He is survived by several sons and one daughter, all grown up. His funeral was held on Friday, the preacher being his pastor Rev. J. K. Curtis, and his remains were laid to rest in Maple Ridge cemetery.

Chesterville Company Getting Busy

The shareholders of Chesterville Larder Lake Gold Mining Co. Ltd, at a special general meeting Thursday April 19th, at Chesterville, unanimousiy ratified the action of the directors in passing two by-laws. The first calling for the issue and sale of three hundred and eightv thousand shares of treasury stock for the development purposes. The second by-law appointing J.T. Kearns as managing director.

The outlook of gold mining in Northern Ontario has a bright future since the government has decided to build a railroad from Swastika to the Quebec boundary. This road goes over the Chesterville claims. W. H. Casselman, member for Dundas, was a big factor in having this spur-line built which opens up a great area of mining land to the East.

The Telephone in Movies

Through the assistance of Mr. Geo. J. Hunt, local manager of the Bell Telephone Co., Tuesday evening in the Town Hall, a very interesting entertainment was given under the auspices of the Junior Institute, when Mr. John J. Gardner, area manager for the company at Smiths Falls, told the storv of the birth and progress of the telephone, using 40 lantern slides in illustration. Motion Pictures were also used in depicting the different parts of a telephone and the service rendered the public. The programme was enlivened by a vocal solo by Mrs. C.D. Nadeau; a trio by Misses Addie Campderros, Dora Bogart and Ray Dixon; the Highland Fling by Miss Marguerite Merkley; Violin solo by Miss Marion Casselman and dancing by Mrs. Ryan, a new comer to Chesterville, who has had the advantage of special training in the art of fancy dancing, and whose initial number brought forth an insistent demand for a second number.

Mr. Hart of Toronto Speaks on Community Hall

Tuesday evening about a baker's dozen of citizens interested in the plan of providing a covered rink for Chesterville, listened attentively to a very interesting address on the subject of community halls given by Mr. Hart, a representative of the Department of Agriculture. Messrs. Norman Beach and Frank Hogaboan of Winchester, were present as a delegation from that village to hear what Mr. Hart had to say on the subject. Winchester has the same proposition under way, the erection of a covered skating rink, as Chesterville contemplates.

Mr. Hart outlined the necessary steps to be taken in securing a site for a community hall the deed for which is required to be made over to the municipality. The management of a government assisted community hall is placed in the hands of a board of seven members appointed by the council of the municipality. The government has no unnecessary strings attached to the grant, other than it insists that the building be of such construction that citizens of the community in general may be proud of their building. The money for the erection of such a hall may be raised by free donations of the citizens or raised by taxation of the ratepayers. The building of a skating rink as part of the undertaking could form part of such a scheme, but all the other requirements of a community hall would also have to be provided to secure the government grant. If the whole of the rink part cost were eight thousand dollars and the hall portion two thousand or more extra, the maximum grant of two thousand dollars would not be so very great an assistance, as the whole ten thousand would have to be provided and used before the Government would make the grant, as no advances are made as construction progresses.

Before dispersing a committee consisting of Messrs. O. L. King, Dr S. H. Hutt and W. A. McElroy was named to investigate the possibility of raising funds by interesting the citizens in general in the proposition.

It was expected that a little more interest would have been shown by our citizens in turning out to hear Mr. Hart. Especially was the lack of interest shown by those who might have been expected to get the most benefit from a new skating rink, the hockey enthusiasts.

Pte Clifford Merkley Passes Away

Yesterday at the noon hour a wire was received by Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Merkley telling them of the death of their son Pte Clifford Merkley in the hospital at St. Agathe des Monts, where he had been a patient for some months receiving treatment for tuberculosis. Pte Merkley was a veteran of the great war, in which he saw much service. He went overseas with the Grenadier Guards and after being in France some time made one of the crew of a tank which was in heavy action on the 8th, of August, 1918. His tank among others was put out of action, all the members of the crew being wounded or killed with the exception of Clifford Merkley and Lieut. Gardener who were taken prisoners. Several months were spent in German prison camps where Pte Merkley contracted the disease which has now resulted in his death as surely as if a German bullet had been the cause. He was twenty six years of age, a fine type of young Canadian manhood, held in the highest esteem by a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

The funeral will be held in Trinity Methodist church Saturday at half past one.

Miss Ruth Simser Honored By Her Schoolmates and Friends

The young people of Chesterville surprised Miss Ruth Simser at the Public Library on the evening of April 23rd. Upon learning that Miss Simser intends taking her departure from our midst, her many friends and schoolmates deemed it their duty to bid her farewell on the eve of her departure to her new home. Miss Simser was greately surprised but gave her friends hearty welcome and made so charming a hostess that everyone present felt free to enjoy themselves in music and games. Before lunch was served Miss Simser's attention was called and the following address was read by Miss Annie Barkley. The presentation of a camera and fountain pen being made by Miss Fidella Hummel.

To Miss Ruth Simser:—

We, your many friends and neighbors, meet here to-night to say farewell on the eve of your departure from our midst, to your new home in London.

We may not linger on all the words mean for us, lest our feelings overcome us. We will miss you and feel sure that you will also miss your old friends, associates in this community, but there is also a bright side as well as a sad one in this picture. We feel assured that you have the qualities that will make you friends even among strangers, and we wish for you not only friends; but health and prosperity. We should commend you to the care of the One whose power to keep you has already been proven in your personal character.

We wish to give some tangible proof of our appreciation by asking you to accept these gifts. We present our little gifts in this form, as being the form most easy of transportation. In asking you to accept them, we hope that you will long be spared to use them and now in conclusion will say that our best wishes shall ever go with you, no matter what ever may be your lot.

Signed on behalf of your Chesterville friends.

Miss Simser although taken by surprise made acknowlegment in a few heart felt words, after which all joined in "She's a jolly good fellow" and in the "Wee Sma' hours" her friends bade her an affectionate good-bye.

Tuck, the photographer, will be in his Chesterville studio Wednesday May 2nd.

All Field Seeds to be Officially Graded

The Seed Control Act, administered by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa is undergoing amendment at the present session of Parliament. The amending Bill, after receiving the approval of the Agricultural Committee, has had its second reading in the House of Commons. The original Act provides for the compulsory grading only of timothy, alsike, red clover and alfalfa. The grades of these seeds recognized are "Extra No. 1", "No. 1", "No. 2", "No. 3", and "Rejected". The amended act will extend compulsory grading to all kinds of grass and clover seed, flax, sorghum, millet, wheat, oats, barley, rye, corn buckwheat, sunflower, field peas, field beans, and vetches. Provision is made for including seeds of other kinds of farm crops. The Bill also provides for the optional grading for commerce of field roots and garden vegetable seeds Farmers selling seed on their own premises will not be required to grade seed grain. Grass seed and clover seed, however, sold from the farm must have been officially tested and graded on the basis of a control sample.

The Card-Player's Bible

A private soldier, named Richard Lee, was taken before the magistrates of Glasgow for playing cards during divine services. A sergeant led the soldiers to the English Church, and when the minister had read the prayers he gave out the text. Those who had Bibles took them out but this soldier had neither Bible nor Common Prayer Book; and pulling out a pack of cards, he spread them before him. He first looked at one card and then at another. The sergeant of the company saw him, and said:

"Richard, put up the cards, this is no place for them."

"Never mind that," said Richard.

When the services were over, the constable took Richard a prisoner and brought him before the magistrate.

"Well," said the Bailie, "what have you brought the soldier here for?"

"For playing cards in the church."

"Well, soldier what have you to say for yourself?"

"Much, sir, I hope."

"Very good: if not, I will punish you severely."

"I have been," said the soldier, "about six weeks on the march. I have neither Bible nor Common Prayer Book. I have nothing but a pack of cards, and I hope to satisfy Your Worship of the purity of my intentions."

Then spreading the cards before the Bailie, he began with the ace.

"When I see the ace, it reminds me that there is but one God. When I see the deuce it reminds me of the Father and Son. When I see three, it reminds me of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. When I see four, it reminds me of the four evangelists that preached—Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. When I see the five it reminds me of the five virgins that trimmed their lamps; there were ten, but five were foolish and were shut out. When I see the six, it reminds me that in six days the Lord made Heaven and earth. When I see the seven, it reminds me that on the seventh day God rested from the great work he had made and hallowed it. When I see the eight, it reminds me of the eight righteous persons that were saved when God destroyed the world—viz., Noah and his wife and his three sons and their wives. When I see the nine, it reminds me of the nine lepers that were cleansed by our Saviour. There were nine out of ten that never returned to give thanks. When I see the ten, it reminds me of the Ten Commandments, which God handed down to Moses on the tables of stone. When I see the king, it reminds me of the Great King of Heaven. When I see the queen, it reminds me of the Queen of Sheba, who visited Solomon for she was a wise woman as he was a man. She brought with her fifty boys and fifty girls, all dressed in boys' apparel, for King Solomon to tell which were boys and which were girls. The king sent for water for them to wash. The girls washed to the elbows, the boys to the wrists. So Solomon told by that."

"Well," said the magistrate, "you have described every card in the pack except one."

"What is that?"

"The knave," said the Bailie.

"I will give Your Honor a description of that too, if you will not be angry."

"I will not," said the Bailie, "if you do not term me to be the knave."

"The greatest knave I know of is the constable that brought me here."

"I do not know," said the Bailie, "if he is the greatest knave, but I know he is the greatest fool."

When we count how many spots there are in a pack of cards, we find there are 365—the number of days in a year. When we count the number of cards in a pack, we find 52—the number of weeks in a year. There are 12 picture cards in a pack—the number of months in a year. And on counting the tricks, we find 13—the number of weeks in a quarter. So you see a pack of cards serves for a Bible an almanac, and a Common Prayer Book. —Glasgow Weekly Herald.

Cashier

A young woman went to call on a lady who had entertained her. The latter's five-year old daughter, who was playing on the lawn, said: "Mama isn't at home."

"I am very sorry," replied the young woman, "for I have come to pay my party call."

"Oh, I'll take the money," said the child promptly.

Discovered

Mrs. Hannigan rushed into her husband's office.

"Oh, Peter," she cried, as she panted for breath, "I dropped my diamond ring off my finger and I can't find it anywhere!"

"It's all right, Florence," said Mr. Hannigan; "I came across it in my trousers pocket."

Find Other Body

The body of Archie Page, the nine-year-old son of Albert Page, who with his brother Lionel, aged 13 was drowned three weeks ago in the sluiceway near the Canada Mill, Cornwall, was found on Saturday in the river as almost the same spot where the body of the older brother was recovered on Wednesday afternoon. The bodies of both boys were well preserved as a result of the water being so cold.

Farmer Loses Barn, Crop and Livestock

The modern barn of George Speer, at Cornwall Centre, was completely destroyed by fire Saturday night and with it were consumed six horses, a Shetland pony, the property of Mr. Speer's eight-year-old daughter, Jessie, 31 head of cattle, most of his machinery, and a quantity of hay, grain and ensilage. About 10.30 o'clock Miles Alguire, a neighbor, went to his mail box and on his way back he saw the fire, Jessie Alguire, daughter of Levi Alguire, saw the reflection at the same time, and called her parents, and the two Alguire men gave the alarm. At the Speer home at the time were Mr. and Mrs. James Speer, parents of the owner, but they were asleep. The fire spread rapidly, and little was saved. Mr. Speer had his property insured, but it will not commence to meet his loss, which will total approximately $9,000. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Eyelids Grafted On

Virtually blind from infancy, a 12-year-old girl has been provided with a new pair of eyelids, grafted on by nine operations, and she now is learning to read and write at the Illinois State Eye and Ear infirmary. The new eyelids respond to muscular control quite as well as though they were natural. There is but a slight trace of the surgery, and it is said this will eventually disappear. For days after the surgeons had done their delicate plastic work, the girl's eyes were bandaged. On the day the bandages were removed she saw her parents for the first time. Since then she has made rapid progress in learning to read and write. Her recovery is now considered complete, and she will attend school regularly, as she is able to study several hours without eye fatigue.

Fire Swept Towns Rise From Ashes

With incredible rapidity Haileybury and other fire-swept towns are rising from the ashes of the Northern Ontario holocaust of last summer, according to W. H. Alderson, chairman of the Northern Ontario Fire Relief Committee, after investigating relief needs in that area. It would be difficult to recognize Haileybury, he said, in the new and substantial buildings which have been erected on the site since the fire.

It will no longer be necessary for the towns to receive assistance through the Northern Ontario relief funds, he said, as they have already regained their feet. Accordingly, the distribution of supplies in the larger centres has ceased. But the farmers are in a different position. Until the harvest they will need assistance, and the same will be extended.

Farm machinery and seed grain will be delivered promptly, said Mr. Alderson, in order to expedite the farmers 'task. In some instances deliveries have been made already.

Where Do Elephants Die?

One of the great mysteries of the natural history world is where elephants go when they die. Curiously enough the body of an elephant that has died from natural causes has never been discovered either in India or Africa. Among native races there is a widespread belief that, when the great beasts feel the end approaching, they make their way to some secret hiding place in which to die. The whole question is just as big a mystery as ever, in spite of the fact that many attempts have been made to solve the problem. The districts where elephants occur in a wild state have been scoured in all directions in the hope of discovering the last resting place of the huge animals, but without any result. Quite recently another determined attempt has been made to penetrate the mystery, but, up to the present, nothing of any value has been discovered. As a matter of fact the problem has more than a scientific interest to it. Any individual who is so fortunate as to find the elephants' graveyard will certainly have made a fortune. On this spot there must be a huge accumulation of ivory, a commodity which is continually increasing in value.

CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. Get Two Alligators as Result of Joke

As a result of a joking remark made last Fall, A. Lickorish, agent and H. Duffield, foreman in the Point Edward sheds of the Canadian National Railway, are the unwilling owners of two eighteen-inch alligators, which were shipped to them from Jacksonville, Florida, by parcel post.

Last Fall, H. W. Wayne, a travelling showman, who works in the Point Edward sheds during the Summer months, upon leaving the village asked the agent and the foreman what they would like him to send them from the South, while he was there with his troupe. Without giving much thought to the matter they said: "Oh, send up all thos alligators, you have been telling us about." They then forgot all about their request, but to-day the post master notified them of the arrival of the two little travellers from the South.

"What do you know about alligators?" They were asked. The only reply they could give was that they were supposed to be very fond of children and liver and hamburg.

Mrs. de Wolfe says, "For years I was a dreadful sufferer from Constipation and Headaches and I was miserable in every way. Nothing in the way of medicine seemed to help me. Then I tried "Fruit-a-tives" and the effect was splendid; and after taking only one box, I was completely relieved and now feel like a new person".

Building Up Bee Colonies

It is essential that every beekeeper should have all his colonies in the best of condition, i. e., strong in bees of the right flying age at the commencement of the main flow in order that the largest possible crop may be harvested.

The first step, then, in building up should be taken toward the end of the honey flow, about the last week in July or first in August, when the beekeeper should see that each colony is headed by a vigorous young queen so that plenty of young bees may be reared for the winter. Should no nectar be coming in, it might be necessary to stimulate brood rearing by feeding; especially is this necessary for nuclei.

Later, he should see that all colonies contain an abundance of wholesome stores, and that the bees have adequate protection from the cold, in order that they may winter with as little loss as possible.

Despite the best of preparations for winter, it will sometimes be found when the colonies are removed from their winter quarters that they are low in vitality and vary greatly in strength.

To conserve their vitality cellar wintered colonies should when brought out be protected where possible, also they should be shielded by some sort of windbreak.

Unless lots of stores are present in the spring colonies will build up but slowly.

It will, therefore, be necessary early in the season to see that all have sufficient stores of honey. In most localities there is ample pollen. Combs of honey should be placed, after breaking the cappings, one on each side of the brood nest. Should spring flowers fail it might be necessary to feed to prevent brood-rearing being curtailed. In localities where pollen is not abundant, combs containing it should be saved and given in the spring.

The problem of the beekeeper, then, is to bring the medium colonies up to the strength of the strong ones. This may be done by uniting weak colonies to them or by giving a comb of sealed brood with adhering bees.

If desired, a weak colonly may be built up by placing it above a strong colony with an excluder between them. No entrance is provided above. This is best done in the evening. First remove the cover and allow the cool air to cause the bees of the strong colony to recede. The weak colony is then gently placed above without the use of smoke. Three weeks later the upper colony, now quite strong, is removed to a new stand.

Water is required early in the spring for brood rearing until new honey is coming in, and unless a natural supply is near the apiary it should be furnished.

That the queen be not crowded for room in which to lay, an extra super should be given when the bees are filling all the spaces between the frames, in the brood chamber. The bees also should be made as comfortable as possible by giving them ample space in which to store.

Should increase be desired, the colonies may be divided as soon as the hives are full of bees.

Spread of Profanity

Some newspapers are discussing the vice of profanity in their columns and point with alarm to the increase of the evil among the young. In nine cases out of ten, young people learn the habit from their elders. The profane person is always with us. You will hear him on the street corner, on the railway train—yes, and even in the home in the presence of his little ones. The blasphemer or the person addicted to profanity should be shunned as a leper. He is unclean and should not be allowed to associate with decent citizens.—Colingwood Bulletin.

A Boy With a Mind

Nicholas Amaglio, aged 10, of Chester, Pennsylvania, deserves a little niche in any hall of fame that may hereafter be erected to commemorate important, interesting and ingenious deeds of boyhood.

Nicholas, it appears, resembles all normal boys of his age in that he is occasionally seized with fits of rebellion when the school bell rings. On such occasions he would fain give dear teacher the go-by and occupy himself with something other than books. It is usual with boys in that condition to be seized with strange indefinite ailments that cause their heads to ache if they go in the direction of the school, but disappear immediately in a game of marbles. On other occasions, this aversion to school leads to what mechanistic biologists would call a negative tropism which compels the boy to move automatically away from a school house and toward vacant lots, railroad yards, baseball grounds or almost any other place except home. Again, boys who are taken this way will wander off and return at supper time to report with innocent frankness that they utterly forgot to go to school. Then there are certain wicked boys who merely run away from school and lie about it.

Not to any of these classes does Nicholas Amaglio belong. Scorning all deception and every excuse, Nicholas met the emergency when school time came by giving away his breeches.

"A feller," said Nicholas later to the truant officer, "can't go to school when he ain't got no pants," and who will deny he said a mouthful that time? Rarely indeed does a new invention appear in a field so well worked as that of the art of truancy, but Nicholas is a rare person. He has an originating mind and should have all the credit due to a discoverer.

But when this is said, it must be admitted that the double negative and the outlawed verb in his remark to the minion of the law shows all too clearly that Nicholas would have done better had he retained his knickers and kept his mind on the language lessons.

A Matter of Justice To Your Daughter

One of the most pathetic situations of married life is that of the young wife struggling with the problem of home making for which she has had no previous training. With only her enthusiasm to guide her she finds herself with the responsibilities of housekeeper, home maker and wife and with little knowledge how to bear them.

In justice to her future a girl should be as carefully prepared for her duties as a boy is prepared for his future as a man and burden bearer. From the age of twelve, if not even earlier, certain little home duties should be alloted to her as her share of the general responsibilities, and she should not be permitted to shirk them. If her excuse is that she will be late for school, let her be late for school that one morning and point out to her that she must plan her time the next morning so that she will not be late.

The work itself should be occasionally inspected and, if it is found to have fallen short of her ability to meet a reasonable standard of excellence, the fact that she has not done her best should be made clear to her in a sympathetic and motherly talk.

Few women have an adequate appreciation of the value of time, and some pains should be taken to teach it. Remain with your daughter through the performance of her duty for three or four consecutive mornings, where both of you can see the clock, and make note of the time that she takes to do her work.

The first morning she will be full of enthusiasm and will hurry and see how quickly she can complete her task. The second morning some of the novelty will have worn off, and the task will appear more as a task. The third morning will afford the real test, for then the girl will know how much time the task needs and will clearly understand what her share of responsibility is.

She will then have learned two important lessons: that the day is divided into hours and minutes that move on and are lost forever, some of which belong to play and others to work, and that she is not an idler in the home but is helping to keep it in order by doing her share of the work in the time that she gives to it every morning.

Of course, as the girl grows older her duties should be increased although never to the point of being irksome, but always with the object of training her for a home of her own. The girl who has borne those small responsibilities from her early years will have formed the habit of sharing in the home making and will "feel lost" without it. She will assume larger duties naturally and cheerfully, and that in itself will be of great value to the mother who, as the years pass and the little girl grows up, will find many of her own cares assumed by a helpmate trained in her own methods.

It is a mistake to postpone the training in household duties to the age of seventeen or eighteen years. To expect a young girl to begin to assume responsibilities after her tastes and habits have been partly formed is unfair to her, and the effort to curtail her freedom will inevitably cause friction between mother and daughter and may even lead to serious estrangement.

Rod and Gun For May

There are numerous features combining to make the May issue of Rod and Gun in Canada one of merit, and one that will greatly please sportsmen all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific. In this issue, a new department, "Outdoor Talk" begins, and it promises to be an addition to the magazine that readers will enjoy. It is edited by W. C. Motley, the well known British Columbia sportsman and it is almost certain to meet with instant approval. Bonnycastle Dale, Robert Page Lincoln, C. S. Landis, J. W. Winson, F. V. Williams, and other regular contributors whose work is always in popular demand, have splendid contributions in the May issue, and there are a host of others, William McMillan being the author of a very fine story, "Woo-Na, the Polar Bear." There is an interesting, illustrated article on "The Banff Winter Sports Carnival," not to mention the splendid Kennel Department, edited by Frank H. Walker, and many other features.

Rod and Gun in Canada is published monthly at Woodstock, Ontario, by W. J. Taylor, Limited.

Hall's Catarrh Medicine

Those who are in a "run down" condition will notice that Catarrh bothers them much more than when they are in good health. This fact proves that while Catarrh is a local disease, it is greatly influenced by constitutional conditions. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is a Tonic and acts through the blood upon the mucous surfaces of the body, thus reducing the inflammation and assisting nature in restoring normal conditions.

Record Fire Losses

During last year, the fire insurance companies in Canada had net losses amounting to more than $35 000 000. Of the premiums paid in, 60.90 per cent, more than in 1921. One company actually lost five times as much as it received in premiums, and others had very bad years. The loss by fire in 1922 as a whole was very much larger, for much loss was not covered. Higher premiums are inevitable if this loss tendency continues upward, and we shall be paying out scores of millions as premiums on carelessness.

The peculiar frequency of fires in the last few months has suggested that insurance companies are the victims of deliberate losses. Several years ago, this Province appointed a Fire Marshal, whose duties called for the checking up of fires, the holding of enquiries, and the carrying on of a protective campaign. Mr. Heaton's conduct of his office has not been criticized, nor is it apparently open to serious criticism, but all the supervision and checking seems of no avail against the outbreak of big fires. Canada has the biggest fire loss per capita in the world, and is removed, by magnificent distances, from the penurious carefulness of European property-owners. We are, no doubt, paying the penalty of the cheapness of timber when our older buildings were constructed. Many of these are firetraps. Once a blaze is established, the whole interior is gutted. Fireproof construction is as cheap now as wooden, in large buildings but unless there is more care of the old buildings, or better prevention of intentional losses, we shall find insurance costs almost prohibitive.

Many millions of dollars yearly are paid by Canadian business men for nothing but the extra hazard caused by so much carelessness. The common view is that the companies hold the bag out of which losses are paid. But the people fill the bag, and when business has to be conducted on a close basis, the insurer who can cut his insurance costs gets a big advantage. We may be sure that, over an average of years, we pay our own insurance losses, plus the cost of and a profit on the increasing work of administering six billions' worth of fire insurance.

Individual Churches Well Make Their Own Choice

How will Church Union affect our congregations? This is a question that is constantly asked by Presbyterians in these days. The answer to this question was contained in a statement issued by the Presbyterian Church Union Movement Committee yesterday. The statement says that there will be no change in the status of self-supporting congregations, unless a majority of the members desire it. In augmented charges, where the congregations are numerically weak they will be required to unite with neighboring congregations and form one self-supporting charge, and thus relieve the mission funds.

There will be no change in organization. Every congregation will manage its local affairs as at present. The session, elders and managers will be retained. The pastorial relation will be without time limit, and the congregation will be free to call its minister, as at present. The settlement committee will have the right of appointment as the Presbytery has to-day, but will also facilitate the transfer of ministers, in cases where a change is desired.

The property rights of each congregation will remain unaffected, whether it becomes a part of the United Church or not. No property trust will be interfered with in any way.

Love's Old Dream

By MARTHA MACWILLIAMS

©. 1922. by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

If blushing in sleep is wholly impossible, Mrs. Bettie Lewis Lawrence achieved that impossibility. Certainly she awoke feeling horribly embarrassed, full of hot shame and self-disgust. But as she sat up, rubbing an eye, glancing about her fine, orderly room, her mood changed utterly—she fell back upon the pillow with a gurgling laugh as she realized that her troubling was a dream—nothing more.

She lived alone and self-sufficient—had done it all the thirty years since her young husband had died when they were hardly past the honeymoon. No recluse; rather a Lady Beneficent, helping here, there, everywhere, in sickness or health, at funerals or festivals. The neighborhood, whole and several, swore by her. Some units of it swore at her—deep down.

On the surface it would have been dangerous even for a man who had wooed and wooed, only to be laughed away, not with scorn, but in the kindliest fashion. Nobody had ever been rejected outright—Mrs. Betty was too wise, eke too kind, for that. She gave hearty approval to second marriages—for other people.

Yet she did not plead devotion to a memory—rather a personal shrinking from any renewal of the double estate. From the height of a serene maturity she saw clearly such changes in herself, as might have made existence with poor, dead Dudley not a way of roses. But never by any chance did she name such things outside. Indeed, they remained inarticulate even to her inner consciousness.

And she had waked from a dream wholly incredible—that Pressley Dandridge, whom she barely knew, had driven to her doorstep, asked her out of hand to marry him—that she had consented on the spot, filled with a sudden curious heart-warming toward him—that when she had gone for her hat so as to drive away with him to a minister, she had come back to a space empty of all but a small, grinning black lad, who had piped cheerily: "Dat ar gentemun he told me ter take an' tell you he aint never comin' back, no mo'."

Matter enough for blushes, even by a widow of fifty, you will admit. Mrs. Betty's sense of humor was of the liveliest—as the situation cleared she laughed on till she was weak.

The joke was too good to keep all to herself. As soon as she had her bath she called up her nearest neighbor and dear gossip, Nanny Stowe, and told her all about it. As she talked she heard gurgles and explosions of laughter over the wire—then, stoppage as of a hand over the transmitter which made her certain Nanny was retelling the story.

But she did not mind until as soundmurmurs began again she caught among them a word or two in the growling bass that could belong to nobody but Nanny's Uncle Jimmy.

That wouldn't have mattered in the least except for the fact that Uncle Jimmy and Pressley Dandridge were sworn comrades. Also, that men were notorious gossips; hence Mr. Dandridge, a widower just feeling his freedom, would be sure to hear the whole mess—thus Mrs. Betty mentally characterized it. But she called shrilly, "Please, please, Uncle Jim, shake your niece Nanny good and hard for betraying my confidence, and then give your whole mind to forgetting you heard what she said."

"Agreed, provided you won't forget what you dreamed," Uncle Jim said with a huge, sighing chuckle. "Lord! To think of your wasting that on a dream man—'specially such as Old Press. More'n a dozen of us old bald coots, sighin' widderers and moss-backed bachelors, matches to me, have been ready and anxious to have you even look at us, ever since you took off black. Why, any of us'd give his best stuffie, and his hopes of heaven for even half a chance ter spark you. I call it right down un-Christian, this dreamin' stunt."

"Wait till I see you. Wife won't carry what you deserve," Mrs. Betty flung back, slamming the receiver on the hook. Uncle Jim shook his head, really achieving a creditable sigh. "Betty's the best of all women," he said judicially to Niece Nanny, moving ponderously in her wake to the waiting breakfast table.

He looked over it with approval—it was so neat, so pretty, the smell of everything enough to drive a hungry man crazy. And he might have it all the time instead of only when he stayed all night somewhere, if only he had a wife—the right sort.

Betty was the right sort—no better housekeeper in the county—easy to look at, as the boys said, trim and light on her feet, even if she was close on fifty. Of course she'd never really look at a man who had no looks to speak of—nor much else besides land and money, and live stock—things for which he had paid with his youth, his middle age. Work had absorbed him, been the antidote to heartbreak back in the early twenties when a jilt had played with him. Suppose he had had the sense, the luck, to try for Betty then? But she had held fellows off so—never shy, but just so friendly it smothered all chances for love-making. He had lived with and for himself save for the comradery of his working men and his creatures. She had been luckier some ways—every child in the neighborhood loved her—and the old and poor folk seemed to feel she brought sunshine with her, no matter what the weather.

He had loved driving, striving, thriving, never taking advantage of extremity, but joying in good bargains and ware of making any others. Incidentally, he had been a good neighbor, open-handed to real need, but not lavish of himself as Betty had been. Plague on it! They ought to have run in double harness. Too late now, of course, for anything like that—but, O! it was aggravating to think how much better all things might have been.

"Mrs. Betty must have took your appetite, Uncle Jim," Johnny Stowe said, trying to heap a third helping of fried chicken upon Uncle Jim's plate. Jocularly, of course—to his amazement Uncle Jim nodded acquiescence, saying slowly: "She 'most did. Say, Johnny, what you reckon has ailed her all this time, if now she wakes up and thinks she could take Press Dandridge?"

"Maybe she agreed, because he up and asked her. None of the balance ever did, as far as I know," Johnny returned. Niece Nanny added sagely: "You hit it right there, John. I always felt if any man would get down to cases, as the children say, Betty'd find out she was tired of being lonesome."

"Well!" Uncle Jim rose ponderously to the full stretch of his lank six feet. "I'm going to find out about it before I'm a day older. And, Nance, if it works—well, I won't say what I'll do."

* * * * * * *

Evidently it worked. Just how neither party to the seance ever told. But next Sunday the congregation at Bethlehem lost its breath for half a minute, when Uncle Jim led Mrs. Betty up the aisle just before the benediction and married her out of hand. And less than a month later Nanny Stowe had a brand-new touring car with all the fixings. Mrs. Betty was the giver of it. Uncle Jim had been bidden to save his spare money to send the young Stowes through college.

Discretion.

"You don't make as many speeches as you used to."

"No," replied Senator Sorghum. "A man who wants to be popular must avoid detaining people with talk when they would rather be at the picture theaters."

Government Selected Settlers From Hebrides Islands

A memorable week in the history of emigration from Scotland to Canada closed on Saturday, when the Metagama called at Stornoway and took off 500 inhabitants of the Island of Lewis especially selected by the Ontario Government. All Scotland, indeed, the whole United Kingdom, had been observing with the keenest interest last week's phenomenal exodus rom the Hebrides comprising nearly 1,000 men and women

In addition to the Hebridian emigration, there has been a striking outflow from other parts of Scotland. The Athenia, which sailed on Thursday, carried 1,200 from Glasgow, practically all of them being of the pioneer type.

The Metagama, before leaving Glasgow for Stornoway on Friday, took aboard a healthy crowd of women and children, numbering upwards of 500

A striking feature of the emigrating women and children from Glasgow was the number of young children All Glasgow must have been aware of the Metagama's passengers, so tremendous were the crowds on the docks, and as the vessel moved slowly down the water of the Clyde it was greeted vociferously by crowds lined up on both banks.

BONDS
Are Mortgages on Fixed Assets

When a township issues debentures (or bonds) it gives a mortgage on the whole township for security to the buyers of the bonds for the loan of their money for a definite number of years at a satisfactory rate of interest.

If the amount required is large it is divided into small mortgages, (that is, bonds or debentures) of $500 or $1,000 each, with the same security behind each, so that investors with small sums may take advantage it.

Bonds or debentures are rated the safest kind of an investment.

MR. PEASLEE TELLS OF THE OBLIGING NOD HAYNES

Deacon Hyne, having relinquished his light market basket to a cheerful-looking urchin, who immediately set off down the village street, turned through the gate into Caleb Peaslee's well-kept front yard. Caleb, shaded under the morning-glory vines that covered the east end of the front porch, was winding a broken fork handle with fishline, laying each turn with meticulous care; he held the last turn with his thumb while he looked up to greet his friend. "Set down, Hyne," he urged. "Drag that chair for'ard, will ye? I'd do it m'self, only I can't let go this pesky thing 'thout havin' it all to do over again."

The deacon brought the chair forward and sank into it with a fervent sigh, flinching only a little when his rheumatic knee felt an extra twinge.

Caleb noticed the flinch and spoke of it with ready sympathy. "I take it," he said, "from the way you favor that leg it ain't behavin' in every way as a leg ought to. It's plaguin' you a mite this mornin', ain't it?"

"Wuss'n that," admitted the deacon. "It's achin' stiddy and has all night. I wouldn't have started out only there was some things needful to be got for the house. I d'know whether I'd have been able to fetch as far down as the store or not; but I ain't got to. That Haynes boy offered to go down for me."

"Clever boy, that Noddy Haynes is!" said Caleb heartily.

"He is so!" admitted the usually cautious deacon. "I was some took back at his offerin'."

"He's like his Uncle Norris used to be as fur's being obligin' goes," observed Caleb musingly. "But he's brighter'n ever Norris was; he didn't grade much more'n fair to good when it come to brains, but this boy seems brighter'n the common run of boys—and more obligin' too. I hope," he added with a smile of remembrance, "that he won't get a setback same's his Uncle Norris did."

"Got what kind of a setback?" demanded the deacon.

"The kind that cured him of bein' so tarnal obligin'," replied Caleb, "and turned him into about as cross-grained an old bach as you'd care to live in the same town with!

"I don't know," Caleb continued thoughtfully, "that Sophrony Evans had any real notion Norris Haynes was courtin' her, and I don't know that she didn't. But she must've had plenty of idea that Windom Moore was, and so did everybody else except Norris. As I said in the beginnin' he wa'n't overly bright. It got so folks, if they had any job they hated to do themselves, would sort of praise Norris up a little and cozen him into doin' it for 'em—for nothin' mostly."

"I offered the boy five cents," said the deacon hastily, "but he wouldn't take it."

"Oh, I wasn't thinkin' of you, Hyne," said Caleb with a disclaiming gesture. "I was jest lettin' my mind go over what a ninkum-poody Norris Haynes used to be, and how Windom Moore got him out of the way when they was both callin' on Sophrony, and Windom had made up his mind to ask her.

"I rec'lect the day as well 'sif it was any day this past week," asserted Caleb. "It was a Saturday afternoon in August, and all day the thunder pillars had been pilin' up in the northeast. I saw Windom go down and turn in at Evans's gate, and I kind of felt like snickerin', for I knew Nod Haynes was there, and I thought what a good time Windom would have if he was ketched there in a thunder-shower with Nod Haynes to bother him; the old folks had gone into the city to do the week's tradin' and left Sophrony alone.

"Twa'n't more'n ten minutes after Windom went in 'fore it did start in to rain, and in five minutes more it was rainin' hossrakes and breakin' up plows and all kinds of farmin' tools! I never see it rain harder, seem's if!

"And in the midst of that downpour we saw the front door open and Norris come out holdin' an umbrel, and the next thing he sot a ladder agin the eaves of the house and clim' up there on the roof; and what on earth he was doin' I couldn't guess, for there hadn't been a streak of lightnin', so we knew the house hadn't been struck. He clim' up till he was mebbe four foot from the ridgepole, and then, I swan if he didn't set down on the roof—and there he sot, holdin' that umbrel over his head till the shower passed and the rain stopped. I jest about 'mazed myself to death, wonderin' over it!

"But it come out in time, and when I heard it I d'dn't wonder that Nod Haynes quit being 'commodating any more. Seems that when the shower struck so hard and sudden the roof begun to leak, and Windom, bein' kind of a joker, told Nod it would be a clever thing for him to go up on to the roof and set on the hole and keep the rainoff'n Sophrony. 'Girls like those little 'tentions,' Windom says, and you won't git wet much with an umbrel over you.' And so the poor gump went and did it; and while he was up there Windom found the chance he'd been waitin' for, and Sophrony said she would.

"But when Nod found out that he'd sot out on a roof through the wust shower of the summer to keep the rain off'n another feller while he popped the question to Nod's own girl,—'cording to his ideas,—well, as I said in the beginning, it give him a setback; I guess he never did another obligin' thing again. I never heard of it if he did."

"I don't blame him!" exclaimed the deacon.

"Me nuther," agreed Caleb promptly, "but you wanted to know, and I've told you."

Here and There

Nova Scotia has adopted the "drive to the right" rule of the road, the bill providing the change having received the assent of the administrator of the province.

The year 1922 was a banner year for Montreal in the number and tonnage of ships which came to the port, a total of 6,983 ships of 13,-059,699 tons arriving, as compared with 5,541 ships of 9,735,450 tons in 1921.

Canada led the world in 1922 in the export of raw furs to the United States. The total fur catch for that year was over 4,000,000 pelts, valued at $16,000,000. While the general price of furs shows a downward trend, the total catch shows a remarkable increase.

Four of the Canadian Pacific "Empress" liners, the Britain, the France, the Scotland and the India, are to load grain at Quebec during the 1923 season, and new berths have been provided for these vessels near the grain conveyors, at a cost of $300,000.

When she was alighting from a street car in Vancouver, Mrs. Rose McLaren received injuries which prevented her from concentrating and temporarily did away with her earning power as a spiritualist or psychic reader. She was awarded $1,250 against the railway company.

The addition of the 17,000-ton "Montlaurier" to the Canadian Pacific "Mono Class" fleet marks an important development. Not only is she the largest one-class-cabin ship sailing to and from Canadian ports, but she is the largest in her class on the Atlantic. Her length is 613 feet and breadth 68 feet. Because of her size she will sail to and from Quebec.

Approximately 8,000 tons of silver ore are waiting shipment from the Keno Hill, Yukon, mines. This quantity represents the winter haul. Another 2,000 tons may be moved this summer, making the total silver shipments ten thousand tons for 1923. Such an output is worth about $2,000,000, high grade ore running from $200 to $300 per ton.

"The greatest feat of steam transportation to my knowledge," said C. E. Stockdill, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, recently, "was the movement of the grain crop of 1922." From Sept. 1 to Nov. 31, a period of 91 days, the Canadian Pacific Railway loaded and shipped an average of 1,265 cars per day. This requiring the dispatching of a train every 45 minutes during that entire period, carrying more than 1,000,000 bushels daily. This movement exceeded even that of the bumper crop year of 1915.

One of the many instances of the splendid work carried out at the Liverpool docks is afforded by the Canadian Pacific liner "Metagama." On a recent arrival at that port she started the discharge of her cargo and coaling at 6 o'clock in the morning. Allowing for the usual dinner hour, she took on board in her side bunkers 1,000 tons of coal, which was completed by 2.45 the same afternoon. At the same time she discharged 1,700 tons of cargo, the greater part of which consisted of package freight, completing this operation by 7.15 the same evening.

The Homing Pigeon

It will be news to many people to hear that what is known as the Carrier Pigeon has the homing instinct very little developed. The real messenger is the Flying Homer, which species having the natural instinct, can be trained to a wonderful degree. Flights of 500 miles are, as Messrs. Geo. Robertson and W. W. Lee of the Poultry Division at Ottawa testify, by no means uncommon with this type of pigeon, which is used not only for message carrying, but also for racing and distance flight competitions. It was the Flyer Homer pigeon that rendered distinctive service to Britain in the late world-war. This training of the young birds of this breed may be commenced at the age of three to four months, but before undergoing actual training, it is adviseble to submit them to a few preliminary flights in the immediate vicinity of the pigeon loft, so that they may be able to familiarize themselves with the topography of the surrounding country. After this, on a bright clear day, the birds should be taken a short distance from the loft in a covered basket, preferably to the top of a slight eminence, and then released. This should be repeated day by day at continually increasing distances and changing direction. In order to train the birds to immediately enter the loft on returning, they should be kept slightly hungry and a little grain scattered on the loft as soon as they are released.

PROPOSED NEW BASILICA STE. ANNE DE BEAUPRE

THE PROPOSED NEW BASILICA AT STE. ANNE DE BEAUPRE. INSERT IS THE OLD BASILICA, PRIOR TO THE CONFLAGRATION.

WHEN the historic Shrine and Basilica at Ste. Anne de Beaupre was burned to the ground last year, together with the monastery and the novitiate of the Redemptorist Fathers, the clergy did not waste any more time than was necessary in lamenting their loss, but set about at once to construct a temporary shrine and to lay plans for a larger and newer church. After a great deal of discussion it was decided that the old church had become too small for the demands and that the exigencies called for greater accommodation. It was therefore decided to demolish the old walls, and to build a church proportionate to the needs of the future as far as they can be foreseen The plans of the magnificent structure shown above were decided upon. The new Basilica which has been designed to give the edifice an appearance compatible with its use will not conform to the architectural style of any one period but will be a combination of Roman and Gothic. An idea as to its generous proportions can be gained from the following figures: Length over all 312 feet; interior length, 260 feet; length of choir, 65 feet; width of nave, 134 feet; width of transept, 186 feet; height of grand nave, 85 feet; superficial area 42,000 square feet. There will be twenty-six altars, twelve of which will be in the crypt Chapels, and the lighting of the interior will play a large part in the scheme of decoration of the church and will be a telling factor in providing a beautiful place for the hundreds of thousands of pilgrims who journey each year to the famous shrine.
