanky stature.

This theory is supported by the fact that when peoples of races characteristically small go to live in countries where food is both plentiful and varied, they grow taller. This has been particularly noted of Mexicans, Chinese and Japanese who have gone to live in Canada or the United States. On average their height is greater than that of their kin at home.

Scientists of the Smithsonian Institute have investigated this subject of increasing stature, using as a yardstick the records of the physiques of soldiers and students of the two world wars. They have found the American student and G.I. of to-day are taller than their counterparts in the early part of this century, a fact which they believe is due to better and more regular meals, including a more ample share of meat.

These investigations clearly suggest that Nilotics owe their greater height to their habit of eating greater quantities of meat.

And, incidentally, isn't it odd that the world's smallest peoples—the pigmies who live in the Ituri Forest region of eastern Belgian Congo—are near neighbours of the world's tallest peoples, the southernmost Nilotic tribes?

Did Stalin Die A Natural Death?

Did Stalin die a natural death? Or was he killed by one of the younger men anxious to topple the aged, sick dictator from his throne?

This question has interested most secret services in the world.

Was Beria, the chief of the Soviet secret police, directly concerned in this killing? Or did he know so much that he had to be got rid of like his master Stalin?

The shadow of this unanswered question will haunt the new boss Nikita Khrushchev who pushed the Soviet Premier Malenkov from the limelight some months ago. He may find that a bullet-proof car can as easily be turned into a hearse by some ruthless rival . . .

Consider some of the facts which lead a well-known Russian neuropathologist, Professor A. K. Stankevich, to put forward the Stalin murder theory.

The day before Stalin died, Moscow radio announced that he had suffered from a brain haemorrhage, which not only rendered him unconscious, but paralysed half his body and made him incapable of speech.

How, asks the professor astutely, could anyone know that Stalin's speech mechanism had been affected if he was unconscious?

According to the brain specialist such a diagnosis would be possible if Stalin had received a heavy blow from a hammer or some similar object on his left temple. In this event one may say that the right side of the body would be paralysed and the organs of speech disturbed.

Another point: Stalin's body was immediately subjected to a post-mortem. But the results of this post-mortem were not published. And the specialist who conducted this operation on the body, himself died two days later. . ..

In these circumstances, Professor Stankevich says, the possibility of murder cannot be dismissed.

Leaving out the moral issues involved one is reminded that Stalin himself was no mean master of the "sudden death" technique, although he had an almost pathological fear of assassination and took the most hysterical precautions.

During my recent travels in Europe I met a woman who had once been a librarian in the extensive but private Kremlin library, writes David Tutaev in "Answers".

One fine morning quite suddenly, without any warning, she and two other assistants were arrested.

The fantastic charge against them was that they had sprinkled some kind of deadly poisoned powder between the leaves of books destined to be read by the Great Chief himself.

Sitting in a Mexican prison, in a luxurious, well-appointed cell with central heating, a radio and a well-sprung bed, is a stoutish forty-five-year-old man in pink-striped pyjamas.

On a warm evening in May, 1940, he entered Leon Trotsky's study and drove an ice-pick into the head of Stalin's Enemy No. 1.

Sentenced to twenty years (there is no death penalty in Mexico), Jacques Mornard (alias Frank Jacson) refuses to leave the prison walls on parole.

He spits and snarls whenever anyone tries to question him about the murder. He hugs the prison walls like a drowning man clutching at a straw. He fears to be released. He knows that the Soviet secret police silences any man "who knows too much." Once a man sent to clean out his cell made an attempt to strangle him.

And Trotsky is not even secure in death. His ashes lie in a safe in an Alcazar undertaker's office. Trotsky's widow says she is afraid to keep them at home in case someone might attempt to steal them.

Every week, a "mystery" woman, believed to be French, comes to see Mornard in his comfortable cell. These visits help to pass away the tedium of his self-imposed imprisonment. She brings him books, money, flowers, and pipe tobacco.

Meanwhile, Mornard's mother waits for her son iin Paris. Hers is a tragic patience.

But those who enter or are forced into the Soviet spy-net never know release from fear and anguish. "No one ever resigns from the M.V.D." is the proud motto of this grisly service.

Ignace Reiss, a former Soviet agent, tried to break the bonds. On one occasion a Soviet woman agent was sent with a box of poisoned chocolates (faced with strychnine) to give to Reiss and his family. But some element of human decency held her back. She could not bring herself to offer the chocolates to Reiss' wife and young child.

Reiss' body was later found with seven bullet wounds through his head in a gutter in Lausanne, Switzerland.

Another ex-Soviet citizen. Dimitri Navachine, was shot down in broad daylight in Paris. A former Soviet military intelligence officer, General Krivitsky, was found dead in a Washington hotel room, leaving a fake suicide note. Another ex-agent's headless body was found in the River Marne.

So the killings and kidnappings go on. The F.B.I. not so long ago found instructions for manufacturing home-made bombs from sugar and simple chemicals, obtainable at any chemists. The instructions were written in Spanish for South American "sympathisers."

ASSOCIATION FOR ADULT EDUCATION IS INTERESTED IN LOCAL PLANNING BOARD

George E. Beavers, Reeve has received the following letter from the Canadian Association for Adult Education, Toronto:

Dear Mr. Beavers—Dr. Kidd, who is the Director of our Organization, and myself are extremely interested in the work being undertaken by your Planning Board, and the principle of participation it represents. We have been concerned about Seaway Valley for some time and your activity seems to be the most promising example of what is possible in the realm of participation and citizenship responsibility.

We would very much like to have as much information as possiblet about the origin of this co-ordinating body, its make-up and its activities to date. I know this is sometimes an imposition, but perhaps there are some bases on which we can be of mutual help. The information regarding your activities can be of great help to people in other parts of Canada.

If you would be interested in talking about it, perhaps one of us could get down to see you some time soon. In the meantime any information you can supply will be of considerable assistance. Yours very truly,
ALAN M. THOMAS,
Assistant to the Director.

FIND WOMAN'S BODY AT HOPANSBURG, N. Y.; FEAR FOUL PLAY

The body of an unidentified Indian woman was discovered Monday night around 7 o'clock, by a group of children, buried in a shallow grave in a pasture field, one mile east of Hogansburg.

The partially decomposed body was unclothed except for a few pieces of jewellery and her age was believed to between 50 and 60 years.

An autopsy, completed in Malone by Cornwall pathologist Dr. William Shannon, revealed the woman had suffered head injuries.

Investigation is being carried out by Henry Fisher, of Malone, Franklin County District Attorney.

BORN—At Winchester Memorial Hospital, on Monday, Aug. 8, 1955, to Mr. and Mrs. William Verhoeven, of Dixoons Corners, a daughter.
