TO THE ELECTORS
OF MORRISBURG AND VICINITY:

Having received your confidence and support in looking after the interests of our Municipality, I am now asking for that same confidence and support as a candidate at this Provincial Election.

Morrisburg and Williamsburg are especially interested in several big problems with which I have been identified, among others, the development of the St. Lawrence River and the production of cheap electricity for the farms. I am supporting the plans of the Hydro for the development west of Morrisburg, and am opposed to any development that will flood valuable farm lands, inundate cemeteries, etc.

We are all interested in the sucess, industry, health and sobriety of our people. I shall lend all my energies to establish all such conditions in our midst.

Soliciting your confidence and support on October 30th,

I remain,
Yours faithfully,
GEO. H. CHALLIES

TO THE ELECTORS
OF THE COUNTY OF DUNDAS:

Having been chosen at an open Convention called by the Executive of the Liberal Association for the County of Dundas to select a candidate for the approaching election, and having been duly nominated, I wish through the press to request the support of all those who may wish some change in the manner of conducting our provincial affairs.

For a number of years the policy of conducting educational matters by the Provincial Government has had the effect of centralizing control at Toronto, rather than allowing any independent judgment or independent action by the trustees of the various schools throughout the province. The one man control thus obtained has had the effect of lessening public interest in our school system. It could not be expected when the power of trustees is so limited as at present, that the office of trustee would be considered as an honor, or as one enabling the office holder to be of benefit to his immediate section. I believe the whole system of administration of Public and High Schools should receive a thorough overhauling, and more power extended to the local authorities, who know the requirements of their own particular section.

Taxation, especially the rates imposed upon farm lands, has increased with the result always following an increase of taxation, that the value of the property taxed has been reduced. It has been said by very competent authorities that the value of farm property in the County of Dundas has decreased one-half in value during the last ten years. This decrease in value cannot be accounted for by reason of deflation after the war, because farms are selling for less to-day than before the war took place. The rate of taxation on farm property is accountable to a great extent for the decrease in value. At the present time, high taxes not only reduce the value of the farm, but also reduce its rental value to the owner. These taxes are largely the result of an increased expenditure imposed by the Provincial Government. An example of this increased expenditure may be found in the large sum which is payable yearly for the building and maintenance of the Provincial Highway along the River St. Lawrence, a highway benefiting the cities more than the rural districts, because it is a tourist highway, leading traffic away from the rural district towards Montreal and other places.

There has been no decrease in taxation under the present government, nor any promise of decrease in taxation, and with the adoption of the Old Age Pension scheme an additional burden will be placed upon the property of everybody in this county. The government are assessing the ratepayers in the Province, through the County Councils, 40 per cent. of the amount payable by it for old age pensions.

I believe that a government which imposes tax should collect it themselves instead of authorizing the expenditure and forcing payment of 40 per cent. of the sum on other shoulders.

At the present time, the government is receiving an immense revenue from automobile licenses and the gasoline tax. This revenue should, in all fairness, be expended upon the different roads of the Province, rather than form a fund for the payment of the expenditure on other matters, as is now the case.

Not only will your taxes be increased by reason of the old age pension scheme, but the Premier has promised that if elected he will bonus the production of iron in the northern part of the province. There is no particular fund out of which this bonus will come, and it too will add to the immense expenditure already being made.

Liquor Control Act:

With respect to this matter, I stand solidly behind the Liberal Leader, Sinclair, in his promise to submit the prohibition question to the people in the form of a referandum or plebiscite, entirely apart from party politics.

In conclusion permit me to say that if I am honored by being elected as your representative, I will do everything in my power to promote the prosperity of the Province of Ontario in general, and your interests as electors of the County of Dundas in particular. I shall consider it a great favor, therefore, if you will use your influence in my favor and mark your ballot for me in the voting which takes place on the 30th inst.

Your obedient servant,
W. HAMILTON.

GIGANTIC WATERWAY PLEDGED BY HOOVER

The development of the rivers and lakes of the United States into a gigantic arterial waterway, comprising a task three or four times the magnitude of the Panama Canal undertaking, was pledged by President Hoover at Louisville on Wednesday night as one of the great objectives of his Administration.

Millions of persons from coast to coast listened as the President spoke over the radio from the Louisville Memorial Auditorium, and heard him declare one of the most ambitious internal improvement programs the country has ever envisaged.

Explaining his purposes in considerable detail, Mr. Hoover said his program could call, at the most, for additional expenditures of $20,000,000 a year, and asserted that this would be equal to the cost of one-half a battleship.

"If we are so fortunate," he added, "as to save annual outlay on naval construction as the result of the forthcoming Naval Conference in London, nothing could be a finer or more vivid conversion of swords to plowshares."

The Chief Executive said that "one of the most vital improvements to transportation on the North American continent" is the making of the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes route open to ocean-going vessels.

"Our nation," he said, "should undertake to do its part whenever our Canadian friends have overcome those difficulties which lie in the path of their making similar undertakings."

The President's address was the climax of ceremonies attending the completion of a nine-foot, all-year-round channel in the Ohio River from Pittsburg to Cairo.

That project, Mr. Hoover asserted was but the beginning of "still unfinished tasks in improvement of our great waterways up to the standard we have established upon the Ohio."

Under ten salient headings, President Hoover detailed as still to come in the development of this country's waterways, the improvement of the entire Mississippi and her tributaries, projection of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway as soon as an agreement is reached by the United States and Canada, the completion of 1,000 miles of additional intracoastal canals, and development of harbors to accomodate the increasing size of ocean-going vessels and the expanding volume of United States commerce.

"To carry forward all these great tasks," Mr. Hoover said, "is not a dream of the visionaries—it is the march of the nation."

The President declared that his Administration would insist on building up the waterways like any other transportation system, "by extending its ramifications solidly outward from the main trunk lines. He said that "we must design our policies so as to establish private enterprise in substitution for Government operation of the barges and craft upon these waterways."

"We must continue Government barge lines through the pioneering stages," he added, but we must look forward to private initiative not only as the cheapest method of operation, but as the only way to assure an adequate public service."

Premier G. Howard Ferguson intimated that a start on the St. Lawrence development should be made by 1931 in a speech at Smiths Falls last week. Addressing more than 700 people, jammed into the town hall, the Prime Minister declared that the provincial Hydro Commission engineers, the Federal and the United States engineers were "close to agreement" on the method of developing the international section. Chief among the matters being considered is that of whether it will be a one stage or a two stage development in this section.

THE ELECTION CAMPAIGN

The closing days of the election campaign have come, and an intensive series of meetings are being held by the Prohibition forces all over the County. Meetings to be held include the following places,—

Friday evening at Cass Bridge and Elma schools.

Monday evening in Williamsburg Hall and Stampville school.

Each meeting is called for 7.45 p.m. At these meetings a number of good speakers, ladies and gentlemen, will be present.

On Tuesday evening, at 8 p.m., a grand closing County Rally is to be held in Lannin's Hall, Winchester. Special Speaker will be from Toronto, as well as some of the local men. All are invited to the meetings, with a special invitation to the ladies.

West Africa and the C.N.E. As Seen by Gold Coast Editor

An Article in the "Gold Coast Spectator" Gives the View Point of the African Exhibitor at the Canadian National Exhibition

BOTH COUNTRIES GAIN

The Dominion of Canada has loomed largely in the West African horizon within the last few years. It has been found from experience that there is much to profit by these two diversified continents coming together for economic expansion and mutual understanding, and so overtures were made to the Dominion with satisfactory results. Since these conversations began there have been two Exhibitions in Canada in which West Africa has figured prominently, the second being last year when Nigeria, Gold Coast and Sierra Leone participated. Although it was originally intended that the West African exhibit should be in the British Government Pavilion, it was, however, afterwards housed in the Coliseum Building, which was quite ample for our requirements. The products of the three Colonies were found to attract much attention and there were many enquiries. Canada in the past has imported largely from West Africa, and the increase in West African trade has been chiefly accounted for by the high prices obtained for West African cocoa, and the quantity of manganese shipped from the Gold Coast.

There are a lot of things which West Africa needs from Canada, and vice versa. We have the raw material—cocoa, cotton, ground nuts, palm kernels, palm oil, hides, skins, sisal, guinea grains, kola, maize, rubber, copra, calabar beans, ginger, piassava, raffia, coffee, chillies, castor seed, native made leather work, mats, baskets, country cloths, manganese. Canada has the finished produce—flour, canned goods, milk, butter, beef, pork, fish nd salt fish, etc., unmanufactured tobaco, cigarettes, bags and sacks, coopers' material for making barrels to export palm oil, cement, tools, building materials, lumber, enamel utensils and house furnishings. So that as these articles are always in demand, there is every prospect of West Africa finding a suitable market for its products, and Canada, colonies within the Empire where she can get the raw material she needs. The Exhibition at Toronto last year has helped to make British industrialists and traders who are taking a growing interest in Canada as a market for their goods, know more of the possibilities of dealing with this country.

We have been told that the purchasing power of the Canadian people is greater than ever. That tropical products will be consumed in ever-increasing quantities, and the prospects for Canadian Industries are exceedingly bright. That according to a survey of recent industrial development in Canada, no fewer than two hundred important extensions have been added during the last eighteen months to existing manufacturing plants, and over 100 new factories have been erected. Canada, therefore, is an important customer which merits the serious consideration and co-operation of British West Africa, as the wants of both territories are likely to be in constant and growing demand.

A Canadian Flag

Manitoba Free Press (Lib.): We need a flag about which there can be a rallying of Canadian sentiment at home. The uncertainty about what flag to use and the raising of different flags is not a desirable situation. The Union Jack is used on all Government buildings. Elsewhere, some of the people use the Union Jack and some use the Red Ensign. In parts of Quebec on Dominion Day one will see nothing but the Tricolor of France. Upon some occasions in the West will be seen a variation from the Red Ensign that has never been authorized anywhere. This is not a satisfactory situation. There should be a Canadian flag, as there is a flag in every other country, which will be used by every class of people in every part of the Dominion.

Lesson Sunday School

October 27. Lesson IV—The Christian View of Recreation—Mark 2: 18-28. Golden Text—I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.—John 10: 10.

ANALYSIS.

I. JOYJUS LIFE IN THE HOLY CITY, Jer. 31: 12, 13; Zech. 8:5.

II. REBUKE OF THE FAULTFINDERS, Matt. 11: 16-19; Mark 2: 18-28.

III. THE EXAMPLE OF JESUS, Mark 6: 30-32; John 2: 1-11.

INTRODUCTION—There is not very much said in the Bible about play, but in many passages it is presupposed. The life of the ancient Jewish people had in it much that was joyous and happy. It is true that their play was sometimes associated with evil things, as when Aaron made the golden calf in the wilderness, and the people gave themselves to feasting and dancing in honor of it, Exod. 32: 1-6; 1 Cor. 10: 7. But there must have been much innocent and harmless amusement, and religious exercises often took the form of music and song, processions and dances, Exod. 15: 20; Judges 21: 21; 2 Sam. 6: 12-16; Psalm 68: 25; 149; 3; 150: 3-5. A holy day was celebrated sometimes with feasting and great mirth, Neh. 8: 10-12. Lessons were drawn by religious teachers of the New Testament from the games and spectacles of their time, Heb. 12: 1; 1 Cor. 9: 24-27; hil. 3: 13, 14. Of this passage in Philippians Professor Michael writes (Com. on Philippians, p. 162), "Every word would suit a foot-race, and it is the foot-race that usually furnishes Paul's metaphors." So also Adeney (in Peake's Com.), "Comparing himself with a runner in the games, he fixes his gaze on the goal, where he sees the prize, to win which he has been called to aspire."

On the whole the Bible presents a healthy outlook on life, encourages joyous and happy living, seeks to promote the best in human life, and urges strenuous endeavor toward the attainment of the best.

I. JOYJUS LIFE IN THE HOLY CITY, Jer. 31: 12, 13; Zech. 8:5.

To the prophets of ancient Israel, perplexed and saddened by the evils which abounded in their time, cruelty, violence, greed, injustice, and uncleanness, and by national decay, subjection to foreign powers, bondage and exile, all of which they believed to be consequences of those evils, and of unfaithfulness to the God they served, there came the vision of a better future, deliverance from all their troubles, and from the sin which had been the cause of their troubles, and an unclouded, happy and prosperous life. In inspired vision they saw the captives set free, the exiles return, the city and the temple rebuilt, a glory greater by far than that of any previous age. Again and again in many passages they dwell upon this coming glory of the New Jerusalem, the happiness and prosperity of which they sometimes see extending to all the world. Here, Jeremiah, at the beginning, and Zechariah at the end, of the Babylonian captivity, see the dawn of the new era. "He that scattered Israel will gather him," Jer. 31: 10. The Lord will gather his people "as a shepherd doth his flock." In the restored city there will be banquet and rejoicing, a joyous life for both young and old (Zech. 8: 4, 5), a purified and perfect social life.

II. REBUKE OF THE FAULTFINDERS, Matt. 11: 16-19; Mark 2: 18-28.

Jesus was beset by incorrigible faultfinders who were determined not to be pleased. John had come to them in one way with his preaching of repentance, Jesus had come in another. They had been pleased with neither. John had separated himself from the common delights and comforts of social life. Jesus had entered fully into social life. Those whom Jesus rebukes are like the ill-tempered children in the market-square who will play neither wedding nor funeral. "They can grasp neither the solemn warnings of John nor the joyous tidings of Jesus" (Gore's Com.).

Jesus did not require his disciples to fast, Mark 2: 18. The disciples of other teachers wanted to know why. The answer of Jesus is very simple. Fasting was a sign of repentance and of grief. Just then there was no occasion for fasting, while their beloved Master and Teacher was still with them. Jesus did not require insincere acting or mere pretence.

Fault also is found with the conduct of Jesus and his disciples on the Sabbath day. The disciples walking through the cornfields began "to pluck the ears of corn." That, apparently, was regorded by the faultfinders as reaping. And the rubbing of the ears in the hands to separate the grains from the chaff was like threshing. It was not lawful, they said, to reap and to thresh on the Sobbath. But to Jesus human need was supreme.

"The Sabbath was made for man." To satisfy the need of hungry men was more important than to keep strictly some ancient rule. This Jesus illustrates by an incident drawn from the story of David, 1 Sam. 21: 1-6. The Christian church, following the Master's example and works, in the end set aside the old rule of Sabbath observance, and substituted for the Jewish seventh day, the Christian first day, or Lord's day, to which some of the old Sabbath laws are now made to apply.

III. THE EXAMPLE OF JESUS, Mark 6: 30-32; John 2: 1-11.

In many things, as above, in the matter of Sabbath keeping, we learn from the example of Jesus. In Mark 6: 30-'2, he recognizes oth for himself and his disciples the need of escape from the crowd, and rest for a season from strenuous toil. No doubt rest was sought b him in order that they might return refreshed and strengthened for better and more effective work.

In John 2: 1-11 Jesus is seen having his share in the festivities which accompanied a wedding. Cana was probably near Nazareth. The wedding party were evidently of the friends of Jesus' mother. In the Aramaic speech which Jesus used, the words spoken to his mother (v. 4) show no trace of disrespect. He tells her that he must wait for his hour, for the impulse or command which will come from God.

The Grain Ports

Saint John Telegraph-Journal (Ind.): The coming winter should be marked by large shipments of grain through the port of Saint John. Farmers are holding their wheat. There will be very large quantities to be shipped after the close of navigation in the St. Lawrence. Vancouver hopes to profit by this condition of trade, and the Atlantic ports should also derive benefit. Doubtless the Saint John Harbor Commission is giving this question its serious attention.

The Unsightly Billboard

Regina Leader (Lib.): The billboard's place is not along a public highway where it interferes with the natural beauty of the countryside.

ENDURANCE

To endure is the first thing a child ought to learn, and that which he will have the first need to know.—Rousseau.

The Wheat Pool Wins

Toronto Globe (Lib.): The pool started out to establish "orderly marketing." What the term means has been well demonstrated last year and this. The record crop of 1928 resulted in an enormous carry-over, much of which is still in the elevators. Had the yield of last year been repeated during the past season in Canada and other exporting countries, the story might have been different. Now, however, it appears as though the co-operative seller rather than the buyer is making the market. It is a marked reversal of conditions as they were in the days not long gone.

GENIUS

According to the popular notion, the genius learns without study, and knows without learning. He is eloquent without preparation; exact without calculation; and profound without reflection. While ordinary men toil for knowledge by reading, by comparison, and by minute research, he is supposed to receive it as the mind receives dreams. His mind is like a vast cathedral, through whose colored windows the sunlight streams, painting the aisles with the varied colors of brilliant pictures.—H. W. Beecher.

GOODWILL

A spirit of universal goodwill, a generous heart, an open hand, will place you in the ranks of the highest nobility. But if you are exclusive, if your hand is kept closed except when prised open by shame or stout appeal, if you go about in a spirit of caution and reserve and secret disdain of all but your set, you are out of our high category; neither money, nor birth, nor rank can smuggle you in.

LIFE

Life must be regarded in the light of all that is to grow out of it. Seeds are planted here, foundations are laid, perhaps only ground is cleared. There is eternity to work out the results.—J. Baldwin Brown.

PROFESSION

I hold every man a debtor to his profession; from the which as men of course do seek to receive countenance and profit so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves by way of amends to be a help and ornament thereunto.

THOUGHTS

A SURPLUS

A man with a surplus can control circumstances but a man without a surplus is controlled by them, and often he has no opportunity to exercise judgment.—Harvey Firestone.

COMPREHENSION

The best criterion of an enlarged mind, next to the performance of great actions, is their comprehension.

Coste Describes Hazardous Flight

French Airmen Battled Terrific Gales and Snow Storms

Tsitsikar, Manchuria.—With a new world's record for long distance nonstop flights safely made across two continents, Dieudonne Coste and Maurice Bellonte explained that only terrific gales and snowstorms in the region of Lake Baikal, Siberia, had prevented their reaching Tokio from Paris. "During the worst of the storm, I thought sure we were doomed," Costes said.

"We brought out our parachutes for the first time, adjusting the harness to our shoulders. The snow made visibility almost impossible, and the wind was the worst I ever experienced."

The aviators, after being forced to land at Mulart, a village 60 miles north of here, walked that distance in three days. They were obliged to make many detours, because of flood conditions along the river Nonni.

They had some difficulty persuading the Mulart villagers that they were not Russian airmen forced down on a scouting flight, but were finally escorted before Chinese officials, who spoke English.

Bellonte tried to explain that they were French, and eventually they were permitted to go on to Tsitsikar. These difficulties explain why the world was without news of his flight for so many days.

It had been unofficially estimated that Coste made a flight of 6,158 miles from Le Bourget to Mulart. Coste's own records show that his flying time, allowing for differences in Chinese time and French time, was 51 hours.

Coste is returning to Mulart with gasoline. He plans to fly to Harbin, and then to Mukden.

Some Uncertainty

Paris—Some uncertainty existed as to the exact distance which Dieudonne Coste flew on his trip to Manchuria, but officials are confident that he broke the record for non-stop distance flights.

The first figure reported in a telegram from Coste was 5,967.8 miles, although this appeared to be a greater distance than it was estimated he could make on the fuel supply carried. Later dispatches gave a distance of several hundred miles less, and Coste himself told interviewers at Tsitsikar that he believed the distance was about 4,843.8 miles which the Air Ministry here is inclined to think probable.

OBLIGATIONS

There is no kind of life, whether we are transacting public or private affairs, at home or abroad—those in which we are alone concerned or with others—that is free of obligations. In the due disharge of these consists all the dignity, and in their neglect all the disgrace of life.—Cicero.

New Inventions Put War Danger Out of Bounds

Any Nation Will Think More than Twice Before Crossing the Dogs of War

CHEMICAL SCIENCE TOO

A recent article in the New York Herald Tribune tells of the many improvements shown by the U.S. "War Eagles," as the tale was headed. Europe has progressed as far or farther than the States so "frightfulness" as well as diplomacy is putting war into the discard. The tale in part is as follows:

A great improvement has been made in bombing, especially through the change in bombsights. As a bombing plane approaches its target the bomber points his sight at the object and holds it there. The sight is eletrically connected to two dials on the instrument board in front of the pilot. Any variation either to the right or left or up or down is signaled automatically on one of these dials, so that the pilot simply moves his controls to keep the two indicators reading zero. The bomb-sight corrects for altitude, air speed, wind draft and density of the air without any more attention from the man who is doing the bombing.

As the target comes within hitting distance the bomber concentrates solely on the moment of release, as the pilot by this time knows the course he must follow to keep "on." A white line appears on the bomb-sight, which is a warning. The bomber quikly takes hold of the bomb release. Then a second line, or symbol appears, and instantly the bomber jerks the release. The bomb, mathematically aimed, goes hurtling down for an almost perfect hit.

The service bombing plane usually carries up to 2,200 pounds of bombs.

A great advance has been made in fuses. Bombs can now be set to explode on impact, or any number of seconds after impact, or any time after release. Super-sensitive fuses alho have been developed which explode the bomb at the lightest touch.

Smoke laying, used to form a screen to cover retreats or other operations, has been made quite simple, both in the chemical used and the apparatus required. On damp "muggy" days smoke screens will cling for hours, especially in woods, so that an enemy would find it extremely difficult to observe, and it would be folly to try an advance.

One of the most interesting developments has been in aerial photography, especially at night. This has a strong bearing on military work. As proof of the progress made the Air Corps carried out night photography of the Capitol, the White House and other prominent places in Washington on the night before President Hoover's inauguration.

A flare was dropped with a fuse which set off a large charge of magnesium powder. An automatic device was supplied for tripping the camera in the plane at the point of maximum intensity of the flashlight below. By a combination of quick-work processes the minimum time from exposure of the film until the finished protograph was dropped in a message tube was only seven minutes.

Although there is a certain commercial value to this advanced night photography, its principal use is for war. With this as a start, a picture of air action in a future war can be drawn.

Seated in a headquarters base well underground is the general of one nation's forces, or the general commanding a large area. Before him is a setor map. He has just had information from spies, or other sources, that the enemy plans to move a large force into a certain spot that night. The information may be a false lead. But this does not disturb him. He issues a general stand-by order, and at the same time an experienced photographer-pilot leaves the nearest air base—also underground to escape bombing at night—flying in a fast, unarmed observation plane.

The engine of the plane is muffled. Its speed is its guaranty of safety. It can climb higher than a pursuit ship and can keep out of range if necessary. But to-night there is no need. The darkness hides everything. The pilot follows his course to the suspected area flying high. At the correct moment he descends with throttled engine, in utter silene. Suddenly he releases a huge magnesium flare, which drops in its chute and lights at a predetermined time.

The pilot keeps his plane level for a few seconds. At maximum intensity of the flare the camera takes a picture of the ground below, where a great force of enemy infantry is busily intrenching itself. Before they can begine to spot the plane with searchlights he has whirled about and is headed for his own lines at racing speed. In the dark he is perfectly safe, especially at his height. Even though enemy aircraft are near him, they cannot see him. Only an accident of colision, hardly likely under the circumstances, will prevent him from reaching headquarters. He does not stop to land. He drops the developed picture in a message tube tied to a small chute. It is rushed to the general, waiting in his underground base.

The general scans the picture. The information was right. Then he snaps an order, which is relayed by wire or radio, and a waiting suqadron of night bombing planes soars into the air from a hidden base miles away. All in half an hour from the time the first pilot was sent out.

The enemy ground force realizes its danger. A hasty evauation is ordered but infantry cannot move so swiftly. To the enemy air forces is sent a hurried call for help. They respond, but blindly. Somewhere in that darkness a bombing squadron is approaching rapidly. But where? The enemy ke eps a pursuit squadron armed with peculiar looking bombs hovering over the course the bombers are expected to take. Perhaps the bombing squadron expects this. Its leader sends a brief order and the attack is made from another angle. From those dozens of almost silent ships great bombs go hurtling down, to create devastation and send terror into the hearts of fleeing soldiers. Gas strikes them down. Fragments of bursting bombs add to the hundreds of wounded desperately seeking to crawl away.

Or, if the enemy air force succeeds in getting a signal from ground listeners or from some daring observation pilot, who braves sudden collision in the night, the situation is reversed. The enemy leader awaits a strategic moment, when he knows the bombing squadron lies beneath him, or most of its planes. His own formation spreads out like an invisible network 3,000 feet above. At a signal each of the enemy pilots releases his peculiar looking bombs. Each one weights over 100 pounds, and four bombs are dropped by every ship.

They fall swiftly for a thousand feet and then suddenly burst like eggshells, each releasing 100 one-pound bombs carried inside. From the one-pounders protrude the supersensitive fuses, so made that even the scratching of a sheet of paper wil set them off. Down they go, 400 from each enemy plane, until the sky is filled with the darting missiles.

Then, with an almost constant detonation, while flares of light leap up into the dark, the one-pounders find their prey as the wings of the attacked planes set off the invisible bombs. Propellers splinter into shrieking fragments, wings rend and collapse, and fuel tanks explode with mighty roars—and the bombers go down to defeat and death.

This is no figment of imagination, but the unofficial picture drawn by military pilots from accurate information and plans already seriously realized as necessary. More than ever the next war, if such there be, will depend on the air supremacy of the belligerent nations. Supply zones and re-enforcements behind front lines can easily be cut off by superior air forces leaving those front lines to starve and die or to go under as a confident enemy attacks.

As in the last war, day-time bases for air forces will be literally 'daytime" only. Then, when planes were left out in open fields so as to be ready for instant flight, other ships protected them from above. But at night the planes were hauled into the near-by woods, or the best possible hiding places, where they remained until dawn. Enemy bombers frequently swept down with a hail of bombs and blasted the enemy fields. Later, realizing the trick, they covered the near-by woods also. But no such chances will be taken at permanent bases in a future war. The ships will be kept underground at night. As laconically expressed by one Army pilot, there will be "only two safe places in the next war—above 30,000 feet and 100 feet under ground."

A German's View

Copenhagen.—Within twenty years chemical warfare will have reached a stage where even the most powerful nation would not dare to attack a small country like Denmark, said Professor E. Nernst, German chemist and Nobel prize winner, while he was here as a delegate to the National Science Congress.

"War," said Professor Uernst, "will perish through its own fierceness. I forsee that there will be created new weapons of such bestial horror that one party will shy from attacking the other. Only in that way will it be possible to kill war.

"Nobel long ago saw that. He knew human nature and knew that peace could not be achieved by scraps of paper. He knew that fear appealed to the imagination more than honeyed words and platitudes."

Ask Your Barber—He Knows

DO NOT NEGLECT YOUR LITTLE ONES

At no time of life is delay or neglect more serious than at childhood. The ills of little ones come quickly and unless the mother is prompt in administering treatment a precious little life may be snuffed out almost before the mother realizes the baby is ill. The prudent mother always keeps something in the medicine chest as a safeguard against the sudden illness of her little ones. Thousands, of mothers have found through experience, that there is no other medicine to equal Baby's Own Tablets and that is why they always keep a box of the Tablets on hand—why they always feel safe with the Tablets.

Baby's Own Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative which by regulating the bowels and stomach banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fevers and promote healthy, natural sleep. Concerning them, Mrs. Isaac Sonia, St. Eugene, Ont., writes:—"I have been using Baby's Own Tablets ever since baby was a month old and have found that they reach the spot and do more good than any other medicine I have ever tried. I always keep the Tablets in the house and would advise all other mothers to do so." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WORKMANSHIP

The workmanship wherewith the gold is wrought,
Adds yet a richness to the richest gold;
Who lacks the heart to shape his thought, I hold,
Were little poorer if he lacked the thought.
The statue's slumber were unbroken still
Within the marble, had the hand no skill.
Disparage not the magic touch that gives
The formless thought the grace whereby it lives!

"What broke Smith down so and caused his death?"

"The heavy life insurance he carried."

INFLUENCE

He who can make a single person feel that there is a better method of life than that which he has been pursuing, and arouse his desire to enter upon it, has done more for the society of the world at large than if he had analyzed and exposed its faults and failings with the utmost penetration and ability. Real influence is exerted far more in vitalising new ideas or rather ideas that have lain dormant in the minds of men, than in any criticism.

Aerial patrols of the forests in Saskatchewan in the summer of 1928 covered approximately eighteen million acres of country almost inaccessible in summer except by canoe. Sixty-one fires were detected by the aircraft.

Known By Your Dog

There is an old saying that a man is known by his dog, which is quite as true of a boy also. Have you ever thought about the sort of reputation that your dog is giving you? If not, stop and think for a minute.

It is not so much the kind of dog, as regards breed or lack o fit, that counts as it is what you, yourself, are and how you treat him. If he has a careless, neglected, discouraged air, it is a foregone conclusion that you are careless and that you neglect and abuse him. If he is sneaking, it is a pretty sure sign that his master has a similar streak. If he is morose and surly so, ten chances to one, is his master. But if he goes about in a bright, friendly, self-respecting way, with head up and tail wagging, the world may feel pretty sure that his master, too, is pleasant and friendly and self-respecting.

A dog has not the chance to develop his intellect that his master has. But in compensation for this, he is blessed with a highly specialized sense in which humans are often sadly lacking. He is not deceived by words and outward actions, but is able to read the hearts and inmost feelings of those about him. His master is his ideal, and from him he takes his cue. He is never a hypocrite, and knowing what his master is at heart, that is the thing which he becomes

Therefore, if you do not wish your dog to shame you, treat him with respect and attention and try to make of yourself that which you would be proud to have him reflect to the world.—Dumb Animals.

Father Time

Dr. Eugene Fisk in the American Review of Reviews: Time is not a thing. These modern physicists have robbed Father Time of his hour-glass, his scythe, his long grey beard, his raiment, his flesh and his bones, and have left of him nothing—pouf! He is gone, and yet he is with them still. Time is just an abstraction like the future or the past or the rule of three. Can you imagine the rule of three hardening our arteries, ossifying our livers, softening our brains, even though his pesky rule may have addled the brains of backword youth? No, Time is a nonentity; it has no absolute existence.

False Modesty

The Lancet (London): It is refreshing to see how the newer generation accepts without thought of evil, behavior that those of maturer years once feared as threatening inviolable principles. . . . By insistence upon sex these elaborate taboos (of the past), with their opportunities for more or less indecent jest and allusion, cultivated, or perhaps indicated, the Peeping Tom state of mind. If we apply the standard of "evil to him who evil thinks," we must congratulate the present generation,

HOLDING IN

We get a thought by giving it away. We secure our hold on it by letting it go. We never really know a truth until we have told it to another. The one who gains most in class work is the teacher, if he is the teacher. This is one of the practical paradoxes of our intellectual life, and a blessed paradox it is.

Shades of Good Old "Jumbo"

While the animal trainers were leading "Sophie," giant circus elephant, one hundred and five years old, across a railroad track near St. Thomas, Ontario, along with cages bearing the rest of the show's animals, the great beast suddenly became unmanageable. She trumpeted wildly, and it was with difficulty that the keepers prevented a stampede.

"What's the matter with her?" someone asked.

Then it was recalled that years ago, while crossing the tracks at the same point, the world-famous "Jumbo," the largest elephant ever in captivity, had been struck by a locomotive and killed. Sophie was among those who saw him die.

Good old Jumbo!! How everyone loved him in America and England! It is more than forty years ago that he met his ignoble end. But many will recall the international interest that attended his departure from the Old World and his arrival and reception in the New. The English public were not a little aroused over the sale of Jumbo and endeavored to annul the contract. Jumbo, too, was loath to leave. John Ruskin wrote indignantly that England was not in the habit of selling her pets and Lord Winchelsea undoubtedly voiced the feeling of the English in a verse entitled "Jumbo":

"But since in England's fallen state
She owns two things supremely great,
Jumbo and Gladstone—(each we find
The most prodigious of their kind)—
And one won't budge. Then, Barnum, make
A fair exchange, for quiet's sake!
Take the Right Honorable, and go!!
He'll make the better rarer show!
Leave Jumbo."

As Usual

The summer's over. Back we come—
The tall, the short, the fat, the thin—
And in our super-heated homes
Hot weather will begin!

To some degree the vice-regal interest always shown by his Excellency, the Governor-General of Canada in the Royal Winter Fair carries forward in our self-governing Dominion the traditional and personal interest the Royal Family shows in promotive agricultural work and the practice of farming all over the Empire.

From British Columbia eastward to Prince Edward Island exhibits are pouring in steadily increasing numbers to the Royal Winter Fair. Entries from the States are also of sufficient proportions to add a friendly international rivalry.

Could not Eat or Sleep after Husband's Death

Her husband's death left her very run down in health, unable to eat or sleep much. Now she is brighter in spirits and eats and sleeps well. What caused the difference? Let her answer in her own words:—

"I think Kruschen Salts are a splendid tonic. After my husband's death in December last I became very run down in health. Had terrible fits of depression and was unable to eat or sleep much. I was also troubled with rheumatism. I decided to take Kruschen Salts and have now taken the little daily dose for nearly two months, during which time my health has greatly improved. The rheumatism has completely left me. I am much brighter in spirits and both eat and sleep well."

When life begins to "get you down," when you begin to feel the results of modern artificial conditions—errors of diet, worry, overwork, lack of exercise—then you should turn to Kruschen Salts. They possess a wonderful power of giving new life and vitality to the countless millions of cells of which the human body is composed. The way to keep smiling is to take Kruschen Salts every morning—just a pinch in your first morning cup of coffee or tea.

LUTHERAN S.S. AND W.M.S. CONVENTION

The Lutheran S.S. Association and W.M.S. of the St. Lawrence district met October 16th, in Morrisburg. There were about fifty delegates and visitors present from Ottawa, Williamsburg, Dunbar, Riverside, Montreal and Morrisburg, wth their respective pastors, viz: Rev. McCreary, Rev. Cronmiller, Rev. Inner, Rev. Jacobi and the speaker for the day, Rev. D. Burt Smith, of Philadelphia.

The S.S. Association held their meeting in the morning, when it was reorganized, a new constitution drawn up and better methods and plans discussed. The re-election of officers resulted as follows: Mr. Geo. Barclay, President; Mr. Roy Schell, Vice-President; Miss Bessie Clark, Secretary; Mrs. Geo. Casselman, Treasurer and Rev. Innis Statistician. We were proud to have Dr. Smith as our speaker, and gleaned much useful knowledge and information from his very able addresses during the day.

The W.M.S. met in the afternoon reports from the different societies were read, general business attended to, lively discussions settled. The most interesting numbers on the programme were Dr. Smith's address; a duet given by Mrs. Geo. Casselman and Mrs. Lee Casselman, accompanied by Miss Edith Armstrong; a monologue by Miss Helen Salmon and a beautiful little pageant given by the Morrisburg Light Brigade. The officers of the executive remain the same as last year, except for a change of treasurer, as our last year's treasurer, Mrs. Kenneth McIntosh, had moved to Windsor. Mrs. Willis Salmon was elected to that office.

The evening service was conducted by Rev. D. Burt Smith, assisted by Rev. Innis of Montreal. At this meeting, a vote of thanks was officially tendered the W.M.S. of Morrisburg and their pastor, Rev. Jacobi, for their kind hospitality in entertaining the visiting societies. A vote of thanks was also given to Rev. D. Burt Smith.

MORRISBURG , ONT.

To the Men and Women Electors
Of the County of Dundas:

Dundas has an enviable record in the matter of Prohibition. In Local Option Votes, most of the County early banished the bars. In the Plebiscite of 1919 and 1923, the majorities for Prohibition ran into the thousands. Three years ago, even though the vote was involved in party prejudice, this County elected a Prohibition Candidate by 833 majority. Dundas has a noble record—one of which she well may be proud.

Today, the fight is on once more. Whoever else they may be supporting, we know the Brewers, Distillers, the "Wet" vote of previous campaigns ARE NOT with the Prohibition Candidate. They are lining up back of the Parties. Where, then, should every Prohibitionist place himself? Behind the Prohibition Union, whom you can trust as the leader of the "Dry" forces for years. Nowhere else is there certainty for those who want to hold Prohibition. Government Sale is a ghastly failure, see what it has done?

1. Every year it has increased drinking and drunkeness. The liquor drunk this year will take sixty millions from the pockets of the people by Government Sale (not including the sales of millions more by bootleggers) with only injury and harm in return. This amount would pay the total cost of running the Provincial Government for a year. This cost will be about $15.00 for every man, woman and child, and about $115.00 for every permit holder.
2. Motor car accidents have risen from 4412, killed and injured in 1926 to 5874 in 1928 on Ontario roads. These figures include 298 killed in 1926 and 477 killed in 1928. In 1928 the increase in drivers arrested while intoxicated in Canada was 82 per cent. As a result, this year motor car insurance rates jumped 50 per cent. to the car owner.
3. The curse of drink is all about us. In spite of the fact that all Dundas is under Local Option, except two villages, we see the awful results. Without Local Option, and with liquor nearer to us, the results would be far worse.

The fight is on, the battle lines are joined. Forget the old line parties and stand back of the Prohibition cause. Let Dundas say with no uncertain sound "Dundas always stands for Prohibition." We always have, may it be true that we always will. Do your duty, get out to the polls, and cast your ballot for

THE "CANARY" MURDER CASE

© Charles Scribner's Sons

by S. S. VAN DINE AUTHOR of THE BENSON MURDER CASE

THE STORY THUS FAR:

Spotswoode had gone out with the "Canary" the evening of the murder. When he left, he asked Jessup, on the switchboard, to call him a cab. "Then," said Jessup, "we heard Miss Odell scream. We ran back to her door and she called to us that everything was all right." But the next morning she was found strangled. Vance thinks two men were in the room when she was murdered, one of them hiding in a clothes closet. Cleaver is questioned and gives an alibi. But he mentions Dr. Lindquist as a possible source of information.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Ten minutes later we were ringing the bell of a stately old brownstone house in East 44th Street.

A resplendently comparisoned butler opened the door, and Markham presented his card.

"Take this to the doctor at once, and say that it's urgent."

"The doctor is just finishing dinner," the stately seneschal informed him; and conducted us into a richly furnished reception-room, with deep comfortable chairs, silken draperies and subdued lights.

"A typical gynecologist's seraglio," observed Vance, looking around. "I'm sure the pasha himself is a majestic and elegant personage."

The prediction proved true. Doctor Lindquist entered the room a moment later inspecting the district attorney's card as if it had been a cuneiform inscription whose import he could not quite decipher.

He as a tall man in his late forties, with bushy hair and eyebrows, and a complexion abnormally pale. His face was long, and, despite the asymmetry of his features, he might easily have been called handsome. He was in dinner clothes and he carried himself with the self-conscious precision of a man unduly impressed with his own importance. He seated himself at a kidney-shaped desk of carved mahogany, and liftd his eyes with polite inquiry to Markham.

"To what am I indebted for the honor of this call?" he asked in a studiously melodious voice, lingering over each word caressingly. "You are most fortunate to have found me in," he added, before Markham could speak. "I confer with patients only by appointment." One felt that he experienced a certain humiliation at having received us without elaborate ceremonial preliminaries.

Markham, whose nature was opposed to all circumlocution and pretense, came direct to the point.

"This isn't a professional consultation, doctor; but it happens that I want to speak to you about one of your former patients—a Miss Margaret Odell."

Doctor Lindquist regarded the gold paper-weight before him with vacantly reminiscent eyes.

"Ah, yes. Miss Odell. I was just reading of her violent end. A most unfortunate and tragic affair. . . . . In just what way can I be of service to you?—You understand, of course, that the relationship between a physician and his patient is one of sacred confidence——"

"I understand that thoroughly," Markham assured him abruptly. "On the other hand, it is the sacred duty of every citizen to assist the authorities in bringing a murderer to justice. And if there is anything you can tell me hich will help toward that end, I shall certainly expect you to tell me."

The doctor raised his hand slightly in polite protestation.

"I shall, of course, do all I can to assist you, if you will but indicate your desires."

"There's no need to beat about the bush, doctor," said Markham. "I know that Miss Odell was a patient of yours for a long time; and I realize that it is highly possible, not t say probable, that she told you certain personal things which may have direct bearing on her death."

"But, my dear Mr. ——"—Doctor Lindquist glanced ostentatiously at the card—"ah—Markham, my relations with Miss Odell were of a purely professional character."

"I had understood, however," ventured Markham, "that, while what you say may be technically true, nevertheless there was an informality, let me say, in that relationship. Perhaps I may state it better by saying that your professional attitude transcended a merely scientific interest in her case."

I heard Vance chuckle softly; and I myself could hardly suppress a smile at Markham's verbose and orbicular accusation. But Doctor Lindquist, it seemed, was in no wise disconcerted. Assuming an air of beguiling pensiveness, he said:

"I will confess, in the interests of strict accuracy, that during my somewhat protracted treatment of her case, I came to regard the young woman with a certain—shall I say, fatherly liking? But I doubt if she was even aware of this mild sentiment on my part."

The corners of Vance's mouth twitched slightly. He was sitting with drowsy eyes, watching the doctor with a look of studious amusement.

"And she never at any time told you of any private or personal affairs that were causing her anxiety?" persisted Markham.

Doctor Lindquist pyramided his fingers and appeared to give the question his undivided thought.

"No, I can't recall a single statement of that nature." His words were measured and urbane. "I know, naturally, in a general way, her manner of living; but the details, you will readily perceive, were wholly outside my province as a medical consultant. The disorganization of her nerves was due—so my diagnosis led me to conclue—to late hours, excitement, irregular and rich eating—what, I believe, is referred to vulgarly as going the pace. The modern woman, in this febrile age, sir——"

"When did you see her last, may I ask?" Markham interrupted impatiently.

The doctor made a pantomime of eloquent surprise.

"When did I see her last? . . . Let me see." He could, apparently, recall the occasion only with considerable difficulty. "A fortnight ago, perhaps—though it may have been longer. I really can't recall. . . . Shall I refer to my files?"

"That won't be necessary," said Markham. He paused, and regarded the doctor with a look of disarming affability. "And was this last visit a paternal or merely a professional one?"

"Professional, of course." Doctor Lindquist's eyes were impassive and only mildly interested; but his face, I felt, was by no means the unedited reflection of his thoughts.

"Did the meeting take place here or at her apartment?"

"I believe I called on her at her home."

"You called on her a great deal, doctor—so I am informed—and at rather unconventional hours. . . . Is this entirely in accord with your practice of seeing patients only by appointment?"

Markham's tone was pleasant, but from the nature of his question I knew that he was decidedly irritated by the man's bland hypocrisy, and felt that he was deliberately withholding relevant information.

Before Doctor Lindquist could reply, however, the butler appeared at the door and silently indicated an extension telephone on a taboret beside the desk. With an unctuously murmured apology, the doctor turned and lifted the receiver.

Vance took advantage of this opportunity to scribbl something on a piece of paper and pass it surreptitiously to Markham.

His call completed, Doctor Lindquist drew himself up haughtily, and faced Markham with chilling scorn.

"Is it the function of the district attorney," he asked distantly, "to harass respectable physicians with insulting questions? I did not know that it wos illegal—or even original, for that matter—for a doctor to visit his patients."

"I am not discussing now"—Markham emphasized the adverb—"your infractions of the law; but since you suggest a possibility which, I assure you, was not in my mind, would you be good enough to tell me—merely as a matter of form—where you were last night between eleven and twelve?"

The question produced a startling effect. Doctor Lindquist became suddenly like a tautly drawn rope, and, rising slowly and stiffly, he glared, with cold intense venom, at the district attorney. His velvety mask had fallen off; and I detected another emotion beneath his repressed anger; his expression cloaked a fear, and his wrath but partly veiled a passionate uncertainty.

"My whereabouts last night is of no concern of yours." He spoke with great effort, his breath coming and going noisily.

Markham waited, apparently unmoved, his eyes riveted on the trembling man before him. This calm scrutiny completely broke down the other's self-control.

"What do you mean by forcing yourself in here with your contemptible insinuations?" he shouted. His face, now livid and mottled, was hideously contorted; his hands made spasmodic movements; and his whole body shook as with a tremor. "Get out of here—you and your two myrmidons! Get out, before I have you thrown out!"

Markham, himself enraged now, was about to reply, when Vance took him by the arm.

"The doctor is gently hinting that we go," he said. And with amazing swiftness he spun Markham round, and led him firmly out of the room.

When we were again in the taxicab on our way back to the club, Vance sniggered gaily.

"A sweet specimen, that! Paranoia. Or, more likely, manic-depressive insanity—the folie circulaire type: recurring periods of maniacal excitement alternating with periods of the clearest sanity, don't y' know. Anyway, the doctor's disorder belongs in the category of psychoses—associated with the maturation or waning of the sexual instinct. He's just the right age, too. Neurotic degenerate—that's what this oily Hippocrates is. In another minute he would have attacked you. . . . My word! It's a good thing I came to the rescue. Such chaps are about as safe as rattlesnakes."

Motor-Hogs

G. R. Stirling Taylor in the Fortnightly Review (London): The motor horn is a blot on our standard of intelligene. Only the dullest of dull bureaucrats could ever have imagined that the horn was a way of preventing accidents on the roads. It is merely a temptation to a motorist to drive at a high speed on the assumption that other users of the highways will hear and be scared out of the way. To suggest to the thousands of thoughtless creatures who drive cars that their responsibility to their fellow-citizens can be discharged by pressing a horn bulb with their thumb or foot is a license to take risks. To insist on every car carrying a horn is almost as stupid as if the education authorities insisted on every boy carrying a packet of T.N.T. in his pocket.

Belfast Office Boy Returns As Agent-General

Emigrant Who Became a Statesman and Successful Business Man

London.—An office boy who went from Belfast to Australia nearly half a century ago has returned to England to represent Queensland as Agent-General.

He is Mr. E. M. Mccartney, a man with a humorous smile which must have helped him in his struggling days.

"I went out to Queensland in 1882, at the age of 19," he told me, "and got a post as bank clerk. Then I went in for the law and politics.

"I was pretty successful in both. I became a partner in the solicitor's business of the late Hon. A. J. Thynne at Brisbane, and the firm is still being carried on under the title of Thynne & Macartney.

20 Years M.P.

"In 1900 I was elected to Parliament.

"I served 20 years as M.P., and for a time was Minister for Lands, but then, I left politics and devoted myself to business."

He became chairman of the Queensland Board of the Australian Mutual Provident Society and the National Bank of Australasia. He is also a director of the Brisbane Newspaper Company and other concerns.

"There are splendid openings in Queensland," he said, "for earnest young farmers from Great Britain, "but they must have some capital.

"The day has gone by when anyone an go out to the Dominion in the confident expectation of picking up a job anyhow and anywhere.

"You do not get the offer of £500 a year as soon as you land on the uay. But with a little money in hand it is possible to make headway without much difficulty, and the land is waiting for development in its tropical and subtropical regions."

Mr. Macartney said his appointment as Agent-General was a surprise to him. "A month before I sailed," he said, "I had no idea that it was to be offered to me."

Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of.—B. Franklin.

Saskatchewan's New Government Promotes Popular Programme

Plans to Foster Public Work Which Appeals to the Man on the Street and the Man Behind the Plow

Regina, Sask., Oct. 19.—Saskatchewan's new government is launching out on an ambitious program.

Premier Anderson and his Ministers are carefully planning their actions of to-day, so as to prepare for the next session of the Legislature, the next Provincial election and for whatever comes after that.

For one thing the government is going about its power policy with plenty of energy.

Hon. J. F. Bryant told citizens of Regina and others at a Board of Trade meeting in Estevan of a tentative plan to use Estevan lignite for power plants in the south.

Mr. Bryant struck a popular note. Estevan coal has not been profitably mined to any unusual scale.

The new plan would mean power lines throughout the south country—and electric power for farmers.

Such an ambitious plan, offered in such a definite way, has not been broached before.

Then Mr. Bryant's Public Works department is cleaning out the artificial Wascana Lake, in front of the legislative buildings in Regina.

The lake has never been cleaned and the move is a popular one.

The lake helps to make the buildings a beauty spot but underneath the water level great piles of tin cans and refuse have accumulated during the past 20 years.

Incorporated in this scheme is a plan to build a new bridge across the Wascana at Albert Street. The cost of the $100,000 structure would be jointly paid by the city and the province, with the province offering to atke care of 60 per cent.

Then there is Premier Anderson's scheme to build institutions in the province for the deaf and dumb and also for blind children. At present such children are sent to institutions in Manitoba and Ontario.

Hon. J. F. Munroe, Minister of Public Health, is superintending a survey of mental ases in the province.

The mental hospitals are crowded but it is reported that there are hundreds of "borderline" cases that need attention.

A million dollar law courts building for Regina next year is not an improbability.

The "co-operative" government is doing much to effect the impression that the government is co-operative.

In several constituencies, "co-operative" party organizations have been organized, in readiness for the next election fight.

The photograph here show Premier Ramsay MacDonald being welcomed by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, prior to the premier's address to over 1,500 persons, who packed the convention hall to hear the first words here of the man of the moment. The routine proceedings of the federation convention had been dropped to enable American Congress of Labor to extend hearty reception to British prime minister.

Japanese Minister Arrives in Canada

Hon. Hyemasa Tokugawa Bound for Ottawa to Present Credentials

TALKS ON PEACE

Co-operation Among Nations Bordering on Pacific Urged

Victoria, B.C.—"The friendly relations between Canada and Japan are in nowise a new development and, moreover, their destinies lie together on the great Pacific Ocean," Hon. Hyemasa Tokugawa, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Japan to Canada, said in an interview here recently.

"We both want peace in this particular region, and in order to attain that end between the countries bordering on this ocean we must co-operate, and all of those nations must be determined to do so.

"When we talk about relations between Canada and Japan we must first look upon them as constituting part of the group of countries bordering on the Pacific.

"I think Canada and Japan, being the two older countries on the Pacific, must do their utmost to strive for a continuance of the friendliest relations that exist to-day, and in order to co-operate towards that end we must know each other's requirements, economic and otherwise, so that we may be able to adjust any differences as to those requirements if necessary.

"On my arrival in British Columbia," went on Mr. Takugawa, "I felt I must emphasize this point, because I need hardly say that this province is the one whih is really Japan's neighbor. It also holds the greater part of the Japanese population in this country and is the province through which we do most of our trade with Canada.

"I greatly regret that I must proceed at once to Ottawa, but I hope to come back as soon as the opportunity presents itself and then, as I shall have presented my credentials to the Government, I shall be able to take part in official functions which, on this occasion, I have not been able to accept."

Trade Development

The purpose of his work in Canada said Hon. Mr. Tokugawa, was to look around and determine the wisest course to adopt in the interest of both countries, particularly with respect to the development of trade.

The question of trade enters largely into the work of the new Japanese minister to Canada, Mr. Tokugawa said. Trade between Canada and Japan was a vital thing, and he would like to see trade between the two countries develop to an ever greater extent.

He considered it important that the balance of trade should be as even as possible, and with the object of keeping trade even he hopes a way may be found of increasing Japan's exports to Canada.

On his departure from Tokio, Hon. Mr. Tokugawa was wished bon voyage by Hon. Herbert M. Marler, Canadian minister to Japan.

In speaking of Canada's minister to Japan, Hon. Mr. Tokugawa said, "I am sure Hon. Mr. Marler deserves the welcome he has reeived and is receiving from Japan. I have no doubt that he will contribute to the consolidation of the excellent understanding that exists between the two countries."

Baby Brides; Tragic Evils of Early Marriage

More Than 25,000,000 Girls Under Age of 16 Married in India

Allahabad, Oct. 19.—More than 25,000,000 girls under the age of sixteen are married in India. Of this number more than 218,000 are under the age of five years and 2,000,000 under ten years of age. India also has 15,139 widows below the age of five and 396,556 widows under the age of fifteen.

These astonishing facts are given in the report of the Age of Consent Committee, which led to the passing of the Bill to raise the marriage age of girls to fourteen.

The committee, which was composed of seven non-official Indians and two women (one European and one Indian) under the chairmanship of Sir Moropant Joshi, published a document which makes intensely interesting reading.

Pitiful Conditions

The report reveals pitiful conditions affecting the country's millions of child-wives. Early marriage and its attendant evils, the committee remark, is more terrible, more inhuman, and more shocking in its effects on the entire social fabric than the fearful practice, abolished by British legislation, of Suttee, or widow-burning.

The committee toured over all the main provinces in India. Among the peculiar customs revealed to them in Gujerat was that followed by a sect known as the Kadwa Patidars. Among these people, says the report, "mass marriages of girls take place, irrespective of their ages, at intervals of about once in ten or twelve years, at the dictation of the priests in charge of a certain temple. Even girls of three and four years are married in this mass system."

Amazing Story

The evidence of Rao Sahib Seth Gulabchand of Dhulia (Karnatic) is an amazing frank statement of his own. Rao Sahib told the committee that he was first married when he was twelve or thirteen years of age to a girl aged eight, who in time gave birth to three children in succession, two of whom died, and she herself died a few years later. He married a second wife who was eleven and a half years old. She gave birth to her first child at thirteen and a second child at fifteen. Both the children died, and she died, too, shortly after the second baby.

One of the most peculiar marriage customs prevails among a tribe in Assam. According to this custom, in April, on the Bengali New Year's Day, a big dance is held in which all the unmarried girls and young men join. During the dancing couples who fancy each other elope into the jungle for three or four days. A complaint of seduction is then formally filed by the father of the girl, but after the couple's return to the village the case is compromised and the marriage performed.

Pat's job was to guard the entrance to a road which led to an old and unsafe bridge. Seeing a large car approach he put up his hand. "What's the matter?" demanded the driver. At that moment Pat recognized him as his landlord. "Ah, it's yourself, your honor," he said genially. "Yes, it is," was the reply. "'Tis all right, then," said Pat, waving the car onwards. "My orders are to see that no traffic goes through because of the danger, but seein' it's yourself, go ahead, sir!"

The honeymoon is that part of a girl's life which comes between the lipstick and the broomstick.

Red Russia's Order Against Kissing

40,000 Bacteria Stated as the Cost by Party Leaders

Vienna, Oct. 19.—Moscow's latest edict is "Thou shalt not kiss!" according to travellers recently retrned from Russia, who relate that the Soviet chiefs, not content with abolishing Church, Crown, marriage—and other institutions beloved of man and woman—are now conducting a furious campaign against the kiss.

Hygiene

The "Kiss Peril," it appears, has taken the place of the "Yellow Peril," party leaders declaring that hygiene must take precedence over politics and that the dispute with China can wait.

An anti-kiss league has been formed with branches in every town, large and small; placards exhorting the populace to "Exorcise this shameful and fearful custom!" have everywhere been erected: "Down with kissing!" has been shouted; and waxing youth is being taught the dangers of ignorance.

Even the Post Office has joined in the fray, and letters, in addition to the usual stamp of Lenin, now carry the Government slogan, "Think before you kiss. Every kiss costs 40,000 bacteria."

The campaign will come as a shock to those who know Russia in the good old days before the war, when friends, relations, comrades, and countrymen embraced each other whenever and wherever they met—sometimes as many as twenty times a day. A kiss approximated to a handshake or to a lifted hat.

"Novel" Advice

"In no land," declared Alexandre Dumas pere in one of his travel books, "have I seen people embrace each other so much as in Russia."

Now propaganda has invaded literature, and the latest novel from Moscow ends with this last page advice.—Eighteen-year-old heroine to her lover: "A kiss? Young man do you realize what a kiss means?"

Land at the "Pas" Highly Fertile

A New Farming District May Open Up Following Manitoba's Mineral Development

Winnipeg, Oct. 19.—Almost every day there comes a contribution to the now rapidly accumulating evidence showing the vast possibilities of Canada's once supposedly barren lands. Arriving at The Pas, A. L. Reading, noted geologist, told how wild game abounds along the northern seaboard of Manitoba, and waxed enthusiastic about the fishing possibilities there.

And now comes the story of the success of the one farm "north of 53" and of the optimism of its owner, Mr. W. W. Shore, who cultivates 40 acres just out of The Pas and on the Saskatchewan River. Starting his farm a few years ago, with the intention of demonstrating the possibilities agriculturally of the banks of the Saskatchewan river in Northern Manitoba, Mr. Shore may be proved by time to be yet another "visionary" to show the path to thousands. At any rate, in a rich loam, he grows wheat and vegetables with high yields and raises chickens, turkeys, cows and horses, successfully.

And this is what he says: "There are 800,000 acres of good farming land along the river near The Pas. It is another Peace River district, and all we need is banks to keep back the overflow of the river. They'll come in time, you'll see."

And ladies, listen: Eve took to wearing clothes in the fall.—Dallas News.

Musical Traps For Seal Hunters

Mounties Use New Method to Replenish Larder in North

Victoria, B.C., Oct. 19.—Scientists and others who intend to penetrate Arctic wastes of the Pacific Ocean should take a gramophone or radio outfit with them if the expedition is equipped with dog teams.

This was revealed after arrival of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police patrol on the auxiliary schooner Stroch from a sixteen months' patrol between Herschel Island and King William's land in the most northerly fringe of the British Empire.

To conserve ship supplies, dog feed was secured by the simple expedient of placing the gramophone on deck and playing soulful airs. Seals, evidently liking the music, came close and climbed upon ice cakes to enjoy the entertainment. This simplified a problem as seals sink when shot in the water.

Naval Agreement

London Times (Ind.) Mr. MacDonald deserves a large share of credit for this remarkable achievement. The course of circumstances placed him in the most fortunate position of being able to profit handsomely by the hard work in the cause of naval understanding between the two countries performed thanklessly enough by his predecessor. Undaunted by the bitter disappointment of 1927, the Conservative Government sowed the seed, which the Labor Government have very creditably ripened and reaped.

The cynic says that every time he sees a woman kissing another woman it reminds him of two prize-fighters shaking hands just before the starting gong is rung.

Land Offices on Peace River Busy

Much New Filing on New Homesteads by Prosperous Settlers

Peace River, Alta., Oct. 19.—Determined to secure land before the freeze-up, more than one hundred new settlers arrived at the land office this week and filed on homesteads.

Scenes recalling oil boom days in the Calgary land office were witnessed while the men and women struggled for front positions near the door.

The order is first through the door gets first chance and those nearest it resisted efforts to displace them.

Many of the new comers are well equipped with cash and are touring the country convinced that land near the railway will rapidly double in value

All state they were attracted north through reports that crops here have been better than in any other part of Western Canada.

They admit they are surprised to find the country even better than they expected.

A large number of prospective settlers have been arriving in autos. Many will return south after securing homesteads but others state they intend to pass the winter here.

When Motoring is a "Crime"

London, Oct. 19.—"A man who when drunk, enters a motor-car and drives it is, in my judgment, a criminal," said Mr. Dummett, the Marylebone magistrate. "He knows perfectly well that he is risking the lives and limbs of anybody who may be near where he is driving."

The provincial election in the county of Prescott will have to be deferred, it was learned this week. Crown Attorney Thistlewaithe, who had charge of the revision of the voters' lists in the county, died suddenly before the work was completed. EDUCATIONAL CONVENTION AT KEMPTVILLE

The Eastern Ontario Educational Association met at Kemptville for their Annual Convention on Tuesday October 22nd. Over 125 delegates, mostly school trustees and Inspectors, were present from the ten counties represented in the Association, Mr. P. Laushway, Mountain, presiding.

The opening feature of the convention was the public speaking contest between seven young folk of the public schools. This contest proved of great interest, and was a good example of the value of training in public speaking. The speeches would have done credit to much older persons. The winners were:—
1st, Alexander McLean, Moose Creek, Stormont County; 2nd, Nelda Fader, Brinston, Dundas County; 3rd, Roy Warner, Perth, Lanark County; 4th, Mary Earle, Bishops Mills, Grenville County.

Other contestants were Mary Morrison, Carleton; Dean Cook, Spencerville and Olive Tye Leeds county.

An excellent demonstration of musical training in the public schools was given by Miss P. Walker and the Kemptville children.

Mr. T.A. Craig, Public School Inspector for Grenville County, gave the most informative address on the elimination of the small school. This problem could be met, he said, in four ways:

1, more equable distribution of the cost of education; 2, the improvement in quality of education provided; 3, better and extended opportunities for rural pupils; 4, greater interest in the schools.

A live discussion followed this address, in which reasons were brought out showing the practical difficulties in closing small schools.

Mr. W.M. Morris, Provincial Secretary, spoke on the subject of greater variety of courses of study in secondary schools. He asked if it should not be the aim of education to prepare students for life, rather than for entrance to the University. Continuing, he said we must have the academic course as the foundation of education, but we need, in addition, other studies that are more nearly related to life.

He quoted this definition of culture from Whitehead: "Culture is activity of thought, receptivity to beauty, and humane feeling." He referred to Premier Ramsay MacDonald as a splendid example of a cultured gentleman.

Referring to the usual method of teaching Latin, he said that an appreciative study of English would be felt of more value as an educative force.

Among the resolutions passed was the following:—

"Resolved that a special committee be appointed by this convention to make a survey of the schools in this territory, with an unduly small attendance; as to the need of keeping them open; transportation; and other matters relating to this problem. Said committee to report at our next annual convention.

The delegates passed a unanimous resolution of the courtesy of the Kemptville Agricultural School in giving them the use of the Assembly Hall and in providing a most enjoyable dinner.

Mr. Proudfoot gave notice of motion that he would bring in the following resolution at the next convention:—

"That the Department of Education be requested that the English speaking children of Eastern Ontario be given facilities to learn the French language.
