Boyne, Fruid, Connaught Honour Returned Men At Social Last Night

A crowd of almost 300 relatives and friends attended the "Welcome Home" last night at the farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Harold E. Durant, "Silverlawn Farm," in The Boyne when the three school sections of S.S. 18, The Boyne; S.S. 10, Fruids, and S.S. 14, Connaught, honoured their young men who had returned from war services and paid tribute to two fallen heroes, Harold Coyne and Kelly Chambers.

The evening's programme commenced with a softball game between Connaught and The Boyne, which was won by the former 14-12. Dancing was enjoyed on the cement barnyard which had been scrubbed clean as Jack Spratt's proverbial platter, with the old-time squares as popular as the modern steps. Kirkwood's orchestra was in attendance.

About midnight, Hugh Smith called the party to order, and after welcoming the crowd, called the veterans to the front. He read an address from the people of the three school districts, and assisted by Angus Smith, James McCadden and John Sutherland, presented the young men with bill folds. A minute of silence was observed in the memory of the two dead heroes and the Last Post was sounded by Dwight Swerdfeger. At the conclusion of the ceremony the crowd joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows." Refreshments were served by the ladies to 280 persons, and dancing was resumed.

The war veterans honoured were—Harold Coyne and Kelly Chambers, deceased; Brian Coyne, Clifford Coyne, Edward Brooks, John Devaney, Russell Sirvage, Charles Hummel, Lorne Hummel, Ed. Mulligan, Jas. Fleming, Carl Merkley, Albert Brian Masterson, Neil Masterson, Cross, Staley Chambers, John Coyne, Johnny James, Martin Norton, Donald Sirvage, F. M. Moore, Lyle Merkley.

LAC Brian Masterson arrived home from overseas on the evening train just in time for the party.

Following is the address:

Veterans,- For the second time in less than 20 years the smoke and din of battle have faded from battlefields afar and once again Canada's sons have returned from the wars crowned with honour and glory.

For some months past you who played your part in that great fighting force have been returning to your highly treasured places in the family circle and without lengthy hesitation have assumed the relatively monotonous duties which community life entails.

Needless to say, each one of us has during the long years of conflict taken a personal interest in your individual military careers and, although eager in our desire to give you a formal welcome home — until now circumstances have prevented the holding of such an event.

Therefore, this evening we, the citizens of The Boyne, Fruids and Connaught School Sections, have gathered here to express in some tangible form our recognition and appreciation of your meritorious service as soldiers of Canada.

It is with unwavering pride and profound admiration that we look to you, our most noble citizens, and on behalf of the citizenry of The Boyne, Fruids and Connaught Settlements we ask you to accept these gifts as a token of our appreciation of the worthy sacrifices you have made.

May you attain prosperity in your civilian pursuits and enjoy every happiness in your newly elevated posts in our community.

—Signed on behalf of those present

All his friends and neighbours wish him continued health and happiness.

Bowling Trophy In Memory Late Tom Flynn

For many years before his death, the late Tom Flynn was a most enthusiastic member of the Chesterville Men's Lawn Bowling Club, and with his passing something has gone from the game on local greens which keeps returning in every mind. The club has now taken steps to keep that memory fresh in the minds of bowlers for years to come.

A shield has been established to be known as "The Tom Flynn Shield", with a competition within the club in which all members are expected to take part. Rinks will be selected from names of members placed in a hat and a draw made. First skips will be chosen and numbered. Other players will draw numbers, three of which will be placed in the draw bearing the numbers of the skip and those drawn will play with the skip of like number. At the present, six rinks are provided for, each of which will play one game with each other rink in the competition. The winning rink at the end of the competition will have the names of its members placed on a small silver shield which will be attached to the big shield so that the record will be kept from year to year. Games will be on Monday and Friday nights of each week.

Bowlers who have been inactive within the club in recent years and may wish to enter this competition will be warmly welcomed.

Lyle (Pro) Alford Tells Rotary of Forestry Corps

Members of the Rotary Club of Chesterville heard another interesting talk on overseas experiences from one of the community's veterans, Monday night when Lyle E. Alford spoke on his work and travels with the Canadian Forestry Corps in Great Britain and the continent. He was introduced to the club by L. A. David and Ken Woods expressed the thanks of his fellow members and guests.

Guests at the meeting included G. Cummings, Jack Doering, Ron Lynch and Gordon Lannin. President Leon Marcellus reminded the members that next week's meeting will be held on Tuesday evening, because of the Welcome Home festivities Monday, and called for a directors' meeting at the home of secretary Francis Moriarty for Friday evening.

Cpl. Lyle E. "Pro" Alford was on his way overseas one month after signing with the CFC, landing at Greenock, Scotland, the day before Christmas to spend over five years away from home. In that time he saw service in Great Britain, France, Holland, Belgium and Germany with headquarters of the Canadian Forestry Corps.

He told of the work by the 30 companies of Canadian foresters in Scotland where they sawed 312 million feet of lumber, meeting the big priority first of the Navy who were then faced with the magnetic mine. After the quotas were met in 1942, 10 companies were returned to Canada. Others were sent to the south of England to help the U.S. forces build pontoons for the invasion forces.

Logging in the extreme north of Scotland was made difficult by the hills and winds, but the Canucka battled the hazards, and besides furnishing their quota of sawn lumber provided the R.A.F. with its needs and the mines with timber.

Five companies followed the invasion forces to help the engineers in bridging tasks and as the Germans demolished every bridge in their retreat more companies were sent to the continent. They scoured the land for piling to reinforce the larger bridges, and this gave "Pro" a great deal of travelling in Germany as the great state forests were brought into production for the Allies.

"Pro" visited Duisberg, the Remagen bridge which assisted the U. S. forces in their crossing of the Rhine, the huge Krupps factories at Essen, Koblenz, and then went northward to Hamburg. On the way he visited the horrible internment camps at Belsen on May 10, where he was told the Brish forces had already buried 28,000 forcing the SS troops to dig the graves.

With the close of hostilities, members of the Forest Corps worked on until their draft numbers came up and started on the homeward journey.

Final Touches to Program For Soldiers' 'Welcome Home'

Final touches were put to the plans for Chesterville's Civic Welcome Home by the committee when it met in the Library, Monday evening, and programme and catering arrangements were completed.

Judging from the number of invitations that have been accepted, it looks like there will be at least 200 at the banquet where the service men and women of both World Wars will be honoured by the municipality.

Programme plans as set Monday evening, call for the banquet at which the veterans and their next-of-kin or friends will be honoured guests. The War Brides will be presented with corsages by Rev. R. C. Tait, former paster of Trinity United church now of Sherbrooke, Que. Walter J. Carr, chairman of the committee, will preside at the function, the framed, illuminated scrolls will be presented to the veterans by Reeve Gorge H. Barkley, and scrolls will also be presented to the next-of-kin of the young men who were lost overseas. Mr. Barkley will also make the presentation of the cheque from the municipality to the Chesterville Legion Post. Lt.-Col. R. Dick, commanding officer of the 2nd Bn. (R) of the S. D. & G. Highlanders will be the guest speaker.

Following the banquet and presentations, a dance will be held at which all the veterans will be guests of the village.

Funeral Held Yesterday Of Glenn A. Shaver Noted Cattle Breeder

The funeral was held at Lunenburg United church yesterday afternoon of Glenn A. Shaver, aged 56, lifelong and highly esteemed resident of that district who died Monday morning in the Royal Victoria hopsital, Montreal, after an illness of a month. Mr. Shaver had undergone an operation a week ago and his condition had been considered satisfactory until Saturday when he weakened rapidly.

Mr. Shaver was widely known in the district, being one of the foremost cattle breeders in Eastern Ontario. For many years he was prominent in municipal politics and in addition he had operated an electrical appliance business in Cornwall.

Glenn A. Shaver was born 56 years ago on March 9th, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Shaver, on the present homestead, Glengyle Farms. He received his education at Lunenburg Public School and Cornwall Commercial College, following which he worked in New York until his father's death in 1918.

Returning to Canada, he began to build up his herd of registered Ayrshire cattle until today the prize herd of more than 100 cattle is one of the finest in Ontario. In 1923 he married the former Ellen Hough of Avonmore and there were two children by this marriage.

Mr. Shaver took a keen interest in municipal politics and for some years was reeve of Osnabruck township, being Warden of the United Counties in 1930.

A 32-degree Mason, Mr. Shaver was prominent in Masonic circle and was a Past District Deputy Grand Master of the Eastern district. He was a member of Wales Lodge, Covenant Chapter No. 113, Cornwall; a member of Cornwall Preceptory No. 47, and a member of Karnak Temple, Toronto.

In relation to his work among cattle breeders, Mr. Shaver was a member of the Stormont Ayrshire Breeders' Club and a director of the Ontario Ayrshire Association.

He is survived by his wife, and two children, Eylvia and Eric, both at home, and one sister, Mrs. Arnold Robb, of North Lunenburg. A brother, Roy, died three years ago.

L.-P. PARTY PROTESTS ADMITTING POLISH VETS

Tim Buck and his Labor-Progressive Party showed their true colours this week by protesting to the Acting Prime Minister the plan to bring 4,000 men of the Polish Army to Canada. The telegram said that the men of the Polish Army should be repatriated to Poland and added: "Many of them are war criminals."

Apparently their crime was in escaping from their captured homeland and continuing the fight with the Allies, and then refusing the return to their Communist-dominated homeland where most of their comrades were arrested the moment they crossed the border.

Most of these men know Canada for they were trained in the the Polish Army Camp up near Georgian Bay.

The writer went overseas with one of the Polish officers and learned a bit of his history. This young man had taken part in the bitter fighting against the Germans, was taken prisoner when the Nazi tanks overran his cavalry, and after months in prison camps escaped, only to be taken prisoner by the Russians. He evaded imprisonment by a sharp bit of thinking, and made his way to Lithuania.

There he acted as salesman and delivery boy for a rich old lady who was selling off her valuables to keep the wolf away from the door. Saving his meagre earnings, he started on the long trek across Russia with his mother and sister,finally reaching Japan. This was before the Nipponese had pulled their infamous Pearl Harbour stunt.

The British Government sent his mother and sister to Australia and gave him passage to Canada where he joined the Polish Forces.

To fight the common enemy again this young officer had encircled the globe. Is that such a crime? Why not let Tim Buck and his followers go over yonder and have a real taste of life under Communists.

NOW IS THE TIME TO PLAN BEAUTIFICATION

With summer growth completely establish, this should be the best time of the year for us to look over our own premises and the village in general and decide what points require primping up—addition of planting or deletion of poor specimens of trees, shrubs, or just plain weeds.

We have often thought it would be advisable for a village like Chesterville to have a town plan so that improvements and expansions could follow an orderly pattern instead of the hodge podge development so often seen with business and residential areas clashing for accommodation.

Would not the Horticultural Division of the Dominion Department of Agriculture assist communities like Chesterville which cannot afford pretentious schemes but are anxious to set their house in order so that more beauty may be enjoyed?

Musical Eckardts Return To Tours Started 55 Years Ago

After an absence of eight years, the Eckardt Brothers' company of Swiss Bell Ringers returned to the Community Hall, Thursday evening to treat another capacity house to a full evening of musical entertainment. Only two members remain of the original family which has been touring for 55 years, but the standard set by Tobias Eckardt when he organized his family into the first company has been maintained and has kept tempo with the changing times. This tour's box office business has been the best ever experienced by the Eckardts, even when they have played next door to movie theatres.

Gordon Eckardt, who with his brother Bernard manage the five-man troupe as well as taking leading parts in the bell-ringing and other acts, told The Record that while the Swiss developed the art of hand bell ringing after a music-loving shepherd had put tuned bells on his sheep, the science of casting bells passed from Switzerland many years ago to the French, and then to the Britsh who have maintained the secret over 400 years, passing the formula down from father to son.

The Eckardt bells were cast by the firm of Mears and Steinbank in England who have been in the business over four centuries, according to information on their letterheads.

The first troupe of bell ringers to tour larger centres in the United States was from Switzerland, but the Eckardts are all Canadian-born.

Tobias Eckardt, originator of the company, taught school in Central Ontario and in order to supplement the meagre salary paid to his profession over 50 years ago he organized his musical family and travelled about the countryside in wagons during the summer holidays presenting their programmes at church socials, picnics and other rural gatherings. On superannuation, he organized the full-time troupe which is now making a grand come-back after being a war casualty due to gas ratioing and its members enlisting in the services.

In that first company were the father, three brothers, Garnet, Gordon and Bernard, and two sisters, Ethel and Eva. The father and Garnet, the eldest brother, are dead, and the two sisters are married and living on the West coast. "They're grandmothers now," said Gordon as he recalled the days when he visited Chesterville as a youngster, playing in the old Town Hall which is now the Fire Hall; in the Music Hall which has been turned to store-keeping, and the old McCloskey House which was their home while in town.

In their earliest days, the troupe travelled in wagons, then they used the railways as their tours extended across Ontario, and today they keep up with modern facilities, using a large van and two trailers in which they live while on tour away from their Toronto home. Their aunt, Miss Margaret Thursk, does a veteran's job keeping house, cooking four meals a day and doing her turn at the door as well as with the spot light. She is a veteran of the last war, having been decorated for her services as a nursing sister.

Gordon, who handles the bass section of the bells, did his bit with the Air Force in the last war. In this war, he and Bernard were too old for the services so they took up movie operating.

The present company, which carries its own backdrops and lights, consists of the two brothers, Gordon and Bernard, both now well up in years, and three younger men. Fred Smale, who does an excellent job at the piano and possesses a fine tenor voice, was a school teacher in the Kincardine district before he went overseas with the Massey-Harris concert company to entertain the troops. He also sings with the bells, but a bad cold ruled out that part of his programme on this section of the Ontario tour.

Albert Bestead, who was with the Eckardts nine years before the war, served as an air gunner with the RCAF and during the last year of hostilities was a member of the RCAF concert party with his versatile repertoire of impersonations.

Ray Braithwaite of Toronto is accompanying the troupe for the Ontario tour only and will return to his profession of teaching the guitar. He gives out with classical interpretations on the guitar, and it could be said the audience was more than agreeably surprised as it expected a selection of Western music when he stepped out with his instrument.

The organ chimes, or "Roman Cathedral Chimes" as they are billed, played by Bernard Eckhardt and Fred Smale, provided an enjoyable item as their deep chimes sounded off many of the old-time songs.

Audiences must be gauged and programmes presented to suit, said Mr. Eckardt when asked why the famous bells were played only twice during the evening. Where many children attend, as in Chesterville, the numbers must be adapted to their entertainment as well for they won't stand for too much serious music, he stated. The opening number with the bells was timely for Chesterville, "The Bells of St. Mary's".

The Eckardts have played east from Sault Ste. Marie this tour and after going on to the Eastern Townships of Quebec will return to play north of Toronto. Next year they will tour the Maritime provinces, and plan returning to this district in 1948.

This company is the only survivor of the troupes that entertained local audiences before the talkies made their debut. Included in those old-times were Tom Marks, the Sunny South and Bert Johnston, to name just a few.

Learning to Love Your Garden

There is something about a garden that makes it worth learning to love. Those who take kindly to its cultivation have a hobby which they can turn to for relaxation and inspiration. Some garden lovers prefer to experiment with a few potted plants in a city apartment while others take their exercise with a spade in their own backyard. As they learn to grow plants they experience the sense of satisfaction that comes only from creative work, they become more appreciative of the rights of others to the fruits of their labours and they gain experience and knowledge of an occupation which they can turn to in a period of financial stress.

It is thought that the first gardens in the world just grew up. The credit for first discovering the miracle of the seed and later planning a garden from the aesthetic as well as the utilitarian point of view, however, is probably due to primitive women who were obliged to stay at home where they raised a few chickens and wanted to enjoy as much as possible the beauty of nature in their necessarily limited environment. The Greeks, who have given us so much, fell some what behind other ancient civilizations in garden craft. They did, however, bring the beauty of nature back to the city where it had been replaced by buildings and streets. Their gardens provided a retreat where they could rest, think and converse quietly with their friends in the midst of their town civilization. The Italians learned gardening from the Greeks but, due to the fact that their aristocrats were landowners, developed it further. They gave us many of our best gardening ideas and we find their influence reflected in our fine British gardens.

In Canada, backyard and vacant lot gardens were popular in this country first during World War I, later in the depression years and finally during World War II. What they can do for the individual and for the public in time of need if intelligently cultivated has been proved. In the future, as in the past, the emphasis will no doubt be placed more and more upon intensity rather than extensiveness, upon quality rather than quantity.

Honey, A Old Food

HONEY is one of the oldest and most interesting foods known to mankind. Its importance in ancient times accounts for the fact that its significance to those who were to be led to "a land flowing with milk and honey." In our own time, with the emphasis upon proper nutrition, honey is sought in rationed quantities as a very satisfactory supplement to sugar allotments.

This popular syrupy substance has the distinction of being the only contribution of the insect world to man's diet. Its manufacturers, the busy little "workers" of the honey-bee family, obtain their raw material chiefly from flowers, pay for it by their service of cross-pollination made possible by a systematic gathering of nectar from plants of one species before passing on to those of another and carry it home in their crop-like honey-bag in which they apparently put it through a process of transformation from nectar to honey before depositing it in the cells of the "combs" prepared for the storage of their food.

There is considerable variation in the quality of honey. That produced early in the flowering season is usually superior, although there are exceptions. Flavour and colour naturally depend to a large extent upon the flower from which the nectar is obtained. In North America considerable quantities of honey are derived from clover and alfalfa.

Canada's honey crop in 1945 has been estimated by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics at 30,683,000 pounds Due chiefly to the unusually small crops in Ontario and Quebec, the outcome of adverse spring and early summer weather. there was a decline of about 12 per cent from the crop of 1944.

CHILDREN CAUSED $6,000 FIRE IN CITY OF HULL

Monday afternoon children in Hull playing with burning tar paper dropped a flaming piece on the roof of a building which started a fire that gutted a two-storey house and partially destroyed an adjoining home, leaving 18 persons homeless and causing damage of $6,000.

WOMEN'S SHOES

"When you see a lady with a very fine hat look at her shoes," is what our great-grandfathers used to say. To those connoisseurs of femininity, a woman's shoes reflected her knowledge of correct attire and served as an index to her wardrobe. Through the years, the best dressed women have always been well shod. As a result of their observations, modern women have been educated to purchase good shoes in the interests of health, efficiency and economy, as well as appearance.

The footwear offered by our shops in the pre-war years reached a standard never dreamed of by the queens of old. There had always been a covering for the foot, it is true, because it satisfied a creature need. The amount of protection required in early times, however, depended upon the climate and the mode of life. On the one hand there was the sandal which was the rude shoe made out of a single piece of untanned hide, which when laced with a thong, formed a complete covering for the foot. Out of these two elements, the sole without an upper and the upper without a sole, was developed the modern shoe which is a combination of both, comprising as it does a somewhat stiff sole and top of lighter material.

The trend in the present century toward lighter and more elaborate footwear was made possible by the development of transportation facilities which have resulted in less walking on rough roads particularly in wet weather. This tendency, manifest in women's shoes in the years immediately preceding the outbreak of World War 1, led the trade to describe their fine merchandise as "shoe millinery". but was not fully developed until after the war. With it came a demand for softer and more pliable skins with unusual grains and colours, the increased popularity of patent leather and the dressing of reptile, ostrich and fish skins for the shoe trade.

One of the Pilgrim Fathers was a shoemaker who brought a supply of hides with him on the Mayflower. By the end of the 17th century, shoemaking flourished in New England. It was strictly a cobbler's job, however, until it was revolutionized by the introduction of machinery in the middle of the 19th century. The many improvements in machinery for shoe manufacture made in the United States helped the Americans to build in their shoe industry a splendid monument to the foresight of the pioneer cobbler of their country.

Canadian women give credit for the fact that they have been comparatively well shod during the war years not only to the efforts of shoe manufacturers but also to the suppliers who cooperated with them. They realize that a great many items including cotton, linen, silk, brass, steel and leather go into the making of a pair of shoes. It is clear to them therefore, that because the footwear industry is a secondary industry dependent on allied industries for its supplies, it continues to have more than one shortage problem to cope with in its task of supplying fastidious women with this creature comfort in these days of reconversion to peacetime standards.

There were 16,195,000 pairs of women's shoes produced in Canada in 1944, as compared with 15,852,000 in the preceding year, according to figures compiled by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

FORTIFIES SKIM-MILK FOR YOUNG CALVES

FOR young calves that are being fed from the pail, skim-milk is the standard feed, but one disadvantage is the low fat content of the milk. To replace a part of the fat removed from the whole milk, the Dominion Experimental Farm, Brandon, Man., has evloved a home-mixed calf meal which has demonstrated its value. The meal mixture is made up of two parts of finely ground sifted oat chop, two parts fine ground sifted barley chop, and one part of flax seed. The mixture is prepared for feeding by adding scalding water to the meal a few hours before being fed. The mixture when cool forms a jelly, and it is in this form that it is added to the milk. Two heaping tablespoonfuls of the dry meal is the allowance given to young calves. The amount is gradually increased until about one-half pound daily is being consumed. The milk and meal mixture is given in three feeds daily at as near blood temperature as possible. Overloading the calf's stomach is a common cause of scours. In addition to the calf meal mixture, young calves may be self-fed with a mixture of whole oats and bran and they are supplied with good quality hay as soon as they will eat it. Access to a supply of clean drinking water is also important.

THE VALUE OF SALT FOR HOGS

CANADIAN Experimental Stations have long recommended that salt comprise part of every ration for swine. Hogs need salt in reasonable quantities and its use cuts down feed consumption materially and promotes rapid and economical gains.

A very interesting experiment, supporting these recommendations, was reported by the Experimntal Station at Purdue, Indiana, in 1945. In that test four lots of hogs were fed in dry pens for a period of 85 days. Each lot contained 14 pigs with an average starting weight of about 90 pounds. All lots received shelled yellow corn and a mineral mixture of pulverized limestone, 10 parts, and special steamed bonemeal, 10 parts. All lots received also a protein supplement mixture of soybean oil meal, 90 pounds, and alfalfa leaf meal, 10 pounds. No animal proteins were used as these contain some salt.

Lot 1, the check lot, received no salt. Lot 2 received loose salt in a feeder. Lot 3 received loose salt in a feeder and 1 part of salt was added to the mineral mixture. Lot 4 received pressed block salt in a feeder and the same mineral mixture as Lot 3.

Lot 2 made the most economical and the heaviest daily gains. Compared to Lot 1, their average daily gains were 1.94 pounds against .99 pound and the feed costs of 100 pounds of gain were only $8.63 compared to $12.53.

Summarizing the results, one pound of salt saved 214 pounds of corn, 46 pounds of protein supplement, and 27 pounds of minerals, based on the feed requirement of Lot 2 with salt as compared to Lot 1 without salt. The feed saved by one pound of salt was worth $6.37. The hogs receiving salt gained practically twice as much as those without salt. Furthermore, the hogs in Lot 1 ate 12½ times as much of the mineral mixture as was consumed in Lot 2, which reflects the craving these hogs had for something they could not get—common salt.

Canadian authorities unanimously advise the use of salt in the hog ration. From one-half to one per cent if mixed with the grain feed or as about five per cent of the protein mineral supplement, are the levels usually recommended.

YOUNG CHILD IS FOUND AFTER ALL-NIGHT SEARCH

When the four-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Antoine Durand of Mackey Station, west of Pembroke, was found after spending the night while searchers sought her in the bush, all she had to say was the country was "lovely". She had disappeared from a blueberry picking expedition.

Grateful Acknowledgement For Red Cross Comforts

Mrs. Ken MacDonald, secretary of the Chesterville Branch of the Red Cross Society, has received the following two letters from appreciative recipients of knitting she had prepared for the Red Cross.

21 Nelson Road, Stanmore,
Middlesex, England.
5th July, 1946.

Dear Mrs. MacDonald: I know you will be delighted to hear that my wife and I have just found your note attached to a sweet pink woollen jacket which we have received with a little girl we have adopted.

We had previously lost a little girl in rather distressing circumstances, and adoption of some poor little soul seemed the only way for us to replace her. We obtained Ann through the good offices of the Waifs and Strays Society. She is 15 months old and is a lovely little fair haired girl, and looks very sweet in your jacket.

We received the jacket, together with several other lovely clothes from the society, and what we should have done without this help I cannot think. We had no coupons left ourselves, and Ann had only nine, sufficient to buy two or three things at the most, and practically nothing to wear. Thanks to the good people in Canada, however, she is nicely fitted out until she is two years of age, which gives us a chance to have a few coupons against that time.

If you are ever in this country, please do not fail to pay us a visit to see Ann. We will endeavour in our humble way to make you very welcome in so far as rations will allow.

Again, please accept our thanks for the jacket, and the kind thought that it typifies.

Yours very sincerely,
F. S. BASSETT.

58 Grosvenor Ave.,
Barnets, Herts., England.
Wednesday, June 19th.

Dear Mrs. MacDonald: I guess you are wondering who this is writing to you. Well, I will explain how and where I got your address, that's of course if you haven't already guessed.

A month ago, that is on May 19th, I had a baby girl and I was given some clothes which came from the Canadian Red Cross, and among them was a little pink coat which had your name and address attached, and I thought I would take this opportunity to write to you.

I guess you would like to know something about me. Well, I am 22, and this is my first baby. Her name is Christine, and she is the sweetest little thing with auburn hair like her Daddy and blue eyes like myself. She has worn the coat and bonnet you knitted, and they looked very nice indeed, so you can see your knitting wasn't in vain, and the clothes are appreciated as I suppose you know how we are rationed in England, and believe me its very hard to get what we want although things seem to be improving now, and it should be a lot better by the end of this year.

My husband is in the Army. He has been in it almost five years, but he will be out by the end of this year; that's all he has to look forward to. just to be home again for good. It is hard being away from baby, and he loves children, and now he has his own child he wants to be with it.

There isn't much I can write but I hope you will anwser my letter, as I would like to hear from you, and do not be afraid to ask me anything you want to know about me. I won't mind it at all. My baby is just beginning to let me know that it is near feeding time, so I must bring this letter to a close. Please write and tell me all about yourself and family, if any, as I would be very interested to hear about you all, so cheerio from England for the present. Best wishes,

LOUISA.
(Mrs. Louisa Chebsey.)

Unusual Attack By Horses Kills Day-Old Jersey Calf

One of the strangest tales in the annals of farming in the Cobden district was told by Leonard Farnell, a resident on the Cobden-Beachburg road the first of the week.

Two of his horses broke through a fence separating the field in which they were pastured from one in which Mr. Farnell had put a pure bred Jersey cow with her day-old calf. The horses ran at the wobbly-legged calf and attacked it fiercely.

"They picked it up and shook it, just as a dog shakes a groundhog," said the farmer.

The cow, in her efforts to protect the calf, was injured. Attracted to the scene by the bawlings of the frightenend animal, Mr. Farnell's son Gordon ran to drive off the horses. Before he could do so, the calf had been killed.

Though cases of animals attacking their own are common, farmers in the district said they had never heard of a previous case of horses attacking a calf.

CO-OPERATIVE AT BROCKVILLE DAMAGED BY FIRE MONDAY

Extensive damage was sustained by the Brockville Co-Operative Monday night when flames were discovered issuing from the building by neighbours. The greater part of the damage was caused by smoke and water. Lawrence Lalonde, manager of the co-operative, said he was unable to estimate the damage. Farm supplies, harvesting machinery and freezer supplies sustained the most damage.

FARM WOODLOTS ARE VALUABLE ASSETS

DISCUSSING the many aspects and varying conditions of the farm woodlot in Canada, G. A. Mulloy, Sylvicultural Research, Dominion Forestry Service, in an article in the Agricultural Institute Review, said it was evident in view of the facts that a programme of advice and assistance to the farmer with the object of bringing his woodlot into full production would pay dividends both to the farmer and to the wood-using industries by lowering the costs of production and increasing the quality of the wood produced.

Farm lands were the most fertile parts of the land surface. It naturally followed that farm woodlots were potentially the most productive forest lands in Canada. The fact was indicated, in part, by present production statistics. Farm woodlots occupied only 35,137 square miles out of a total occupied forest lands of 265,526 square miles, or a little over one-seventh of the area. Yet farm woodlots accounted for about 30 per cent of the total volume of wood produced. Further, 20 per cent of the value of total wood production in Canada came from lands classed as farm woodlots. The 20 per cent amounted in value to $40 million out of a total $195 million — no small contribution of Canada's national wealth, comparing favourably with the value of wood production from the lumber and pulpwood industries.

Because woodlots were accessible, transporation costs were low and it was possible to have high production at low cost. The accessibility also allowed for a very diversified market. Fence posts, poles, large construction timber, barrel hoops from wire birch, barrel stock, fuelwood, and other minor products could usually find a ready market in the immediate neighbourhood. These were by-products in harvesting wood crops, which in the case of large woods operations could not be readily marketed because of greater transportation costs.

The possibilities of production from farm woodlots alone could be estimated. If only 50 cubic feet, or one-half cord, per acre per year of useful wood were produced on all farm woodlots,, the total would be about one-half of the average quantity of wood harvested yearly in Canada from all sources during the past decade. There was every reason to expect that much more wood per acre for pulp or for lumber could be grown on these highly fertile woodlots than from lands hundreds of miles further north. At the same time as much fuelwood as needed could be also produced, much of it as a by-product. A moderate measure of forest management of farm woodlots could attain and exceed that objective.

RETURNS FROM HOSPITAL

Miss Lois Reid, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ken Reid, was brought home Sunday from the Ottawa Civic hospital where she had been a patient for several weeks.

MOTHER KNOWS BEST.

The Printed Word.

James is at present a summer bachelor. He has sent his wife Isabelle and the children off to a cottage for the summer while he slaves at his desk in the hot city and takes such innocent recreation as is available to a married man of some years' standing.

He's been taking some credit for his unselffishness, but now he's beginning to wonder whether it is properly appreciated. A charming young lady reports that she met Isabelle and the children at the summer resort. The children found the young lady fascination, as do most men, and, learning that she came from the city, asked whether she knew their father.

"Oh, yes," said the young lady, "I have met James, but I don't know him well."

James' nine-year-old daughter thought for a minute, and then said gravely: "Well, I think that's the way Mummy would prefer it."

"Hello, there! I haven't seen you for a long time."

"That's right. I've been laid up in bed for about six weeks."

"Sorry to hear that. 'Flue, ,I suppose?"

"Yes; and did a tail spin."

CBC RECORDING VAN HONOURS VILLAGE'S VETERANS

When the village of Erin, near Guelph, Ontario, honours its returned war veterans in a special week-end holiday celebration on August 4 and 5, a khaki-hued recording van of the CBC's overseas unit will play an interesting part.

A true veteran itself, the battle-scarred vehicle — No. 5 of the CBC overseas unit—accompanied Canadian forces to victory in Europe after seeing service on the Normandy beachhead and the Scheldt Estuary, and at Caen, Falaise and Arnhem. It went through the Reichwald and Hochwald forests, crossed the Rhine to Bremen and Hamburg and, finally, reached Berlin.

Recording van No. 5 will be open for inspection and visitors will be given an opportunity to learn how it was used in the difficult and often dangerous business of recording the war news for Canadians at home.

At the special week-end holiday celebration, signet rings will be presented to some 200 servicemen by Erin village as "welcome home" tokens.

CLEAN LIVING

If you want to see how surroundings can affect you, just pass from a crowded, noisy city street into a quiet suburban area with trim lawns, cosy residences and tidy yards. This, at least, is the advice of the Department of National Health and Welfare which urges all Canadians for health's sake, to strive for improvement of the environment in which they live and work.

Boy Meets Girl

It's been going on since the world began, but here a well-known author gives us a picture strange because of its age-old simplicity.

THIS happened on an evening when the world went hilarious as it never went hilarious before. Everybody will know what date I mean. I wish I had seen this thing happen, but I didn't; it was my friend Donald Friede who saw it and told me about it.

It began up at 59th and Fifth Avenue in the afternoon of that never-to-be-forgotten day. People were milling around in New York's streets and sidewalks, others were still dumping paper out of the high windows, and a hundred boats were making their hoarse whistles resound in the rivers.

Donald said that he was standing there watching the crazy crowd when he saw it. It was a case of boy meets girl, and, although they met amid the howl and hustle of a town gone mad, there was something simple and tender about it. Donald said that he wanted to cry when he saw them meet that way.

The boy was an ensign — one of those gangling, sunburned kids we have seen by the hundreds in the years just gone, undoubtedly sure of himself when it came to doing his job but a little uncertain and lonely now amid all this rejoicing in an unfamiliar city.

He had on three ribbons — war-theatre ribbons, dotted with spots of metal to show that he knew what danger and battles were all about. Donald said that the girl was cute and shapely. She wore a pretty flowered print dress, black gloves and a black hat.

Well, they met. They passed each other; then they halted, looked back simultaneously, and both of them smiled. You could tell that they liked and loved in the first glance; immediately, no doubt, the ensign wanted to smother the girl in his arms and immediately she wished to be smothered. So they stood there laughing. The ensign turned back a step or two and said something, and pretended to start on, but she wasn't really starting on.

The ensign took another step and grasped her arm. They spoke. They laughed. The girl let him hug her arm up tight against his body, and so they moved away. One last flash of gold bar and star on the boy's shoulder board, one last ripple of the girl's dress and tap of her high heels and they were gone away together. The Fifth Avenue crowd, the victory jubilee, had eaten them up. And they, thought Donald, would find the relief and the jollity they sought.

They would fight their way into a bar, have a drink or two, and join in the singing; they might have another drink, and perhaps settle down to eat in some crowded restaurant. Donald said he thought about them later in the evening — thought of them in the hesitant, appropriate rapture that these hours would bring: the voices that spoke lower and more slowly over their coffee and their after-dinner drink; the walk along streets where people danced and screamed in the celebrating dusk; the trip up in the elevator, the place where he stayed or the place where she stayed; then they would snuggle together as young people do in time of peace, also, but more urgently and readily when the guns are still echoing in their ears.

There would be the insistence, the pleading, the denial, the eventual acquiescence — a small passion that seems so important at the moment, and is frittered away on the raucous victory air, forgotten soon enough, mixed up with other loves to be in turn forgotten.

That was how he thought about them, and then he dismissed them from his mind.

Donald said that he walked and walked, and thought about the war and the people who had died in it, and those who wouldn't have to die now. After an hour or two, he found himself in the great gray shadow of St. Patrick's. He climbed the cathedral steps. Within the doors there was quiet; people at prayer, and candles burning before shrines. He turned to look back at the screaming throngs on the Avenue and the wild laughig faces.

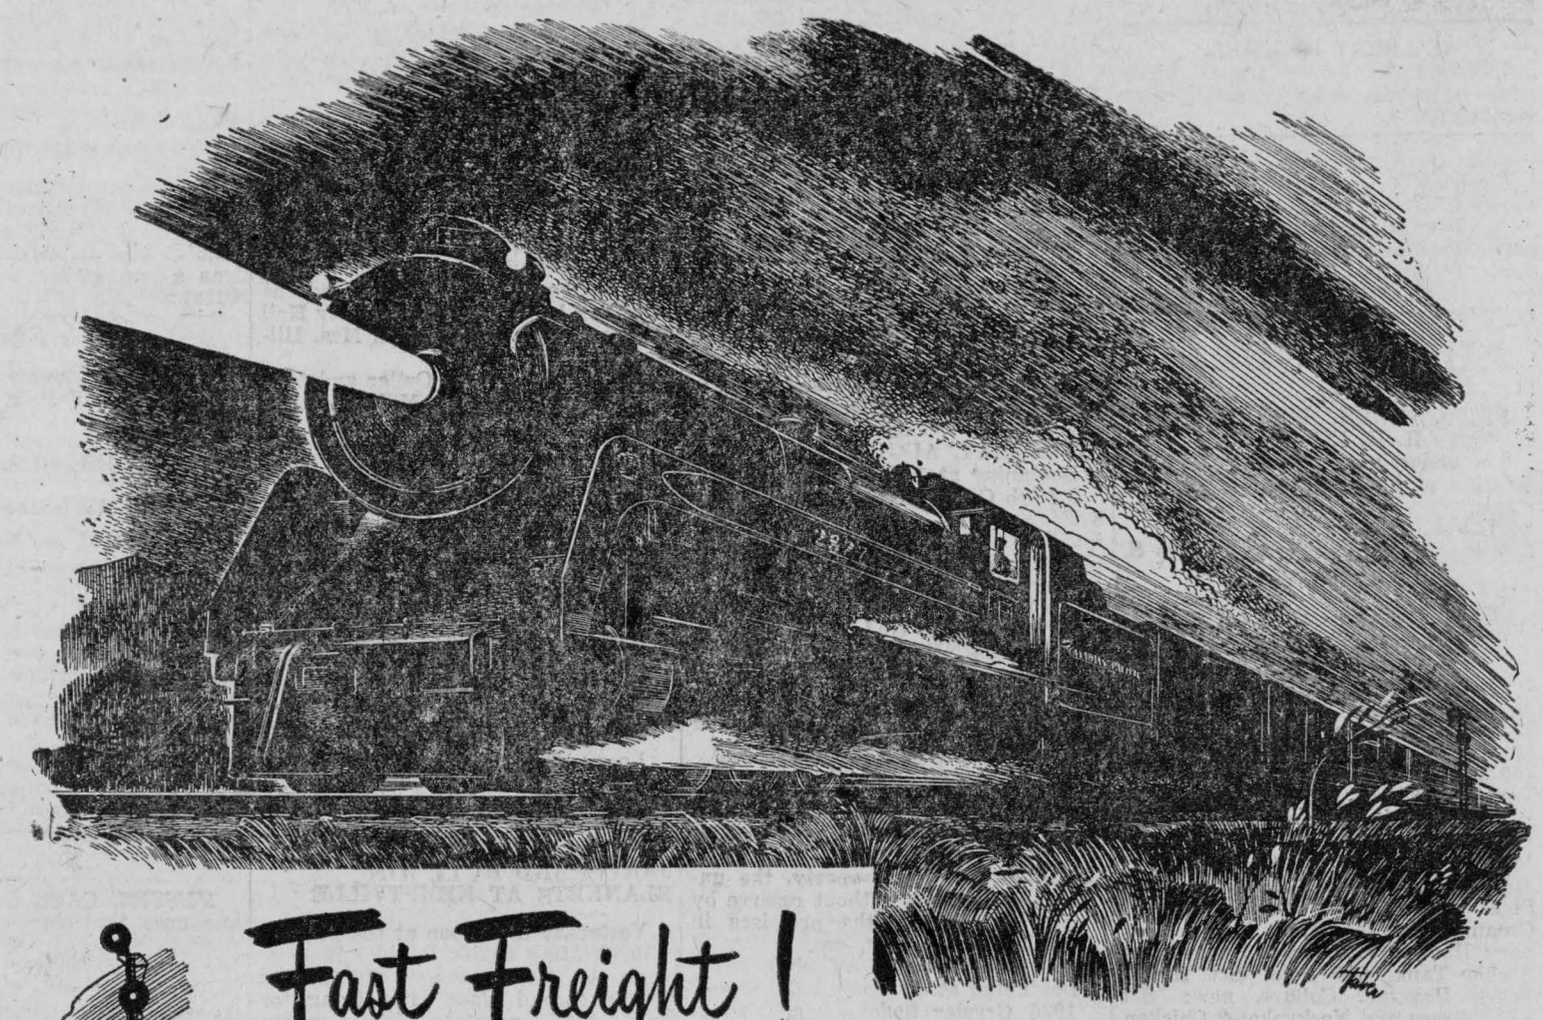

It was then that he saw it. He saw them step out of the crowd — the Navy kid with his row of ribbons, the girl with the high heels and pretty ankles and flowered dress. They stopped, they looked silently at each other; they made their way into St. Patrick's; and they got down on their knees, side by side, in the church. And Donald saw them praying there together.

POULTRY-HOUSE BARNS

In recent years, numbers of barns have been partially or completely turned into poultry houses, and the remarkable thing is, says the Egg and Poultry Market Report of the Dominion Department of Agriculture that they work. Some of the poultrymen take part of one floor, usually on the south side, install windows, and equip one or more pens, accommodating 200 to 400 laying hens. Other producers take a whole barn, put in three or four floors, install windows and insulation, with pens facing in every direction and equipped to carry 3,000 to 5,000 hens. While the costs are considerable in installing floors and equipment, says the report, it is less expensive than buying new lumber and building from the ground up. There is much to be learned about different exposures as having a bearing upon the health and contentment of the flock, in view of the fact that pens facing north have worked out well.

SPANS THE WORLD

Savouring the Little Pleasures of Life

Although my uncle Torrey died nearly 20 years ago, hardly a day passes without my thinking about him.

Uncle Torrey was what is known as a Character: but, unlike many Characters, he never played this part deliberately. I can see now that he was both the product and the victim of the rather rigid social system into which he was born. He was the second son of a Scottish baronet, and he spent his childhood at the family home, a beautiful old house famous throughout Scotland.

Like many younger sons, he went into politics. At the age of 27, when he was considered one of Westminster's most promising young men, he married a handsome, witty and fascinating girl who was clearly cut out to be the wife of a Cabinet Minister. But as the years went by it became obvious that Uncle Torrey would never, after all, rise to the top of the political tree; and his wife was not the kind of person to be content with anything less than the topmost branches. Eventually, at her wish, they separated.

Uncle Torrey had by that time retired from Parliament, and for the last ten years of his life he lived alone. I used to spend many weekends and part of every school vacation with him, and I got to know him really well.

He was an odd mixture. On the other hand, he was a gentleman of the old style, a man of the world who had been closely associated with all the most outstanding personalities of his day. On the other hand, he was a born handy man. He could have earned his living—and led, I think, a far happier life—as a jobbing carpenter.

There was nothing Uncle Torrey loved so much as mending things and the more finicky the chore was the more he seemed to enjoy it. If something in the house got broken, he would groan loudly. "Why in the name of God's holy truth", he would say (it was his favorite piece of profanity), "can't people take better care of things?" But all the same there would be a glint in his eye, and you knew that he was going to spend a happy afternoon repairing the damage. If there was nothing to be mended, he would clean something instead, preferably something made of leather or metal.

I can see him now—a smallish upright man of about 60, with blue eyes, bushy brows, a hooked nose and chin like Mr. Punch, and fingers prematurely gnarled by arthritis—standing at his workbench, and putting an exquisite polish on an old brass candle-snuffer or a pair of riding boots. He would probably be wearing riding breeches and leather leggings, and the sleeves of his fine blue flannel shirt would be carefully rolled up to exactly the same level above each elbow. His lower lip would be thrust far out—a trick of his when he was concentrating.

As soon as the object was gleaming brightly enough to satisfy him, he would hold it up with a proud smile for me to admire, and then he would look around for some other congenial job. If he could find nothing to mend and nothing to polish, he would get out a small oilstone and put a yet keener edge on all his favorite tools—the horn-handled pruning knife, the chisels, and the miniature two-bladed pocketknife.

He changed for dinner every night of his life. After dinner, when the oil lamps had been brought in and the coffee cups cleared away, he and I would sit and sing songs to the guitar. That is to say, I would hold the guitar and finger it—his hands were too stiff—but it was he, usually, who told me what chords to play. He had an unerring instinct for harmony, and he was patient, though profane, over my mistakes.

After I had the whole thing worked out to his satisfaction, we would sing the song, with me taking the melody and Uncle Torrey supplying the tenor and the bass parts in alternate verses. We sang all kinds of things, mostly folk songs, "Drink to Me Only". "Anie Laurie", "O Bay of Dublin", "All Through the Night" . . . We sang "Abide With Me", "The First Nowell," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," "The Old Folks at Home" . . . But the ones we sang most often were the Jacobite songs: "Charlie Is My Darling", "Wae's Me for Prince Charlie". As the evening wore on, we would both work ourselves up into an orgy of sweet sadness over the long-dead cause of the defeated and exiled prince. I remember thinking how strange it was that we should feel so deeply about it, considering that our forebears had been Lowlanders, and had been mixed up scarcely at all with those bloody and romantic shenanigans. I asked him about this once. He thought it over slowly—he never answered questions in a hurry—and then he said with a rather wry smile, "Well, you see, the lost causes always produce the best songs."

This was undeniably true; but so far as he was concerned it was not the whole truth. I realize now that the main reason why the Jacobite songs appealed to him was because his own life—particularly his private life—had been something of a lost cause. When he sang "Will Ye No Come Back Again?" I know now that the image in his mind's eye was not of Charles Edward Stuart but of a witty, pretty woman playing the hostess at the other end of a long dinner table, with the sound of Big Ben booming out every quarter hour behind the talk and laughter.

Some evenings, instead of singing, we would just sit and talk. The great thing from my point of view, was to head Uncle Torrey away from genealogical trees, a subject which bored me as much as it fascinated him. If I happened to mention, for instance, than I had met a red-haired boy named Tom Cunningham at a party, it would start him off. "Red hair? Must be one of Frank Cunningham's boys. I was at school with Frank's father—old Tom. Nice fellow. Married one of the Frisby girls. I don't remember her name, but her mother was a Lane-Pontifex. . . ."

Uncle Torrey was not a snob. This was to him a kind of game; it pleased his orderly, pattern-loving mind to unravel a tangled skein of family relationships and roll them up into a neat coil; and it lessened his loneliness, too, by keeping alive memories of people he had known.

Etymology was another of his pet topics. And, come to think of it, that wasn't such a very different topic, after all: it just meant delving into the family history of words instead of people. We would vie with each other in collecting odd bits of lore about derivations, and we would exchange them eagerly whenever we met. I shall never forget the time I discovered the origin of the word "posh", a piece of slang which meant elegant, snazzy or chic. It appears that experienced Anglo-Indians, when booking passage on a P. & O. steamer, would shrewdly specify that their cabin space should be "Port Out, Starboard Home," thus making sure that they would be on the cooler side of the ship in each direction.

The very next day Uncle Torrey met me at the station in a high two-wheeled buggy (to the end of his life in 1926, he refused to give up his dog cart in favor of an automobile), and we went spanking homeward between primrose-studded hedgerows. I saw a perfect opening.

"You've got some new driving gloves," I said casually. "They're posh."

As I expected, he winced at the loathsome adjective.

"For the love of God," he begged, "don't use that word."

"Aha!" I said triumphantly. "I used it on purpose. Just listen to what I've found out. . . ." He didn't of course, relax for a moment from his customary driving position (back straight as a ramrod, derby hat set squarely on his head, keen eyes watching the road beyond the horse's ears), but a delighted grin spread slowly over his face.

"That", he said at last with the deliberation of a connoisseur, "is epic." At intervals throughout the weekend I would hear him muttering to himself, "Port Out, Starboard Home . . . P-O-S-H. Beautifull!" He could not have been more grateful if I had brought him a ripe Stilton or a bottle of Chateau Lafitte.

Uncle Torrey had little to do with my formal education, but it seems to me now that nearly all the most interesting and enjoyable things I know were learned, directly or indirectly, from him. He taught me to ride and drive horses: and in this, as in everything else, he was a strict, thorough and infinitely patient teacher. He had no use for the kind of rider who merely wants to go out for a good gallop, and who brings the horse home in a lather of sweat. Most of his neighbours kept five or six expensive hunters, went to a fox-hunting meet by automobile and were met again by their chauffeurs at the end of the day. Not so Uncle Torrey. He had but two old Irish hunters which were as much at home between the shafts of the dogcart as they were in the hunting-field; and however far away hounds might meet, we always rode out and rode home "on our back sides," as Uncle Torrey delicately—and sometimes less delicately—put it. Often we would arrive home by starlight, tired and aching. We would help each other off with our mud-caked boots, have warm baths with a handful of mustard in the water and then sit down to reminisce happily about the day over a roast pheasant and a cheese souffle.

What Uncle Torrey enjoyed even more than hunting, however, was hacking — the pleasant three-hour rides, trotting or cantering through pastures golden with buttercups, watching the sights and sounds of country life, and stopping every now and then to chat with a hedger or a road mender. He was scrupulous, and he trained me to be scrupulous, about such things as uncut hay, newly sown crops, and the shutting of gates. He could manipulate any kind of gate without dismounting, and he would spend hours teaching me to do it. Halfway through the ride we would usually drop in at a village pub for a drink—beer for him, milk for me, water for the horses. When I think about those rides, what comes back to me most vividly is a medley of scents—saddle leather and tweed and warm horseflesh, hawthorn and meadow-sweet and the foamy tang of cow parsley.

He taught me all that I know about carpentry, and most of what I know about the mechanics of writing. He was an excellent critic, with a delicate ear for the ryhthm and weight of words. As for the finer intricacies of grammar and syntax, he was meticulous and, I think, infallible in his judgment. I remember the expression on his face when I showed him a letter from a friend of mine in which the last sentence ran: "I should have loved to have come." "I hope," said Uncle Torrey grimly, "that you're not seriously thinking of marrying that young man." I honestly believe he would sooner have seen me married to a jailbird than to a man who would make use of a double perfect. His battle against slipshod language was waged because of his deep sense of the beauty of order. He knew that clarity and simplicity of expression are the outward signs of a writer's inward integrity. By tirelessly pointing out my verbal ambiguities, he made me aware of, and repentant of, the looseness of thought which had caused them: and that is a valuable piece of training.

Many of the lessons Uncle Torrey taught me are bound up with the small ordinary things of everyday life. I think of him whenever I smell hay, get buttercup-dust on my shoes, or see a two-wheeled buggy go by along a country road; whenever I drink red wine; whenever I weigh two synonymous words in my mind before setting one of them down on paper; whenever I shine my shoes, or run my hand over polished wood.

I realize now that the memory of Uncle Torrey is not only in my eyes and ears but in my very bones. It strikes me once more, for perhaps the thousandth time, that the most valuable lesson of all was one which he never set out to teach: how comforting and clarifying, in times of loneliness and perplexity, is the companionship of inanimate objects, the touching and handling of wood or stone; and, when larger problems seem insoluble, how steadying to the nerves, how infinitely soothing to the troubled heart, is the painstaking performance of small, familiar, manual tasks.

FROZEN VEGETABLES AND FRUITS

THE popularity of frozen fruits and vegetables has been increasing at a rapid pace recently. Housewives in particular and the consuming public in general are realizing the many advantages of these products, both from the standpoint of ease of preparation and the ultimate palatability. As with many processes which are new, many errors are being made which lead to disappointment in the taste and quality of the frozen fruits or vegetables.

Many of the errors frequently noted are easy to correct. Delays between harvest and freezing result in loss of much of the fresh aromatic flavours associated with freshness. The ideal procedure is to commence the processing as soon as the fruits and vegetables are harvested.

Vegetables, and some fruits, should be blanched before freezing, which is done by placing the product in boiling water or a steam cabinet for a short time. The purpose is to arrest chemical reactions, often referred to as enzymatic activity, which will cause taints or off-flavours.

The choice of a package for frozen produce is important. Rectangular packages, with the contents clearly marked, permit a convenient arrangement in the locker with a minimum of space. The package should also prevent the material from drying out. For this purpose heavily-waxed cellophane or rubber materials are very satisfactory. A well-sealed glass container is good but is liable to break with freezing.

After being placed in containers, the fruits or vegetables should be frozen before being placed in the locker. Most locker plants have available sharp, fast, or preferably pre-freezers for this purpose. If any extra charge is necessary for this service it is usually found to be a good investment.

It is important, also, to see that the locker storage is maintained at zero degrees F. at all times. At higher temperatures the products deteriorate at a much faster rate even if still frozen.

If these principles are followed, success in freezing fruits and vegetables should be assured.

THE MIXING BOWL

By ANNE ALLAN

Hydro Home Economist

Hello Folks! In the park, down by the river, or in your own back yard, move out under the sky for an occasional picnic. For there's ease and good fellowship found in eating outdoors that just cannot happen inside four walls.

If it's possible to have a small fire, take weiners, corn and coffee. The Boy Scout of today and yesteryear will enjoy helping in this cooking venture. He can build the fire while the picnic cloth is spread out and the limited supply of dishes arranged within everyone's reach. The rest of the meal can be old fashioned potato salad, cucumber sticks, small tomatoes, the bottles of mustard, salt and pepper and the dessert of fat ginger cookies and fresh peaches. You may forget (on purpose) the sugar, but a bottle of cream for the coffee is a treat.

By the way we suggest you leave on the inner husks of the corn and peel them back far enough to rub off the silk and pull back over the corn—then weiners and corn can go in same black iron pot.

Here are some more picnic ideas:

1. Bologna heated in spicy tomato sauce, sliced thick and served on toasted buns with corn niblets.

2. Hamburgers are a natural picnic feast. Make them into patties at home, carry between layers of waxed paper.

3. Stuffed eggs have many variations. Try devilling them by an old recipe. Mix yolks of 4 eggs, ¼ tsp. salt, ½ tsp. mustard, ¼ tsp. cayenne, 1 tsp. vinegar and 1 tbsp. salad dressing. Fill halves and stick together again. Vary by adding prepared horseradish, minced meat and parsley.

4. Apples, onions and potatoes, taste better cooked outdoors for a change.

5. Man-sized sandwiches and pickles.

6. Favorite squares of marble cake—there's no worry about crumbs, or tarts. Fresh fruit is always welcome.

7. Scalloped potatoes in an oven proof dish with mushroom soup should be wrapped in several thicknesses of newspaper and carried wherever you picnic to stay hot.

8. After peeling tomatoes, pack them in a wide mouthed jar and chill in electric refrigerator. Wrap the jar in paper and keep tomatoes cool.

9. Marconi Salad: Cook one 9 oz. pkg. elbow macaroni till it's done, hold under cold water a moment, then drain. Add 1 chopped sweet pickle, 1 chopped onion, 1 diced cucumber soaked in French dressing, 3 sliced hard-cooked eggs, salt and pepper to taste. Toss together with salad dressing and chill. Serve 4.

10. If it's not too late for fried chicken—there's nothing better in an open skillet.

11. Don't forget to put out the picnic fire by pouring on water and scraping it aside, then pouring more water. Trace any sparks and put out any smoldering smudge.

12. Leave the park area as you would want to see it when you found the setting.
