It looks as though Mr. Challies was looking forward to serving Dundas for many years. Anyway he is cultivating votes, and as the children of to day are the voters of to-morrow, Mr Challies showed shrewd foresight when he entertained the children of Morrisburg to a free moving picture show recently.

A family of five, father, mother and three children because the mother tried to start the kitchen fire by pouring coal oil out of a can, were burned to death in their little home near Detroit last Sunday Will the lesson never be learned that to pour oil on a burning or smouldering fire is inviting disaster.

The figure 11 plays not only a rather important part this month but it is unique and something that will not occur again. The 11th Inst. was Armistice Day and it was the 11th of the month of the year and the 11th year since the termination of the Great War. At 11 o'clock, two minutes of silence was observed. We therefore on that day commemorate four events all on the 11th.

There will be at least one baseball player in the next Ontario provincial parliament. Mr. T. P. Murray, the Liberal candidate, who provided an election surprise by defeating Mr. T. M. Costello, the Conservative candidate in South Renfrew, incidentally a Liberal gain, has been a member of Barry's Bay amateur baseball team for thirty years and has never missed a game although now 49 years of age.

An so R. A. Jeffrey, who for a quarter of a century has been the very existence of the Arnprior Chronical, and whose active and resourceful brain, backed by an untiring energy, has been a great source of help and inspiration to the pretty lumbering town on the Ottawa, has sold out and it is announced is retiring from business. How can he? Might as well try to make the Ottawa River run north and west as to keep a newspaper man, after 30 years of active experience, out of the limelight of civic activities. Mr. Jeffrey has filled many public positions, and was a splendid Mayor of his native town. He published a clean and up-to-date newspaper. His comments on public affairs were crisp and common sense. Retiring! Whew, time some of the rest of us Ottawa Valley veterans were taking notice of things.

Covered Rinks

This section of Eastern Ontario is now supplied with enough covered rinks to make a Hockey League of Junior hockey a most interesting one. Finch, Chesterville, Winchester, Morrisburg, Iroquois, Spencerville, Prescott and Kemptville will all have covered rinks this winter. The new rinks under construction are at Morrisburg, Iroquois, Spencerville, Kemptville and Prescott. It ought also create a strong eastern curling league, as we understand there is a curling rink in connection with each of the covered rinks being erected.

Wants Separation

According to the Freeholder, the town of Cornwall will vote at the coming municipal election whether or not it will remain with the United Counties, or separate therefrom and carry on its own affairs. There are many questions of much importance to Cornwall, that should be carefully considered and thoroughly discussed before any such steps are taken. Cornwall has been fairly treated by the Counties' Council, indeed more than fairly treated, and the present movement looks very much as though that town, having gotten much in the way of good roads, etc. from the Counties, wanted to shift her responsibilities so far as the United Counties are concerned. In some cases, separation has proved a temporary economic move on the part of the town separating, but in the long run, unless the town developes into a large city, the advantages are not worth the trouble. Any adjustment of financial obligations, should separation take place, will have to be based on the prospective growth of the town. Separation is a tedious and expensive proposition, and on the whole would not prove of much advantage either way.

The entire picture was conceived, made and produced at the Canadian Government Studios at Trenton, Ont Under the supervision of Capt. Bairnsfather.

"Carry on Sergeant," will be shown in Lannin's Hall Winchester, for one night only, Saturday, Noaember 16th.

Presentation Made

On Wednesday evening, Nov. 6, members of the Winchester Citizen's Band, with their wives, gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hogoboam for the purpose of honoring one of their fellow-bandsmen, Mr. John Johansen, who was recently married to Miss Agnes Jensen, of Ottawa.

The evening was spent in a social way, with music predominating. Sandwiches, cake and coffee were served. A presentation of a cheque was made to Mr. Johansen, and a beautiful linen set to Mrs. Johansen.

The following address was read by W. F. Workman, while A. F. Utman made the presentation.

Winchester, Ont., Nov. 6, 1929.

To Mr. and Mrs. John Johansen.

Dear John, —Having learned of your recent marriage, we, as fellow-bandsmen, have gathered here to-night to do honor to you and your newly elected wife.

Needless to say, it gives us unbounded pleasure to have the opportunity to show our sincere appreciation for the faithful and always willing manner in which you have, at all times, performed your duty while a member of the Winchester Citizen's Band; and we feel that this is a fitting time for such an occasion.

It has always been the custom of the Band to make a presentation of some description to a member, whenever he decided to choose his life partner, and to this end, we would ask you and your good wife to accept these tokens which we now present to you; and in future years, let them ever remind you of the true friendship that you have enjoyed while in our midst.

At the same time, we, as a small representative body of British Citizens, wish to welcome you and your wife and also your brothers, William and Paul, to Canada, the grandest and freest country on earth; and we hope that as you make your journey through life, you will always find the Canadian people kind and hospitable toward you.

In closing, may we offer you our heartiest congratulations, may your wedded life be strewn with paths of roses, and may joy and prosperity follow you all the days of your life.

Signed on behalf of the Band.

After the address was read, all joined hands and sang, "For They are Jolly Good Fellows." Mr. Johansen, in a few well-chosen words, thanked the band boys for the kindness shown towards him at this time.

During the evening the Band took occasion to play some sacred music for Mr. John Hogoboam, aged father of Frank, who has been confined to his bed for the past number of years through illness. Mr. Hogoboam had often expressed his desire to hear the Band play some sacred airs, he being a bandsman himself in years gone by, and his hopes being realized, he was well pleased.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear daughter, Bessie Bluer Wright, who passed away on Nov. 17th, 1927.

November brings back sad memories,
Tears in silence often flow,
Memory keeps Dear Bessie near us
Though she died two years ago.

Nothing but memories as we journey on
Longing for the loved one dead and gone;
Only God knows the depth of our regret
But we shall remember when others forget.

Sadly missed by father, mother and brothers, Lowell and Gerald. 29p.

A Nations Loss

The sudden and unexpected death of Hon. Mr. Robb, Canada's Minister of Finance, on Monday last, came as a great shock. He was one of Canada's outstanding statesmen, and one of the best Finance Ministers in her history. He was buried yesterday at Valleyfield Que.

Colt Was Killed

Fred Hutt had a 3 year old colt killed on Thursday last at Dalmeny A lad working for Mr. Hutt was riding the colt, when it became frightened by a car driven by Mrs. James Stewart. He put up his hand to warn her to stop, but she did not, and when he approached, the colt got in front of the car and had its leg broken. It had to be shot. The colt was worth about $110.

Rev. W. D. Turner Inducted

The induction of Rev. W. D. Turner, who accepted the call extended to him by Winchester and Winchester Springs Presbyterian Churches, took place in St. Paul's Church last Friday evening. There was a large attendance at the meeting. Rev. A. Nimmo, of Morewood, gave a report leading up to the steps of the induction. Rev. J. Burkholder of Morrisburg, conducted the induction service. An address was given by Rev. William McLean, of South Mountain. Other speakers were Rev. John A. Waddell, Rev. A. H. Barker. At the close of the service lunch was served by the ladies of the congregation.

The Late Mrs. Martin Fader

The angel of death has again visited our midst and claimed another one of our highly esteemed citizens in the person of Alice Laura Hitsman, beloved wife of Martin Fader, who was in her 52nd year. The late Mrs. Fader was stricken with a paralytic stroke on August 1st and since that time, although being confined to her home, had been in good spirits and able to leave her bed during part of each day. She was a patient sufferer and had high hopes of recovery until a few hours before her death, which occurred at 9.30 on Tuesday night last. During her illness she placed her trust in the Almighty Father and took great pleasure in talking of things Eternal.

The late Mrs. Fader was a daughter of Philip Hitsman and the late Louisa Baker and was born on what is known as the old homestead located about 1½ miles south of Winchester. At an early age her mother was called up yonder and the responsibility of rearing the younger members of a large family was the lot assigned to the one that has just departed. Thirty four years ago she was married to Martin Fader. To the union, six children were born, viz: Ex-Mayor Philip H. on the staff of The Post Printing Co., Leamington; Louisa, (Mrs. Henry Lennox); John Martin; Hilda, (Mrs. C. Rice); Gwenyth, (Mrs. Richard Lennox) and "Jimmy" who was called home in 1910 at the age of two and a half years.

Deceased was not only an extremely popular citizen of the town, but she possessed a motherly spirit that won for her the highest esteem in which any citizen could be held. Her home was always open to the entire community and she devoted the greater part of her life in helping others. There is not a doubt that no citizen of Winchester could be missed more than Mrs. Fader. Always jolly and jovial and willing to help, she won the admiration of the members of several organizations of which she was a valued member. Besides her devoted husband, and the members of the family previously mentioned, she leaves to mourn her loss five brothers and one sister, viz: William, Louis, Curtis and Sandy, of Winchester, Arthur, of Toronto, and Nellie, of Montreal. Her aged father and six grandchildren also survive.

The loss of a dear wife and mother will be keenly felt by the family, while the entire town and community will lose one of its most prominent and valued citizens. The floral offerings which were many and beautiful, but express the feelings of regret that are so keenly felt by all.

The funeral service will be held this afternoon in the United Church. Rev. J. A. Waddell, pastor of the church, who was a great comfort to her during her illness, will conduct the services. Interment will follow in Maple Ridge Cemetry.

The sympathy of the whole community goes out to the bereaved family in the loss of a wife and mother who will never be forgotten.

Heart to Heart Talk

By Dr. John Joseph Daines

A PLEA

My portrait of Col. Charles Lindbergh, hanging on the wall, looks at me very earnestly this morning, I think, with a sort of urge in the calm features, to be careful what I say.

The daily newspaper has grown to be my very dependable friend; I find much that is comforting, edifying, even inspiring; but it calls Col. Lindbergh "Lindy." And, it keeps that up with a persistence that is benumbing!

I wonder if newspapers in that day called President Washington "Washy?" Or Lincoln "Linky?" I believe they did not. They ignored rag-pickers' lingo, bowery slush, cotton-field ninnyisms. To apply "Smitty" to a hero of the comic strip is permissible; but to refer to a great American hero as "Lindy" is unworthy of American Journalism.

Maybe great western newspapers indulge this silly piece of business with the idea that it is an endearing term. I can imagine Jones's wife calling him "Jonesey", or Brown's partner saying "Browney," but it hardly goes in refined society. "Lindy" is to me, a slap in the face of intelligent Americans; Lindbergh does not need this sort of mushing sentiment. "Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh" is a name at once inspiring—of which America is proud.

But, "Lindy!!"

Baby-talk is all right in its place—for babies. It is perfectly all right and proper in the park, when the moon is waning—to one's own umpsy-dumpsy. But for the great American headline it is too cheap, shallow—it's becoming idiotic! American Journalism has outgrown alley-rat parlance; it should pause and take a good look at itself in the mirror of public opinion.

There is always a possibility that I am wrong; it may be that, chopping off three letters of a name, saves several thousand dollars annually to the linotype—I hadn't figured that—printing "Lindy" a million times!

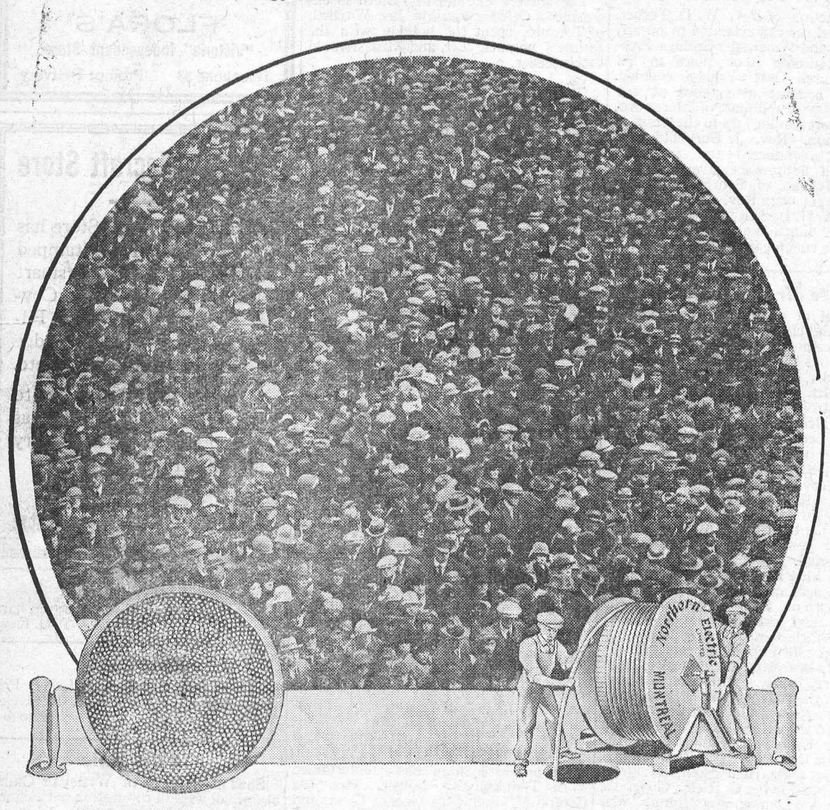
2,400 People Converse With Ease Through a Small Lead Tube



Imagine the roar of 2,400 voices confined within the walls of one huge room!

What a babel of confusion if the people in that room should try to shout messages to each other! Yet, through a lead tube, only 2½ inches in diameter, 2,400 people may converse at the same time with ease, without confusion and in strict privacy.

This lead tube (illustrated in section above) is the casing of a telephone cable manufactured in the Montreal plant of the Northern Electric Company, containing over 1,200 pairs of insulated wires, each pair connecting at one end with a telephone instrument and at the other a central exchange. In the large Canadian cities there are scores of such telephone cables.

Synopsis

What Happened Before

At a party in Palm Beach given by Mr. Cooper Clary, Leeson, an attorney, meets Lucy Harkness, known as Devil-May-Care because of her adventurous, eventful life. In a game in which partners for the evening are chosen, Lucy is won by Tim Stevens, who has a great reputation as a successful heart-breaker. Leeson is a bit jealous. Tim Stevens tells Lucy they are going aboard his boat, the Minerva, and she accedes in order not to be "a quitter." Asked if she is sorry that he won her company, Lucy says she is not and that evidently Fate has arranged it. Tim thereupon tells her to stop looking regretfully after Leeson.

Now Go On With the Story

"Regretfully? I've never regretted anything, Tim. I do . . . whatever I do . . . because . . . it was ordained. Am I able to deflect the course of the universe? Then how can I deflect myself? I'm a projectile, Tim, aimed by some force at some remote target."

"Remote? Maybe not. Perhaps I'm the target, Lucy," he suggested.

She pursed her mouth.

"I hardly think so, Tim."

"Why not?" he demanded.

"I'm too good for you," she told him.

"Are you, by any chance, joking?" he inquired.

"Certainly not."

"Then you're just being rude?"

"'Truthful' is a prettier word."

"Too good for me, eh?" he mused. "Well, 'good' is a strange word. It's capable of a lot of translations. Too good for me? How about Leeson? Not too good for him?"

"Why harp on him? I'd never met him until to-night," she said.

The Minerva was one of the finest boats of its kind in Southern waters, and often though she'd seen the craft, Lucy Harkness gave a little nod of approbation to-night. The polished woodwork reflected the stars; the chairs cushioned wicker, gleamed spotlessly white; the fittings of the small boats shone; the canopy aft looked, in this silver light, as though made of colored damask. And upon the table laid for two the Minerva's steward had expended not merely time but taste.

"I always like you better when I come aboard the Minerva, Tim," she said.

"So?" His voice was sullen.

"I think the Minerva, so clean and sweet, is your soul—when you were a tiny baby."

"How long have you been teaching Sunday-school?" he demanded.

She laughed.

"Fair enough! It isn't fair to reproach you about the present condition of your soul, is it, Tim? Not while my own is in the condition it is. Well, I won't lecture you or abuse you any more to-night."

"You'll be nice?" he asked, again eager.

"As nice as possible. You won the race, didn't you?"

"And you didn't really mind my fouling? You wanted me to win?" he demanded.

"I'm twenty-three, Tim. Old enough to realize that what we want we may not have; what we get has been determined æons ago. You've got me, for supper here. I've got you. Well, let's make the best of it."

"It could be a lovely best," he insinuated.

She shrugged.

"Maybe. I don't know. Fate hasn't taken me that far into her confidence."

"Could I show you?" he inquired.

"You mean . . . make love to me?" She shook her head. "Fate has read me no riddles, Tim, but that . . . I don't need her assistance. Love can only be made when two engage in the pretty pastime. And I . . . shall never engage in that little game with you."

"Sure?"

She stared at him, taking no warning from his eagerness.

"Pos-o-lute, old thing." She straightened up in her chair. "Come on; let's drop nonsense. I said I'd be as nice as possible. But 'possible' ends at talk of flirtation and long before flirtation begins. Here, what's this?"

She leaped to her feet. The Minerva's lines had been cast off, and the propeller had begun to move. She ran to the low rail and stood poised upon it for a moment. But the stone pier was already twenty feet away.

"Well, for the love of Mike!" ejaculated Stevens. "Any one would think you thought I was about to kidnap you. Any objection to a spin down the lake, to give us an appetite for supper?"

"Well, if we can leave Casa Clary at all, without offending our hostess, I don't suppose it much matters where we go."

"It looked as though you were afraid of me," stated Stevens.

"Desire must have had something to do with what it looked like, then," she retorted. "You like women to be afraid of you, don't you, Tim?"

"I don't get you," he told her.

"The very devil of it is . . . you do get me . . . always. Isn't that true? I see through you so completely that . . . instead of being feared . . . you're a little bit afraid of me; eh, Tim?"

"Little Miss Hate-Herself—that's you, isn't it?" he jeered.

"You can't accuse me of vanity because I state that I can see through you, Tim. Most women can, and do. They don't tell you so, because you have money."

"I won't agree with you," he said. "But if you can see through me, then you must know how much I . . . love you."

"That's what offends me," she replied.

"Offends? Is love offensive?"

"Your kind. From a man like you . . . of course it's offensive."

"Oh, by God! that's carrying it a bit too far! Just a bit too raw, Lucy!" he cried. "I don't mind it up to a certain point, but when you indicate that I'm unclean, filthy—"

"You are—"

"Then why, in God's name, come out here with me to-night?" he cried.

"Because when I enter a game I play it. Pity you can't say as much, Tim."

"I think the Minerva, so clean and sweet, is your soul—when you were a tiny baby."

"How do you know I can't? How do you know . . . when I play a game, I don't . . . play it . . . all the way?" he demanded.

She laughed contemptuously.

"With women, you mean? But of course you mean that. It's the only game you know. But . . . you've never played it with my kind of woman, because my kind don't play with you."

"You're one that's going to," he said flatly.

"Think so?" She shook her head again. "This is Mrs. Clary's game we're playing. The other game . . . I didn't enter."

"You didn't know you'd entered it," he contradicted, "but you have. You're here, aboard the Minerva. You'll leave the Minerva when I'm damned good and ready to let you leave; not before. Now, do you play my game?"

Her eyes were dreamy; her sweet mouth drooped pensively.

"If Fate intended, yes. But Fate has been so very kind to me, thus far, that I cannot believe it intends me any such trick as playing such a game with you. Tim, I've come out with you. Let's go back."

"Not," he told her, "until you've learned a little more of fate."

"Abduction went out with hoop-skirts," she said.

"It's come in again," he remarked grimly.

She remembered Modane, the Minerva's skipper. A rat-faced man, of inexact ancestry, a touch of the Levantine in his hooked nose. The men were ordinary sailors, and the domestic staff, so to speak, were Japs. No help from the latter would be forthcoming; it was not for them to interfere in the actions of the barbarians who employed them. The white sailors were crude, stupid men; and Modane was his master's man.

Wariness owned her; this situation, absurdly impossible though it might seem later when she narrated it, was definitely dangerous now. The extent of its danger depended entirely on the degree of madness which possessed Stevens.

"And it all leads to . . . what?" she asked.

"You'd keep your word. It leads to your promise to marry me. When I have that, I'll put you ashore."

"And as the months, or years, pass blithely by?" she asked.

"I won't wait that long," he said. "Maybe, after a while, you'll ask me to marry you."

"Isn't this a trifle too melodramatic, Tim? The ruined maiden pleads with her despoiler—"

"The trouble with you, Lucy," he interrupted, "is that, with all your experience, you don't know men. Or you'd know that I mean what I say."

"But why want a girl who has only contempt for you?" she asked.

"Don't ask me! Why does the tide come in? You believe in Fate; you've said so often enough, anyway. Well, you're my Fate, Lucy. God! I haven't mentioned love to you, but if I had words to tell you . . . The very sight of you drives me crazy: the tones of your voice, the way you sometimes blink your eyes, as though you were a million miles away—Lucy, I've run around after you like a pet pup, for a year, and now—"

"Now the mongrel bites, eh?" she interjected.

"He's only barking now," he told her, "but he will bite."

She shook her head.

"No, I don't think so. He'll be afraid of the whip."

"Get this into your pretty head, and make it stick there," he cried. "Where you're concerned I just teetotally don't give a damn! I always thought that men who went blah over one particular woman were weak-kneed soft-heads. But I've changed my mind. You . . . you . . . oh, I can't make it clear, but you . . . obscure the sun for me, Lucy. There's a cloud always before me, and if I turn my head to look the other way, the cloud is still there. It's you, you all the time, everywhere. If some one speaks to me it's your voice I hear. A girl dances in the theater and it's Lucy Harkness that I'm watching. The sun sets over Lake Worth and it's Lucy Harkness's face I see.

"A magazine, a newspaper supplement prints pictures of women and they're all photographs of you. Your name is in the headlines; it's on the signs along the road. I tell you, Lucy, this is real, this is honest-to-God. I've never told you, never asked you to marry me, but . . . you've known."

"Yes, I've known, of course," she admitted.

He snatched at her admission.

"And you came here to-night—Lucy, why did you come? Was it because—"

"It was because, solely, you won the race. No other reason. I've never shirked an issue, never avoided a problem. Fate meant me to come here to-night. But I've told you this a dozen times."

"And don't you think that Fate also means us to care for each other?"

"I've answered that before, Tim, but I'll answer it again. I'd rather be dead than let your hands rest upon me; I'd rather be dead and condemned to eternal hell than let you kiss me. Now, is the answer clear?"

* * * *

Later, sheer, stark panic overwhelmed her. She was trapped, caught, at what mercy this beast, this madman, chose to extend to her.

And even as she recognized this fact a knock sounded upon the door.

Stevens's voice came through the panels. It held a quality of excitement that she had never noted in his tones before. It was almost as though he had been drinking heavily and was fighting hard not to show the effect of the liquor. Yet there had not been time, since she left him, for him to become intoxicated.

"Lucy, I want to talk to you," he said.

The maddest panic swept over her, obliterating sanity. The door was flimsy, would give way, despite the bolt, at the least onslaught. Tim Stevens had dared plan an abduction and carry it through. He might not go to further lengths, but how could she tell? If she opened the door . . . if she failed to open the door and he crashed through it . . .

She would rather die than plead with Tim Stevens. She had never begged of any one in all her life; she would not begin now. Yet she could not fight; a screaming, scratching woman lost all dignity, confessed her weakness by her very defense.

Panic passed; although her act was mad to the point of suicide, her actions were cool, deliberate. This was Devil-May-Care, who made her decisions on instant impulse, but who carried them through as calmly as though they had been thought over for months.

She opened the port-hole—really a window—of her cabin, and dived cleanly into the Gulf Stream.

She was conscious of no shock as she went below the gleaming waters. It was one of those nights when semi tropical Florida is really tropical, and the difference between the temperature of air and water was very slight. She didn't bother to swim beneath the surface for any appreciable distance.

LOCUST PLAGUES.

Have Been Plagues Ever Since Days of Pharaohs.

There have been locust plagues ever since the days of the Pharaohs, says a writer in Pearson's Weekly. They are still plaguing the earth. The other day the Kenya Colony Fruit Show had to be abandoned as the locusts had eaten nearly the whole of the fruit crop!

Cases of swarms descending on a field of crops and, in a few seconds, leaving it completely barren of vegetable life, are not at all uncommon; but they can do even more amazing things than that.

There is the case of a Buenos Ayres and Pacific Railway train, travelling along the open country at sixty miles an hour—which was stopped dead by a plague of locusts. The driver and fireman saw them, and exerted themselves to get every ounce of speed out of the engine with the idea of getting through the swarm before the impetus gave out.

In a moment the train dashed straight into the swarming mass and was ploughing straight through it, crushing countless numbers of insects with every revolution of the wheels. The wheels became slimed as if they had ben greased, and then lost their grip of the rails. They simply spun round without moving the train!

Before the train could be got moving again the fireman had to take his shovel to the front of the engine, hovel up huge masses of the insects and fling them clear of the track. By that method it became possible to move the train a few yard at a time, until it was finaly clear of the dense mass and could carry on with the journey.

WHAT IS THE WIND?

Cyclones Are Beneficial Rather Than Harmful.

A gale is a strong, straight wind.

Whirlwind: An eddy of air which whisks up dust; or a stronger whirl of air such as that which strips grain from a cornfield and sends them hundreds of feet aloft.

Tornado: A violent powerful whirlwind, covering a small area, that sucks up heavy objects or twists them from their moorings. Its vertical forces are more important than its horizontal ones.

Hurricane: A violent cicular system of winds in the semi-tropics of the Atlantic and Caribbean, covering a considerable area and moving long distances. These are the strongest of the predominantly horizontal winds. They are sucked towards a great central vortex. One hundred miles an hour is their usual maximum for the winds toward the centre of circulation.

Typhoon: A hurricane in the tropical waters of the Pacific.

Waterspout: A tornado or violent whirlwind over water.

Cyclone: A continually misused term. In popular parlance, any destructive wind is a "cyclone." Properly, a cyclone is a circular system of winds covering a great area (sometimes 1,000 miles aross) and including gentle breezes as well as still winds. Cyclones are beneficial rather than harmful. They give us most of our weather changes. The daily weather map has its cyclonic system of winds circulating around it. When nature dips her spoon in the weather brew and stirs, the result is a cyclone.

The Dark Ages.

The earliest middle ages, starting about the last quarter of the fifth century, when the old civilizaton had perished, and before the new had had time to build itself up are generally spoken of as the "Dark Ages." With the downfall of the Roman Empire in A.D. 475, the old world and the old civilization perished, and that date is usually accepted as the definite end of ancient history. With the capture of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453 began an influx of scholars, expelled from that city, into Western Europe, making what we call the Renaissance touched England about 1495, and was followed by the colonization of America, the Reformation, and other momentous events. In short, modern history begins about 1495. The period between 475 and 1495 forms the Middle Ages, and the whole of these ten centuries have sometimes been closely described as the "Dark Ages." So sweeping a description is, however, unfair and quite incorrect.

Educating Convicts.

Pentonville Prison forms a link with the past when ocnvicts were educated for transportation to Botany Bay. On its inception in 1842 Pentonville was known as the Model Prison, and was designed and used as a place for preparing convicts for transportaion to the penal settlements of Australia. The Home Secretary of that day explained, "I propose that no prisoner shall be admitted into Pentonville without the knowledge that it is the portal to the penal colony, and without the certainty that he bids adieu to his connections with England, and that he must look forward to a life of labor in another hemisphere." A decade later, however, transportation was abolished, and Pentonville became a general prison.

Nearly a Book a Day.

A fourteen-year-old girl in Iowa has established a new sort of record. In one year she read 312 books, and is still going steadily forward when this entry in the news diary is made. Probably in another year, given such a flying start, the young lady may be able to encompass fully 400 volumes, and thus outdistance all literary competitors.

The Schneider Cup.

The last two Schneider Cup air races have been won by England, while Italy won the cup in 1926.

Origin of Alfalfa.

According to historical accounts, alfalfa was first raised in Persia.

Rustle of Silk

BLANCHE BONAPARTE

(Mrs. Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte)

Marco Polo gives us a dazzling picture of the use of silk at the court of the Grand Khan of Mongolia. On his birthday "the Grand Khan dressed in the best of his robes, silk and wrought all over with beaten gold. Full twelve thousand barons and knights on that day came forth dressed in robes also of silk and gold. Thirteen times a year the Great Khan presents to these twelve thousand courtiers a different colored suit of raiment, the one bestowed on his birthday costing about ten thousand gold besants."

A sheen of silk also glosses the turbulent tale of Alexander, conqueror of half his world. When disdainful Statira, daughter of Darius the Persian, scorned his love though she was his captive, he passionately hoped to make himself more desirable in her eyes by putting off the battle-stained clothing of a warrior and assuming silken raiment. He surrendered himself to Bagoas the eunuch, who bathed, oiled and scented his magnificent limbs and then clothed him in lustrous silk. Silk on Alerander! Luxurious trappings on a war-torn conqueror- Ttatira laughed when he appeared before her, and the smooth garments became as gunny-sack against his flesh.

Aristotle the philosopher submitted to a gross indignity for love of a girl in a silken skirt. In Alexander's boyhood Aristotle came from Athens to be his preceptor, and once he put an end to certain goings-on between the boy Alexander and a maid-in-waiting named Philis. This was Philis's revenge. One morning she put on the filmiest dress she had and went to a place where Aristotle could see her as she stooped to pluck flowers. The philosopher fell completely a prey to the bare-legged girl in a wisp of silk and frantically agreed to do anything she asked in return for her favor. He even submitted to being saddled and ridden around the garden with silken strands for reins, while her airy draperies flowed over him. When the poor man was panting for breath she hopped off his back, gave him a slap, and told him to go to the devil. It was after this that he wrote of the cunning of women, "There is no remedy except that of keeping away from them."

When first introduced into Rome from the Orient, silk was worth its weight in gold. Goethe relates in his disquisition on Roman luxury that, being precious, it was woven as fine as possible, and garments made of it were transparent. Only lights-o'-love wore the frail tissue.

Silk was first brought to France and adjoining countries by the Crusaders. The wealthy eagerly adopted the sumptuous new material. When Philip the Fair brought his bride home, she saw much silk being worn and cried pettishly, "I thought I was the queen, but I see there are hundreds." So the king made a law specifying what silk garments could be worn by different social grades.

Queen Elizabeth was the first woman in history to wear a pair of knitted silk stockings. Previous to that time cloth stockings had been worn, which may account for the fact that women in those days "did not have legs." Even the queen's silk stockings were crude products; but she was so pleased with the delightful feel that she declared she would never again be happy in cotton stockings.

Nobles in the reign of Francis I found silk so much to their liking that they wore it as often as their women. Under those economical sovereigns, Henry II and Francis II, edicts curtailed the use of silk. Marguerite of Valois, Queen of Navarre, had many lovers. One after another died violently. Tallement de Teaux describes Marguarite's gruesome method of keeping alive their memory in "an immense hoop petticoat with little silken pockets all around it. In each of these was the heart of one of her dead lovers, for she had taken the trouble in every case to have the heart embalmed." Never was silken gown put to eerier use.

Napoleon's mind frequently turned from matters of state to the dressing of Josephine. A lady-in-waiting tells of entering Madame Bonaparte's dressing-room one day and finding him seated on the floor watching his wife try on a new dress. Josephine set the fashion for Europe, and the export of French silks during her reign as empress was ten times as great as under Louis RIV.

What was the first origin of silk? It was the little slant-eyed wife of a Chinese emperor who first thought of stealing from Bombyx Mori the luxurious coffin wherein Nature saw fit to perform her shining miracle. That was many centuries before Christ, and her name was Lady Si-ling. She was deified and worshipped as the Goddess of Silk. As long as the monarchy lasted in China, offerings were made to her each April by the reigning sovereign of China at a temple in the palace grounds at Peking.

The Lady of Si-ling encouraged the cult of the mulberry tree and the rearing of worms. She also discovered how to reel silk, a slow and tedious process, and how to weave the thread into cloth. The Chinese credit this same lady with making this same loom.

Naturally, as travelers began to find their way into the cradle of civilization, all that saw silk garments coveted them, and it was not long before China was selling silks to Persia. The Persians introduced silk to the rest of the world. But the Chinese were too crafty to reveal the process by which silk was obtained, and all sorts of stories grew up as to its origin.

Some believed beetles and spiders to be the source; others, among them Aristotle, that it was a special kind of earth combed out fine. Still others thought that in China there grew strange sheep with a silken wool. Some poetically imagined that it was the woven hair of languishing maidens.

In the middle of the sixth century the Emperor Justinian sent two monks from Constantinople to China, instructing them to learn the true origin of silk and the process of its manufacture. After a long, wearisome journey they returned, carrying within their hollow bamboo canes the germs of an industry that was to enrich all Europea—the eggs of Oriental silkworms.

The industry even spread to America. James I, King of England, made valiant efforts to establish silk production in the American colonies, and even offered bounties to all who planted a certain number of mulberry trees. In Georgia a settler had to plant 100 mulberry trees to every ten acres of ground in oder to validate his land grant.

But the work of caring for the silkworm is too tedious a process for the restless Anglo-Saxon, and has never been really successful among any but Oriental peoples and, to a degree, in France, Spain and Italy.

Sixty years ago man began playing with the idea of producing silk artificially. French inventors noticed that the silkworm feeds on cellulose in mulberry and oak leaves. Now, man has perfected a process whereby he turns the cellulose from wood pulp, largely from spruce and cotton plants, into a brilliant, lustrous thread resembling silk, yet different. This new substance is responsible for most of the silk stockings on the market to-day, and much of the silk underwear; and it is also responsible for the fact that to-day's working girl clothes her slender, unabashed legs in stockings that would have been the envy of Good Queen Bess.—"The Mentor."

The Cave-Man

Now Peter Park possessed a wife
Who'd plagued him all their wedded life;
'Twas war eternal, to the knife,
Between his dame and Peter.
Whatever Peter did or said
It brought down vengeance on his head;
He lived in constant fear and dread,
Did poor, unhappy Peter.

At last, he sought a man he knew,
Who quickly taught him ju-jutsu,
A soft persuasion known to few,
And home in hope hied Peter.
On all his chums he tried his skill,
But none could stand against his will;
So Peter's fame the town did fill,
And strength the soul of Peter.

One night his wife let loose her tongue
With words that should have bit and stung,
But Peter merely laughed and sung
And with contempt did treat her.
When cups and plates commenced to hum,
He "locked" her quietly by the thumb,
And soon in startled fear grew dumb
The clacking wife of Peter.

Thus Peter now became her lord,
Looked up to, worshipped and adored,
And both found peace in sweet accord
Through ju-jutsu and Peter.
The moral's pretty plain to see;
A man both strong and kind should be,
And exercise diplomacy—
If not as used by Peter.

Relief in Sight

Peterboro Examiner: The campaign against unnecessary noises launched by the Local Council of Women should be accelerated by the fact that a Toronto young man who sat in his car in front of the home of the girl friend and used his automoile horn as a signal for her to come outside for a ride has been fined $5 and costs. A long-suffering public will applaud the verdict as just. The trouble is that the fellow who uses his motor horn in place of a door-bell arouses a whole neighborhood. It is difficult to tell for whom the signal is intended, and half a dozen people make needless trips to the front door and go back in a far from amiable mood.

Mussolini On Drink

Mr. Alfred Pearce Dennis had an interesting article on Signor Mussolini in the "World" recently. He interviewed the Italian statesman, who told him amongst other things how he dealt with excess in drinking—

"I am personally dry," Mussolini said, "in a country overwhelmingly wet. Our people drink too much for their own good," he commented, quoting a string of figures as to production, consumption, imports. "Our national consumption of wine approximates a hundred litres (twenty-six gallons per capita, but as the women and hildren drink but little this means a per capita consumption of more than two hundred litres for the men. The enormous acreage in vineyards brings little or no gold into the country, since the bulk of our wine, unlike that of France, is not produced for export.

"Italian wines are heady, running about 12 per cent. alcohol. Our people who drink in their homes or in cafes belong to the type of moderate drinkers. Heavy drinking in Italy is associated with the common public house, wheer no food is served with drink. Frequenters of these low bars, such as chauffeurs, muleteers, pick-and-shovel men, drink to excess.

"I am aiming to reduce the consumption of wine by that element of the population which uses it to excess. I see no logic in penalizing other classes of our population who use wine in moderation. We are cursed in Italy by the low-class bars, and I intend to do away with them—but gradually. When a complaint is made about a particular place I close it, and from my edict there is no appeal. I have closed twenty-seven thousand in five years; give me time, and I will close them all.

"I deal with the drink question by making haste slowly rather than by attempting to change inveterate national habits overnight. In this matter of closing public houses I am fortunately not compeled to solicit the approval of either the keeper or his clients."

Cremation and Burial

Johannesburg Times: (There is only one white crematorium in South Africa). We believe that prosterity will look back on earth-burial with detestation and horror. Apart from the sentiment attaching to a tradition which, having served its purpose through unenlightened ages, is now becoming obsolete, no comparison is possible between the two methods. Cremation has everything to recommend it; earth-burial, little or nothing. In densely-populated localities earth-burial uses up large tracts of valuable ground which, no matter by what legal documents they are alleged to be secured from future desecration, will almost inevitaly, sooner or later, be required for other purposes. . . Earth-burial, moreover, cannot by any stretch of the imagination be termed hygienic.

HOW TO RELIEVE CHILDREN'S COLDS

Avoid Serious Results by Using Baby's Own Tablets.

When a child shows the first symptoms of a cold, such as sneezing, redness of the eyes, clogged or running nose, prompt measures for relief may avert serious results. Mothers should always have on hand some simple safe and effective remedy for immediate use.

Baby's Own Tablets act quickly, contain no opiates or narcotics, are tasteless and harmless. Concerning them Mrs. Jos. Cadieux, Holyoke, Mass., says:—"I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my children and find them a very satisfactory medicine. When my little boy had a cold I gave him the Tablets at night and he was well the next day. I gave them to the children for constipation and they are always benefited. I think Baby's Own Tablets are much easier to give a child than liquid medicine. I strongly recommend all mothers who have young children to keep a box of the Tablets in the house."

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE HORSE

(A horse-cab driver summoned for assault declared that a motor driver had jeered at the cab driver's horse).

The man who jeers the patient steed
Has fallen very low indeed.
The tyres of such a wretch accurst
Should sinultaneously burst;
His timing should be quite upset or
Water invade his carburetor,
His oil and petrol should run out
With ne'er a garage round about:
He should be trapped and smartly fined
For faults of every sort and kind,
And on his journeying the road
With nuts and gadgets should be stowed.
His radiator, too, should freeze
In winter, and his pistons seize,
And cranking-up be no avail
What time his batteries shall fail.
Yea, every evil that can be
Should come to such an one as he.
Till 'mid the mirth we can't restrain
A steed shall tow him home again,
Tortured at last with deep remorse
For having mocked the noble horse.

MEMORY

And when the stream
Which overflowed the soul was passed away,
A consciousness remained that it had left,
Deposited upon the silent shore
Of memory, images and precious thoughts
That shall not die, and cannot be destroyed.—Wordsworth.

Dreaded anaemia can be banished!

IN middle life, when vitality is not as great as it once was, and the blood stream is naturally thinned and devitalized, anaemia easily lays hold on the system. At first, just a tired feeling, it quickly results in bodily weakness that ordinary tonics cannot avail.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills then become a wonderful aid. They supply the necessary oxygen to the blood, increase the blood count and renew waning vigor.

"I was seized with anaemia," writes Mrs. Charles Lambert of Port Hope, Ont., "and was in a very bad state. As a girl I had taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for a run-down condition and decided to take them once more... Again the result was marvellous. In a little while I was fully well again."

You cannot begin too early to check anaemia. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold at your druggist's or by mail, postpaid, 50 cents, from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Canada-Italian Trade Favorable

Commissioner Here During Tour Says Exports Continue

Trade with Italy is good and more than 60 Canadian firms have representatives in that country, A. B. Muddiman, Dominion Government trade commissioner with headquarters in Milan, stated recently. At the same time, he pointed out, exports this year will be less than last, when according to official Italian statistics $51,000,000 worth of goods were sold, owing to the grain drop. Mr. Middiman has visited Montreal in the course of a tour of Canada. While his office is in Milan he is also interested in promoting trade with Spain, Portugal and Yugo Slavia.

Among Canada's exports to Italy he enumerated wheat, oats, Indian corn, nickle, lead and other metals, lumber agricultural machinery, asbestos, canned salmon, cod fish, eels, shoes, radio appliances, furs, building materials.

The new commercial treaty between Portugal and Spain which came into effect last year, he said is showing good results as it has placed Canadian cod fish on the same tariff basis as other countries.

In regard to Spain, Mr. Muddiman stated that there was a large increase in Canadian exports last year but this year the figure will be reduced greatly owing to the grain crop. He has not had an opportunity of visiting Yugo Slavia for some time but hopes to go next year. People there are now interested, he said, in establishing silver fox farms.

Mr. Muddiman refused to be quoted on the general situation in the countries he represents, saying that he is concerned solely with trade, but he did make the observation that under the present regime Italy is going ahead by leaps and bounds.

A Different Woman

"I have great pleasure in informing you that Kruschen Salts have worked wonders for me. I have been a great sufferer of liver and kidney trouble, and after trying one bottle I am a different woman. I had to give up my work, but thanks to Kruschen Salts I am back at work again, and I give my son a little every morning, and I don't hear of the little complaints now which a child generally gets. He is happier and brighter. I have enclosed a snap-shot of son and self. I am 43 years, boy 6 years. I shall always highly recommend Kruschen, and I would not be without them myself in a hurry." —(Mrs.) M. P.

Original letter on file for inspection.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at drug and department stores in Canada at 75c. a bottle. A bottle contains enough to last for 4 or 5 months—good health for half-a-cent a day.

League of Nations

With the visit of Rt. Hon. Ramsay MacDonald to the United States and Canada and the momentuous decisions which will result from that visit public attention has been concentrated on the subject of world peace.

In considering this subject much credit is given to the League of Nations in Geneva and the great work it is doing. This is only right and the more the ideals of the League are brought before the public the more likely is it that still further practical results will follow its effects. But in Canada and elsewhere it is only fair that some credit should come to the home societies which are actively propagating League ideals in their several countries.

In Canada there has existed for some nine years an organization well and favorably known as the League of Nations Society of Canada. Handicapped by lack of funds, by comparative public indifference and an inadequate staff it has continuously attempted to be an influence for good in all parts of the country and to zealously battle for the ideals for which it was founded.

Through the co-operation of the press of Canada whose leading executives recognize the importance of its campaign some publicity has been given to the yearly effort of this organization to increase its membership but we feel that more continuous co-operation both by press and public would be most opportune at the present time.

Geneva is far away and many of the issues with which it deals are too complicated for the average man to readily understand. No organization is more in need of domestic interpretation and that work is being carried but with praiseworthy diligence.

It is not too much to say that such an organization would be a fit subject for a perpetual endowment which would relieve it of the necessity of canvassing for the comparatively small sum which it requires to carry on its immensely valuable work.—The Fredericton Daily Mail, October 25th, 1929.

St. Lawrence Waterway

Manitoba Free Press (Lib.): The opening of the Hudson Bay line may alter Montreal's attitude towards the St. Lawrence waterway). If Montreal interests were to give some thought to the situation that will inevitably arise within the next few years, it might occur to them that, if they want Western grain through their own port, they had better help to bring about the reduction of the present carrying charge from Port Arthur to Montreal through the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway. By the time it is built, given the greatest expedition, Montreal will be in urgent need of the lower rates which the waterway will make possible. Montreal needs this waterway much more than the West does.

Scots Wha Hae

Vancouver Province (Ind. Cons.): (Englishmen are said to be taking to the kilt, and eightsome reels are being danced in London ballrooms, in honor of the Duchess of York). By encouraging the music and dances of the Highlands, the Duchess of York may seriously undermine the popularity of modern music and daning. Highland regiments have in times past conquered in darkest Africa and possibly Highland music may now supplant the barbaric jazz and tribal dances copied by modern society folk from the villages of jungleland.

Emancipation

The true champions of the masses are our engineers and inventors. The inventor of the automobile has benefited horses more, has saved them from more toil and suffering, than all the world's societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals. We have no galley slaves because they have been emancipated by the inventor of the marine engine. The use of fuel oil has redeemed an army of stokers from the inferno of the stokehole. The ultimate end of technical progress is to provide every man with the comforts and conveniences that are to-day reserved for millionaries. The inventors and engineers are fighting want and poverty; they are fighting slavery; their object is to universalize wealth, power, leisure, beauty, happiness.—Glenn Frank quoted in Scientific American.

"PINKHAM'S COMPOUND IS WONDERFUL"

Read This Letter from a Grateful Woman

Vanessa, Ont.—"I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is wonderful. I have had six children of which four are living and my youngest is a bonnie baby boy now eight months old who weighs 23 pounds. I have taken your medicine before each of them was born and have certainly received great benefit from it. I urge my friends to take it as I am sure they will receive the same help I did."—Mrs. Milton McMullen, Vanessa, Ontario.

TORONTO girl is Prize Winner...

"CONSTANCE was cross and fretful a lot," says Mrs. J. Flatt, 99 Highfield Road, Toronto, Ontario. She was upset and bilious; didn't want to eat and couldn't digest her food right.

"California Fig Syrup has changed all that, and made her a different girl. It regulated her bowels quickly, improved her appetite and digestion. She has had no trouble since; but has continued to gain until today friends say she's a regular prize winner for health."

Mothers by thousands are praising California Fig Syrup. Physicians endorse it. A pure vegetable product; it is safe for any child. The prompt relief it brings bilious, headachy, constipated children lasts; because it helps tone and strengthen bowels and stomach. Appetite increases; digestion improves with its use! A youngster's entire system benefits. Next time bad breath, coated tongue or feverishness warn of constipation, try it with your child and see how it helps!

When buying, look for the name California. That marks the genuine.

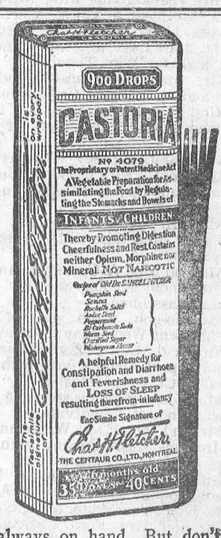
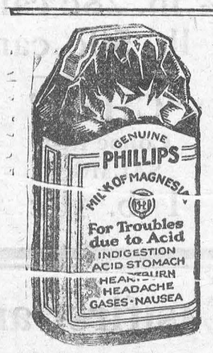
CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP
THE RICH, FRUITY LAXATIVE AND TONIC FOR CHILDREN

When BABIES are upset



Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.



Too Much ACID

Many people, two hours after eating, suffer indigestion as they call it. It is usually excess acid. Correct it with an alkali. The best way, the quick, harmless and efficient way, is Phillips Milk of Magnesia. It has remained for 50 years the standard with physicians. One spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids, and at once. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

You will never use crude methods when you know this better method. And you will never suffer from excess acid when you prove out this easy relief. Please do that—for your own sake—now.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions—any drugstore.

WHAT IS TO BE THE ATTITUDE OF PROHIBITIONISTS NOW?

One of the hardest things in life is to be fair, and get credit for it. To be prejudicial seems almost natural. Yet when facts stare you in the face, when men and women as clever and as sane, as charitable and good as you are, take sides against you, it is time, and only right, that you give their side of the question fair consideration.

Well, what is this leading up to? No, the Winchester Press is not prepared to compromise on the question of the prohibition of the liquor traffic, but we am prepared to be fair to those who do not think as we do.

Aside from the teaching of scripture, and aside from your religious principles, no argument can make good out of evil. Nothing but misery, and all the evil in the calander, has ever, and ever will follow the liquor traffic. It has ever been and always will be associated with the worst crimes. So, so far as the liquor traffic is concerned the Winchester Press sees only one remedy, and that is prohibition.

It is evident, however, that in Canada the people do not want Prohibition. The late election in Ontario clearly proved that the people are satisfied to permit a further trial of what is known as Government Control of the Liquor Traffic.

The only sane and wise thing to do then is to accept the verdict, and to do all in our power to make that control more effective, and in the meanwhile keep on "pegging away" for the goal of prohibition.

That the present Government realizes that, despite its great victory at the polls, there is an undercurrent of discontent with the present Liquor Control Act is evident by the early statement published by the Attorney General, Hon. Mr. Price, and the chairman of the Liquor Control Board, Sir Henry Drayton, that there is to be a 'tightening up' and greater restrictions, in future, in connection with the sale of liquor on the permit system. That is good news, and an evidence that the Attorney General does not misinterpret the vote of Oct. 30.

The proposed restrictions are in the right direction, and if carried out may somewhat lessen the danger that threatens our public highway in the way of drunken drivers.

Briefly summarized, the proposed regulations are as follows:

The appointment of five or six supervisors to check stores throughout the province and report direct to the Liquor Control Board.

A school for impressing control principles on all present vendors, permit censors and all new employees.

Issuance of temperance educational literature with every permit.

Issurance of a special warning on drinking and driving with every purchase.

Extra inspection in large city stores during rush hours.

Instant dismissal of permit issuers giving one man two or more permits.

A check-up on wineries and a cancellation of their permits on proof of sale to minors.

The Attorney-General also forecast an amendment to the Highway Traffic Act, making a stiffer penalty for drunken drivers and announced that he had written to all magistrates, bringing forcibly to their attention the severity of the penalties that can be inflicted now for this offence.

What then should be the duty of the Prohibition Forces toward the two leading political parties? That question is not hard to answer when there are two candidates, one a prohibionists and the other in favor of the sale of liquor. The duty of the prohibitionists is to support the Prohibition Candidate.

We are now told that the liquor question should not be in politices. It never should have been. It was put there by Premier Ferguson. It won him the election in 1926 and again in October last. Now he says it should not be in politices. We agree with him, but we have little faith as his sincerity.

Candidly, we have just as little faith in the sincerity of the Liberal Leader, Mr. Sinclair, on this question. Had he come out boldly and sincerely on this question in the late election, he would have had a bigger following in the Legislature to-day. His hedging and wobbling not only killed his own chances, but hurt the chances of the Prohibitionists. We need not now review this subject. We know what it did in Dundas, and what it did in Dundas it did in dozens of other constituencies in the Province.

The Prohibition Candidate, Mr. Beach, would have been elected in Dundas had the Liberal Candidate withdrawn. If Mr. Sinclair and his supporters been sincere they would have insisted on his withdrawl. To those Liberals who remained faithful to the cause of prohibition all credit is due. They put principle before party, and it takes courage to do that. They should have no regrets, and certainly they have nothing to be ashamed of.

With those who deserted the Prohibition cause, and went back to the party of their choice, whether Conservative or Liberal, we have no quarrel. They no doubt acted as they thought best, and while we find it difficult to get their view point on this great moral question, we want to be fair, and we are satisfied to leave it between them and conscience.

Looking to the future, the Press has not changed its attitude. Premier Ferguson himself admits the liquor traffic is an evil traffic. He wants the youth taught along the lines of temperance. His way of temperance reform may not be our way, but it is at least a stepping stone and may yet lead to the goal of Prohibition. But that does not mean that the Prohibition Party should relax in their efforts. They should keep up their organization. They should see that their cause is upheld by the Candidate they support, without equivication or mental reservation, and stand behind him, whether he be Conservative, Liberal or Progressive.

The Crow a Criminal

Toronto Star (Ind.): When Jack Miner gets talking about the crow he does not mince his words, and the statement issued by the Department of Agriculture at Washington that the crow is not as black as he is painted aroused him to wrath. In a signed article in Field and Stream Mr. Miner paints the crow blacker than we have ever seen him. The crow, he declares, feeds her young on the eggs of song, insectivorous and game birds, and when she cannot get enough of these eggs she will steal the baby young. There are many who do not share the inveterate enmity of Jack Miner to the crow, and there are a few who would argue with him on the subject. But he has accused, pursued and kept tab on the crow for many years and finds evidence against this bird always piling higher—a bad bird that ought to be destroyed in the interests of all the desirable species of native birds. And some, led by his crusade to keep watch on the crow, report that the bird is probably quite as black as he is painted.

Counting the People

London Free Press (Cons.): Arrangements are already being made at Ottawa for taking the 1931 censes of the Dominion. It is interesting to know that the credit for taking the first census of modern times belongs to Canada. They year was 1665, the census that of the colony of New France. The census of 1665 was a systematic enumeration of the people, showing age, sex, occupation and conjugal and family conditions. A supplementary inquiry in 1667 included the areas under cultivation and the number of sheep and cattle. Apart from the famous Domesday Book, the first census in France and England dates from the beginning of the nineteenth century. The first census in the United States was taken in 1790.

Peril in Wet Windshield

A wet windshield is dangerous, especially at night when light from approaching cars is magnified by raindrops blinding the driver. If your car is not equipped with an automatic windshield wiper, apply a solution to the glass to clear the vision. One that has proved satisfactory contains a mixture of two ounces of glycerin and one ounce of water and one dram of salt. Apply with a soft cloth, rubbing up and down.

Care of the Teeth

When considering the care of the teeth, remember the paint association's slogan—"Save the surface and you save all."

Nature provides us with a very valuable set of instruments for the purpose of grinding our food into small morsels, ready to pass into the stomach. If our teeth are not as strong and healthy as they should be, the food will not be prepared and our stomach will always be worked too hard and eventually will give us endless trouble. On the other hand if our teeth are dirty, the food will rub off some of the dirt and will carry it into our systems. In other words, neglecting to clean the teeth thoroughly is just one form of taking poison.

A tooth is divided into two parts, called the crown and the root. The crown is the wide part which we can see, and has a hard covering called enamel. The root is the narrower, pointed part which is in the gums and has a cover which is called cementum.

Beneath the enamel and cementum in the tooth is a layer, not unlike bone, which is called dentine. The centre of the tooth is called the pulp chamber and contains blood vessels and nerves.

It is a clean tooth that never aches. The first thing that happens to a tooth which is heading for trouble is that dirt collects on the outside of the tooth. Unless that dirt is removed it will start decay and work into the centre of the tooth. The decay cuts through the enamel and into the dentine. Because the dentine is softer, the decay always spreads in the dentine so that there is more decay inside the tooth than there is on the outside.

A dentist, if he knows about it in time, can prevent further trouble. He can easily find the little holes with his explorer, cut away the decayed part and fill the hole. It is a very simple thing to do, when the decay is just starting, but sometimes it becomes a very difficult and expensive thing to do because people delay too long in going to see the dentist.

If the tooth is not filled right away, the enamel will gradually break down and the hole will become large enough to collect food, which rots and causes toothache. Here are some of the troubles that can come as well as the toothache: rehumatism, neuritis, neuralgia, headache, heart trouble, abscess, skin troubles, colds and boils and nervous troubles. And it will pay—pay more than enough to compensate you for your trouble—if good care is taken of your teeth in between visits to the dentist.

The most important thing you can do is to brush your teeth regularly after each meal and before going to bed. The business of brushing the teeth thoroughly takes two minutes. The tooth brush should be small, for a small tooth brush can be moved around more easily and more rapidly than a large one. Brushing should be light and rapid and it should be borne in mind that there are five sides to each tooth to be brushed. There is the outside—nearest the cheek, the inside—nearest the tongue, the top—that surface that cuts the food and the two sides between the teeth.

The tooth brush should move in circles, on the outside of the gums and teeth. Do not forget the gums, because they must be brushed too. The circulation of the blood in the gums is a matter of supreme importance to the health of the teeth. Brush them softly, but thoroughly. If you should have any trouble with bleeding gums, it is advisable to go the dentist at once.

Count the number of strokes which you take when brushing the teeth. Move the brush around in a circle on the outside of the teeth and gums sixteen times for each side and front, making two strokes of the brush for each count you make. Brush the inside of the teeth—that is, the surface toward the tongue—by moving the brush straight in and out. This is also the way to brush the tops, that is, the part that grinds the food.

One of the most healthful habits after you have brushed your teeth in the morning is to rinse them with lime water. The lime water should be kept in the mouth for about a minute and then forced out between the teeth.

"When can get up stairs easily in the kind of dresses they wear now."

"Get up stares? I'll say they can!!"

Air and Ventilation

It has long been known that air can be polluted in such a manner as to be injurious. For many years, is was thought that this pollution was due to an excess of carbonic acid gas, but it is now understood that, in an ordinary occupied room, the amount of this gas is not harmful, nor is there a sufficient reduction of oxygen brought about to acount for the effects of bad air.

In the early years of this century, it was proven by experiments that the symptoms caused by living in so-called bad or vitiated air are due to the temperature of the air, its moisture and its stillness. In other words, conditions of the air which do not favor the loss of heat from the body are the conditions which cause the ill effects of bad air. The body is constantly generating heat and if the person is to be comfortable and fit, the surplus heat must be got rid of. The skin is the means for getting rid of exessive body heat. When the body is surrounded by hot, humid, still air, it is difficult or impossible for the skin to eliminate as it should, and, as a result, there is discomfort, and, later, if the condition persists, there will be headache, shortness of breath and an increased pulse rate and temperature.

W know, form common experience, how much more comfortable we are on the warm days when there is a breeze as compared with the way we feel when the day is hot and still.

To secure comfort and fitness, we should live in an atmosphere of cool air whih is in gentle motion, and the object of ventilation is to maintain such an atmosphere. This can usually be accomplished in a satisfactory way by having a thermometer in the room and by opening the window. A considerable amount of the ill-health that occurs in winter is due to the lowered efficiency of the body which follows upon living and working in overheated places. The body is toned up by cool air and upset by overheated still air.

Dominion Status

Melbourne Argus: General Hertzog's Ministry desires that the new High Commissioner for South Africa in London shall bear the more sonorous title of Ministry Plenipotentiary. This weakness for pomposity it typical of Governments which take the narrow and selfish view of their responsibilities. Invariably any concessions made in their favor by larger minded components of the Empire is used by them to accentuate their self-importance. If the Union Government spends £750,000 annually upon establishing embassies all over the world, does it expect that this expenditure will make South Africa a more valued Dominion of the Empire, or even enhance her status in the eyes of the peoples outside? Her money would be better employed in the fulfilment of obligations nearer home. The fact that her contribution per head of population to Imperial defence compares so unfavorably with that of Great Britain, even with that of Australia, ought of itself to discourage this ridiculous exhibition of misplaced sumptuousness.

What can money do to console a man with a headache?—George MacDonald.

Silver Fox Farming

Growth of New British Industry

The problem of rearing silver foxes successfully in captivity was not solved until 1383, when the Prince Edward strain was established; but it was not until 1920 that the possibilities of fox farming in Great Britain were realized. Since then, some 30 farms, holding a total stock of over 500 pairs of foxes have started on what has proved in most cases a very profitable form of stock rearing. Contrary to expectation, most climates, such as that of Dartmoor and the Highlands, have proved satisfactory, and pelts better than the best American pelts are now produced there.

From a humane standpoint, silver fox farming has much to recommend it as opposed to all forms of trapping. Instead of meeting a lingering and painful death in the iron jaws of a trap, the fox can be mercifully chloroformed. Also, the breeder can pelt the fox when its pelt is at its best. As regards health, silver foxes are hardy and remain free from disease provided that strict attention is paid to feeding and scrupulous cleanliness is adhered to.

The capital outlay is considerable, a pair of first-class cubs costing anything from £100 to £200. But when it is remembered that an average of four cubs per pair in a year, selling from £50 to £200 per pelt, may be looked for, the return on capital is seen to be considerable.

To protect the interests of British silver fox breeders the Silver Fox Breeders' Association was formed. This association holds an annual show, the next being from November 13 to 15, at Oxford, and also registers and inspects all stock.

At present the supply of good pelts cannot keep up with the demand. Even if the present number of silver fox farms is doubled or quadrupled within the next few years it is anticipated that the best quality pelts will always command a good price.—London Times.

Needless Suffering

The next time a headache makes you stay at home—
Or some other ache or pain prevents your keeping an engagement—
Remember Aspirin! For there is scarcely any sort of pain it cannot relieve, and relieve promptly.
These tablets give real relief, or millions would not continue to take them. They are quite harmless, or the medical profession would not constantly prescribe them.
Don't be a martyr to unnecessary pain. To colds that might so easily be checked; neuritis, neuralgia; to those pains peculiar to women; or any suffering for which Aspirin is such an effective antidote.

You need not hesitate to take Aspirin. It is safe. It is always the same. It never depresses the heart, so use it as often as needed; but the cause of any pain can be treated only by a doctor.

BY E.W. HOWE
"The Sage of Potato Hill"

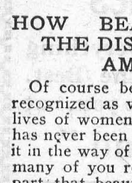
GOOD BEHAVIOR. STRANGE HABITS. SHAKESPEARE.

Old Silerius, the Roman who wrote his memoirs so candidly, said: "In early youth I was ordered to behave, and this command was enforced in manhood, I was resentful until I discovered there was reason in command, and that I could, in considerable measure, obey to my profit. As common solider and officer I early discovered that the best behaved armies were most efficient; most frequently victorious. This was the rule, likewise, in households, neighborhoods, commonwealths, senates, individuals. So thereafter I did not resent the command, as many do; my observation has been that the ill-behaved are usually so because of rebellion; they do not understand that good behavior is for their interest as well as for the interest of the commonwealth. . . . I as sincerely believe in good behavior as I believe in any other human policy that has turned out to be better than a bad one. And as magistrate and soldier, as citizen, I have ever taught the ill-behaved that proper punishment is not loss of liberty, that proper behavior is as profitable, easy and natural as bowing to a gentleman who politely bows to you. I believe in punishment because it is the best means we have found of maintaining and improving civilization."

The delays, quibbles, expense, and corruption in our courts is disgraceful, compared with the courts of other countries; yet the people have taken no steps to reform the courts and the lawyers. . . . On the other hand, our railroads are better in every way than the railroads abroad. Our service is better, and charges lower, our privately owned railroads are better than the government managed railways elsewhere. Yet our attempts to reform the railroads amount to persecution; we are even willing to damage ourselves that we may cripple the railroads. . . . Of course we are the greatest and noblest people ever known, but I am coming to believe that even we have a lot of strange habits that need doctoring.

If Shakespeare's writings could be simplified, probably it would be found he originated more wit, more original and agreeable forms of expression, than any other hundred men of ancient or modern times. This man deserves his literary reputation; many others do not. But his writing is cast in such an ancient and difficult form that comparatively few are able to read him. With all his greatness, Shakespeare has been of little use to me; reading him gives me a headache—We all say Shakespeare's collected works is a Great Book. It is useful to only a few. A really great book should appeal to practically everybody. No such book has been written.

Heart to Heart Talk



By Dr. John Joseph Daines

AN INVENTORY

What have I done, and, what am I doing to make people love and respect me? Am I doing anything, consciously or unconsciously to make them dislike or hate me? I am in daily contact with folks—droves of them; they are going to think of me one way or the other. Even if they regard me with indifference, that is of no benefit to me. I'd rather their opinions of me were good, and, it is wholly with me whether they are.

Nobody loves a human hog—the sort that lives solely for himself. I've seen them, so have you.

The human hog roots strictly for himself; he knows no Sunday. Seven full days per week he moils—ever looking down at his sordid pile; he never looks toward the blue heavens. He serves one god—the golden calf—and never for a moment takes his eyes off it; for him, there is no security or safety in any other sort of God.

Let misfortune touch him on the pocket-book, and he crumples like a leaf. When his god shatters, as all earthly things must shatter, he is wrecked morally, physically, and, spiritually—if a hog has a spirit. He hasn't the true and splendid manhood to rise above the ruin of his broken idol.

Am I a human hog? Are you? The answer is—No! Need I ask why? For one thing, good people don't cast pearls before swine, lest the beasts turn upon them and rend them. Just why any sane being can adopt the tactics of the hog and live only for his own greedy self, has always been a mystery to me.

The human hog never sees the error of his way. And, he wonders why people don't feel sorry for him when his boat capsizes. He is willing to accept the best people have, but he has nothing to give in exchange. His superb selfishness blinds him as it leads him slowly to destruction.

If he could find fault with himself, he would not be a human hog.

Milady's Beauty Secrets

By Helena Rubinstein

Beauty, like wit, to judges should be shown;
Both most are wanted when they best are known.
Lord Lytton.

HOW BEAUTY AIDED THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA

Of course beauty has been long recognized as very important in the lives of women. But, I feel that it has never been given sufficient credit in the way of world history. How many of you realize, I wonder, the part that beauty culture played in Columbus' voyage of discovery?

Straight through the middle of the fifteenth century, beauty was in its heydey. The demand for perfumes, cosmetics and beauty aids was tremendous. The home of these drugs was India, considered very far off at the time. Pirates were then dotting high seas, particularly on the route to India, and for many nations it was a precarious matter to pursue the trades. Of course Columbus had no idea of the vast worlds that he was to uncover, but he did want to find a shorter and safer route to India so that the drugs and spices so necessary to human life at that time could be more easily acquired.

It is already a part of history that Columbus received very little sympathy from the men he approached. It should be enlightening that Isabelle, Queen of Spain, was the first to appreciate the desire of this truly great man. Of course, Isabelle may have been inspired by a desire to bring honor upon the country of which she was queen; but I think we are justified in suspecting that this question of personal beautification made her more willing than ever to aid the great adventurer.

One has only to consider a volume which depicts the life of those days to bear out my statement that beauty was in its heydey. Hours and hours were spent gazing into the mirror, the while milady applied the best beauty aids known at the times. Perfume, because of the great demand for it, became one of the greatest industries of Italy and France. Hair dyes, lip tints, special soaps for the hair and body were part of the dressing table accessories of every woman, and some very elegant royal ladies even indulged in milk baths.

Of course, most of my readers already know of the famous Ponce de Leon who went in search of the magic fountain which would give eternal life. Although our modern age is a very skeptical one, I sometimes wonder whether even today one could not start a pilgrimage to such a fountain if rumor had it that one existed.

Synopsis

What Happened Before

At a party in Palm Beach given by Mr. Cooper Clary, Leeson, an attorney, meets Lucy Harkness, known as Devil-May-Care because of her adventurous, eventful life. In a game in which partners for the evening are chosen, Lucy is won by Tim Stevens, who has a great reputation as a successful heart-breaker. Leeson is a bit jealous. Tim Stevens tells Lucy they are going aboard his boat, the Minerva, and she accedes in order not to be "a quitter." Asked if she is sorry that he won her company, Lucy says she is not and that evidently Fate has arranged it. Tim thereupon tells her to stop looking regretfully after Leeson.

Aboard Stevens' boat, the Minerva, Stevens tells Lucy of his love. When she replies with contempt for him, he grows violently angry and she becomes afraid of him. He says he will never let her go from the Minerva until she accepts him. To escape him, she leaps into the water from her cabin window, swimming a short distance under water.

Now Go On With the Story

The Minerva was making, she guessed, an easy seven knots; unless some one on deck had seen her or heard the slight splash of her dive she would not be observed, for though the Gulf Stream gleamed, it was the pale radiance of stars that was reflected; the moon, being new, cast no beam upon the sea. It would be several moments before Stevens would give the alarm, before the course of the Minerva could be altered, its searchlight made to play upon the waters. Only accident could aid them in finding her; that accident could hardly be avoided by a thirty-foot swim beneath the water. Time enough to exhaust herself thus when discovery was imminent.

* * * *

Her feet sagged until they hung straight down; the tired arms relaxed; that black hair, shiny in the first rays of the sun, dipped below the water. And then her toes touched hard sand. She kicked violently, and her head came above the surface. There, straight before her, green and lovely in the morning, was land. She had been tired, too hopeless to see it; swimming on her side, she'd not looked ahead for, oh, hours, it seemed. And here it was, white sand, fragrant jungle. . . . She mustered all her waning strength. It was only a few yards, it couldn't be more than that, to where the shelving beach would rise to meet the jungle, and let her walk.

A path! That meant people. If she could only reach a house, get inside . . . If she even had a blanket, to keep off the sun, the flies, the ants. There was a house. A shack, but it looked like the Cosden house to Lucy Harkness. A veritable palace of unpainted boards. She staggered toward it. Even a makeshift veranda, with a roof above it, chairs, a table, and there must be a bed inside. A bed!

She leaned for a moment against a cocoanut palm. A nut fell, crashing. Upon the veranda a land crab, startled by the sound, looked up, saw a great white figure that stretched toward the sky. He scuttled across the cracked boards, as the great white figure advanced, stumbled across the veranda, and into the hut.

How could the crab know that it was the most harmless human in the world, just now; merely a half-drowned, semiconscious girl, naked as no one had ever seen her since she was a baby, as nothing had ever seen her save the sun, the sea, the jungle, and the crab?

* * * *

Lucy Harkness stirred, and an instant ache rushed through her body. But it was the delicious ache that follows complete exhaustion and subsequent rest.

"Oo!" said Lucy Harkness.

"I could eat," she said slowly, judicially, "at least six eggs, four lamb chops, a dozen slices of hot buttered toast—"

"And six pepsin tablets," said a husky voice.

Instinctively she drew tight the baggy pajamas. The voice might have come from the room in which she stood, yet there was no one here. She stepped to the door, noticing for the first time that it stood ajar, and peeped through it.

Smiling gaily at her, the while he stirred a yellowish mess in a frying-pan that sizzled above an open fire, stood a tall, slim man. He wore khaki knickers and his white shirt had short sleeves and no collar. His hair was quite gray; green sun-glasses hid the color of his eyes; his nose was twisted slightly, as though once broken, and his wide thin lips curved in a grin that showed white teeth. For the rest, he was clean-shaven, and his hands seemed extraordinarily muscular.

"God gave me more than I deserve," she responded, "including a good digestion. Why didn't you build your fire on the windward side, and then I'd have smelled the coffee and gladdened your eyes with my presence so much the sooner."

"Always a purchase price," he sighed. "Some women are bought with jewels, some with rank, and you, it seems, with coffee."

Unaware that she did so, she nodded. This was a man who could instantly catch your mood, drop into file, and march along with you.

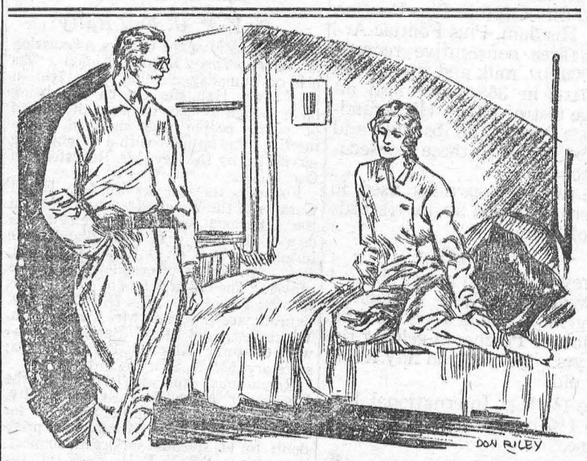
"I'm not sure that a suit of pajamas is sufficient clothing to justify my presence at your breakfast table," she said.

"You had less on when I found you," he said dryly.

"Prudery," she retorted, slightly angered at her blush, "should begin and end at home. Behold, friend landlord, somewhere in these silken swathes, Lucy Harkness, at your service, knight of the jungle and the sea, feeder of the forlorn, rescuer of leaguered maidens. No, you're looking at the wrong sleeve. This is I, in the left sleeve."

He waved a gay hand at her.

"Nymph of the rosy dawn, Fergus Faunce, M. D., greets you. If you will put both feet in a slipper you'll find under the bed, and jump out here, you will concede that I'm as good at a



"You had less on when I found you," he said dryly.

recipe as I hope you'll grant I am at a prescription."

This was nice. A gentleman, and one of easy, fluent speech, of lazy gaiety, and friendly camaraderie. She stepped back, rescued the slippers, laughed as she put her own small feet into them, and then, seeing a flannel dressing gown, reached for it. Her hand dropped back. Something in the dry quality of his voice, as he reminded her of this morning's nudity lingered in her memory. The pajamas were sufficient clothing. She shuffled out upon the veranda.

"Where do you live?" he asked, breaking a long silence.

"North. On the Lake Trail. We go along the County Road; I'll show you."

CHAPTER II

"Perhaps, Tim," she said, "you don't understand women as well as you thought."

He reached out a shaking hand, but she easily avoided his grasp.

"Oh, not that, Tim, yet!"

She sank easily into a wicker chair; her gray eyes met his wondering stare calmly.

"For God's sake, Lucy, tell me—"

"What?" She smiled.

He, too, sat down, carefully, cautiously, as though he were uncertain of each movement that his big body made.

"I went to Mrs. Clary. She said . . . she'd talked to you, and . . . Lucy, what did you do? God! can't you understand how I felt? Nearly insane—"

"Fear does that," she said.

"Fear? You don't know me. It was . . . what I'd done to you . . .

"Lucy, before God, I was insane, crazy! Modane and the Japs had to hold me . . . from jumping overboard. The thing I wanted most on earth . . . was gone. Oh, Lucy! Lucy! can you ever, ever—"

"Listen, Tim: I think I like you better brutal than appealing. After all, I owe you something. We live for experience, don't we? Without experience we're dead, eh? Well, then, last night I lived. Of course the price one pays for experience isn't always too pleasant. . . . I landed, naked, on a beach. I found a hut, entered, and fainted. A man found me there; he clothed me in his own pajamas, put me to bed. He happened to be a gentleman, but even so . . ."

"Lucky for him that you can say he was a gentleman," said Stevens.

She laughed.

"My chivalrous friend! You who would have dishonored me, who drove me into the sea, can glower at the mention of another man, can knot your fists. The only thing that makes the human race tolerable is its ridiculous quality."

"Who was he?" demanded Stevens.

"The very question he asked!" she laughed. "I didn't tell him, but I will tell you. Dr. Fergus Faunce, Tim. And I think, if I asked him to, he'd operate on you without a diagnosis."

"You told him what . . . what had happened?" he asked.

"My dear man! Lucy Harkness doesn't advertise the fact that she's a fool. And to tell what had happened would be to admit that I knew so little of character that I trusted myself with a wild beast. Which would make me out a fool."

"Go on," he muttered. "I deserve it all."

"Humility is so engaging a trait," she said. "I suppose you do really believe that perhaps you deserve a scolding. I wonder if you realize that it's only by the grace of Fate you aren't facing a murder charge."

"It's by the grace of Fate that you aren't dead," he rejoined. "It was that, Lucy, that drove me mad. Not fear for me but horror for you.

"It doesn't occur to you, Lucy, that I never dreamed you'd . . . mind? I . . . thought you loved me. The rest . . . Lucy, how could you have thought that I intended . . . I wanted to talk to you, as I said. And you—I heard you open the port-hole, knew what you feared, and . . . I know . . . I had no right, no possible excuse for running away with you, but I meant to stop at Miami—"

"And produce the ring and minister, eh?" she jeered. "Of course you didn't intend to break down my door—"

"Before God, Lucy, I had no thought! I was mad. You don't understand what it is to be so obsessed with some one that . . . Wait till you love. But to hurt you . . . I was bluffing, making you think I'd go to the extreme length of keeping you on board the Minerva for weeks, but . . . And then I thought you were drowned."

He put his hands over his face, as though to shut out the dreadful picture.

"If I had wanted some one as crazily as all that, and believed that some one drowned, swishing around in the tide, I'd have joined that one I loved so much," she said coolly.

"And you think, Lucy, that I intended to live?" he demanded.

"You're not a ghost, Tim," she jeered. "You're here, in the flesh, safe and sound, pleading for me to overlook a slight error caused by boyish enthusiasm."

"Because I can't find words—no one could—to palliate what I did! How can I say, 'I'm sorry I did something that made you almost kill yourself'? But you ask why I'm alive. In another hour, had I not heard that you were alive, I'd have been dead. I was going to tell Mrs. Clary what had happened. Then, at my house, I was going to settle some affairs. An hour at most. Then . . . I'd have been as dead as I thought you were. As for Modane and the crew, I gave them nothing. I told them to keep their mouths shut for an hour. I explained you'd had a blinding headache, gone mad from pain—"

"And Lucy Harkness was to be remembered as a suicide?" she sneered.

"Better that than to have known what really occurred. Oh, not to save my name! To save your memory."

"Most noble man!" she murmured mockingly. "In another moment you'll have forgotten all about it, and be asking me to marry you."

"Why not?" he blazed. "At least, you know how much I want you, and—"

"And that, of course, must overcome my resistance. Tim, it must be strange to meet a woman who isn't madly in love with you."

"All right, sneer!" he cried. "A moment ago you were . . . kind, Lucy. But now . . . Is it all ended? Because if it is, I'm going straight from this patio to my house, and do what I'd intended to do."

She stared at him. The film had left his blue eyes and there was a gleam of almost mad determination in them. Somehow, the weakness that his too-great good looks sometimes gave his features, was entirely gone.

"Quitters drop out before the race is ended," she said softly.

"Don't talk in puzzles. I want straight talk," he cried.

"How do I know?" she asked. "You commit the unforgivable. I preferred death to what I thought you had in store for me. And yet . . . I receive you; I listen to your excuses. Let's start from there, Tim Stevens."

His too-full lower lip seemed to lose its sensual appearance, to flatten with purpose.

The Presbyterian Church

Thanksgiving Day was an unusually happy day for St. Paul's congregation as the Rev. W. D. Turner preached his first sermon since his iaduction which was the result of the call extended to him.

In the morning Mr. Turner thanked the congregation for the fine welcome they had given him. It was a general Thanksgiving service.

In the evening the subject of his discourse was "Well doing the duty of the Christian Life" The best way to show that we are christians is by our deeds. Give to the world the best you have and the best will come back to you. The choir sang "Be joyful in the Lord" and "The Lord of Hosts is with us." Large congregatians attended each service.

Inkerman Community Club will hold a Box Social in the Workmen's Hall, on Friday Evening, Nov. 22nd. You are cordially invited to attend.

B. Y. P. U. Fall Rally

The fall rally of the Ottawa Association of Baptist Young Peoples' Unions, was held on Thursday evening, Nov. 7th, in the Town Hall, the church not being large enough to accommodate the crowd of young people who gathered. The meeti g was opened with a bright song service led by the Rev. Mr. Robertson of Osnabruck.

Following the song service, Mr. Ewart Carkner of the Winchester church led in the devotional exercises. The new officers for the year were elected and were installed by Rev. H. O. Lloyd of Ormond, Rev. Mr. Vail of Vernon offering the prayer. The officers for the year are as follows: President, Mr. D. W. Morpy, Ottawa; vice-presideds, Mr. J. E. Ostrom, Winchester, and Mr. G. Barrack, Cornwall; treasurer, Miss Eva Taylor, Ottawa; secretary, Mr. G. Schryer, Ottawa.

Resolutious expressing thanks to the Winchester church for their hospitality, to those taking part in the program for their help, and to Mr. Morphy the president, for his splendid service in connection with the B. Y. P. U. work of the district were presented by the Rev. Vail of Vernon, and unanimously carried. Miss Eleanor Mann of Ottawa, Rev. H. O. Lloyd of Ormond, and Mr. and Mrs. John E. Ostrom of Winchester, brought messages in song.

Rev. Mr. L. M. Houlding, pastor of McPhail church, Ottawa, gave the address of the evening, choosing as his theme "Chivalry"

The rally was largely attended by the Baptist Young People of the district, including Ottawa, Vernon, Kenmore, Winchester, Ormond, South Gower, Cornwall and Osnabruck.

Jackson, and will continue the business and extend it. Mr. Robinson was engaged in the bakery business at South Mountain before coming to Winchester, and is experienced in all its branches. He is sure to make a succes of it.

The other transfer was that of the residence on Main St east, recently occupied by Mrs. Wm. Scott, and owned by Mr. H. B. Fetterly, who disposed of it to Mr. Mildren Baker, in trade for his farm at Nation Valley. Mr. Baker expects to move to Winchester but Mr. Fetterly does not intend to occupy the farm. He is too busy at present in connection with his inspection of public schools in the country.

Mrs. Mary Ann Hyndman

Last week the funeral of the late Mrs. Mary Ann Hyndman widow of the late Samuel Hyndman, South Mountain, was held from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. J. W. Dulmage, South Gower, to the South Gower Baptist Church, where service was conducted by Rev. H M. Servage, pastor of the United Church, Heckston.

The cortege was one of the largest witnessed in this vicinity for some time, which with the large number of floral tributes bore mute evidence of the esteem in which the late Mrs. Hyndman had been held by those who knew her. The deceased was born in Ireland eighty-nine years ago, and with her husband came to Canada in 1880, when they settled near Kemptville, later they moved to Prescott and South Mountain. The late Mrs. Hyndman had been enjoying good health until last Friday evening, when she was stricken with a stroke from the effect of which she expired early Saturday morning

A Wise Fool

Regina Leader—There is a man in Western Ontario who has lived up to his teaching.

Always he declared that if ever his car stalled on a railway track with a train approaching he would waste no time on the car but would make for safety. "I can buy another car, but I can't buy another chance after I'm dead," he said.

A couple of weeks ago he bought a new car and took it for a run. Crossing a railway it gave a cough and quit. A train was approaching from a distance. People told him he had time to get it going, but this brave chap got out and walked to the side of the road. The new car was reduced to matchwood. Some people said he was a fool, but if so he was a wise one. He had insured his car and was taking no chances. He left the debris to the railway wreckers and put in a claim to the insurance company. He is still safe and sound and his wife is not a widow.

Mrs. Matthew Wilson.

The death occurred Sunday, Nov. 9th, 1929, at the home of her son, Sherwood H. Wilson, Ottawa, Ont of Eliza Jane Hughes, widow of the late Matthew Wilson, in her 71st year. She had been ill for only five days.

The late Mrs. Wilson was born in Winchester, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Hughes, and spent the greater part of her life here. She has been living in the Capital for the past three years. A member of the United Church of Morewood, she was also a life member of the Women's Missionary Society of that church, and took an active part in all charitable and social affairs of the church.

Mrs. Wilson was well-known in Ottawa and Winchester, and her passing will be deeply mourned by many friends in both places. Mr. Wilson predeceased his wife four years ago.

Surviving are two sons, Sherwood H., in Ottawa; J. George Wilson, Winchester; and four daughters, Mrs. Milton Shaver, Chesterville; Mrs. Abner Dillabough, Morewood; Mrs. J. Russell Martin, Shaunavon, Sask., and Mrs. Basil Brooks, Trenton, Ont.

The funeral took place on Tuesday from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Abner Dillabough, Morewood, and was largely attended. Interment took place at Maple Ridge Cemetery.

The United Church

Rev. J. A. Waddell presided at both services, but the morning address was given by Rev. Dr. Wm. Munro, of Montreal, Sec'y of this Conference, who based his remarks upon that statement of our Lord, found in Matt. 12:12. He said the most important thing in the world was human life. To do our part in bringing others to a saving knowledge of God is an imperative duty of every christian. We owe a great deal to the new Canadians coming. 150 000 yearly, to help develop this country, also to men and women of other lands who contribute to the necessities, comforts and luxuries of our lives. He told of more than 400 new mission fields opened up by the United Church in the last four years, and 500 new Sunday Schools. He showed the task confronting us to be great and challenging, saying that no church can discharge its patriotic duty unless it thrusts forth christian workers where needed. Shall we not rise to meet the call for the sake of the men and women of the future, and sacrifice a little in order that others may hear of this great salvation. The choir's rendering of Kipling's Recessional was very pleasing, Mr. Fred Johnston taking the solo parts.

The W. M. S. held their autumn thankoffering in the evening when Miss Annie Walker sang an appropriate missionaay solo, and under the direction of the President, Mrs. Keyes, a Pageant, entitled "Waiting for the Doctor" was put on by several Mission Band girls, demonstrating plainly the need of medical missionaries.

A Pantomime—"A Starless Crown" was effectively acted by Mrs. P. Durant while Mrs. Steele sweetly sang the words.

Mrs. Houlehan of Chesterville gave an interesting talk on the spirit of missions. She said it was this spirit that leads everyone to devote themselves to this work. The Christian church has only one great commission which is inducing Christian individuals and nations to measure up to the standard of Christ. If we would win the world for Christ, He must become the centre of our civilization. To enthrone Christ is the aim of all missionary work.

Mrs. Houlehan told of the contribution made to the spread of the gospel by the W. M. S., the Circles, Bands, etc. and said the call was urgent for more fully trained workers.
