H. Carkner President of NewMilk Association

Branch Formed of Montreal Milk Producers' Association by District Farmers Supplying Milk to Metropolitan Market.

Herbert Carkner ,of Maple Ridge, was elected president of the Association of Milk Producers for the Montreal Market at a meeting held in the Town Hall at Winchester, on Friday night. Representatives from Finch, Winchester, Inkerman, Mountain and Chesterville met under the chairmanship of Mr. Carkner with H. Graham, B.S.A., Morrisburg, Agricultural Repesentative for Dundas and Western Stormont, acting as secretary.

D. Black, of Lachute, Que., past president of the Montreal Milk Producers' Association, and A. D. McDougall, Ontario representative on the advisory board of the association, outlined the purpose of the meeting, asking the shippers to form a local body which would be affiliated with the main body, which now controls 60 per cent of the milk shipped into Montreal. Plans were being made to construct a plant capable of handling all the surplus.

There was a credit balance in bonds of more than $14,000, of which $9,000 would be spent in equipment, the balance to be used as a working capital. The association in Montreal would protect shippers in matters of tests, weights, and keep them advised as to the market for whole milk.

Many joined as associate members, and some stock in the Montreal body was bought at $10 per share. The following other officers were chosen: vice-president, D. H. McIntosh, Finch; secretary-treasurer, Clifford Eligh; canvassers, Parnham Allison, Chesterville; Fred. Hutt, Inkerman, and W. M. Cameron, Mountain.

COMMUNITY CHRISTMAS TREE WILL BE ERECTED AGAIN

Co-operating with the Village Council, the 1st Chesterville Troop of Boy Scouts will have the Community Christmas Tree placed again this year. Although the location is not definite as yet, it is proposed to place it on the Community Hall Corner instead of on the Square. This would be out of the way of traffic and would doubtless be just as prominent. For the past three years the Community Tree has added to the Yuletide spirit on our streets with its merry glow of lights. It will be erected on Saturday.

Rev. H. M. Beach Accepts Call to Finch United Church

Well-Known District Man is Indefatigable Worker, Devoting Much Time to Young People.

At a meeting of the board of the United church, Oxford Mills, Rev. H M. Beach notified the meeting that he had accepted a call to the United Church at Finch where he will succeed Rev. G. N. Maxwell who has gone to Lachine, and would conclude his preaching at Oxford Mills at the end of December.

The Oxford Mills board heard the news with keen regret as Rev. and Mrs Beach and their family have endeared themselves in the hearts of the members of the Oxford Mills church where they went seven years ago. Mr. Beach is an indefatigable worker, giving much of his time to the young people, who will especially regret his leaving. Mrs. Beach is a great help to her husband in his work and in all church organizations. She is greatly interested in the work of the Women's Institute.

Impromptu Debate Interests Catholic League Members

Affirmatives Successfully Present Their Contention "A Woman's Place is in the Home."

A large number of members attended the monthly meeting of the Catholic Women's League which was held in St. Mary's Parish Hall, Tuesday evening. The president, Mrs. Mary Hughes, was in the chair.

The meeting opened in the usual way with prayer and the singing of a hymn. Roll call was responded to by "A Health Hint," and each member present read a current event. Mrs. M. Curran presented a very interesting reading on "The Life of St. Catherine." A few items of business were taken up after which quite an interesting impromptu debate took place in which all the members present participated, the subject being, "Resolved, that a woman's place is in the home." Mrs. Mack Curran was chosen captain of the affirmative, and Miss Nellie McDonald captain of the negative side. Misses Loretta Burns, Anna MacMillan and Evelyn Carr were appointed judges. The affirmatives carried off the honours by two points. Dainty refreshments were served and the meeting closed by the singing of the National Anthem.

Hockey Talk Follows Real Winter Weather

C.O.V.L. Discarded by Decision at Russell Meeting.—Locals Looking Toward St. Lawrence League.—Town League May Fill the Bill.

With the mercury dropping to seven or eight below during the week end, this district has had its first real taste of winter weather. With a considerable fall of snow yesterday, that is, an inch or so, winter appears to have arrived. With the heavy frosts the Nation has been frozen over and good skating is provided for the first workouts of the small hockey enthusiast with visions of reaching the big league and taking the place of Johnny Sorrel at the top of the scoring column. Johnny, by the way ,is setting the pace for his team-mate, Ebbie Goodfellow, whom Jack Adams, the Wings manager, says there is no superior player in hockey to-day.

Hockey locally, other than the Town league, is kind of up in the air. At the annual meeting of the Central Ottawa Valley League the other night in Russell, the C.O.V. was thrown into the discard and will not function, leaving those who wish to play organized hockey to look out for fresh affiliations. Chesterville is casting longing eyes at the St. Lawrence league, which is also shot to pieces with Cardinal and Cornwall Canadiens the only members expected to have teams, which leaves the hockey prospects up to the Town League for excitement this year.

Midnight Blaze Destroys Farm House on Saturday

Property of Geo. Brownell Complete Loss.—Fire Noticed Hour After Tenants Left For Belleville.

Fire, starting from an unknown cause totally destroyed the house on the farm of the late James Kearns, now owned by Mr. and Mrs. George Brownell, about 3 miles south-west of Chesterville, at midnight Saturday. The house was occupied by the famiry of Lorne Lyester, but the tenants had left on a trip to Belleville about an hour before the fire was noticed by neighbours.

The building, which was valued at $1,000, was destroyed, as were furnishings valued at $200, the property of the Lyester family, and furniture worth $100, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Brownell. Some insurance was carried on the property.

KEEPS HIS FEET WARM BY USING PEPPER IN SHOES

Orange, N.J.—The bakery wagon driver and one of his customers were talking about the weather.

"Must be pretty cold on that wagon of yours," said the customer.

"Oh, I'm O.K." said the driver. "Just stopped off at a lunch wagon."

"Hot coffee?" asked the customer.

"No," said the driver. "Pepper. Pepper in the shoes. You know, like you sprinkle powder in a new shoe to make it slip on easily. Just do the same with pepper on a cold day. It'll keep the dogs warm and make you feel warm all over."

Morrisburg Contractor Dropped Dead in Bush

Widow is Sister of Herbert Fyke of Chesterville.—Was Well Known Throughout District as Contractor and Highways Superintendent.

The funeral was held Monday of Harry Winstanley, prominent citizen of Morrisburg, contractor, and Government road and constuction inspector, who died suddenly while walking in the woods east of Morrisburg on Friday afternoon on an inspection trip. While walking with M. J. Casselman, owner of the timber under inspection, Mr. Winstanley, who was inspector on the Government docks being constructed in the town, suddenly dropped dead. He had not complained of any illness and had enjoyed his mid-day lunch just previously. Death was pronounced due to heart failure by Dr. Charles A. Louden, coroner of Morrisburg.

Rev. Sidney B. Holmes, rector, was in charge of the funeral services at St. James' church, Morrisburg, assisted by Rev. Jenkins Burkholder of Knox Presbyterian church, Morrisburg, and Rev. Fraser Weegar, of Russell.

Mr. Winstanley was 64 years of age, a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Winstanley, and was born in London, England. He worked with his father, who was station agent at London, until he was 20 years old, and then came to Canada, finding employment with Dolan Brothers, Ottawa contractors. He supervised the construction of all the concrete sidewalks in Morrisburg while with them, and was also in charge of the laying of the cement sidewalks in Chesterville. When, 12 years ago, the Provincial Government started building roads hereabouts, Mr. Winstanley worked as inspector. Besides his widow, the former Lyda Fyke, he is survived by one sister, Mrs. Annie Perry, Stockport, England.

Lansing, Mich., Hotel Fire Has Tragic Death Toll

40 Believed to Have Perished in Hotel Fire in Michigan's State Capital. —Graphic Stories of Horror Told By Survivors of Tragedy.

Lansing, Mich.—Flames, cold, terror and death made Tuesday's Kerns hotel fire one of the most horrible disasters in Michigan's history.

The cause of the fire, which first was noticed by the night watchman of the Lansing State Journal, across the street, has not been ascertained. Apparently it started in the vicinity of the kitchen, but there were other reports that it first was noticed in a guest room. The hotel is heated from steam mains and has no heating boiler.

Representative William Green of Hillman, one of those who made their way in safety from the building, painted a graphic picture of the horror which struck the state's capital just as dawn broke through the cold, winter sky.

"There were women with their hair on fire and their clothing aflame," Green said. "They ran through the smoke, screaming. That terrible screaming was the worst."

The legislator related his experience as a physician rubbed his feet, frozen by the snow through which he ran as he fled from the almost red-hot brick walls which formed a tomb for several of his colleagues.

"It reminded me of those Bible pictures of Hell-fire and fiends," Green said after shutting his eyes and remaining silent for several seconds. "I can't remember all of it. I wish I couldn't remember any of it.

"Rep. Earl McNitt, of Cadillac, and I were in room 240. About 5.30 a.m. I heard screaming. I thought for a minute it was a nightmare. Then I got up and turned on the light. The room was full of smoke and the screaming grew louder. I shook Earl and woke him, and then I opened the door. I tell you it was like a furnace."

Rep. Green buried his face in his hands as he told how he and McNitt got out of a window to a fire escape

"Well, my name's Sandy, not Gandhi," came the reply.

Poultry Grades.

Most of the poultry being offered on the market this year is being graded in accordance with government standards, with the class and grade marked by tags affixed to the breast of the bird. There are two classes of poultry, "Milk-fed," distinguished by yellow fat Within these classes are the grades "Milkfed A," "Selected B" and "Selected C." Grading of the birds in this manner enables the householer to choose good dressed poultry with great ease.

Meal Mixture for Pigs in Winter.

For pigs newly weaned and up to four months of age, the following meal mixture is recommended: Middlings, 3 parts; oats, 2 parts; shorts, 1 part; bran ½ part. Three pounds of skim milk or buttermilk per pound of meal mixture should be fed at this stage.

The following meal mixture is recommended when pigs are between four and five months old: shorts, 2 parts; oats, 2 parts; barley, 1½ parts; bran, ½ part. With one pound of this mixture feed two pounds of skim-milk or butter milk.

From the time the pigs are five months old and weigh about 150 pounds, up to market weight, they may be fed the following finishing ration: shorts, 1 part; oats, 2 parts; barley 2 parts. With one pound of this mixture, feed one and one-half pounds of skim-milk or buttermilk.

Purchasing Feed Stuffs.

The advantage of co-operative purchase of feed stuffs is sometimes lost through the feeding of those feeds which can be purchased in carlot quantities without regard to balance or suitability of rations. Carlot purchase of feeding stuffs should be undertaken from the standpoint of both economy and efficiency. Dollars per ton is not the all-important angle. The cost per pound of food nutrients is more important and, better still, the price per unit of feeding value and the suitability for balancing home-grown or other feeds are the important factors to consider. There are several steps to follow in the purchase of supplementary feeds. They are: (1) Know what is on hand in the form of home-grown feeds. (2) Know what best balances the feeds on hand taking into consideration both quality and cost. (3) Purchase supplementary feeds in quantity sufficient to take advantage of the best prices and lowest freight rates. (4) Know the production records of the livestock fed.

Care Means Cash on Farm These Days

One of the very practical lines of instruction given to all regular students at the O.A.C. is in the adjustment, repair and care of farm machinery and other farm equipment such as tools, harness, ropes, belts, etc.

So great is the need for care and economy on the farms just now that it has been decided to offer a course in instruction and practice along these lines to any young men who attend the ten-day short course at the College, January 2 to 11, and who wish to spend their time on this kind of work.

These men will participate in the same evening programme of games and entertainment as those taking other lines of work in the daylight hours.

Big "O" Brand Lacking.

Writing from London, Andrew Fulton, overseas fruit representative, declares: "One of the greatest tragedies of the season, as far as Ontario is concerned, is the lack of the Big "O" brand apples on the United Kingdom markets. After five years' work in building up this brand to the stage where the trade have come to recognize the quality of this pack, it is a great disappointment to be unable to meet the demand and to continue to build up a reputation for Ontario apples. I fully appreciate that this disappointment is equally as great for the Ontario growers who have had their trees damaged and have no apples to ship. At the same time, if Ontario is going to remain in the export market, there should have been a special effort made by shippers to continue shipping under the Big "O" brand, if only a few cars from each packing house, in order to keep the name before the trade." Mr. Fulton recommends that the packing houses and growers organize an export apple association entirely separate from any other organization, so that the welfare of this phase of the industry can be looked after.

Great Shorthorns Too.

"That was a great story in last week's press about your remarkable Holstein cow and her large family," said a visitor at the College this week, "but have you no outstanding beef cattle to show to young farmers who come to your short course in January?"

"Plenty of them," said Professor Raithby, "Shorthorns, Herefords and Angus. For instance, there is our fine Shorthorn cow, Augusta Fancy—166122. She is 15 years old and last August she dropped her 13th calf. Three of her heifers are still in the College herd and six of her seven bull calves have been sold for breeding purposes.

"Then, too, we have in the herd many of the offspring of Augusta Fancy's grand old half-sister, College Augusta VI, who, when she was 17 years old, gave us her 16th calf. A fine sturdy strain they are, of good type and great usefulness.

"Yes, we have lots of good cattle of both beef and dairy breeds for our demonstrations in January, and we expect to have several hundred keen young fellows here to handle and discuss these cattle and to enjoy ten days of real active, intimate College work and life."

Weekly Crop Report.

Prevailing weather in most parts of Ontario until the first week in December was quite exceptional. Whereas last year cattle had been fed for five or six weeks prior to this time, the open fall this year permitted farmers to leave their cattle on pasture. thus shortening the winter feeding period materially. It was a fine autumn for ploughing too. Grey county reports that never for the past few years has so much grain been marketed This is largely due to the fact that prices of cattle were low, grain was comparatively high and there were exceptional grain crops this year. Several carlots of livestock have been shipped from Brant and Haldimand counties to the United States within the past few weeks. Copious rains relieved the water shortage in many districts so far as wells and cisterns were concerned. First-grade poultry is selling in Lincoln at 25c to 28c lb., with wholesale prices 20c to 23c. Young turkeys are bringing 27c lb. in Wentworth. A strong demand for hay is noted in Hastings, with mixed hay selling at $14 00 a ton.

In Peterborough county, potatoes have been selling at 45c to 50c a bag and McIntosh apples at $1.60 a bushel, and Northern Spies at $2.00 to $2.25 a bushel. Frontenac reports that cheese products produced this year have decreased 15 per cent, while butter production has increased equally. Butterfat prices range around 19c lb.

First Silver Dollar To Be Called "George Dollar"

Canada's First Silver Dollar Will Be Minted to Commemorate Silver Anniversary of King George's Accession to Throne.

Ottawa.—Canada's first silver dollar will be minted and circulated as a commemorative token of the 25th anniversary of King George's accession to the Throne on May 6th, 1935. It will be called the "George Dollar" and will bear a likeness of His Majesty.

No official announcement has yet been made with respect to the new coin but it is known that the design has been approved and an order for the dies sent to England, it being impossible to manufacture them here. The minting will be done in Ottawa.

For about 18 years there has been authority in the Currency Act for the minting of a Canadian silver dollar but none has ever been placed in circulation. The event of its popularity will determine the amount of currency to be issued in this form but it is understood the first minting will run to at least 100,000.

Only slightly larger in circumference than the 50-cent piece, the new coin will be thicker, and, in the opinion of the experts who designed it, fully acceptable from the point of view of convenience of handling, as the smaller coin

The "George Dollar" will be circulated during the silver jubilee proceedings in London.

Dr. A. R. Dafoe Astounds Big New York Audience

Speaker Unperturbed by Huge Audience as He Recounts Case History of His Five Famous Charges.—Historic Carnegie Hall Jammed.

New York.—Dr. A. R. Dafoe, the country doctor who delivered the Dionne quintuplets, was acclaimed Monday night in historic Carnegie Hall where the world's leading artists have been greeted.

Applause such as sweeps the famous auditorium on appearances of noted singers and conductors, met the puckish physician from the backwoods of Ontario as he appeared on the platform and bowed.

A moment later and there was dead silence from orchestra pit to top gallery as the Canadian, without show of nervousness, began a human lecture, his first in the United States, on the case histories of the five babies from the time of their birth, May 28th.

For one of the first times in his career, Dr. Dafoe was dressed in a dinner jacket.

After discussing the technical medical aspect of the babies' birth, he turned to a consideration of "the emotional side of their stories."

Every soothsayer, astrologer and promoter in the world, he thought, must has sent him letters during the last five months.

Seated in the orchestra pit were hundreds of mothers from Park Avenue to First Avenue, from the Bronx to Coney Island; in the tiers of boxes sat physicians, dieticians, nurses, obstreticians; in the gallery were medical students and more of the general public.

Many women came to hear the doctor tell of his struggle to keep the five children living. Never in his life had he addressed such a large gathering.

His audience gasped as he told of the rigours of existence in the country he came from, of families having as many as 20 children, of women resuming housework five days after the birth of a baby.

"They are happy, good people, living close to the earth," read the doctor.

"No inducement could persuade me ever to leave them."

The babies had their first soap and water bath when they were two months old; before that tney were swathed in oils.

The first week was a nightmare. Thinking the children would die, he baptized them. Fearing the mother would die, he dropped everything, and walked two miles after the priest.

"They are dear little girls—they are as pudgy now as little puppies."

From the auditorium, the doctor went to see the bright lights of Broadway, and for the first time visited a night club.

Sally Rand danced for him the fan dance she made popular at the Chicago Fair.

At the doctor's request, no pictures were taken.

"OUR DAILY BREAD"

On Sunday morning, Rev. G. H. Smith, pastor of the United church, continued his series of sermons on the Lord's Prayer speaking on the fourth petition, "Give us this day our daily bread," giving a message deeply significant and full of suggestions for our lives to-day.

"In the first three petitions we look toward God seeking deliverance from sin. In this fourth petition we are praying for temporal things, an indication that we are dependant on God for sustenance and everything," said Mr. Smith. "We must realize our dependence. It is not the will of God that little ones are denied their daily bread and that the wealth of the world belongs to a dozen or so men. We must master the matter of distribution and help solve the economic tangle.

"It is really a prayer of faith, spirit of unselfishness with willingness to co-operate."

The choir rendered an anthem, "Like a River Glorious."

The text for the evening service was Number xxxii:1. Renewing the story of two of the 12 tribes of the Hebrews wanted to stay on the east side of the Jordan, on the border of the Promised Land and were rebuked by Moses for lack of courage.

These stories are intensely human and the lessons taught practical. Christ is calling for those who will cross the Jordan. Our spiritual foes must be conquered, wholly, not partially. Those who do the aggressive work are the ones who have crossed the Jordan. Victory awaits us on the other side. Jesus taught the same truth. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Mrs. G. H. Smith presided at the organ. —(Contributed.)

(The Record's columns are always open to Churches of all denominations who wish to report the work carried on by congregation and pastor.—Ed.)

"Have you heard from your husband since he went away on his camping holiday?" asked Mrs. Freeman.

"Oh, yes!" replied Mrs. Baker. "He writes regularly, and always sends me a couple of needles."

"Whatever does he send those for?" asked Mrs. Freeman.

"He wants me to thread them and send them back," Mrs. Baker explained. "He says he has to do his own sewing now."

Young Children Are Slain By Demented Older Sister

Youngsters Shot to Death While Asleep in Their Beds.—19-Year-Old Sister Calmly Surrendered.

Belleville—While they lay asleep in bed, Ina and Neil Thompson, aged 10 and 9, were shot and instantly killed last night by their elder sister, Marjorie, 19, in their home in Murray township 24 miles from here.

Marjorie, who has been treated for a mental disease, shot her younger brother and sister with a .22 calibre rifle. She gave up the gun without a struggle when another brother, Floyd, 14, woke up after the shot which killed Neil.

Blake Thompson, father of the children, was asleep downstairs in the kitchen when the slaying occurred. Like Floyd, he did not wake, police were told, until after the firing of the second shot. He then ran upstairs to find that Floyd had taken the rifle from the girl.

Mrs Thompson and two other sons, Lorne, 17, and Lloyd, a twin brother of Floyd, were at a church Christmas social. Word was sent to the church. Mrs. Thompson hurried home to find two of her children dead and a third her eldest, being watched while the police were being summoned.

WITH THE BOY SCOUTS

—1st CHESTERVILLE TROOP—

TOY SHOP IN OPERATION.

The 1934 Toy Shop of the Troop is in full swing and a number of toys have been given renewed life so that they may go out again this Christmas Eve and make glad the hearts of children who are not among the more fortunate classes through no fault of theirs. The usual appeal for toys was made through the Toy Shop Dance and at the schools, and although the response was not so great as last year, it is expected there will be enough to go around.

Have You a Discarded Sleigh.

There were no handsleighs among our collection this year and the Shop would like to have a couple that are in a repairable condition. If you have one that is minus a top or runner or badly in need of paint, by contributing it to the Toy Shop you can bring Christmas happiness to some boy or girl and do a real "good turn."

Several ladies about4 town have been good enough to again offer their help in dressing our dolls and assisting with the choosing and packaging of the parcels. The Scouts are quite handy at repairing and repainting toys, but when it comes to dressing a doll, well—they're just boys after all, and the assistance so willing given them is most gratefully appreciated.

SETTLERS' CHILDREN TO BE CHEERED BY TROOP

The Troop is extendings its Toy Shop work to include six children of settlers in outlying sections of Canada. Every year hundreds of Christmas packages are sent to these pioneer children all across the Dominion by Boy Scouts. Last year, with the help of our sisters, the Guides, we were able to take happiness to well over 80,000 children, and some 9,000 of these were Prairie children!

AN APPEAL FOR GROCERIES.

This year the Troop has received permission from several of the stores in town to place boxes asking for contributions of groceries to help out with the Christmas dinners distributed to Needy Families For Christmas. states:

THINK OF OTHERS

When buying your Christmas groceries, will you purchase an extra package or parcel and deposit it in this box?

They will be collected and distributed to Needy Famies For Christmas. Thank You!

As was the case last Christmas, we have the co-operation of a number of ladies and of the Village Council in our Christmas cheer work. The Ladies of Holy Trinity Guild are donating a number of articles of clothing for our boxes which include mittens, sleepers for girls, and scarves. Mrs. E. L. Bronskill, of Maxville, has very kindly sent us two pairs of woollen mittens, which we greatly appreciate.

Each year The Toy Shop Secretary receives pitiful letters from families in the North and West asking the Scout Santa to remember their children Christmas morning. They have no money whatsoever and it is heartbreaking for the mothers and fathers to disappoint their youngsters when Christmas comes round on their barren homestead farms and there are no happy surprises. From the Scout Leader of December we quote just two of this appeals. The first is from the Mother of a pioneer family which had moved from the dried-out area in southern Saskatchewan to a homestead near Archerville:

Dear Sir: Would you be so kind as to send my small children a few toys, as there is no prospect of these coming from any other source. We are very poor. Have no stock through bad luck. Moved to this homestead from dried out prairie with not even a horse or cow and money. Just with help of some kind people. Ages for children are, one boy 6 yrs, one girl 5 yrs, one girl 4 yrs, baby boy one

yr. Yours truly,
Mrs. B. L.....

The little housekeeper of a motherless New Canadian family wrote this appealing letter from a Saskatchewan farm:

Dear Friends: I drop you a few words and would be glad to receive some things from you for Christmas. I wish you would send us a Christmas presant. My name is Mary. I am the one writing this letter. I am fourteen years old. Then Sadie she is twelve years old. Then Lena she is ten years old. Then Wasyl he is eight years old. Then Polly is five years old. I guess you know we have know (no) mother for two years already. And I have to work real hard. I must close of and would please you to send the children some things.

Good bye, bye,
Yours sincerely,
Mary Ozirney.

How could anyone resist such appeals as these?

RURAL PHILOSOPHY.

Trenton Courier-Advocate.

THERE is a wealth of wisdom in some of the sayings of country people. A young lady, with a bit of petticoat showing, was passing up a street when a lady remarked in our hearing: "That girl's father thinks more of her than her mother." A young man of our acquaintance told a young lady that times were too hard just now for their marriage. The girl promptly reminded him that "a hen can scratch as well as a rooster."

"Throw your matches in the middle of the floor," advised a friend, "and you will never set fire to a building." "If it is against all rules of sport for dogs to be used in deer-hunting," remarked a hunter, "what did the good Lord make the hound for?"

The language of the people living outside the city is full of such quips of wisdom and philosophy, but you will rarely ever find them in books. There is a field here for someone to gather up these naive sayings and put them between covers Such a book would make good reading.

The Confession of a Trader

Uncle Billy Didn't Make Much Money—But He Did a Lot of Business.

"I DUNNO'S I ever told you folks about one time that I took up dickerin' and tradin', that I lived over to Prospect a year or so, did I?" asked Uncle Billy Mason. "Kind of cur'us it was, in some ways."

"If you ain't," commented Nathan Swift acidly, "it's about all you ain't told us of. More things happened to you them two years you was over there than has happened to you and your whole family in the thirty years or more that you've lived here!"

"I ain't sayin' but you're right about that—that is, as near right's you ever are about anything, Nathan," rejoined Uncle Billy imperturbably. "Prospect's a mighty stirrin' kind of place to'rds what this place is, and the folks there have some majesty and life to 'em, I'm tellin' ye! And I kind of lotted on keepin' up abreast of 'em when I lived there, if not a mite for'ard of 'em a part of the time."

"How'd you happen to start tradin' when you was over to Prospect and what did you trade, anyway, Uncle Billy?" asked Silas Parkes.

"Oh, I traded var'us things," replied Uncle Billy carelessly. "When a man's a dickerer he can't pick and choose, you know. He's got to be able to trade for whatever happens along. If he ain't, he might's well shut up and go out of business.

"What reely started me tradin'," he explained tolerantly, "was an old hoss I had and didn't have any use for. He was jest a bill of expense to me and I didn't know what to do with him. I was complainin' about it one day, and some one says to me, 'Why don't ye trade him off if he's no good to ye?' That sounded kind of sensible to me, so I decided to do it.

"I'd watched men tradin' hosses, so I sort of learnt their ways," Uncle Billy went on with an air of innocent smartness; "so when I found a chance to trade the hoss for five cords or wood, I knew jest how to act. I kind of hung off and acted loath, but bimeby we traded even. Course that left me 'thout any hoss to move the wood with, so I had to let it lay where 'twas.

"Then I traded the wood into a buckboard with another feller. One wheel was a speck shaky, but a day's work fixed it as strong as it ever was and then I was ready for the next man.

"I traded the buckboard with a lamb buyer for five sheep; he wanted it to build a lamb rack on. He fetched the sheep himself and hauled away the buckboard, so I wa'n't out anything but the day's work on the wheel. I turned the sheep out in the pastur' and didn't see 'em again till most fall. Then a neighbour wanted 'em and offered me a pretty good cow for 'em, and I swapped with him. The cow give a fair mess of milk, and we figgered, getting at it in a rough kind of way, that she paid for her keep.

"Then I struck a kind of lull in the tradin' business, and I didn't do any more dickerin' for quite a spell. I had one or two offers for the critter, and I felt out two or three other men to see if they had anything they felt like tradin' for a good cow; but they didn't.

"It run on that way till I got most ready to move back here, and I was gettin' kind of discouraged about the tradin' business. I didn't want to fetch her back here, where I wouldn't have no pastur' for her, and I didn't know what to do.

"Then one day the feller that I traded the hoss to in the fust place happened along drivin' the very same hoss. He pulled up in front of the house, where I had the cow hitched out feedin', and began to banter me to trade with him.

"Well, there 'twas! I reelly needed the hoss to move back here with, and I didn't need the cow. So in the end we traded, and I gin him five dollars to boot, and counted myself lucky into the bargain That wound up my dickerin', and I ain't done any since."

"Huh!" snorted Nathan Swift. "I can't see that you done much to brag of. Dickered all summer and then quit with the same hoss you started with, and had to give five dollars to boot to get him back at that! Where'd you figger you made anything?"

"I didn't figger I made anything," replied Uncle Billy with mild asperity. "I told you in the beginnin' that it was kind of cur'us. But I'd had a good business all summer, and I wa'nt out but jest five dollars Seems to me I might have done a lot wuss."

HEALTH by Grenfell Fleming M.D.

BILIOUSNESS.

BILIOUSNESS is a word which holds its place in everyday language to describe a state of mental depression and physical discomfort, which is marked by headache, dizziness, a mouth which tastes badly, a feeling of nausea, weakness, and depression, together with constipation.

The popular idea is that this unhappy state is due to what is called a "sluggish liver." This idea apparently comes from the fact that when the so-called bilious person vomits—and he generally does—the contracting walls of the stomach draw up a small amount of bile. This small amount of bile is sufficient by its yellow colour and bitter taste to convince the patient that all his trouble arose from his liver which produces the bile.

The liver is a very reliable organ and it does its best, but sometimes the excess of food and drink, or failure to eliminate wastes from the body may give rise to a condition with which the liver cannot cope and so it rebels. It is not the liver alone which protests, but other parts of the digestive tract will join with it, producing that form of disorder which the public, if not the doctors, know as "biliousness."

The relationship of mental efficiency to bodily health is seen in the sad look and gloomy spirits of the victims of digestive upsets. The way to man's heart may be through his stomach; certainly, the way to his good or ill humour is by way of his digestive tract.

The treatment is not by "liver pills" or purgatives, but through the correction of faulty habits; this means simple food, outdoor exercise, plenty of sleep, and a freer use of water between meals. Regular elimination can be secured by habit, diet and exercise.

Biliousness does not trouble those who lead a fairly simple life, who pay reasonable attention to the requirements of their bodies, and who pay attention to their food and their elimination instead of taking medicines.

Some people think that they are born bilious, but in doing so they are only blaming their ancestors for what is really their own carelessness with regard to their eating and other habits.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

THIS AND THAT.

MINCE MEAT.

Mince Pie is an excellent cold weather dessert. The mince meat is baked between two crusts for about ten minutes in a very hot oven, then the heat is reduced and the pie baked for thirty minutes longer. Mince pie is best when served piping hot.

MINCE PIE No. 1.

2 lbs. lean beef
1 lb. chopped suet
4 lbs. tart apples
3 lbs. sugar
3 lbs. currants
2 lbs. seeded raisins
1 nutmeg
½ teaspoon ground mace
2 oranges
2 lemons
½ lb. citron peel
1 tablespoon salt

Stew the beef in a very little water until quite tender, cook and chop as fine as possible. Add the beef suet, chopped fine, and pared, cored and chopped apples, the sugar, currants, raisins, spices, orange and lemon-juice, the grated rind of the oranges and of one lemon, chopped citron and salt. Mix thoroughly. Cook one hour. Pack in a stone jar and keep in a cold place The mince meat should be stirred thoroughly each time any is taken out and occasionally moistened with a little grape-juice or orange-juice.

MINCE MEAT No. 2.

2 cups chopped apples
1½ cups raisins
½ cup currants
¼ cup citron peel, sliced
½ cup chopped suet
½ cup sugar
2 teaspoons mixed spice
3 tablespoons rich fruit juice

Combine the ingredients in the order given. This amount will make two pies.

LIGHT CHRISTMAS PUDDING.

½ cup butter or shortening
1½ cups sugar
3 eggs
3½ cups sifted flour
5 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
2 cups cranberries

Cream the butter, add sugar, then eggs well beaten. Sift flour, salt and baking powder, and add alternately with the milk Wash, dry and chop cranberries, flour with some of the measured flour. Add to first mixture. Place in a greased mould, cover and steam two hours. Serve hot with cream or a pudding sauce.- Orange hard sauce is delicious with this pudding.

The above pudding provides an excellent dessert for Christmas dinner. It is not as rich as true plum pudding and for that reason may be more acceptable at the end of a heavy meal. The cranberries will help to carry the colour scheme throughout the meal.

LITTLE ENGLISH CHRISTMAS CAKES

2 cups light brown sugar
2 3 cup butter
2-3 cup sour milk
3 eggs, beaten separately
1 teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon cloves
1 teaspoon nutmeg
1 cup raisins
1 cup nut meats
¼ lb. citron peel
Flour to stiffen

Cream the butter, add the sugar. Add beaten eggs, mix well; add sour milk. Mix soda, salt, spices with nut meats, raisins and citron dredged with flour, and add to first mixture; add flour to stiffen. Drop very small teaspoons of the batter on a greased tin, far enough apart so they will not touch when baked. Brush with sweet milk and sprinkle with granulated sugar just before putting in the oven. This recipe makes a large number of little cakes and is an excellent one with which to stock the cookie jar at Christmas time.

ORANGE HARD SAUCE

1-3 cup butter
1 cup fruit sugar
1-3 teaspoon lemon juice
1 teaspoon orange juice
1 teaspoon grated orange rind

Cream the butter ,add sugar gradually. Add flavouing, including orange rind; chill. This sauce is excellent when served with plum pudding.

2 to 3 fresh apples—1 pound.
2 2-3 cups currants—1 pound
2 2-3 cups raisins—1 pound
2 cups granulated sugar—1 pound

If you are planning a large Christmas dinner party this year, perhaps you are in doubt about what to serve or how to serve it. Perhaps you are accustomed to preparing food for a small family and do not know exactly how much is required for a larger number. Let me know your troubles and they will be answered in my next column.

Questions should be addressed to Miss Helen Lacey, Chesterville Record.

Employer (frowning): "Jan, why are you so late this morning?"

Native boy (regretfully): "Baas, I left the house late."

Employer (unconvinced): "Yes, but why did you leave late?"

Native Boy (innocently): 'Please, baas, it was too late to start early."

Mr Newlywed: "Is the steak ready now,dear?"

Mrs. Newlywed: "I'm sorry I'm so long, George, but it looked hopeless grilled, and it doesn't look much better friend; but if you'll be patient a little longer I'll see what boiling does to it."

Just Plain Joy-Riders

EMERGING from the restaurant, George Eastman and Herm Marsh stood for a moment on the steps and then sauntered placidly toward the automobile that stood by the curb. Suddenly George, who was in the lead, stopped short, and his jaw dropped. "Well, I swan!" he said with emphasis. "I s'posed you—I thought you—" He paused uncertainly. "I'm ready to take my oath I tied everything on safe and sound."

Herm glared at his crestfallen companion in disgust. "A feller that has camped every night from Consolidated Nevada to—what's this place? Oh, yes, Champaign, Illinois, and pull off a stunt like that!"

"Well, why didn't you—" George began hotly, but Herm broke in:

"You know very well I was foolin' with the steering gear—you know perfectly well that it was your job to pack up and tie on the tent."

Their voices had risen, and they glared evilly at each other. A little boy who was sucking a stick of licorice nearby beckoned to some of his friends. "Hey, fellers! A fight! Hurry up!"

Herm and George glanced at him and half grinned. With one accord they climbed quickly into the car, for a crowd was gathering. One man in particular, shouting and beckoning wildly as he ran, seemed anxious to be in at the death. George pressed on the accelerator, and presently the big Elton Six had left the little town behind.

"Forty miles back!" Herm regarded the speedometer sourly. "Then forty miles right over the same road again. You ought to be kicked till your nose bleeds for that kid trick—running off and leaving all that stuff! Our clothes and bedding, our tent and suitcases—yes, and my gold watch was in my suit case!"

"I was sure I tied it on!" George declared peevishly as he sawed at the wheel. "This old tub don't seem to steer very good, some way. I thought you tightened up the steerin' gear this morning."

"I thought you loaded on the stuff, too!" snapped Herm. "I tightened it till I could hardly turn the wheel."

Thus they pleasantly beguiled the time as they sped back toward the place where they had camped the night before.

"They's a feller behind us," Herm remarked, peering back. "He's been tryin' to keep up for ten minutes—ain't more'n twenty rod behind now. They's some men with him with rifles—yes, and one of 'em looks as if he's signalling us to stop."

George threw a startled glance behind. "Rifles! I bet they're auto bandits; holdup men!" As he pressed the accelerator the car shot forward at a speed that made the fence posts look like a light board fence.

"Country's full of crooks; got to be a regular business holdin' folks up and stealin' their cars," said Herm. "They're almost keepin' up. Better put on a little more juice."

George jammed the levers on the wheel clear round to the last notch. House and barns darted past like arrows. At last on the crest of a hill they stopped and listened. Far back they could hear the pursuing car roaring along after them with the cut-out wide open.

"Those lads mean business," said Herm. "We can't get away from 'em this way."

"How shall we, then?" snapped George. "Make the auto lie down and play dead?"

"You might make it climb a tree," replied Herm. "They wouldn't think to look there."

"You're as funny as a crutch," said George, nervously wiping his brow. "Come on, now, what do you think?"

"If it was me" said Herm, with maddening determination, "I'd run her into that cow pasture through them bars and let 'em wonder where we are."

George steered into the pasture. "Every few months you have a good idea. Now go and put up the bars and let 'em run by."

The car was completely hidden in the brush near the fence. In a few moments their pursuers came up. The road forked just beyond the pasture bars and apparently the men were puzzled which fork to take, for there were no tracks.

"See that!" cried George, peering through the bushes. "They've all got guns!"

Evidently the four men decided that George and Herm had taken the right hand road, for presently their car rushed away to the right.

"There!" George sighed with relief. "We're red of them dirty scoundrels. We'll take the other road and get our stuff."

Backing the car into the road they sped away to their camp ground of the night before, which was only a few miles farther on.

"There!" George shouted as they stopped at the spot. "Look at that, now! Some gentleman has borrowed the whole business or some dirty thief has stolen it!"

It was true. Every stitch of bedding, all their spare clothes, their cooking utensils, their tent—everything was gone. Herm turned savagely on George.

"After this I'll tend to everything myself, and then it'll be done right."

"What are you looking at?" asked George. Herm was staring with round eyes at the license number.

"An automobile thief," Herm said at last, turning to George, "is worse than a horse thief. A horse thief takes big chances because a horse is easy to identify and it's hard to get very far away before the owner gets busy. But an auto thief don't give the owner even a sporting chance."

"You're right," George agreed as he rummaged in the tool box. "Where the dickens did you put that new socket wrench, and where did all this junk come from?"

"I saw by the paper last night," Herm remarked, "that they're lynchin' auto thieves in some places"

"Good enough for 'em. I don't care a hoot," replied George. "Where do you suppose you put that wrench? I have got to tighten that steering gear."

"Those lads that passed us meant business, or I don't know the signs," went on Herm. "I guess I'll go on afoot. I guess it'll be a lot healthier. They may not wait for you to explain matters."

George straightened up "Does your head feel very bad? Better tie a wet rag round it."

"Your neck will feel worse if that crew ever meets up with you. And they will if I leave you. You won't have wit enough by yourself to keep out of their clutches."

Something of the truth dawned on George. He ran and looked at the license number. "Well, I'll be hanged!" he said, slumping down on the running board.

"Got it right the first time," said Herm cheerfully. "When we came out of that restaurant, we took the wrong car, that's all."

"I'll bet you knew it all the time," yelled George.

"I was waiting for you to say that," said Herm calmly. "I knew you'd blame me."

"Now what are we goin' to do?" George appealed to him.

"We!" Herm looked surprised. "You mean what are you goin' to do. I'm not in any trouble. I haven't stolen anything."

"Gosh!" George started to sweat. From far down the road came the unmistakable roar of the pursuing car—on their trail!

"I kind of hate to help a thief escape what he deserves," said Herm, "but I will this time. Just head into the brush and let 'em go by and then run for it—back to town."

They had hardly got the car out of sight when the pursuer, bristling with gun barrels, rushed by. The next moment the two "criminals" were speeding back toward town.

"I don't see how on earth you made such a mistake!" said Herm. "To go and climb right into a strange car like that!"

"The same way you did," George assured him. "You were so keen to blame me for forgetting the stuff that you didn't stop to look at anything!"

They passed the forks of the road and started for Champaign, but trouble loomed ahead. A farmer with a load of hay blocked the narrow road, and repeated blasts on the horn failed to have any effect on him.

"Hey!" shouted George, half standing up. "Gangway, there! The ditch is so muddy we can't drive round you!"

The man turned his head and shouted something that they could not hear above the racing engine. There was an uncertain movement of the load of hay, and he plied a long willow switch on his team.

Leaning out, Herm looked back nervously. "They're only about half a mile back. Half a minute and we'll be gobbled up!"

George wrenched desperately at the wheel, and the big Elton leaped out of the rut and down into the ditch with a lurch. Just as they were half under the load of hay the back end of the car sagged down alarmingly.

"Look out!" cried Herm. "You'll be stalled! Put her into low, quick!" But they were stalled before Herm finished. The engine roared but they did not move an inch.

"There! You lunkhead!" snarled Herm. "You've spilt the beans now!"

Shouts came from behind, and George desperately crowded on all the power he had.

"My wagon tongue's broke," said the farmer, appearing in front of them "Want me to hitch on my team and pull you out?"

"Git out of the way!" yelled George.

Herm caught a glimpse of someone approaching the car, and a moment later a man tried to pass round on the ditch side of the stranded automobile. But the mud was too deep, and he went back."

"Come on, boys! We've got 'em!" cried a voice from under the load of hay. "Hurry up!"

As Herm peered vainly at the load trying to see who and how many were coming, he saw a strange thing. Half the load was sliding toward them Half-smothered howls came from underneath. At that instant the hind wheels suddenly took hold, and out of the ditch they went like a shot Something not unlike a huge snake whirled, writhing, through the air and felled the farmer to the earth. Swinging round, it struck Herm in the face and finally fell, twisting and doubling, into the ditch.

As they gained the road, George gave one fearful glance behind, and saw a confused jumble of hay, men, mules and wagon with a wild medley of howls coming from it.

"What—what the dickens you pulling off no?" cried Herm, as he wiped mud out of one eye. "What was that thing?"

George chuckled. "It might have been a boa constrictor or a sea serpent from the ditch water, but it wasn't. That was a hay rope." George chuckled again. "When we got stalled under that hay the right hind wheel was spinnin' like mad, and the hay caught in it and pulled about half a ton off the wagon before it broke."

Light began to dawn on Herm's understanding. "Them fellers was just crawlin' under when it pulled the load over."

"Some of it got under the wheels, and we climbed out," finished George.

"Hit the high places!" commanded Herm, looking back "They've got by some way. They're comin'!"

As they neared the town Herm looked back for the fiftieth time. "We won't be more than two miles ahead when we get there. You'll have to talk fast to convince the owner of this car of your good intentions before they come along with their rope."

George turned a shade or two paler. "Suppose we don't find him the first thing? What then?"

"Oh, well, they probably won't hang but one of us after I explain matters, and I'll take your car back home to your folks in good order."

"Jamming on every ounce of power, George tore into town, a good three miles in the lead.

"Where's the owner of that car that was taken?" he hurriedly asked the proprietor of the restaurant.

The proprietor stared at them a moment, then shouted, "Here they are, Ben!"

A man who was sitting beside the door leaped to his feet and ran forward. "Hey, you!" he said harshly. "Where's my car? What are you trying to do with it, anyway? Here I've had a sheriff's posse out after you all the afternoon—offered two hundred dollars' reward for the return of my car and now you come in as cool as you please!" With one eye on the door, George explained matters as rapidly as possible. A crowd gathered.

"That's a fine story!" snorted the owner. "You probably haven't any car at all. Just plain joy riders—common thieves."

While George talked, Herm had been looking the place over, and suddenly he stopped his companion's flood of words. "This place fronts on two streets, don't it? The way we fooled ourselves was by coming into the east door and going out of the west one. Come on here with me!"

He and George started for the east door, with the angry owner and his friends close behind. There by the curb stood the faithful "prairie schooner," with the full camp gear tied on behind.

"There!" cried Herm. "Look her over—see if it ain't the same as yours. Same make, same model, everything but the camp gear."

Just then the sheriff's posse appeared, covered with mud and hay but full of zeal and authority. Loud and long were the explanations. At last the owner of the car, who seemed anxious to end the matter, said, "Now, see here! You've plastered my car with mud, used up ten gallons of gasoline and some oil and tires. Pay me for them and ten dollars' damage and go along about your business."

"And me!" shouted the sheriff. "Pay for my gas and for these men,—about forty dollars, say,—and it'll be all right."

George was about to comply when Herm held up his hand. "We'll do it," said he loudly, "just as soon as we collect that two hundred reward that was offered for the return of the car."

George waved Herm back, paid the owner his damages, but completely ignored the sheriff. No one interfered when he and Herm climbed into their car and drove away, leaving the whole crew on the sidewalk staring at one another.

Fritz's "Mother"

It's Not Only the "Golden Lads" Who Call For Mother When Sorely Wounded.

IT IS NOT ALWAYS the youngest soldiers—the "golden lads" of whom so many have fallen—who, when wounded call piteously for their mothers in their weakness or delirium. Men grown—men grizzled—often revert to that primal cry as the bonds of the present loosen near the dark threshold. Many a compassionate nurse has answered the cry with tender pretense, in the name of all motherhood, to comfort some unknown mother's son.

From the front came a story of such mothering in extremity, but with a difference; for the "mother" was not a nurse, or any woman, but a soldier. He was, moreover, the captor of his patient.

During the first day of a long-drawn battle a very youthful Tommy—who had a right to that name by lawful christening as well as by British birth—was with a small "mopping-up" party on the outskirts of a ruined village. A dazed and pallid German, already slightly wounded emerged from a cellar and surrendered at his demand. The prisoner's hands were still in the air, and he had not ceased repeating, "Kamerad! Kamerad!"—the German appeal for quarter—when a huge shell from the German lines burst close by.

When the English boy came to himself he and his prisoner were lying together in the cellar, unroofed by the blast, into which both of them had been hurled. The German was unconscious, and the English soldier was wounded, he did not know how severely. There was no other living creature anywhere near. It was night, and the stars were shining down on them. The artillery fire had ceased and it was very still.

Toward morning, the German, whom the dawn showed to be a large man of middle age, began to moan and writhe, and wakened to delirium, calling for his mother and entreating her to come to him—her Fritz, who needed her so. Why did she stay away so long? Young Tommy, who had picked up a little German from other prisoners, could not understand it all, but he understood enough. The man's name was Fritz; he was suffering and he wanted his mother The next time he cried out a hand patted him and a voice reassured him, "Yes, Fritz; ja, ja, mein Fritz!"

They were not found for two days, for the tide of battle had receded; but they were finally picked up. In the hospital their beds were side by side, although wounded Germans were usually placed in a ward by themselves; for Tommy, immensely proud of his prisoner and of the good effects of his mothering, had begged to have it so. For some days, to the vast interest and amusement of the ward, he continued to mother his protégé; always successfully, for he had been the sweet singer of his company, and his softly and soothingly murmured, "Ja, Fritz; ja, ja, Fritz" (he attempted nothing more) was quite properly feminine and gentle.

Then one day Fritz's mutterings ceased and he fell into a natural sleep. The doctor pronounced that he would certainly recover; but when he turned to Tommy's wound he grew suddenly serious. Tommy, looking quickly from his face to the nurse's, read in their eyes something that he understood. He did not wait to be told.

"Poor old Fritzie!" he said with a gallant smile. "Goin' to leave 'im a bloomin' orphan again, I am. 'Ard, ain't it? But 'e'll do without 'is bloomin' mother now. Poor old old Fritz!"

June: "Why did Freddy call off his date with you last night?"

Sally: "Oh, he had his reason."

June: "Heavens! When did he recover it?"

Mrs. Frazzle: "What a terrible wreck young Perkins is, to be sure. It is sad to see such a dissipated man.

Mrs. Dazzle: "Yes, indeed; but you must remember that he was admitted to the bar at a very early age."

She was a dear, old-fashioned, modest, simple maiden lady. And when she announced the fact that she thought of paying a chiropodist a visit her dearest friend was astonished.

"I didn't know you suffered from corns," remarked the friend.

"I don't," replied the old lady, mildly. "Neither am I afflicted with bunions, childblains nor any other pains in the feet."

Her friend gazed at her with growing consternation.

"Then, my dear," she remonstrated gently, "what on earth do you want to visit a chiropodist for?"

The little old lady's cheeks blushed a delicate pink as she leaned forward, laid one mittened hand on her interrogator's arm, and whispered:

"It's this way, my dear, I do so want to be able to boast that at least once in my life I had a man at my feet!"

Number of Cases Dealt With By Trinity Y. P. S. Court

Miscreants Sentenced by His Honour Judge Cross to Entertain Court With Musical Numbers.

Trinity United Young People's Society met Monday evening under the auspices of the social committee directed by Miss R. L. Kitching and Miss Lillian Riddell. Rev. Mr. Tait took charge of the devotional part of the programme.

The High Court of the Village of Chesterville was then declared open by Constable Hewitt. The court was presided over by His Honour, Judge J. Cross, the worst judge in the three united counties.

The first charge was against Lillian Riddell for the murder of a poor, innocent mouse. She was sentenced to lead the court in a sing-song. At the close of this, Olive Casselman and Hubert Lloyd were making a terrible din in the hall so the constable escorted them to the judge. They had to sing for punishment.

The next case was against Addie Campderros. She was charged with gross negligence—it was found she had connected certain persons with the undertaker who only needed a doctor; the worst telephone operator in Chesterville. She was aslo sentenced to sing.

Judge Cross then declared a recess. Lillian Riddell led in the singing and at the close loud snores could be heard from the balcony. Constable A. Hewitt rushed up the stairs to find Vivian LaSalle in a reclining position. She was sentenced to play the piano. Suddenly Harold Williamson realized that he had been robbed and proclaimed the fact in a loud voice. He had brought two suckers to Y.P. and now they were gone. Jean McIntosh and Lillian Riddell were sitting on either side of him so the constable escorted them to Judge Cross. The suckers were found in the girls' pockets and as a penalty for being light-fingered they had to sing for benefit of the court. At this point, music was heard from outside. Again Constable Hewitt came to the rescue and discovered the Hummel Brothers practicing. They were made to practice before the court, after which His Honour proclaimed the session closed. The National Anthem was then sung.

The Y. P. S. is deeply indebted to Miss Kitching and Miss Riddell for the outstanding programme. A light lunch was served at the close.

Christmas Gift Suggestions Heard by Morewood W.I

Much Business Was Discussed and Decision Made to Hold a Play to Raise Funds For the Society.

The members of the Morewood Women's Institute met at the home of Mrs. W. Campbell with a fair attendance of members and one visitor. The officers were all present, and the meeting opened with the singing of the Institute Ode and the repitition of the Lord's Prayer. "Inexpensive Christmas Gifts," was the roll roll. The answers were many and varied. "Something pretty for mother, not just an apron," was suggested by one member. Business took up a greater part of the meeting "How to make money to carry on the work of the Institute" received many suggestions and the majority favoured a play. A committee was appointed to look after this part of the work.

Mrs. A. Dillabugh read a short paper on "Gifts at Christmas." Sick members and children are to be remembered at Christmas. The January meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. J. W. Bogart, Main street.

The meeting closed by the singing of the National Anthem. A dainty lunch was served by the members in charge. Collection amounted to 50c.
