LIONS CLUB SPEAKING CONTEST IS PRONOUNCED SUCCESS

The public speaking contest held under the sponsorship of the Morrisburg Lions Club at the Morrisburg High School on Thursday evening of last week was a pronounced success. The quality of the material and the excellence of the presentation by the youthful speakers more than pleased the large audience. An excellent mus ical program, including community singing, added pleasing variety to the enjoyment of the evening

The winners of this contest, besides winning a cash prize, donated by the Lions Club, will now represent Morrisburg at the Zone Finals in Iroquois on April 25th, against the finalists from such communities as Iroquois, Smith Fals, Russell, Renfrew and Arnprior.

The winners of the Zone Contest will compete at the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto for the Grand Priize this summer. A smaller cash prize was also given to the runner-up in each contest. The winner of the girls' division was Rhea Dell Wert, the runner-up Edith Mattice. The winner of the boys' section was Jerry Dafoe, the runner-up Dwight Morrow.

This is the first such contest sponsored by the Lions Club in Morrisburg. They hope to be able to sponsor many more in future years. J.C. Schultz, as Chairman of Public Speaking, and Frank Desjarlais, as Chairman of the Musical Program, are to be commended for their handling of the program and the judges, Miss Marion Coligan, R. H. Armstrong, and Rev. F. L. Howald, for their fine adjudicating.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor—As the property owners of Morrisburg are all aware of the new public school now under construction at a cost of $303,000 and this was carried out with a vote of the property owners conosent to build this school, which is more for a city and not a village like Morrisburg Other villages, towns and cities voted on the building of their new schools. But Morrisburg School Board does as they like it seems so anyway. And some members on the school board are not property owners netiher, but are only tenants. Some new equipment is being needed for this school such as chairs, etc. As I understand the chairs 400 in all have been ordered by the school board although all the members were not present at this meeting. These chairs should have been advertised by tender but were not and have been ordered by the property committee of 3 members of the board at a cost of $5.50 for each chair. I for one could of furnished these chairs for the sum of $5.00 each, a saving of 50c on each chair, a saving of $200.00 on the 400 chairs. Does it look as if the school board was trying to save the tax payer money her in Morrisburg. I am a large tax payer and its about time the brakes should be applied as to the spending of the tax payers money careless. Is it any wonder our taxes are oout rageous. Why is this allowed to go on? Let's get action now. Why doesn't each member of the board know when there is a meeting called?

A. M. JARVIS.

DUKE OF EDINBURGH PICTURE IN FULL COLOUR

A beautiful four colour picture of the Duke of Edinburgh, the Prince Consort of Queen Elizabeth II is the cover of the current issue of the Star Weekly. Don Iddon, a newspaperman who knows Philip and his friends well, tells the intimate story of the Duke of Edinburgh in this issue.

"The frog says it's spring" writes Hugh M. Halliday, the Star Weekly's writer on nature topics. The pond has a strange lure for Hallidiay, who describes the various singers which make up the frog chorus, in the current copy of The Star Weekly.

THE RED CROSS DRIVE

With about half of the canvassers reporting up to Thursday afternoon, we have 50 percent of our quota. To be heard from yet is Williamsburg village and Township and we have every confidence that they will do their part. Riverside is not yet complete, but up to now they have done very well. Our own town with only about half the canvassers reporting, will do fairly well, but to those who have not yet contributed, be ready these last few days of the drive and GIVE FROM THE HEART!

MANY ATTEND FUNERAL OF WILLIAMSBURG CHILD

With school chums as pall bearers, the funeral services were held on Saturday afternoon, from her home to Williamsburg United Church, for little Gloria Louise Watson, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Basil Watson of Williamsburg, in her seventh year.

The little girl possessed a sweet disposition, always bright and happy, and a deep sorrow was felt when it was known that so bright and promising a life had ended.

She was taken ill about three months ago, and taken to the Cornwall General Hospital, where she was a patient for two weeks; later she received further treatments at tre hospital and at her home, and every effort was made to save her life, but to no avail. She passed away at her home on Wednesday, March 19th. Four days befor eher death she was taken for a car drive, which she seemed to enjoy.

Born at her home seven years ago, on February 2nd, 1945, she was the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Basil Watson (nee Marjorie Helen Algire) and before her illness, attended school for 2 years at S. S. No. 14, Williamsburg, where she was in Grade 2.

Surviving are her mother and father, one sister Fayye, aged 6 years and one brother, Raye, 3 years.

Final tribute to the memory of little Gloria was paid on Saturday by many relatives and friends attending her funeral, where the service was conducted by the minister, Rev. George Dunlop. His message was from parts of John, Chapter 16, Verses 17-18, and was full of hope and comfort. During the service, Mrs. Lorne Hogaboam, on request, sang "The Old Rugged Cross"; "Away in a Manger", Gloria's favorite hymn, and "God Sees the Little Sparrow Fall", were sung by the congregation and choir. The 23rd Psalm was also read by the minister.

The pall bearers were all Gloria's little schoolmates, Ralph and Gerald Barkley, Keith and Paul Beckstead, Carman Phifer and Lyle Couglar. The rest of her school mates followed the mourners into the church.

The remains are resting ini Williamsburg Vault awaiting burial in the spring.

Among the beautiful floral offerings of cut flowers, wreaths, sprays, was a pillow from Mother, father, sister and brother. Among friends from a distance at the funeral and sending flowers were. Mr. and Mrs. George Wingard, Mr. and Mrs. Basil Casselman, Mrs. Clara Williams, of Hainsville; Mr. and Mrs. Roy Barkley, Inkerman; Mr. and Mrs. Rallpr Murdock, rockville; Mr. and Mrs. G. AROUND JOGGING

By the Editor

Attention is drawn to the supplement accompanying the Business Review for March by the Bank of Montreal. On one page this little supplement presents the most significant figures relating to the development of the country's economy since prewar days. One interesting item in the supplement shows the new investments in Canada as 4,641 million dollors in construction and equipment with a further 1.707 millions shown as additions to inventories. This is an encouraging sign of the faith of outsidie investors in Canadian projects, and augurs well for the future of our country. Additional copies of this supplement, which contains in condensed form, much information of interest to all Canadians, may be obtained at any branch of the Bank of Montreal.

The following quotation, from Abraham Lincoln, is as apt today as on the day it was uttered: "If I were to try to read, much less answer, all the attacks made on me, this shop might as well be closed for any other business. I do the very best I know how—the very best I can—and I mean to keep on doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me won't amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, ten angels swearing I was right, would make no difference."

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

by Gwendoline P. Clarke

How wrong can one be? To my way of reasoning everything points to an early spring. In fact we seem to be halfway there already . . . only a few patches of snow here and there; plenty of mud, days lengthening, crows flying and skunks on the prowl. It is too early yet to even guess as to how the wheat and clover have survived the winter. A lot can happen to the fields—and the weather—during the next few weeks. It is an anxious time for farmers. As far as the weather is concerned, what time isn't, for that matter?

Another sign of spring is the increased number of auction sales in the country. One farmer selling out, another taking over . . . although it isn't always a farmer who takes over — sometimes the new owner is one who just hopes to be a farmer. And everyone in the district waits and watches for developments. Judging by past history in a little while the new owner will reveal by his actions whether he is a practical or a theoretical farmer. The practical farmer takes his time in stocking a farm and buying implements—he doesn't try to get everything at once. The inexperienced man, who has probably spent months studying farming from books, can give you the last word on modern methods in dealing with cattle and fertilizers, and the most efficient way of handling pastures, grain and hay crops. Sometimes this type of farmer, after a period of trial and error, makes good. In other cases he decides to cut his losses, figuring that if he is going tc lose money there are less laborious ways of doing it than by farming. So there is another auction sale. By which time our theoretical farmer has developed a certain amount of respect for his farmer-neighbours, who succeeded where he had falied.

Fortunately for agriculture as a whole, some of these book-farmers in the past had the right idea in long-range planning, but they did not last long enough to see the results—either they were too impatient or they could not afford to wait. So if a practical farmer is the next owner of the farm he benefits from his predecessor's expensive experimenting by finding that some of his fields have a good stand of permanent pasture. To the dairy farmer permanent pasture is money in the bank.

Another sign of approaching spring is tired, aching feet. You hear the same complaint everywhere. "I don't know what to do with my feet—they burn and ache all the time." Well, don't blame your feet, blame the weather. For the last few months there has been a covering of snow on the ground which acted as a sort of shock absorber for your feet. Now the shock absorber is gone. The weather is also milder. Rubber boots and overshoes are too hot for comfort, but yet, in the country, you definitely can't do without them. So for the present it is a case of what can't be cured must be endured. However, any kind of good skin cream applied generously to the soles of the feet night and morning will relieve the burning quite a bit. It also helps overtired "dogs" after a spot of housecleaning.

And speaking of remedies . . . I wonder how many people keep tannic-acid jelly in the house. If you don't you should—it acts like magic for burns or scalds. And I should know! One morning last week Bob left the toaster burning. An hour later I grabbed it by the metal part. The thumb and fingers of my right hand was badly burnt. While dancing with pain I danced towards the medicine cupboard, got out a tube of tannic-acid jelly and spread it thickly over the blistered area. The pain was quickly relieved but every time it started up again I put on more jelly. The blisters disappeared leaving patches of hard, dry skin which will eventually peel off. By mid-afternoon that day I was able to use my hand without too much discomfort—and without bandages, which was another distinct advantage since I had a lot of typing to do.

Had I not used the jelly I am sure a very painful hand would have resulted, with tiresome bandages adding to the misery.

It is a far cry to days of sunburn but if you buy a tube of jelly now it will do for present needs and be ready for the days when Old Sol makes life unpleasant by frying your skin like a piece of crisp bacon. And, of course, as you can readily understand, tannic-acid jelly is wonderful for children, because of its soothing qualities.

A Time To Come Back To

To appreciate March completely one should go away for a time; away to a hospital, say, where neither wind nor weather, sunrise nor moonset, can really penetrate. Then come back to March, and even its temperamental gusts, its snow and sleet and slush and rain are full of wonder. March has a brand new savor. Its gray skies are pussy-willow gray, not leaden; its blue skies are fresh-water blue. Its chickadee song is as gay, if not quite as loud, as that of a May robin. The chuckle of March melt trickling down the hillsides and swelling the brooks is the laughter of spring just offstage.

To see daffodils thrusting blunt green fingers from the soil is to see March actually growing and greening. Snowdrops always come to blossom about now, but to come back and see them in blossom is to see, suddenly, a lovely facet of the big miracle that stirs the earth and opens petals to the sun. Besides a certain wall hyacinths are coming up, and a few squills are in bloom. No crocuses in sight, but some evening soon the slim sheaths will be seen, and the next day there will be deep chalices of gold and purple. Forsythia buds are fat. Days grow longer, and the tides of sunlight slowly undermine the dam that holds back the flood of spring.

These things you see and feel. And you feel the indefinable pulse of March, a slowly rising beat that touches the hillside and the woodland and sitrs at the root of things. it is like feeling your own pulse again, your own growing strength; and you know that March, no matter what its day-to-day temperament, is a good time to know again, a good time to be alive.

How To Make Your Cake Frostings Better

Something new has been added to the culinary world in past years in the form of cake mixes, and now we find the cook's ability may be judged on frostings alone.

Perfection in frosting means absolute smoothness in texture, good flavour and a creamy interior. Frostings can be fluffed up in ripples or grooved but the texture must feel smooth without and sugar crystals, when you bite into it.

Cake should have a smooth surface and be cold before you frost it.

To achieve a smooth surface, you can grease the pan lightly and give it a dusting of flour or line with heavy wax paper. Heavy paper rubbed with oil also can be used.

Cake even slightly warm may cause the frosting to slip or soften next to the cake. If it softens, a watery streak will appear on the cake when you cut it.

Frosting must be cool enough to work with, yet be sufficiently firm so that it will not run or soak into the cake. If it is too cold, especially cooked frosting, it will stiffen up before you have a chance to cover the cake.

Frost sides of cake before top, it is much easier. Decide how you want it to look before you start and then proceed with quick, smooth strokes. Frostings which carry the marks of spatula or back of spoon are more interesting than those with a glossy, solid appearance.

For white frostings, many choose either the old type of boiled frosting of the now famous seven-minute frosting.

Here are tricks to help your boiled frosting score better:

Have eggs at room temperature before breaking.

Beat egg whites until they are just stiff enough to form peaks when you pull the beater through them.

Stir sugar and water only until the sugar is dissolved. For quick cooking, use a pan that covers your burner and has sides high enough to permit the syrup to come to a full rolling boil.

Cook your syrup until it forms a long, thin thread when a few drops are poured from the tip of a spoon. If using a candy thermometer, cook until the syrup registers 240 degrees F.

When pouring syrup into whipped egg whites, add a small amount at a time and beat constantly.

If syrup has been cooked perfectly, you will have to beat the frosting at least 10 minutes before it reaches the spreadable stage.

To cook the frosting quickly, keep the water in the double boiler at a vigorous boil.

Frosting is ready to spread when it begins to form swirls and ridges in the pan.

For cooked chocolate frostings, be sure that the chocolate is completely dissolved and that you cook to the correct stage.

Frostings of this type are beaten until they start to lose their gloss.

If the frosting doesn't thicken after beating it for a long period, set the bowl in a pan of hot water and place over a very low flame. Then heat the frosting until you feel a light scraping on sides of bowl.

Flavoring should be added when the frosting has become lukewarm so that it will retain the flavour.

If your frosting starts to thicken before you have finished spreading it on the cake, dip your knife in and out of boiling water. A few drops of lemon juice or hot water added to the frosting also will retard thickening.

Safe Opened With A Tuning Fork

Lots of people who own safes with combination locks often set the combination numbers to correspond with family birthdays or telephone numbers. That's a great mistake, according to a safe-making company official. "An expert safe-breaker can easily use his intuition to break the combination," he warned.

Safe-breakers were never more ingenious than they are to-day, but to offset this safe combinations have become more tricky, and many modern safes are fitted with cunning devices to sound an alarm.

Some years ago a New York bank ordered a safe which took two years to build. The bank directors hit on a novel way of testing it. They asked the police chief to produce the cleverest safe-breaker in the city to whom they offered ten thousand dollars if he could open the safe. In less than five minutes he had succeeded—with a piece of wire!

In Britain, an electrician devised a safe that opened to the vibrations of a tuning-fork! And in another safe, said to be burglar-proof, was placed a tiny glass bottle containing liquid gas which stupefied but did not kill. A rise in temperature (caused by the safe-breaker's oxy-acetylene torch) caused it to break and set the fumes free.

Said an Irish M.P.: "If we don't make these goods nobody will buy them, and we shall have them left on our hands."

ANNE HIRST
Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hirst: Six months ago, when we were both 16, we got married. I'd only known my husband for a short while, and though I loved him I begged him to wait. He refused, said he was too anxious to have me.

"Now he's just as anxious to be rid of me!

"He says it's all my fault. He says he hates me because I nag, and want to know where he's going every time he leaves the house. And I talk too much when he's home.

"This is all true. I did behave that way. Not because I was jealous, but because I wanted to be with him, and only him, all the time. And there was always so much to tell him!

"I have learned my lesson, and I'd be different now. But he won't give me another chance. He says I've got to go, and take care of myself. What am I to do?

"Lonely and Afraid."

GROWING PAINS

* Your marriage is suffering the growing pains that inevitably attack a union between two people so very young.

* You, thrilled with love and enthusiasm, cannot bear your husband out of your sight. Wherever he goes, your thoughts are with him, so you can picture where he is and when he's coming back. When you're together, you bubble over with childish chatter. But now he is a husband instead of a fiance, and it bores him.

* So he escapes, perhaps down to the corner to see the boys. Innocent enough, he argues, so why should he have to say where he's going? If he were older, he would realize that he should tell you, to stop your worrying.

* You say you've learned your lesson. All you want is the chance to prove it. He owes you that, certainly. No husband has the right to tell his wife to leave, when he is responsible for her welfare.

* I suggest that you stay where you are. Try to find a position, or train yourself for one, if only to widen your horizon and be a more interesting companion. Tell him so, and add that you expect his cooperation.

* Begin inviting mutual friends in for an evening, and return their visits. Get back into the group you two enjoyed before you married. Then your husband will realize that he and you are not separate entities, but a social unit that can find pleasure in living a well-balanced life together.

* No wife (and no husband) can entirely absorb the other's individuality. Each has other facets of personality to cultivate. As they do, they mature normally, their characters develop, and they become even more necessary and important to each other. So they avoid the boredom that saps the spirit of so many marriages. * * *

People who marry too young have hard going. They can no longer have separate lives, but must live for each other, and together establish a home fit for children to grow up in . . . Men sure go for a MAGIC cake

COCONUT FUDGE CHIFFON CAKE

Mix and sift into a bowl, 1 c. plus 2 tbs. once-sifted cake flour, 1½ tsps. Magic Baking Powder, ½ tsp. salt, ⅞ c. fine granulated sugar; mix in ½ c. desiccated coconut. Make a well in the dry ingredients and add in the order given (do not stir mixture), ¼ c. corn (salad) oil, 2 unbeaten egg yolks, ¼ c. plus 2 tbs. water, 1 tsp. vanilla, 2½ ounces unsweetened chocolate, melted and cooled. Stir the liquids to intermingle, then stir in the dry ingredients; beat until batter is smooth. Measure into a large bowl ½ c. egg whites (at room temperature) and sprinkle with ¼ tsp. cream of tartar; beat until the egg whites are very very stiff—much stiffer than for meringues, angel cakes, etc. Add flour mixture, about a quarter at a time, and fold after each addition until batter and egg whites are thoroughly combined. Turn batter into an ungreased 8" angel cake pan; bake in a rather slow oven, 325°, about 1 hour. Immediately cake comes from oven, invert pan and suspend cake until cold.

Eat Your Hat —And Like It

If you've ever said you'll eat your hat, watch out. You may soon be doing it; for wool waste from factories and old woollen clothes can now be turned into food for human beings and cattle. Looking like a coarsely-ground cereal, it's actually ready for use as a breakfast cereal or a relish.

Containing all the amino acids—the nutritive elements necessary for human growth—it has a piquant flavour. And since it speeds up the growth of fur, feathers or hair in animals, it may even prove a tonic food for baldness.

Botanein-P, indeed, is probably the first step in converting old felt into foodstuffs. Hats that have passed out of fashion may be served up chic and appetizing. Wool waste from the Bradford sewers is already selling sweet and clean as cosmetic cream and skin foods. Queerer food transformations are reported to-day from all parts of the world.

The bark of the giant sequoia or redwood tree, for instance, has been found rich in amino acid, which, in its turn, builds valuable protein. At a laboratory in Philadelphia, sequoia sawdust waste, dissolved in acid, is washed over a synthetic resin which traps the aminos . . . ready for turning into food. It's a case where the bark proves no worse than the bite. Two scientific investigators, Drs. W. C. Rose and L. E. Holt, discovered that rats would thrive and grow when amino acids were the sole source of protein in their diet . . . and now every waste product is being critically examined for aminos.

When you eat your Sunday roast, for example, your digestive processes break down the protein into the constituent amino acids; and scientists foresee a build-up for food the other way round. Nobel Prize Winner Harold Lundgren has spun a fine thread, strong as silk or nylon, from egg white. One egg can yield as much thread as one hundred hardworking silkworms in a season.

When eggs glut the world again your stockings may thus provide a useful snack!

"Would you explain that 'For better or worse' clause?"

We read that the Institution of Chemical Engineers are holding a "Conference on Mixing and Agitation in Liquid Media." Is this scientific jargon for a Cocktail Party?

TABLE TALKS

by Jane Andrews

There are few persons better equipped to talk with authority about food than Miss Jessie Alice Cline. She is the holder of several degrees in household economics; she has lectured all over this continent on meat selection and meat cookery; and has written literally hundreds of art cles, brochures and books on the same subjects.

"The most important thing about cooking meat is to cook it at low temperatures—300° F. for roasts and 350° F. for steaks and chops," Miss Cline maintains. "This method saves shrinkage. Meat is more tender and juicier and there is more of it when cooked this way."

Slowly cooked meat always browns, and there is less cleaning up afterwards because there isn't any splatter—therefore there are fewer dishes to wash, she said. Here is her recipe for the hamburgers she serves at the Inglenook—"75-cent hamburgers in a 25-cent hamburger town— and they go like hot cakes," she said.

HAMBURGERS

1 pound ground meat
1 cup milk
1 small onion, chopped
1 teaspoon salt
1/8 teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

Mix all together in a bowl. Bake, broil or fry—but do it slowly.

A pie that she describes as "really good," is her Dixie Pecan Pie.

DIXIE PECAN PIE

3 eggs
2 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons flour
2 cups dark corn syrup
1 teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup whole pecan meats
1 unbaked pie crust

Line pie pan with dough and crimp edges. Pour in this filling: Beat eggs until light. Mix sugar and flour and add to eggs and beat well. Add syrup, vanilla, salt and pecans. Mix well. Bake at 375° F. 45-50 minutes.

Miss Cline says that leftovers can always be made attractive by combining meat with several bright colored vegetables—then you can serve them as stew, pie, a casserole, with dumplings, or any way your fancy leads you. Here is her recipe for meat stew or pie.

OLD-FASHIONED BEEF STEW OR MEAT PIE

2 pounds beef neck or shank (or that amount of leftover meat).
2 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons lard
6 small onions
6 carrots
1 pound frozen (or one No. 2 can) peas
3 teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon pepper

Have beef cut in 1 to 2-inch cubes. Dredge with flour and brown in hot lard. Season with salt and pepper, cover with hot water, cover kettle tightly and simmer until tender—two or three hours. One hour before serving, add whole onions and carrots. Boil frozen peas in separate pan. Fifteen minutes before serving, remove meat and place on a hot platter with vegetables around it. Place peas on top. Make gravy by thickening the liquid with flour smoothed in cold water. Add seasoning if needed. Serve gravy from gravy boat. This stew can be served individually by placing portions of the meat and vegetables on steamed cabbage leaves. For a pie, place meat and vegetables in casserole pouring gravy over it and covering with pastry.

An easy, plain cake and an easy chocolate icing which are "excellent," were described by Miss Cline.

EASY WAY - EVERY DAY CAKE

3 cups cake flour, sifted
½ cup (¼ pound) lard
1½ cups sugar
3 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
1 to 2 teaspoons flavoring
3 eggs, separated

Place lard and ½ cup flour in mixing bowl and cream together until light and fluffy. Sift together remaining 2½ cups flour, 1 cup of the sugar, salt and baking powder. Add these to creamed mixture with 1/3 cup of milk. Beat smooth and light. Add remaining milk in 2 portions, adding vanilla (or other flavoring) with last portion. Beat smooth after each addition. Add egg yolks, one at a time, and beat smooth after each addition. Make a meringue of the egg whites and the remaining ½ cup sugar. Fold into batter. Bake in three 9-inch layer pans lined with waxed paper, 35 minutes at 365° F. Ice, when cool, with the following icing.

EASY CHOCOLATE ICING

1 pound confectioners' sugar
1 egg
¼ cup soft butter
1 teaspoon vanilla
3 squares chocolate or ¾ cup cocoa
¼ cup (or more) milk

Put all ingredients except milk in mixing bowl and beat together. Add milk gradually until right consistency to spread. The mixture should stand in peaks.

Cortisone Cures One Form of Baldness

Drs. Stephen Rothman and Calvin J. Dillaha, two dermatologists of the University of Chicago, present preliminary findings of patients treated with cortisone for forms of baldness technically called alopecia areata and alopecia totalis These are not to be confused with the ordinary baldness or thinning of the hair that overtakes most men in middle age. Alopecia areata is a kind of baldness that attacks both sexes with about equal frequency. It may appear in childhood as well. The hair on the scalp may fall out in patches, or from the entire body. Some cases are cured spontaneously, especially if the first attack does not occur before the age of 11 or 12, but relapses are frequent.

Earlier observations by Rothman and Dr. Sheldon Walker indicated that the course of the disease may be influenced by the action of the body hormones. Following up this clue, Rothman and Dillaha tried cortisone. The first results were disappointing. Not until treatment had been continued over a period of four weeks did hair start to grow again on three out of four patients. The cortisone was administered in the form of tablets. Now Rothman and Dillaha are trying to establish the minimum dosage needed to start and maintain growth of hair.

LAUGHING HE COULDN'T HELP MADE HIM A FORTUNE

Bob Mitchinson was a sailor with a sense of humour. Looking through a comic paper one Sunday morning when he was home on leave, he began to laugh—and couldn't stop.

His family gathered round to see the joke, and pounded him on the back. Still Bob laughed. His brother Max threw a basin of cold water over him. The laughter ceased abruptly, then began again. From then on, red in the face, Bob laughed incessantly and gained only an occasional respite for breath.

Doctors called in to stop the mirth confessed themselves beaten. Bob became the talk of the medical profession. He laughed his way out of the American Navy and into hospital. Specialists examined him, talked of mental lesions and abnormal stimulus of the phrenic nerve, and subjected Bob to a throat operation. But still he laughed.

He was silent only when he slept. His longest periods of daytime control were barely fifteen minutes. He was forced to gulp his meals and sometimes the laughter overtook him and he almost choked. After weeks of intensive investigation the doctors discharged him as incurable.

Yet Bob Mitchinson didn't let the joke get him down. He had been about to marry when the laughter began, and his sweetheart stood sturdily by him. "Bob may laugh a lot, but he's not laughing at me," she said. So Bob chuckled his way through the wedding ceremony.

Bob Mitchinson acquired the habit of writing while he giggled. He successfully carried on a conversation while laughing by using paper and pencil like a dumb man.

And—here's the odd touch—the mirth that was marring his life made his fortune. Bob made laughing records which sold in thousands —broadcasting networks paid him heavy fees as a "sound effect." His unnatural amusement sounded so natural that advertising sponsors booked him to add to their programmes.

Audience Joined In

Stage producers sent him free seats for comedies and musical shows, asking him to laugh at ally they paid him to go to the theatre. In serious moments he had to stifle his laughter and shake silently. When required he could let himself go. Then the whole audience would share his infectious mirth.

Until, quite suddenly, he stopped laughing after he had kept it up for over five years. "Too much of a joke," he said, and tried to get back in the Navy. The doctors, however, refused to accept him.

Nowadays, Bob Mitchinson can hardly bear to laugh. But his mirth records are still a stand-by to sound effect technicians in movies and radio.

THE ANCIENT ART OF TATTOOING

Of all the arts practised by man, few are older or stranger than the art of the tattooist. For centuries the craft has been handed down, often from father to son, and although its popularity is waning in the West today, there are many corners of the world where tattoo marks still exercise a strange and powerful influence over the minds of men. Tattooing had its origin in Polynesia, and the word itself is derived from the Tahitan tatau, meaning a mark or design. The real reason for its introduction is the subject of some controversy but it was probably first used for ornamental purposes by men aiming to attract the opposite sex. It is said that the custom at one time was almost universal, but gradually disappeared with the spread of civilisation.

References can be found to tattooing in the earliest recorded history. We know, for example, that the ancient priests of Attis, the Tree Spirit, were covered with permanent representations of ivy leaves; and mention is made in Lev,uciti itscivil ian isehOt Leviticus, in the Old Testament, of a ban on tattooing. Certainly it was not unknown to the earliest inhabitants of this country. It may well be that some of the very beautiful and primitive designs found on the cave walls in France were actually represented on the skin of prehistoric man. Subsequently, as with so many customs of pagan origin, it assumed a social and religious significance.

In Polynesia a large proportion of males are tattooed when they reach the age of twelve, or thereabouts, and so it has become a mark of puberty. From earliest times the Kabyles of Arabia have tattooed their babies at birth. Incredible as it may seem, the reason given for this practice is that it helps the mothers to recognise their own children! From maturity, American Indians bear the mark of the tribal totem enabling them to be recognised by friendly tribes. Among the earlies Maoris the scarring of the distinctive mark, or kobong, on to the thighs signified adoption into the family or tribe.

There are two main methods of tatooing. The light-skinned races much prefer to tattoo with a needle or similar sharp point, with inks or powders for the colours. Darker skinned peoples gash the flesh and rub in cinders or clay to form raised scars. This latter method is very popular among the Kaffirs, who regard it as a mark of courage. When a Kaffir has a long line of successes as a warrior he has the privilege of making a long incision in his thigh, which he rubs with cinders until it is sufficiently discoloured. It is an offence for someone who has not earned this distinction to tattoo himself.

There is an extraordinary variety of the interpretations given to tattoo marks. In some parts of the world tattoo marks signify deep mournings, while the Eskimos and Fijians are wont to regard the untattooed as risking their happiness in a future world. Fijian brides were also tattooed to show their wedded state, and used to be locked up for several days away from the sun to improve the brilliance of their markings.

The very early Greeks used tattooing to identify their slaves and prisoners of war, and from old Greek tablets we learn that these marks could be removed, even in those far-off days.

The New Zealand Maoris used to tattoo the head exclusively with some very fearsome and beautiful designs. For many years, though it seems incredible today, stuffed Maori heads were very much sought after by European Museums.

Today, tattooing is most common among the North and South American Indians, the Chinese, Japanese and Burmese.

In Japan the incidence of tattooing is somewhat paradoxical. The upper classes are tattooed for symbolic, ceremonial or purely social reasons, while the desperately poor members of the lower classes sometimes wear tattoo marks in lieu of clothing. Here the colour most used is black, which appears blue, and is obtained from a kind of Indian ink. Red, the second most popular colour, is available in a whole variety of shades, and is obtained from cinnabar.

As might be expected, the methods of tattoo artists differ widely throughout the world. The Japanese use as their instrument twenty fine sewing needles fastened together in a piece of wood. The only antiseptic for the poor patient is a soaking in near-boiling water after the operation is complete. The Polynesian method— the original one—must surely be the most painful. Pieces of sharp bone with the edges cut into teeth are fastened to a handle. This fearsome instrument is then dipped in charcoal, and driven into the body with the aid of a mallet. Quite naturally, the victim does not take this at all stoically, and the female relatives (classed as 'assistants' for this function) sit round him in a circle, and drown his cries by singing and by beating on a drum.

The Eskimos have what appears to be the simplest way of tattooing, but its permanency is questionable. They dip a thread in soot, and draw it across their bodies to make seared lines.

HARD TO UNDERSTAND

We are told that religious societies often experience difficulty in making translation of the Bible which foreigners will understand and when, for example, the time came to translate the Scriptures into Eskimo language, all sorts of problems cropped up.

How, for example, to render "lion" in Eskimo? So one famous text became "Your adversary the devil as a roaring polar bear walketh about seeking whom he may devour."

"A land flowing with milk and honey" was translated as "A land flowing with whale's blubber", and "Lamb of God" became "Little Seal of God." Incidentally, the Eskimos just could not understand why Jonah, instead of allowing himself, in cowardly fashion, to be swallowed by the whale, did not take advantage of such a heaven-sent opportunity and set about the creature with his harpoon.

OBEDIENT BARTHOLEMEW
By Allan M. Laing

Bartholomew, depressing lad,
Was much too humble to be bad:
Indeed, he outraged common sense
By literal obedience.
Though fellows swore that he would rue it,
What he was told to do, he'd do it!
So slavish grew this moral trick,
In time it made his parents sick;
And when the lad, one tragic day,
Was going All Out to Obey,
His dad cried: "Oh, go boil your head!"
And so Bartholomew is dead.

SPRING WHAT'S GOOD ABOUT IT?

Folks who like musical programs
Are just out of luck for awhile.
Baseball blooms in the springtime,
Wipes everything else from the dial.

Spring flowers aren't very fragrant
For the wretch with the sensitive nose.
There's no joy in life for this fellow,
He just scowls as he sniffles and blows.

Give thought to the cough-syrup maker
He has right to be gloomy, you know.
The arrival of birdses and beeses
Deals his business a sickening blow.

Grandpa, asleep in the sunshine,
Has naught in his heart but pure hate.
For springtime kills his best story,
Of the blizzard in March, '88.

The showers of April won't water
The flowers of May near so well,
As the tears of the once-happy fellows
Who've succumbed to a romantic spell.

The guy that's most to be pitied,
The sorriest victim of all,
Is he whose spring suit has been giving
The moths a free-lunch since last fall.

Tom Gard's Note Book

Some months ago I handed out a tip as to how one might antique an old picture frame. This must have aroused considerable interest for the matter has continued to pop up from time to time. It is a pleasure to repeat the formula.

TO ANTIQUE A PICTURE FRAME

Old picture frames, heavily ornamented with deep carvings are ideal for the purpose. In applying the glazing fluid the trick is to brush it on evenly, then wipe off immediately by working from the centre towards the edges, or removing it from the high points of the carvings. A light coat of varnish gives the finishing touch.

BEDROOM SCREEN

We have a new neighbour on our street. He turns out to be quite handy with tools. His first job after moving in was to construct a fine bedroom screen using B.C. Fir Plywood, and when finished he started to construct a second one for his sister, but this time he utilized scrap wood from packing cases. It is a question which is most attractive.

BIRD FEEDING STATION

A naturalist friend has constructed a bird feeding station from an old piano seat, the top being of glass to permit full view of the birds. An old coffee table might serve the same purpose. He endeavoured to impress upon his visitors that the closed end should always face the prevailing wind as this prevented the feed from being blown away.

STRETCHER FOR SOCKS

Necessity is the mother of invention, so my friend George turned a coat-hanger into a stretcher for socks. To make it more attractive he gave it a coat of enamel by simply dipping it in the can and then hanging it up to dry.

You'll find many other interesting and helpful suggestions like these in the booklet "Around the Home Again". Write for your copy to Tom Gard, c/o MOLSON'S (ONTARIO) LIMITED, P. O. Box 490, Adelaide St. Station, Toronto.

THE Calvert SPORTS COLUMN

by Elmer Ferguson

• TIMES CHANGE. Once the Irish ruled the prize-ring, but you don't see many Irish fighters, any more—no Ryans, no John L. Sullivans, no Terrible Terry McGoverns, no James J. Corbetts, no O'Briens, no Bould Michael McTigues. There are no more O'Mahonys or Caseys at the wrestling peak, and the great Irish weight-tossers of other days, the Flanagans and Ryans, don't seem to be around.

But the Irish are by no means out of top-flight sport. It may not have occurred to you, but the Irish come pretty close to holding top hand on the turf in this country. Ireland is a great horse-racing country. The Emerald Isle specializes in jumping horses and has sent many a winner to the most testing of all races, the Grand National steeplechase.

But right now, Irish-bred horses have played and are playing a big part in American racing. First there was the Irish-bred Noor that, on four successive occasions, defeated America's greatest modern race-horse, the mighty Citation in race thrillers seldom equaled anywhere and in which world records were smashed or tied, while the pride of Kentucky was being humiliated. Now comes another of the Irish, Windy City II, to breeze by Calumet Farm's best three-year-olds as though they were tied.

This Irish-bred European juvenile champion of last year not only has won two stakes for three-year olds this year, in America, beating Hill Gail and A Gleam—rated Calumet's best Derby hopes at this time—but came from behind, to win going away like a real standout.

His victory in the San Felipe handicap at Santa Anita at one mile and one-sixteenth—indicating his liking for distance, since he was increasing his lead as he passed under the wire—just about convinced turf experts that Gus Lueliwitz's $165,000 purchase is a prize package. Windy may go to the post in the Kentucky Derby a hot favorite to win that big race.

In Europe, where Windy City was raced as a juvenile, his amazing speed won him the title of the champion two-year-old of England and Europe. His only defeat was an upset, something the same as once happened to Man O'War. Abroad, the only question about Windy was his ability to go the Derby route. So Ireland is by no means in sports eclipse. The Ould Sod carries on, as it has always done, in some division of sport.

"The Day" has been good and bad for the sons of the Ould Sod. Most important fight in ring annals, staged on March 17th, took place in Carson City, Nevada, on March 17th, 1897. James J. Corbett, an Irish-American who had defeated the mighty John L. Sullivan to win the title, was matched with the Cornishman, lanky Bob Fitzsimmons. Corbett was the favorite, but was knocked out in the 14th round with a blow that still lives in ring legend as the solar plexus punch.

But on March 17th, 1923—and in Dublin City no less—Michael Francis McTigue of County Clare out-fought the Sengalese, Battling Siki in 20 torrid rounds and became the light-heavyweight champion of the world. You couldn't ask for a greater combination of Irish ring success than that, could you now?

Your comments and suggestions for this column will be welcomed by Elmer Ferguson, c/o Calvert House, 431 Yonge St., Toronto.

War Weapon May Be Cure For Arthritis

One of the new poison gases developed during World War II was nitrogen mustard—not to be confused with the mustard gas of World War I. Now good seems likely to come from the evil that in fact never happened, for Spanish doctors of Madrid University report that injections of nitrogen mustard are a possible cure for rheumatoid arthritis.

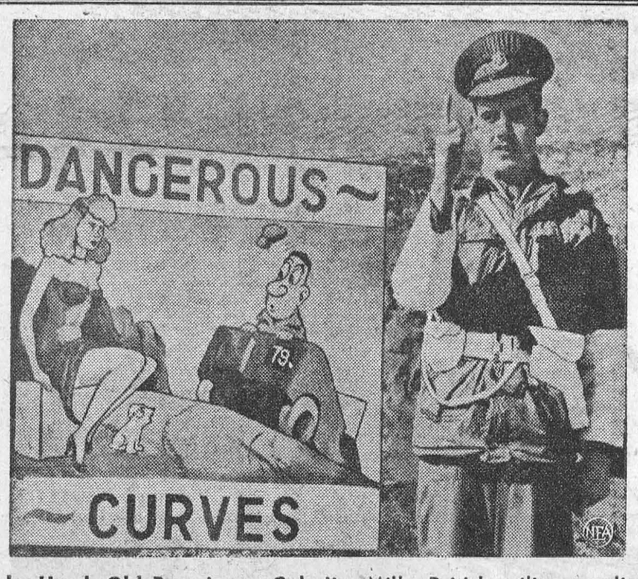
Nine patients were treated. Five of them improved extraordinarily, pain and joint swellings disappearing and normal movement being made possible again. Three of the others improved considerably but not so completely.

Why did these doctors even think of testing the poison gas as a treatment for arthritis. They had studied American reports on the action of the new and scarce drug, cortisone, which relieves arthritis so remarkably. Cortisone, however, is not yet available in Spain, even for medical research. The doctors knew, however, that nitrogen mustard and cortisone produce very similar effects upon the white blood cells. It seemed worth trying nitrogen mustard in case it had a similar effect to cortisone on arthritis.

Cortisone cures or relieves other kinds of illness besdies arthritis. Asthma is one trouble in which it helps. Here, too, the unused poison gas from World War II is showing promising results. Two asthmatic patients were able to breathe without difficulty soon after the first test injections.

Weapons and materials of war have been turned into peaceful blessings before, but this is probably the first time a weapon of war that was never put to its deadly use has become instead a remedy for hitherto incurable disease.

"I'm so sorry!—I do remember we have met before somewhere."



Take Heed, Old Boy—Lance Cpl. Jim Mills, British military policeman, of South Shields, England, directs military traffic somewhere in Korea wtih the aid of a sign designed by military traffic experts to catch the eyes of drivers. Moot question: Will drivers watch the road, or the sign?

Cold Chicken—You've heard of the "cat's pajamas," but this is perhaps the first time anyone has designed leghorn lingerie. Mrs. Eva Anderson won a nation-wide sewing machine contest by submitting the idea for the two-piece undies and she and "Minnie," a Black Minorca hen are shown as Minnie models the garment. Mrs. Anderson first produced the articles when a blizzard pulled a fowl trick by blowing in when her prized flock was molting. The flannels saved the flock.

it," Mrs. Sanders cried in horror. Yet the "stone" looked strangely bright as it lay on his plate. It was a beautifully cut and polished diamond.

Reggie Sanders took the stone back to the poulterer, who denied all knowledge of it, and passed it on to the farmer. The farmer declared that he had never owned such a stone in his life, and sent it to the corn merchant. The merchant sorrowfully shook his head for he couldn't honestly claim the stone.

The police couldn't decide whether to record it as lost property or treasure trove. Finally, the diamond was treated as "unclaimed property" and sold, Mrs. Sanders receiving a cheque for £203! Her actual profit was £202 12s. 6d. The remaining 7s. 6d. went in dental expenses for Mr. Sanders. The diamond had broken his tooth!

The Western Horse

The history of the Western horse is perhaps more romantic than that of any other type developed on the North American continent, partly because of the vastness and primitive ruggedness of the Western areas and partly because of the winning of the West was virtually accomplished on horseback. Mere mention of the word "mustang" conjures up an exciting picture of Western history and folklore.

Perhaps not everyone realizes that the wild horse, the Spanish Barb, the Indian pony, the early cow horse, the ranger's mount, and even the deathless "white mustang" were one and the same. For those who think this is an exaggeration, let us go back almost four centuries so that we may see how close to the truth it really is. . . .

The horses that were brought into Florida around the middle of the sixteenth century were distributed over the Southeast through the Guale settlements. The next important point of entry was New Mexico where at the close of the sixteenth century Juane Onate and a group of Spanish settlers established themselves a few miles northeast of the present site of Sante Fé. Horse and cattle breeding was the regular order of business.

It is believed by historians that the Indian began acquiring the offspring of Onate's Barbs early in the 1600s. Within less than a century, Indians of the Iowa and Missouri tribes became well mounted, as reported by La Salle and Tonti; in fact, nearly all the tribes of the western half of the United States possessed horses.

As the pace of settling quickened, trails were established throughout the Southwest. The trail from Chihuahua to Sante Fé was worn deep at an early date. This was the route traveled by the first Spanish adventurers about 1540 and it was in continuous use until New Mexico became a part of the United States.

Sante Fé formed the hub from which radiated trails in all directions. The Old Spanish Trail meandered northwestward out of Santa Fé, up into southern Utah, across to Las Vegas, Nevada, and on westward into California. The famous Santa Fé Trail took a northeastward route into Kansas . . .

By 1812, there were three recognized zones of horse activity in the Southwest and in northeastern Mexico. The first area consisted of the plains country of the Arkansas River, where such horses were known as "Pawnee" or "Osage." The second zone lay between the Arkansas and Red rivers where the horses were owned by the tribes of Caddos, Wichitas, and Commanches. The largest area was south of the Red River, now known as Texas. These horses were owned by Texas Indians and Texas Spaniards — "Cavalcade of American Horses," by Pers Crowell.

Cooked Her Goose

"What a wonderful goose!" said Reggie Sanders as he sat down to dinner in his pleasant Dumfries villa.

"I should hope so, darling," answered his wife. "I'm afraid it was rather expensive—I've spent half my housekeeping money on it!"

In the next few minutes the goose repaid her expenditure a hundredfold. Her husband bit on something hard, and he yelled "Ouch! A piece of stone!"

"The goose must have swallowed

"I never see you with Miss de Style nowadays."

"No, I couldn't stand her vulgar laughter."

"Really, I never noticed it."

"No? Well, you weren't there when I proposed to her."

SPORTS & by A SIXBIT CRITIC

A common complaint from sports writers and radio commentators these days is that the modern ball player lacks the "colour" and picturesqueness of some of the old-timers. Well, there's one modern (at least he's still playing major league ball) who has plenty of colour both in the pigmentation of his skin and in his actions too. We refer, of course, to nobody but the one and only Mr. Satchel-foot Paige.

And the latest news from Ol' Satchmo, now readying himself for a season, more or less, with the St. Louis Browns, is that he is developing a new, secret weapon designed to mow down the American League sluggers. Said weapon is nothing less than a version of the submarine ball. This, added to his repertoire of the windmill windup, the hesitation pitch and so forth, should make the Browns worth looking at, so long as Mr. Paige is on the mound, at least.

Asked if the rumour about the submariner was true, Mr. Paige loftily explained that he will be pitching three ways this season. "Sidearm, overarm and underarm," he said—which sounds like real triple-threat stuff. Hitting Satchel in the past was hard enough, as plenty of batters scattered all over the North and South American continents will attest. But now it promises to be almost impossible.

The Master of the Mound recently launched into a discussion of pitching techniques. "Pitching is just a question of outguessing the hitter. You figure what the man at the plate is looking for," Satchel waved his hands expressively. "Then you pitch him something else. You throw him inside when he expects a pitch outside.

"When I see the hitter standing flat-footed at the plate, I pitch him here." Satchel slowly drew a large hand tight across his chest. "I figure that man is looking to push the ball on me. So, I put it where he can't do that." The great man pondered deeply for a moment. "Once in a while a pitcher fools the batter, really fools him, by throwing the pitch he's looking for right past him. But," Satch concluded sorrowfully, "it doesn't happen too often."

The pitching veteran glanced about the peaceful, sun-drenched park where the Browns players are preparing for the adventures and high life that lie ahead under the promise of the Veeck regime. "Four more days like this and I'll be ready," Satchel observed. "I been playing so long it doesn't take me long to get in shape. I get my arm ready, then I work on control. But the legs come first. Always the legs. A man can't pitch good until his legs are in good condition.

"Different pitchers have different ways of getting in condition," he said. "That depends on a man's physical makeup and the kind of pitcher he is."

Satch cocked one eye up at the sun speculatively. Then, slowly, he stood up, uncoiling gracefully like some giant python. "I think," Satchel grunted, "I'll go work some on control."

The secret weapon began taking shape.
