Cross Set Afire At Finch

Ontario Provincial Police are investigating the burning of a fiery cross on the lawn fronting St. Bernard's Roman Catholic presbytery, Finch, Monday night.

Police said the cross, measuring about six feet in height, was apparently made of three-by-fives and wrapped in jute bagging which was soaked in some flammable liquid. It was almost destroyed by the flames.

The cross was set afire on a crushed stone driveway in front of the presbytery which is occupied by Rev. M. J. O'Brien, parish priest.

Police said Father O'Brien told them he noticed the cross burning about midnight Monday. It was set up on a stand made of three pieces of board nailed to the bottom of the cross. They said Father O'Brien told them there was no one around at the time, that he knew of no enemies and was unable to explain why the cross had been ignited in front of the presbytery.

Police investigation is being conducted by Cpl. George Nault and Cst. H. W. Bedard, of OPP District 11 headquarters.

Crosses have been burned in the area over the past several years, the most recent incident being at Newington a few years ago.

Overturned Boat Found Hunters Reported Safe

With the finding yesterday of an overturned boat floating on Rideau Lake near Poonamalie Lock, hope practically faded for the safety of three duck hunters missing since last Saturday.

The missing men were Stanley Nignett, 39, of Smiths Falls; John Jordan, 37, of Lombardy, and Cecil Dawson, 40, of Smiths Falls.

The boat had been blown against the south shore of Little Rideau Lake by the wind and has been identified as one owned by Jordan and used by the three men when they left Poonamalie Lock at 11 o'clock Saturday night, headed for the Hignett cottage on Box Island, two miles away.

It was known that the missing trio had spent Friday night on the island and had returned to Smiths Falls some time Saturday.

That evening they headed back to the island in a 12-foot outboard owned by Jordan. The automobiles of Hignett and Jordan were found parked at Poonamalie.

A gun belonging to one of the hunters was found inside the locked-up Hignett cottage. Water in some pans was frozen. This led to the belief that the hunters had intended returning to the cottage but had never reached their destination.

Mr. Dawson and Mr. Jordan are single while Mr. Hignett is married and has one child. Mr. Dawson is a brother of Mrs. Donald Hutton, Chesterville.

The missing men are reported safe this morning, Thursday.

Fort Chimo on Ungava Bay Visited Barney Marshall, Kemptville, Speaker

Barney Marshall, Kemptville Rotarian and a member of the firm Marvan Equipment Ltd., told of his Fort Chimo experiences at Rotary Monday night. Mr. Marshall was introduced by Leon Marcellus.

Fort Chimo is situated on Ungava Bay on the northern coast of Quebec on Hudson Straits. It is 1250 miles north of Montreal and is actually closer to London, Eng., by boat than to Montreal. The speaker explained that Fort Chimo was the location of a large air station during the last war operated by the American government. Upon their removal from the station a large quantity of war material in excess of 3½ million pounds was left there for disposal. The items ranged from one pound articles to 50-ton cranes. Bidding in competition with other Canadian companies, the Kemptville business was able to secure the contract. The purchase of the equipment was on an "as is, where is" basis.

The speaker gave an interesting story of the difficulties that were overcome before the last of the equipment was removed from the Chimo shore. Eskimos and Indians were enlisted for their aid and much of the material was manhandled into the waiting barges.

The shipping season there lasts only 90 days and the largest boat they chartered cost the company $1250 a day.

The speaker was thanked on behalf of the club by Keith Graham.

Newington West Farm Forum Meets

Newington West Farm Forum discussed at a recent meeting the following: Understanding of agricultural problems in all parts of Canada, development of leadership, neighbourliness and sociability, development of a better informed community.

It was thought that the four features are so closely knit together that it would be difficult to separate them. If a Forum is successful in bringing out any one of the points, much has been gained.

Forums develop projects in the neighbourhood and it was felt that the local organization co-operated with other groups, such as Flood Relief and the County Federation of Agriculture.

Nominations

$5,000 per month, $60,000 per year it cost to run Chesterville in 1954. Taxes supplied nearly $44,000 of that money.

In 1954 not more than two dozen persons were present at any council meeting and none sat out any full meeting as observers. The interest that generated such a large voters' turnout in December of last year seemed to die aborning.

Just about this time last year, these columns were discussing the same yearly matter, that of attending nomination meetings here in the village and in the neighbouring municipalities. Last year there was an excellent response in the town and a good, well-attended nomination meeting resulted. After elections, interest seemed to die. Having delegated authority into the hands of council, the ratepayers of the community evidently considered the matter ended.

An accounting will be made of the year's work on the 26th of this month. At that time, in the Community Hall, members of the town will have the opportunity of reviewing the year's work with council. Reports will be presented and newly nominated personalities will present themselves for their first public words. Decisions will begin to be formed as to who will have a hand in spending next year's $5,000 a month of the taxpayer's money.

Will you be at the nominating meeting?

Nestlé—A World-Wide Organization Enterprise Operates 122 Plants in 30 Countries

The following article appeared originally in the magazine "Advertising Agency." It is, we believe, of special interest to local readers, as it deals with the world-wide organization of the Nestlé firm which have an ever-growing plant here in Chesterville.

In the small glistening town of Vevey, Switzerland, two modest factories stood side by side; one was Henri Nestlé's milk condensery ,the other, Daniel Peter's chocolate factory. One day the foremen from the two plants fell into conversation. What would happen, they wondered, if Peter's dark chocolate were mixed with Nestlé's condensed milk? They tried it, and milk chocolate, predecessor of many Nestlé food products, was born.

Today the giant globe-encircling enterprise of Nestlé, with 48,000 employees and 122 plants in 30 countries, does close to a billion dollars' worth of business a year. It is also changing dietary habits and sparking new dairy industries all over the world.

Nestlé foods are eaten almost everywhere. Travellers on the Orient Express sip its Nescafé, explorers on safari in Africa eat its dehydrated Maggi soups; women on rubber plantations in Sumatra raise their babies on the company's canned milk.

Besides its popular milk chocolate and dehydrated coffees, Nestlé invented bouillon cubes and developed a wide variety of specialized infant fods. In fact it was baby food which started the business.

The Beginning

Henri Nestlé, founder of the company, was an amiable putterer—"quaint but kindhearted," are the words a friend used to describe him. He tried selling lemonade, bottled water, bone-meal fertilizer and a variety of home remedies. In 1865—when he was 51—he began experimenting with infant feeding. At weaning time babies frequently failed to adjust to solid foods and died of malnutrition. Couldn't something be done for such infants? Nestlé began puttering in his home kitchen.

He hit upon a biscuit made of wheat flour, sugar and milk. When ground up and softened with milk it made an easily digested food. A doctor friend of Nestlé's had a patient, a baby who had been unable to tolerate any solid food and was slowly starving to death. On Nestlé's food the baby thrived. News of the success brought other calls for the new baby food and, in 1868, Nestlé opened a small factory.

Expanding Business

With his business expanding, Nestlé decided to set up his own milk condensery. Meanwhile, Chas. A. Page, U.S. consul in Zurich and his brother, George, had launched the Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk Co. The Pages and Nestlé decided to merge and, with the later addition of the Peter, Cailler and Kohler chocolate interests, became the present Nestlé Company. Soon globe-girdling expansion got under way. In tropical Africa and on Pacific islands Nestlé salesmen preached the sermon: Babies must have milk to survive; that milk should be Nestlé's. Sometimes the salesmen ran into snags. In Turkey one of them tried in vain to sell canned milk to the army. Then he enlisted the sympathy of the Sultan's harem by sending the ladies boxes of Nestlé's chocolates. They were delighted with the new confection and prevailed on the Sultan to buy Nestlé's milk.

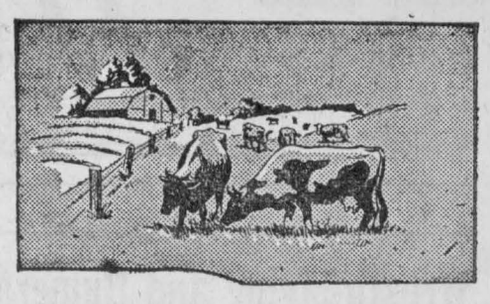

Milk condenseries were opened first in other European countries, then in England, the United States and finally over the rest of the world. A fair-sized condensery needs production from about 10,000 cows in a 50-mile radius from the plant. In many regions only a few scrub cows, producing as little as a quart of milk a day each, were available; and it was generally agreed among dairymen that a milk industry would never be successful in hot countries. But Nestlé researchers were convinced that cows would thrive anywhere there was grass, provided good stock was introduced and animal diseases controlled. And the company developed a technique for starting a dairy industry in a new country.

FRENDLEE FARM CHATS

By Lillian Allison

I was very interested in the Farm Forum broadcast this week. A panel of experts discussed how much of the consumer's dollar goes back to the farmer and it turned out as I expected.

One gentleman from the Maritimes who has something to do with a vegetable packing Co-Op said he figured that the farmer got about 20% of the dollar Mrs. Consumer spends on carrots. Fluid milk, they told us, paid the best percentage returns to the producer. But on the whole the farmer gets about 50% of the price paid for the food products in the store.

Now the consumer is always complaining about the high cost of things and the farmer is griping all the time over the low prices he receives. So those of us who handle the grocery money must often wonder who gets the difference between what we pay for our food and what the farmer receives.

A few years ago when the price of wheat dropped we expected that the bread would go down a few cents too. But the baker explained that such a small percentage of the cost of the loaf of bread was the cost of the wheat there would be no difference in the sum we would have to hand over for a ready-sliced loaf.

Many consumers can't understand why bottled skim milk is only a few cents less than whole milk. The answer is about the same. The actual cost of the milk in the bottle represents only 60 or 65 per cent of the selling price of the quart on the doorstep.

Then if the farmer gets only 50% who gets the other 50% of the money we pay for our food? The processor, the wholesaler and the retailer. We're paying and paying a lot because we don't drive out to the farm and get the carrots out of the garden complete with mud and tops, the milk from the stable in our own tin pails. We're paying for the service we demand and for the fancy packaging.

I remember hearing the late Ethelwyn Hobbs speaking on the radio one day on packaging food stuffs. She said that consumers had reached the fork in the road. We had to choose whether we wanted to continue to buy our groceries in brown paper bags as we were accustomed to or whether we wanted to pay a cent or two more and buy them in fancy packages. It must have been twelve years ago Mrs. Hobbs made that statement and since then we, the consumers, have made the choice. Need I tell you what it was?

We heap our grocery carts high with packages and packages. We get 18 cookies done up in fancy cellophane covers. We refuse to buy muddy carrots but insist that they are scrubbed and placed in plastic bags. We get our cheese done up in half pounds and wrapped in pliofilm. Spices come in ounces in salt shakers. Nuts, raisins and dates are all placed in cellophane bags. And we, the consumers, pay for it all.

Our bread is brought to our doors. We want it fresh, sliced and wrapped in two waxed papers. The milk must be bottled in pints and quarts. It has to conform with very exacting standards of cleanliness, fat content, etc. and, of course, it must be pasteurized.

We like to buy our meat by the slice, free of fat and bone. We want our sausages packed in waxed boxes and wrapped in cellophane. Our fish and vegetables that are packaged and transported at considerable expense. In fact, we've reached the point where we like to buy frozen, concentrated fruit juices so we don't have to squeeze the fruit ourselves.

Yes, gone is the day of the molasses and vinegar barrels, the boxes of crackers and cookies, the 100 pound bag of potatoes, the hampers of muddy turnips, the bulk raisins and dates and soap flakes and macaroni.

Now, of course, the packages are cleaner, more easily handled and stored. They are the life-blood of all serve-yourself stores. But they cost money—yours and mine. And these frills and services are part of the reason why only an average of 50% of the consumer's dollar reaches the farmer.

But that's the way we wanted it so let's stop complaining about the high cost of food.

More About Vitamins

The vitamin questions continue to pile up.

QUUESTION:

"I want to know about Vitamin A. I am 55 years old and my night vision seems to be getting rapidly worse. It never has been particularly good, though I have always had good eyesight in daylight. My problem is that when I am driving at night and meet an oncoming car, it makes no difference whether he dims his lights or not. I am still blinded and remain so for a few seconds after the other car has gone by. I drive home against heavy traffic every night, and you can imagine how this slows me down. I don't know about pills. What foods should I concentrate on to get more Vitamin A?"

ANSWER:

The answer to your specific question is: Fish liver oils, liver, green leafy vegetables, yellow vegetables, yellow fruits, tomatoes, egg yolks, butter, cream and natural cheeses. You are wise to ask about foods instead of pills. Prepared vitamin compounds are occasionally necessary in certain clear-cut vitamin deficiency cases, but in general a correction of dietary habits is less expensive and more effective.

However, if you really have a Vitamin A deficiency you are a medical rarity. Most healthy people with even a remotely satisfactory diet have an adequate intake of Vitamin A. It is true that some people have difficulty in absorbing Vitamin A; people who drink much mineral oil cause the vitamin to be dissolved and excreted before it does any good. Such people are rare, and it might be a good idea for you to check with a specialist before getting too worked up about a vitamin deficiency that may be wholly imaginary. The usual complaint about temporary blindness after passing an oncoming car at night is due a thousand times more often to poor eye habits in driving than to deficiency. Practice watching the right edge of the road instead of the other car's headlights. Remember too that as people get older their eyes tend to be less efficient. Perhaps a visit to an oculist would be more fruitful and less exasperating than a complicated regimen of vitamin-gobbling.

QUESTION:

"Is scurvy common? What is it? What can be done to prevent it? I have been told that my 2-year-old baby may have sub-clinical scurvy and I may have to buy some kind of expensive vitamin pills."

ANSWER:

Scurvy results from not getting enough Ascorbic Acid (Vitamin C) in the diet. The principal sources of this vitamin are citrus fruits, tomatoes, greens and certain berries such as currants, raspebrries and strawberries. Ascorbic Acid creates the "glue" that holds the cells together. Without it one falls apart, in a sense, and is subject to haemorrhages in various parts of the body. This is clinical scurvy. What is called sub-clinical scurvy means scurvy in so early a stage that dramatic symptoms have not yet appeared and diagnosis is difficult and likely to be inaccurate.

Scurvy is extremely rare in adults but is still seen with some frequency in babies between 8 months and 5 years. Breast-fed babies whose mothers eat adequately practically never have scurvy. Cow's milk, on the other hand, is a very poor source of Ascorbic Acid and "formula" babies should be fed fruit juice in order to avoid the disease. Heating the fruit juice

Light Along The Way

The Hebrews were an intolerant people. In the times when they relaxed their vigilance and indulged themselves in practices and customs of their neighbours, their faith suffered. Then they knew long years of misery and uncertainty, for their indulgences had built no protection against adversity into their lives. Their experiences make clear the words of the ancient author of Deuteronomy: "And you shall do that which is right and good in the sight of the Lord." A faith that is to have meaning and the means of growth must be intolerant and puritanical. In the choices that open before him, man must be severely critical and intolerant if evil is not to wipe away his standards and his faith.

It is always easiest to follow the way of the least resistance; but never most rewarding. The cheap novel, the picture magazine may attractively while away an idle moment, but they offer nothing for the day of trouble which is bound to come. For this only that which hardly yields to our most persistent struggles offers strength and help. To probe the thinking of those who, like Jacob, have wrestled with God Himself; to read the word of God, as His servants recorded it and handed it on for posterity, is to find that measure of truth which can be grasped and in the grasping bring protection to the soul itself.

We can be thankful that we live in a world where men write good books and compose good music, where men build mightily and creatively. We can be thankful that bingo and dice are not, by any means, a measure of our cultural achievement nor a reflection of the God in whom we believe. It is true that many of the forest's leafy giants are wasted in the pulp of comic books and cheap magazines, but it is equally true that there are more great books, among them the Bible, printed and sold than ever before. It is true that young feet shuffle to the tunes of Tin Pan Alley; but is is also true that no other age has had the privilege of seeing and hearing a symphony orchestra play the world's great music miles away.

"And you shall do that which is right and good in the sight of the Lord." Man always has the privilege of choosing. His choice must be made with the realization that only by the slow process of developing his love for that which is good can that which is not good be blotted out. So the Christian needs be today as intolerant as the Hebrew found he had to be in another day if his faith is to thrive and grow. Life is a rich and rewarding joy in the direct proportion to the just and wise use of time, the right and intolerant choice at every hour.

HEARING AIDS USED BY TV MEN

The hearing aid has a new use —helping television repairmen to spot trouble in faulty sets.

These precision instuments, according to the American Hearing Aid Association, enable the TV serviceman to "tune in" quickly on a wide range of vibration noises, including transformer hums. This cuts down the time required to repair the set.

THE REASON

Common pleas judge Benjamin D. Nicola, examining prospective jurors recently for a Cleveland robbery case asked a woman what her husband's occupation was.

"I have no husband," she replied, "I'm separated."

"Well, now that you're separated, what does your husband do?"

"I don't know where he is or what he's doing."

"Well, then, before you were separated, what did your husband do?"

"He didn't do anything, that's why we separated."

Calling All Sportsmen

* O.W.A.A.

A Guy Has to Eat

Hunters get hungry, cold hunters even hungrier and there just "ain't nothin'" like some good hot chow to cheer that inner man and satisfy appetites made ravenous from a few hours of toting a rifle or shot gun through the bush in quest of something to put in the old lady's deep freeze. For myself, I've long outlived the day when I'm going to be satisfieid with a couple of tired peanut butter sandwiches, an apple and a bar of chocolate when, with a miniumum of trouble, I can partake of a man-sized hot meal and especially when the fixings, food, utensils and all can be carried in the pocket of my hunting coat.

Travel Light and Travel Well

The lighter you travel the easier your hunting will be in terms of conserved energy. Clothing and equipment should be cut to the bare essentials, consistent, of course, with being warmly clad for the weather conditions that prevail and your other equipment should be confined to those items necessary to your comfort and well being for the duration of the hunt. Let's suppose you're out for the day. Chances are it will be impractical for you and your companions, if you're not hunting alone, to rendezvous at the car for the noondaymeal. In addition to your rifle or shot gun you have ammunition, a spare wool shirt or sweater for it's November and there is a real chill to the air when you're out of the sun—that is if it's shining. Compass, matches, smokes, first aid kit, hunting knife and, perhaps, a camera or binoculars pretty well completes your kit except for food.

Throw Away Those Pots and Pans

Even if you do carry a light pack no one wants to lug around a lot of bulky pots and pans, least of all have to cope with them after cooking. The answer to tasty hot meals outdoors with no muss or no fuss is to cook with aluminum foil. Open-fire cooking with foil is no newer than the availability of this versatile material from your neighbourhood supermarket or hardware store and yet, apparently, only a few outdoorsmen have latched on to this idea. Basically, cooking with foil has these advantages: First you cook over an open fire, I hardly need say more .A gasoline stove is as efficient as all-get-out, but a cheerless contraption on a cold day. There are no pots and pans and no dishes to wash up; after cooking with foil you burn the refuse and bury whatever is left over. Cleanliness—no more ashes in the stew or charred wood on your steak. The foil keeps your food sealed tight from dirt.

Endless Variety of Dishes

Practically anything you have been cooking out in the open can be handled by this method and food tastes better. This way you can enjoy a meal pressure-cooked to tenderness on the campfire, for the foil seals in the moisture and the natural flavour of the food is not dissipated in the cooking. This column space is not going to permit delving into the variety of culinary treats you can whip up for yourself and your likely-to-be-amazed hunting and fishing pals. I'm going to come back to the subject again at a later date. In the meantime, give these simple-to-fix snacks a try. Hamburgers —prepare them yourself the night before or get your better half into the act. Just wrap them in foil, with the edges of the package fold-

Ontario Holstein Becomes Champion Milk Producer

There was an interested crowd of livestock people at the farm of Herbert Sparling, St. Mary's, Ont., for the final milking of a new world championship record made by his purebred Holstein cow, Braithwell Colantha Souvenir. Colantha has established a new world mark for yearly production of milk in the Junior four-year-old class on three times-a-day milking, giving a total of 28,720 pounds milk containing 1,075 pounds fat, average test 3.74% butterfat.

The final squirt that made her a champion was secured from her by Jim Vanstone who has been in charge of her throughout her record-breaking lactation at 9.00 p.m. on the evening of November 12th. Actually, Colantha was milked by machine throughout the year. Unlike most stars, she is not temperamental, seven different people having looked after her at milking time throughout the year, although the general supervision was taken care of by Jim Vanstone.

In terms of quarts, Colantha's production was 11,480, approximately 31 quarts daily. On her best day she gave 109 pounds or 44 quarts.

The former world champion in this class, Regasborne Rag Apple Governess, another Holstein who made her record of 28,486 pounds of milk in 1948, was in the herd of Osborne L. Sager, St. George, Ontario.

On her first day on test, Colantha gave 37 pounds of milk, being up to 86 pounds within a week. Her high day of 109 pounds was on January 3rd. In December she gave 3,067 of milk, in January 3,132 pounds and in February, 2,591 pounds.

In 1952, Colantha completed a Junior two-year-old record on twice-a-day milking that was the highest made in Canada that year in the 305-day division. She gave 628 pounds butterfat from 16,637 pounds of milk, and continued on test for 365 days, increased this to 717 pounds fat from 19,101 pounds milk. Then last year she gave 578 pounds fat from 14,315 pounds of milk in 305 days on 2X. She thus has a three lactation total production at less than mature age of 62,116 pounds milk and 2,381 pounds fat.

The new champion is a daughter of the noted sire Senniwilk Sovereign Souvenir who is classified as XXX and was Reserve All-Canadian Junior Yearling bull in 1947. He topped the Hooper Bros. dispersal sale held in 1949 at St. Mary's, bringing $7,500, after having been previously purchased for $8,000 in 1946. His brother, Senniwilk Sovereign, was exported to Chile where he was Grand Champion at the National Livestock exhibition at Santiago. A son of Souvenir is in service in the artificial breeding unit of the Oxford and District Cattle Breeding Association at Woodstock.

At the last milking of the new champion, a toast to her achievement was drunk in her own milk. Mr. Sparling states that he is particularly happy about the new champion, since she was bred in his own herd.

FIRE CAUSES $10,000 DAMAGE NEAR WINCHESTER

A new frame building housing a grocery and dwelling was quickly enveloped in flames early Monday morning after three tanks of gas in the rear of the building caught fire and exploded, causing damage estimated at $10,000.

The property belonged to Hilaire Bilow, in Kingston on a business trip at the time of the fire, and is one mile west of Winchester on Highway 31.

Final Tribute Paid George A. Moak

Relatives and friends throughout the district were saddened by the death of George A. Moak which occurred at his home, Newington, on October 20th. He had been in ill health for some time.

The announcement of his passing was received with many profound expressions of regret.

Born at Dixon 76 years ago last June, he was the eldest son of John S. Moak and his wife, the former Alice Hawn. He spent his entire life farming in the district until seven years ago when he moved into Newington Village.

Mr. Moak is survived by his wife, the former Nora Bush, of North Valley, also one daughter and three sons, Mrs. Stanley Saunders, Prescott; Clarence Moak, of Cornwall; Edward Moak, Kingston; Bernie Moak, Champlain, Que.

He also leaves three brothers, Wm. Moak, Newington; Esdon Moak, Finch; Arnot Moak, Northfield Station. Seven grandchildren also survive.

The service at the Wesleyan Methodist Church and graveside was conducted by the Rev. Lloyd McCorriston who brought a comforting message.

Hymns sung were "Unto the Hills," "Jesus Lover of My Soul;" a duet by Mrs. James Webber and Willis Waldroff, "Gods' Way is the Right Way." Miss Enid Stillson presided at the console.

Pall bearers were James Webber, Bert Warner, Charles Stillson, Wilfred Helmer, Arthur Zeran and Roy Brownell. Flower bearers were James Ferguson, Jacob Moak, Wilburn Moak, Garnet Moak and Clarence Hawn.

Interment was made in the family plot at Hillcrest Cemetery, Newington.

Friends attended the funeral from Cornwall, Kingston, Prescott, Chesterville and Quebec.

A wreath of beautiful floral tributes surrounded the casket, silent testimony to the high esteem in which Mr. Moak was held by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance.

The family received many messages of sympathy.

PAINTERS PULL 'BONER'

Mrs. Ted Bennett, Dunbarton, Ont., came home recently and found her house a victim of a painter's error.

Her home, painted only a month previously, had been done over in a deep blue-green from top to bottom, since she left in the morning.

Meanwhile, next-door neighbours waited for the painters to come and paint their house a deep blue-green.

Gloria Thurlow, Portland, Me., turned to her companion on the crowded bus and said, "Oh, dear, I wish that good-looking man would give me his seat." Three men stood up promptly.

A 215-pound, 7-foot sturgeon recently caught in Ontario's Lake of the Woods was estimated to be 152 years old.

Duncan MacIntosh Dies In 79th Year

An impressive tribute was paid the memory of Duncan MacIntosh, highly esteemed resident of Avonmore, at funeral services held at St. James United Church, where many sorrowing relatives and friends had assembled. Mr. MacIntosh, who was in his 79th year, passed away very suddenly on Sunday.

The service was conducted by Rev. C. R. Sutherland, B.A., B.D., minister of St. James Church, of which Mr. MacIntosh had been a member of the Board and a faithful attender, and Rev. Donald C. MacDonald, B.A., minister of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church. Rev. Mr. Sutherland brought a comforting message.

Pall bearers were Dan Campbell, Malcolm F. McRae, George L. MacIntosh, Fred Barkley, Reginald Kyle and Forbes McLennan.

Interment was in Paul's Hill Cemetery.

Among those attending the funeral were relatives and friends from Dalkeith, Moose Creek, Maxville and Finch.

HUMANS SACRIFICED BY INDIAN SADHUS

Reports from Calcutta have turned up a story that human beings were being offered as sacrifices in a monastery near Cuttack, India.

Orissa state police made the discovery, and said that apparently the Sadhus (holy men) had been sacrificing human victims for years.

Police are combing the monastery for evidence against the group of naked Sadhus who fought a pitched battle with them on July 29th.

The reports said a sacrificial stone hidden in the richly-furnished bedchamber of the 70-year-old high priest, Paglebaba, was "inches thick" with congealed blood. Scrapings had been sent for analysis.

The monastery's main arsenal, housing a variety of deadly weapons, was located in a maze of underground tunnels, which also housed the living quarters of the Sadhus and captives.

When poilce broke into the monastery in search of four wanted criminals they had a battle with the sword-wielding Sadhus. One policeman was killed and six were severely injured.

Plastic Bug Spray Invented by Canadians In Britain

Two Canadian scientists in London have helped develop a method of insect control which may be the most revolutionary advance since the wartime discovery of DDT.

The new technique involves a clear, lacquer-like liquid called ripolac insecticidal resin. Impregnated with highly active insecticides it forms a deadly curtain against insects when sprayed over any painted or tiled surface, and retains its potency at least two years.

Success of the new development, its sponsors claim, was shown at a test on a ship's galley. One application to cracks and corners in the tiny cabin yielded a harvest of more than 5,000 dead cockroaches.

The two Canadians are Joseph Hitchon, 41, of Belleville and Hamilton, and Miles Price, 42 of Winnipeg.

Hitchon went to Britain in 1950 after work as an entomologist in Northern Quebec, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., and Indian Head, Sask. He became interested in British methods of containing insecticides in a resinous reservoir, an idea suggested by United States experiments in putting insecticides into paint. The American attempts failed because the paint surface hardened and sealed in the insecticide.

Hitchon started field tests on his own, scrounging materials and equipment and getting help from Dr. M. T. Morgan, Port of London health officer. Dressed in a boiler suit and respirator and carrying a spray gun operated by air pressure, he spread his death-dealing liquid over insect-breeding spots in ships.

The results were startling. Thousands of cockroaches and other pests were destroyed and the treated quarters remained insect-free despite repeated washing, painting or subjection to steam and hot grease.

During these early tests, Price entered the picture. He had gone to Britain from Winnipeg. He had worked in Palestine and France and had started his own firm.

He was working on methods of controlling rats around the Port of London when he heard of Hitchon's experiments and in March, 1953, he persuaded his fellow Canadian to join his company.

"It must be awful to be a debt collector. You must be unwelcome wherever you go."

"Not at all. Everyone tells me to call again."

Shouldn't Be

"Ladies and gentlemen," shouted the street performer, "in a few moments I will astonish you by eating coal, stones and nails. I will also swallow a sword, then I will come around with a hat, trusting to get enough for a crust of bread."

"What!" came a voice from the crowd. "Still hungry?"

Father: "Is your young man honourable in his intentions?"

Daughter: "I think so. He asked me how much you make, how much I make, and whether you and mom are hard to live with."

How much a woman gets out in the open depends upon the style of her sun suit.

FINANCIAL WIZARD

A little girl marched into a branch of the big Union Planters Bank, Memphis, Tenn., recently. and handed a teller a dollar bill.

"Would you change that to nickels?" she asked.

Taking her nickels over to a table, she counted them carefully, and returned.

"Would you change these to dimes?"

Back she came a few minutes later to get the dimes changed into quarters.

When she returned with them, the teller asked: "What in the world are you doing?"

"Learning to count money," she said briskly, and retired with her half dollars.

NESTLÉ ORGANIZATION—

miles of mountain road to tap a collection station atop a grassy plateau. To gather milk in Venezuela the company experimented with army "ducks" — amphibious vehicles which can push their way through rough jungle terrain and swamps. Collection stations at isolated outposts often become centres for disseminating up-to-date agricultural information.

When Nestlé entered Cuba in 1928 the country had almost no dairy industry. By better breeding and feeding Nestlé increased milk production three to five times. By the time Germany overran Holland in 1940, cutting off Dutch export milk, Cuba was ready to meet part of the world deficit.

In 1939 Nestlé went to Jamaica, where there was virtually no milk production. Within five years the country needed to import none at all. In Chile vast tracts of marginal wheatland were worn out and badly eroded. "Why not put the land to permanent pasture," Nestlé experts asked. Farmers agreed, and Chile got a new dairy industry. World-wide, Nestlé now has a gigantic herd of 1,200,000 cows working for it, has brought about a tremendous upswing in cow population in a dozen countries.

Nestlé publishes nutritional tracts in scores of languages and dialects. In Malaya alone last year the company distributed three million leaflets. In Africa, India and elsewhere Nestlé pamphlets, using comic-book techniques are often the only access a mother has to modern nutritional information.

Development of Nescafé

In 1938 Nestlé researchers struck gold with Nescafé. At that time soluble coffees were on the market but sales were meager. Nestlé researchers adapted techniques used in milk drying for production of their instant coffee. They made coffee in giant percolators, then sprayed it into stainless-steel chambers where swirling currents of hot air evaporated moisture. Like black snow, the coffee particles settled into collecting tanks. The dehydrated coffee was an instant success. Nescafé and the 50 competing dried coffees that followed represent the greatest success story since frozen foods; nearly a third of the coffee consumed in the United States now is instant coffee—and the percentage is constantly rising.

Major effort in Nestlé's research programme is now being expended on feeding problems of older people since they are a rapidly increasing proportion of the world population. Company researchers are similarly interested in dietary problems of undernourished populations of the world. They would, for example, like to find methods of converting foods available in India into well-balanced diets and would like to do it cheaply enough to put a better diet within everyone's reach.

Intelligence System

From headquarters in Vevey the two managing directors who run the Nestlé enterprise, Jean C. Corthesy and Enrico Bignami, travel constantly, usually in different directions around the earth. A coffee-crop failure in Madagascar will influence Nescafé prices in France; a cocoa blight in British West Africa will send chocolate prices soaring in the United States; a sugar glut in Cuba may cost millions in long-range commitments. To protect itself Nestlé has a large intelligence network. Its crop estimators working on coffee, cocoa and sugar plantations round the world send to Switzerland a steady stream of information from which Nestlé makes vast commodity commitments.

The value of this intelligence system was dramatically illustrated on the eve of World War II. Nestlé saw war coming in 1939 and revised its corporate setup so that management could immediately be shifted to the United States. Executives were warned to keep luggage packed. Four days before that fateful September 1, word came to move. Top management and families—200 persons in all—boarded a chartered train to the French coast. In England passage to the United States was waiting. Fully equipped offices were waiting in Stamford, Conn., when the Nestlé contingent arrived.

You shouldnt' have to put your child on a regimen of vitamin pills, even if the diagnosis of sub-clinical scurvy proves correct. Fruit juice is cheaper than pills and more nourishing to boot. However, if the case is severe, vitamin pills may be necessary. It probably isn't severe if it has been labelled as "sub-clinical."

ed over so that the 'burger is sealed in. Comes lunch time and you just put them in the coals and in a few minutes they'll be done. Patties of left over-mashed potatoes with chopped onions or celery added are a good side dish. Hot dogs can be foil wrapped just as they come from the butcher or, better still, fix them with mustard, relish or what-have-you in hot dog rolls and wrap the whole business in foil and put them in the coals of your fire just as you would the hamburgers.

Chops and small steaks are terrific. Before wrapping in the foil, dab with a piece of butter and season to taste. There are some foil cooking enthusiasts who claim to handle soup and other hot beverages successfully with this material, but personally I can't quite see it. After all, for a hot drink it not adding much to your kit to include a small thermos as a container and, anyway, it's not always that you are handy to water for brewing tea or coffee.

Till next week good hunting and GOOD EATING

Arrange thinly sliced apples in rows on top of batter, pressing them in slightly. Sprinkle top with 1 teaspoon cinnamon mixed with two tablespoons sugar. Bake 25 to 35 minutes in moderate oven. Serve war m with whipped cream for dessert.
