ESTEEMED RESIDENTS MOVE TO KINGSTON

The office of the Veterinary Inspector for Dundas County, which for the last two and a half years occupied space in the office of the local Agricultural Representative, was this week moved to Kingston. Consequently, Dr. M.V. Gallivan, who was in charge, also his family, who resided in Morrisburg, have become residents of Kingston leaving Morrisburg on Tuesday of this week.

Judging from the many expressions of regret, the removal of this Inspector not only takes from our midst a highly efficient officer, but also one of the most highly esteemed families of our community.

Notwithstanding the short notice, not exceeding forty-eight hours, the staff and students of the Morrisburg Collegiate Institute, prior to their departure on Tuesday morning presented Miss Katherine Gallivan with a Waterman's writing set, while Mr. Frank Gallivan was the recipient of a book. Miss Louise Dixon read an appropriate address, expressing the regrets and good wishes of the staff and fellow pupils, at the departure of two of the Institute's most brilliant students. Mr. Samuel Telford made the presentations.

Little Miss Mary Gallivan, a pupil of the Public School, was also loved by her teachers and playmates, by whom she will be greatly missed.

Dr. and Mrs. Gallivan and their estimable family have the well wishes of a host of friends throughout the district.

FIRE DESTROYS RESIDENCE

A fire Monday night destroyed the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Summers, second concession of Matilda. The blaze is supposed to have started in the kitchen, but as they were using coal in the range, the owners are unable to account for it. The frame structure and furniture were completely wiped out. There is an insurance. Among other things, two hundred sections of clover honey are lost.

Willing volunteers worked rapidly and saved outbuildings, but with no waterworks at hand, efforts to save the home were hopeless from the first. The residence stood at the end of the gravel road running north.

ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL SHIPMENT

The Farmers' Club of this district had another successful shipment of live stock on Tuesday of this week. The car load included 104 hogs, which brought 4c per pound on the market. Calves sold for 6c per pound while cows and bulls sold for 1½c per pound.

In order to facilitate the work of shipping, the Club would appreciate it much if those having cattle to load would call up Mr. J.D. Dain, Morrisburg, prior to shipping day.

The Club also wish to announce that they handle T.B. cattle.

The next shipping date is Monday December 19th, when, owing to the large increase in the receipts, stock will be taken in all day.

WALSH TO TESTIFY AT CANAL PROBE

Washington, Dec. 7—The Senate foreign relations sub-committee will reconvene its hearings on the St. Lawrence treaty probably the end of this week, to take testimony, it was announced today. Frank P. Walsh, of the New York power authority, will be summoned to appear and possibly various engineers who have made estimates on the cost of the power development. It is likely that Assistant Secretary of State James G. Rogers will be called back to the stand to give the Federal Government's views of the dispute between it and New York State over the division of costs on the power development.

Senator Borah let it be known that he and his associate members on the sub-committee have been deeply impressed by the economic arguments in favor of the project. One aspect of the undertaking about which Senator Borah still has grave doubts is the jurisdictional problem involved in the diversion of water from Lake Michigan.

There are indications that the Idaho Senator will stand out against the submission of the control of this "purely domestic body of water" to an international joint commission as approved in the treaty.

PLAN UPHELD

Washington, Dec. 7—The St. Lawrence waterway treaty with Canada was endorsed yesterday by Chester H. Gray, legislative representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, in a statement filed yesterday with the foreign relations subcommittee of the United States Senate.

The statement, released by the Great Lakes-St Lawrence Tidewater Association, was accompanied by resolutions or letters of approval from farm bureau organizations in Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska and South Dakota.

"If our Government should now withdraw from this waterway project" it said, "it would be equivalent to saying that we, as a nation, are wholly satisfied with our present facilities in transportation and did not desire any more modern developments along transportation lines."

MOTHER AND INFANT SAVED IN IROQUOIS BLAZE

When fire swept the home of Louis Abram at Iroquois, early Saturday morning, his wife and young child were only saved by escaping through a window. Mrs. Abram sustained several cuts, while Sidney Watkins, an aged man who occupied another section of the apartment, was rescued by friends, who carried him to safety.

Mr. Abram, who was on night duty was not at home when the fire broke out, and his wife was wakened by the heavy smoke. There was no time to save any of their belongings though firemen did manage to salvage some property of Mr. Watkins.

The apartment is owned by Angelo Sisty, who carried some insurance on the property.

REQUESTS FROM DELEGATION FAVORABLY RECEIVED

Hector K. Carruthers, secretary of the Ottawa Board of Trade, and C.A. Seguin, K.C., M.L.A for Russell, waited on the Hon. Leopold Macauley minister of highways for Ontario, and Hon. George Challies, provincial secretary, in Toronto on Friday, to request that the Ontario government keep the Montreal highway between Ottawa and Hawkesbury open during the winter. There is no train service to Hawkesbury at present, Mr. Carruthers informed the minister. He also made a request that the government proceed next summer with the paving of the Ottawa-Morrisburg highway between Williamsburg and Morrisburg, a distance of six miles. Both requests were favorably received, and the government will give its decisions in the near future.

AWARDS MOTHER $850

Mrs. Albina Larocque, mother of Paul Emile Larocque, aged 15, who was one of six persons killed on May 24 when a tree fell on a truck was awarded the $850 damages by Mr. Justice Kerwin at the Ontario assizes at L'Original on Wednesday. Mrs. Larocque sued the Ontario Department of Highways alleging the department was negligent in allowing the tree to remain along the right-of-way.

Mr. Justice Kerwin ruled that Mrs. Larocque alone was entitled to the amount, her husband having left her ten years ago. The amount was agreed upon previously between the relatives of the victims and the department, but the Larocque case came before the court to settle disposition of the award.

The tragedy occurred near Chute a Blondeau while a truck load of picnickers were returning home.

Settlement in actions taken by the parents of the other five victims was made some time ago.

EASTERN STARS ENTERTAIN

On Monday evening, the members of the eastern section of the Columbian Encampment met in the I.O.O.F. lodge room at Cardinal, for the purpose of holding a reception for the Grand Chief Patriarch Chas. Plumb of Prescott, and for the purpose of conferring the patriarcha degree upon a class of candidates.

Present were members of Columbian Encampment from Iroquois, Morrisburg, Brinston, Williamsburg, Cardinal and Prescott. After the ceremonies of the evening those present sat down to a banquet provided by the members of the eastern section. The following were among the speakers: Patriarchs J.E. Schlichter, W.T. Kingston, D.D.G.M.; C. Strader, E.A. Cook, T.D.D.G.M.; A. Bell, P.D.D.G.M.; Edgar Smith, D.D.G.M.; Earl Coons, Thomas Fairbairn, chief patriarch of Columbian Encampment, C.A. Ransom, P.D.D.G.M.; T.C.P. Webb, Chas. Plumb, G.P. of Columbian Encampment, Patriarch R. Booth of Cardinal acting as toastmaster.

A very enoyable evening was spent music being provided by the Encampment orchestra.

MINUTES OF COUNCIL

Regular meeting of Council for December was held in the Town Hall on Monday the 5th, at 8 p.m.

Members all present.

There being no errors or omissions in the minutes of previous meetings as read, the Reeve declared them adopted.

Moved by Mr. Beckstead, seconded by Mr. Roach, that the Engineer's report on the construction of the Beckstead, Maple and Ellen Sts. sewer be adopted and a Court of Revision be held in the Town Hall on the 19th day of December at 7.30 p.m. to hear and determine any appeals filed against the said assessments. Accounts to the amount of $6983.52 were passed.

Mr Dain, being ill, retired from meeting.

Moved by Mr. Roach, seconded by Mr. Becksted that R.G. Fetterly's tourist homes, "The Falcon," 'Rosedale" and "The Flat" be charged commercial rate for electric energy used in above mentioned places, to date from Nov. 1st.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Link, seconded by Mr. Foster, that R.G. Fetterly's tourist homes, "The Falcon," "Rosedale" and "The Flat" be charged commercial rate for electric energy used in above mentioned places, to date from October 1st.

Moved by Mr. Link, seconded by Mr. Becksted, that the Council adjourn to meet in the Town Hall on the 14th of December, at 7.30 p.m.

The Green Murder Case

BY S. S. VAN DINE.

SYNOPSIS.

Philo Vance, with a hobby for solving mysteries, becomes interested in the Green murders when District Attorney Markham and Sgt. Heath are called in after the fatal shooting of Julia Greene and the wounding of her younger sister Ada. Old Tobias Greene's widow, together with five children, Julia, Chester, Sibella, Rex and Ada (adopted), live in the old Greene mansion. Police investigations reveal nothing; then Chester is found shot dead in his room. Again footsteps are found to and from the entrance of the mansion. Ada goes to Markham's office and informs him that Rex has not told all he knows. Five minutes later word comes that Rex has been shot. Vance becomes convinced that the criminal is one of the family.

CHAPTER XXVIII.—(Cont'd.)

"We might delay the slaughter for the time being; but we'd learn nothing. And our only hope is to find out—some way—what's at the bottom of this atrocious business."

"Yeh? And how are we going to do that, Mr. Vance?" Heath spoke with despair.

"I don't know now. But the Greene household is safe for tonight anyway; and that gives us a little time. I think I'll have another talk with Von Blon. Doctors—especially the younger ones—are apt to give snap diagnoses."

Heath had hailed a taxicab, and we were headed downtown along 3rd Ave.

"It can certainly do no harm," agreed Markham. "And it might bring forth something suggestive. When will you tackle him?"

Vance was gazing out of the window.

"Why not at once?" Suddenly his mood had changed. "Here we are in the Forties. And teatime! What could be more opportune?"

He leaned over and gave the chauffeur an order. In a few minutes the taxicab drew up to the curb before Von Blon's brownstone residence.

The doctor received us apprehensively.

"Nothing wrong, I hope?" he asked, trying to read our faces.

"Oh, no," Vance answered easily. "We were passing and thought we'd drop in for a dish of tea and a medical chat."

Von Blon studied him with a slight suspicion.

"Very well. You gentlemen shall have both." He rang for his man. "But I can do even better. I've some old Amontillado sherry——"

"My word!" Vance bowed ceremoniously and turned to Markham. "You see how fortune favors her punctual children?"

The wine was brought and carefully decanted.

Vance took up his glass and sipped it. One would have thought, from his manner, that nothing in the world at that moment was as important as the quality of the wine.

"Ah, my dear doctor," he remarked, with some ostentation, "the blender on the sunny Andalusian slopes unquestionably had many rare and valuable butts with which to glorify this vintage. There was little need for the addition of vino dulce that year; but then, the Spaniars always sweeten their wine, probably because the English object to the slightest dryness. And it's the English, you know, who buy all the best sherries. They have always loved their 'sherris-sack'; and many a British bard has immortalized it in song. Ben Jonson sang its praises and so did Tom Moore and Byron. But it was Shakespeare—an ardent lover of sherry himself—who penned the greatest and most passionate panegyric to it. You remember Falstaff's apostrophe?—'It ascends me into the brain; dries there all the foolish and dull and crudy vapors which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery and delectable shapes. . . .' Sherry, you probably know, doctor, was once regarded as a cure for gout and other malaises of faulty metabolism."

He paused and put down his glass.

"I wonder that you haven't prescribed this delicious sherry for Mrs. Greene long ago. I'm sure she would serve you with a writ of confiscation if she knew you had it."

The fact is," Von Blon returned, "I once took her a bottle, and she gave it to Chester. She doesn't care for wine. I remember my father's telling me she objected violently to her husband's well-stocked cellar."

"Your father died, did he not, before Mrs. Greene became paralyzed?" Vance asked incuriously.

"Yes—about a year."

"And was yours the only diagnosis made of her case?"

Von Blon looked at him with an air of gentle surprise.

"Yes. I saw no necessity of calling in any of the bigwigs. The symptoms were clear-cut and conformed with the anamnesis. Furthermore, everything since then has confirmed my diagnosis."

"And yet, doctor"—Vance spoke with great deference—"something has occurred which, from the layman's point of view, tends to cast doubt on the accuracy of that diagnosis. Therefore, I feel sure you will forgive me when I ask you quite frankly if it would not be possible to place another, and perhaps less serious, interpretation on Mrs. Greene's invalidism."

Von Blon appeared greatly puzzled.

"There is," he said, "not the slightest possibility that Mrs. Greene is suffering from any disease other than an organic paralysis of both legs—a paraplegia, in fact, of the entire lower part of the body."

"If you were to see Mrs. Greene move her legs, what would be your mental reaction?"

Von Blon started at him, incredulously. Then he forced a laugh.

"My mental reaction? I'd know my liver was out of order, and that I was having halucinations."

"And if you knew your liver was functioning perfectly—then what?"

"I'd immediately become a devout believer in miracles."

Vance smiled pleasantly.

"I sincerely hope it won't come to that. And yet so-called therapeutic miracles have happened."

"I'll admit that medical history is filled with what the uninitiated call miraculous cures. But there is sound pathology beneath all of them. In Mrs. Greene's case, however, I can see no loophole for error. If she should move her legs, it would contravert all the known laws of physiology."

"By the by, doctor"—Vance put the question abruptly—"are you familiar with Brugelmann's 'Uber hysterische Dammerzustande'?"

"No—I can't say that I am."

"Or with Schwarzwald's 'Uber Hystero-Paralyse und Somnambulismus'?"

Von Blon hesitated, and his eyes were focused intently like those of a man who is thinking rapidly.

"I know Schwarzwald, of course," he answered. "But I'm ignorant of the particular work you mention. . ." Slowly a look of amazement downed on his face. "Good heavens! You're not trying to connect the subjects of these books with Mrs. Greene's condition, are you?"

"If I were to tell you that both of these books are in the Greene mansion, what would you say?"

"I'd say their presence is no more relevant to the situation there than would be a copy of 'Die Leiden des jungen Werther' or Heine's 'Romanzero'."

"I'm sorry I can't agree with you," returned Vance politely. "They are certainly relevant to our investigation, and I had hoped you might be able to explain the connection."

CHAPTER XGIX.

Von Blon appeared to ponder the matter, his face the picture of perplexity.

"I wish I could help you," he said, after several moments. Then he glanced up quickly; a new light had come into his eyes. "Permit me to suggest, sir, that you are laboring under a misapprehension as to the correct scientific connotation of the words in the titles of these two books. I have had occasion to do considerable reading along psychoanalytic lines; and both Freud and Jung use the terms 'Somnambulismus' and 'Dammerzustand' in an entirely different sense from our common use of the terms 'somnambulism' and 'twilight sleep.' 'Somnambulismus,' in the terminology of psychopathology and obnormal psychology, is employed in connection with ambivalence and dual personality; it designates the actions of the submerger, or subconscious, self in cases of aphasia, amnesia and the like. It does not refer to one's walking in one's sleep. For instance, in psychic hysteria where one loses one's memory and adopts a new personality, the subject is called a 'Somnambule.' It is the same as what the newspapers commonly refer to as an 'amnesia victim'."

He rose and went to a bookcase. After a few moments' search he took down several volumes.

"Here we have, for example, an old monograph by Freud and Breuer, written in 1893 and entitled 'Uper den psychischen Mechanismus der hysterischen Phenomene.' If you care to take the trouble to read it you will see that it is an exposition of the application of the term 'Somnambulismus' to certain temporary neurotic derangements. And here also is Freud's 'Traumdeutung,' published in 1894, in which this terminology is explained and amplified. In addition to these, I have here 'Nervose Angstzustande,' by Stekel, who, though he leads one of the most important schisms in the Freudian school, uses the same nomenclature in referring to split personality." He laid the three books on the table before Vance. "You may take them along is you like. They may throw some light on the quandry you are in."

"You are inclined to believe, then, that both Schwarzwald and Brugelmann refer to waking psychic states rather than the more common type of somnambulism?"

"Yes, I am inclined to that belief. I know Schwarzwald was a former lecturer at the Psychopatisches Institut, in constant contact with Freud and his teachings. But, as I told you, I am not familiar with either of the books."

"How would you account for the term 'hysteria' in both titles?"

"Its presence there is in no way contradictory. Aphasia, amnesia, aphonia—and often anosmia and apnoea—are symptoms of hysteria. And hysterical paralysis is quite common. There are many cases of paralytics who have been unable to move a muscle for years, as a result of sheer hysteria."

"Ah, exactly!" Vance picked up his glass and drained it. "That brings me to a rather unusual request I desire to make. Mr. Markham has decided that it might be advisable for him to possess a report of Mrs. Greene's physical condition that would carry the very highest expert authority. And I was going to suggest that, merely as a matter of formal routine, we get such a report from, let us say, Dr. Felix Oppenheimer."

Domestic Manners of the Latin Races

Details of personal traits and domestic life have an inexpressible charm for all readers of average human sympathies. We turn with more relief than we are willing to confess from the brilliant generalizations of the historian to the pages of the humble chronicler or diarist; and what the French modestly call "memoires pour servir" are indeed often of more real use as well as entertainment to posterity than the works by which in their own time they were overshadowed.

In all that has been written of the public and social life of the Italians, we find few details of their family habits. One reason of this is, of course, that the social life of the Latin races does not center in the home, as does that of those nations whom necessities of climate—quite as much, perhaps, as nobler reasons—have driven to domesticity. The Italian does not bring the stranger, to whom he wishes to be courteous, home with him; he takes his friend to the theatre, dines with him at the cafe, or strolls with him in the park. If he does introduce him, as a rare favor, within his domestic precincts, it is only after due preparation, and in such a manner that the spontaneousness of hospitality has had time to congeal into the solemnity of a public occasion. He does, indeed, invite the chance visitor at the hour of a repast, to "favor him" by remaining to partake of it; but he does so when the visitor is already at the door, and would be as much surprised at his assent as would the Spaniard by the acceptance of the possessions which he lays at your feet.

We of the North smile at these gracious insincerities; but the Southerner wonders no less at the blunt, unsmiling positiveness which he calls rudeness; at the want of general sympathy which shuts up all our demonstrativeness within closed doors; at the solemn faces with which we go about both our work and our recreation. . .

Luxury in dress, which had been severely repressed by sumptuary laws in 1330, was on the increase at this time, though it did not reach its highest point until the reign of Lorenzo de' Medici. The costume of Florentine women at this period was a robe of silk or woolen stuff extending to the ground, and trimmed with fringe; the waist long, and the sleeves usually of the same material as the dress. The hair was worn in curls, and over it a veil of white silk reaching to the shoulders.—From "At Home in Italy," by Mrs. E. D. R. Blanciardi.

Stars

The rushing stars of a universe are in God's hand; yet not a sparrow on earth may fall to the ground without His knowledge. He tends His countless furnaces of fire and flame; yet the very hairs of your head are all numbered.—Agnes Giberne.

Jimmy and Joan's Column

A Boy's First Room

I've got a room, now, by myself,
A room my very own.
It has a door that I can shut,
And be there all alone;
It has a shelf, a closet, too,
A window just for me.

And hooks where I can keep my clothes
As neat as neat can be.
A lovely paper's on the wall;
A rug is on the floor—
If I had known how fine it was,
I'd had a room before.

I like to go there after school,
Away from everyone;
I felt—well—sort of scared at first,
But now I think it's fun.
The voices of the folks downstairs
Seem faint and far away.

I hear the rain upon the roof;
I watch the birds at play;
Oh, yes, it's often very still,
At night there's not a sound—
But I let mother in, of course,
When bedtime comes around.

—Arthur H. Folwell.

Something For Dolly

If you have an old ping-pong ball that is no use, you can make a jolly gift for dolly with it.

Cut it into halves. Take each piece and bore three holes equal distances round the edge. Tie three pieces of cotton to these and you will have two splendid hanging lamp shades for the dolls' house. All you need to do is fix the cotton with a drawing-pin to the ceiling.

Of course, they will look every so much nicer if you paint them.

"Well, Tommy, how are you getting on at school?"

"Oh, fine, thanks. I am centre-forward in the football team."

"But your lessons?"

"Oh, I am right-back there," said the boy, mischievously.

The Angry Crow

Long ago when crows were white, a crow and an owl sat on a log talking together.

"I do not like my color," said the crow. "I don't like being white."

And the owl said:

"I wish I had some pretty spots on my back."

"So do I," said the crow. "Let us paint each other with oil from the lamp."

"Too-whit, to-whoo;" said the owl. "What fun that would be!"

Now, when a clay lamp gets old there is a lot of thick black oil in it. The crow took one of the owl's feathers, and dipped it into the oil. Then he painted beautiful spots all over the owl's body.

He did it very well, and made the owl look fine. Then it was the owl's turn to paint the crow. At first he liked doing it, and made such pretty spots that the crow felt very proud indeed.

"I do look fine!" he croaked.

But before he was halfway through the owl became tired of working so hard.

"This is taking me too long!" he grumbled. "I shan't be finished for hours and hours if I don't hurry up."

And taking the lamp, he turned it upside down and poured the black all over the crow. "There, that is finished!" he cried.

How angry the crow was when he found himself black all over, with no spots!

"I look like a scarecrow now!" he cried.

He tried his best to get it off, but it was no use. The black was stuck, and ever since then the crow has been black.

You look at one and see!

Tongue Twisters

I have a picture in which there is a pitcher,—the pitcher makes the picture because the pitcher is in the picture.

Jack-in-the-Box

Oh, I'm the tramp of the nurs-ry!
All alone in the dark live I;
No window is there in my small house,
No light ever meets my eye.
Do you wonder that I plot mischief,
Do you wonder my deeds are dark—
That my nose is red and my whiskers fierce—
That my hat came out of the ark?
When I jump out suddenly at you,
And pussy arches her back
And the baby screams—then happy
Is the tramp of the nursery, Jack.

Shake hands, Evangelina! how did you lose your hair?
And monk-on-a-stick, how are you?
Your leg's broke, I declare!
Ha, woolly dog, I salute you!
Can you see with your shoe-button-eyes?
I greet you all, friends, in passing—
(Here Jack was himself surprised),
For the roof of his house fell on him
With a most resounding whack,
And he was again a prisoner,
This jolly old rougue of a Jack).

—Mary Hicks Vanderburgh.

Reading Dickens

How many kind things are done in the world which remain unknown and untold?

A schoolboy on holiday the other day made friends with a workingman and asked him if he liked Dickens. The man told him he had read him through, and told him the reason why.

When he was a young man, a schoolmaster was blinded by a stone thrown by a boy, and his whole life was changed by this misfortune.

One of his worst blows was the loss of the joy of reading, but he was helped by his friend, our workingman, who went three times a week to read to him, and so read right through Dickens.

Economic Self-Discipline

By SIR ARTHUR SALTER

The economic system of the world must to a large extent achieve its own regulative institutions. I should for example, like to see industrialists—first, for given industries, then for all the main industries of a country, and lastly in conjunction with industrialists of other countries—forming their own councils and associations, not for the mere protection of their own interests but to secure that their business is conducted under conditions which protect the public interest. I should like to see bankers uniting to secure that the conditions under which loans are raised and lent should be in the interests of the borrowers and the investing public.

I should like to see a similar development over every main sphere of activity. And I should like these separate organizations to be linked to each other and to the machine of public government through economic councils, national and international. So, only, with the aid of all the available constructive intelligence in every sphere, will what I may call "governance," or the defense of the "res publica," be adequate for its task under the infinitely complex conditions of modern life.

Now, not with professional pride but with a kind of professional apology, I wish to claim that this task of "governance" is overwhelmingly the most important of man's tasks at this stage of the world's history. * * * For it is only because "governance" is more defective, has lagged behind the specializd activitis of man, that it is this important.

Fashions

The morns are meeker than they were,
The nuts are getting brown;
The berry's cheek is plumper,
The rose is out of town.

The maple wears a gayer scarf,
The field a scarlet gown.
Lest I should be old-fashioned,
I'll put a trinket on.

—Emily Dickinson, "Poems."

Feminine Outlook on Clothes

"The Colonel's lady an' Judy O'Grady," wrote Rudyard Kipling, "are sisters under their skins," and, according to Edward H. Symonds, president of the British Fashions and Fabrics Bureau, the society woman and mill-girl are much the same in their mental outlook about clothes. Addressing a London trade school recently, he said: "There is no appreciable difference between the style point of view of the society woman and the mill-girl. It is purely a question of relativity. They have all, more or less, the same mental outlook in regard to the clothes they wear and the manner in which they wear them, whether they have pounds or only shillings to spend."

"I've searched high and low for the furniture cream recipe your mother gave me——." "Here!" said her husband, putting down his spoon, "where did you get the recipe for this soup?"

A Dead Tiger is a Good Friend

The extent of the man-eating menace in India and Malaya is once again illustrated by the issue of a report showing that 85 persons were killed by tigers in Johore during 1931. The only consolation available to those who live in the shadow of this terror is that a very respectable fortune, by local standards, accrues to natives who are fortunate enough with spear or cheap Belgian shotgun to slay a tiger.

They receive, first of all, the government reward, varying from £10 to £25. The Chinese buy the meat, which they consider a great delicacy. The fat can be sold to Indians as a cure for rheumatism. The clavicles and the claws fetch a fair price as ornaments. The liver is prized by warriors for a stimulant to courage. And if the man-eater is a tigress, her milk is bottled as a cure for blindness.

Finally, the lucky hunter sells the skin to a home-going European, and the sum total of his profits sets him up for life. — London (England) Standard.

Home

God's mercy spread the sheltering roof;
Let faith make firm the floor.
May friend and stranger, all who come,
Find love within the door.
May peace enfold each sleeping-place,
And health surround the board;
From all the lamps that light the halls
Be radiant joy outpoured.
Let kindness keep the hearth aglow,
And through the windows shine;
Be Christlike living, on the walls
The pattern and design.

Our Christmas Good Turn

This Christmas we wish to stress to every Lone Scout in the Province of Ontario our earnest hope that they will individually realize that we consider it to be a part of their duty to undertake some voluntary work in connection with the Scout Xmas Toy Shop scheme.

Of course we realize that Lonies cannot work at the large Toy Shop centres in operation in the large cities and towns, but each individual Lonie or Lone Patrol can organize and operate his own Toy Shop right at home or at Lone Patrol Headquarters.

Our Xmas "Happifying"

No one possessing Scout vision will require any convincing of the need this Christmas for the application in all possible ways of the third Scout Law,—described by B.-P. as "the Scout job of happifying,"—including our big annual national effort of making possible a visit by Santa Slaus to many thousands of needy children locally and on the farms.

The Chief Scout has shown especial interest in our remembrance of settlers' children. This year the appeal is again stressed, and in addition an appeal for families of a new classification,—Canadian born town and city families placed on farms during the year in an effort to solve their unemployment problem. Few of these have any resources of their own, and for most the first Christmas away from town enighbours will be a lonesome experience, especially for the children, and a Santa Claus parcel would mean a very great deal.

From this new source, and others, the names of over three thousand children on eastern and prairie farms already have been received, and by literally every delivery leters are coming from mothers of families remembered last year, and who still are unable to provide anything for their kiddies at Christmas

What Your Gifts Mean

A sample letter from an Ontario mother reads in part:

"The children would welcome whatever you could send them. There are no Santas here we are only a small scattered village and I really beleve it gets poorer every year. But we hope as things get better there may be more work. We are ten in family, and can hardly pay for our food, let alone anything out of the ordinary, but still we have to keep going. The winter eats up everything it seems. We have been out here six years and had a tolerable start as prices were good, but there is hardly any work and almost none in winter. If you know of anyone with some cast off clothing they could honestly spare we would be glad of it. This is not to trouble anyone, but anything warm if old and holey, I can mend to help with. Everyone is poor this year.

Fourteen, twelve and nine are the three youngest ages. Any old Boys' Own Papers or books would do. They all like books, and thank you for your kind thoughts.

Your truly,
Mrs. B. H. and children.

This letter received in March last from a Saskatchewan mother reminds of the possible very important value of our Santa Claus gifts:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of the package of Christmas toys which arrived safely, and I hope you will pardon the delay in writing, but we have been in quarantine all winter for scarlet fever. The children took it one at a time, and as soon as we were let out the stork made a visit to us, bringing a big baby boy, and at the present time I am just able to tell you what a blessing that parcel has been to a family of sick children all winter. It was just all they had for Christmas.

Happiness For An Entire District

The Secretary of a "Homemaker's Club" in east Saskatchewan writes:

Dear Organization:—

It was an oversight not discovered until our annual meeting that we had not written a note of appreciation and thanks to your organization for the joy and happiness which you scattered in the homes of this district in sending them the parcels of toys which I understand all reached their destination Christmas eve.

Another Community Effort

In the middle of December an emergency call came from an isolated unemployed community in Northern Ontario where an effort was being made to hold a Christmas party at the district school. The teacher was giving each of her twelve pupils a gift, but for the remaining 46 children of the district there was nothing. The emergency problem was passed on to the Toy Shop at Fort William. A large carton of gifts was promptly sent, and arrived on the day of the concert, with the resultant surprise and delight that can be imagined. A most appreciative letter told of the "pleasure to see the children receive their gifts from Santa, as they were told before they came that Santa would not have anything for them that night, as he was just visiting the school children."

A Good Start

The early enterprise of a number of troops and districts give promise that the 1932 Christmas spirit of Scouts and Scouters will well measure up to that of previous years.

The honour of the first Toy Shop announcement and call for discarded toys apparently goes to the 1st Coldwater Troop, Ont., through the columns of the Orillia News-Letter of Sept. 21st, followed Oct. 6th by the 1st Vulcan Troop, Alta., in the Vulcan Advocate, and the 1st Noranda, Que., in the Northern News.

Of the larger centres London, Ont., held a Toy Shop meeting on Oct. 1st, and appointed its Toy Shop Committee; and Hamilton, one of last years outstanding shops, announced Toy Shop plans in the local dailies of Oct. 8th, and began operations on Oct. 31st, again in the commodious quarters provided at the manufacturing plant of Burrows, Stewart & Milne. The first shop in actual operation apparently was that at Elbow, Sask., in late September, as a Toy Shop repair demonstration for the benefit of a large number of school teachers attending a district convention.

Fergus, Ont., announced its Toy Shop plans on Oct. 27th in this scouty style: "This year our funds are low, but the Scouts will do their best. It is hoped that the people in Fergus will help by giving the Scouts their old newspapers, magazines and rags on Oct. 29th."

Settlers' Parcels

The parcels should be kept small with a minimum of one light-weight gift per child and perhaps a book or game included. They should be well and attractively wraped and securely tied, and addressed to the mother of the family. Where the expense of mailing is a problem it is suggested that service clubs be invited to meet this cost. Another idea is the placing of addressed settlers' packages in the Toy Shop window, or some other shop window secured for the purpose, with a placard inviting passers-by to share in the Good Turn by stepping inside and paying the postage on a parcel.

Everyone Should Help

This will show how busy the Scouts are at this time of the year on this tremendously interesting and humane "Good Turn,' and it is our desire that all Lone Scouts should take an active part in this undertaking.

Start off by interesting your parents and your Counsellor and Friend in this project, and we hope that each Lone Scout will be responsible for at least one parcel. If possible this parcel should be given to a poor family right in your own neighborhood, but if this is not possible, Lone Scout Headquarters can give you full particulars of settlers' families in Northern Ontario or Western Canada, to whom your parcel may be sent.

Capt. John Furminger, the one Scout Commissioner, is most anxious that each Lone Scout will perform his Christmas Good Turn by working on this scheme, and he wants to hear from each Lone Scout and asks that you send him particulars of your activities and plans. Don't forget this.

So, Lonies, it is now "up to you," and remember that Lone Scout Santa Claus wants your help this years as never before. Can we rely on you? Of course we can!

Lone Scout Headquarters is located at 300 Bay Street, Toronto 2, and the staff will be glad to hear from any boys between 12 and 18 years, inclusive, who would like to become Lone Scouts.—"Lone E."

Sunday School Lesson

December 11. Lesson XI—The Christian's Use of Leisure—Nehemiah 8: 10-17; Mark 6: 30-32. Golden Text —Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.—1 Corinthians 10: 31.

ANALYSIS.

I. RECRLATION IN SOCIABILITY, Nehemiah 8: 10-17.

II. RECREATION IN SOLITUDE, Mark 6: 30-32.

INTRODUCTION—Life must have its breathing spaces. Otherwise the human machine will become run down. One's spare time will be either recreative or destructive, according to the way in which it is used.

I. RECREATION IN SOCIABILITY, Nehemiah 8: 10-17.

Nehemiah, a cup-bearer in the court of Artaxerxes, troubled about the sad plight of his brethren in Jerusalem (Neh., chapters 1, 2) had obtained permission to go to Jerusalem to rebuild the broken walls and restore the temple worship. Later, he evidently returned to his native land as governor. "Tirshatha" (v. 9) means governor. It was during this latter period that the events of Chapter 8 took place. Ezra had evidently impressed upon the people the necessity of studying the long-neglected Law once more. Under his guidance (vs. 1-8) it was placed before them in such a way as to convince them that it was the most important thing in the world that they should govern their lives by its requirements.

When they realized how far short that had fallen from its demands, they were humiliated and dismayed, v. 9. This reading of the Law took place at the time that corresponded to the old Feast of Ingathering—later called the Feast of Tabernacles, Exod. 23: 16; Deut. 16: 13-15. It was one of the three agricultural feasts. It had fallen into disuse since the time of Joshua. It was an occasion of great rejoicing. The leaders of the people therefore commanded the people to have a social gathering. "Drink the sweet" (v. 10) refers to the sweetened water, or the finely-flavored preserves, or the honey which the guest receives upon entering his chamber. It is a mark of welcome. Baskets were to be prepared and sent to those who could not be present, or who were not in a position to provide for themselves. Long-faced religion was considered irreverent. The socials and picnics of the modern church, looked down upon by the very dignified, seem to be a long established institution.

Nehemiah recognizes that wholesome pleasure is recreative. It recreates, builds up the tired system. The word "amusement" is said to have been originally applied to the halt which a dog makes in hunting, when he pauses to sniff the air in order to see which way the scent lies. Having done this, he starts off again with redoubled speed. "The joy of the Lord is your strength," v. 10.

On the second day (v. 13) the reading of the Law revealed that Moses had commanded the children of Israel to dwell in tents during the Feast of Tabernacles, v. 14. This would remind succeeding generations of the sojourn in the wilderness and Jehovah's deliverance, Lev. 23: 42. "Let us re-establish the old custom," they said, and suited the action to the word, vs. 15, 16. On the flat roofs of their houses, in the public squares, in any available space they erected their booths. They observed their religious rites, they brought vividly to mind all that Jehovah had done for them in an atmosphere of joyous, healthful, wholesome sociability. Modern "Camp Meetings," "Leaders' Camps," are old-established institutions.

II. RECREATION IN SOLITUDE, Mark 6: 30-32.

The Twelve are here called apostles, or missionaries, because for the first time the have been acting as the messengers of the new faith. Both they and their Master were always surrounded by human need. Is one justified in taking a holiday when around him are people requiring help? Should we spend money on vacations while others lack necessities? Should we take rests when our surroundings call loudly for action? The answer will depend upon the use we are making of our lives. Jesus was devoting his life to the service of others in such a wholehearted way that his energies were being continually sapped. He found the breathing spaces essential to his greatest effectiveness. His disciples needed rest. Body, mind, spirit need relaxation. There is a tradition of John the apostle that while amusing himself with a tame partridge he was asked by a huntsman how he could spend his time in so unprofitable a manner. John replied, "Why dost thou not carry thy bow always bent?" "Because," said the huntsman, "if it were always bent I fear it would lose its spring and become useless." "Be not surprised then," replied John, "that I should remit a little of my close attention of spirit to enjoy a little recreation, that I may afterward employ myself more fervently."

The disciples needed also companionship with Jesus himself. He was their inspiration and strength. Their "retreat" was necessary to prevent their own lives from becoming shallow.

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern.

Isn't this a fresh and attractive new type for the smart school and college miss? It is also suitable for youthful women types.

It displays clever manipulation of fabric.

The new wrapped bodice cut is snappy and slimming, too. The skirt with front and back panels, that by the way, cut in one with the hip section, give youthful height to the figure.

Hyacinth-blue novelty silk and wool crepe made the original. The rever collar and cuffs were of plain blue wool crepe.

It's charming too fashioned of rough or flat crepe silk in tobacco-brown.

Style No. 2671 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38 and 40 inches bust. Size 16 requires 3⅜ yards of 39-inch material with ½ yard of 35-inch contrasting.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS.

The Manchurian Issue

By LORD LYTTON

The Manchurian situation is not hopeless. The greatest hope at this moment of preserving the peace of the world is for the United States and the rest of the world to stand shoulder to shoulder. The issue at stake is a much larger one than whether China or Japan shall control the future destinies of Manchuria; it is whether the principles of collective responsibility and the maintenance of peace and justice between nations shall be preserved or sacrified. The choice lies between the continued organization of peace by co-operation or a return to the anarchy of competitive force.

The problem is obviously difficult; it is not impossible, if firmness on the essential issues is combined with patience, tact and sympathy in adjusting the details. The success of the negotiations is profoundly important for the peoples of the world in general and for the peple of the United States in particular.

R. H.—What is the best fertilizer for orchards?

Answer.—This is a very wide question which is impossible to answer for all soil conditions for all orchards. On a sandy loam soil where 3-10-5 was applied at the rate of 10 lbs. per tree in 1930 and an addition of 5 lbs. per tree of nitrate of soda was made and where the same treatment was repeated in 1931, but nothing since, there is a difference of 9 bbls. for the 8 trees fertilized as compared with the 8 trees receiving no fertilizer throughout. Certainly, nitrogen pays, and on gravelly loam and sandy loam soils, figures which we are receiving from year to year indicate that phosphate and potash used in moderate amounts have a beneficial effect on the yield of orchards. This fertilizer should be applied early in spring, spread out at least as far as the branches reach, and it preferably should be worked into the soil.

Subscriber.—Rhubarb here has been planted several years and seems to be thriving well but appears tough and lasts for a very short season. It has to be pulled for cooking. Can you state a cause and advise a means of making it satisfactory for this season? When should I re-set?

Answer.—The Department of Horticulture, O.A.C., advises that commercial rhubarb should not be allowed to stand more than five years without re-setting. The stems become small and too numerous, also tough, as you suggest You might re-set your rhubarb patch, give it a good dressing of manure, and probably supplement with four bags per acre of a fertilizer of the 4-8-10 type. Work this into the soil thoroughly at the time of re-setting. This should give you good results.

NOTES ON LIVESTOCK

To feed a thin animal all winter and then have it die in the spring is not profitable animal husbandry. Should there be any unthrifty animals in your herds or flocks, it would be good practice to dispose of them at once, by what means you can rather than carry them over winter. The winter period is unusually hard on animals, due to cold, lack of feed, lack of care, and shelter. Neglect on the part of owners to practice good animal husbandry is a big factor in animal losses. Weakling animals, old and worn out animals, and animals racked with disease, while they may look to be worth keeping, to those whose judgment is not the best, might better be killed and put away if feed and labor are to be saved Every winter animals die, weaklings that should not be carried over, some of these are sent in for examination as to the cause of death. The post mortem frequently reveals symptoms of a long standing chronic condition, from which there could be no recovery. Stop loss by removing these animals from the herd that do not respond quickly to treatment, feed and care. Cull out the weaklings, don't waste feed and labor on them, as such will take the profits from those that survive.

Lice and Pediculosis

The various kinds of lice infecting farm animals cause much misery to them during the winter months, and if let to increase unduly will prevent many animals making any profit for their owners. The adult lice to-day are soon great-grand-parents. They increase by millions in a very short time and if the stockman does not watch closely, there may be more lice than hair found on his animals the next time a scratching animal pushes over a stable partition, and thereby brings the condition of infestation to his notice. The good stockman making use of the brush on his animals will suffer no loss from lice, as this pest cannot withstand good grooming of the host animal. Washes made from any of the stock dips, derived from a coal tar base, are very effective in killing lice, but must be applied frequently. Washes made from waste tobacco are also very effective. Powders such as sodium flouride, derris, pyrethrum and sabadilla, or their compounds are very effective as lice destroyers, easy and safe to apply. Oils may be used in a limited way on animals that are not exposed to the weather. Look your stock over closely to-day, and should you find only a few lice, dont give them a chance to become grand-parents. Wash or dust the animals at once to head off trouble, and save money.

Glad That I Live Am I

Glad that I live am I, that the skies are blue,
Glad for the country lanes and the fall of dew
After the sun the rain, after the rain the sun,
This is the way of life, till the work be done,
All that we need to do, be we low or high,
Is to see that we grow nearer the sky.

(These words will be sung as a song at the Ring of Service in London, England).

The Guide Law

1. A Guide's honour is to be trusted. 2. A Guide is loyal. 3. A Guides duty is to be useful and help others. 4. A Guide is friend to all. 5. A Guide is courteous. 6. A Guide is a friend to animals. 7. A Guide obeys orders. 8. A Guide smiles and sings under all difficulties. 9. A Guide is thrifty. 10. A Guide is pure in thought, word and deed.

Taps

"Day is done, gone the sun,
From the hills, from the sea, from the sky,
All is well safely rest,
God is nigh."

Courtesy

Let us think a little about what courtesy means. In some ways this is the most attractive of all our Guide Laws. We begin with Truth, Honour, and Loyalty for the foundation; then we have the most solid and beautiful part of the building—Usefulness, Helpfulness and Friendliness; and then we polish these until they shine with Courtesy.

Courtesy means a great deal. It means politeness and good manners, it means considerateness and thoughtfulness for others, and it means chivalry, deference and respect for others. If we are truly courteous, we shall show deference to all those who are older or wiser than ourselves, or who are above us in any way; and we shall also show respect to all who are weaker, smaller or more helpless than ourselves, even to the animals, remembering that the are God's creatures too.

Marial Honey contributed a little poem to one of our magazines, which I think might be repeated here:

Courtesy

Have we got time to be courteous?
I know it's an awful bore
To remember to wipe your feet on the mat
And not to slam the door.
But it is the little courtesies
In the rush of modern life
When our nerves are horribly on the jar,
That we do much to palliate strife.
And, I think, if we try to be courteous,
We shall find the old-time grace
Of manners is welcome in ev'ry age,
And will never seem out of place.

—Millicent M. Benson, Captain of Lone Guides.

ALL WRONG

A man who had done magnificent service to his locality by philanthropic and other acts was famed for his Malapropisms. At length his services were recognized and a complimentary dinner given in his honour.

When the usual eulogistic speeches had been made and the recipient rose to reply, the guests waited in a state of suppressed trepidation. True to form the local magnate rose and said:—

Ladies and gentlemen, this is easily the most obnoxious occasion in my life."

MR. R. W. THOMAS

The funeral service for Robert Wilfred Thomas was held Sunday afternoon at Wesleyan Methodist church, Ottawa, with many friends from the city and district in attendance. Rev. W.E. Hamilton, Ottawa, conducted the service, assisted by Rev. D.W. Summers of Winchester. Interment was made at Maple Ridge cemetery.

Born at Winchester 40 years ago, Mr. Thomas was well known in this district. A motor mechanic by trade he had served overseas with the motor transport sections of the Army Service Corps. About two years ago he went to Ottawa to make his home.

Surviving are his widow, formerly Annie Cameron; one child, Gerald, aged six years; two brothers Fred, Ottawa and Roy, Rochester, N.Y.; one sister, Mrs. Claude Gordon of Ottawa.

MR. JOHN BURLEY

The funeral of the late John Burley, whose death occurred at his home in the township of Mountain early Sunday morning after a lengthy illness, was held Tuesday afternoon. The cortege proceeded from his late residence to the Salvation Army barracks, Kemptville of which denomination he was a faithful member, where service was conducted by Major Best, of London, formerly of Ottawa. He was assisted by Captain Parks of the Kemptville corps. Interment was made in South Gower cemetery.

Deceased was born at Iroquois, 57 years ago, and moved to Kemptville when in his 'teens. He earned for himself an esteemed position through out the district.

Besides his widow, Mrs. Nellie May Burley, he is survived by one son, Ivan, at home; one daughter Mrs. Cedric Coleman, Heckston; four sisters, Mrs. Anna McGill and Mrs. Amelia Goodall, of Russell, N.Y.; Mrs. E.J. Griffin and Mrs. Wm. Lunderman, Gouverneur, N.Y.

CANADA MAY LIFT BAR ON U.S. LIQUOR EXPORT

Ottawa, Dec. 6—Arising out of reports that the United States Congress may legalize the sale of beer, a rumor is in circulation that the Canadian Parliament might lift the ban on the export of alcoholic beverages to the republic.

The Canadian liquor export bill prohibits the export of alcoholic beverage to any country into which the import is forbidden by the law of that country. The United States is not mentioned in the prohibition clause, although that country was in mind at the time the measure was enacted more than two years ago.

If Congress legalizes the sale or import of any alcoholic beverage, the opinion is expressed that the export of such beverage from Canada automatically is permitted. Beyond this statement, officialdom had no comment yesteday afternoon.

Purity Flour Cakes Keep Fresh

A cake shown at Toronto Exhibition made from this Recipe kept fresh for five days in the heat and air without protection. Try it today—with Purity.

1 cup of white sugar, ½ cup butter, cream together, add 2 beaten egg yolks, ½ cup milk and water (lukewarm), mix 3 teaspoons baking powder in 1½ cups of PURITY FLOUR, pinch salt, 1 teaspoon vanilla, beat egg white stiff and stir in mixture. Bake in moderate oven (375°) for 20 minutes.

PURITY FLOUR

Purity is a strong, rich Flour—always use less of it than ordinary pastry or soft wheat flour.

"Still the best for bread."

Re-surface old walls and ceilings with Gyproc

HERE is a wallboard that does not burn, made from gypsum rock into sheets 4 to 10 feet long, 4 feet wide and 3/8 of an inch thick. It is used for interior walls, ceilings and partitions.

As well as being fire-resistant, it has structural strength, insulation value and is draught and vermin-proof. Use Gyproc Joint Filler for sealing the joints between the tall, broad sheets of wallboard.

When you are "doing over" any room in the house or adding new ones in the attic or basement, use Gyproc for walls and ceilings because you can nail it directly over the old surface. Gyproc is also an excellent base for Alabastine, Gyptex or wallpaper.

Gyproc is Canada's pioneer non-burning gypsum wallboard. Ask your nearest dealer for full details and a Gyproc direction sheet. Or write us for the FREE booklet, "Building and Remodelling with Gyproc". 374

Where Weight Counts

If you were a working man dependent upon a not too liberal supply of daily work to support your family, what would you think if your weight went down from 150 to 95 pounds?

Herbert was alarmed when this happened to him, but he did not want to take "time off" nor to spend money on himself. However, coughing and weakness had their effect and one day he had to be hurried to the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. The experienced doctors at the hospital shook their heads when Herbert's weight was known—so little to build on!

However, patience, good nursing and complete rest have had the desired effect. His weight has increased twenty-two pounds, and he feels sure that he will be able to return to support his family at no distant date.

Financial assistance is urgently needed to continue the good work for many such as Herbert. Will you please lend your assistance by sending a generous contribution to G. A. Reid, 223 College St., Toronto 2.

Physicians Skill Is Taxed

Little gray-eyed Philip gazes at you hopefully. Perhaps you can mend his damaged toy? Yes, that can soon be done—but to help mend his damaged lungs, his weakened little frame, is a work of far greater moment.

It will tax all the care and skill of the kindly doctors and nurses of the Queen Mary Hospital for Consumptive Children to bring this about. However, there is hope ever for Philip, as there is for so many other little children who are being cared for in this institution.

Contributions to assist this great work are needed, however, and a gift of money from you will be most welcome. Please send it to G. A. Reid, 223 College St., Toronto 2.

Moral For Motorists

There is a bit of a moral for all motorists in the story of the Texan who wanted to inspect the scene of a fatal traffic accident the other day.

A car had gone off the road on a mountain highway, killing its driver, so this Texan drove out to see, and got so interested looking at things that he lost control of his own machine—and it, too, went off the road and down into a ravine, killing the driver. The moral, of course, is self-evident; never get so interested in the sights around you that you forget to watch where you are driving. But that is a fault fatally easy for a motorist to lapse into. All of us have been guilty of it at one time or another. Usually we come through it all right. But we might as well remember that it can be a horrible costly little error.

Other People's Opinions

It is not always easy to decide how much attention we should pay to other peoples opinions.. It is a difficult course to steer, sometimes, between a slavish bowing to the opinions of those around us and a wrong indifference to such opinion. There is a wholesome middle course to follow; not a middle-of-the-road policy which has no convictions, but a fearless combination of rightful indifference on the one hand and sane sensitiveness on the other.—Toronto Globe.

A Matter of Opinion

If you see a woman wearing something nowadays, and the last thing on earth it looks like is a woman's hat, you can bet your life it is a womans hat.—Ottawa Journal.

Newspaper in Every Home

The extent to which newspapers are read in Canada has been illustrated afresh in figures announced at the nineteenth annual meeting of the Association of Canadian Advertisers. It was announced that two and a quarter million copies of newspapers are sold every day in Canada. "This means," it was explained, "that every accessible family in the Dominion is receiving its daily paper."

This is an impressive showing, and indicates that even in these present very trying years people are loath to give up their daily paper. On this continent at least the daily newspaper is the most widely read of all publications. It is an indispensable part of virtually every family's daily life.—Regina Leader-Post.

Come Again!

A California newspaper says: "Canadian ports are frozen for a good portion of the winter and wheat cannot leave these ports." The more we see of a lack of general world information on the part of the United States people the more respect we have for our own educational system.—Halifax Herald.

Twice-Written Works

The death of the Detroit author, Will Levington Comfort, recalls the fact that he had to write his most successful book, "Routledge Rides Alone," twice. He labored at it for months while his family almost starved, and when on the way to the publishers, he lost the manuscripts and it was never found. He had no duplicate copy, and although physically exhausted, he set his teeth and wrote the book over again. Other authors have performed much greater feats. Thomas Carlyle, whose "French Revolution" is one of the most stupendous volumes ever penned, involving the assembling of an immense amount of historical data, also wrote it twice. He loaned the first copy to a friend, and it transpired some weeks later that a maid had seen the manuscript on the table, and not realizing what it was, had used the pages every morning to light the fires of the house. Carlyle wrote it all over again. "Lawrence of Arabia" is another who had the same experience. He wrote his famous book on the Arab campaign, numbering 200,000 words, and one day a thief stole the bag containing the complete manuscript at a railway station. So Lawrence re-wrote the whole opus.—St. Thomas Times-Journal.

Carbon Monoxide Dangers

A season of danger to motor car owners is on, that wherein garage doors and windows are closed against the cold and there is temptation to start the motor under such restricted ventilation. Peculiarly there are many motorists who know nothing of carbon-monoxide gas, and would be astounded to learn that the exhaust from the motor may contain one of the most deadly and quick-acting gases known. — Welland-Port Colborne Tribune.

Australia Making Headway

It is spring time in Austaralia now, and the winter has been a sharp one. But the crops promise to be bountiful, and it is anticipated that the wool clip will be larger and better than for some years past There has been an abundant rainfall, with correspondingly abundant feed. The relief provided by the land tax reduction has heartened the farmers, who are now looking for an upward trend in produce prices.—Montreal Daily Star.

THE EMPIRE

A Fair Deal for the Farmer

With the proper organization of and security for the agricultural producers there is room for a million or more of the urban unemployed in the fields which they or their near relatives but recently quitted. But proper organization and effective security are vital, and both these will be fruitless unless the producer is assured of a fair deal. —London Daily Telegraph.

Retrenchment in the Colonies

Whatever hardships the future holds in store for officers in Malaya they will follow on the heels of similar sacrifices which have been borne by officers in other administrations of the Colonial service for some time past. Moreover, this Colony is one of those where an income tax does not operate and, so far as we are permitted to know official intentions, is not contemplated. The fact may help Government officials here to face future financial sacrifices with rather greater equanimity than might otherwise be the case. It's a hard life, but it might so easily be harder.—Singapore Free Press.

World Problems

The return of prosperity to Britain, and all other countries, depends first and foremost on the achievement of sane international agreements to relieve the burden and the increase of armaments, to remove the incubus of debts, to remedy the causes which have thrown the currencies of half the world into the melting pot, and to cut the bonds which strangle international trade.—Economist (London).

Quality and Quantity

The Americanization of industry in Europe has clearly not been a success. High tariff protection, rationalization, old-established societies of highly and mass-production are of no use to skilled people. They bore remarkable results in the United States because of its vast internal market, its undeveloped resources, its continuous supply of cheap immigrant labour, its self-sufficiency in raw materials. Even in the United States the limit of the benefits to be obtained from rationalization and mass-production seems to have been reached, and indeed overpassed. There never were any benefits for Europe in turning from craftsmanship to mass-production; and to craftsmanship Europe should return.—Prof. R. B. Mowat in The Contemporary Review (London).

AMERICAN

The League and Japan

The League of Nations is in a rather tight place. It can by no means afford to order the Japanese to withdraw their control from Manchuria, for the Japanese would simply refuse and the League would have no means of enforcing its order. No nation or group of nations is ready to go to war with Japan over Manchuria at this time. No nation is willing to break off diplomatic relations with Japan. Even the aggrieved Chinese have not done so.—Philadelphia Ledger.

French Plow Horse Leads To Interesting Discovery

Chalons-Sur-Marne, France.—A neolithic tribal tomb has just been discovered at Villeneuve-Saint-Vistres, where the soil caved in under the hoofs of a plow horse, leaving a hole about a foot wide. The farmer went on unheeding, but some passing hunters looked in the hole and saw human skeletons.

M. Roland, a Villeneuve archaeologist, informed of the discovery, brought to light a burial place sloping down to a flat stone When this was lifted, an underground chamber was found in which were several skeletons on the ground resting against the sides heads of men, women or children. Six of the room. There were twenty-eight flint-headed arrows, three flint knives, three sandstont knives and an axe-holder were also found.

Mexican Gold Supply Consumed Chiefly in U. S. and Britain

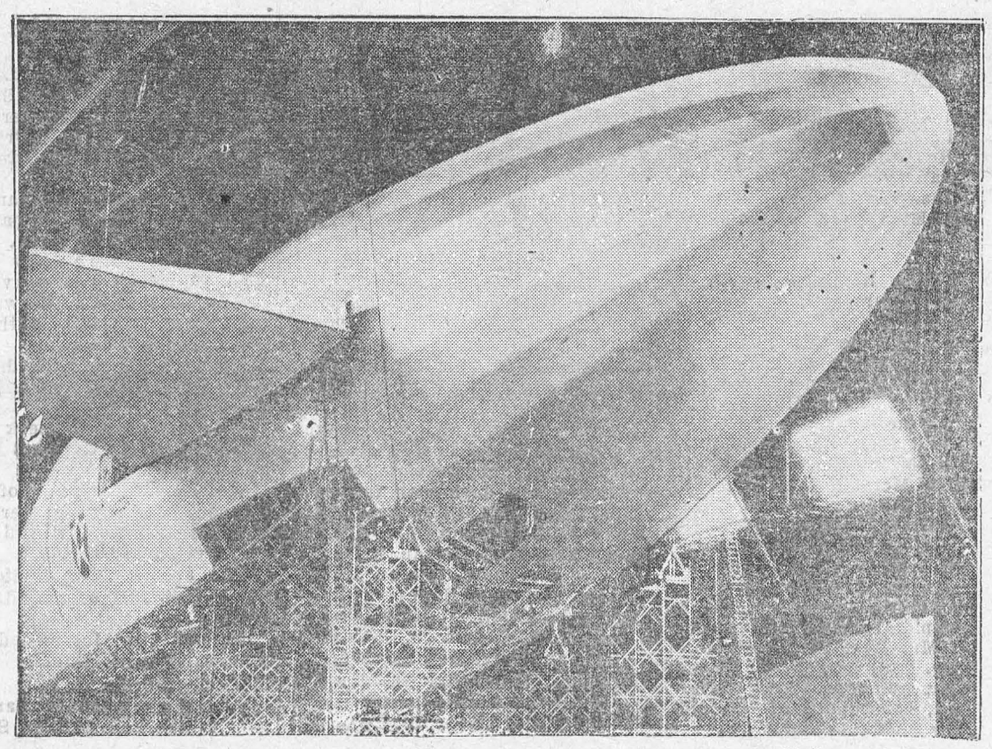
Mexico City.—Gold production in 1932 totaled 7,530 kilograms, of which Mexico during the first five months of only ninety-six kilograms were consumed in this country, the rest being exported. During the same period, Mexico produced 910,899 kilograms of silver, of which only 199,079 kilograms were consumed in Mexico, the rest being exported.

The figures also reveal that United States and Great Britain are the principal consumers of gold. Silver went in largest quantities to these two countries and to India, China, France and Germany.

Smokers' Eyes Better At Seeing Red Lights

Los Angeles.—Tobacco smoking, it has been shown in experiments conducted at the University of Southern California, tends to increase the sensitivity of eyesight to red and green colors. This sensitivity, experimenters point out, may in future determine whether a person is a good or poor accident risk for insurance.

Huge Airship To Make Debut in Spring



The new air giant Macon is beginning to take shape and in the spring will be ready to accompany her sister ship the Akron. Fins are being put in place now.

Insurance Officers to Spend $75,000 in Publications

Toronto.—For the third consecutive year in its record 12 years of progress, the Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association voted to expend $75,000 in Canadian publications during the forthcoming year. A series of advertisements, expounding the principles of life insurance as protection for dependents and for old age income, will appear in 73 English and French newspapers and 18 English and French farm publications from coast to coast in Canada.

In 1931, in the face of the financial situation, the association's members voted to more than double its advertising outlay feeling that the necessity of acquiring life insurance and retaining existing policies should be stressed during periods of reduced income. The following year it repeated its decision, voting $75,000 again. This year it voted to maintain the standard set two years ago.

For 12 years the association has been widening its active sphere until in the past two years it has attained a record, it is stated, unequalled on the North American continent in co-operative institutional advertising.

Finds Monoxide Gas Can Act in a Minute

Albany.—Numerous deaths recently from carbon monoxide gas poisoning, have led B. R. Richards, director of State Public Health Education, to issue a warning to the public.

The State Labor Department is distributing a pamphlet containing instructions for avoiding the gas that comes not only from automobiles but from indoor gas heaters and similar burners.

"Just to see how it works, I tried an experiment," he said. Leaving my son to watch outside our garage, waiting for a signal from me, I closed the garage doors and started the motor of my car. This, mind you, was in a three-car garage.

"In just a minute I felt a sort of metallic taste in my mouth. Then I got dizzy and drowsy. I rushed to the door just as my son, realizing what had happened, threw it open."

Children's Ails Psychic

"Fifty per cent. of the disturbances of children are psychic rather than physical," states a prominent children's specialist.

He adds that he can determine whether he can be of assistance to the child by the behavior of the mother when he walks into the sick room.

Ancient Chinese Wall Offered for Sale

Shanghai.—The Mayor of the City of Meihsien, in Kwangtung Province, has hit upon the ingenious plan of selling the city wall in ten-foot lengths and using the proceeds to erect modern fortifications to protect the city from the attacks of Communists or bandits.

Several years ago the city walls began to disintegrate when bricks were removed to provide culverts for new bus roads. Then, in 1929, came two attacks by Communists and the battlements were hastily repaired.

Recently there has been agitation in favor of tearing down the wall to make room for shops. The Mayor finally decided to divide the wall into ten-foot length, each selling for a little more than $100. Each buyer is responsible for tearing down his portion of the wall and he may retain the bricks as building material for the construction of his shop.

Half of the wall has been thus disposed of at a total return of about $60,000. This money is being expended on the building of fifteen two-storey towers commanding all of the roads entering Meihsien. Ten of these forts have already been completed, the towers being of reinforced concrete.

Meihsien is an important center for the distribution of goods to the interior of Kwangtung Province.

New State Pictured of Canada's Future

Toronto.—A bright picture of Canada in the future was painted by Reginald H. Dean for the St. Lambert Women's Club at its recent meeting here. Mr. Dean visualized a new world where the "God standard" not the gold standard would prevail, and the teachings of the Great Master of nineteen hundred years ago would find a definite place. Poblems would be faced from a different angle than that of ten years ago; a greater individual responsibility would be apparent.

The speaker pointed to the great resources of Canada and its stable institutions. He noted that banking institutions had stood the test of the critical times.

France Builds Big Locomotive

Rouen, France—The state railroad shops here are putting the finishing touches on a locomotive represented to be the most powerful in the world. It develops 2,800 horse power, makes seventy-five miles an hour and has an automatic stoker.

Young Men of Britain Have All-Year Camps

London.—An organization known as Grith Fyrd Camps has come into existence in response to the popular demand. A chain of permanent camp communities is being formed in which young men of all classes can live a worth-while life, even if precluded from earning a living. The project was initiated by the Order of Woodcraft Chivalry, a social and educational organization, which has had sixteen years' experience of year-round camping.

It is more than an unemployment scheme, for it aims at filling needs which would be urgent if there were no unemployment—(1) for the regaining by young men of that personal experience of primitive adventure which was lost in the migration from country to town; (2) for the constructive use of readiness to face danger and difficulty in serving their country; and (3) for education in the purposeful use of the leisure which humanity has secured by the elaboration of machines.

Members of Grith Fyrd Camps set about the task of learning by first-hand experience how to control themselves and each other, or, in other words, how to live in communities and yet find life adventurous and satisfying.

The first camp has been constructed close to the bank of the Avon at Godshill near Fordingbridge, on the northwestern edge of the New Forest, twelve miles from Southampton.

Spain's Navy Shrinks

Madrid.—Spain, although a Mediterranean and Atlantic power whose strategic position is well known, is demonstrating its desire for peace both in theory and in fact by allowing her navy to dwindle in importance until it already is inferior to the Argentine fleet.

The navy, as things now stand, is headed by only two dreadnoughts of 15,700 tons, and three cruisers, two of them of 7,975 tons and one of 4,725, The other craft are small destroyers, submarines, and gunboats.

Poles Not Artistic

Paris.—The French do not consider telephone poles things of beauty. Within the past month, because of a decree passed by the French Government, 249 telephone poles have been removed from the vicinity of various historic monuments, ruins and picturesque landscapes.

Santa Claus Down South

Santa Claus has indeed gone modern. He landed his new plane in San Francisco, last week, to enquire of Jack and Jill what their wishes were. In addition he took 'em for a ride.

Wheat Shipments To Grow Stronger

Likely to Increase During December—Slow Up First of New Year

Ottawa.—With Russia out of the Empire market, Canadian wheat sales to Great Britain during October were 11,204,000 bushels, or nearly four times what they were a year ago, according to official ngures reaching here from Liverpool. This Canadian sale of 11,204,000 bushels represented 57 per cent. of all the wheat bought by the United Kingdom during the month. It made a striking comparison to the figures for October, 1931, when Canada, unable to compete with Russia, sold to Britain only 3,078,000 bushels, or 12 per cent. of the total British purchases.

Grain authorities here have every expectation that the volume of Canadian sales to Great Britain will remain at their present high level to the end of the year. After that fear that the currency situation, the disparity between the pound and dollar, may work to Canada's disadvantage.

Russia, of course, is selling little or no wheat to Britain or any other country this Fall. Information is meagre, but most authorities are of the opinion that the granaries of the Soviet steppes hold scarcely enough grain to supply the food-rationed Russians themselves. The Danubian countries, too, are practically out of the export market, crop failures having greatly reduced their production.

Canada Unchallenged

Thus Canada at the moment stands unchallenged in the British market, because the United States, the only other competitor of size at this season, has not yet got its prices down to an export basis. As British stocks, according to the latest figures, are at an unprecedentedly low ebb, it is considered here that Britain will be buying at the rate of 20 million bushels a month during November and December. Canada should sell the bulk of this wheat, it is declared.

January, however, is normally the month in which the Argentine and Australia begin shipping out their crops. In these countries, harvesting is just starting now. It is when these two great producers, both of which have currencies depreciated as low or lower than the pound sterling, that Canadian wheat exporters may feel the pinch of their relatively high-priced dollar, grain men say.

As expressed in terms of dollars, the price of Canadian heat would have to come down in order to meet this Australian-Argentine competition. The wheat preference accorded by the Canada-United Kingdom trade agreement applies equally to Australia, so that Canada would find no protection there. Moreover it is probable that currency values notwithstanding, the Argentine wheat would be regarded in England as setting a world price lower than Canada's price and consequently under the terms of the trade agreement Canada would not qualify for the preference.

Libraries for the Congo

Brussels.—There is a movement on foot to provide the larger cities in the Congo with libraries. The project was planned long ago, but in many cases has not been put into execution. Bad times are reminding those in authority of the necessity of providing the white population with books of reference of first necssity in a colony and with recent works on Central African colonization and research work.

The colonial reference library and museum in Brussels will probably serve as a model for these Congo libraries. As always in Belgium, pictures and diagrams serve better than books. More value is attached, for instance, to specimens of cotton or copper from the Congo, than to works on minerals in general.

Eminently practical, the Belgian is not a reader of newspapers or books. He prefers practical to theoretical instruction, but the Colonial Government is preparing to supply the need where practical facilities do not exist and where they already exist, wants to supplement them by book knowledge.

1,530,890 Peiping Population Is Largest in History of City

Peiping, China.—Peiping, the ancient capital of China, has a population of 1,530,890, according to the latest figures. Of this number, 62,963 are foreigners, chiefly Japanese and Russians.

Peiping now is more populous by 70,000 persons than it was even during the first year of the republic. This is accounted for by the large influx of refugees from Manchuria during the last year. In having attained its largest size in history, Peiping face an acute housing problem which grows more serious as refugees continue to arrive from the disturbed areas to the northward.

Disappointed

As the result of an operation a thirteen-yearold boy, who was born blind, has just gained his sight in Adelaide, Australia, and his first remark was, 'I often used to wonder what things could look like, but blow it all, when I see them they are just about what I thought they would be."

Hospital for Sick Children

67 COLLEGE ST., TORONTO 2
(Country Branch, Thistletown)

December, 1932.

Dear Mr. Editor:

The prolonged period of hard times has created a most difficult problem for Ontario's world-famous Hospital for Sick Children, which only the benevolent public can solve. Here it is in a nutshell:

The Hospital has nursed in its cots this year 7,694 small sufferers, an increase of 687 over the total of the previous year. In addition 84,202 treatments were given in the great Out-Patient Department, an increase of 16,092. On one day 520 treatments were recorded In the previous year there was a similar growth in the demand for the merciful ministrations of the Hospital. While all this has been going on the amounts of the donations from the kind-hearted have decreased by many thousands of dollars, creating the situation of far more to be done and far less to do it with.

The statutory grants obtained by the Hospital fall much short of being sufficient to pay for the actual cost of maintenance of the little patients and each additional patient means an added deficit. The task of bridging the gap between the cost of operation and operating income has usually been accomplished by contributions from the benevolent. While the Hospital has retained the major- of its friends who kindly donate its work yearly, and is continually ding new ones, donations diminished to a somewhat alarming extent the response to last year's appeal funds and there has been little provement in that respect throughut the year. It is unthinkable that ny child needing the humane serice provided by the Hospital should e refused. The Trustees are anxious and can only hope that the kind-hearted people of the province will see them through the difficulty by a most generous response to the present appeal.

Public benevolence has built the Hospital for Sick Children to the proud eminence of being the finest institution of its kind in the world. Its country branch at Thistletown is a recognized model and persons interested in child welfare come from all parts of the globe to inspect it. Any child in the Province of Ontario, deformed or diseased, is eligible for admittance to this wonderful institution, where the very finest treatment known to medical and surgical science is at once available. There is no class or creed distinction. The very best that any Hospital can give is placed within easy reach of the poorest child.

Now, more urgently than ever before, is the Hospital in need of contributions and no amount would be considered too small. Please ask the benevolent in your community to help. Tell them that the story of the Hospital, covering 57 years, is not that of merely adding cot to cot and ward to ward. It is the story of a battle constantly waged against disease and deformity, with all the advancing resources of the medical and surgical sciences. It is a story of demands which have ever exceeded the financial resources, but which have always been met by generous response to appeals for aid. But for this ...sity the Hospital would many ...even have been bankrupt. Ask ...aders, please, to prevent it from becoming so now.

Faithfully yours,
DOUGLAS S. ROBERTSON,
Trustee.

Amazing Results Chronicled For New Photo Process

Photography seems about to enter on a new and surprising field. During the past year the London Times has been experimenting in photos taken at a distance of ten to twenty miles or more through the use of the Ilford infra-red process. Hitherto ground haze has greatly hampered aerial photography. But this difficulty has been overcome by the use of the Ilford process. Last month The Times reproduced a photograph of a considerable area of Kent, the English Channel and stretches of the French coast to a depth of many miles showing in all directions a great amount of detail.

The Express, taking up the subject with its usual enthusiasm, claims that a band of English chemists, working i the research laboratories of a photographic plate factory at Ilford, Essex, have made a discovery which, in the opinion of scientists, will alter the whole tactics of naval, land, and air warfare; open up immeasurable possibilites n astronomcal knowledge, and render all shipping immune from danger of collision and disaster in fog.

The wonder is said to lie in a secret dye which applied to photographic plates, renders them sensitive to the invisible infra-red rays of light. Potographs so taken penetrate all the haze and fog in the atmosphere. The only limit to distance is the curvature of the earth. The applications to warfare are obvious. Even a smoke screen will be useless for an infra-red picture will penetrate it and reveal the movements beyond, whether on land or at sea. Protection against fog at sea will be one of the valuable developments. In the fields of science the possibilities are staggering. "With this new photography applied to astronomy," said a scientist, "we shall be able to search the universe vastly further than at present and with much greater acuracy. It is within bounds that as this photography reaches a higher efficiency we shall be able to tell if there is any form of life on the planets. We cannot tell where it will end."

Research is now being carried on at Ilford to sensitize a plate to the ultra-violet rays. If this attempt is successful, it may soon be possible to take, from the outside of a house, a picture of the whole inside and see what is going on there In such an event we are afraid that an Englishman's home will no longer be his castle.—Toronto Mail & Empire.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Quaint Folk

By GEORGE MIKSCH SUTTON,
in The Atlantic Monthly

Ask an average white man to tell you what he knows about the world of the Eskimo and he may give you a somewhat disjointed discourse upon long dark winters, icebergs, igloos, Husky dogs, filthy clothing, blubber, and the trading of wives.

Ask an average Southampton Island Eskimo to give you his concept of the white man's world and you may, in due course, be regaled with a series of practically unpronounceable words describing very big boats, radios, gramophones, mouth organs, accordions, soap, warm water, razors, airplanes, odd footgear, robed priests, binoculars, and magazines; and sooner or later you will be told that white men spend nearly all their time looking for skins of the white fox.

The Eskimo appears to concede that the white man possesses and controls many wonderful tools, toys, and machines He seems to feel that it is as natural for the white man to have power over huge ships, or so to control the spirits as to bid them carry messages through the air, as it is for the snow to cover Southampton in winter. Accepting the phenomenon, he does not disturb himself further. In fact, the average Eskimo knows and cares so little about the world outside his own that, consistently enough, he thinks it impossible that we of the South should be interested in, or know anything about, the circumpolar region.

One man was amazed at the bird specimens I had prepared; it was not fitting that I should skin a bird as well as or better than he, since these birds were of his world, not mine. He wondered whether I had ever seen or heard of an ookpikjuak, a snowy owl. Another man was surprised that I could handle a rowboat without special instruction: it was his world's water, at present his world's boat.

Maps, magazines, and books have given the Eskimo some idea of the world and of the relative position of Southampton. But the one definite idea of the white man's civilization which every Eskimo appears to have is that the white man needs fox skins. So long has he trapped all winter, brought his pelts in for trade, and been exhorted to hurry back for more, that he has come to think of the arctic fox as a sort of hub about which the Wheel of Civilization moves.

It is considered quite normal, therefore, for any white man to go to any extreme in his quest for the fox skin. But when a naturalist comes to Southampton on the annual supply boat, announcing, as I did, that he is interested in lemmings, mushrooms, sculpins, the Eskimo gulps, remembers that the white man's behavior is unaccountable after all, then bends to the task of bringing in everything from half rotten birds to a fair-sized willow tree.

The preparation of natural-history specimens assumes theatrical proportions while a silent man may stand near by absorbed in every detail of the process. When I measure a lemming's tail or hind foot with brass dividers and metric tape, he may whisper a rapt "Wab, kudlunga!"—which is, so far as I can ascertain, almost precisely the equivalent of Virgil's "Mirabile dictu!" My careful examination of stomach contents interests and amuses him, though my failure to nibble at this and munch at that as I proceed may mystify him.

Thinking that the Eskimos might better understand my need of specimens after seeing watercolor portraits of arctic birds, I took some downstairs one evening, and bade my friends inspect them. Groan followed groan; grunt followed grunt. "Why-ee, why-ee," sounded in many voices. The Eskimos handled the sheets almost reverently, touched the delineation of cloud, rock, or feather as if to make certain the object were not actual. Finally Shoo Fly, who was queen of our island by popular consent, delivered her ultimatum: "You are not human. You are more like a camera. But I want to see you making one." Here, indeed, was a skeptic!

The Eskimo makes a gesture of genuflexion to the white man; but in his heart he knows that the Eskimo in Eskimo land is superior. The Innuit are the inheritors of the earth. We come to see and live with them because we need their environment, their philosophy, or their religion; because we need their fox skins; or because we want to paint pictures of their birds. The Eskimo may appear to admire a white man's ability as hunter or craftsman; or he may compliment him upon his courage and endurance. But in his heart he has reservations.

And who am I to asert that the Eskimo is inferior to me? While my world has developed an obsession for inventing, discovering, conquering, for "being somebody," the Eskimo has evolved the ability not alone to endure, but to enjoy, the "unspeakable tedium" of the long winter. He seems to have learned far better than I to be content.

The Eskimo sees no need for effort not connected with the pursuit of daily food, so he smokes and eats, and tells tales. He has no printed literature; his only classics are those of legend and fable. Yet why is not the spoken fable of the Bunting and the Snowy Owl enough for the soul whose great ambition is to kill a walrus or caribou, to keep comparatively comfortable in tupek or igloo, or to drive the dog team properly? And why should the Eskimo have a greater ambition, so long as he is happy?

The average Eskimo is scarcely even curious about the Outside World. At the Post he looks at a map for a moment, but prefers to gaze at the wall, listening to the radio. He inspects a magazine, gapes admiringly at a full-page corset advertisement, finds, with satisfaction, the picture of a woman clad in white fur, asks a question about a horse or cow, recognizes a Sealyham terrier as a dog in spite of its aberrances, informs us that the Eskimos could make an igloo as high as a skyscraper if they wanted to, murmurs a self-satisfied "motah khah" as he gazes at a pictured automobile, asks whether bananas grow in the sea, stares long at drawings illustrating some comical situation but does not smile, laughs uproariously at a Jeritza costumed for her part in Turandot, cuts a square of red paper from the cover design, closes the journal carelessly, and is done.

He plays cards—500, casina, poker, hearts, or snap. He listens to lectures, weather forecasts, sermons, and music from the radio. He trades his fox skins, his bear hides, his whalebone, or his sealskin boots for food, ammunition, and clothing at the store, and then, sitting silently on his komatik, makes his way back to camp, where he becomes an aboriginal once more.

As he journeys across the tundra, what does he think about? Does he muse upon the beauty of the sky above him? Is the weighted curtain of the aurora borealis a mystery to him? Does he compose poems about his hunting experiences or his love affairs? Does he think of and wonder about the white man's world?

I have traveled with the Eskimos on their komatiks and have lived with them in tupek and in igloo. I have learned to like them greatly. But of their thought processes I know next to nothing. My guess is that the Eskimo has learned long since that there are times for thinking and times for not-thinking; and that the long hours of solitude on the komatik or at the seal hole are not hours of loneliness or tedium because they are not-thinking hours.

Beautiful art can only be produced by people who have beautiful things about them, and leisure to look at them; and unless you provide some elements of beauty for your workmen to be surrounded by, you will find that no elements of beauty can be invented by them.—Ruskin.

I think there can be few, who more truly feel than I, that this is a world of bliss, of beauty; that is, that bliss and beauty are the need, the tendency of creation; and evils are the shadows that are only the conditions of life in the picture.—George Eliot.

Events of great consequence often spring from trifling circumstances.—Livy.

Paris Jottings

Peace Talk To Children

France's Prime Minister, M. Edouard Herriot, has delivered many fine speeches on the subject of peace before such august assemblies as the League of Nations or the French Parliament An entirely different sort of audience, however, heard him speak on his favorite topic recently. The occasion was the addition of another playground to the countless "jardins denfants" which make Paris such a paradise for children. Gathered in their new terraced garden overhanging the Quai Valmy, a large number of little children listened intently and applauded enthusiastically while M. Herriot told them of France's desire for a just peace. "Peace," he said to them, "is at once a question of love of justice, and of faith. One must believe in it in order to create it." Both of these necessary qualities, he said, abound in children, and statesmen could learn much from them.

Iventure in Buses

"Oh, that I could whistle a good old Paris smell!" sighed Peter Ibbetson in the famous book by Du Maurier. Ever changng, yet somehow ever the same, these "good old Paris smells" are as much a part of the French capital as its famous perfumes. Recently, however, these romantic odors disappeared for a while, smothered under the thick pungent smell of burning tar, accompanied by the equally overwhelming sound of compressed air drills, for Paris was repairing its streets. At such a time, an ordinary bus ride becomes much of an adventure, for many of the streets of the city are so narrow that they must be closed while t repairs are in progress, and traffic therefore sometimes has to make very considerable detours. The bus will swing around suddenly and you look up from your book to find it rushing along narrow winding streets lined with quaint, old-fashioned houses and bearing names which remind one of long-forgotten history books. Then, just as suddenly as it began, the adventure ends The bus is once more rolling along the old familiar noisy route again, and you turn back to your book, wondering a little if you have not been dreaming.

Toy Hunting With Herriot

An acquaintance recently asked M. Herriot how it was that in the midst of such pressing problems as world disarmament, state finance and political turmoil that threatened to bring the Government down about his ears, he always seemed to find time to spend a few hours of even his busiest days with his younger friends. "Oh,, but children are different," the Prime Minister replied. "It's my greatest diversion and pleasure to be surrounded by children." When the Sultan of Morocco was in Paris on his annual visit, M. Herriot lost no time in making the acquaintance of his son, Mouley Hasson, aged four. A few minutes after meeting they left the hotel, hand in hand, bound for the toy department of one of Paris's leading stores. They were going to buy a motorcar that Mouley Hassan could drive all by himself. It took quite a long time to find one to fit his tiny legs and when he at last was seated at the wheel, trying the horn and feeling very important, the rather weighty statesman suggested getting on behind. The little boy, however, looked up and said very solemnly, "Oh, no, you mustn't, you might fall off!" Suddenly the future Sultan spied a magnificent cardboard horse, and instantly forgot his motorcar in admiration of it. Whereupon M. Herriot paid the purchase price of a few francs and they both left the shop highly delighted, Mouley Hassan carrying his fiery steed clasped tightly under his arm.

Landmark Disappears

Chess is a popular pastime in France, and has long been an integral part of the cafe habit which gives Paris one of its most original aspects. At many of the tables that line the boulevard couples might be seen playing chess, but certain cafes were particularly favored by the devotees of the game and these came to be, in effect, clubs where chess players gathered daly. One of the most famous of these, and one of the oldest, the "Cafe de la Rotonde," in the Gardens of the Palais Royal, has just been pulled down. Situated at one end of the gardens, which even to-day form a haven of quiet beauty in the midst of the heavy traffic which swirls around it from the noisy thoroughfare of the Avenue de l'Opera, the cafe, during most of the last century, was the center of fashionable society in Paris, which promenaded in the gardens and under the arcades of the palace built by Cardinal Richelieu in 1629.

Paris Goes Colonial

Paris is now experiencing the results of the wave of colonial interest awakened by the International Colonial Exhibition held here last year. The colonial offices in the Galerie d'Orleans, behind the Theatre Francais, have undergone a radical change of aspect. Whereas last year the show windows of these offices were filled with a dusty collection of colonial goods, assembled with no attempt at display, this year things are quite different. The principal window has been transformed into a modern and beautifully furnished dining room, made of colonial woods. Well presented exhihits and interesting photographs of the various colonies and their industries are on display in the other smaller windows.—The Christian Science Monitor.

If a man has a right to be proud of anything—it is of a good action, done as it ought to be, without any base interest lurking at the bottom of it.

FELL DOWN IN THE STREET

He Dreaded Going Out

A MARTYR TO RHEUMATISM

It must have taken some time for this man's rheumatism to have become so severe. He does not say anything about that. But he does make it clear that it needed only four or five months of Kruschen to make him forget all about the pain he once suffered.

This is what he writes:—"I have often seen Kruschen announcements in the papers, and I think it is only fair that I also should give a small testimony. I have used Kruschen Salts for over two years. Before I started to use it, I was troubled with rheumatism very badly, chiefly in my legs. I had it so bad, I used to fall down in the street. But this last 18 or 20 months I have never felt anything at all; in fact, I have forgotten it altogether, whereas before I used to dread going out. Kruschen is more valuable than gold."—I. L.

Each "little daily dose" of Kruschen contains a scientific combination of mineral salts which tone up all your organs of elimination—liver, kidneys and stomach—and keep them working smoothly and efficiently as Nature intended. The reward of this internal cleanliness is a freshened and invigorated blood-stream which courses through your veins, driving all impurities before it. Poisonous uric acid with its needle-pointed crystals is expelled through the natural channels, and the pains of rheumatism cease. And as you continue with the "little daily dose" of Kruschen, your whole being—body and brain—responds to the purifying force.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

IT'S LIVER THAT MAKES YOU FEEL SO WRETCHED

Wake up your Liver Bile —No Calomel necessary

For you to feel healthy and happy, your liver must pour two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels, every day. Without that bile, trouble starts. Poor digestion. Slow elimination. Poisons in the body. General wretchedness.

How can you expect to clear up a situation like this completely with mere bowel-moving salts, oil, mineral water, laxative candy or chewing gum, or roughage? They don't wake up your liver.

You need Carter's Little Liver Pills. Purely vegetable. Safe. Quick and sure results. Ask for them by name. Refuse substitutes. 25c. at all druggists. 54

There was much personal as well as musical interest in the third recital of the season of the Morning Music Club on Thursday, owing to the fact that the young violinist with raven hair, Audrey Cook, and her family, are so well known in Ottawa. Attendance was unusually large for a December morning and at the conclusion, friends and others who had enjoyed the program crowded around Miss Cook and her exceptional accompanist, Harriet Prutsman, to express their pleasure. Audrey Cook revea's the results of training under the famous master and disciplinarian, Sevick of Prague, whose pupils include world famous artists. Her technique is painstaking, facile, assured; her intonation certain; and bowing graceful and authoritative. Her tone is firm, musical and supple.—Ottawa Citizen

There was joy in the "bull gang" at the Ontario Reformatory, when every member received an extra "deck of weed." The packet of tobacco presented each prisoner was a gesture on the part of Hon. G.H. Challies, Provincial Secretary, who promised the men a treat for the work they accomplished in the completion of the new lake at the institution, which was opened by the Minister.

INSTALLATION OF OFFICERS

L.O.L. 3127, Morrisburg, held their installation of officers on Dec. 6th. The officers were duly installed for the year 1933 by P.M. E.P. Foster, as follows:

W.M.—Bro. Royal Murdock.
D.M.—Bro. Cecil Hanson.
Chaplain—Bro. Harvey Shaver.
R. Sec.—Bro M.W. Casselman.
Fin. Sec.—Bro. S.D. Beckstead.
Treas.—Bro. L. VanAllen.
Dir. of Ceremonies—Bro. C. Swerdtfeger.
First Lecturer—Bro Manson McConnell.
Sec. Lec.—Bro. Grant Casselman.
F. Com.—Bro. D. Schwertfeger.

After this we all marched to Casselman's Hall, where we joined in with our wives and sweethearts where we were met by four clergymen, namely Rev. Burkholder, Rev. Dr. McRae, Rev. Holmes of Morrisburg and Rev. Sproule of Chesterville. After partaking of a daintily prepared chicken supper by the ladies we listened to four very able and encouraging addresses by the ministers which lasted up till 11.30 p.m. The young folks enjoyed themselves in a very sociable manner for a couple of hours, after which everybody left for home, calling it a most enoyable and profitable evening. The number who partook of the supper was over one hundred.

MRS. ALDEMA BRADLEY

Mrs. Aldema Bradley passed away Saturday Dec. 3rd, 1932, at the home of her son at Mallorytown, Ont. She was in her 73rd year, and had spent a large portion of her lifetime in Morrisburg. For the past eight years Mrs. Bradley had been a patient sufferer.

She leaves to mourn the loss of a devoted mother, one son and five daughters.

The funeral service was held on Monday Dec. 5th, at her son's home, Rev. Dr. Lang officiating.

Interment took place at Mallorytown.

ST. LAWRENCE LOOP OFFICERS ELECTED

The annual meeting of the St. Lawrence Junior Hockey League was held at Prescott, with delegates present from Cardinal, Iroquois, Morrisburg and Prescott. George Fitzpatrick, president of the league for the past two years, occupied the chair.

In opening the meeting, President Fitzpatrick welcomed the visiting delegates, and congratulated the Iroquois team on winning the Gill cup last season. He also advised neutral referees for all games, and then made it plain that he could not accept the office of president again this year. In closing, he advised the league that the president should rotate from the different towns in the circuit.

Spencerville was admitted to the league, while the application of the Cornwall Club was refused, the distance being too far. A five-team league will operate, as Prescott is to have but one team this season, instead of two.

The schedule is expected to open about the last week in December, and will be drawn up by the president and secretary.

The officers elected are as follows: Hon. president, James Gill, Cardinal president, J.A. Keeler, Iroquois; vice-president F.H. Broder, Morrisburg; second vice-president, E.A. Irwin, Cardinal; secretary-treasurer, B. Shortt, Cardinal.
