These marks represent the standing of some of our students on the recent Civil Service examinations. As these subjects are the most difficult in the curriculum, the foregoing feat at once explains why our record—FIRST, SECOND and FOURTH places for the whole of Canada—has never been equalled.

We not only give a superior training but also assist our students to good positions.

In Memoriam.

In loving memory of our dear father, Mr. Alex. Durant, Dunbar, Ont., who departed this life May 14th, 1914.

O, our loss has been so heavy,
But we know he's happy now,
A bright star in Heaven
With a crown upon his brow.
And this thought shall soothe our sorrow,
And shall ease the heavy pain,
For we know if we are faithful
We shall soon meet him again.

Successful Stedent.

Our congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Smith on the success of their son Emerson, who has been successful in his final examinations in medicine at McGill University, where he secured honors in two subjects. He will go before the Ontario Medical Council in Kingston this week for further exams.

Appreciated In Alberta.

Two well known Eastern Ontario boys are fast coming to the front in Agricultural Educational matters in Alberta. Appointments have just been confirmed by the Hon. Duncan Marshall, of Horace A. Craig, a North Gower boy, who has been superintendent of demonstration farms, to be deputy minister of agriculture, and Sidney G. Carlyle, well known in Chesterville and vicinity, who has been assistant to Mr. Craig, to be superintendent of demonstration farms.

Telling Work In Winnipeg.

The following refers to the church of which Rev. A. Hamilton of Winnipeg, is pastor. He is a brother of Reeve Hamilton of Chesterville, and from the figures has evidently a responsive field of labor.

"We had at the Sunday School on Easter Sunday 1,123, composed of 386 in primary, 250 in Bible class, 487 in intermediate. Our school is now the largest Methodist Sunday School in the city, and on Easter Sunday the attendance surpassed every school in the city. We have the largest Bible class in the city of Winnipeg. We asked a few weeks ago for $700—$550 connexional funds and $150 for interest. The response was $837.50. Not so bad in these days of stringency."

Joshua Johnston Writes Home.

Mr. Wm. J. Johnston, whose two sons, Joshua and Wilburn, are with the Canadian troops still at Shorncliffe, England, received a letter from them last week under date of April 21st. Joshua says: "We are well and expect to move from here shortly but do not know where to. This is a fine place in peace times, a summer resort. The weather is fine and the only thing we dislike is that we have to be in at 9.15 or get c. b., then we can't leave the barracks. The barracks is built on a hill I was looking out of the window yesterday and saw three submarines and a torpedo boat destroyer sailing around. From the town you can see the coast of France which is 21 miles away. The mail boat and the hospital boat come across every day and they can travel some, let me tell you. There are about 28 or 30 thousand Canadians across at the front. It is about 45 miles from here to the firing line and every time we move we get a little nearer."

Hand Poisoned While Spraying.

Mr. Hugh A. Young of Williamsburg, has been laid up some days with a case of blood poisoning. Last Friday he was assisting in spraying the orchard with lime sulphur and arsenate of lead and some of the arsenate of lead got into a crack in one of his fingers and by Sunday it had gone through his blood and settled mainly in his left arm from the hand to near the elbow. It is badly swollen and he is still unable to use it. Dr. Mulloy who is in attendance says it will be some time before it is better, although he thinks he got hold of it in time to prevent more serious consequences.

The Late Mary Ann Valley.

The subject of this memoir was born of Irish parentage in Williamstown, Glengarry County, Ontario, on January 16th, 1838. She was the daughter of Mr. John Kinsmill, who lingered until 1890, attaining the extraordinary age of almost one hundred years. On the occasion of her marriage with Mr. Joseph Valley, on February 24th, 1859, they settled in Williamstown, but shortly afterward removed to Vankleek Hill. About the year 1884 the family moved to Chesterville, where they have spent the intervening years.

Six children were born to the home, John Alexander and Mary Ann died in childhood.

The late Mrs. Valley has been an invalid, confined to her bed for some four years. She was the victim of a painful accident in her old age, a fracture of her hip bone. During these years of suffering and shadow, she bore her lot with patience. She won many friends by her kindness and words of good cheer. She was a Presbyterian in religion.

The messenger of death came to her relief on Saturday, May 8th, 1915. The funeral service was conducted at the home on the following Monday by the Rev. T. B. McCorkindale, pastor of the Presbyterian church, assisted by Rev. H. E. Warren, of the Methodist Church. She was laid to rest in the Maple Ridge Cemetery.

She is survived by four sons: Godfrey of St. Louis, Montana, Thomas, Robert and William, who have been the faithful support of the mother for many years in this vicinity, and one sister, Mrs. Henry G. Moorehouse of Detroit, Michigan, who was unable to attend the funeral on account of illness in her own family.

William Oliver Wert Dead.

The subject of this sketch, William Oliver Wert, was born on the 10th of Aug. 1836, and departed this life at the residence of his son, William John Wert, Cannamore, Ont., on the 7th of May, 1915. He was a man of stirling, christian character, a member of the Methodist church and held in high esteem for his faithfulness. For about two years he was confined to his bed but found sweet consolation from the visits of pastors and friends and from the Word of God. Shortly before his death his voice was heard in prayer and repeating familiar portions of the Scripture. His end was peace. On August the 11th, 1863, he married Elsie Jane Thompson, who died leaving two daughters, Lillis Amelia, afterwards Mrs. Silas A. Warner, and Dora Evelyn, now Mrs. Albert Wait In 1879 he married Melissa Adelaide Thompson, a sister of his former wife. They had one son William John Wert of Cannamore, at whose home he resided for the past six years, and where he died.

The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. D. D. Elliott on Sunday, May 9th, and the cortege left for interment at Northfield, on Monday morning, via the Ottawa and New York Railway.

The Pastor of Trinity Memorial Church

A Story of an Easter Sermon.

By EDITH V. ROSS.

The Rev. Edgar Tyndale, aged twenty-six, upon being graduated from the theological seminary had no difficulty in getting a church, though the salary even for so young a man was small. He had been marked during his seminary course for eminence in his career, for he had the faculty of speaking offhand, his voice was excellent, and his heart was in what he said.

But Mr. Tyndale's first effort was a failure. His congregation expected their pastor to tell them of wickedness generally, not particularly. He made the mistake of holding up to them those sins that beset them. The result was that a party was soon formed in the church to get rid of him. Hearing of it, he offered his resignation, and it was accepted.

The young clergyman, a bit discouraged in this first effort in his ministry to introduce a better Christianity into a congregation that considered itself beyond improvement, was thinking of turning his attention to a different element when he received the following note:

Rev. Edgar Tyndale:

Dear Sir—Your name having been suggested to me for the pastorate of Trinity church at Pennington, which I have recently built in memory of my deceased mother and which pastorate is in my gift, I wish to say that you are invited to prepare a sermon to be delivered in the church on the morning of Easter Sunday next. I will be there, and if I am satisfied to leave the church in your hands you will receive the appointment. The salary will be $2,000 a year. Should you desire further information I will be pleased to have you call at my house, No. 34 Eliot street, Pennington. Very truly yours,

ELIZABETH WINKLE.

Mr. Tyndale, after spending some time wondering what friend had suggested his name for the position, began to consider the proposition. He would call on the writer and learn whether he would be permitted to attempt to make the congregation better. If so, he would deliver the Easter sermon according to the invitation. If not, he would look elsewhere for a field.

He found Elizabeth Winkle a little old spinster, with a couple of short, white curls flanking a cheery face on each side. When asked who had suggested his name to her she said that she was familiar with his work in the church he had just left, that she was aware that he had been forced out on account of his having preached against individual instead of general sin and that she wanted just such a man for her memorial church. She had built it in the slums, and a pastor was required who would preach to sinners.

This accorded with Mr. Tyndale's wishes exactly, and he told Miss Winkle that he would be happy to preach a sermon in her church on Easter Sunday. He would, in the meantime, inform himself somewhat as to the needs of the congregation and make his remarks conform to those needs so far as he could. Before leaving he added:

"I have no desire to preach to those who are already as good as the world expects them to be. I have no especial interest in them nor have they in me."

"What is wanted in this case," replied the old lady, "is a sinner to preach to sinners."

Whether Mr. Tyndale considered that he filled the first part of this requirement he was quite pleased with its frankness. He went to Pennington, a manufacturing town, and found Trinity Memorial church in the center of the district taken up by laborers. He inquired as to the conditions of the people to whom he would be required to preach and the principal temptations by which they were beset. He visited a number of families and noted their physical as well as spiritual requirements.

Among those families that he visited he found some necessities—sickness and poverty—which, not having any income, he did not feel able to relieve and concluded to call again on Miss Winkle and report them. His card was responded to by a young lady about twenty years old, who informed him that her aunt was indisposed and had asked her to inquire if there was anything she could do for him. Mr. Tyndale gave an account of the misery he had witnessed, and the young lady withdrew, telling him that she would refer the matter to her aunt.

When she returned she was in street costume and told Mr. Tyndale that she would visit the sufferers and should be obliged to him if he would pilot her. She had called up a chauffeur, and they found a car at the door. On arriving at their destination the young lady entered upon an examination of what was required, made a note of everything, spoke words of comfort, left some money for an emergency with each family, re-entered the car and, with the clergyman, was driven away.

Stopping at stores, she ordered the requirements noted, telephoned a doctor to visit the families in whose homes there was sickness—in short, attended to everything in such methodical fashion that Mr. Tyndale was both surprised and delighted. They reached her home at noon, and she invited Mr. Tyndale to have luncheon with her, an invitation he accepted with alacrity.

"Your aunt," he said while they were seated at the table, "must be a woman of great practical generosity."

"Aunty has a very tender heart," was the reply. "Let me help you to some more of this dish. Our drive in the fresh air has doubtless made you hungry."

After luncheon the young lady lighted a fire on the hearth in a cozy sitting room and invited Mr. Tyndale to rest before departing. It seemed evident to him from her conversation that she was desirous of learning what manner of man he was, likely by order of her aunt, who she admitted intrusted her with the administration of many of her charities.

"Aunty is getting old," she said, "and can't get about as she once could, so you see that the brunt of the work falls on me."

"I presume," remarked Mr. Tyndale, "that she has made provision for these dispensations after her death?"

"Everything she has will go to charity."

Mr. Tyndale did not pursue the matter further, but was struck with the fact that she seemed quite satisfied that the old lady's fortune should go elsewhere than to herself.

Mr. Tyndale had received Miss Winkle's note the middle of March, and Easter Sunday that year fell on the 4th of April. Since he spoke extemporaneously, he did not even need to write a sermon and devoted all his time to visiting the people to whom he would preach, not only to study their needs, but to relieve them. He found many necessities of a practical kind, which he reported to Miss Winkle, and they were either relieved through him or her niece went with him to relieve them. It is questionable whether the beneficiaries were more pleased at these visits or the young clergyman who was instrumental in bringing them about, for he found charitable work in the company of a pretty girl very attractive. Then, too, the reporting of what was needed involved frequent visits to the donor, who in most cases sent her niece to receive the visitor and act in her stead.

By the time Easter Sunday came around the reverend gentleman had abundant material for an Easter sermon. In other words, the sermon had been growing up within him for a month and had only to be poured out, a message of comfort and encouragement to those who must work hard under the disadvantages of education for their living, and not only had the sermon been prepared by active work, but the congregation had been provided. Trinity Memorial church had not been well attended. Several clergymen had been tried with a view to drawing the working people living near it to worship there, but they had all failed. What was the cause of their failure does not concern this story. One thing is certain—Edgar Tyndale had endeared himself to hundreds of people by relieving their temporal wants. When it came to speak to them in church of their spiritual necessities they were ready and anxious to hear him.

Easter Sunday was one of those mellow days that come in April, when the contrast between the cold past and coming warmth is most apparent, when the sunshine is developing the buds, when the birds are flitting about gathering material for their nests. A throng of working people poured into the Memorial church, many in better clothes than they wore on week days, some confined by necessity to their soiled garments. Every seat was occupied, and persons were standing several rows deep in the rear of the church.

When Mr. Tyndale stepped into the pulpit he looked among the front pews for Miss Winkle. She was nowhere to be seen, but among those who were standing was her niece, who declined to take a seat so long as others needed to be provided.

The sermon was what might have been expected, a counterpart of what the speaker had done among the congregation during the past month. As he had then given bodily comfort he now gave spiritual comfort. He told them of what Easter was the promise—not the promise to the world generally, but to each one of them individually. Hundreds of faces, each denoting deep interest, were turned up to him and made him feel that what he gave was taken in the spirit in which he gave it.

It had been intimated to Mr. Tyndale that there was little or no doubt that he would receive the call as pastor of the church, irrespective of his sermon, because he had demonstrated that he was a worker. He was invited to dine at Miss Winkle's after church, and, joining Miss Winkle's niece at the door, he walked home with her. When dinner was served she apologized for her aunt's nonappearance on the usual ground. Mr. Tyndale and the niece dined alone. Mr. Tyndale found on his plate a notification that he was called to the pulpit of Trinity Memorial church with a salary of $3,000 a year.

"Will you express for me," he said to the lady sitting opposite him, "my thanks to Miss Winkle for the honor she has done me?"

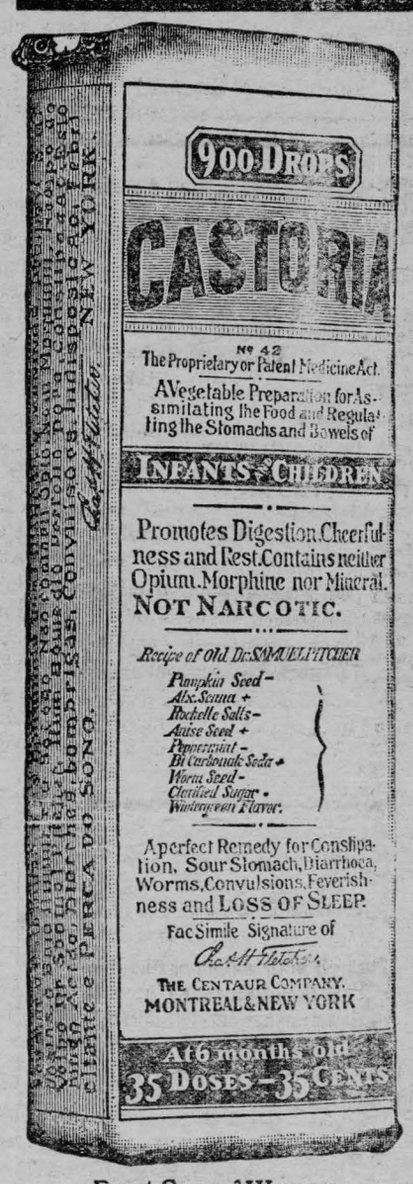

"You may express them to Miss Winkle direct if you like."

"When?"

"Now."

"Then I will go to her at once."

"There are two Elizabeth Winkles, my aunt and myself. Trinity church has been founded by me in memory of my mother. Miss Winkle senior has no property, except a small legacy left her by her brother, my father."

THE DRUMS OF WAR.

The Wonderful Effect of Martial Music on Fighting Men.

More brass bands and fife-and-drum corps are needed with the British armies at the front and popular subscriptions are being taken in England to equip and send them.

A good many of the fighting regiments are without bands and it has been noticed that they do not fight as well, do not march as well and are not as contented and cheerful in camp as the men of the regiments which have bands.

Earl Roberts said in a speech shortly before his death:

"I can speak from my own experience of what use a regimental band is to a regiment. I have seen men weary, worn out with fatigue, hot and smothered with dust, brighten up the moment they heard the tap of the drum, indicating that the band was going to play a lively quickstep. It has the greatest effect on the men in camp and in quarters."

One of the most delightful bits of verse ever written is Henry Newbolt's description of how a squadron of "weary big dragoons," whipped, retreating and discouraged, was drifting through a wrecked French town when one of the company found a child's toy drum and another found a penny tin whistle in the ruins of a toy shop. The one with the whistle struck up the Marseillaise, the one with the drum beat time to it. The straggling squadron halted, turned, reformed and, to the beating of the child's drum and the strains of the tin whistle, marched to victory.

Rudyard Kipling tells a story of a cholera camp in India, where the men were suffering badly. The regimental band started one night that queer, defiant tune, "The Lincolnshire Poacher." It was merely their regimental march, which the men had heard a thousand times. There was nothing in it except—except all England—all the seacoast—all the fun and daring and horseplay of young men bucketing about the big pastures by moonlight. But, as it was played very softly, at that bad time in that terrible camp of death, it was the one thing in the world which could have restored — which did restore—shaken men to pride, humor and self-control.

A New Palestine.

Through missionary channels there reach Canada from England reports that a definite understanding among the allies exists concerning Palestine in the event of the fall of the Turkish power, and concerning the mosque of St. Sophia in case Constantinople be taken. It is reported that British capitalists desire to network the Holy Land with rapid trolley lines, to develop horticulture, and to dot the country with good, moderate-rate hotels. A seaport is also to be developed. This done, it is held that all the world with journey thither.

It is further reported through these missionary channels that the British promoters are in thorough sympathy with the Zionist movement. It is reported that the conditions of the Jews in Poland is likely to be worse after the war, if Rusisa grants Polish autonomy, than it has been in the past. The Holy Land offers a refuge, since Jews are at home in Palestine.

Concerning St. Sophia, the same missionary reports say it is to become, if Constantinople fall, a cathedral of the Russian Church. It is declared on all hands that the famous mosque will not be permitted to remain in the hands of the Moslems.

Romance of Walking Sticks.

The general use of canes or walking sticks was at one time forbidden in Rome by imperial edict, except to persons of patrician rank, thus making it a privilege which came to be popular among the nobility, and eventually a distinction. The women of that time carried them also, their richly and artistically decorated canes serving as a rod for the punishment of their slaves.

The cane appeared in England as the badge of aristocracy in about the fifth century, but after serving this purpose for some time came into the hands of the humbler and was dropped by those of higher social standing. It was re-established in its true form by the pilgrims and soldiers returning from the Holy Land during the Crusades, and soon came into popularity again. With a revival of the cane among the gentry came a period of decoration, and canes of exquisite design and of great value resulted.

"Seedies" and "Krooмen."

There are many curious ratings in the navy. In the navy list there appear the payments to be made to "Seedies," "Tindals of Seedies," and "Krooмen," though not the slightest indication is given as to what kind of sailors these are.

Seedie boys are really negroes from the East Coast of Africa, while Krooman are negroes from the West Coast of Africa.

They are employed on these stations instead of our ordinary Jack Tars because they can work in the terrific heat of the sun, heat that would be extremely dangerous for any white man.

The "Tindal of Seedies" is the navy name for the negro petty officer. Tindal comes from a Malay word meaning chief.

WHY IT IS WRONG TO GAMBLE.

Gambling is not confined to any race or nation It is not the habit of any age or period. The ruins of the old world show that the practice is a very ancient one. The fashionable loungers of Rome killed time at the gambling tables. Fortunes were lo won on the skill of the popular g.. tors of the day. Slaves homes and estates changed hands as a result of the gambling mania.

The wandering desert tribes with crude instruments of their own making shared this habit and passed under its glamour.

Gambling reaches beyond the day when Abraham left Ur of the Chaldees. All nations that have left any history have "sat in and taken a hand at the game."

The British peoples have been gamblers to a greater or less extent—from the days of the dwellers in the mud huts by the rivers that ran through the English valleys to the sea, up to the present.

Gambling did not come to America with the white man. It was here when he arrived. The wood, plain and mountain Indians, all gambled for stakes—from their shirts out,—and in the—"fine old days free from the tyranny of legislative enactment," the original holders of this Continent gambled with a wonderful freedom and ease.

It is useful then to face this gambling problem and to grant at once that we are dealing with something of great age, of world wide practice and of infinite variety.

It has had, as a habit, practice, custom, some thousands of years of trial. It has been tried by this world as a whole. It is not racial but universal, and as a result of all this, the investigator has a right to ask: "Has the gambling business added anything to the world's wealth?"

Perhaps this is not high ground, but it is practicable; and a thing that has lasted like gambling, should have enough value in it to stand a commercial test.

Honesty is the foundation of our commercial life. Truthfulness is not one of life's adornments, it is the gold basis which makes life a business possibility. Temperance is not "such stuff as dreams are made of," but is a principle of life that has a vast commercial value in every factory, business house or farm.

Now, measured by the same standard of value, what has gambling done for the wealth of the world? Has it made any nation or people a real permanent contribution in the way of commercial prosperity?

Gambling has not in five thousand years given one stroke of help or one ounce of strength to the men and women who cleared the land and made farming possible. Gambling has not added one thread to the complex mass that makes up the clothing and adornment of our life. Gambling has not given one wheel to the factories of the world.

It is a rust producer. It is a breeder of weeds not wheat. It is a commercial parasite. It has no dynamo to give force and power to the mass of unfinished work of the world.

Therefore the great captains of commerce look with suspicion on this thing, the mechanic looks in vain for the wealth it has added to his store and the farmer puts his harvests in his barns and knows that they come as the result of work, good hard work of faith and patience hope and labor, and not one grain was added to his store by this world waste producer—gambling.

Gambling as it is carried on to-day is a practice that results in one of the parties engaged therein receiving and holding certain property or properties, valuables or articles that have commercial worth; the said holdings having been gathered, not by legal inheritance or toil, not by natural exchange or barter and sale or by any process whereby men give and take and receive compensation in kind or value.

Gambling gives nothing in exchange. It has its basis in a system that is first cousin to stealing. It is a child of mixed parentage conceived in dishonesty and bred in deceit.

Gambling takes and gives no honest thing in return. It is a contradiction of that great Commandment, "Thou shalt not steal." It is a creator of false values in the minds of those who practice it. The ancient landmarks of truth and honesty become obliterated in the vision of the gambler and gradually they pass out of sight, leaving a landscape from which has disappeared the honest solidities of life, a landscape of darkening mists and evil vapors.

Labour and toil, commercial worth and fair exchange are of the day. They walk in the light and by the light of the day they live and flourish. Gambling belongs to the half lights, to the darkness, to a widespread region where men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil.

Gambling is destructive of good clean sport. It is an evil thing that causes men to forget sport as a recreation or as an exercise or a thing of pleasure. Where crookedness is found in games or sport, in almost every case the root of it will be found in gambling.

Young people have a right to good clean games, to athletic contests and to the fine healthy rivalry that such contests produce. One of the finest passages in all Paul's writings is drawn from his knowledge of the famous games of his day, the contests for the fading crown, the winner of which was heralded as a national hero.

The tin horn gambler is a destructive force in every game. The amateur who gambles can never play his best game or run his best race. The men who control great professional games, such as baseball, are constantly at war with the gambler and all his works and ways.

The game is the thing, not the result but the contest, the exercise, the stress and strain: so has youth played and passed into strong, clean manhood: but gambling and the gambler know none of these things. Victory and the results that victory brings, this is the all in all, and to gambling spirit can be traced races that are thrown, games that are crooked, and the evil that comes to young people through the dreams of money easily won, without labour and without toil.

Let our young folk keep out in the open. Our land is a land for strong men and bright, sparkling girls; a land of winter sports and summer games, which give health and joy to all. Gambling is a baleful shadow. It is an evil thing. It is like a cancer that eats into the heart of pure games and clean sport. It is the ghost at the feast.

"Man shall not live by bread alone." Life is a serious business, both for old and young. We are not accidents of time or place, we come "from God who is our home." Human life carries with it supreme worth.

Life has two outlooks, one upward, where "we look at the things that are not seen; for the things that are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal."

The gambler is the moth flying about the thing that will destroy him. Gambling draws the whole life downward. It exalts the dying things of "Our earthly house of this tabernacle"—until to perverted hearts the things that are, "of good report" are forgotten, and the cheap tinsel things are magnified as life's true possessions.

Gambling is an enemy of the soul and is a camp follower in the devil's train of expert servants. Life has some right to serenity, to calm and quiet faith. Gambling is the prime minister in the kingdom of false excitement. It is a child of the long night, a creature of age-long darkness. By it men grow weaker and following its false lights are drawn down into slough of despair.

"Thou shalt not steal."

"Does your daughter play the piano by ear?"

"No," replied Mr. Cumrox, "she uses both hands and both feet. But I don't think she has learned to use her ears."

The Tragedy of the Lusitania.

The sinking of the great passenger ship Lusitania off the Irish coast by a German submarine was the result of no chance shot. It was a deliberate and carefully planned act of wholesale murder, intended to prove to the people of the United States that so long as the war continues it will be dangerous to travel to or from Europe on any ship of the British or French flag. Before the Lusitania sailed from New York the German Imperial Embassy to the United States caused an advertisement to be published announcing that a state of war existed between Germany and Great Britain and her Allies; that the zone of war includes the waters adjacent to the British Isles; that in accordance with notice given by the German Government vessels flying the flag of Great Britain are liable to destruction in those waters, and that travellers sailing in the war zone on ships of Great Britain or her Allies do so at their own risk. Passengers were also warned by people on the pier-head that the Lusitania would never finish her voyage. As the event proves, it had been determined by the Admiralty in Berlin to destroy the Lusitania. The warnings given out in New York were intended to break the force of indignation in the United States should the contemplated act of piracy result in the death of any considerable number of American citizens. The authorities at Washington could be told that in sailing upon a British ship after being warned not to do so citizens of the United States were taking their lives in their hands and placing themselves beyond the protection of their Government.

The great loss of life which accompanied the sinking of the Lusitania lies directly at the door of the pirates. They launched their torpedo without a moment's warning. Germany's biggest and fastest submarines must have been concentrated in the vicinity of the headlands of Cork for no other purpose than to intercept and destroy the big boat. Old Head, Kinsale, juts out a considerable distance to the south of the general coastline, and the Lusitania would be nearer land than at any other point in her progress along the Irish coast. Half a dozen submarines lying at intervals of a mile or more apart off shore would so intersect the line of the Lusitania's progress easterly that some one of them would be close enough to launb a torpdo as she passed. There was no possibility of giving warning under such conditions or of permitting the removal of passengers before sinking the ship. If wholesale murder was to be done at all it must be done secretly and by surprise.

The plans of the pirates were carried out successfully, and without a thought as to the fate of the 2,000 souls aboard the vessel.

Why Do Germans Discriminate ?

Why do the Germans sink boats carrying United States citizens and carefully avoid doing injury to those of Italy ?

Apparently, on the one hand, they want to keep Italy out of the struggle and on the other are trying to bring the United States in to it. All of which is making preparation for the day of reckoning which Germany knows is fast approaching.

Since the beginning of the war circumstances have changed considerably for Germany. Then the Germans had everything figured out to a nicety on the basis of easily overrunning France and then being in a position to dictate her own settlement. Now, the peace terms are likely to be dictated by the Allies and if Italy is one of them on settlement day it only means the more that will have to be given by Germany and Austria. If Italy can be kept out and the States brought into the affair then Germany will count on having a friend at the peace conference. The United States could want nothing from Germany and possibly would not be much of a factor in ending the struggle, but when the end did come, President Wilson, looking to succeed himself in the White House, with thousands of German votes to be swung his way, would appeal to the scheming Germans as a good one to be represented at the final adjustment when terms are being arranged.

If the sinking of the Lusitania and the drowning of a couple of hundred American citizens has not been enough to make the American government lift its hand instead of voice, in action against Germany, we may expect something else on a larger scale that will cause the citizens from one end of the country to the other to demand that immediate action be taken. Then the end of the war will be in sight and Germany will be ready to negotiate.

The Vital Spot.

"Fright, horror and panic swept over the New York Stock Exchange when the news of the sinking of the Lusitania was made public." Exactly ! There need not be much more said. A world of comment is carried in the few lines quoted above and events will only tell whether the United States will collect an indemnity for her citizens killed by the German pirates and accept an apology and let her exchanges run smoothly along while she "remembers the Lusitania."

"Who was that tough-looking chap I saw you with to-day, Hicks?"

"Be careful, Parker! That was my twin brother."

"By jove, old chap, forgive me! I ought to have known."

taken 7th of May, 1915. Other than mention his color, it is needless for me to say anything of his build and make up, as the above cut plainly shows that he is of the most rugged type, with good feet and legs, also very stylish and handsome, both in and out of harness, with a perfect disposition. He has abundance of natural ambition, which without, no horse is a desirable animal, and should to my mind be one of the main characteristic features for breeders to consider when using a sire, either light or heavy type. His sire is Sentinel Wilkes, he by George Wilkes by Hambletonian Ten. Neither is it necessary for me to waste space speaking of his breeding, other than what I have above mentioned, because it is a commonly recognized fact among horsemen, that the beerding of Sentinel Wilkes, George Wilkes and Hambletonian Ten is of the best Standard Bred Blood in the world.

Truly speaking, in offering a stallion for service to the public, the most essential thing to be considered is the individual horse that is offered. It's all very well indeed for stallion owners to get up large and extensive pedigrees for their horses, and to tell of the greatness of some of their ancestors. I would certainly do the same thing myself, had I not the individual animal to speak about. Hence, I shall proceed to describe to the readers of this article, the individual greatness of A NIGHT RIDER. It is this horse I offer for service to the breeders of this section, not some of his ancestors.

A Night Rider was bred on Piedmont Stock Farm, Huntsville, Alabama, U.S.A.. He has been owned by only two parties previous to my buyiug him. Following is his first owner's statement.

"I purchased A Night Rider at Piedmont Stock Farm, Huntsville, Alabama, when but seven months old. I paid $800 for him on account of his high breeding and natural speed inheritance. I kept him and when he was but three years old he travelled many miles for me over a half mile track in 2.15 and many halves in 1.04. I, as well as other horsemen, predicted at maturity he would be able to pace a mile in two minutes. Unfortunately, I worked him too strenuously and started him in a race, over a heavy half mile track, at the age of three years, where he took a one heat record of 2.24¼ and was timed separately in the same race in 2.16. He injured one of his tendons, due to overwork and had it not been for so doing, he would have certainly been a two minute horse, as he had the speed and gameness. I used him for service, and his colts are large and some of them showing remarkably well as to speed at the present time. When I owned him, he was commonly spoken of as being the most perfectly built and handsomest Standard Bred stallion in the entire country."

Present owner's note. As a matter of fact had it not been that A Night Ridger injured one of his tendons, which prevented him from being such a fast horse, I could never have owned him, because I would not have been able financially to have purchased him. Even with his injured tendon, during last season he paced a full mile over a half mile track in 2.11.

He will stand for service at Flynn's Hotel, Chesterville, continually throughout the season, except Monday of each week when he will be at Winchester Hotel during afternoon.

Terms of Service.—$20 for a standing foal or $15 to insure, payable in February 1916, if mares prove in foal. All mares at Owner's risk.

Night Rider is the goods. Come and see him.

The precious seed of weeping,
To-day we sow no more,
The form of one now sleeping
Whose pilgrimage is o'er.
Ah, death but safely lands her,
Where we too would attain;
Our Father's voice demands her,
And death to her is gain.

She has what we are wanting,
She sees what we believe;
The sins on earth so haunting,
Have there no power to grieve.
Safe in her Saviour's keeping,
Who sent her calm release.
It is only we are weeping,
She dwells in perfect peace.

The Crown of Life she weareth,
She beareth shining palm.
The holy, holy, shareth
And join the Angel's Psalm;
But we poor pilgrims wander,
Still through the land of woe,
Till we shall meet her yonder,
And all her joys shall know.

Canadians Sustain Western Traditions.

The Chicago Evening Post says:—

"Americans can appreciate the spirit shown by the Canadian troops in the fighting at Ypres. Western traditions were sustained by the initiative and daring of these neighbors across our northern frontier. According to the despatches, the situation in which the Canadians were placed by the German onslaught was such that, under the rules of military manoeuvres, they should have retreated and been wiped from the field as an effective factor. But the western spirit does not recognize rules. It has a way of charging when the proper thing to do would be to fall back, and it has a way of making its violation of propriety exceedingly embarassing to the enemy.

The Canadian line was facing north when the adjoining French line was driven in. The rush of the German wedge forced half of the Canadian front back, but instead of retreating as a whole it reformed at an angle with the other half and faced west against the flank of the German wedge. From this position it attacked with such effect that the sweep of the enemy's advance was checked and part of the ground regained.

Had it not been for the refusal of the Canadians to follow the rules of the game the Germans, in all probability, would have succeeded in throwing a ring around Ypres, hemming in the British forces defending the city.

This is the kind of fighting that American troops have made famous. It is the spirited headwork of men who have been taught to think for themselves rather than to leave all the thinking to the officers in high command. Battle plans may be mapped out with careful detail in advance, but no man is able to forsee the kaleidoscopic changes that come in actual conflict. At such times the resourcefulness of the petty officers and the rank and file may be the difference between defeat and victory."

(In forwarding the clipping the sender adds "At a time when our neighbors to the north are being called upon for such sacrifices in the present war we believe this expression of appreciation will be welcome. After all is said and done you of the Dominion and we of the States are all citizens of the same continent and have sympathies pretty much in common. We find ourselves feeling a very personal thrill when we read of the splendid performance of Canadian troops at the front.")

A Long Shot.

A western horseman tells of a jockey at Windsor, across the line from Detroit, who was recently indisposed. "If I don't get rid of this cold soon," saidthe youngster, "I'll be a dead one."

"Didn't you see Dr. Spinks as I told you?"—asked a friend.

"No; the sign on the door said '10 to 1,' and I wasn't going to monkey with a long shot like that."

Woman's World

State Senator Who Says She Is an Ordinary Home Woman.

SENATOR KATHRYN CLARKE.

To an interviewer State Senator Kathryn Clarke of Oregon said: "I was born at Gardnier, Douglas county, Ore—I usurp a woman's right of not telling the date—but I was the first white child ever baptized in the little town There being no local minister one was imported for the occasion, so you see I really got a very good start in the right direction. I have lived in Douglas county practically all my life. My home is in Glendale, southern Oregon

"From the position I now occupy one would think me a politician. Such is not the case. I am just an ordinary home woman, and when one quiet Sunday afternoon I was called to the phone and received the news that Governor West had seen fit to appoint me to fill the vacancy in the state senate no one could have been more surprised than I. When asked if I would accept I most emphatically said 'No,' but after consulting some friends and thinking it over could find no good reason why I shouldn't take this opportunity and break the ice for women to enter the senate even though I would perhaps not be able to do more than this After accepting the appointment the senators, having the privilege of sentencing me or otherwise, chose otherwise so it was necessary to hold a special election, and with three candidates in the field I was elected by a good majority. As this election took place on Jan. 20 and the legislature convened Jan. 11 I came into the august body just two weeks late This fact made it rather difficult, as I had never even visited the legislature and knew absolutely nothing of the details or workings of the body in any respect, but after a busy few days I began to see the light, and after four weeks am free to say there is nothing in lawmaking that any woman of ordinary intelect cannot easily comprehend and be able to vote intelligently upon; also that women are not the only talkers, and if the women as legislators talk more than our Oregon senators have at this session the future generation may not expect much lawmaking in our future legislatures."

He Saved the Day.

Dr. John P. Mahaffy, well known as the author of Old Greek Education, has been recently appointed as the new provost of Trinity College, Dublin. Among the many stories told of him is the following: He was once present at a reception where the Queen of Spain and the German Kaiser were the principal guests. The former, in answer to Dr. Mahaffy's question as to how she was progressing in the language of her new country, said that she liked it very much. "Your majesty will recall," remarked the scholar, "how Charles V. used to classify tongues: 'I speak Spanish to my God, Italian to my wife, French to my mistress and German to my servants and my dogs'." The Kaiser hearing the Queen laugh, came across the room to learn what caused her amusement. Dr. Mahaffy knew how to turn the dangerous corner: "I have known her majesty only for 10 minutes," he replied, "and already we have something to conceal."

Lord Kitchener's Little Ways.

Whenever Lord Kitchener is very excited and active he is nearly always chewing an unlighted cigarette and, curiously enough, whenever his whole energies are concentrated on anything, one of his eyes seems to turn in, while the other remains fixed and stationary. Another of his idiosyncrasies, when excited about anything, is that the more interested he gets the farther back he tilts his helmet. In South Africa you can rarely see a man's face in bright sunshine, because of the deep shadow cast from the helmet. So that whenever the soldiers in the Boer campaign saw Lord Kitchener's face well lighted by the sun, they could tell that he was anxious and excited such time as she or her maid can give them the required attention. Pictured here is a very simple but pretty boudoir cap of dotted net with an edging of val and ribbon rosettes.

Comfort For the Tourist.

For the tourist planning to go to the California exposition a very suitable parting gift is a utility case. These come in all sorts of practical designs. One of the most unusual is of Roman stripe ribbon outside. It folds over in half to be carried by a leather handle, so that it closely resembles a hand bag, as the silk is also bound around the edge with leather. Inside the case is lined and fitted with thin black rubber and contains pockets for every conceivable toilet utensil.

Of course shapes and covers vary with the price, but all are attractive. One case folds up quite small and contains only two pockets, one for a face cloth, the other for comb and toothbrush.

Thimble Party.

If you have a girl friend who is to be married and wish to entertain in her honor, why not give a thimble party? Take your card and write on it "Thursday from 3 to 5 (give date), in honor of Miss Browne. Thimbles."

After all have arrived you can produce towels on which an initial is to be embroidered, dish towels to be hemmed of cheesecloth from which to make dusters. In this way you make it a personal party for the honored guest, but avoid the "shower" part by your providing the gift.

The Visiting Card.

There is probably nothing half so baffling as the innocent bit of white cardboard called by common courtesy the personal visiting card. It is more often anything but a visiting card, having fallen into dubious uses as a means of sending regrets, apologies and introductions, or of representing the sender herself. It is so easy to send a card, much easier than going oneself or writing a note. It is just correct enough to let one out of a situation without criticism, but there is no surplus courtesy. A card, like charity, covereth a multitude of social sins.

But since cards are a necessary evil, or blessing, if you choose to call them so, it is well to know what is absolutely correct. There are variations in cards from season to season, as in stationery, but the conservative card does not change in essentials. It should be engraved, either in script or old English lettering and should bear only the name of the owner, the address, if desired and the day at home, if one follows such a custom. A married woman uses Mrs. and her husband's full name on her visiting card; if a widow, Mrs., her maiden Christian name and the surname of her deceased husband. An unmarried woman uses Miss and her Christian names written out, no initials. If she is the eldest member of her family, and there is no danger of confusion, she may use just the Miss and her surname. A husband and wife may have a joint card for use in sending gifts, regrets or announcing change of residence. Otherwise it is safer for a man and wife to use separate cards. Never make the mistake of using a business card for social purposes.

About Invitations.

Notes of invitations to dinners, dances, "at homes," garden parties, etc., are generally written in the third person and must be answered in similar style. Sometimes between intimate friends and for a small dinner party the note of invitation would be written in the first person and, of course, the reply would be worded accordingly. Luncheon invitations are, as a rule, sent by notes written in the first person.

Invitations to dinner or luncheon should always be replied to as soon as received, whether accepted or refused. It is usual to state a reason for refusal, such as indisposition, previous engagement, etc.

From five to ten days' notice is usually given when sending invitations for friendly dinner parties, but for a large dinner party quite three or four weeks' notice is given, so that time is thus allowed to ask others should any of the first invited guests refuse.

Guests arrive ten to fifteen minutes in advance of the actual dinner hour, and punctuality is most important.

Invitations to balls, dances and garden parties are issued on ordinary "at home" cards, the form of entertainment provided being written or printed in the left hand corner of the card "R. S. V. P." (meaning an answer is expected) does not appear so frequently on invitations as formerly, but when it does an answer should be sent as early as possible.

When You Go Visiting.

When on a visit to friends it is essential that you make yourself very agreeable and fall in with the ways of the house, so that you give no extra trouble to hostess or servants.

Visitors shake hands with the host and hostess morning and night and can do so with any other guests that may be staying at the house.

Always leave your bedroom as tidy as possible and so save the housemaid unnecessary work. Letters can be written in the bedroom, and if the hostess rests after lunch then visitors may retire to their own room or go for a walk, as they may prefer.

On the conclusion of a visit it is usual to "tip" the servant who has shown you any special attention. A lady would "tip" the housemaid a sum from $1 to $5, according to length of stay and attention given. A gentleman "tips" the manservant who valets him, the butler and also the coachman if he drives him from and to the station.

Fees are never given by guests to servants after any entertainment, not even after a private dinner given at a restaurant or hotel.

Chewing Gum.

Gum contests in public have gone out of fashion. No more unlovely habit can be formed, and it outrages all the canons of good form. Though at times gum chewing may be necessary or may be thought to be necessary as an assistant to good digestion, it is doubtful if it is ever anything more than a bad habit when done in public.

HAVE YOU BEEN SICK?

Then you realize the utter weakness that robs ambition, destroys appetite, and makes work a burden.

To restore that strength and stamina that is so essential, nothing has ever equaled or compared with Scott's Emulsion, because its strength-sustaining nourishment invigorates the blood to distribute energy throughout the body while its tonic value sharpens the appetite and restores health in a natural, permanent way.

If you are run down, tired, nervous, overworked or lack strength, get Scott's Emulsion to-day. At any drug store.

CANADIAN SURVIVORS TELL OF GHASTLY SCENES IN SEA AFTER LINER LUSITANIA WENT DOWN

London, May 16.—Survivors of the Lusitania disaster arrived at Euston station from Liverpool yesterday and today. I have talked to several of the Canadian survivors. The stories they tell are appalling and amazing.

A. R. Clarke, of Toronto, prominent manufacturer and president of the Riverdale Business Men's Association says: "I was sitting on the upper deck of the Lusitania on Friday afternoon, when there came the sound of a loud explosion and fragments and splinters flew all around. A great torrent of water forced up by the explosion poured over the deck of the ship, which instantly took a severe list. I started to go to my cabin, and had difficulty to get down the stairway owing to the angle. I returned to the upper deck. At first there were few people about, but the numbers steadily increased. Boats being got out.

"I stood back in the crowd, as everyone felt it was the rule of women and children first, so we did not push ourselves forward. As the list grew greater. I again tried to reach my cabin for a life belt. The cabin was utterly dark, and I felt that to remain there would be to be caught like a rat in a trap. The cabin door closed as I entered, and I could not open it owing to the acute angle of the ship, but I got out through the side door and mounted to the deck again.

"There were now very few about. A young fellow, lacing on a life belt, asked if I would have one. I took it, and as it was now almost impossible to stand upright, I suggested to my companion that we should take no more chances, but try for a boat moving forward.

"I was flung off my feet against the rail, and, glancing over, I saw two boats lowering, jammed together. Trying to get them free were two sailors in one and one in the other. Making a chance leap, I landed in the nearest boat. Our boat was still attached to the davits, and it was impossible to get free of the other boat trying to shove off from us. The four great funnels now hung at such an angle as though they would soon touch the sea.

"Then I was torn down in a whirlpool. I seemed to touch the very bottom of the ocean. I closed my eyes and some water, not much, got in my throat. Something was holding me across the chest, gripping and crushing me. Something else seemed to wrench me round and I was twisted and racked. All this time I was fully conscious. I remember hoping this would soon come to an end, suddenly what was holding me let go, and I rose rapidly to the surface.

The next thing I recall I was floating near a boat and two sailors were pulling me in. I suppose my boat was forced under the water when the Lusitania sank. I never saw the ship sink. When I sank she was there, when I arose she had gone.

"The sea was full of people. There were perhaps five or six boats around. Bodies floated by us and the corpse of a baby clung to the bottom of our boat. We could not touch it.

"A woman floated by with foam coming from her mouth. I put out my hand. As I touched her hair, she passed away. We remained in the sea some hours until the trawlers and torpedo boats came along and rescued us." Clarke shows many signs having passed through an unspeakable ordeal.

Charles Jeffrey can probably claim to be the last living man upon the Lusitania "When the ship was struck by the torpedo between the first and second funnels I soon saw it would be immpossible for me to get in the boats," he said. "They were all wanted for the women and children. Never have I known so many children as on this ship. The passengers from the Cameronia were put on board at New York for greater safety. At first after the explosion I, like most other first class passengers thought it impossible that the ship could sink.

"Some one passed round the word that officers had said it was all right and a slight cheer went up. Then I noticed the ship not only was listing but was steadily sinking at the bow. Some men were jumping overboard. No one was on the high up navigation deck at the stern, so I made for it and finally was sitting on the rail, on the portside. As the bow sank further and the water reached the boilers there was another loud explosion at the side of the ship near the fore funnels.

"I had intended remaining on the rail near the end until the ship was almost over then to slip along the rail into the sea after taking a deep breath. But the final lurch came quite sudden. Before I knew what had happened I found myself drawn in a maelstrom of foaming waters. I was sucked slightly down but I was soon up again. It is hard to describe the scene that followed. Nothing ever can happen to me again to equal its horrors. People were all around, struggling in the water clutching at arms and legs, anything there was. There was much debris around then. The waters grew clearer as though the whirl had sent the people in a concentric circle away.

"It is difficult to tell a connected story of what followed. Things come back to one in flashes. Sense of time disappeared. I saw a sealed can evidently an air-tight can from a lifeboat with a bit of planking attached. I made for it, grabbed it, but then two men floated up, clutching barrels. We joined up and we saw a collapsible canvas boat badly broken but floating slightly under the water. We got toward it and stood on it.

"There was a rope there and an old man and a boy drifted by, the man clinging to a plank, unable to swim, but holding up the boy, who was in a bad case. We got them in. Another man drifted along. He had a lifebelt.

"The corpse of a woman floated close to him and between us. We tried to throw him a rope. Every time the woman's corpse came between. We got t within a few inches of his fingers, but could not reach him. I feel badly over it. At first there had been cries and shouts. Everyone expected that rescuers would come within a few minutes. 'When will help arrive?' I heard women, floating on their backs, calling. Then the cries ceased. People on the water's surface seemed to grow fewer and fewer. How long this was I cannot tell.

"The weight of people was making our boat sink lower and lower. One man we rescued weighed, it seemed to us, 250 pounds. He was an enormous, paunchy man. He almost swamped us. We were now up to the waists in water. It grew colder and colder. We got now one and now another, keeping them by us with our rope, while they rested on bits of plank. Now corpses would drift by, often women with lifebelts on, killed by the explosion.

"The number of children in the sea was the most terrible and pathetic sight of all. The Lusitania sank at half-past two, and the accident was known at Queenston at three. It must have been past five before assistance arrived. At last a trawler picked us up. As I clambered on deck I pulled out my watch, it was still going. The time was ten past six. We reached Queenston about ten that night. My one desire when I got on the ship was for somethiug warm, something to drive out the cold which had entered my very marrows. Looking at myself since, I find I am bruised all over and my flesh is broken and torn in many parts, but when in the sea I felt nothing of this.

Mrs. Rose Lobden, 9 Fernwood Park avenue, Balmy beach, Toronto, who with her daughter Elsie was saved, said there were a hundred and sixty Canadians aboard and most of them have gone.

"All during the voyage we were all talking of submarines," she said. "It seemed that people could do nothing but discuss the possibility of attack. I had a presentiment that we would be struck.

"I couldn't sleep, night after night, but walked the decks thinking what must happen. On Friday immediately after our meal, I was on the promenade deck with my daughter. Looking over the deck I saw the periscope of a submarine not twenty yards away from the ship. A big explosion instantly followed. It was then ten past two. There was a scene of great confusion. Many boats failed to get off.

"A young spaniard, Vincente Egan, of Bilbao, showed great gallantry. He saw Elsie and myself into the last boat that left and then went back and brought other women and children. The scene as the ship sank was terrible. The whole surface of the water seemed to be covered with floating articles, particularly deck chairs, among which multitudes of struggling people fought for life. As the ship heeled over the funnels came almost atop of us brushing by me. We were caught in the whirls and wriggling finally got free.

"We were four and a half hours in the open sea. We rescued about twenty men and women and two children. The most moving case witnessed was that of Mrs. Adams, I believe the wife of a soldier. She had a two years old baby and she fell into the sea clasping it. She caught a steamer chair, put the baby atop and held it there, she floating by the side. She floated two hours before we came up. Then as we drew near we saw the baby already dead from drowning.

"We went to pull her into the boat. 'Let me bury my dead child first,' she whispered. She let the baby sink as we dragged her in."

Mrs. A. C. Luck, whose sons recently came over in the contingent, was among the saved. She was coming to England to be near her sons, who were awaiting her at Euston this morning. J. S and Miss Doris Charles, the Canadian publisher, is here and says all is now well with him.

King George's Military Powers.

What are the King's powers to which reference is being made in the present crisis? Legally, if not actually, they are very large. By his personal fiat the King could disband the army, sell any or all vessels in the navy, dismiss nearly all members of the Civil Service, declare war against any power, or make peace on his own initiative. By his signature all inmates of prisons could be released and fully pardoned. He could raise any man, woman, or child to the peerage, and dispose as he thought fit of his sovereignty over any colony or dominion within the Empire. All these things are the King's prerogatives. Last and greatest of them is that His Majesty can do no wrong.

A Crownless Coronation.

A coronation without a crown sounds distinctly Irish, yet such was in effect the ceremony in which Henry III. took the most prominent part at Gloucester on Oct. 28, 1216. On this occasion a plain circle was used instead of a crown, which had been lost with the jewels and other baggage of King John in passing the marshes of Lynn or the Wash near Wisbech.

HOW TO CURE A CHRONIC COUGH

Told in the Following Letter by a Jackson Man Who Knows from Experience. His Word Is Good.

Jackson, Miss.—"I am a carpenter, and the grippe left me not only with a chronic cough, but I was run-down, worn out and weak. I took all kinds of cough syrups but they did me no good. I finally got so weak I was not able to do a day's work, and coughed so much I was alarmed about my condition. One evening I read about Vinol and decided to try it. Before I had taken a quarter of a bottle I felt better, and after taking two bottles my cough is entirely cured, all the bad symptoms have disappeared and I have gained new vim and energy." —JOHN L. DENNIS, 711 Lynch Street, Jackson, Miss.

The reason Vinol is so successful in such cases is because the active medicinal principles of cod liver oil contained in Vinol rebuilds wasting tissues and supplies strength and vigor to the nerves and muscles while the tonic iron and wine assist the red corpuscles of the blood to absorb oxygen and distribute it through the system, thus restoring health and strength to the weakened, diseased organs of the body.

If Vinol fails to help you, we return your money.

The Control of Locusts, or Grasshoppers.

The Entomological Branch of the Department of Agriculture has just issued Circular No. 5, on "The Control of Locusts in Eastern Canada," which has been prepared by Mr. Arthur Gibson, Chief Assistant Entomologist. This circular has been written specially to help farmers and others living in districts where these destructive insects have caused very serious losses in recent years in various kinds of crops, such as oats, barley, timothy, rye, wheat, etc. In certain localities these insects known commonly as grasshoppers have appeared in such enormous numbers that they have been the cause of farmers vacating their farms. In 1914, the Entomological Branch conducted important experiments in the control of locusts with mixtures of bran, Paris green, molasses, lemons, etc., and the results of this work are given in the Circular, as well as the cost of application, etc. In Quebec province where fields were treated with this new poisoned bran mixture as many as 1200 dead locusts were counted in one square yard. Brief notes on the life-history of locusts, and on the four destructive species which occur in Eastern Canada precede the discussion on the methods of control. The circular has five splendid illustrations. As it is free for the asking, farmers and others interested should apply for copies to the chief of the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. Enquiries regarding these and other insect pests should be addressed to the Dominion Entomologist, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

A big flag staff 216 feet long has been made ready for shipment to England as a present from the Government of British Columbia. The big stick is the most perfect specimen of a tree in existence for from end to end it is absolutely without a flaw. When it was cut on the timber limits in British Columbia it was 236 feet long, but 20 feet was cut off owing to a flaw being detected. Since the workmen have finished dressing it into shape the stick now is 32 inches in diameter at the base for a distance of 16 feet. For the next 100 feet it has an octagonal shape and for the last 100 feet it is perfectly round The upper 200 feet is a gentle taper from 32 inches to 12 inches.

British Columbia Mob Seeks Revenge.

Victoria, B. C., May 10.—Victoria is under martial law to-day as the result of renewed attacks upon German establishments by mobs bent on revenge for the sinking of the Lusitania. After a mob of several thousand men and boys smashed windows yesterday evening in the Phoenix Brewery, New England Hotel, Kilberger's jewelery store, Hermann's cleaning establishment and Geiger's plumbing shop, the Mayor read the Riot Act at a down town street corner, and 800 soldiers began policing the city. A detachment of troops is expected to-day from Vancouver to reinforce the local garrison, as further trouble is feared.

The Phoenix Brewery was virtually wrecked, the mob doing its work before the soldiers reached the scene. So far as known, no one has been injnred.

A guard was reported to have been placed around Government House to prevent any disorderly scenes there, due to the fact that Mrs. Barnard, wife of the Lieut.-Governor, is the daughter of a German.

German Is Beaten Up For Cheering At News.

New York, May 7.—The next time Henry Schultz does any cheering, he will do it at home. Schultz was standing in front of a Park Row bulletin-board to-day when the news of the torpedoing of the Lusitania was posted.

With a wild "Hoch," he threw his hat in the air, and indulged in the German version of an Indian war dance.

A bystander caught the hat and began tearing it up. Another halted Schultz's gyrations with a straight left to the jaw. Schultz dropped, and about ten others forgot all about their neutrality and began kicking him in the face and ribs. Three policemen interfered. They wanted to send Schultz to a hospital, but he wouldn't have it. Hatless, he limped away, a sadder and more neutral man.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.
