Decide to Organize Rotary At Meeting Monday Night

Climaxing two gatherings of the men of town interested in the formation of a service club, and two visits to the Ottawa Rotary Club, the decision to apply for organization of a Rotary Club in Chesterville was reached at a meeting Monday evening. Sixteen of the men present signified their intention of applying for membership and the list is expected to grow to at least 21.

The meeting was called at the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. S. Boyd for the purpose of "ironing out the difficulties over a cup of tea." There were some present who had stated their liking for the idea who had not been interviewed on Judge McKinley's last visit and a frank discussion was held of organization, classification, international and local work, dues, and other points of interest.

The movement started with the visit of Judge "Jack" McKinley, of Ottawa, prominent Juvenile court judge, who was on an official visit here two months ago. His Honour was interviewed by a body of men interested in the removal of slot machines from town and he put the germ of the service club idea at work. Subsequent meetings were held and the Capital City Rotarians have assisted.

After all sections had been dealt with Monday evening relating to the idea of Rotary, a vote decided that organization be applied for. Ottawa, as the parent club, has been advised and a delegation will come here shortly to start things going. Formal application for the charter will then be made to the international office at Chicago.

P. S. Boyd was chairman of the meeting and K. L. Gauthier acted as secretary. Naturally those interested want as many men as possible lined up when application is made for the charter and there is still time, they say, for any wishing to join Rotary as charter members to do so. A word to any of the committee is all that is necessary provided the classifications can be met. This term "classification" is not the bugbear it seemed at first. With the subdivisions of the minor classifications, those available here total 73, more than could be hoped for membership here.

Luncheons will be held weekly on Monday evenings at 6.30 o'clock. A committee was named to interview the Women's Institute to complete arrangements for catering.

L. H. Doering, who now resides on the Jersey Islands, was recently the guest of a Rotarian at a club luncheon, and when he learned a movement was on foot here to organize Rotary, he wrote asking that if it were possible his name be included in the list of charter members.

The aims of the club will be to back organizations taking care of the younger folk: Boy Scouts, the Boys' Band, Girl Guides, young people's societies, sports, and all worthwhile movements for the good of the community.

JOHNNY SORREL BANGS 'EM IN!

Johnny Sorrell, now playing with the New York Americans in the National Hockey League, was surely in the limelight over the week end, when the Americans in winning and losing a game with the Toronto Maple Leafs scored six goals, three of which were from the stick of the Chesterville boy.

Johnny was given fine praise in the broadcast of the Toronto game Saturday night and was chosen the second star of the evening's performance.

FINCH AND MAXVILLE TEAMS TIED FOR FINAL PLAY-OFF

Maxville Millionaires won a decisive 9-2 victory over Finch Flyers in their second meeting in the best two-out-of-three games in the finals of the Cornwall and District Intermediate league played in Jubilee rink at Maxvile last night.

Finch won 6-5 in their first meeting in Finch Tuesday night when overtime was necessary. The third and final clash is billed for Mille Roches arena tonight. Winners of this series go against Winchester in the first series of the Ottawa and District playdowns.

ALERT CHESTERVILLE BOY HONOURED BY C. P. R

THIS morning, Messrs. W. C. Beck, divisional superintendent, and John R. Caswell, divisional engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Smiths Falls, made a special trip to Chesterville to extend the appreciation of the company and to present a tangible token of the company's feelings toward an alert Chesterville boy. The little ceremony took place at the Public school with Eric "Dick" Fyke, 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fyke, the recipient of a ten-dollar bill.

Dick was on his way home from school at the noon hour on Wednesday, January 19, taking a short cut across the tracks near the rink, when his progress was blocked by an eastbound freight train roaring through. As engine 2809 swung along over the switch, Dick heard what he described as "a sound like a rifle shot." After the train had passed, he investigated and found a broken switch, which he immediately reported to Bob Ouderkirk, one of the section men.

Repairs were promptly made and the incident reported to the officials who, after investigation made the award to Dick who is a member of the 1st Chesterville Troop of Boy Scouts.

R. C. Dillabough, principal of the school, introduced the visitors who made the presentation to Eric and who also called Irwin Stata, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Stata, who was with Eric, to the front, and took his name, saying he too would likely receive recognition.

The C.P.R. officials were very pleased to meet the school staff and the pupils and an auspicious occasion was made of the presentation.

Cubs Start Playdown Series Against Metcalfe Juniors

Tonight, Bill Dixon's Cubs will stack up against Metcalfe Juniors in the first of a two-game series with goals to count, in Winchester rink. Metcalfe has chosen Winchester ice for their home game. The second game will be in Chesterville Monday night and the winner of the series will go against Iroquois Juniors who have taken a fall out of Cardinal and are now sitting back. Neither the Cubs nor Metcalfe were placed in a competitive series, having been given a bye and of course have not had to battle for their right to go into the playdowns. Both have been well coached, however, and been tried out repeatedly against fast teams from Ottawa City League and the success of former Chesterville juniors should be repeated, giving the fans something to enthuse over before the break-up of the ice.

During the service, the Vernon Male Quartette sang "That Beautiful Land."

He is survived by his widow, the former Mary Allan, of Kemptville, and two daughters and two sons, Mrs. Willie Clark and Weldon Carlyle, of Mountain, and Edith and Willard at home.

Those attending the funeral from this district were Mrs. Wilburn McElroy, Mr. W. Rae, Miss Agnes Rae, Mr. Donald Rae, the Misses Mildred and Gertrude Rae, and Miss Beth Carlyle, of Dunbar, and Mr. Kenneth Carlyle, of Winchester.

Winchester Man's Death Ruled Accidental By Jury

After hearing evidence at the inquest held in Winchester, Tuesday, into the death of Hamlet O'Neil, 23-year-old resident of that village, who was found dead on the morning of February 8 on the C.P.R. tracks near the station, the jury found death was caused by O'Neil being struck by westbound passenger train No. 21 in the early morning of February 8.

No blame was attached to the crew of the train.

District Coroner Dr. Peter McLaughlin, of Winchester, presided and the evidence given by Dr. J. J. McKendry indicated death was caused by a blow on the head by some blunt object, and he had died instantly.

Williamsburg Boy Died Following Injuries in Bush

Jack Henophy, 17-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Alva Henophy, of Williamsburg township, died on Friday morning in Cornwall General hospital as the result of injuries received while cutting a tree near his father's farm. The funeral took place Sunday afternoon at St. John's Lutheran church, east of Morrisburg.

The youth had been working with his father on Thursday when a tree was felled and, in falling, caught in the crook of another nearby tree. He climbed to the crotch to free the tree, and while he was working at that, the imprisoned tree gave way, throwing the boy to the ground. He was rushed to the hospital, but his injuries were so severe that death resulted on Friday.

Born in Dundas county, he was the eldest of a family of 10, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alva Henophy, who reside about five miles northeast of Morrisburg, on the second concession. Four brothers and five sisters survive him.

The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Arthur Buehlow, pastor of St. John's, at three o'clock, Sunday, first in the house, then at the church. Interment was in the cemetery at the church. Pall-bearers were Peter Hollister, Raymond Prunner, Clifford Hart, Clark Burton, John Hart and M. Barkley.

Among the relatives from a distance who attended were Mrs. Robinson and son, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Prunner, George Henophy and Frank Rooks, all of Massena, N.Y.; Mrs. F. Clark and son, Spencer, Morrisburg; and Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Henophy, of Williamsburg.

Tall, austere Prime Minister Chamberlain refuses to let the crisis over foreign affairs interrupt his methodical daily routine. As usual, he leaves Downing Street for a stroll in nearby St. James' Park at 10 a.m. Before that he eats his usual big breakfast of bacon and eggs. The Premier is well known for his calm air in the midst of crisis. In 1931, during the tense money crash when eyes turned for a solution to the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, he took time off to write a letter to The Times to say he had discovered a new type of thrush.

THE AVERAGE MAN AND WORLD AFFAIRS.

THE average man likes to think he is keeping up with world affairs when conversation drifts around to that subject, as it is doing since the rift in the British Cabinet, but it is difficult for one not thoroughly versed on every angle of the situation to know just what is aimed at. It is generally agreed that Britain has taken several rebuffs, but these have not been taken without something gained, either time for bringing armaments up to a predetermined strength before being in position to make her voice heard, or just keeping the world from war day by day, with every day of peace leaving an opportunity for the removal of causes for war.

TEN COMMANDMENTS REVISED FOR TEACHERS

THIS is Education Week. Because of this we make no apology for devoting the major portion of our editorial columns to the subject of education. Accordingly "Ten Commandments for School Teachers"—a revised version of the decalogue, designed to aid teachers to keep sweet—have been put in the hands of many of the pedagogues.

Nobody seems to know its origin or its author's name, but a Toronto public school inspector saw it a few days ago in the register of one of the classes he inspects. He read it and was impressed by its possibilities of constructive suggestion for easing up on nerves, both of teacher and pupils. So he had copies struck off and has sent them out to the teachers in his inspectorate.

Here is the text of the new "Ten Commandments":

1. Thou shalt have other interests beside thy schoolroom.

2. Thou shalt not try to make of thy children little images, for they are a live little bunch, visiting their wriggling capacity upon you, their teacher, unto the last moment of the day, and showing interest and co-operation unto those who can give them reasonable freedom in working.

3. Thou shalt not scream the names of thy children in irritation, for they will not hold thee in respect if thou screamest their names in vain.

4. Remember the last day of the week to keep it happy.

5. Humour the feelings of thy children that their good-will may speak for thee in the little domain over which thou rulest.

6. Thou shalt not kill one breath of stirring endeavour in the heart of a little child.

7. Thou shalt not suffer any unkindness of speech or action to enter the door of thy room.

8. Thou shalt not steal for the drudgery of many "papers" the precious hours that should be given to recreation.

9. Thou shalt not bear witness to too many "schemes of work," for much shattered effort is a weariness to the soul.

10. Thou shalt laugh—when it rains and wee woolly ones muddy the floor, when it blows and doors bang, when little angels conceal their wings and wiggle, when Tommy spills ink and Mary flops a tray of trailing letters, when visitors appear at the precise moment when all small heads have forgotten everything you thought they knew.

PASTEURIZATION OF MILK —A SCHOOL PROJECT

Public School Principal Has Pupils Pasteurize Milk in School And Compare It With Raw Milk

W. J. MESSENGER, Principal of Markdale Public School, Ontario, has some practical ideas about the instruction of the children in school as to the pasteurization of milk and its value as a preventive of disease. These ideas are embodied in an article in the current issue of the Canadian School Journal and deserve to be broadcast far and wide.

This enterprising educationist has introduced a small milk sterilizer into his school and allows the pupils to carry on the process for themselves. Four bottles of raw milk are added to sterilized bottles, sealed and set aside. Four similar bottles filled with raw milk are pasteurized at the usual temperature of 145 degrees F., held at this temperature for 30 minutes and cooled. The raw milk bottles also similary kept cool, are compared from day to day with the pasteurized ones. While the raw milk soon becomes sour, the pasteurized milk remains sweet.

The principal teaches the children that the germs of diseases such as bovine tuberculosis, scarlet and typhoid fever and septic sore throat are killed by pasteurization, that the flavour and food values of the pasteurized milk are practically unchanged in the process and that the milk is thereby made safe for use.

The practical experiment carried on by this teacher gives the pupils a complete impression of the process and its results. They carry the knowledge thus gained home to their parents much better than could be done by any written words. He might have added that by the use of the double boiler any housewife can pasteurize her own supply simply by heating the milk to the temperature mentioned, holding it at this temperature for 30 minutes and then rapidly cooling the milk to 40 to 50 degrees F. and keeping it at this temperature until it is used.

One cannot too highly commend the practical teaching just described. One should like to be a member of this teacher's school board in order to propose that in view of the high value of such teaching, his salary should be increased. Such a teacher deserves well of the ratepayers involved. This principal is paving the way for the saving of money in taxes. Far better he is doing something designed to preserve his pupils' health and save their lives.

Phosphates Badly Needed by Pastures

Prominent Scientist Tells How Strange Animal Deaths Resulted From Lack of Minerals in Pasture Lands They Grazed.

ONE of the big problems today is improvement of the great pastures of the world, Dr. E. V. McCollum, professor of biochemistry in the School of Hygiene and Public Health, The Johns Hopkins University, told members of the Canadian Club of Ottawa at their luncheon on Saturday.

Many studies were in progress with a view to improving waning pastures. The phosphate content in soil was one of the foremost problems that had to be faced. "There comes a time when cattle, having prospered on a certain pasture, no longer do so. There is only one remedy, to put back phosphate into the soil."

Dr. McCollum said the same condition attached to the taking of too much grain from the same soil.

Experiments had shown, said Dr. McCollum, that the digestion of proteins fed certain parts of the body. "Each protein does something which no other element can replace." They now knew that there must be some 30 elements in a chemical diet. With only one left out, failure nutritionally resulted. That was "rather a fortunate position from which to start to know what diet is about."

'We also know a great deal about what many of these 30 things are providing in nearly all our common foodstuffs." Good advice had been given to the public as a consequent, in regard to eating habits.

They had also learned that some of the things they had been doing were "fundamentally wrong." Lack of certain vitamins resulted in malnutrition. Healthy mucous surfaces were effective barriers against invasion by disease. They needed to be maintained by a proper diet.

Dr. McCollum said that 20 years ago he used to be accused of "overtalking this subject." Today he found he was "among the conservatives." There were a great many over-talking him today on the subject.

FARM ANIMAL PROBLEM.

But he could point to illustrations showing how nutrition worked in the farm animal problem. He instanced the large losses of cattle 20 years ago in South Africa. It was found that there were not enough phosphates in the soil. Additions of these, at very low cost, had changed the whole situation.

In the United States there had been big losses in poultry production. Deficiency of manganese had been proved to be the cause. They had found that to be an "indispensable element" in the raising of poultry.

In New Zealand, great losses of sheep had been traced to deficiency in iron. "It was found that sheep, like rats and men, needed a little bit of cobalt."

"We know now that it was only certain samples of iron which were contaminated with a little bit of cobalt that proved effective."

BORROWING AT THE BANK
to operate more profitably

FARMING, DAIRYING, STOCK RAISING—and other lines of agricultural business often need improvements or new equipment, to stop waste and make better profits. Good managers in every line of business know where small expenditures would increase efficiency and profits. If they can spare the money from their working capital, they will spend it promptly for such purposes. If they have good security, but not the ready cash, they will wisely borrow.

Wherever, in Canada, agricultural business is carried on, there is a branch of the Bank of Montreal, acquainted with local needs and conditions, ready to consider applications for loans for such constructive purposes.

Neighbours Bid Farewell To Mr. and Mrs. Lamoureux

A very pleasant social gathering was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. David Lamoureux when neighbours and friends gathered to bid them a farewell before leaving for their new home in Dunbar. Dancing was enjoyed by many, music being supplied by Teddy Fawcett and Emerson Hillis. A pleasant feature of the evening was the reading of a short address by Mrs. Sheldon Ball and the presentation of pieces of furniture by Mr. Spearman Fawcett and Mr. Harold Windsor.

Mr. and Mrs. Lamoureux were deeply affected by the kindly act and kindly expressions of their neighbours and Mr. Lamoureux made a feeling reply. All joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows," and lunch was then served.

Following is the address:

Maple Ridge, Feb. 21, 1938.

Dear David and Ethel,

It is with regret we have learned of your leaving our vicinity, but, since the time of your departure is so close at hand, we are glad to be with you once more to show our respect and esteem to a couple that have spent four years so quietly in our midst.

You have been cheerful givers to all community affairs. We will miss you in many ways. We feel sure what is our loss, will be Dunbar's gain.

Tonight, we wish to present to you these gifts and as you use them from time to time we hope they will often remind you of your neighbours and friends in this vicinity.

If in the future you should choose at any time again to make your home in this district, we feel sure you will be heartily welcomed by all.

Health, happiness, and prosperity is our wish to you as you go in your new home.

Signed on behalf of your neighbours and friends,

Spearman Fawcett, Harold Windsor.

Old Dog.

Jessica Powers
in the New York Times.

LIFTING my gun to end his agony,
I saw my old dog's eyes,
He turned his head; they brimmed with loyalty,
Then darkened with a terrified surprise.
He knew the message of a pointed gun,
Yet he did not attempt to rise and flee,
Nor whimper even once; the thing was done.
A stricken look was all he gave to me.
My friends say I go cautiously of late,
Subdue my speech and curb a wily pen.
I think of the devotion in those great
Dark eyes with knoweldge of betrayal here
And I walk gently with my fellow men.
It would be too much in one life to bear
That wounded look again.

Escaped Convict Had Gun Likely To Face Charges

Collin's Bay penitentiary authorities are considering charging two recaptured convicts with upwards of nine offences after learning one of them whipped out a revolver when guards arrested them Monday night near Gananoque.

Charlie Cornell and Gerald Blackburn, both of Windsor, escaped from the prison Friday, leaving the penitentiary grounds under cover of heavy fog.

Guards who effected their recapture said Cornell drew a .22 Colt revolver when a car driven by guards swerved in the path of the two convicts Monday night on the highway. No shot was fired as Keeper Hawley, in charge of the prison party, overpowered Cornell.

It was believed the gun was stolen from a house Sunday night. Cornell also carried a length of lead pipe and a wrench. Blackburn offered no resistance.

TELEPHONE TALKS IN THE WATSON FAMILY

"MY DAD can talk farther than YOURS!"

When Donnie Watson's father greeted him over the telephone from 500 miles away, Donnie was impressed no end. He couldn't resist boasting a bit to his next-door neighbour and playmate.

Whenever you're called out of town, do as Bob Watson does — telephone home. It brings peace of mind at a trifling cost.

THE best Chevrolet in history — the outstanding car of 1938! Compare . . . and let your own eyes prove it. Look at that beautifully rounded new radiator grille. See how those modern lines are repeated in the new hood louvres — emphasized by the fleet, low streamline of the roof.

Glance inside. Here are wider seats! Wider doors! Attractive new upholstery! Extra inches of room! Flat, unobstructed floors! Fisher No-Draft Ventilation! And remember, these bodies are of All-Silent, All-Steel construction —so safe, so soothingly free from vibration, "tinniness" and drumming.

Check on all the exclusive features Chevrolet brings you. Learn what owners themselves say about economy . . . "Up to 27 miles to the gallon of gas!" . . . "Never add a drop of oil!" . . . "Lowest upkeep costs in motoring!"

Then drive the car itself, and you'll not only agree it's the best Chevrolet in history . . . you'll never be satisfied with less than a Chevrolet for your money!

Worry No. 1—

BusinessMen LIKE This Expense Item

Paying money out is always less pleasant than taking it in. Expense items are headaches for the business man, with one exception.

Money paid for advertising is the single exception. It's the only expenditure a business executive will regard with pleasure, for he knows his money is being invested, not lost.

Advertising is an investment — something paid out today to assure more income tomorrow. Building demand for merchandise through advertising is just as important as buying goods. Advertising not only creates demand and builds goodwill; it makes money for the man who uses it.

There's A Reason

There's a reason why you instinctively turn to the merchant who advertises when you want dependable merchandise at reasonable prices.

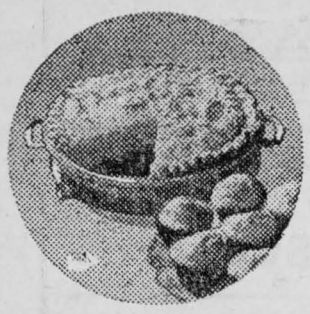

Advertising builds his sales, increases his business. The lower margin of profit on each sale is passed on to you.

When you see a local storekeeper's ad in the home town paper you can be sure he has considered the buyer's interest as well as his own.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

- By -

MISS HELEN LACEY, B.H.Sc.

TEMPTING THE CHILDREN.

THE MEALS for school-age children need special consideration. In the first place, growing children need a larger proportion of food for their size than adults to take care of their rapid growth. The need for an abundance of good protein, of minerals and of vitamins is also more imperative than that of the adult.

Because the digestive system of a child is more delicate than that of an adult, the food must be simple, clean, easily digested, and well prepared. In the diet of the shcool-age child should be included daily at least one quart of milk, part of which may be used in soups, puddings, cocoa, etc. Cereals with milk or cream, rice, potatoes and well-cooked bread should all find a prominent place in the diet as well as one or two eggs and for the older children one helping of meat. Include also a liberal amount of fat, chiefly as butter and cream, and a little bacon fat and gravy. Fruit, raw or fresh, and two or more vegetables should be included daily.

The following recipes are suitable for school-age children and of course adults like them too.

CREAM OF SPINACH SOUP.

2 cups spinach stock and pulp
4 tablesoons flour
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons butter
2 cups milk

Wash and cook spinach in a very small amount of water. Press through a sieve. There should be two cups of spinach stock and pulp. Melt butter; blend in flour and seasonings. Add spinach stock gradually, stirring constantly to prevent lumping. Cook until thick. Add milk either hot or cold and reheat soup. Serve very hot with croutons.

CROUTONS.

Cut slices of stale bread one-third of an inch thick. Cut into cubes. Place in a baking pan and brown in a hot oven. If desired, the slices of bread may be buttered before cutting in cubes.

TAPIOCA CUSTARD.

¼ cup pearl tapioca
2¼ cups milk
2 eggs
1-3 cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon vanilla

Wash tapioca, soak several hours in cold water. Drain; add milk and cook over boiling water until the tapioca is clear. Beat eggs, add sugar and salt and hot milk mixture slowly to prevent eggs from cooking in lumps. Return to the double boiler; cook until egg thickens. Remove from heat, add flavouring. Serve with cream or custard sauce.

SNOW PUDDING.

1 tablespoon gelatine
¼ cup cold water
2-3 cup boiling water
2-3 cup sugar
thin shavings of lemon rind
3 tablespoons lemon juice
2 egg whites

Soften the gelatine in cold water. Make a syrup of the sugar, boiling water and lemon rind; boil five minutes. Pour over the softened gelatine, stir until dissolved. Chill; stir occasionally and, when partly set, beat until foamy; add whites of eggs beaten stiff and beat until the mixture begins to stiffen. Turn into a moistened mould. Serve with custard sauce.

One-third of a cup of whipped cream may be substituted for one egg-white.

PLAIN CUSTARD.

1 cup milk
1½ tablespoons sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 egg or 2 yolks
flavouring—¼ teaspoon vanilla or 2 teaspoons caramel or a few gratings of nutmeg

Beat the eggs slightly, add sugar and salt. Heat the milk, add to the egg mixture slowly. Stir until the sugar is dissolved; add flavouring. Pour into custard cups. Place custard cups in a pan of hot water and cook in a moderate oven until firm.

The custard is done when the blade of a knife comes out clean.

If custards are cooked quickly at high temperatures, they will be watery and full of holes and as a result are less appetizing.

If the custard is cooked in a large amount, use three eggs to one pint of milk.

28 PERSONS ESCAPE FIRE IN BROCKVILLE TENEMENT

A stiff two-hour fight was required before firemen brought under control a blaze which threatened to raze the three-storey former hotel opposite the Union Station in Brockville, Tuesday.

The blaze, starting from a defective chimney, ran through the partitions and directly up into the attic, where firemen tried to flood it out.

Twenty-eight people, members of six families occupying the building, left the building without injury but many lost their belongings without insurance protection.

The young couple sat at a night club and cooed heavily:

Boy: "We could get married easily. My father's a minister."

Girl: "Okay, let's try it. My father's a lawyer.

The Path of the Evening Star

WALKING rapidly over the firm crust with his dog Pedro at his heels, Duncan Fraser skirted the tangled branches of a fallen hemlock and came to the edge of a narrow frozen stream that wound through the forest. A thaw followed by days of bitterly cold weather had crusted the snow and made ice ponds of glassy smoothness in every hollow. From down the slope came the monotonous roar of a waterfall.

Duncan stopped at a shaggy spruce tree and, gazing upward, scanned its bark with a practiced eye; he paused only a second or two before he passed on toward the falls. A moment later he examined a second spruce tree with equal quickness, but did not stop. Over his back and chest hung two ends of a rough cloth sack; his head was thrust through a slit at the middle. In one hand he dragged a trimmed pole of dry spruce, on the end of which was a cornucopia-shaped instrument of iron with a sharpened rim.

A hundred feet from the head of the waterfall, towering above its neighbours, leaned slightly toward a frozen pool; the pool led into a steep walled gorge through which the stream under its covering of ice found its way to the waterfall. Duncan scarcely glanced at the gorge, but gave his whole attention to the old monarch of the forest. With one hand on its furrowed bark he bent his head backward and gazed straight up.

"Found!" he cied suddenly. "Pedro, we've found a gum tree!" And the terrier, understanding by the ring of his master's voice that something unusual had happened, rested his forepaws against the tree and barked.

Five feet above Duncan Fraser's head was the lower end of a deep slash made by lightning. It extended through the dead lower branches up and up until it was lost in the green foliage above. All the way its sides were incrusted with nuggets of amber-coloured gum from the size of a pea to that of a hen's egg. In the level rays of the late afternoon sun they shone with a topaz light. This was an unusual find, and it meant dollars to Duncan Fraser.

Within reach of his hands was a scar in the trunk from which several nodules of "buster" gum had oozed and hardened. Taking his knife from the pocket of his Mackinaw coat, he quickly began to chip off the clear crystals and to put them into his bag. He dropped the best pieces into the end of the sack that hung over his chest and put the inferior gum into the end at his back. When he had gathered what was within reach of his hand, he thrust his knife into the thick bark of the tree and picked up his cornucopia-tipped pole. With this raised above his head he began to gather the nuggets. Each piece, as he dislodged it with the sharp rim, fell into the horn. When he had filled the cornucopia, he lowered it to the ground and emptied its contents into the bag. Then he raised it for another load.

Duncan Fraser was a trapper, but this winter his traps hung on the walls of his cabin at Hemlock Ridge; it was an "off year" for fur. In November he had heard that the wholesale druggists in Portland were paying a dollar and a half a pound for first-class "amber" gum and eighty-five cents for the second grade. He had taken up his trap line, and since then he had gathered two or three pounds of gum a day. Until this moment his fortune had been only moderate; now, several pounds of the best quality gum were within sight, and Duncan could only conjecture at the amount hidden above.

When he had gathered the gum crystals within reach of his pole, he quickly slipped the bag from his shoulders and, putting one moccasined foot on a stub and reaching to a stub above, mounted with the pole in his free hand. In this way he gradually worked his way up the trunk of the giant spruce.

When he had filled the cup twice and emptied it on the snow beside his bag, he clambered down and threw his Mackinaw over a bush; for, in spite of the zero weather, the strenuous work of climbing the tree and manœuvring with his gum gatherer had made his thick coat seem uncomfortably warm. Then, pole in hand, he climbed up again. Pedro made forays into the undergrowth, from which he frequently returned to gaze upward and whine at his master.

When Duncan had mounted fifteen feet, an unusually large nugget caught his eye. It had formed behind a knot in the bole of the tree, and to reach it with his gum gatherer he had to lean outward. One leg was curled partly around the trunk, the foot of the other rested on a short dead branch; with his free hand he clung to the rim of the slash. It was hard to dislodge the gum crystal, and he leaned a little farther. In the instant the bark at the edge of the slash tore away, and his weight suddenly shifted to the branch beneath his foot. It snapped, and Duncan found himself clawing the empty air. As he fell he had a glimpse of Pedro almost directly beneath him.

He struck the bank with a force that drove the air from his lungs, and sent him sprawling down the slope to the smooth ice of the stream. He was dimly aware that Pedro, evidently taking this for some new form of play, was tumbling over him. Realizing that they were sliding with increased velocity toward the falls, Duncan tried to spread out his arms to retard his progress. Then suddenly he shot forward swiftly and the roar of the water filled his ears. Strength returned to him, and he pushed the palms of his mittened hands downward and felt himself gradually stop.

For a moment he lay gulping the air and then sat up. Five yards in front of him a curving rim of water rose from under the ice; beyond that was the sky, with the sun sinking through a white cloud banner.

Pedro whined and snuggled close to his master.

"Lucky for us we didn't slide a few feet farther," Duncan said, patting the dog's black-and-white head. "Now, let's get back to that gum tree."

He stood upright, carefully balancing himself, for his smooth moccasins threatened to slip from under him. He faced the left bank—a fifteen-foot wall of smooth rock covered with patches of ice that had formed when the thaw had sent the snow water trickling down. He turned to the right and saw a similar sight. The wall of the gorge rose straight, thin, transparent icicles hung from its rim.

"Good thing for us, Pedro old boy, we haven't got to climb those walls," said Duncan, and chirruping to the terrier, he started gingerly upstream.

A dozen steps, and he came to the cascade down which he had slid. It rose at a considerable angle where the stream flowed over the incline of its bed. It was as if he stood at the eaves of a gently rising and undulating roof—with the ridgepole as his goal twenty yards beyond. He moved over to the edge in the angle of the wall and started upward. Three steps brought him a fourth of the distance, but the side of the gorge had been worn smooth by the action of the water and he groped vainly for a hold. Suddenly his moccasins slipped, and, falling to his knees, he slid to the bottom of the incline with Pedro sprawling at his feet.

Again he tried the ascent, and this time he fell before he had gone a third of the distance. Pedro whined and licked his master's mittened hand. Duncan crossed to the other side, but it offered no advantage. Not until after his third failure did he feel any fear, and then it took the form of a vague uneasiness.

On hands and knees, with Pedro crawling close behind him, he tried to make his way up the middle, but in spite of his efforts he slipped downward, and the dog speedily followed him. Thereafter for half and hour he tried in quick succession one place after another. A dozen attempts at the walls convinced him of the impossibility of escape in that direction. The thin, brittle icicles broke in his hands at the slightest pull. A succession of panic-stricken assaults on the slope availed him nothing.

He had never realized how smooth ice could be—it seemed uncanny. He would place his foot firmly on the slope, but when he lifted the other the shifting weight would send him sprawling. There must be some way out! It was impossible that he, Duncan Fraser, the trapper, the woodsman, the roamer in the mountains, could not devise some means of escaping from this prison of ice. He felt through the pockets of his trousers. The contents—two or three yards of slender twine, a handkerchief, a leather wallet with six one-dollar banknotes, and a piece of gum that he had saved from the bag because it was shaped like a gun cartridge—were all pitifully useless.

He could see the gum tree plainly beyond the ridgepole of the ice roof. In the lower part, hidden from view, he knew that his knife was sticking, and near by lay his red-and-gray Machinaw, with matches in the pocket and the gum gatherer that he had flung from him as he fell. They were all as much beyond his reach as if they had been in his camp at Hemlock Ridge.

Pedro, snuggling against his body, roused him. The terrier was shivering, and Duncan for the first time realized that he, too, was shivering. His light jersey and underclothing were not much protection against the freezing wind that blew up the gorge. The sun had already set, and a dusky light that made the outlines of the trees merge into one another was over the forest.

Getting to his feet, Duncan beat his arms against his body. There must be some way out—there had to be! Impassable walls were on two sides, and an equally impassable roof of glassy ice was on the third. Duncan turned his back and faced the fourth. The rounding curl of water was there—and beyond it the sky still tinged with the rose glow of the fading sunset. The roar of the waterfall came up with a sullen, steady sound that suggested depth and coldness. Duncan turned away with a shudder, for he knew already the desperate chance that he must take if he was to live.

He was shivering steadily now, and his teeth chattered. He thought of making a rope, but there was nothing to attach it even if he were able to make one. A dozen other thoughts rushed through his mind. In stories men had made their escape from glacier crevices by digging steps in the ice, but he had nothing with which to cut the steps. Circumstance had robbed him of everything. He broke off an icicle and, holding it in both hands struck at the hard surface; but the thin finger of ice shattered into a dozen pieces and skittered away like splintered glass.

The terrier crawled over his legs into his lap and lay trembling. Straight before him was the waving fringe of water, and above and beyond that the big yellow eye of the evening star shining steadily like a nugget of gum that had caught a glint of sunlight. Even in his misery Duncan saw the gray-blue beauty of the sky. It made life seem sweeter than ever. He loved the woods with its carpet of snow below, its canopy of cloud above. Its hills and valleys were his to wander among. He could not lie here in this chill dungeon until the frost laid its grip on the blood in his veins.

The brilliant orb of the evening star straight before him above the waterfall seemed like a beacon beckoning him to the path that he must take. He must do it now while yet there was strength in his body and the spirit within him to try.

His legs seemed strangely stiff as he rose, but he stamped them and thrashed his arms against his body. Then he took Pedro in his arms and crawled up the slope until he felt himself slipping. Like a flash he turned and ran toward the falls. At the last moment he threw himself on the ice, as a ball player who slides to a base. He touched the water that curled at the brink! in one breathless instant he was through and over. A vision of shimmering, ghostly ribbon of ice winding through dark woods, a glimpse of blackness flecked with white foam rising frightfully to meet him—then the shock and freezing cold of the plunge.

The water whirled him around and around, rolled him over, thrust him down to the bottom and held him there with its giant hands. He knew that Pedro was no longer in his arms. A relentless force was strangling and crushing him. He no longer felt the coldness.

With the feeble strength that remained in his body he gathered his legs beneath him and pushed upward. He left the bottom and for a weary length of time seemed to float in space. Suddenly his head came out of the water. Behind him roared the falls, beside him swam the terrier.

Somehow the two of them gained a rock together and drew themselves out into the freezing. A pause meant death, and Duncan knew it. Rushing up through the spruces, he scrambled along the ridge and through the undergrowth to the big spruce and the Mackinaw coat and the matches.

Other men have frozen with the victory so nearly won; they have lain down to die in the snow: but Duncan lighted his fire while yet there was strength in his body, drew together the dry tops of a dead tree and stood close to the blaze. With the first glow of its radiating heat he knew that he and Pedro, from whose coat little circles of steam were beginning to rise, would sleep that night in their cabin on Hemlock Ridge.

HEALTH

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

PREVENTING PNEUMONIA.

EACH YEAR, pneumonia exacts a heavy toll from those who are in the prime of life, at the age when they are the greatest asset to their families and to their country. Any practical measure for overcoming this tremendous annual loss of life, with all such loss implies, is worthy of consideration by the individual citizen and by the community as a whole.

With the coming of colder weather, after the heat of the summer, which is sometimes prolonged into the autumn, we feel more energetic. We put a snap into our work, enjoy brisk walks, and, altogether, feel a glow of health. But with the coming of colder weather too many of us desert the out-of-doors, and shut ourselves into homes and work-places that are overheated and we live in closer contact with other people most of our working hours.

Pneumonia is caused by germs, and pneumonia belongs to that group of diseases which are known as communicable. By this we mean that the germs which cause the disease are passed, or communicated from one person to another.

There is reason to believe that the general fitness of the body has a definite relation to the occurrence of pneumonia. It appears that fatigue, chilling, worry, lack of rest, dissipation, and all such occurrences, or neglect of the body, resulting in what we might describe as a rundown state, favour the germs of pneumonia and give them a better chance to do their deadly work.

It is important to understand and appreciate the relationship between the common cold and pneumonia. The respiratory tract is continuous from the nose down to the smallest branches of the bronchial tubes in the lungs. A cold is an infection of the upper part of the respiratory tract, and neglect of the common cold is often followed by an infection of the lower part of the respiratory tract, which is pneumonia.

Preventing pneumonia means keeping fit. Dress properly, and enjoy some form of outdoor life the year round. Secure sufficient rest and fresh air; do not become fatigued, and, by dressing according to the temperature and the weather, avoid exposure to cold and wet. Use some green vegetables and fresh fruits every day during the winter; your body needs them. Shun coughers and sneezers. Wash your hands before eating, and keep your hands away from your face. Take care of a cold if you develop one. Keep away from sick people unless you are caring for them, and then take the precautions that are necessary in dealing with a communicable disease.

Questions concerning health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

A SHORTER WORKING LIFE

Interesting Facts About Our Dominion of Canada.

ONE of life's greatest satisfactions is in doing things, in accomplishing things by our own hand or brain, and there is often more real happiness in our daily work than in the amusements we pay for in our leisure hours. But most of us do not like to feel that we are obliged to work, and applaud the extension each year of the shorter working weeks By this means there has been in a few decades a tremendous reduction in the working time of the average life, and the end is not in sight.

Our working lives are also being shortened at both ends. Every ten years the general age for young people to start earning their living advances one year; at the other end of life we find the proportion of persons at work over the age of 65 steadily diminishing. For each of these changes there has had to be increased expenditure out of the public purse, because the younger people have had to be kept longer in school, and those over 70 have had to have pensions.

One by one since 1927, the Provinces, in co-operation with the Dominion Government have made arrangements for giving older people an income when their working days are over, and this winter for the first time old age pensions are being paid in all of the provinces. Their cost in a year will now be something like 30 million dollars, 75 per cent of which is paid by the Dominion Government.

Large Gathering Last Night As Neighbours Bid Farewell

The home of Mr. and Mrs. James Gilbert and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Baker was crowded to overflowing last night when friends and neighbours gathered at a farewell party for the families who are moving next week to a new home near Crysler. The presentation of a beautiful clock was made on behalf of the friends of the community.

Dancing and card playing were enjoyed by the guests during the evening, and midnight, Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert and Mr. and Mrs. Baker were called to the floor.

An address was read by Jack Morris and the presentation made by Vincent Servage. After the reply the crowd sang "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows" and lunch was served. Dancing and cards were resumed after the lunch hour, the music for the evening being supplied by the Morewood duet of Hillis and Gordon with violin and guitar, and Deb Hummel with his banjo.

Following is the address:

Chesterville, Ont., Feb. 23, 1938.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Gilbert,

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Baker and family:

Dear Friends,—Just a few days before you leave us for your new home, we have gathered here to spend an enjoyable evening with you before we bid farewell.

Your friends and neighbours were sorry to learn that you were leaving the district where you had spent so many years, but we realize conditions in this life are never stable, and friends come and must go. It is never pleasant saying good-bye to such good friends as you have proven yourselves; however, the community to which you are going will benefit at our expense.

It is our earnest prayer that good fortune will smile on you in your new home with health, wealth and happiness for all of you. We hope you will enjoy the fellowship of new friends, and, so you will not forget old friends, we ask you to accept this material token of our affection. May every chime of this clock remind you of your friends here and cheer you on your way through life.

In closing, may we again remind you that we have enjoyed your presence in our midst. In a farming community all must work together, "swapping work," we call it, and you have played your parts well. May God bless you and keep you.

Signed, on behalf of your friends and neighbours, Simeon Droppo, Vincent Servage, Roy Lynch.

CHESTERVILLE LEAFS OUT OF ST. LAWRENCE PICTURE

Senior hockey came to an abrupt conclusion for Chesterville on Friday night when Cornwall Canadiens after carrying away a score of 8-to-1 in the game played here, added a 5-1 score in Cornwall, giving them a total of 13-2 on the round. Chesterville started off the season in a classy way but did not have the reserves to continue their fast pace after the other clubs rounded into their stride.

Victims of Bedell Fire Still In Serious Condition

Three of the four surviving members of the Christie family who were victims of Friday morning's fire at Bedell Station, near Kemptville, are still in a critical condition at Ottawa Civic hospital. Rowat Christie, 37, father of the family, was burned to death in the blaze, and his youngest child, three-year-old Pauline, died early on Saturday morning at the Ottawa hospital.

Mrs. Christie, 33, showed remarkable improvement over the week end, but doctors would not pronounce her out of danger. Carmen Christie, 15, the eldest child of the Bedell Station couple, who suffered a painful burn in the lower abdomen, as well as other serious burns, is not showing as definite reaction to treatment as specialists would wish, and his 12-year-old brother, Earl Christie, who was badly burned all over the body, was also said to be still in danger.
