Making Hay.

'Twas in the days of mowing, With honest arm and scythe;
When neighbors helped in neighbor's fields And harvest hands were blithe.For my I grew a strapping—They called me 'Laf' a head—Among the stalwart, sun-browned men Who toiled the clover-land.The rhythmic swing of sinews Was regular and strong;
The even-measured mowing stroke First set my soul to song.Sweet music of the whetstones, Like morning bells in chiming, Toned soothingly life's harsher sounds—My heart's still beating time.Right bravely marched the mowers Knee-deep in flowering grass; They ranged according to their skill Like school-boys in a class.And strength was brought to trial, And strove with wrestler's wrath—Who could the smoothest stubble cut,
And who the widest swath?How proudly strove the leader—
The swiftest and the best!
He held his place a cut or two Ahead of all the rest;Allowed no one to lead him The breadth of mowing hand—A master of the moving craft, He ruled the clover-land.The morning beams came glancing Like golden bills of bird that bent To sip the sparkling dew,
And then, in soft mid-morning, Began the harvest day,
And all hands—girls and boys and men—Were merry making hay.There came a choice of partners Who could the best agree, And Kate was drawn by glances quick—Kate always felt to me!Now to the glasses, O mow-ers, Upon that harvest day,
Which poured its sunshine over me And Katie making hay.The morning call of luncheon To grassy table laid, Assembled all the haymakers Beneath a lone tree's shade;A bliss of rest and breathing By leafy fingers fanned, And then another having-hot Raced o'er the clover land.We spread the swaths commingling In beds of rustling bough, And rich field-odors floated up On wings of fathery down.Then rolled the ridged windrows—The triumphs of the day!
I'd named o'er triumphs of a life With Katie making hay.She looked all-over-tonnet Of gingham—blue and white—Her face's roses in the sweat Glanced out their own sweet light.Her rake "would" get entangled Sometimes, by locking mine, And when she said: "Provoking thing!"
'E'en quarrelling was divine!A spring of bubbling waters Well'd up in woodside cool, And over at the field's end hedge Both thirsted for the pool.She drank from out a gullet I made her of my hands, And, kneeling at her feet, I quaffed From cup of golden sands.The last load in the twilight Dragged slowly towards the stack—So like a great brown burly beast With children on its back;And flecked clouds hung over,
Of softest creamy hue,
Like handkerchiefs plucked from cotton-bales And dashed against the blue.I'm dreaming now of hay-time, The fields and skies are bright;
I see among the harvesters A bonnet—blue and white—And Katie's face is in it.A shade, it may be, tanned, But 'tis the fairest face of all,
That graces the clover-land.The clover-crop was gathered In harvest long ago; Another partner Katie chose For life's up-hill and down.But O, of all the sunshine That ever blest a day—
The crown still shimmers over me And Katie making hay.—From the Alaine for July.

Recovered His Cigar.

The following incident is described by a California paper: A gentleman about to pass into one of our hotels with two ladies the other evening, found he had a freshly-lighted cigar to dispose of. There was a pleasant looking young lad near the door, and he asked him to hold the weed until he returned. When the gentleman came out he was so much pleased with the boy's honesty that he gave him five cents, saying, "Don't you smoke?""Yes," said the boy. "How is it that you didn't make off with the cigar, then?—many boys would have done it," said the gratified gentleman. "I don't know about that," said the youth, "it must be a pretty hard pushed boy who'd run away with such a cigar as that." The ladies tittered, but the gentleman didn't.Let's chip in and raise a hundred dollars for the Boston physician who says that it is unhealthy to rise before the sun has dispelled the morning fogs.

Our Story.

JEWELLER'S DAUGHTER.

"You are too parsimonious, Henry," said Dr. Delaney to one of his clerks, as they were together in the counting-house one morning. "Give me leave to say that you do not dress sufficiently graceful to appear as clerk in a fashionable jeweller's."Henry's face was suffused with a deep blush, and in spite of his endeavours to suppress it a tear trembled on his manly cheek."Did I not know that your salary was sufficient to provide more genteel habilliments," continued Mr. Delaney, "I would increase it.""My salary is sufficient—amply sufficient, sir," replied Henry, in a voice choked with emotion, but with that proud independence of feeling which poverty had not been able to divest him of.His employer noticed his agitation, and immediately changed the subject.Mr. Delaney was a man of great wealth and ample benevolence; he was a widower, and had but one child, a daughter, who was the pride of his declining years. She was not as beautiful as an angel, nor as perfect as Venus, but the goodness, the innocence, the intelligence of her mind, shone in her countenance; and you had but to become acquainted with her to admire, to love her.Such was Caroline Delaney when Henry first became an inmate of her father's house. No wonder, then, that he soon worshipped at her shrine—no wonder that he soon loved her with a deep and devoted affection; and, reader, had you known him, you would not have wondered that that love was soon returned, for their souls were congenial; they were cast in virtue's purest mould—and although their tongues never gave utterance to what their hearts felt, yet the language of their eyes was too plain to be mistaken. Henry was the very soul of honor; and although he received with pleasure that he was not indifferent to Caroline, he still felt he must conquer the passion that glowed in his bosom."I must not endeavor to win her young heart," thought he; "I am penitent, and cannot expect that her father would consent to our union.
He has ever treated me with kindness, and I will not be ungrateful."Thus he reasoned: thus he heroically endeavored to subdue what he considered an ill-timed passion.Caroline had many suitors, and some were worthy of her; but she refused all their overtures with a gentle, yet decisive firmness. Her father wondered at her conduct, yet would not thwart her inclination.He was in the decline of life, and he wished to see her happiness settled; he quitted the stage of existence. It was not long ere he suspected that young Henry was the cause of her indifference to others; the evident pleasure she took in hearing him praised, the blush that overspread her cheeks whenever their eyes met, all served to convince the old gentleman, who had not forgotten that he was once young himself, that they felt more than a common interest in each other's welfare. He forbore making any remarks upon the subject, but was not displeased at the supposition as the penniless Henry would have imagined.Henry had now been about a year in his employment. Mr. Delaney knew nothing of his family; but his strict integrity, his irreproachable morals, his pleasing manners, all conspired to esteem him highly. He was proud of Henry, and wished him to appear in dress as well as in manners, respectable as any persons in his employment. He had often wondered at the scantiness of his wardrobe; though he dressed with the most scrupulous regard to neatness, his clothes were almost threadbare. Mr. Delaney did not wish to think that this proceeded from a niggardly disposition; and he determined to ascertain the real cause, —his he did in the manner we have before related.Soon after this conversation took place, Mr. Delaney left home on business. As he was returning, and riding through a beautiful little village, he alighted at the door of a cottage, and requested a drink. The mistress with an ease and politeness that convinced him she had not always been an humble cottager, invited him to enter.
He accepted the invitation—and here a scene of poverty and wantiness presented itself, such as he had never before witnessed. The furniture, which consisted of nothing more than poverty, and east an air of comfort on all around. A venerable looking old man, who had not seemed to notice the entrance of Mr. Delaney, sat leaning his head on a staff; his clotheswere clean and whole, but so patched that you could scarcely have known which had been the original piece."That is your father, I presume?" said Mr. Delaney, addressing the mistress of the house.

"It is, sir."

"He seems to be quite aged."

"He is in his eighty-third year," was the quiet reply; he has survived all his children, excepting myself.""You have seen better days?" questioned Mr. Delaney."I have—my husband was wealthy, but false friends ruined him; he endorsed bills to a great amount, which stripped us of nearly all our property, and one misfortune followed another until we were reduced to complete poverty. My husband did not long survive his losses, and two of my children soon followed him.""Have you any remaining children?""I have one, and he is my only support. My health is so feeble that I cannot do much, and my father being blind needs great attention. My son conceals from my knowledge the amount of his salary, but I am convinced that he sends me nearly all, if not the whole of it.""Then he is not at home with you?"
"No, sir; he is a clerk at a jewel-ler's in Leamington.""Clerk to a jeweller in Leamington!
I pray what's your son's name?""Henry Wilson!" reiterated Mr.
Delaney; "why he is my clerk. I left him at my house not a fortnight since."Here followed a succession of inquiries which evinced an anxiety that a mother only could feel, to all of which Mr. Delaney replied to her perfect satisfaction."You know our Henry," said the old man, raising his head from his staff. "Well, sir, then you know as worthy a lad as ever lived. Heaven will bless him—will bless him for his goodness to his poor old grandfather."He added in a tremulous voice, while the tears ran down his aged cheeks."He is a worthy fellow, to be sure," said Mr. Delaney, rising and placing a well-filled purse in the hands of the old man. "He is a worthy fellow, and shall not want friends.""Noble boy!" said he mentally, as he was riding leisurely along, rumi-nating on his late interview—"noble boy, he shall not want wealth to enable him to distribute happiness. I believe he loves my girl, and if he does, he shall have her and all my property in the bargain."Filled with his project, and determined, if possible, to ascertain the true state of their hearts, he entered the breakfast-room the morning after his arrival at home."So Henry is about to leave us, and go to Paris to try his fortune," he carelessly observed."Henry about to leave us!" said Caroline, dropping the work she held in her hand—"about to leave us, and going to Paris!" she added in a tone which evinced the deepest interest."To be sure. What if he is, child?"
"Nothing, papa, nothing," turning away to hide the tears she could not suppress."Tell me, Caroline," said Mr. Delaney, tenderly embracing her, "tell me, do you not love Henry? You know I wish your happiness, my child; I have ever treated you with kindness, and you have never until now hid anything from your father.""Neither will I now," she replied, hiding her face in his bosom. "I do most sincerely esteem him; but do not, for worlds, tell him so, for he has never said it was returned.""I will soon find that out, and without telling him, too," replied the father, leaving the room."Henry," said he, as he entered the counting-house, you expect to visit the country shortly do you not?""Yes, sir; in about three or four weeks.""If it will not be too inconvenient," rejoined Mr. Delaney, "I should like to have you defer it a week or two longer.""It will be no inconvenience, sir; if it will oblige you, I will wait with pleasure.""It will most certainly oblige me; for Caroline is to be married in about five weeks, and I would not miss having you attend the wedding.""Miss Caroline is to be married," said Henry, starting as if by an electric shock; "Miss Caroline be-married! Is it possible?""To be sure it is! But what is there wonderful in that?""Nothing, sir, only it is rather sudden, rather unexpected—that's all.""It is rather sudden, to be sure," said Mr. Delaney; "but I am an old man, and wish to see her have a protector; and, as the man of her choice is well worthy of her, I see no use in waiting any longer, and am very glad that you can stay to the wedding."

"I cannot, sir; indeed, I cannot!"

replied Henry; forgetting what he had previously said."You cannot?" rejoined Mr. Delaney. "Why, you said you would!""Yes, sir, but business requires my presence in the country and I must go.""But you said it would put you to no inconvenience, and that you would wait with pleasure.""Command me in something else, sir; but in this respect I cannot oblige you," returned Henry, rising and walking the floor with rapid strides.Poor fellow! he had thought his passion subdued; but when he found that Caroline was soon to irrevocably become another's, the latent spark burst forth into an unextinguishable flame, and he found it in vain to endeavor to conceal his emotion.The old gentleman regarded him with a look of earnestness."Henry," said he "tell me frankly—do you love my daughter?""I will be candid with you, sir," replied Henry, conscious that his

LOCAL.

PERSONAL.—We were favored with a call on Monday, from Mr. Crate, Editor of the Bothwell Times.

GOVERNMENT SCHOOL GRANT.—We have received a letter from a Teacher complaining about the delay in the payment of the School Money to Teachers, in this County.

TONYONAL.—Mr. W. N. Snow has secured the assistance of a first class hair-cutter, and assures his customers they will meet with prompt and skilful attention. Call.

LECTURE.—A Lecture will be delivered to-night, (Thursday) in Meikle's Hall, at 8 o'clock, by Rev. H. D. Steele, on "The Harmony of the Mosaic and Geological Records." Collection at close of Lecture.

SHABBY.—If the subscribers of the Ontario Chronicle got such papers as that office sends us as an exchange, they must have a fine time reading them, and be blessed with more patience than the common run.

PISCATORIAL.—Messrs. Tyrrell, Matthews, and two friends spent last week fishing among the Thousand Islands. They got a great number of fish, among the rest a Maskinonge weighing 38½ lbs. They had a capital week's sport and returned delighted with their excursion.

PERSONAL.—We are pleased to learn that Mr. D. G. Macdonnell, son of A. G. Macdonnell, Esq., has entered into partnership with his father and will continue his residence amongst us. We have no doubt the new firm will receive that support that their clever legal abilities entitle them to.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—We are indebted to Mrs. E. Thompson, Waddington, for the present of a large basket of Raspberries, and another of New Potatoes, the latter, the first we have seen this season. We have also to thank Mrs. I. Eacout, for a basket of very nice black-currants.

WADDINGTON.—We publish elsewhere, by request, an article from the Ogdensburg Advance, giving the version of the shooting affray as told by the other side. We may say that our communication last week on the subject, was from a party who could have no interest to give the account other than as he learned it.

OBITUARY.—We are sorry to say that young Crate who was injured by the bursting of a pulley in the Steam Mill, Chesterville, on Wednesday, died the next day. He never recovered consciousness after being hurt. He was buried on Saturday, when the occasion was improved by an instructive discourse by Rev. Wm. Ferguson, M. A.

CHEESE.—We have to thank our old acquaintance, Mr. George Johnson, of Phillipsville, Co. Leeds, for a sample of excellent cheese manufactured by him at the "White Clover" Cheese Factory, North Williamsburg, owned by W. G. Parish Esq. We have several times called at this factory, and always found things neat and tidy, and the sample we have received, only confirms our former belief, that Mr. Johnson thoroughly understands his business, and attends to it.

INTERNATIONAL CAMP MEETING.—The St. Lawrence International Camp Meeting Association have made arrangements for holding a camp meeting on their grounds, nearly opposite Brookville, commencing August 25th, and continuing for about ten days. It is expected that several prominent ministers of religion in both countries will be present and one of the most successful camp-meeting managers in the United States has been invited to take charge of the meeting. Reduced fare on Railroads and Steamboats of which particulars will be made known in due time.

Canadian Pain Destroyer.

AS A FAMILY MEDICINE, IT IS well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pain in the Side, Back and Head, Coughs, Colic, Sore Throat, Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Burns, Scalds, Frost Bites, Etc.

The Canadian Pain Destroyer has now been before the public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single case of dissatisfaction, where the directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its virtues and magical effect.

We speak from experience in the matter, having tested it thoroughly; and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended, may depend upon it being a Sovereign Remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer in curing the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful effects in subduing the tortuous pains of Rheumatism, and relieving Nervous Affections, entitles it to high rank in the list of Remedies. Orders are coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the country, for further supplies, and each testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain Destroyer never fails to give immediate relief. All Medicine Dealers keep it; Physicians and use it; and no family will be without it after trying it. Price, only twenty-five cents per bottle. For sale by all druggists.

A Ride in a Cab.

I had taken a carriage to go home from the meeting of the Benevolent Canton Plannel Association, of which I am a member; for it was a pouring rain, and no umbrella was of any avail; and we had gone just three blocks through the dismal streets when the driver stopped and called through the little window on the roof:

"Madam,"

"Well," said I.

"Could you do me a favor—me and a poor half-drowned lady out here—She wants me to take her in. Of course it would be a good thing for me with my big family and low wages; and it would be a charity to her, poor thing, on such a day; but of course, if you object—"

"Oh, no. I don't object," said I. "I wouldn't keep a woman out in such a storm for worlds. Let her in."

"Thank ye," said the driver.

In an instant a woman had hurried in and taken her seat opposite me.

She was a prettyish woman, with a dark complexion, and long black hair, braided oddly enough in two pig-tails like a little school-girl's. Perhaps she was thirty. She wore a morning gown, elaborately trimmed, a breakfast cape, and a little seal skin cap, that might as well have been a man's as a woman's. She had no gloves, no umbrella, no water-proof cloak, and I felt sure as I looked at her that she had been obliged to go out in the rain to call the doctor to a child with the croup, or to some one who had met with an accident, for she seemed to forget her own comfort entirely.

I felt sorry for her as she wiped her poor little wet hands on her handkerchief, and looked piteously at her wet dress. But to speak to a stranger is such a step for a woman, and she had not uttered so much as a "thank you" for my courtesy though she had two or three times looked straight into my face with her big black eyes. I sat in silence, therefore, until at last she fixed a long steady gaze upon me, and said:

"It is a wet, uncomfortable sort of world, after all, isn't it?"

"Indeed, it seems so to-day," I said, with a glance at the lead-colored sky. "And it never rains in heaven," said she.

"Oh, no."

"I hope not, I am sure," said I.

"Where storms do not come," she repeated, as though making a quotation. "Of course it does not. But then," she added quickly, "you see one stays with one's husband and children at any cost. As long as they are in this chilly, wretched world, one must wish to stay."

"Indeed, yes," said I. And then, seeing that she was agitated, and remembering my fancy that she was going for a doctor, I said, haphazard: "And when any one we love is ill we grow gloomy and fear all sorts of things."

"Yes," said she. "I have a husband, the dearest fellow, and two pretty children—pretty and good as a mother could wish—and how anxious they were when I was so ill. Terribly anxious. He cried—a great, stout man. Yes, he cried. Of course the little ones did, and when I died—"

"When you died?" I repeated.

"Yes, when I died," she said, in a louder tone. "When I died, I say, he fainted. Oh, you think it's strange that I should speak of myself so. Nobody believes me; but it's true. I am not living; I am only materialized."

I could not make any answer to this; I only shrank away into the corner of the carriage, for though I had no idea that I was in company with a ghost, her words made me nervous. We had yet a long way to go, though the driver was doing his best, and what with the clatter of the horses' hoofs, the patter of the rain, and the usual noises of the street, I doubted if I could make my voice heard if it became necessary.

"Yes," the lady went on—"I have a friend who is a spiritualist, and I went to her at once, and as soon as I appeared to her she kindly materialized me, and I want to stay so. I want to stay materialized, because, don't you see, though it never rains in heaven, I must stay with my husband and little ones, if I can. They missed me so."

"Oh, you will," I said, in some trepidation; "you surely will. Let us drive to your house, and as soon as your children kiss you, you will know that you are no longer a spirit. Have you told the driver where to go? Shall I?"

She put her hand upon my arm and drew me down, as I arose to endeavor to call the driver.

"Stop," she said: "as soon as I cross the threshold where my corpse is lying, I shall be a horrible ghost again and frighten them all. Don't you know that? Sit down!"

I sat down. She kept her hand on my arm.

"Listen!" said she, "don't you hear the sounds behind us? Spirits coming to carry me to heaven. I don't want to go to heaven, but there is only one way to avoid it. The spirits want a spirit to take away, and it must be a young woman's spirit. You—you are about my age, are you not?"

"I suppose so," said I.

"Yes," said she; and have you a husband?"

"I am a widow," said I.

"Good," said she. "How lucky that is. You'll want to go to heaven because your husband is there; I want to stay because mine is here. Come, I'll send your spirit with them—you'll let me, won't you?"

I had grown very cold and felt that I was trembling very much, but I found power to ask her what seemed to myself then to be a very important question.

"How would you do it? It depends a little on that—"

"Oh," said she, "as for how, there is just one way. I must cut your throat—but I have a very sharp razor and it won't hurt at all. It's much the better for us both you see, my husband being here, yours there. And those spirits, with their white wings and cold hands, will never know."

She drew a razor from her pocket as she spoke and opened it. I made one dash for the door—which I should have made sooner had I guessed at the hidden weapon, you may be certain—but as I did so her face changed, her eyes flashed furiously, and she clutched me by the throat. I gave a wild scream, the carriage stopped, and I heard amidst my terror the voices of two men shouting something close beside us.

Then the woman was struggling in a policeman's arms, and a gentleman held the razor in his hands and folded it away in its sheath.

There was another carriage beside ours, and these two men had sprung from it.

"Madam, I hope you are unharmed?" said the gentleman, speaking with a slight foreign accent.

"Yes, I am thankful to say I am," said I.

"You know what it all means?" said he. "It was a fine mind that illness warped so terribly. She has been ill, and she believes herself now a spirit. It is a delusion of hers that if she can send a spirit to heaven she may remain here herself. My poor Isadora! Forgive us the terror you have felt. We thought her well watched, but she escaped us. I believe that dwelling too much on spiritualism has caused all this. Then he bowed and followed his wife into the other carriage, and I saw her clinging to him as they drove away.

Lost Cow, By Shimmy.

As a rule there isn't a better class of people in the world to deal with than the Germans, but occasionally you will find one whose ideas concerning certain business transactions are amusingly peculiar. For instance:

A German subscriber to the Journal recently called to advertise a lost cow, and, according to the long established custom of this well-regulated print shop, we immediately wrote up the notice, and signed up the cost of publication.

"Vat ish dat?" asked our friend, placing the butt end of his whip on our little sum of multiplication.

We informed him that it would cost him so much to advertise his lost cow three weeks.

"You make me pay for dat?"

"Certainly, we always take pay for advertising."

"You take pay, eh? Vell, dat ish von tam shivinde. I scribo mit dat shournal bapen dese tree year, and now you sharge me yooost for von leetle advertise uv mine gow."

"But we—"

"You shlop mine shournal bapen."

"But you—"

"You shlop mine shournal bapen, and I got some more in Daytraw, py shimin; and you gome leetle end dot horn oud."

"But, see here, my friend—"

"I go right away and don't get sheated mit you, py krashus. Think you got some sleep mit a vessel, doud you? Sharge me yooost for advertise von gow! It vat better uv you doud got me med ven I come here, and I scribo mit dat shournal more as tree years, but you makes me med and you shlop mine bapen before I got it next dime. Dat ish vat man I am kind ov, py shimin!"

We tried to explain; we tried in vain; we lost him, and a three weeks' advertisement of a "lost gow, by shimmy!"

A philosopher asserts that the reason why ladies' teeth decay sooner than gentlemen's is because of the friction of the tongue and the sweetness of the lips.

"Now, then, children," said a parish school-mistress showing her children off on examination day: "Who loves all men?" "You, missus," was the unexpected reply.

WHAT THEY SAY OF IT! A FEW FACTS FOR THE PEOPLE. There are but few preparations of medicines which have withstood the impartial judgment of the people for any great length of time. One of these is Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. Lead the following and be convinced.—Thos. Robinson, Farmham Centre, P. Q., writes, "I have been afflicted with rheumatism for the last ten years, and I have tried many remedies without any relief, until I tried Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, and since then have had no attack of it. I would recommend it to all."—J. M. Earl, Hotel Keeper, West Bedford, P. Q., writes, "I have been troubled with liver complaint for several years, and have tried different medicines with little or no benefit, until I tried Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, which gave me immediate relief, and I would say that I have used it since with the best effect. No one should be without it. I have tried it on my horses in case of cuts, wounds, etc., and think it is equally as good for horse as for man."—A. Mayble, Merchant, Wakefield, writes, "I have sold some hundreds of bottles of Electric Oil, and it is pronounced by the public, 'One of the best medicines they have ever used.' It has done wonders in healing and relieving pain, sore throats, etc., and is worthy of the greatest confidence."—Joseph Rusan, Township Percy, writes, "I was persuaded to try Thomas' Electric Oil for a lame neck which troubled me for three or four years, and I never found anything like it for curing lameness. It is a great public benefit."—A. M. Hamilton, Wakefield, writes, "For weeks I was troubled with a swollen ankle, which annoyed me very much. Mr. Mayble of this place induced me to try Electric Oil, and before one bottle was used I was cured. It is the most remarkable medicine. Sold by all medicine dealers. Price, 25 cts."
