AGED WOMAN DIES WHEN HOME BURNS

Mrs. John Hillis, aged 73 years, lost her life in a fire which destroyed the home of her son-in-law, John Worsfold, near Morewood, 12 miles from Winchester, on Saturday morning. The aged woman was unable to escape from the burning building after running back upstairs to save some clothing. She was found after the fire, burned almost beyond recognition.

Mrs. Hillis lived with her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. John Worsfold and their three children. Mr. Worsford is a cheesemaker and he arose about six o'clock and got his breakfast and went to the factory, leaving the other members of the family asleep in their beds. About seven o'clock Mrs. Worsford was awakened by the smell of fire and she called her mother and her children and went down stairs. Just a that moment she saw fire behind where the coal stove was and in a moment it seemed the whole room was in flames. Mrs. Worsfold cried to her mother to get outside and she and her children only escaped after having their hair singed by the quickly spreading flames. Mrs. Hillis shouted that she intended trying to save some of her clothes and rushed back upstairs. This was the last seen of her. The house burned very quickly and the remains of the poor woman burnt to a crisp unrecognizable and no part of the body was distinguishable.

LULU MAY JAMIESON

Mrs. Archibald D. Jamieson died at her late residence 274 Durie St, Toronto, in her thirty-seventh year on Sunday. The late Mrs. Jamieson was born in Orillia, Ontario, where she received her early education which she completed at Victoria University University of Toronto, graduating with honors in the modern language course, and subsequently teaching as a moderns specialist in Morewood and Leamington High Schools, Orillia Collegiate Institute and Havergal Ladies College, Toronto.

IMPRESSIVE DOUBLE FUNERAL AT DUNBAR

On Thanksgiving Day, November 7th, the people of Dunbar were greatly shocked and saddened to learn of the sudden death of two of its best known and most respected citizens, Mrs. Harvey Dillabough and Mr. Robt. Durant.

Mr. Durant was apparently as well as usual at dinner but was stricken during the afternoon as he worked in the barn alone. When he did not return to the house an investigation disclosed the fact that he was dead.

Although of a quiet, unassuming disposition, he was much loved by all who knew him. One who said little but did much, a man of sterling worth and strictest principle.

Mrs. Dillabough, who passed away in the Cornwall General hospital, was a niece, being the daughter of Mr. Leslie Durant formerly of Chesterville.

Her death, although not altogether unexpected, was nevertheless very sudden and came as an eren greater shock following the tragic death of her uncle earlier in the day.

She was a member of the Presbyterian Church, Dunbar, and for many years had been active in choir, missionary and other activities. One who was always ready to cheerfully give of her best in the service of her friends and, of her Lord, one whose place can never be filled in the hearts and lives of her associates.

The double funeral service,, conducted by Rev. Mr. Orak, was very impressive. Speaking of the dark cloud of sorrow engendered by the double tragedy he said that without faith no silver lining could be seen, but with faith the darkness disappears for "Christ hath made of death a starlit pathway between the companionship of yesterday and the reunions of tomorrow."

SETTLE FOR $22,000 OUTSIDE OF COURT

Settlement out of court for $22,000 was reported to Mr. Justice Kelly in the non-jury assize at Toronto last Thursday in the suit brought by the executors of the estate of the Mahlon Ford Beach, of Iroquois, against the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. It was agreed that any money already paid into court by the commission would be returned.

The case centred on certain purchases of power made by the power plant which the late Mr. Beach operated in the village of Iroquois. The plaintiffs, Mahlon W. Beach, Benson C. Beach and Charles A. Beach, sued for $51,861 which they claimed was the balance due for power supplied to the commission between April 1, 1919, plus interest to 1923.

Arbitration proceedings under J. M. Robertson, Montreal, in December, 1922, failed to settle the dispute.

DRIVER BADLY INJURED IN CRASH

When the Chrysler sedan in which they were riding was struck by a westbound C.P.R. freight train at Chesterville crossing at 8 o'clock last Friday night, Ward Johnston, the driver, was seriously injured and three passengers w less seriously hurt.

In addition to Mr. Johnston th injured are his wife, a daughter, Orlean, and Miss Mabel Hummell, all of Chesterville. Mrs. Johnston is suffering chiefly from shock, as is her daughter, and Miss Hummell has a sprained wrist and slight internal injuries.

The party were motoring into Chesterville to attend a concert and at the crossing failed to see the freight train which was shunting from a spur leading from the Nestle Milk Company plant to the main line.

The sedan which was demolished was dragged 50 yards before the train was brought to a stop.

The Chesterville station agent, William Redfern, was first to the assistance and he at once notified Dr. William Brown and Dr. J. Clayton who rendered first aid.

It was first feared that Mr. John ston was fatally injured. His condition now, while grave, leads the doctors to hold out hope for his recovery. He is at his home near Chesterville. The other accident victims, while suffering considerably, are in no danger.

Getting Rid of Hoarding Habit

The old adage, "Keep a thing seven years, and you will find a use for it," has tricked many a conscientious and economically minded housewife into what may be plainly called the hoarding habit. With the proverbial seven years in thought she has patiently cluttered her home, burdened herself with the care of her accumulations and deprived herself of the pleasure of many a generous deed. Tricked she has been, for how often when the seven years have passed has she found that moth and rust and changing styles and customs have proven her savings useful only as fuel.

This habit comes easily to those who live long in one house. People who make frequent moves acquire, rather, the good habit of clearing out their belongings, of drawing a swift line of decision between essentials and nonessentials. The woman who keeps every letter no matter how trivial its contents, the man who refuses to weed out worthless ties from his rack and suits from his closet, the child who is not being taught to discard toys which he has outgrown, is each storing up days of discontent and worry for the future.

When one begins to analyze this hoarding habit, whether or not one enjoys the discovery, it will be found that it springs not only from an undue thought for the morrow but is even more often rooted in two other very undesirable qualities of thought —procrastination and indecision. Vast amount of every conceivable sort of thing overflows attics, basements, closets and cupboards not because the owner actually thinks they will be useful at a later day, but because she seems unable to come to any decision as to their proper disposal and so is putting off that decision until a more convenient or a more desperate season.

Not Economy But Indecision.

The spring housecleaning of many a worthy housewife might well be called the annual festival of indecision. She sorts and resorts. Many a day does she spend tucked away in her attic "looking over" its contents, vainly striving to discard and finally ending by keeping them all. "I never like to throw away anything that I did not need it soon afterward," she may say by way of excusing her actions. Occasionally this may be true, but the feeling of freedom which comes from being done with an almost worthless object, justifies an occasional regret and, after all, this may never come.

In a home where there are growing children an attic judiciously used is a splendid thing. When it is a storeroom of real thrift it serves its legitimate purpose, but when it becomes a storage place for every discarded article, worthless or worth-while, it is a "snare and a delusion" When the hoarding housewife begins to wonder why her annual or semi-annual cleaning is so protracted and arduous, she has but to stop to consider the amount of time she is spending unnecessarily. This habit of hoarding, like any other habit, will never be broken until it is clearly seen to be a bad one Even then it will not be broken by halfway measures or a weak stand.

Anyone who allows the hoarding habit to get hold of her, will find her home always crowded. Castle or cottage, it is all the same; the more room the more accumulation. A woman known to the writer who had resolved to break herself of this habit, went from basement to attic, pencil and note-book in hand, making an accurate list of every article, large or small, which was of no immediate use to her, but could be valuable to someone else. Her stand had been taken, and having in mind the remembrance of many a radiant spring day spent indoors unnecessarily, she was ruthless.

Four Years Ago.

She found her basement stored with boxes from the last moving, years ago, kept because in the hazy future they might be needed again. She found lamps from the almost forgotten period when oil-lamps were used in the home; a wash-wringer which had been superseded by the one on the electric washer; an old laundry stove which for many a long day had been replaced by a gas burner. She found barrels and boxes and bottles and cans. She did not find these things in the sense that they were new to her for they were not. Year after year she had been painstakingly caring for them because each looked as though it might be good for something sometime. What she found in her basement was a fair sample of her findings throughout the entire house. The attic was crowded with old furniture—discarded rockers, a couch, a baby buggy, pictures, shades, mirrors—every conceivable sort of household article. More than one trunk was bulging with garments which she intended to utilize sometime. In other parts of the house closets and cupboards and bookshelves were crowded and crammed.

When he list was completed she found through the Want Ad. columns of the daily paper a ready market for several good pieces of furniture, some of the best clothing and the remnants of several sets of dishes. The garments which she decided she could actually use in her own home were reserved. During the year she systematically made use of them and also of a collection of bargain remnants on hand, taking as her guiding thought that a present actual need should be supplied before a future possible one was provided for. Next she acquainted herself with every organization in her town which might make use of her surplus. She found that the Salvation Army and the organized charity association welcomed any and everything which she had to give. Later her heart was gladdened by reports from these gifts. A young mother with her first little one rejoiced in the rocking-chair. Rough floors were made easier for children to play about on because covered with pieces cut from her worn carpets. A widowed mother trying to support her two children by washing found the wringer a blessing. A children's home welcomed the children's books she sent. In an old ladies' home the gay pieces from her long-crowded piece-bag were joyously made into quilts and carpet-rags. A school library was glad to get a dozen volumes which were but stowaways on the home shelves. A large amount of old magazines and papers were sent to a near-by school which was soon to have a paper sale. Some little girls were thrown into a state of ecstacy by receiving a box of dresses, hats, parasols and odds and ends for playing "dress up."

It is quite to the point of this article to paraphrase Pope by saying, "The proper study of mankind is his attic." It is likewise quite safe to say that few of us should like to be judged by the heterogeneous accumulation found therein.

The woman of our story passes no more fine days in either attic or basement. Throughout the year articles which are to be discarded go at once to some place of further usefulness. Housecleaning season is shortened, moths are discouraged and a keener sense of order prevails. Moreover something fine and worthwhile is being developed in the home—the idea of sharing, of looking out for the needs of her fellow men.

Indian Chief Treasured Perpetual Pass

An interesting incident is recalled by the recent celebrations in honor o fthe memory of Chief Crow Foot whose wisdom and farsightedness was largely responsible for the signing of the famous Treaty Number 7 which threw open a new empire in the west for settlement.

It was back in the '80's after the treaty with the Blackfeet Indians had been signed and about the time the Canadian Pacific Railway was pushing its lines of steel into the west, Chief Crow Foot had become known to William Van Horne, then general manager of the Canadian Pacific and as a token of the esteem held for the famous chief by the whites, he was presented with a perpetual pass over the railway company's lines. This pass became Crow Foot's most treasured possession and he exhibited it with pride among his tribesmen.

In some old records of the Company is proof of the old chief's gratitude. A letter to VanHorne reads as follows:

'Great Chief of the Railway

"I salute you O Chief, O Great. I am pleased with railway key, opening the road free to me. The chains and rich covering of your name, its wonderful power to open the road, show the greatness of your Chiefness. I have done.

Farm Notes

Playing Safe With Mushrooms.

Mushrooms make a delicious dish and much has been writtten in recent years on their value as a food.. Many persons at present are able to go into the woods and gather them with confidence, thus experiencing the pleasure of hunting for them and at the same time adding a pleasant xariation to their diet. Many others would follow their example if they were sure of being able to distinguish poisonous fungi from the edible species. The consequences of a mistake are so very serious that it is utter folly for anyone to gather and eat mushrooms unless absolutely certain that the kinds picked are wholesome. Recognizing the widespread interest in this subject, the Dominion Department of Agriculture has just published a comprehensive volume entitled Mushrooms and Toadstools, written by H. T. Gussow, Dominion Botanist, and W. S. Odell. . The authors point out in their introduction that a knowledge of fungi is the only safe means of distinguishing edible fungi from poisonous, and that all so-called "tests" are myths and superstitious nonsense. The popular claim that a silver spoon or coin dipped into a dish of cooked fungi will turn black if it contains poisonous ones, is entirely without foundation. Other tests are equally fallible. The first commandment for mushroom gatherers is: "Eat no fungus of any kind unknown to you. Assume not the slightest risk, and make sure that all specimens collected are safe to eat." How to obtain this certainty is simply and clearly told in the book which will enable the reader to distinguish bad mushrooms from good ones, and deadly mushrooms from harmless ones. The volume, which is well bound and splendidly illustrated, is sold by the King's Printer, Ottawa, at a nominal price of one dollar.

Ornamental Conifers.

For nearly forty years tests of many species and varieties of ornamental trees and shrubs have been conducted at the Central Experimental Farm. Summing up the experience of these years, the Division of Horticulture has just issued a bulletin entitled "Ornamental Trees, Shrubs and Woody Climbers," which gives in convenient form, for any person who wishes to plant his grounds, descriptive lists of the best plants to use. One section of the bulletin deals with conifers. . As is well known there are many beautiful native species of these trees in Canada, but their very familiarity often precludes their use when the cultivation of trees is being considered. Yet no trees are more successful in taking away much of the bleakness of our winter landscape. Some of the best hedges are made of evergreen conifers, and they help to soften the hard lines about a residence whic hour winter does so much to emphasize when there are no evergreens. The conifers, too, are very important for use as windbreaks, their value for this purpose being most appreciated in the Prairie Provinces. A long list of conifers are described in the bulletin, which is available at the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Handling Honey.

The care of honey from the time it is taken from the bees until it is offered for sale is of the utmost importance, for if it is not harvested at the right time and properly stored it soon deteriorates. The time and manner of extracting ,as described in a Dominion Department of Agriculture bulletin on Bees and How to Keep Them, is of the greatest importance. It is essential also to store the honey in a dry, cool place where there is sure to be little or no change in temperature. Honey readily absorbs moisture from a damp atmosphere and if stored in a damp place will quickly ferment.

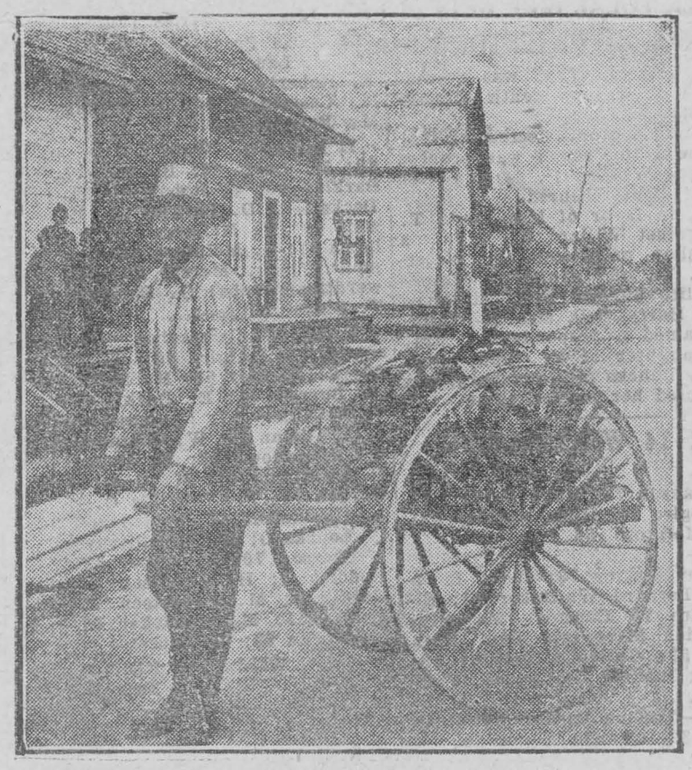

Comb honey must be handled carefully to avoid breakage. It must be stored in a warm, dry room. If stored where the temperature varies considerably, it is likely to granulate.

Clean Bags Necessary for Potatoes

Experiments conducted under the direction of the Dominion Botanist, and described in his latest report, have shown that it is imperative that all sacks used as containers for potatoes should be thoroughly washed before using, in order to ensure complete removal of injurious substances clinging to their inner surfaces. Potato shippers often put up their stock in bags which have previously contained certain salts, fertilizer ingredients, fungicides, and commodities of general consumption, and it is astonishing how many of these commodities have an injurious effect on potatoes. . Even tea, coffee and cocoa, potato starch, corn meal, and bran, which do not in themselves injure the tubers, by virtue of their power to retain moisture induce an enlargement of the lenticels and also provide admirable media for the development of rot-producing organisms, which enter through these orifices. Such chemicals as Epsom salts, sodium, nitrate, potassium nitrate and coarse common salt have a particularly injurious effect on potatoes, especially where damp storage prevails. The use of new sacks will, of course, absolutely preclude injury from this source. The report of the Dominion Botanist may be obtained from the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.—Issued by the Director of Publicity, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

If Mr. Mussolini wants to please everybody he'll make his latest decree, barring speeches, retroactive to include most of his own.

Making the House Snug and Cozy or Winter

There are a number of practical points to be considered in getting houses ready for the cold of winter, and, besides, there are ways of creating an atmosphere of warmth and coziness that will give one much satisfaction and enjoyment.

The man of the house will be interested, of course, in the practical side of the problem and to him will fall the task of looking over the heating arrangements. No matter what system is used, hot water, gas, coal, wood or oil-furnace, or stove, an examination will be rewarded by diminished fuel bills. Going over the equipment to see that everything is shipshape, that devices are regulated properly, that draughts are working as they should, is a part of this necessary survey. The man who is skillful with tools can do much of this tinkering himself.

Many times when a furnace does not draw well, the height of the chimney is blamed for this condition. But it happens that in some cases the fault lies with the pipe or funnel that leads from the furnace to the chimney. Giving this pipe more of a pitch, so that it rises as it approaches its outlet, is often a satisfactory remedy that saves rebuilding the chimney or adding to its height. If the chimney does seem at fault, however, a survey can be made successfully by using a mirror, shifting it to an angle which will catch sunlight and throwing the reflection down into the chimney to locate the trouble, which may be a fallen brick or an accumulation of soot.

Conserving Heat.

With the heat the best that can be supplied, the next step wil be to see that the house itself is going to make the most of the warmth, and conserve it for the rooms. Cracks and leaks about doors and windows can be closed easily by weather strips of several kinds. Storm doors and double windows are also a good investment in the very cold sections of the country. One does not want, of course, to seal up the house like an Eskimo's igloo, but doors or windows which are specially exposed to snowy blasts are better protected with a second door or window. Storm doors do not always look attractive, but there is no reason why they cannot be made so, with a good coat of paint or a bit of decorative hardware in the way of hinges and knob.. In fact, a storm door may give a colorful note to the exterior in the winter when blinds and awnings no longer decorate. Double windows can be hinged on, so that they may be turned back when the other windows are to be opened for ventilation.

Ventilators in the upper part of the house, or in the cellar, should be provided in the winter with suitable closings, if warmth is to be conserved. It is surprising how, even in the mildest climates, shutting the ventilators during the cold weather will keep floors and walls warm and add to the general comfort of the house. Paper laid on floors underneath carpets insulates splendidly against the cold, and extra sheets of paper used for shades over unused windows in attic or cellar all help to keep the cold out and the warmth in.

When it comes to producing an atmosphere of charm and cheer, the woman of the house wil have her say, and will be likely to "say it" with plenty of color. . One is immediately drawn to the house that is light and bright, the one that shows colorful curtains peeping from a window, or gives a glimpse of old-gold or crimson within. Colorful curtains are one of the best means of giving atmosphere drapes can be used to good advantage hangings to suggest the cosiness both within and without. Heavy too, in the winter, for then they don't seem stuffy. If they do shut out too much light, in certain exposures, fabrics of lighter weave should be substituted.

Adding Warmth and Comfort.

Heavy overstuffed furniture is at its best also in the winter months. Velours and plushes by their very texture add warmth and comfort. Arrangement of the lounging pieces, the big armchairs and couches so that they are in the warm corners and along the inside walls rather than the outer ones, is a point well worth remembering. Tables and stands, bookcases, a desk or a chest can be put on outer walls, and placing a table by the window gives one the chance to feature two attractive winter furnishings — potted plants and glowing lamps.

Is there anything quite so friendly as a pot of bright red geraniums smiling through a window in winter, or a lighted lamp shining out into the night? Plants can be arranged on stands nea ra window or on the ledge itself, to furnish a bit of fresh green and color when all is snow-covered outside A room well lighted at night, with soft shades to diffuse the illumination, gives an appearance of warmth that is altogether delightful.

Fortunate indeed is the house that has chimneys that allow for hearth fires. Quite unmatchable is the gleam and sparkle of an open gre, and the fittings about the fireplace add to the picture too. Even the wood basket, or box, has its place in the scheme of things and if it has become dull and drab from use, it may take on new interest painted orange, red, yellow or light green.

Because it is not always possible to have an open hearth, substitutes have sometimes to be chosen. Such "tremendous trifles" as bright pottery, shining brass or bronze create pleasing effects. A copper kettle, for example, has a woy of its own in giving atmosphere, though it may sit on top of a modern gas heater. Mirrors brighten up the house too. Cushions, scarfs, drapes and runners, may be used to "echo" color here and there and make the house thoroughly enjoyable throughout the winter months.

Varied Furs Used in Winter Wraps

In the latest fur novelties are gray gazelle, golden seal, gray mole, dyed kid and shaved lamb. One also that is particularly good for sports wear is an all-over mottled skin called ocelot. Natural broadtail, antelope dyed a deeper-than-natural shade; unborn calf skin, the new Beistchwanz, or more mature broadtail, natria, rabbit and astrachan are the favorites in sports coats. Chinchilla is an old favorite that holds its own and badger is the newest among the season's furs used especially for trimming.

Next in importance to the all-fur wrap is that trimmed with fur. The new coats are almost invariably trimmed with it. For this use fox still holds the lead. All colors are fashionable in it, but the best designers in furs are using most of the natural shades. . Black fox is always chic, especially on black cloth. The new golden seal is used effectively on a straight, dark seal coat for formal day time wear. Darker fur is used for it; high, close fitting collar, and the golden shade is used for deep cuffs, which flare slightly at the upper edge.

There is a distinctly marked difference between the designs of wraps for daytime and evening, the one being made on long, straight, simple lines, the other with diverse treatments.

A lady, after attending a society function, feeling indisposed, ordered her chauffeur to drive to her doctor. The doctor diagnosed her case very quickly. "You have caught a chill," he said, "drive straight home, get dressed, and go to bed."

Business Women's Needs

In clothes are being met by such creations as this navy blue cloth of supple qualities. The gored skirt achieves the flared motif that is ultra-smart.

Taking Care of Household Linen

Every woman homekeeper takes a delight in her linen, but too often treats it badly by lack of realization of the care and protective measures it requires.

Many people blame the fabric when it begins to show signs of early wear. Generally speaking, the cause is to be sought in the laundering and probably it will be found that strong soap, soda, or soap powder have been used. Soda has the effect of dissolving the gum which binds together the fibers of the flax, and naturally, the linen wears badly. Rinsing, too, is of the utmost importance, for if soap is left in after washing, for if soap is left ing causes a chemical action between the soap and the gum, and a change in color takes place which no amount of boiling will afterward repair.

From a famous Irish linen mill comes the statement that the following mixture for stiffening linen is much to be preferred to starch: Dissolve 1 ounce of gum arabic in half a pint of warm water. For use, add 1 tablespoonful of this solution to a quart of water. This mixture may be kept in stock. If the household soap is suspected of containing free alkali which will spoil the color of the linen, give it a test with litmus paper. Dissolve the soap in water and in it dip a piece of red litmus paper. If the paper changes to blue, then free alkali is there.

Careful laundering, however, is not enough. The linen cupboard must be beyond reproach, too. Extremes are bad for linen. A damp atmosphere will surely bring mildew, while the heat of a cupboard that contains a hot-water tank will turn it yellow and give it a tendency to become dry and brittle. Choose the happy mean and store linen in a cool room and in a chest or cupboard to which no ray of light can penetrate. Only so will it keep its snowy color. If linen is used only occasionally, it is a mistake to put it away with starch in it, for this will rot it.

The treatment of stains needs very careful consideration, for strong chemicals destroy the material. It is as well to remind women that many of the big linen firms have research departments, and if stains have proved obstinate and immovable, advice may be obtained from these departments upon application.. Another service not too well known is the needlework laundry, which is intended for the first washing of elaborate handwork. It is handled by an expert at very reasonable cost, and the result is well worth the bother of dispatch.

Bait

The Saskatoon Western Producer (Prog.): When the Conservative Convention is reviewed, one must come to the conclusion, although no particular mention was made of the matter, that it is the desire of the Conservative party to recapture the Government of Canada. It was apparently not the purpose of the gathering to develop an organization and lay plans for the promulgation of great Conservative principles, whatever they are, but to arrange a series of bargain sale principles upon which a power-grabbing organization could be built. The work was done in the Committee on Resolutions. That was the important body and the members were earnest. . Imagine sitting in that great room with one hundred and forty-nine other schemers trying to dig up bait for the vote-fishing two or three years from now!

A London golf club is known as the "Flying Golfers." Maybe its members are after "birdies" and "eagles."

ANOTHER WORD OF WARNING ABOUT RADIO SETS

As predicted last year, radio without batteries, chemicals, chargers, attachments, etc., are now the standard. In another year or so battery-operated sets will be obselete, almost wortheless, wherever current is available.

Those considering the purchase of a radio operating without batteries should bear this in mind: There are two types of "electric" radio—(1) those that are built to operate direct from a light socket, made in one factory, complete in one cabinet—all ready to operate, and—(2) ordinary electric sets that can be "adapted" to light-socket operation by installing a so-called power unit, which power unit generally consists of a 'B" Eliminator, a storage battery and a charger. You still have the "A" battery; you still have chemicals, but the charger is connected to a light socket, and so they are termed "socket-power." This latter type serves very well for those who already have a battery operated set, but cannot afford to turn it in for a new genuine Batteryless Model, but when buying a new radio supposedly "Batteryless," be sure to get the type that is completely batteryless and built to be so.

Of this type the "Rogers Batteryless' is the only one with any record of proven performance behind it. Conceived in 1923 and introduced in 1925, it is the first and only time-tested radio set, complete in one cabinet, made in one factory and operating direct from any alternating current socket (and in most cases it needs no aerial).

Moreover the Rogers was conceived, developed, perfected and made right in Canada and was the world's first Batterless A/C radio set.

Producing such a set that will give uniform performance in all localities under all conditions is not easy. The first year or two brings grief. Now, in its third year, with thousands of sets in active operation from coast to coast the Rogers has proven its merit.

Don't experiment. It may cost you dearly. Look for the name "Rogers;" look for the Rogers A/C Tubes with the top clips and be sure then you'll have no regrets later.—Advt.

Spend 10 Ped Cent. of Income on Pleasure

"At least ten per cent. of whatever income one has should be invested in pleasure," advises liabeth Marbury, writing in the November issue of "Delineator."

Here is some more of the advice given by this "wise woman" to working men and women, and particularly to those who sacrifice all to their jobs.

"It often costs money but amusements are not as expensive as doctors.

"How many old fashioned people refuse to spend on pleasures. They pinch and save and believe that to go to the movies, to the theatre or to listen to music is a waste of their hard earned pennies. This is bad reasoning. Relaxation is the oil which makes the wheels of life go round.

"Some enjoyment is necessary. It is the relief from tension. It is as necessary to the brain as bread is to the body.

"Nothing ages one so fast as to live in dullness. One's vitality becomes sapped, one's outlook becomes warped. Doing anything is better than doing nothing."

What is wrong with the tea? If this question is ever asked at the table you may find that the tea you are using was in a poor package. Careful experiments have proven that Aluminum is the only fit package to keep good tea in. You should try Red Rose Tea and see how fresh and brisk and pungent it is in the Aluminum package. 10T

A "Vital" Problem

London Daily Mail (Ind. Cons.): Farming is more profitable than ever, and in various districts wheat-growing is being abandoned altogether. If things are left as they are the ploughlands of Britain, except in a few favored localities, will fall out of cultivation. What is going to be done to avert that national catastrophe? It is not alone the Farmers' Union but the community as a whole which waits impatiently for an answer. It wants to know how the Government proposes to deal with the problem which was certified to be "vital" in October, 1924.

These international golf tournaments bring to notice some important links of Anglo-American amity.

RUN DOWN IN HEALTH

Why Many Men and Women Are Badly Handicapped

When you are so run down in health that it impairs the efficiency of your work as well as your power to enjoy your leisure hours, or obtain rest, it is time you looked to the cause. If you do not, a serious breakdown is almost sure to resultt. In nearly all cases this condition, which doctors usually describe as general debility, is due to poor blood—blood that is deficient in red corpuscles. When the blood is thin and weak your whole system suffers. You lose appetite, have no energy, your nerves trouble you and you feel restless.

What you need is help to build up your blood and you should begin at once to make your blood rich and red by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. you will soon notice the difference in your health by a better appetite and increased vigor. The reason is that the new blood created by Dr Williams' Pink Pills stimulates all the organs of the body to healthy activity and so the system gains nourishment and strength. . If you are weak or out of sorts, begin gaining new strength to-day by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. "I was in a badly run down condition," says Mrs. J. Potter, of Winnifred, Alta., "when I began using Williams' Pink Pills and they fully restored my health. I strongly recommend this medicine to all weak people."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Parents Punish to Salve Own Ego

That most children are punished not to make them better but because the parent is angry or has had his ego wounded is revealed by Winthrop D. Lane writing in the November issue of "Delineator Magazine."

"Parents have certain pictures of themselves," points out Mr. Lane, "Certain conceptions of themselves, and they do not like to have these disturbed, Even a child, if he steps on an adult's ego, is likely to regret it. And then we have to admit that children are nuisances. Love them as we may, cherish them as tenderly as we wish, they annoy us tremendously. They make us climb the stairs at night to give them drinks; they disobey us; they endanger our property by striking matches. They break things—the lose things. They pile all the chairs in one corner of the room and call it a steamboat. They trail mud through the house; they leave marks on the walls. They break out in new misconduct every day. We can not cope with all the varieties of their mischief.

"And so we punish them. We punish them because they make us angry, interfere with our plans and cause us worry. No parent likes to have his day knocked into a cocked hat."

He Knew.

The colonel's orders to his batman at camp were: To call him first thing, tel him the time, fetch him some tea, and say how the weather was.

In the morning the batman went in and reported: "It's 6 o'clock, sir; here's your tea, and the weather's fine."

The Colonel's haughty reply was: "I know, I know, I know."

The second morning the batman called the Colonel, and repeated: "It's 6 o'clock, sir, here's your tea, and the weather's fine." The Colonel grunted. "I know, I know, I know."

On the third morning the batman again announced: "It's 6 o'clock, sir, here's your tea, and the weather's fine." The Colonel murmured: "I know, I know, I know."

At this the batman retorted promptly: "You don't know anything, because it's 9 o'clock; there's no tea, and the rain is pouring down!"

Comic strip cartoonists are finally making themselves felt. A Pittsburgh woman has been convicted of killing her husband with a rolling pin.

Lindbergh Has Consulting Job

Guggenheim Foundation Says He Will Not Engage in Commercial Activities

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh has been retained by the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics in a "consulting" capacity and will make his headquarters in New York after his return from a trip on which he left recently, it was announced to-day in behalf of the foundation.

The announcement specifically denier that Col. Lindbergh would at present engage in any commercial activities. He will, in his new connection, be left free to "engage in any activities which will, in his judgment, promote the cause of aviation." At the office of the foundation no suggestion could be given as to what those activities would be. . The flyer's tour of the country, just completed, was made under the auspices of the Guggenheim fund.

"Col. Charles A. Lindbergh has determined that for the present at least he will not identify himself with any commercial undertaking.

"The Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics has therefore retained Col. Lindbergh in a consulting capacity. Under the arrangement with him he will be free to engage in any activities which will in his judgment promote the cause of aviation.

"At his request he will be at liberty to make such flights or other experimental efforts in behalf of aviation as he may choose upon his initiative and responsibility.

"He will become a member and trustee of the fund and his official headquarters will be at tthe office of the fund."

GUARD THE CHILDREN FROM AUTUMN COLDS

The Fall is the most severe season of the year for colds—one day is warm, the next cold and wet, and unless the mother is on her guard, the little ones are seized with colds that may hang on all winter. Baby's Own Tablets are mothers' best friend in preventing or banishing colds. They act as a gentle laxative, keeping the bowels and stomach free and sweet. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent colds, or if it does come on suddenly their prompt use will relieve the baby. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cts. a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A homesick Irishman had got a job as crossing guard for a railroad. The foreman handed him a red flag and a green flag, and told him, "Whenever you see a train coming, get out and wave the red flag." "Git away wid ye job!" exclaimed Pat; "me wave a red flag when Oi got a grane one handy. I'll starve first."

If you would achieve success in almost any line you happen to choose, say little and look unutterable things.

Steady Advertising Seen as Investment

Atlantic City, N.J.—"Consistent advertising is an investment second to none," according to C. M. Lemperly of Cleveland, at thhe annual convention of the National Paint, Oil and Varnish Associatio here.

Mr. Lemperly who is sales manager for one of the largest paint firms in the country, declared that not only is advertising essential for the success of any business, but that it must be maintained "because the public soon forgets." Certain manufacturers who though they would save money by discontinuing or cutting their advertising," he said, "can attest to this."

CARRIED WIFE TO BED

Suffered So She Could Not Walk. Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Minesing, Ontario.—"I am a practical nurse and I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to suffering women. For three months I was almost helpless and could not sit at the table long enough to drink a cup of tea. Many a time my husband carried me to bed, I would be so weak. Then he read in the paper of a woman suffering as I did who got better after taking the Vegetable Compound, so he went and got it for me. When I had taken three bottles I was just like a new woman and have had splendid health ever since. When I feel any bearing-down pains I always take it; sometimes a half bottle or whatever I need., It is my only medicine and I have told many a one about it. Any one wanting to know more about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I will gladly write to her. I do all I can to recommend it for I feel I owe my life and strength to it." — Mrs. NEAL BOWSER, R.R. 1, Minesing, Ontario.

Do you feel broken-down, nervous, and weak sometimes? Do you have this horrid feeling of fear which sometimes comes to women when they are not well? Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is excellent to take at such a time. It always helps, and if taken regularly and persistently will relieve this condition. C

MRS. JAMIESON CELEBRATES EIGHTIETH ANNIVERSARY

On the evening of October 10th over seventy immediate relatives and close friends of Mrs. John Jamieson, Nation Valley, assembled at her home to help her commemorate the eightieth anniversary of her birth.

Mrs. Jamieson was born on a farm near Morrisburg, her parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Rae, having a few years before arrived in Canada from Dumfries, Scotland, At the age of eight years she came with her parents and brothers and sisters to reside in Nation Valley on the Rae estate. Fifty-eight years ago she went as a bride to the farm just over the road and where she still resides and celebrated her birthday.

In the seventy-two years she has resided in this district she has lived to see the district one of the best in many miles around. When she first entered it was a wilderness with a few log huts, with all the disadvantages of a backwoods home She says she is glad she has lived to see all the advantages of a home on the farm of today.

Mrs. Jamieson tells us she rode in lumber wagons to the Presbyterian church, North Williamsburg, and very often walked on Sunday.

The guests of honor at the birthday party were pupils who attended Mrs. Jamieson's school sixty years ago. Following is a list of several of whom were at the party: Mrs. Mary Munro, Mrs. Mary Hanson, Mrs. Caroline Froats, Mrs. J. F. Cass, Mrs. Walter Rae, Mrs. Emma Davidson, Mrs Ellen Rae, Mrs. Enos. Munro, Miss Isobel Rae, Mr. Enos Munro, Mr. John Elliott,Mrs. Margaret Kirk, Mrs. Mary Collins, Miss Nancy Gray, Mr. George A. Merkley, Mr. Dan Johnston, Mr. Peter Darling, Mrs. Sarah Thomas.

Mrs. Jamieson showed her pupils who were present a paper sixty years old on which they found their names when she had formed her classes, also her second class certificate, also her agreement to teach the Grays school S.S. No. 5 the name it still bears, for the sum of ninety dollars per year with thirty-five names on the roll. Mrs. Jamieson, although eighty years of age, moved among her guests as easily as she would have many years ago. Most of the evening was spent in visiting and renewing old acquaintances. During the evening the following address was read to Mrs. Jamieson by her youngest daughter, Helen, and the presentation was made by Chas. B.

To our dearest mother on her 80th birthday::

The Good Book says "The days of your life shall be three score years and ten but by reason of strength they may be four-score years."

God has seen fit to lengthen your useful and wonderful life to the allotted span and may it be His will to spare you for years to come to your children who love and adore you beyond any words of expression. Although most of us are many miles away tonight we will be very close in thought and good wishes throughout this memorable and never to be forgotten day.

We all think of you, mother dear, as an example of kindness and affection in which predominates a most unselfish, Christian Character, one who has devoted her life to our welfare and from our boyhood we know by your life you were living the Christ and may we fully realize the fact which I'm sure we all do, and may this statement bring you in your old days, when you have plenty of time to look back over your strenuous life, a comfort and consolation that all you have done is appreciated by your children a thousand fold, and will it be our aim to influence for good all of those who come in contact with us and receive from them a lasting love and respect as you have won before us.

And now, to the most noble, Christian mother in the whole wide world, we ask you to accept this clock and rocker as a little birthday gift from your family.

Mrs. Jamieson, who was taken by surprise, made a very short reply but received a hearty clap of hands nevertheless.

Immediately after, Rev. Mr. Orak of Chesterville, sang by request, "Mother Machree" in his usual pleasing manner and Miss Simser sang "Mother O' Mine" feelingly, with her wonderful musical talent which called forth a loud applause.

Shortly after a full course dinner was served and each guest received a piece of the birthday cake upon which eighty candles had been placed before cutting.

As it was nearing midnight the guests began to think of home, all in saying good-night wished Mrs. Jamieson many returns of the day and thanked the hostess for giving them so pleasant an evening to remember.

Mrs. Jamieson received many letters of congratulations and many birthday gifts for all of which she is very grateful to her friends.

Canadian Buyers Profit by Canada's Export Trade

IN the distant reaches of Britain's far-flung empire you will find General Motors cars, built in Canada by Canadian craftsmen, from Canadian materials.

In five years over 110,000 automobiles have been sent overseas by General Motors of Canada to carry the standard of Canadian quality around the world.

This represents a truly important contribution to Canada's export trade.

It represents millions of dollars to be spent in wages to Canadian workmen, in the purchase of Canadian metals, wood, hides and the countless other materials entering into the manufacture of General Motors cars.

And it represents a greatly augmented production of General Motors of Canada, resulting in lower costs of manufacture, in economies of purchasing, in greater savings of time and labor through greater volume.

Thus, because in India, in Egypt, in Malta, Ceylon or South Africa, someone is buying a General Motors car from Canada, General Motors can offer to you, in Canada, a product of higher quality at a lower price than otherwise possible.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

Death strikes Garrett Folsom while bathing at Ocean Town, N.J. After being perfunctarily examined by a doctor, the body is brought to the Hotel Majusaca, where an inquiry is starter.

Folsom's bathing companions had been Roger Neville, Mrs. Helen Barnaby and Carmelita Valdon. It is established that Folsom, just before his death, had been standing next to Ned Barron, known as the copper king.

Then the startling announcement is made that Folsom had been stabbed to death in the water. Ross, his valet, is questioned, as are Barron and his wife, but no light is shed on the mystery.

Anastasia Folsom, eccentric and masterful sister of the dead man, arrives and takes command. At the inquest it is established that the death weapon was a pichaq, an Oriental knife, and that it and its scabbard had been purchased on the boardwalk.

It is also established that Croydon Sears is a fancier of curious knives. Anastasia engages Titus Riggs to work on the case. He asks permission to go through the dead man's effects.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER XXVI.

"Then, I shall have to speak plainly," said Riggs. "You don't place your late uncle on quite so high a pedestal as his sister does?"

"No—to be equally frank—I don't. I never liked my uncle, but aside from that, I always felt he was—oh, pshaw, I hate to say it—was a little—"

"Go on."

"Well, understand. I mean I thought, I feared rather, that there were some transactions in which he was engaged that wouldn't stand the light."

"Dishonest?"

"Not in the generally accepted sense of that word, no. But dishonorable—oh, I don't know just how to express it."

"Have you any proofs of these accusations?"

"Oh, they're not really accusations. But I always suspected uncle was up to some deviltry, and after I got aunt's wire about his death, I nipped down to his room, where he was staying in New York, and I found a bag full of papers and letters, and I brought it along here with me. Now—well, Mr. Riggs, those documents go to prove that my respected uncle was deserving of very little respect, and that whoever did him in, really rid the world of a pretty black old scoundrel."

"And so you think it might be better to let sleeping dogs lie—"

"Yes, just that. I'm sure that to open up the hidden life of Garrett Folsom would bring to light truths of such a nature tha my aunt would sink under the load of guilt and shame that would attach to his memory."

"You're not exaggerating this, Mr. Pelton?"

"No, I don't think so. I daresay you can guess the sort of nefarious business he carried on."

"From what you say, or rather from what you don't say, I can't help thinking it must be some form of blackmail."

"Yes, that's right. But not any common, ordinary blackmail, or any small jobs. It's merely that he knew a few secrets concerning the lives of several people, mostly his friends—I mean, apparent friends—and over these he had such a fearful hold that they were forced to pay him his price or be exposed."

"This is strong talk, Mr. Pelton."

"But it is true talk. And I have proofs—that is, some proofs. However, I hesitate to bring them forth, because any of them would suffice to throw suspicion on a man who may be entirely innocent."

"And, too, for your aunt's sake, you hesitate to bring forth this new side to the tragedy?"

"Oh, partly for aunt's sake, but more because I feel this way about it. It seems to me that the men my uncle made miserable suffered enough, without being brought to the bar to answer for a murder that they didn't commit. For, naturally, only one man stabbed him, and to let loose a lot of facts that would bring suspicion hot upon the heels of a dozen others, seems a terrible thing to do."

"All this is logical and even ethical from the standpoint of your uncle's victims. But, on the other hand, he was murdered, and his murder ought to be avenged. No matter how great a villain Garrett Folsom had been, it doesn't exculpate the man who killed him."

"I suppose not, but as I said, I'd hate to bring unjust suspicion on a lot of innocent men, and then perhaps not strike the right man among them."

"It's a big question, and it will require some thinking over before we can settle it. Look here, isn't Roger Neville an associate in business with your uncle?"

"He was—in some ways. You see, Uncle Garrett had several lines of business and many varied interests, all of which brought in money. Neville was with him in some of these schemes. But I've no reason to think or assume that Roger Neville had any part in or even any knowledge of these things I speak of."

"Well, we must ask Neville."

"Do it guardedly, for if he knows nothing about it all, we don't want to enlighten him."

"Then again, would it not be wise to let your aunt in on this secret? To be sure, she would be dismayed to learn of your uncle's wrong-doing, but as you have said yourself, Miss Folsom can stand shocks with fortitude. And it may be she would rather know the truth, however bad, than to be kept in ignorance of it."

"I daresay it may be so. But my aunt so reveres and cherishes her brother's memory, that it would go hard with her to learn he was less than she thought him."

"Well, leaving that question for the moment, let us get down to brass tacks. You see, your aunt has engaged me to investigate this case for her. Now, have I a right to lie down on the job, because it seems to be leading into an unpleasant field? Moreover, is there not a possibility that you are mistaken, at least to the extent or weight of these judgments your uncle held over his victims' heads?"

"You don't see it quite straight, Riggs. I have reason to believe that my uncle, while not what may be called a professional blackmailer, yet had a few victims whose secrets he knew, and whom he ground down to the last degree. I believe that anyone of these—say half a dozen—would have murdered him gladly if they had thought they could do it without getting caught. And now one of them did murder him and get away with it, and to bring forward the evidence I speak of would be to arouse suspicion of the whole six—though that's only an approximate number—and lay a black accusation for life on the great majority of innocent ones. And, at the same time, probably not get the real criminal at all."

"How many of these victims you speak of are down here at Ocean Town?"

"That's just the worst of it. I know of two or three, but there may easily be more whom I do not know. Any one of them may be the murderer."

"Complicated situation. And yet, have we a choice in the matter? Must we not follow where the way is pointed out? At any rate, old man, I guess you'll have to let me look through those letters you speak of."

SO, TOGETHER, THE TWO MEN WENT THROUGH THE SUITCASE FULL OF LETTERS AND PAPERS.

Tite Riggs chuckled to himself at the thought that Tubby's precious secret was thus openly announced by Pelton.

Riggs had looked forward to a diplomatic effort on his part to get the nephew of the dead man to exhibit his uncle's papers. And here he was fairly thrusting them on Rigg's attention.

Was he, though? Was he the ingenious, straightforward character he appeared to be?

His attitude about wanting to shield his uncle's memory as far as possible was all right, but could Riggs be sure that the letters and documents he was now about to inspect were intact as when Pelton had found them, or had he tampered with the lot and abstracted any he chose?

It was largely imagination or instinct, but Tite Riggs did not trust Pelton. He didn't suspect him of having any hand in his uncle's death, but he did think the nephew was glad to inherit his legacy, and that if he could further feather his nest in any way, he would do so.

So, together, the two men went through the suitcase full of letters and papers.

THE GOLF WIDOWER'S DIVORCE HEARING

(A Chicago man has sued his wife for divorce on the ground that she neglects him and his children to play golf.—News item.)

Q.—Is this lady your wife?

A.—Her face is familiar, but I don't recall her tan.

Q.—It's been a long time since you've seen her?

A.—I haven't seen her to speak of since warm weather set in.

Q.—When were you married?

A.—In December, 1911.

Q.—Why in December?

A.—All the golf courses were frozen over and she could spare the time.

* * *

Q.—Were you happy?

A.—Until the following spring.

Q.—What happened in the following spring?

A.—The links reopened.

* * *

Q.—Did your wife ever spend any time at home?

A.—Only when it stormed.

Q.—You did everything you could to make your home attractive to her, did you not?

A.—I even put grass on the floor and had the entire house trapped by one of the best known golf course designers in America.

Q.—Did she make any complaint?

A.—Yes; she said she never could be happy in a home that had no water hazards.

* * *

Q.—Was she extravagant?

A.—Extravagant to the extreme.

Q.—What do you mean by that?

A.—She often lost as many as eight golf balls a day.

Q.—And you had to buy her new ones?

A.—Yes.

Q.—This did not keep her content?

A.—No, I had to buy some of the fifty cent balls and she used to complain constantly that I couldn't afford to keep her supplied with dollar ones.

* * *

Q.—Have you any children?

A.—Three.

The Wife (interrupting): FOUR!

Judge: Which is right? Your wife says four.

A.—She's played golf so steadily she can't say anything else.

* * *

Q.—Your wife named the children, did she not?

A.—Yes.

Q.—What did she name them?

A.—Mashie, Niblick and Cpoon.

Q.—Was she kind to them?

A.—Well, she used to let them play with her old score cards.

Q.—Did this have a good influence on them?

A.—No; they grew up to be inveterate liars.

* * *

Q.—You have had very little of your wife's company?

A.—I figure I have only seen her for about eleven weeks out of the last sixteen years.

Q.—Did you ever chide her about this?

A.—Yes.

Q.—What was her answer?

A.—She said that was par for the match.

Judge: Decree granted. Custody of children to husband; custody of golf clubs to wife!

Mrs. Grayson Abandons Transocean Flight; Returning Here to Consult With Sikorsky

Old Orchard, Me.—Mrs. Frances Grayson announced the return of her amphibian plane, The Dawn, to New York, with the words:

"In my disappointment of to-day, I can only strive for a bigger, greater success to-morrow."

Mrs. Grayson made known her decision in a dramatic way at the flying camp she had maintained here for almost three weeks, when with only a few moments' warning she handed a typewritten statement to the newspaper men.

The purpose of the return and the consequent postponement of the proposed flight to Copenhagen was to confer, she said, with Igor Sirkorsky, builder of the plane. It appeared probable that this would eliminate The Dawn from any transatlantic flight before Spring.

"I wish to ascertain," she said, "why the plane gained altitude, then lost 400 feet, according to Pilot Wilmer Stultz on our third attempt at the end of four hours when the plane was approximately 1,000 pounds lighter, causing him to turn about and head westward toward Old Orchard to gain altittude, which he failed to gain within the one hour before the engine went bad..

"I have arrived at this conclusion after making these attempts and giving 100 per cent. co-operation to my flying personnel, whose experienced judgment I have always heeded. After careful analysis I have decided that expert opinions and further tests are advisable before attempting another take-off. In making this decision, I believe I am exercising common sense and good judgment."

School With Glass Walls Will Be Built in Berlin

Berlin.—The Steglitz District of the German capital is to have an enormous new public school constructed practically entirely of glass.

According to the plans, the building will consist of a frame of steel and concrete, with outside walls of heavy plate glass. The partitions separating the classrooms will also consist of glass.

The idea is to bring as much sunlight cheer to the teachers and pupils as possible. To carry the cheerfulness still further, the new school will be surrounded by a beautiful park, visible from every section of the building, even the inside rooms. If the experiment is successful all new schools here will be built along the same lines.

The New Negro

He scans the world with calm and fearless eyes,
Conscious within of powers long since forgot;
At every step, now man-made barriers rise
To bar his progress—but he heeds them not.

He stands erect, though tempests round him crash,
Though thunder bursts and billows surge and roll;
He laughs and forges on, while lightnings flash,
Along the rocky pathway to his goal.

Impassive as a Sphinx, he stares ahead—
Foresees new empires rise and old ones fall;
While castle-mad nations lust for blood to shed,
He sees God's finger writing on the wall.

With soul awakened, wise and strong he stands,
Holding his destiny within his hands.

LAWS TO BE UNIFORM

Ontario Attorney-General Pleased With Result

In a wire sent from Ottawa to his office in the Parliament Buildings, recently, Attorney-General W. H. Price told of arrangements which have been made by the Dominion Government to aid the provinces in foiling fraudulent stock companies.

Mr. Price stated that the Government had pledged itself to three definite actions designed to make more difficult the flotation and operation of fraudulent companies. It is understood that these promises will be implemented by legislation in the House of Commons at next session.

In the first place the Dominion will refuse incorporation to companies which are designed to do business solely within a certain province. This action is expected to remove the problem of dual control under which many "fake" companies have hidden in the past.

Another regulation will give to the province greater powers in regulating sales of stock by companies under Dominion incorporation, which will strengthen the hands of the provinces considerably in dealing with fraudulent promoters.

An effort will also be made to obtain uniformity in the forms to be filed with the Dominion and Provincial Governments by companies seeking incorporation, and also to compel the selection of the same date for filing papers both with the province and the Dominion.

This action is believed to be a direct outcome of the deliberations of the committee on "blue sky" laws in connection with the inter-provincial conference of which Hon. Mr. Price was a member. The Ontario Attorney-General was most active in the committee in urging reforms to the Companies Act, due to the "clean-up" which he is now attempting among Ontario companies which have come under suspicion.

Crew Luckily Escape in Life Boat as "Wacouta" Sank

GALES GENERAL

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Nov. 13.—The local passenger and freight steamer Wacouta, which plied between the Soo and Bruce Mines, was sunk in from 30 to 35 feet of water in the line of traffic in Wilson channel, 200 or 300 yards out from the Richards Landing dock, during the blizzard on St. Mary's River early yesterday afternoon. The Wacouta had just unloaded its six passengers at the landing and was trying to make a turn in the rough sea, en route to Hilton, when her cargo of 35 or 40 barrels of gasoline and oil and other freight suddenly shifted, a squall came up and the boat commenced to sink. A lifeboat was quickly lowered and the crew, consisting of Captain Percy Kent, of Richards Landing, owner of the boat; Engineer Charles Harrison, of the Soo; and the cook, Miss Dorothy Maltman, of the Soo, got away in safety. The boat sank in five minutes.

LINER ALBERTA DAMAGED.

The C.P.R. passenger liner Alberta arrived at the Government dock last night in a damaged condition from Fort William, after experiencing one of the roughest trips in its history. The waves in Lake Superior were running 30 feet high, according to mate Fred Logan, of Collingwood, who said it was the most hazardous trip he had ever undertaken. The boat was blown on to rocks in St. Mary's River, near the Government dock, and was released after three hours' strenuous work by a tug of the Great Lakes Towing Co. Seven or eight doors were stove in, and and old curved stairway in the stern of the boat was blown to matchwood. The steamer Manitoba also reports a strenuous trip on her way to the Soo, and she too, suffereed slight damage, but proceeded on her way.

BREAKS TOWLINE.

Rochester, N.Y., Nov. 13.—A barge which broke loose from its tug yesterday in the storm which swept down on Lake Ontario from the west, and a coastguard lifeboat, which put out to aid the barge, were safe in port tonight.

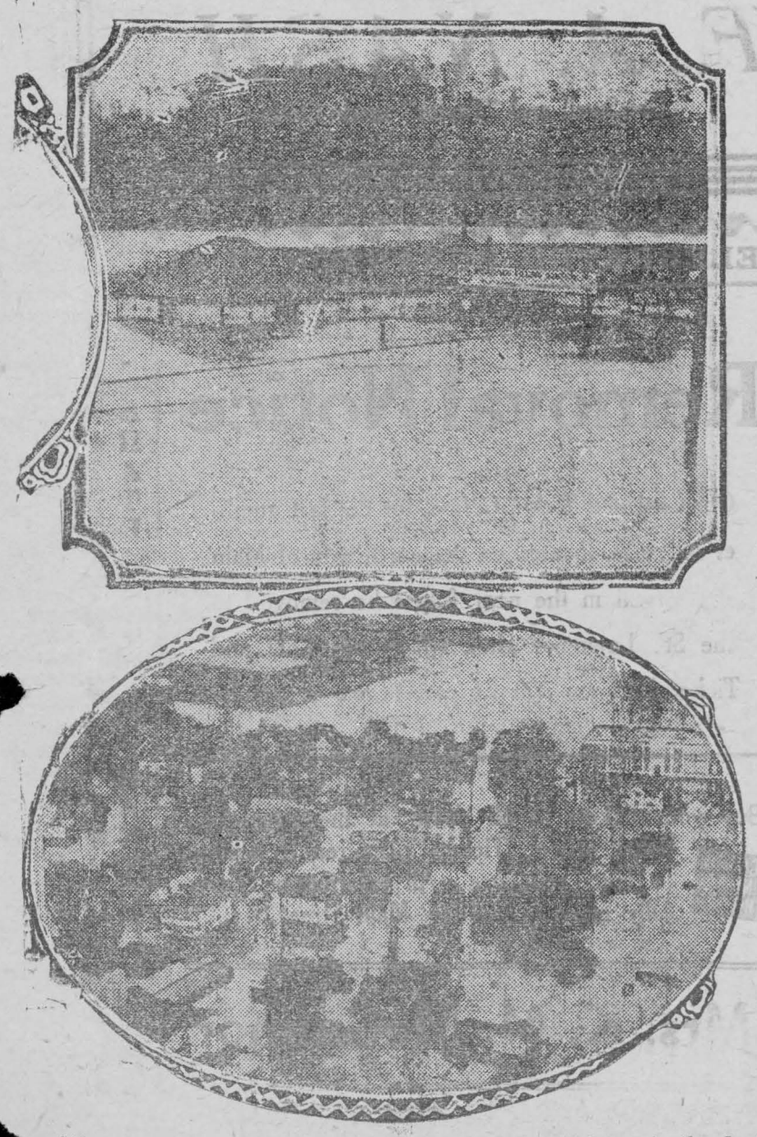

Answer Honor With Honor

"Our Enemies Broke It; Our Dead Kept it," States Rev. W. A. Comeron at Christie Street Service

"Our enemies broke their contract with human society; our dead kept that contract," said Rev. (Capt.) W. A. Cameron in his address at the Armistice memorial service in Christie Street Hospital. "The only way that we can keep that contract between the dead, the living and the unborn is to remember that we must answer honor with honor, unselfishness with unselfishness, sacrifice with sacrifice. Unless we intend to do something like that a service like this is nothing more or less than a farce; let us stop building war memorials, and let us stop putting the names of those men on war memorial tablets. If we don't intend to keep faith, the best thing we can do is to bury our dead so deeply that they can't come back to disturb and haunt us." The legacy of the dead was both a memorial and a mandate, said Capt. Cameron.

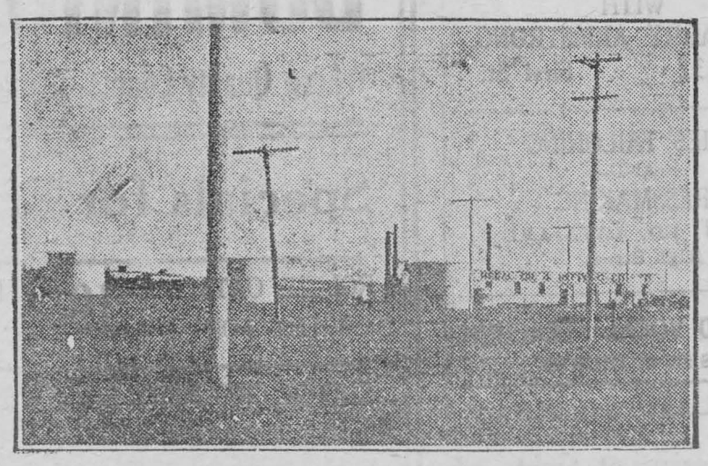

The hospital auditorium was thronged to capacity for the service, which opened promptly at ten o'clock. Along side and back walls were lined the wheel chairs of severely disabled men, and for those unable to leave their beds to share in the service with and for their comrades, it was broadcast through the wards.

Discoveries at Vimy Ridge Only Intact Portion of Line

Canadian Engineers Have Discovered the Only Portion left Intact of all the Battle Fields Along the Western Front

To Be Preserved as a Permanent Memorial

MOVING SIGHT

By "A Canadian in France"

Vimy Ridge, Monday, Oct. 17

Thousands of former soldiers are visiting the battlefields of France and Belgium in the hope of finding trenches, dug-outs, or the exact spot where they received their "blighties."

In the Ypres Salient they see nothing but flourishing fields of corn; flax, oats, and barley. There is not a trench left in Belgium except a few doubtful examples on Hill 60.

In France the scars of war are more visible, but a strenuous peasantry has filled the shell holes and has rebuilt its farms on the front line. It is amazing how swiftly the plough and the building contractor have wiped out all traces of war.

Sniper's Post

I found to-day the only spot in France where a man can feel that he is back again in 1914-1918; where he can stand at a sniper's post and fit the rotted butt of a rusted rifle to his shoulder as he peeps out between the bushes towards the German trenches. The wire is still up in "No man's Land," duck boards lie in the trenches, officers' beds, rotting and collapsed, still lie in the chalk dug-outs.

Hundreds of names and many messages are written on the chalk in indelible pencil, as fresh as when they were written ten years ago Mills bombs with the pins in them repose on ledges, cans of bully beef, tin hats—all the familiar debris of those sad days—are to be seen as they were left.

This amazing spot is the famous Grange Tunnel, on Vimy Ridge, which has just been opened up by the Canadian Battlefield Memorial Commission. It is to be preserved for the benefit of posterity as a kind of textbook on trench warfare, and is destined to become the most remarkable relic of the war.

Living Memorial

The project began a year ago as a side-line to the Canadian memorial on Vimy Ridge, which will not be completed until 1931. The stone for this stupendous shrine comes from the ancient Roman quarries round the Bay of Spalato in Dalmatia. While waiting for supplies of this stone to arrive, it occurred to the Canadian engineers that it might be interesting to try to locate the famous Grange Labyrinth—the miles of underground passages which the Canadians pushed out to within a few yards of the enemy's lines.

Map references were taken, and the entrance to the tunnel was discovered choked up with brushwood. The work of clearing the tunnel has taken a year, and it is not yet completed.

So interesting were the discoveries that the commission decided to rebuild the trenches, preserve the dugouts, and make the Grange Tunnel a permanent sight. The trenches have been lined with concrete sandbags. The concrete is poured in wet, so that when the sandbags rot the marks of the mesh will remain; the duckboards have been cast in concrete, all wood has been taken out of the dugouts, and the passages have been reinforced with concrete and metal. The Grange Tunnel has at least a century of life before it.

I was shown around the tunnel by Captain Unwin Simpson, Royal Canadian Engineers, who is in charge of the work. On the way down is a notice: "These walls are sacred to the names of soldiers who inscribed them during their occupation in the war of 914-1918. Please omit yours."

A Labyrinth

We entered a dark tunnel and found ourselves in a labyrinth of passages, dug-outs and battalion headquarters cut far below the ground level in the white chalk of Vimy Ridge. It was as thought we had been switched back to April 1917—that time when the Canadian divisions advonced to the conquest of Vimy Ridge. Nothing had changed.

The smoke from the candles once set in niches to light the passages was still black on the chalk. The dug-outs and the walls of the communicating passages were covered with names carved in the chalk or written in pencil and as legible as when they were inscribed during the great battle of Arras. The maple leaf of Canada was carved with an original variety in a hundred different places, and on the walls I read at random such inscriptions as these:—

103234. James Burton, A Company, the Royal Canadian Regiment, May 8, 1917. Still alive and kicking.

670080. W. J. Auchincloss, A Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, May 8, 1917. Untouched by whizz-bangs as yet.

I cannot describe the feelings with which a man in these days approaches the inscriptions written below the earth of the Arras sector. In their cheery naivete we who have survived and can look back on 1917 with the calm unconcern of historians, seem to touch hands once more with these Canadian boys who, ten years ago, crouched in these chalk dug-outs, still "alive and kicking," still "untouched by whizzbangs," joking, laughing, waiting, quite unconscious that they were carving not only their names, but also history.

Headquarters

We walked for about half a mile, going deeper into Grange subway, until we came to battalion headquarters. On the wall of a dark, damp chalk chamber, which had been used as an officers' mess during the Canadian advance on Vimy, were carved the following names:—

Major McCaghey, Major Collins, Lieutenant Abbott, Lieutenant Jamieson, Lieutenant H. Cook, May 10, 1917. 52 Battalion Canadians (B Company).

In a little carved shield were the words, "Dick Swift."

We stood there, lighting matches in the dark, wondering what had happened to these men, wondering whether they still live somewhere at home in Canada, or whether they fell on Vimy Ridge. No matter whether they are alive or dead, their personalities live beneath the soil of France so vividly that one expects to meet them round the next corner.

While we were going on towards Mine Shaft, which the Canadians drove beneath the enemy lines, my foot kicked a small object. It was a tin of bully beef! It had been opened, but it had not been eaten, and it was ten years old! I leave to the imagination of any man who knows what bully beef was like when comparatively young to judge how this specimen looked and smelt.

"See this?" said Captain Simpson, holding up a queer grey slab. It was gun cotton, stamped 1916.

"Down there, about 100 feet below our present level," he said, "we found a dump of Mills bombs and also sacks of T.N.T. We have removed them reverently."

In the amazing collection of names written on the walls I came across two which roused by curiosity. They were:

Ship No. 7,129, 1st Section, 7th Division, U.S.M.C., Texas Leather Neck Corps.

Ship No. 3,112, G.M., 2nd Class, 3rd Division, Flagship, U.S.S., Saratoga, Asiatic Fleet.

Problem of the Ridge

What on earth were these two American sailors doing with the Canadian armies on Vimy Ridge? How did they get there? Were they deserters from the American Navy who, becoming weary of America's indecision, had joined up with the Canadians? Or were they shipwrecked mariners who had gone to Vimy in search of life?

I prophesy that books will some day be written about Grange Tunnel and the names which it perpetuates. The Canadian Battlefields Memorial Commission has carved, perhaps unwittingly, a greater memorial even than that expensive shrine which the Canadian Government is now building on the crest of Vimy Ridge.

Here in this dark tunnel, and here only, do we seem to meet the men who fought and died. Here only do we seem to see again in the long chalk passages those well-known faces; here only can we read their signatures—no doubt in many cases their last written words—written with the indelible pencils with which they wrote their letters home.

Canada has, with splendid and characteristic foresight, carved a shrine which is sacred not only to her army, but also to all the Allies. Here British, French, and Belgians will gather in years to come and say: "This is how our men lived during the great war." The Grange Tunnel is, and always will be, the greatest and most touching sight on the western front.

Engineering Feat

During the early months of 1917 eleven large subways were constructed to aid the concentration of the Canadian troops for the attack on Vimy Ridge. The largest was the Grange Tunnel, built mainly by the 7th Canadian Infantry Brigade.

Grange Tunnel had three exists for the troops, and constant streams of men, wounded and unwounded, passed through it during the battle. Its minimum depth was twenty-five feet, it had electric light and a water supply, and there were numerous dugouts, dressing stations, and ammunition dumps.

Former Canadian Army Officer Burned to Death in London Fire

Agonized Spectators Watched Him Fall Back Into the Flames After Making BraveFight for Life

London.—Fire which gutted a row of twelve houses at Windsor early Wednesday morning claimed as a victim George Leonard Bull, aged 42, a former lifeguardsman who served during the war as a captain in the Canadian army. A woman also lost her life in the fire.

Captain Bull, who was known locally as "John Bull," and was steward in a local territorial club, made a brave fight for his life and finally fell back into the flames in full view of the agonized spectators. He was handicapped by a broken leg and was unable to mount the window sill in an upper room from which he had previously pushed his wife to save her from the fire after she had dropped their baby from the window into a blanket being held for it. The baby was not injured and the mother's injuries were slight.

After his wife and child were out of the burning dwelling, Bull shouted to his would-be rescuers to go to the rear of the house, but when they arrived there they realized that it was impossible to enter the building owing to the rapid work of the flames. Bull made a last desperate attempt to climb out of the window, but was unable to do so.

Fifty people were rendered homeless by the fire. Many of them narrowly escaped from the burning buildings, fleeing in their night apparel. All their belongings were burned. In the furniture, which was destroyed, were suites belonging to two couples who are to be married on Christmas Day.

Capt. Bull left Canada in late 1916 with the 170th Batt. of Toronto, and again served in France with the Cavalry Brigade.

The Final Session

Oriental Question Before Conference of Premiers at the Closing Session, But Was Subjected to Censorship

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 11.—One feature of the concluding session of the Dominion-interprovincial conference last evening was subjected to censorship and cut out of the Federal announcement. It was the discussion initiated by Hon. A. M. Manson, Attorney-General of British Columbia, regarding the Oriental question.

Mr. Manson, who was instrumental in having the subject placed on the agenda, took very strong ground in favor of Oriental exclusion. He gave statistics to show how the Oriental population is increasing in British Columbia owing to the fertility of the race and how the number of these children attending the schools is only a comparatively small distance behind white pupils. Mr. Manson stressed, particularly, the danger of inter-racial marriages, stating that, if something were not done, that would soon become a great problem. Already it has made its appearance with white and Orientals going to school together and the latter speaking perfect English and acquiring English customs, it was readily conceivable how relations might develop that would later lead to marriage. From such alliances would be an issue of a kind that would seriously affect the social structure of the province.

The general effect of Mr. Manson's argument was for the banning of Orientals and the maintenance of a white British Columbia.

Some view was expressed that for imperial and other reasons the discussion so far as it went, should not be broadcast. Little else was said about it, and of course, no resolution was adopted, but the case was presented forcibly and seemed to create considerable impression.

Of the nine premiers who attended the conference, only Messrs. Bracken and Baxter remained here to-day, though other ministers are staying. Premiers McLean and Brownlee, who are making side trips, will return to the city before going home. They are scheduled in the next few days to have an interview with the Minister of Railways respecting the development of the Peace River district.

Heifetz Rejects $3,750 for a Broadcast

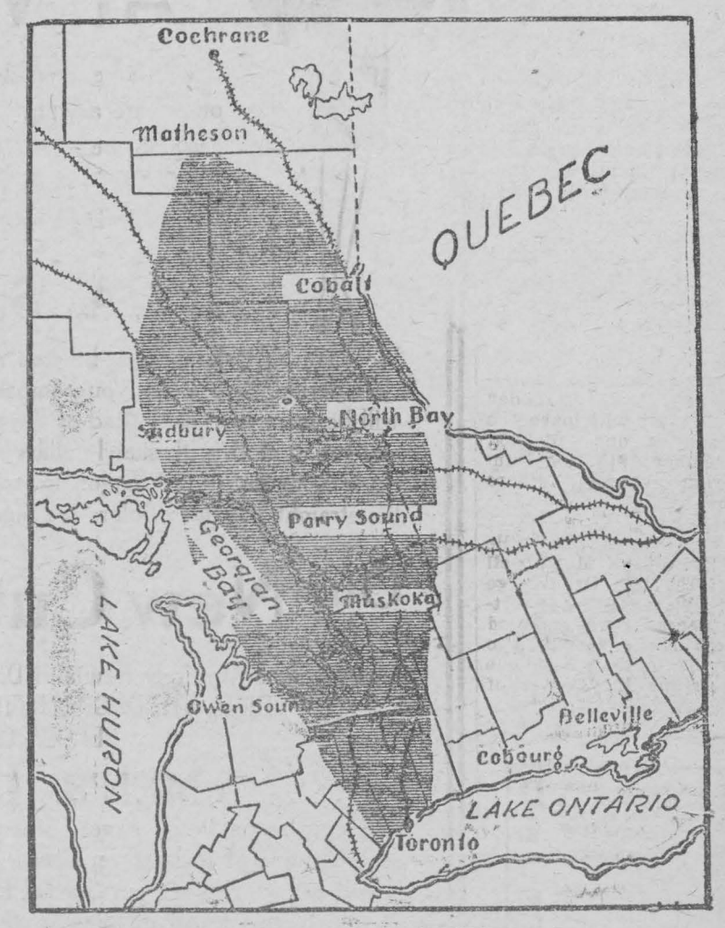

News comes that Jascha Heifetz, the violinist, because of concert contract restrictions, turned down $3,750 offered him by the Broadcasting Company of Australia, for a microphone appearance of twenty minutes at Station 3LO, Melbourne.

Whereupon a listener wrote: "If 3LO can afford to pay Heifetz a big fee to broadcast, why can't they afford to give us better artists than they do?"

"Complaints are made of monotony," was the station's rejoinder, "but no sooner does 3LO determine to meet criticism of musical starvations by such a succulent dish as one of the greatest violinists in the world than back comes a stone, and a stentorian yell of 'Give us our old friends, but pay them more and they'll sing better,' as if a singer sang mezzo voce for a guinea and fostissimo for two."

All that stands between the college graduate and the top of the ladder is the ladder.

WHY NOT THE BEST?

When a very superior article can be had at the same price as an inferior article one has no hesitation in taking the better one. That is human nature. In the Canadian newspaper field there is one "best" and that fact is admitted by all. The Family Herald and Weekly Star, Montreal is in a class entirely by itself, and Canada is proud of it. It is a wonderful combination of three publications, a great newspaper, a clean, wholesome family magazine and an agricultural paper without an equal. All three in one big 72 page paper, and all three for the price of one—only a dollar a year. You should have your own local paper without doubt, but your home would be enriched by the weekly visit of The Family Herald and Weekly Star. You will never regret it.
