Fire Takes $15,000 Toll At Village of Oxford Mills

Village Five Miles West of Kemptville Suffers Big Loss Last Evening as Business Section Wiped Out.

Damage estimated at more than $15,000 was caused by fire which destroyed the post office, a general store, a frame house and a garage in Oxford Mills, five miles west of Kemptville, about 8 o'clock last night.

The fire broke out in the residence of Charles Beckett, postmaster, who lived in the second story of the frame building. Mr. Beckett was alone in the post office when he noticed the fire. He gave the alarm to people crowded into the Orange Hall, half a block from the post office, attending a church supper and bazaar.

Formed Bucket Brigade.

A bucket brigade was formed, and the Kemptville fire department was called. Due to some trouble with its motor pump, no water was available until 9 o'clock.

By this time the heat of the blaze had broken the window in the general store across the street, the property of S. G. Sparling, and set fire to the stock in the store.

A frame house adjacent to the general store, owned by Mr. Sparling and occupied by Douglas Connerty, caught fire, and it spread to a garage next to the post office, owned by E. I. Crowder.

Efforts were made to confine the blaze to the four premises and save the houses nearby. This was helped by a west wind which carried sparks from the fire across a field in the rear of the store where there were no buildings.

Furniture in the post office was removed before fire reached it, and Mr. Sparling was able to save his account books, cash on hand, and his bookkeeping system.

Store Damage $12,000.

Damage to the general store was estimated at $12,000; to the post office at $2,500; to the garage next to the post office $200, and to the frame house adjacent to the store at $1,200.

Mr. Sparling said he was first notified of the fire when the alarm was given at the bazar. "The first thing I did was to rush home and change my clothes for some old ones. Then I went to the fire."

All Hydro and Bell Telephone service was disrupted by the blaze, and the town was in darkness and without telephones for some hours. The reflection could be seen for miles, and hundreds of the residents of the district went to the scene.

Former Melvin Couple Celebrate Golden Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. Everett Biccum Receive Congratulations of Friends On Golden Anniversary, Monday.

An interesting event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Biccum, Inkerman, on Monday when they celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary.

During the day, Mr. and Mrs. Biccum were the recipients of many messages of congratulations as well as numerous gifts from members of their family, friends and neighbours.

It was on November 27, 1889, that Miss Martha Burley, daughter of the late Nathan Burley and his wife, Amelia Norris, of Matilda, was married to Everett Biccum, son of the late William Biccum and Amanda Ault, of Matilda.

The ceremony was performed at the Manse, Brinstons Corners, by the late Rev. E. Reynolds. Mr. and Mrs. Biccum set out for Morrisburg and Iroquois, travelling with horse and buggy. At the end of their honeymoon they were obliged to borrow a cutter to return home due to a big snow storm.

Following their marriage they resided in the Melvin Settlement for three years and at Vancamps for two years. They took up residence on their present farm 45 years ago.

Their family consisted of five children, Emma and Clarence, who died; Elgin Biccum, of Cornwall; Luella, of Ottawa, and Howard, at home.

Mr. Biccum, who is in his 77th year, is still enjoying good health. He is a brother of George Biccum, of Morrisburg; James Biccum, of Prescott, and Charles Biccum, of Cardale, Man.

Mrs. Biccum, who has passed her 75th birthday, is also in good health. She has two brothers living, Edgar and Daniel Burley, both of Inkerman.

TRANSPORT MINISTER ANSWERS HEPBURN'S LATEST CRITICISM

MOST AMAZING contribution of recent days to the thoughts of Canadian citizens comes from Premier Mitchell Hepburn.

Here's what he is quoted as saying at Aylmer:

"It is a peculiar thing that the the countries with the rubber money have the strong armies, while the countries which have strong financial positions have rubber armies."

Even those who have grown accustomed to the unexpected remarks that come from Mr. Hepburn every once and a while were shocked at the implications behind the words of the provincial premier.

Here was the spectacle of Ontario's elected leader apparently giving left-hand praise to Nazi methods as he attacked the policy of the federal government to safeguard the Canadian dollar in the face of the country's gigantic effort to further the war against Naziism.

Unless he was wrongly interpreted, in the newspapers, Mr. Hepburn has left the implication that he believes the armies of the Allies are weak; those of the enemy strong. The report of his address also creates the impression that Mr. Hepburn is all in favour of the Nazi method of repudiating debts and of using money as a utility to put men to work on war preparations.

It would be unfortunate if these impressions gained headway because of Mr. Hepburn's impetuous method of speaking his mind. For the Premier has already placed himself on record publicly as being wholeheartedly behind the Empire's war task.

At the same time, those who berate bankers and so-called "International Finance" may find some discomfort in knowing that the technique is Hitler's.

It was a lecture by the Socialist, Gottfried Feder, that really started the Feuhrer on the path which has made him the enemy of mankind. Here is what Hitler says in his book "Mein Kampf" (Stackpole Sons Edition, page 207):

"For the first time in my life I heard a basic arraignment of international finance and loan capital.

"When I heard Feder's lecture, the idea instantly flashed through my head that I had now found my way to one of the prime essentials for the foundation of a new party."

Because of Mr. Hepburn's attack on the policy at Ottawa, the address of Hon. C. D. Howe to Toronto University students was doubly interesting. Mr. Howe got after "uninformed public opinion" which asked for a change in the government war policy at Ottawa, changes which would be "as unwise as they would be unwelcome overseas."

The Minister drew attention again to what has been emphasized on several occasions in these columns: that enlistments would be limited by the number of men required, and that Canada's greatest contribution to the common cause would likely be the supplying of food, munitions and dollars.

And what Mr. Hepburn and a large number of other representative men throughout the country have apparently failed to recognize is the strong fact that this war policy is the one recommended and heartily desired by the heart of the Empire.

Perhaps the best answer to Mr. Hepburn's criticism lies in this paragraph from Mr. Howe's speech:

"It will be the purpose of those in authority to render the greatest possible effort, short of wrecking Canada's economy. Obviously to bankrupt Canada in the middle of the war will help no one."

In other words, in spite of Hitler's example of how to build up an army with rubber money, the Canadian Government will have none of it. Our leaders at Ottawa prefer to carry on the sound way, thus keeping up the solid value of all farms, including Mr Hepburn's; protecting the savings of the people, the value of the widow's insurance policy money, and making sure that the weekly pay envelope of the Canadian workman is not depreciated into something less than it is now.

TEMPERANCE FORCES CLASH OVER ORGANIZATION METHOD

THE LATE James Haverson, K.C., was wont to liken the Temperance forces to sheep, crowding together as danger threatened; the liquor men to goats who hoisted one another on their horns whenever they assembled. It would seem that the analogy may have to be reversed. Led by the redoubtable Rev. Ben Spence, his cohorts have launched bitter attacks against the Ontario Temperance Federation and particularly against the newly organized Toronto Temperance Federation. Policy of drift, was Mr. Spence's description of the Federation work. Countering, Dr. John Coborn claimed Spence and his clique are actuated by disappointment in not getting control of the Toronto Federation. In the meantime, through churches and other interested bodies, the Canadian Temperance Federation is seeking to place all restrictions possible on the sale of liquor. The hope is to launch a vast campaign for the voluntary abstinence from the use of liquor for the duration of the war.

Over 20 Operations Daily Keep Hospital Surgeons Busy

DURING a visit to Toronto recently, your reporter called at the Hospital for Sick Children on College street. I had seen this hospital mentioned in news reports many, many times, particularly during the great Polio epidemic of 1937. It was high time, I thought, to do a little private investigation and find out why this hospital should be so much in the news.

What Happens Every 24 Hours.

I interviewed Joseph Bower, superintendent of this busy institution. He told me that during the twenty-four hour period preceding my visit, 19 operations had been performed . . . 52 X-ray photographs taken . . . 280 individual prescriptions filled in a completely equipped dispensary . . . 28 bed patients were admitted . . . 33 children discharged as cured . . . more than 1400 meals served . . . 10 children had extensive dental work done . . . 95 per cent of the beds were occupied, leaving only 19 beds free for emergency cases.

And, according to the superintendent, the 24 hour period was an average one, insofar as typical hospital activity was concerned.

Visit to Public Wards.

After this chat on hospital activity, I was kindly shown through the institution. We visited the public wards, the kitchens, swimming pool (necessary in the treatment of Polio and other cases), the orthopedic workshop, the dispensary and operating rooms. It struck me as being a completely-equipped hospital with much special equipment.

Every ward we visited, Mr. Bower would say: "This is a Public Ward."

I was quite surprised to learn that 95 per cent of the patients treated here are in public wards. The hospital is taxed to capacity with little children whose parents are unable to pay even the low public ward rates.

The case history of one little chap I had chatted with, while walking through the ward, was very interesting and quite typical. "He was brought here one cold winter day in 1937. His parents had driven more than a hundred miles in the old farm truck so their little child might have hospital treatment.

"After examining the little fellow our doctors told the parents that he needed attention immediately . . . that a complete cure would take many months.

"Upon hearing that bad news, the father and mother were all for bundling the little chap up and leaving for home. They could never begin to pay for that much treatment, they said. 'We had hoped it might be just a week or so'.

"It took quite a while," continued the superintendent, "but we finally convinced the parents that just because they couldn't afford to pay for the boy's care was no reason to deprive him of the only chance he had to get well. We asked them to leave their son with us and let us worry about the cost of the treatment.

"The boy is going home next week after almost two years of continuous hospital care, many operations, several X-rays, special diets, orthopaedic equipment, etc. He's feeling pretty fit now and his parents have been able to pay but a little toward this wonderful treatment. When a sick child needs hospital care, he gets it regardless of race, creed or financial circumstance."

This led to a discussion on the operating costs of the hospital. I was given information which is interesting and well worth passing on.

In round figures, the operating expenses of the hospital for the past year amounted to more than $543,000. The operating revenue—from private, semi-private and the comparatively few public ward patients who are able to pay, grants from Toronto, other municipalities and the Provincial Government—amounted to just a little more than $394,000. This means that the hospital, although run on the most efficient and economical basis, suffered an operating loss of over $149,000. Part of this deficit is met by the income from investments made with the moneys bequeathed or endowed over a 60-year period. There is still a deficit of $90,000.

And that is why this hospital conducts an annual appeal at this time to secure enough funds to offset this operating loss.

If everyone who reads this item could visit the Hospital for Sick Children and see, as I did, what is done here for Ontario's little ones, then they would do as I did. Dig down deep into the pocket for a donation to help continue the splendid work.

If you are able to send a gift, please do so now. Send your donation to the Hospital for Sick Children, 67 College Street, Toronto.

You'll enjoy a certain satisfaction by supporting this cause. You'll have helped give the greatest gift one can give to children—GOOD HEALTH.

Williamsburg Township.

There will be contests for the reeveship and three council seats in Williamsburg township. Edgar D. Wittaker and E. M. Beckstead will battle for the reeve's seat, and Frank Casselman, Oscar Cougler, E. A. VanAllen and John Wells are candidates for the council. Frank Darling was elected deputy by acclamation.

Misunderstood.

The night was cold, and Mrs. Timms was disturbed about her new kitchenmaid who slept in an unheated room.

"Mary," she said, "it's going to be a cold night. I think you had better take a flatiron to bed with you."

"Yes, ma'am," assented the girl, but without enthusiasm.

The next morning her employer inquired: "Well, Mary, how did you get along with the flatiron?"

Mary sighed, and answered wearily: "Well, ma'am, I managed to get it fairly warm before morning."

"Chase 'em back to a family tree?" said Mose.

"Naw, man; trace 'em, get me?"

Bank of Montreal Reports Assets of Over Billion Dollars

OUTSTANDING of the features of the Bank of Montreal's annual statement, just issued, is the assets figure reaching over a billion dollars —a figure that is not only the highest in the long career of this 122-year-old institution, but a record in Canadian banking history. The statement, which is for the year to October 31, is published with the description "in easily understandable form," the various items of the balance sheet being accompanied by explanatory statements.

Characteristically strong, the bank's statement this year shows more than usual expansion in the more important headings, with commercial loans up nearly $30,000,000—a reflection of the extent to which the bank has been assisting the industry and commerce of the country. These loans amount to $220,548,911.

Notwithstanding this widening of credit, the statement shows no impairment in the bank's liquidity; in fact, its quickly available resources, standing at $742,603,867, are at a slightly higher percentage in relation to public liabilities, the ratio being 78.29 per cent, compared with 77.80 per cent 12 months ago.

With total assets amounting to $1,025,508,367, and liabilities to the pubic standing at $948,502,921 the excess of assets amounts to $77,055,446, which represents the shareholders' interest in the bank. This is made up of the capital subscribed, the reserve fund, the undivided profits and reserves for dividends, over all of which the public liabilities take precedence.

As is to be expected with the substantially higher assets, deposits show a considerable enlargement, standing at $914,090,050—also a record figure —as against $763,156,045 in 1938. Much of this increase is reflected in the bank's portfolio of government securities which, with other high-grade bonds, amount to $517,171,255, as compared with $440,736,820 a year ago. Holdings of stocks total $470,131.

The heading under resources "Money on Deposit with Other Banks" shows an appreciable increase over the figure of a year ago when it amounted to $33,943,063. This year the figure is $77,357,497—and the enlargement at this time is probably indicative of special banking transactions.

Of the remaining headings in the balance sheet, none show any substantial change from those of 1938, except call loans which, both in Canada and abroad, have decreased, those at home amounting to $4,573,822 against $5,374,980, while those abroad at $19,142,173 are down by $2,000,000.

In the profit and loss account, there is a moderate increase in earnings, which amount to $3,462,446, compared with $3,398,390 in 1938. Dominion and Provincial Government taxes which the bank paid during the past 12 months, amounting to $1,198,413, were $46,000 higher than in the previous period. Profits for the year amount to 4.54 per cent of the combined capital, rest and undivided profits, as compared with 4.46 per cent in 1938.

After the deduction of dividend payments of $2,880,000 and the setting aside of $500,000 as an appropriation for bank premises, the balance remained at $82,446 which, added to the amount of $1,183,254 in the profit and loss account a year ago, leaves a balance in this account of $1,265,700.

A table of comparison, covering the more important headings, follows:

Glengarry Presbytery Sessions Impressed by Dr. Riddell

Very Enthusiastic Meeting of Adult Religious Education Held Monday Evening in Avonmore Church.

Monday evening, in the Avonmore United church, a well attended meeting of the sessions, or representatives of the elders, of the different charges within the Glengarry Presbytery, bore much evidence of the enthusiasm that is being created throughout Canada in what has come to be known as the Religious Adult Education movement within the church. The purpose of the meeting was the gathering of the sessions to hear an address by Dr. Riddell of Winnipeg, on this subject to which he has dedicated the declining years of his life, that is, the interpreting to the lay members of the congregations the functions of the sessions, and to the sessions the most effective methods in carrying out the high duties delegated to the elders.

Previous to the auditorium meeting, a most bountiful supper was supplied by the ladies of the congregation, served in the diningroom of the church, where the artistically set tables presented a most delightful picture laden with colourful fruit, glass and silver, followed by a very tempting menu. It had been the intention to have the guests remain at the tables and have the speeches take the informal after-dinner course, but with the response almost more than anticipated, a slight change had to be made to take care of the overflow, which was done by using the auditorium for the comfort of the crowd as the speeches were made.

Rev. Mr. Thomas, of Kirkhill, chairman for the occasion, had the first diners make very enthusiastic use of the spare half-hour in a sing-song of familiar hymns, with Rev. Mr. Dawes of Moulinette presiding at the organ.

Rev. Mr. Morrison, pastor of the church, heartily welcomed the large number in attendance in a short address, while the introduction of the guest speaker was left to Rev. Mr. Halpenny of St. Paul's, Cornwall, who told of the high attainments in the educational field of Dr. Riddell who until slightly more than a year ago, had been head of a Winnipeg college, and his great understanding of the younger generation.

Dr. Riddell is a man who has passed the meridian of life, is of somewhat stocky build, gray of hair and moustache, with a rather dour heavy-cast countenance which brightens to ingratiating friendliness with his oft repeated "Don't you see it?" as he builds up a word picture of the point he wishes to impress, and he does impress as was well shown by the rapt attention given to his discoure of more than an hour's length. He traced the evolution of elders in the Christian church from very early days and the responsibilities they had been ordained to in the churches of today, the outstanding point of which is service by the individual to the individual, seeking those who have been lax in their duties towards God and the teaching of our Saviour, and bringing them into a better and fuller life.

Dr. Riddell has taken this work up as a free lance in the interests of the United Church of Canada. He intimated that he and his wife were in comfortable possession of this world's goods to carry on until the end. He was not paid no sought pay from any source. He paid his own expenses, his effort was entirely voluntary and his satisfaction in the work of the Lord. He characterized the spirit of the Avonmore meeting the finest he had experienced in his 58 meetings.

Before the meeting closed, each session in Glengarry Presbytery nominated one of their number to constitute a working committee to forward the movement under the chairmanship of W. B. Newton of St. Paul's session, Cornwall.

Did That Start Him?

Bore: "I don't know how it is, but I feel thoroughly wound up tonight."

Hostess (tired of him): "How very strange! And yet you don't seem to go."

Interesting November Meeting Held by St. Andrew's W.M.S.

The Women's Missionary Society of St. Andrew's church met for November at the home of Mrs. Weegar. The meeting opened with the Apostle's Creed in unison and the hymn "Fight the Good Fight." The first scripture lesson was taken from St. John x:1-11 and Mrs. Perkins offered the Glad Tidings Prayer.

The secretary being absent, Mrs. G. Crawford took the minutes. The roll call was answered with a verse of scripture containing the word "verily," then the roll was called for the Welcome & Welfare department. The second scripture lesson was taken from St. John iv:14-end. Mrs. Barrie being absent, the mission study paper was held over until the next meeting.

The treasurer gave her report and several items of business were dealt with. A very excellent Bible study paper was given by Mrs. Robt. Rainey followed by the hymn "I Am Not Ashamed to Own My Lord," and the Lord's Prayer.

At the close of the meeting a service of remembrance was held in memory of Mrs. Wm. McLean, Mrs. Howard McMillan, Mrs. A. Henderson and Mrs. Wm. L. Hummel, which opened with the 23rd Psalm read by the president and silent prayer. A very fine memorial minute was read by Mrs. Jay Bailey on behalf of the auxiliary. Mrs. Irwin Cross sang "The End of the Road," and Mrs. Weegar was in charge of the candle service, she being the oldest Home Helper member present. All of the deceased were members of this department. Miss Jamieson spoke kindly of their work since they came to St. Andrew's church. "Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me" was sung and the service was closed with prayer offered by the president.

Mrs. Weegar served lunch assisted by her daughter. Mrs. Cross, Mrs. E. Summers, Mrs. Lyle Thom and Miss Gertrude Weegar.

Mrs. Robert Rainey and Mrs. Bailey voiced the thanks of the auxiliary. Mrs. E. Summers assisted at the piano for both meetings.

Ontario Man's Banking Ability Earns Responsible Promotion

The Bank of Montreal announced today the promotion of W. T. A. MacFadyen from the position of District Superintendent for Ontario to the rank of Assistant General Manager for the Ontario Division, resident in Toronto. For some considerable time it has been the practise to hold periodical meetings of the Bank's Board of Directors in Toronto, and this further action in raising its senior representative there to the rank of an assistant general manager of the bank, with delegation to him of authority in local administration both in Toronto and the province, emphasizes the important position the business of this province occupies in the view of this nationwide institution. As in the case of other provincial centres, private wire connections with the telegraph office in the Bank's headquarters enable immediate conference to be had with Head Office, ensuring prompt and adequate service at all times.

Like his predecessor, S. C. Norsworthy, who since 1931 has been Assistant General Manager at the Bank's headquarters, Mr. MacFadyen is a native of Ontario. He was born in Tiverton and began his banking career at London, Ont., in the service of the former Merchants Bank of Canada. Within four years he had attained the rank of accountant, serving in that capacity first in the Oakville office and later in the Hanover branch. From the latter he was promoted to a position in the head office, where he was employed at the time the bank was taken over by the Bank of Montreal. In the reorganization that followed, he was transferred to a still more important position in the Ontario Superintendent's Division of the Bank of Montreal in Toronto, where he rose in 1925 to the office of assistant superintendent of that division. When, in 1931, Mr. Norsworthy moved to Montreal, Mr. MacFadyen was appointed superintendent of the Ontario division and has since served in that capacity.

During the 17 years in which Mr. MacFadyen has served in Toronto in the administrative offices of the bank s Ontario division, his travels and his personal contact with the 184 offices included in that division have given him experience of every phase of the mercantile and industrial life of Ontario, and a wide acquaintance among business men throughout the province. He is a member of the Toronto Board of Trade and of the York, Toronto, Granite and Toronto Hunt Clubs, and is a familiar figure in business circles in the provincial capital.

Hardly a Tribute.

Edmund Burke, the Irish statesman, was a great rival of William Pitt, and while he had a high regard for the Englishman, he sometimes clashed with him on matters of public policy.

Upon one occasion a bill was up for passage, and someone asked Burke what he thought of it. The Irishman replied:

"Well, it is insignificant, irrelevant, pompous, creeping, explanatory and ambiguous—a bill done in a true Pitt style."

Home Canning of Chicken Easily Done

By:
KATHARINE BAKER

POULTRY MEAT can be canned as easily as any other product. Five general rules should be observed in connection with it.

1. Use fresh but properly cooled meat.
2. Remove bone, gristle, and excess fat. Pack in jars or cans.
3. Sterilize one hour at 15 lb. pressure, or three hours in water bath.
4. Seal as soon as removed from sterilizer, and
5. Jars containing meat should not be allowed to cool while inverted because the fat will harden at the bottom rather than at the top of the jar.

There are two methods of canning poultry. The first is: kill birds then thoroughly cool and draw. Wash carefully. Disjoint legs and wings. Cut breast carefully from bone. Dip pieces in boiling water, then into cold. Drain and pack in glass jars. Make a broth by cooking back, breast bone, neck and other parts in salted water one hour. Drain and pour over meat in jars. Adjust rubber rings and tops of jars or sealers. Partially seal. Sterilize.

The second method is as follows:—Kill birds and draw at once. Wash carefully and thoroughly cool. Cut into joints. Cover with water and cook until meat can be removed from bones. Pack meat in jars. . Strain broth and allow ½ teaspoon salt to each cup. Pour over meat. Adjust rubber rings and tops of jars or sealers. Partially seal. Sterilize.

To Can Chicken Stock.—Cover with cold water, bones, skin, and any small bits of chicken. Simmer slowly until all meat drops from bones. Strain and pour broth into jars or cans. Add ½ teaspoon of salt to each pint and sterilize 90 minutes in water bath or 50 minutes at 10 lb. pressure.

To Can Chicken Broth With Rice.—For each gallon of strained broth allow 12 oz. rice. Cook rice 20 minutes. Fill jars half full of rice. Add soup stock. Allow ½ teaspoon salt to each pint jar. Adjust covers and partially seal. Sterilize as for chicken stock. A little celery and onion may be added if desired.

The household bulletin, "Home Preservation of Meats, Poultry, and Soup," may be obtained free on application to Publicity and Extension Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, at Ottawa.

Ability Recognized.

Me and my brother John and six other men licked a ma ndown at Ballinafad and he was a good man, too. He had a black-face dog with a white pine nose.

Before the War.

"I hear the Normandie goes so fast that they often have to stop to cool the propellors."

"That's nothing! The Queen Mary goes so fast that she has to stop to pick up the wireless messages."

An Advantage.

"Yes, I was introduced to him yesterday, and he told me I was the prettiest girl he had ever met."

"Ah, you see, I was only introduced to him this morning!"

Ground Broken For New CBC Transmitter to Replace CBM

GROUND has just been broken for the new CBC transmitting station to be located at Marieville, Quebec, replacing the present CBM transmitter located at Laprairie, which will be taken out of service when the new transmitter goes on the air, sometime early next June.

The present station has brought radio entertainment to millions of listeners in the Montreal area, but now after a fine record of six years' service it must give way to more modern equipment. The primary reason betransmitter. Laprairie is located on cate nearer the centre of the English-speaking population of Quebec province. It is expected that the Eastern Townships, where a large section of the province's population is located, will get better coverage from the new transmitter. La prairie is located on a main aviation route and it is not permissable to erect in this location a high vertical tower of over 500 feet, such as is planned by the CBC Engineering Department.

The new transmitter will have the same power as the present CBM — 5000 watts—and will broadcast on the same frequency of 960 kilocycles. Primary plans and specifications, examined in the CBC engineering offices in Montreal, indicate that this station will be one of the most modern type and its equipment will carry the latest developments, housed in building beautiful in appearance and practical in design.

The new CBM transmitter will constitute another in the imposing list of CBC constructions — CBF, Verchères: CBL, Toronto; CBA, Sackville; CBK, Watrous—a fine tribute to the achievements of its engineering groups and a concrete expression of its efforts to better serve the listening audience in Canada.

HISTORY OF SILK WILL BE TOLD FRIDAY

A new series of six talks dealing with the history of methods of manufacturing household furnishings will commence over the CBC National Network on Friday, 4.15-4.30 p.m. The series has been prepared and will be presented from the CBC Toronto studios. Miss Bethune's first talk will be "Silks—Old and New."

Interesting and obscure facts about wallpaper, carpets and other materials employed in making the home beautiful and comfortable, will be discussed in turn throughout the series.

Since the ships of Marco Polo returned from China laden with silks and strange cargo, the uses of this material in Europe and America have multiplied to include not only clothing but household furnishings. The progress in methods of manufacture since the earliest days of silk weaving to the most modern methods will be described by Miss Bethune during this talk.

HOW WAR AFFECTS PRODUCTION OF PICTURES

John Grierson, the newly appointed Commissioner of the National Film Board of Canada, will be heard in a talk on "Films and the War," tonight at 7.45 to 8.00 over the CBC National network.

Mr. Grierson was born in Scotland and is widely travelled. He chieved an international reputation as director of the General Post Office film unit in Great Britain. His name is associated with the term "documentary" films, that is non-fictional motion pictures on the life and activity of people and industry in a nation. He was originally brought to Canada to make a report on the various film productions of the Dominion Government. The report resulted in the passing of an act this year which established the National Film Board of Canada.

The speaker will talk in a personal fashion on how the war affects film making—something about Hollywood, and something about other film activities. He plans to indicate how the public is aware of the meaning of propaganda in the motion pictures and that no one today dreams of using this medium with the blatancy that was demonstrated in 1914-1918.

HAYDN, WRITER OF 1,000 WORKS—100 SYMPHONIES

"The Father of Symphony" was no passing title bestowed upon Franz Joseph Haydn. He was that, and more. Dr. Walter Damrosch will give an outline of the life and industry of the great Austrian composer, illustrating his talk with the orchestra playing several of the compositions. This will occupy the second half of the Music Appreciation Hour to be heard on Friday, 2.30 to 3.00 p.m., from NBC, New York, over the CBC's national network.

MARTHA HOLINSHED
OPPORTUNIST

Synopsis.

Marilla Holinshed, Opportunist, attempts to assist Jeremy Smythe, nephew of Alexander Smythe, head of the Peerless Pen and Point Company, to get back into the good graces of his uncle. Jeremy, educated by his uncle abroad to take over the plant some day, proves a disappointment because he is so without words, and is fired. Marilla advises him to get a job in his uncle's factory, where no one knows him, and also has her sister, Angelina, start work there to report on Jeremy. The silent man starts in as janitor, and does his work so thoroughly he is promoted from one department to another as an inspector from the efficiency department checks up on improved output. Ann Devon, secretary of the sales manager, who is being paid strict attention by that worthy individual, Bailey Bridges, and Lawrence Amidown, general manager, both pets of the big boss. Silent Jeremy falls for Ann but to date has had few words with her. Transferred to the inspection department, he soon surpasses men who had worked at the same bench forty years.

"How do you do it?' asked the man from the emciency department.

"I don't talk," said Jeremy. "I inspect. Will you step out of my light, please?"

They made him supervisor of his table first, and afterward of the room. At the end of the next month they made him department foreman.

You would think that all this would have made trouble with the other workers, but it never did, because Jeremy himself was so inoffensive. He had a way of smiling at people, a slow, wide, appealing sort of grin, that straightened out more difficulties than any amount of explanation. The fact was that in this department things had been at a loose end, and though most of the people cared little for production, they were paid, you understand, by the piece. A remark that Jeremy made once—"If you have something to say, say it. Otherwise silence is golden. The gold is in your pay envelope"—was handed on from one to another until everyone knew it. Sometimes at noon people from other departments came in to talk to Jeremy.

Jay Smith began to be heard of all through the factory. Finally he was heard of in the offices and by Lawrence Amidown and Bailey Bridges. They went down behind the cut cabinet in the printing department the way they did when they had something to talk over. One of the printers Satan's was working on the other side where a drawer had been pulled out.

"This Jay Smith, now," said Bridges. "He's getting too big for his shoes or his hat or something. Inspection won't hold him long. First we know he'll be in one of the office departments."

"Efficiency department, I suppose."

"Yes. And the next thing he'll be round telling us not to talk to our secretaries; and the thing after that, the Old Man will hear of it and there will be hell to pay."

For a little there was golden silence.

"I tell you," Amidown said finally. "We'll get him transferred to your department—sales."

"Mine! Mine! I don't want him."

"Listen here," said Amidown again. "I've got the dope. The man's an oyster—dumb. Can't get a word out of him without drilling. That may be all right in point inspection, but it won't go far in salesmanship. He'll fall down on his sales. That way we'll be rid of him."

"H'm!" said Marilla when I told her. But when she told Jeremy he did not say anything.

The next day he was transferred to the sales department.

After that first time Jeremy appeared every now and then in Ann Devon's office. He used to come in very straight and grave and unhesitating, and so businesslike that no one would have thought of questioning his business. At first Ann Devon was rather amused. After that she was not quite sure whether to be amused or angry or both. He came in the afternoon of his transfer to the sales department.

"I'd like to have you go to walk with me at five o'clock," he said.

"I can't." said Miss Devon shortly. She pushed back the typewriter carriage and held her hands ready to begin the next line.

"Can't what?" inquired Jeremy. "Go—or walk?"

"Go."

The pink came up in Miss Devon's cheeks. She was definitely angry now, but her anger had the curious effect of making her want to laugh.

"Why?"

"I've got to work. If you want to know, I've already refused invitations for tonight from Mr. Amidown and Mr. Bridges."

"If you're not going with them," said Jeremy, "then you can go with me."

"But I tell you I won't be ready at five o'clock. I've got to work—overtime."

"I could come at 5.15," said Jeremy. "If you'll be ready then."

"I won't. I ——"

"I could come at 5.30," said Jeremy.

"But ——"

"All right," said Jeremy. "At 5.30."

Ann Devon said to the filing clerk, who was waiting for her letters, that she thought it would be easier to go with Mr. Smith than to stop and argue with him.

In the sales department Jeremy did neither very well nor very badly. To be sure, he made a slogan widely used in the fall campaign:

It writes all right.
It's tight all right.
You buy it right, all right.

But his own sales were inconspicuous. Before a customer he did little save to lay out a pen, and perhaps repeat his slogan — and smile. His smile was less flashing than Amidown's, less beguiling than Bridge's, but it had an honest, dependable quality in it like the goods he represented. Customers bought, but they did not buy largely.

"He's falling down," Bridges said. "But he hasn't fallen flat yet."

Amidown looked at the list of customers Jay Smith had handled.

"He hasn't had a chance to fall flat." he said. "That crowd would buy just so much, anyway, if you sent the bundle boy."

III

THIS was the way matters stood when Gaston McDonald visited the Peerless Pen and Penpoint Company in October. Gaston McDonald had a shock of red hair from the Scotch part of his ancestry and quick black eyes from the French part, and he had the violent temper that went with both of them. He was the head of the Better Penmanship League of America, and there was a move on foot for the use in league activities of a uniform type of pen handled direct through an American manufacturer. The Peerless Pen and Penpoint of course, was in the running, and if they landed Gaston McDonald's contract it would be the biggest single thing that had ever happened to the company.

The whole factory was put in order for his coming until you would have thought we were ready for a state inspector, and Alexander Smythe went on a business trip to Buffalo two days early to be back for the event. You could have knocked me over with a piece of boiled macaroni when the telegraph boy told me that Gaston McDonald had changed his plans and would be there next morning.

Naturally, they wired at once to Alexander Smythe, but it seemed unlikely that he could be back in time. He sent four pages of telegraph paper full of instructions. Amidown and Bridges were to do the honours. Show him the plant. Take him up to the front office and dig in. Nail him. He trusted them to do it.

The next morning Gaston McDonald came. I was so excited that I could hardly eat the box of chocolates that Amidown had given me, and when two or three times I caught sight of them, with Amidown and Birdges each holding on to one of McDonald's arms and talking to him, I was too wrought up to understand a word. When finally they went upstairs to the front office I left a couple of mail boys to take time for me and slipped up to visit Alexander Smythe's secretary. Her office opens into his and the door has a crack around it. She was out, but I sat down a minute to rest myself and it happened that I heard a good deal of what went on inside.

No one could have talked more or better than Amidown and Bridges. Bridges took a pen apart and demonstrated the strength of every part; and Amidown put it back together again and demonstrated how the whole thing was done. They threw the pen on the floor to show that it would not break. They filled it to show the automatic flow check. Amidown wrote with it. Bridges wrote with it. They made McDonald write with it. Nevertheless, after a little I could see that things were not going entirely well.

"Uh," McDonald kept saying; "uh." And that was all he would say.

"But it writes all right," Amidown reminded him.

"But its tight all right," Bridges added.

"But you buy it right, all right."

"But you buy it right, all right."

And just then was when things began to happen. There had been some talk in low voices, practically whispers, that I could not understand, and silence; and out of the silence came a great crash like a chair being knocked over, and Gaston McDonald's voice, shouting mad.

"You're crooks!" he shouted. "Both of you! First you talk me blind and deaf and dumb and dizzy, till I wouldn't take your pen at any price, and then you make me a crooked proposition like this. You want your rake-off, that's all you want. And if that's the kind of company you represent, I'm through!"

"But ——"

"When I say I'm through, I'm through!" shouted Gaston McDonald; and upon that the door flew open.

None of them even looked at me. Amidown and Bridges were hanging on to McDonald's coat and trying to say something about setting themselves right and its being the right pen to write with anyway.

"Let go!" shouted McDonald. "Keep still! Be quiet!"

And I believe you could have heard him all the way from the main entrance to the moulding room.

I rushed into the front office and hung out the window to see what happened. In a minute Gaston McDonald came out and rushed off up the street, banging down his feet at each step so hard that if you'll believe it dust puffed up out of the solid pavement. Amidown and Bridges I did not see. But in another minute out came Jeremy, bareheaded.

"There'" I cried, and pointed.

And at that Jeremy jumped into his Uncle Alexander's car that they had ready to take McDonald out to lunch, and disappeared in a cloud of dust bigger than McDonald could make with all his stamping.

"I wonder what Alexander Smythe will say to that."

It was some time afterward, but I was still leaning out the window. I admit that I had said the same thing before; still, it was what I did wonder.

"Say to what?" asked a big voice behind me.

You could have knocked me out that window with a piece of boiled macaroni. In fact, what with having wriggled forward until my feet left the floor, and the window's having slipped down until the space between the sash and me was smaller than it had been, I thought I should go out anyway. And then someone gave me a pull backward, and I turned around, and it was Alexander Smythe himself. He was like Jeremy, a litte, about the eyes and lips, but grimmer-looking, with bristling white hair and eyebrows.

I thought I might as well be the one to tell him as anyone.

"Well, he's gone," I said.

"Who's gone?"

"Gaston McDonald."

I thought the man was going to burst.

"Don't worry," I said. "Jay Smith's after him."

"Get my car," cried Smythe. "I'll catch them. That car can catch anything."

"That car's the one Jay Smith has gone in," I said.

I thought then he was going to burst anyway.

"And who is Jay Smith?"

I am a discreet woman, and I did not tell him.

"He's a young man in the sales department," I said.

Nevertheless, I thought it was a good chance to let him know a few things, so after making it plain that he could not catch them then anyway, I told him about Jay Smith's being a janitor, and about his being in the box department, and about his being in the inspection room and about his transfer to sales. I told him that he never wasted any time talking, and that was how he got on. I told him that he believed in quality, not quantity, in what he said; like Lincoln when he made the Gettysburg address that people learn now, though they never learn Elliott's speech given at the same time that took two hours to deliver; and like Coolidge when he made the speech to the Massachusetts Senate in 1915 that had only forty-two words in it—and then he was President. Then I went back and told him about Marilla, and how she would not hold the ladder and how I was his timekeeper at fifteen dollars a week. And I told him about Amidown and Bridges and all they had done since I came there and everything that had happened in his office that afternoon.

"The hell you say!" he cried.

Of course I had not said anything of the kind, and I told him so.

"It's the only thing then," said Alexander Smythe — whatever he meant by that.

Jeremy overtook McDonald at the second corner and slowed the car to the curb.

"Ride?" asked Jeremy.

"When's the next train to New York?" McDonald's face was so read that it made his hair look pale and ginger-coloured.

"Tomorrow," said Jeremy softly. "One just gone." And then—"Get in. I'll catch it at Sillsbury."

For the first twenty miles neither spoke, and in the end it was McDonald who broke the silence.

"Crooks," he said.

"Fact," said Jeremy.

McDonald said then everything that he thought about Amidown and Bridges, separately and together. It took him forty-five miles to do it, and it relieved him a great deal. When he had quite finished, Jeremy nodded.

"That's right."

Twenty miles more skipped over the speedometer. Then Jeremy took from his pocket a small battered black object and laid it on Gaston McDonald's knee.

"Pen," he said mildly.

For a minute it seemed as if McDonald might be going to throw the pen out of the window, but in the end he did not. And at last Jeremy spoke again.

"Good pen," he murmured. "Mine. years. School. War. College. Saved my life once. Bullet. Made a dent."

He turned it over and pointed. There was an appreciable pause.

"Peerless," said Jeremy softly.

"But even suppose it will wear forever," McDonald was saying as they slid into the outskirts of Sillsbury, "how do I know it will work?"

"You might try it on a contract," Jeremy suggested. "If it wouldn't work, there'd be nothing lost. You wouldn't have signed anything."

I had no sooner finished what I was saying to Alexander Smythe than everything began to happen at once. He sent for Amidown and fired him. He sent for Bridges and fired him too. He had up the employment manager and talked with him about Jay Smith. He had up the head janitor and the girl from Machine Nineteen in the box department, and Timothy Peebles and the efficiency expert. He sent off several men in search of Gaston McDonald. He sent off several telegrams. He threw the inkpot at the office boy because he was not quick enough. He was a man of tremendous energy.

No one saw Jeremy come back. He left the car at his uncle's house and slipped in through the shipping room. The first that anyone knew of it, Gaston McDonald's contract, rather shaky from having been written in the car, but unblotted — having been written with a Peerless—came up to Alexander Smythe through the office mail. When he realized what it was, he was like a wild man. If there had been uproar before, now there was tumult.

"Call a mass meeting!" he cried. "Find Jay Smith!"

I began to be frightened. And when they came back and said that Jay Smith could not be found, I was relieved. But nothing stopped Alexander Smythe once he was started.

"Call the meeting just the same," he said. "I'll begin and you can find Jay Smith and bring him in."

Mass meetings were held at the Peerless plant on rare magnificent occasions, and they were events. Alexander Smythe said they kept up the workers' morale, and I guess they did. Anway, one alwas meant two hours' vacation with pay and no end of excitement.

When they were all gathered in the big assembly room the place was crowded to the window sills, and I went in by a side entrance and stood in front at the edge of the platform in case anyone needed me. Alexander Smythe stepped forward, a splendid figure, tall and straight, and almost regal with his long nose and high forehead. It was so still you could have heard a wad of gum snap.

Alexander Smythe told them first about the contract, and they cheered. Then he told them that because of the increased production necessary, he had determined to offer bonuses for better, faster work; and at that they cheered more than ever, although of course most of them never worked fast enough to get anything out of it. But his real reason for calling them together, he said, was to talk about opportunity.

For an hour and a quarter by the clock Alexander Smythe talked about opportunity. He talked about Jay Smith too. From time to time he door and whispered hoarsely, "Where is he? Bring him in. Hurry up!" And still Jay Smith could not be found.

Alexander Smythe told them how Jay Smith had come there, a worker no better than the worst of them; about how he had been a janitor, and how he had pasted the corners of Christmas-gift boxes in the box department, and how he had inspected barrels and inspected points and risen to be a salesman. And now he had succeeded where others had failed, and won this contract. The point was that he had known how to improve the opportunity given him by the company. He had not wasted time. He had not wasted words. He had not wasted opportunities.

Alexander Smythe was carried forward on the surge of his own eloquence. He was talking against time, waiting for Jay Smith to be brought in, but I believe no one realized it. I think he could have gone on talking forever. It shows what the man had in him.

At last, however, there was a scuffling in the hall. By bending forward I could see across the platform and into the corridor beyond. Down this corridor came several people, pushing Jeremy before them. They were laughing, for they thought him modest they did not know what reasons he had for not wishing to be thus publicly thrust upon the view of Alexander Smythe. I was scared enough, I can tell you, for my part in it.

At the threshold Jeremy made a last stand, with a foot against the casing. It was in the moment of my catching sight of Ann Devon that she bent down and moved that foot.

"He did not waste words. He did not waste time. He did not waste opportunity.

And at that Jeremy plunged forward across the platform and stopped in front of his Uncle Alexander.

I will say for Alexander Smythe he was a good sport. He looked at Jeremy, and Jeremy looked back, and there was no triumph in either of their faces, and no apology. They were curiously alike in spite of all their differences. And I think that in that public moment of being alone together, each of them realized what I did — that some can succeed in one way and some in another; some by talking, maybe, and some by keeping still; and that either is good.

When Alexander Smythe shook hands with Jeremy and turned back to the audience, yon would never have guessed from his manner that he had not planned the whole thing this way from the beginning.

"You have known this man," he said, "as Jay Smith. It gives me pleasure now to introduce my nephew and partner, Jeremy Smythe."

They clapped him till the room rang.

"Smith!" they shouted. "Smythe! Speech! Speech!"

And finally Jeremy made one.

"We're the firm that put the pen in penmanship," he said. "Three times for the Peerless Pen and Penpoint."

"That's the stuff," Alexander Smythe muttered. He knew success when he saw it. He knew when a man could handle men.

Jeremy left them cheering and plunged out the door; I went out, too, to see if I could help Ann Devon, because I thought he might be angry with her for what she had done. But he was not. I came upon them together at a turn of the corridor.

"I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you," Jeremy was saying.

Ann laughed a little into his coat collar.

"You're—you're wasting words."

"I'm not wasting opportunities," said Jeremy grimly.

If he kissed her once, I believe he kissed her twenty times.

I hurried home and told Marilla all about it.

"And now," she said when I had finished, "you'd better call up the Peerless Pen and Penpoint Company and resign."

I laid down the cracker I was eating.

"Resign!" I cried. "But I don't want to resign. I never had such a good time in my life."

Marilla shrugged her shoulders in that way she has.

"But a Tredenick work in a factory?"

"But my wages come in nicely."

"Angeline," said Marilla, "be reasonable."

There is no point in arguing with Marilla when she begins to talk about reason.

Prominent Toronto Citizen Gives Advice for War Time

W. J. Cairns, Formerly Vice-President Bell Telephone, Speaks Before Joint Meeting of Rotary Clubs.

One good thing this war has done for Canadians, if war can do good, is that it has sharpened our sense of responsibility, declared W. J. Cairns former vice president of the Bell Telephone company and president of the Boy Scouts Association for Canada to a joint meeting of Prescott, Chesterville and Kemptville Rotary clubs at the Alexandria Hotel, Prescott, Tuesday evening,.

Mr. Cairns, a former Prescott boy, is now connected with the Canadian Welfare Council and is a very active Toronto Rotarian. He was introduced to the meeting by G. M. Lyons and was thanked by Frank Dubrule, both of the Prescott club. Harpin Beaumont, president, was in charge of the meeting. Two members of the Brockville club, sponsors of the new Prescott Rotary club, were also present.

Mr. Cairns declared we, as Canadians, must maintain a solid home front. It did not appear that Canada would have to send many men overseas, but that we should have to concentrate on supplies and training the Air Force. He gave four points for his listeners to dwell on during this war, the first being to "Mind your own busines," to tend to your own job the best way one can. Great numbers of enlistments were not required now and if men left their jobs in towns and cities over the country it will be harder to maintain the strongest economic front so necessary for Canada in this war effort.

Secondly, Mr. Cairns advise "Don't listen too much. Don't keep your ear glued to the radio newscasts." He instanced homes where the noon meal was now a trying time as dad insisted there should be no talking during the news period. If disasters have happened, it won't hurt anyone to wait until the full truth can be read in the papers.

"Don't talk too much" was the next word of advice as he asked that rumours be held down, and not allowed to run wild and perhaps bring regrettable harm to an innocent person. Finally, "Rotary seeks to make us a little more thoughtful and kindly in our dealings with other men . . . that is the essence of this thing called Rotary," declared Mr. Cairns.

Many homely truths were spoken to exemplify the true spirit Rotary seeks to instil to make its members better men in their homes and in business. In community work, Mr. Cairns advised that the clubs get behind existing organizations and give all the help possible. In many cases, the existing organization is already in force for community welfare, and further organization would lead only to a duplication of effort.

As an example of the changes in the past 20 years, the speaker told of the work of the Canadian Patriotic Fund that raised huge hums of money to assist the dependents of soldiers in the last Great War. At the war session of Parliament this fall a bill was brought in to set up the fund once more, but after the first reading it was realized that with the increase in pay to soldiers and allotments for dependents the fund was not needed, so the bill was changed and the mechanism left to be put in motion if conditions warranted at a future date.

"We must sit down and study the work to be done. Don't go out and buy a new machine if the old one can be oiled up to do the work," were the closing words of the address.

Many Chesterville folks will be sorry to learn that J. C. Pomeroy, who has been chemist for several years at the Nestlé's Milk Products local plant, has given up his position and taken one with a large co-operative at St. Albans, Vt., of which C. L. Hamlen went from here to take charge of the operating end.

Mr. Pomeroy will be much missed in the work of Trinity United church where he was particularly active in young people's work. The move was a sudden decision, but the employees of Nestlé's were quickly active and presented him with a pen and pencil set as a token of their regard. The Young People's Union, with expressions of regret at Mr. Pomeroy's removal, presented him with a book in remembrance of their association together. Mr. Pomeroy's son Jack came up on Monday and his father returned with him by motor.
