Community Is Shocked John W. Allison's Death

Prominent Maple Ridge Farmer Had Been in Poor Health For Some Time But Seemed Better of Late. —Fatal Attack Saturday Night.

Saturday night the unexpected death of John W. Allison at his home on Maple Ridge, shocked this community very much, notwithstanding that he was known to be in poor health during the past several months. Lately he had been feeling pretty good, going about his farm and more or less superintending the spring operations and early on the evening of his death is reported to have felt better than for a long time, in fact so well did he feel that Mrs. Allison, for the first time in seven months, left their home and visited Chesterville. Around ten o'clock he had a severe heart attack from which he failed to rally and passed away in a comparatively short time.

Mr. Allison was one of the better known farmers of the district known as Maple Ridge, where his farm is conspicuous among several outstanding rural homes, not only for its well tilled acres but for the well-equipped buildings and general air of peace and plenty which it represented.

The deceased was in his fifty-eighth year, son of the late William John Allison and his wife Giddeann Helmer, and he spent his whole life on the homestead where he died. Besides his widow, who was Miss Annie Casselman of Huntsville, Ont., before their marriage, he is survived by two daughters and four sons: Marjorie and Madge, Douglas and David at home; Ernest of Chesterville, and Robert of Nation Valley. Four sisters also survive, Mrs. S. R. Fulton and Mrs. A. H. Fulton of Maple Ridge; Mrs. A. P. McLean of Goldfield, Mrs. Enos Merkley of Nation Valley, and two brothers, Alex of Vars, and David of Chesterville.

At the time of his death Mr. Allison was secretary-treasurer of the Ridge Public School and of Maple Ridge cemetery board, and was a former secretary of the Board of Managers of Chesterville United Church.

The funeral was conducted Tuesday afternoon at the family home by Rev. R. E. Newman with the choir and male quartette of the church assisting together with Mrs. Irwin Cross and Miss Gerttrude Weegar who rendered a favourite duet of the deceased. The pallbearers were Messrs. Howard Fulton, W. H. Casselman, Clarence Helmer. Enos Allison, Wesley Fulton and Frank Helmer. Interment was made in Maple Ridge cemetery.

Among the many floral tributes were wreaths from Maple Ridge Cemetery Board; Maple Ridge Sunday School, and a basket from the teacher and pupils of the Ridge school.

Cubs Take Opening Game By Close Score Monday

Cass' Homer With Bases Filled Start-Scouts in Lead Until Cubs' Rally in Sixth.—Final Score: Cubs 12, Scouts 11.

The Cubs and Scouts opened the softball schedule Monday evening with a finely fought game that kept the crowd excited from start to finish. The Scouts led all the way but suffered a heart-breaking loss when the Cubs staged a sixth inning rally which earned them four runs.

The Scouts showed no respect for the Cubs' million-dollar infield and shoved three runs across the plate in the first innings, and continued with a batting spree in the second which saw four runs scored with none out. The first three batters filled the bases and Cass achieved the dream of every batter when he hit a home run with the bases loaded. A double play by McAvoy to Olsen on Williamson's grounder through second with Hanna on first stopped the scoring and McMillan flied out to end the inning. The Scouts were kept off the score sheet in the third inning but gained three runs in the fourth and another in the sixth. With one run needed to tie the score in the seventh they became too eager and were retired in 1-2-3 order.

McAvoy walked, and scored the only run for the Cubs in their half of the first inning but when they faced a six-run deficit in the second they realized they were in a ball game and started to hit the ball. Lead by Lloyd and McAvoy who both hit home runs, they drove in six runs before the Scouts could get them stopped. McAvoy hit a triple but was out trying to steal home and then showed that it could be done by making a successful attempt in the sixth. They were held scoreless till the fifth when they gained one run and in the sixth a walk to Helmer started the rally which netted them four runs and won the game.

"Doc" Lloyd was the fielding star of the game and helped his team at bat by getting a homer and a single. Pro Alford with two doubles and a single was the leading hitter for the Cubs and Bick Fulton, besides pitching a great game, lead the Scouts at bat with three singles and a double in five trips to the plate while Andy Williamson connected for two singles and a double in four trips besides playing a smart game at short.

Summary:

Struck out—By Fulton 4; Alford 1.
Walked—By Fulton 5; Alford 1.
Left on bases—Cubs 3, Scouts 5.
Home Runs—Cass, Lloyd, McElroy.
Triple—McAvoy.

A. W. Beach, Winchester Injured by Freight Train

Trying to Save Car Parked Too Close To Tracks at Winchester Station Caught Between It And Second Auto.—Ankle Fractured.

When the east-bound way freight struck the rear of A. W. Beach's car car, which had been parked too close to the track at Winchester on Friday, Mr. Beach, who was between his automobile and another car also parked near the tracks, was caught between the two machines and seriously injured. His ankle was fractured and his leg badly crushed.

Well-known resident and a former merchant in Winchester, Mr. Beach had gone to the station to superintend the unloading of potatoes. He parked his car too close to a siding, and another machine, owned by T. Allison, of Inkerman, was placed alongside.

Seeing the freight train coming in, and that the engineer was on the far side of the cab and unable to see the automobile, Mr. Beach rushed to push his car out of the way when accident happened. His car was wrecked. Slight damage was done to Mr. Allison's car.

CHICKEN WITH FOUR LEGS.

Mr. John Loucks, who lives a short distance north of Chesterville, brought to the Record office this week a decided freak of nature in the shape of a five-day-old Barred Rock chick which had four well developed legs and feet, one of a flock of 85 chicks in one hatch. It was not noticed among the others of the flock until three days had elapsed, when it was quite contentedly carrying on with the others. After it was discovered, it was segregaoted by itself and, as Mr. Loucks remarked, "killed by kindness." The wee bird appears perfectly normal in conformation in every way than the etxra pair of legs. If a new variety of chickens could be developed with four legs they would be wonderful for townsfolk who keep them to scratch up their neighbours' gardens.

Railway Bridge Burning Delays Passenger Trains

Overhead Highway Structure West of Mountain Station Destroyed by Fire.—Wreckage Fell Across C. P. R. Tracks.

Traffic between Kemptville and South Gower was badly hampered on Saturday afternoon by the burning of Hayes bridge across the main line of the C.P.R, three miles east of Bedell. Roads leading to the crossing have been fenced off and guards are stationed at both sides to detour travellers.

Although the origin of the fire is not definitely known, it is thought sparks from a passing engine set fire to the dry timber of the bridge. As the blaze gained headway, the whole burning structure fell 30 feet to the tracks below and trains were not able to pass for more than one hour, until the obstruction was cleared away. The fire was first noticed about one o'clock p.m., and continued to burn all afternoon.

Damage to the tracks necessitated the replacement of about 10 rails and 50 ties, while the loss of the bridge is estimated at about $3,000 Sunday afternoon a gang of about 15 men were still working at the ruins and repairing damage done to the track.

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

Choosing the Site of a Farm Well.

The situation of the farm well is often the factor which determines whether the family will have pure and wholesome water to drink or water that is unsanitary, provoking disease.

It is desirable to locate the well 150 feet from any polluting source such as the barn, manured fields or gardens, sceptic tanks, open ditches, roads, garbage heaps or even away from the dwelling house where waste water may be thrown out or where there may be poultry runs or dog kennels

Sow Onions and Sweet Corn Early.

The onion, being a long season crop, requires to be sown as early in the spring as soil and weather conditions will permit. Early sowing ensures the plants becoming well established before the dry, hot weather occurs. For short season sections, advises the Dominion Horticulturist, use Early Flat Red or Flat Yellow Danvers, and for those regions where the later maturing varieties do well, us Large Red Wethersfield, or Southport Red Globe and for yellow varieties Yellow Globe Danvers or Southport Yellow Globe.

Early sweet corn brings the best price, hence the importance of planting as early as possible. Successful sowings made at intervals of ten days apart in the same field is a means of having the first early corn. Should the first planting succeed the second and third plantings can be hoed out or on the other hand should the first plantings be killed by frost the third or fourth planting may develop unhampered.

Use More Alfalfa.

Good soils in the Ottawa Valley are capable of producing fine crops of alfalfa. Experiments over a period of years on the Dominion Experimental Farms show that alfalfa and mixtures which contain alfalfa have given much larger yields than when the alfalfa was not included. The feeding value has also been considerably increased The inclusion of 3 or 4 pounds of alfalfa seed in the timothy, red clover, alsike mixture is well worth while and should be adopted as a regular practice. The best varieties are Ontario Variegated and Canadian grown Grimm.

Combatting Couch Grass.

Couch or quack grass presents a very serious problem in Eastern Canada. Experiments have shown that ploughing as early in the summer as the crop can be removed, cultivating the land during the fall, and re-ploughing just before the ground freezes constitute a very satisfactory method of control. If this procedure can be followed the next year by a cultivated crop, or a smother crop practically complete eradication will be secured. It is surprising and disheartening sometimes, to find that couch grass will persist even after considerable work has been done on the land. However, when right methods are followed, and provided reasonably dry weather is enjoyed, complete success may be assured. In Western Canada, the application of commercial fertilizers with a combination fertilizer and grain drill has proved very effective in controlling many weeds.

Severe Winter Killing.

From all parts of the province come reports of serious damage to fall wheat, alfalfa and clover. Following are extracts from reports received from representatives in various counties:

Bruce: Fall wheat has not wintered well and many fields are completely killed out. There has been considerable winter killing of alfalfa and clover, too. Dufferin: New seeding of fall wheat is improving and is much more promising than was expected, but most wheatfields will have to be seeded to barley. Halton: A conservative estimate would say that 75 per cent of the fall wheat will have to be torn up or patched. A heavy increase in acreage of annual hay and pasture mixtures for this purpose are being used. North Simcoe: The majority of farmers report total loss of wheat, clover and alfalfa. It is not now expected that more than 2 per cent of the wheat will be a normal crop, while another 15 per cent may be partially saved as a feed grain crop by patching. Waterloo: Over 70 per cent of fall wheat acreage will be resown to barley or mixed grain. About 40 per cent of clovers and alfalfa will have to be ploughed up and an annual hay crop sown: Elgin: Fall wheat is very spotty. Some fields wintered well, while others are badly winter killed. Haldimand:Reports indicate that fall wheat, alfalfa and clover will be spotty. Lambton: Fall wheat will be a good 80 per cent crop. Middlesex: Fall wheat, alfalfa and clover have shown considerable growth during the warm weather of early May. While the majority of fields look quite promising, there are some wheat fields in many sections being seeded to spring grains and some clover fields being ploughed up and in many cases seeded to an annual hay mixture. Durham: Most of the fall wheat acreage has been cultivated and sown to barley or re-cleaned western spring wheat. Hastings: Fall wheat and clovers have been severely killed out and farmers are finding it difficult to secure seed. Ontario: Fall wheat is almost a total loss. Alfalfa and clover are badly damaged, but the warm weather has brought them along. Northumberland: About 75 per cent of the fall wheat in this area will not recover from the severe weather, and the same applies to new seeding of alfalfa. Prince Edward: Due to fall wheat being killed as well as a great percentage of clover and alfalfa, farmers will have about double the spring's work to do this season. Victoria: Now that growth has started, fall wheat acreage that has escaped can be estimated at 5 per cent. York: It is estimated that in this county, 90 per cent of the fall wheat will be reseeded to spring grains. This is the heaviest winter killing on record. Frontenac: For a distance of about 25 miles back from the river front, alfalfa and fall wheat have been from 90 to 95 per cent killed. Some fields are totally bare. Strawberries would be about 80 per cent winter killed, raspberries and other bush fruits about 50 per cent. Lennox and Addington: Fall wheat estimated to be practically a total loss and alfalfa and clovers fully 75 per cent.

"This duck is certainly enough to tickle the palate," the boarder told his landlady. The woman beamed. "I'm very glad you like my cooking," she replied.

The boarder looked squarely at her. "I didn't say I liked your cooking," he quickly replied. "I said that this duck is enough to tickle the palate I was referring to the feathers you left on it"

ONTARIO
DEPARTMENT OF HIGHWAYS
MOTOR VEHICLES BRANCH

TO THE CAREFUL DRIVERS OF ONTARIO:

Congratulations—and a Request!

There has been a gratifying decrease in the number of automotive accidents in Ontario. There were fewer deaths in 1933, fewer persons injured, less property damage. The decrease in accidents has been substantially greater than the percentage of decrease in registrations.

To those drivers who helped in this improvement the thanks of this department, the thanks of every citizen of Ontario, is due, and you have mine in large measure.

But, we have only made a beginning!

Despite the improvement shown, there were 8,634 serious accidents last year. 403 men, women and children were killed. 7,877 persons were injured!

By whom? Who were responsible for these deaths and injuries?

The drivers involved were, for the most part, honest, decent citizens; men and women who are usually careful, who only take a chance now and then. They were of no special class. Some of them live in your street, perhaps next door to you. One of them might have been you! Every one of these drivers is sorry now—truly sorry—but all the regret in the world cannot restore life or limb.

The habitually reckless, callous driver is a known, visible menace. Against him swift action can be taken. But it is to the usually careful motorist, like yourself, that this department must look for help in making Ontario's streets and highways safer for driver and pedestrian alike. Will you help?—this season more than ever before! The way is simple, the result can be far-reaching.

Careful driver, respond to this appeal! Remember that it only takes a moment for an accident to happen—one lapse from safe-driving. In that one moment may occur a tragedy which the offending driver may never be able to forget. Every time you sit at the wheel of your car be safety-conscious. Watch! Drive safely always... all the way.

CHOOSE CHICKS ON RESULTS

Last year, Bray chicks won 54 per cent (more than half) of prize money, in a public chick-rearing comeptition, against chicks from 44 other hatcheries. This year's reports so far, show only 83 Bray chicks lost out of 2,400—most of them brooded through the coldest weather of February and March—and pullets weighing 3½ lbs. at 14 weeks old.

What further proof do you need that it pays to buy Bray chicks? Write us for price list, or see the manager of the Bray Hatchery in your locality.

EXPORT OF ONTARIO FRUIT

IN THE HOME MARKET, fruit can be sold soon after picking. It is consumed or preserved within a very short further period.

But for export, if the trade is to be permanent and profitable, there must be not only high quality and uniform grading, but also means of maintaining the condition of the fruit over long periods. To make this possible, the Department of Agriculture has aided local growers in establishing cold-storage and packing plants. Some 20 plants in Ontario have been established through this means.

The results are beginning to be seen. Ontario apples sold higher in the British market than those from some other provinces. Probably $100,000 more was obtained for the Ontario crop sold in Britain in 1933, because of the better facilities encouraged by the Department. The Ontario grower is also aided by sales representatives in Britain, who are in daily contact with the Old Country fruit markets.

In five years the export of Ontario apples has grown from 50,000 barrels to 300,000 barrels; this is due largely to the efforts of Col. Kennedy and his Department.

"FROM HALIFAX TO VANCOUVER"

THERE ARE probably few young Canadians who know that the familiar pharse of the title had, after the Union of 1841, an equivalent phrase—"From Gaspé to Windsor"—to denote the vast extent of "the Canadas" of that time. Many men still active can remember its use in political speeches and writing.

Let us recall how Canada was expanded until "Halifax to Vancouver" replaced "Gaspé to Windsor." It is almost wholly the work of the men of vision in the Liberal-Conservative party, which in 1854 was formed by a fusion of all men of moderate views, men who wished the country to develop along constitution lines rather than by way of radical changes. And it was carried out in the face of bitter opposition from the "Grits" of that period!

The questions of Seignorial Tenure in Lower Canada and of the Clergy Reserves in Upper Canada were first disposed of—then, in 1867, the first Dominion of Canada was brought into being, with Sir John Macdonald as Premier. There were only four provinces in the new Confederation "the Canadas" i.e. Ontario and Quebec, with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The new Province of Manitoba came in three years later (1870) and British Columbia four years later (1871), the Canadian Pacific Railway being initiated to link East with West. The phrase "Halifax to Vancouver" dates of course from this time, 1871.

It should be a matter of pride to the present generation of Liberal-Conservatives to look back and realize the fact that the Confederation of 1861 and the subsequent additions cited, were all the work of their historic party. The establishment of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta (1905) out of the vast lands formerly claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, was of course done during Sir Wilfrid Laurier's regime. But these lands had been acquired under the Liberal-Conservatives as the first step in bringing British Columbia into the Dominion.—The Conservatives, in Canada, have always "shown the way."

TWO EGGS CHEAPER THAN ONE

Toronto Saturday Night.

A very good friend of ours who recently had occasion to breakfast on a railway train found that the one-dollar breakfast consisted of fruit or cereal, ham-and-two-eggs, toast and coffee. Being, like ourselves, a man of most absteminous habits in the early morning, he ordered this breakfast with the qualification that the main dish should contain only one egg. He obtained his desire, but the bill was one dollar and twenty-five cents. Upon requesting an explanation he was informed that while ham-and-two eggs was part of the dollar breakfast, ham-and-one-egg could only be served a la carte, and his attention was drawn to the rule on the items named in the table d'hote on the menu card: "No variation from menus is permitted.'

Escaped U.S. Train Bandit Will Remain in Canada

Frank Grigware Free Man When U.S. Drops Extradition Fight. — Fled From Leavenworth 24 Years Ago, Became British Citizen.

Washington. — Frank Grigware, located in Canada 24 years after his escape from Leavenworth penitentiary where he was under a life sentence for armed participation in a mail train robbery, is now a free man.

Attorney-General Homer S. Cummings ordered the dropping of extradition proceedings Saturday initiated to return Grigware, alias James Lawrence Fahey, to his cell.

"We don't think it would serve any useful purpose to put Grigware back in Leavenworth," Justice Department officials explained.

Grigware, who won the respect of fellow-citizens in Jasper, Alta., to such an extent that the United States Government was deluged with letters on his behalf, held up a Union Pacific mail train at Omaha, Neb, May 22, 1909, and got away with $500. Four men worked with him and all were eventually captured.

Grigware escaped on April 21, 1910, and went to Canada where he became a British subject. The other four men were releasd legally from prison.

Grigware married and pursued a business career successfully until last March when he was taken into police custody for an alleged poaching offence and finger printed.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police noticed his fingerprints corresponded with those on file and wired the Butte, Mont., office of the Justice Department's division of investigation.

Grigware's wife, who had known nothing of his criminal record, came to his defence. Civic organizations and individuals sent letters to the Justice Department attesting to Grigware's high character.

The result was that Attorney-General Cummings asked the State Department to drop extradition proceedings.

The pianist was playing the first bars of the Wedding March.

"What's that?" asked Mrs Jones, turning to her weary husband.

"Oh," he replied, "that's the beginning of 'Stormy Weather'!"

"Please, sergeant," said the recruit, "I can't hold my rifle; I've got a splinter in my hand."

"Hum!" said the sergeant, "been scratching your head?"

A private, walking down a street with his sweetheart, met a sergeant belonging to his regiment.

"My sister, Sergeant," said the bashful young man.

"That's all right," said the sergeant smiling, "she used to be mine."

The Devil's Pot

"THE DEVIL'S POT will boil before morning, I'm thinking." Fred Dale, the young superintendent of Bridge 2, city pipeline series, looked up from a blueprint and glanced after the timberman who had made the remark. Then, frowning thoughtfully, Dale swung himself upon the uncompleted bridge structure, and made his way to a point where he could look up and down the roaring mountain river.

"If the Devil's Pot boils, it will be because the river is flooded," he reasoned. "If the river is flooded that may mean trouble for Bridge 2. I'm obliged for that chance tip."

A veil of mist blotted out the mountains and the foothills near by. A gentle rain was falling, and a warm wind fanned Dale's cheek. It was the first chinook of the year, and Dale remembered that a chinook means a rising river in the hills.

Downstream, near the bend a quarter of a mile away, he could see the Devil's Pot—that strange niche in the cliff where the currents whirled and danced and where derelict logs from the main channel were caught. From the top of the cliff the walls of the Devil's Pot descended sheer one hundred feet to the dimpling, swirling, boiling water. It was like a deep well of simmering water, open on one side where it faced the river.

Dale knew the place well. Because it was a quiet spot, he made it his retreat on sunny Sunday afternoons when the worries of the week seemed an intolerable burden upon his shoulders.

Things were going wrong at Bridge 2; he had discovered the reason but not the remedy. Nearly everyone thought that the only reason that Dale, just newly graduated from an Eastern college, had got this responsible job was because his father was an influential city councilman. That belief was a disadvantage that Dale was trying to overcome.

Older engineers smiled and talked of his "pull." The men under him sneered at his inexperience. Herman Ross, boss of the bridge gang, a man of thirty years' practical experience but without technical training, declared that he "would take no orders from a kid with a pull;" and what he said the men under him repeated and believed.

Dale looked about him at the timbermen and carpenters who were building the permanent bridge upon the first false work of piling. They worked indifferently and stopped often to light a pipe or to get a drink of water or to exchange banter.

Above him and below him on the curving river men were rushing work on five other pipe-line bridges, and every superintending engineer was doing his best to get his bridge done first. When Dale had come to Bridge 2, full of boyish confidence, he had vowed to win his spurs by being first in this race of bridge building. He was failing miserably.

Out there on the piling in midstream, balanced carelessly on a slender capping above the current, stood Herman Ross, the man who held the destiny of Bridge 2 and of its superintendent in the hollow of his big calloused hand. Dale watched the boss, a broad, chunky man, deep-chested, mahogany-red face and neck. Ross stood at ease on his giddy, swaying perch and fluently denounced the logger, who had not set a sling to his taste. The young engineer found himself hating the boss.

The shrill whistle of the donkey engine warned the man that it was five o'clock. Half-raised hammers were dropped, and saws stopped short in the cut. Ross and a half dozen rivermen swarmed across the unfinshed structure toward Dale.

"We'll have to put a watchman on the bridge to-night, Mr. Ross," said the engineer. "There's a flood coming and if the drift ever jams against this piling it will take the whole bridge out before morning.

Ross glared at the engineer in astonishment. He had planned to take that very step, but how had this youngster guessed the meaning of the chinook? His face grew redder.

"Nothing of the sort!" he growled. "I know something about this river, and I'm not going to work any man double shift because you're excited about a little rain."

"And I say the bridge must be watched," repeated Dale.

"Watch it yourself, then, Mr. Dale," said Ross.

Several of the gang grinned. Dale realized that he was helpless. He dared not press the point further for fear he might lose what little authority he had left. Angry, alarmed for the safety of the bridge, sick at heart, he determined to watch the flood himself.

The river rose rapidly after ten o'clock, but what drift came down slipped through the piling. A little after midnight, feeling that the worst of the danger was past, he went to his bunk. But when he awoke at dawn a dreadful fear oppressed him. Hurrying out to the bridge, he found that his fear was only too well founded. Two long tree trunks had locked in the narrow channel against the false work. Rubbish big and little was piling against the barrier. Even as he watched, a huge, uprooted tree trunk came swinging down the channel and struck a blow that made the structure tremble.

Blocked in its old channel, the river was already gnawing at the gravel bank, seeking a way round the obstruction. Once it found a path, it would sweep round the end of Bridge 2 and in half an hour would ruin all the work Rushing to the bunk house, Dale routed out Ross.

"Get out your gang!" he cried and then hurried to rouse the cook. By the time the men were dressed there was hot coffee awaiting them.

When Ross saw the river, he wasted no time in comment. Setting his gang at work to reinforce the threatened bank with rock he led two companions ,armed with peavies, out on the log jam.

From the threatened bridge, whither he had climbed to watch the men seek the key log that would unlock the jam, Dale could look up and down the flying white water. At the bend below he saw the Devil's Pot, half-filled now with logs and flotsam. Even from that distance he could see that it was boiling.

Ross and his companions were prying desperately at one of the long timbers that had been first to lodge against the bridge, but in spite of their efforts the log would not move. One timber projected downstream beyond the jam. Shouting to his men to stop a moment, Ross started to walk out upon it to a point from which he could peer back into the tangle and study the puzzle.

"Go slow there," cautioned Grogan, an old friend of Ross's.

The long timber was vibrating. Dale could see that Ross was in great danger, for his weight on the end of the log was dislodging it. Should it give way, Ross would be swept off.

"Come back!" Dale shouted. "That won't bear your weight!"

Ross turned with a scowl. "Aw, go on back to your kindergaten!" he roared above the voice of the flood.

At that moment the log shot from out the jam; Ross, caught off his guard, toppled into the current. The watchers saw his head come up close beside the treacherous log, saw him throw an arm across it. The man and log were whirled rapidly downstream.

From the bridge Dale watched with straining eyes as the log, with Ross clinging to it, drove downstream with the speed of an express train. As the log neared the bend by the Devil's Pot, Dale caught his breath. Would the log be drawn into the pool? It was a slim chance, yet—

The log slacked its speed. It hesitated and seemed to flirt with the currents of the whirlpool. Then the Devil's Pot claimed another bit of flotsam.

With clenched teeth and a prayer in his heart, Dale had watched. He had forgotten Ross and his gibes; he saw only a human being in danger. While he prayed that the pool would win against the currents, a plan of rescue formed in his brain.

One man he sent running to the camp for a long rope. When the fellow returned, Dale chose him, Grogan and one other to accompany him. The rest he sent out to break the log jam.

The four men set out on a run for the brink of the Devil's Pot. It was a breathless, scrambling climb up the slippery trail to the top of the cliff. Hurry as they would, half an hour had elapsed before they reached their goal. But when they peered into the Devil's Pot they saw Ross. Inert and apparently senseless, he lay half across the log, while the currents of the pool swept him round and round his prison.

Near the brink of the cliff was a firmly rooted fir tree. Round it they put a turn of rope. Dale tied a running noose in one end of the line and directed what was to be done. Then Grogan pushed forward.

"Let me go," he said. "I know how to handle him."

"You stay here, and help haul him up," said Dale firmly.

"But Mr—"

Angry at this waste of time when the very seconds were precious, the young engineer confronted the burly timberman with blazing eyes. "I'm boss of this gang!" he snapped. "You do as you're told!"

There was no more debate. Dale slipped the noose under his arms and tested the knots. Then he wriggled over the edge of the cliff. Often he had looked, fascinated, over this lip of the rock to watch the fall of a pebble to the depths below, and he had turned giddy at the thought of how a man might fall. He acted quickly lest that fear should return.

So quickly did he cast himself over the edge that the slack had not been taken out of the rope, and he dropped ten feet like a flash. As he brought up, dangling, his heart seemed to have stopped beating The old horror of the cliff returned upon him. Clenching his teeth, he tried to concentrate his mind on the helpless man below while the rope lowered him unsteadily toward the pool.

Not until Grogan shouted did he dare to look down again. He dangled only a couple of feet over the surface of the Devil's Pot. Where was Ross? For a moment Dale feared that the treacherous current had snatched man and log out of the pool; but a moment later he saw him.

He waved to the men above to lower him farther. As he dropped to his shoulders in the cold flood, Ross and the log were close beside him. Dale flung an arm across the log.

Ross made no answer; he had lost consciousness There was a nasty cut across his head. His flannel shirt was torn into ribbons, and he seemed to be cut and bruised about the body. He lay limp across the log, but his arms clutched the timber with the grip of a vise. How was Dale to get the unconscious man into the noose? He must move cautiously and quickly. Shouting for more slack rope, he crawled upon the log beside Ross. Lying flat and twining his legs under the log, he managed to slip the noose over his own head and across Ross's shoulders. Now, how should he loosen those tightly clasped arms without tipping both Ross and himself into the water? Seizing one of the foreman's arms he struggled to loosen the rigid muscles. As he worked, the log rolled sullenly from side to side.

"'Tis no boy's play; I should have gone!" growled Grogan, peering from above.

One arm loosened, and Dale got the noose beneath it. But the unconscious man was slipping from the log! Flinging his arm round the boss, Dale held him while he worked breathlessly to loosen the grip of Ross's other arm. The log was rolling and pitching more violently than ever now. Seconds were precious.

Very cautiously Grogan had hauled the slack out of the long rope until it bore part of the burden. Dale's fleeting glance upward spoke his gratitude. A moment later he worked Ross' second arm free; instantly Grogan gave slack. As the big log rolled slowly over, Dale thrust the noose clumsily into place

The men above pulled at Grogan's order; but Grogan, staring into the pool, groaned at what he saw. Ross was rising with the rope, but Dale had been swept from the log as it turned over. He was fighting for his life in the boiling currents of the Devil's Pot. Grogan saw him strike out for the nearest piece of driftwood. For a moment he gained on it. Then an unseen hand seemed to snatch it from his grasp.

"Pull faster, you bullies!" shouted Grogan, and sprang to the line to lend his aid.

Dale was a good swimmer, Clear-headed, determined, he was saving his strength. He must get hold of a piece of driftwood that would help to support him The water that simmered and dimpled when viewed from above was made up of a snarl of cross currents that pulled and twisted and sought to draw him down.

Once, for all his fighting, he went under. When at last he came again to the surface, struggling desperately, his strength was ebbing, and so was his courage.

Above, Grogan and his companions, panting, stumbling, struggling with the rope that burned their hands, gave one last mighty tug. They ran to seize the limp body of Ross as it came over the brink. Stripping off the rope, they cast it over the cliff. At their shout Dale glanced up and saw the loop descending. Then an anguished groan broke from his lips. The rope had caught halfway down the cliff on a projecting root and hung entangled. The men above shook the line wildly, but the root held it. Again they hauled it upward.

Again the hand reached up from below and drew Dale under.

"The next time will be the last," he thought.

His head popped out of the pool, his arms thrashed the water; then the heavy loop of the rope struck him smartly on the shoulder. Clutching it, he pulled himself to the nearest log and slipped the loop into place

The engineer was about the next morning; but Ross, who had three crushed ribs besides a nasty cut over the head, remained in his bunk until Sunday. When first the bridge boss ventured out into the spring sunshine, accompanied by most of his gang he sought out Dale.

The two men shook hands awkwardly.

"You saved my life," I'm told," said Ross. "I've got a wife and family; they'll be pretty grateful. And I'm here to tell you that you're a better man than any of us to have done what you did."

"Not a bit of it," laughed Dale. "How could we get Bridge 2 done first without you?"

And of the pipe-line series Bridge 2 was built first. When Dale was promoted to a general bridge supervisorship, no one on the work thought of attributing the promotion to his father. They all said, "It's because he has such a pull with the men."

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

Conducted By
MISS HELEN LACEY, B. H. Sc.

PINEAPPLE.

PINEAPPLE, either fresh or canned, has many uses. Now that we can get the fresh ones, perhaps it is best to concentrate on ways to use them and leave the canned pineapples until winter time when fresh fruit is scarce.

The simplest way to serve fresh pineapple is to slice or dice it, let it stand a few hours with sugar on it before serving. If you are perchance trying to cut down on calories, most pineapples are sweet enough to serve without sugar. On the other hand, if you do not have to think of calories, the plain diced pineapple is dressed up by the addition of a little whipped cream.

Fresh pineapple mixed with strawberries or raspberries is very delicious. It is a good method for making the first expensive strawberries go farther.

Pineapple Pie.

Did you ever try pineapple pie? It is very tasty, and if you liked the rhubarb meringue pie of last week you will be sure to like this one. You may use either fresh or canned pineapple in this recipe.

2 cups crushed pineapple
2 tablespoons corn starch
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
Juice of ½ lemon
2 egg yolks

Scald the pineapple. Mix cornstarch, salt and sugar, and stir into pineapple. Stir and cook ten minutes. Add lemon juice and beaten yolks slowly. Cover and let cook five minutes. When cool, turn into baked crust and cover with whipped cream or a meringue made from the whites of the eggs.

Pineapple Tarts.

Bake tart shells and just before serving fill lightly with diced pineapple mixed with whipped cream.

It is always handy to have baked tart shells on hand and use them as an emergency dessert. Other fruits such as strawberries, raspberries, peaches or bananas can be used in the same way.

†———†———†

A very useful thing to know about fresh pineapple is that you must never use it with gelatine. Fresh pineapple contains an enzyme which acts on the gelatine to prevent it from setting. If you do use fresh pineapple in a jelly you will be deceived, because it will set perfectly at first but as soon as it gets nice and hard it then begins to get watery and by the time you are ready to serve your fresh jelly it will be a very dejected jelly—in fact it may not be jelly at all, but be reduced to a liquid.

? ? THE ? ? QUESTION BOX

ALICE IN WONDERLAND. — I was very pleased to receive your letter and I hope the following may be of help to you.

1. Question: What is the food value of bananas? To what extent could bananas be used in a child's diet?

Answer: Bananas are essentially a carbohydrate or starchy food. The composition of bananas is 1.3 per cent protein, 6 p.c. fat, 22.0 p.c. carbohydrate, and in a pound (or three medium sized ones) there is approximately 447 calories. Bananas are not very rich in minerals and are poor in vitamins except Vitamin B. The chief value of bananas lies in the starch which, as the banana ripens, is partly changed into sugar.

Well ripened bananas, the peel of which shows black discolouration, are easily digested by some childen, and mashed may be given in small quantities to quite young children.

2. Question: Please suggest some ways of cooking liver and method of cooking liver. I am anæmic and the Doctor has ordered liver in my diet every day.

Answer:

Potatoes or Tomatoes Stuffed With Liver.

Broil liver until cooked through and put through a meat grinder. Season with salt, pepper and onion, if desired, and moisten with tomato juice or boiled dressing. Stuff this mixture in tomatoes or green peppers and bake. Use the same mixture to stuff baked potato. The potato is cut in half, the potato scraped out, mashed with a little milk, seasoned, and put back in one side of the shell, the liver mixture filling the other half.

Liver Loaf.

Season ground liver as above, moisten with tomato juice or boiled dressing, cover with slightly buttered crumbs and bake just long enough to brown the crumbs. Liver loaf is also good using half hamburg and half liver and adding one egg. One must remember, however, that when liver is fixed in this way only a small amount of liver is used so it must be taken in other ways in order to get the proper requirement for the day.

Liver and Onions.

Broiled liver served with fried onions is very appetizing.

Liver Soups.

1. Add finely ground liver to 1 cup of strained tomatoes and season. Cooked celery is also good when added to this.

2. Add ground liver to white sauce, using 1 cup milk, 1 teaspoon butter, 1 teaspoon flour, and season.

3. Add ground liver to beef or chicken broth.

3. Question: When I make pumpkin or custard pie, the undercrust is always soaked. Could you please tell me how I might over come this difficulty?

Answer: Try using a slower oven. If you use a hot oven as is the custom for baking pie crust, the custard filling will cook too quickly and, instead of setting firmly, will become watery and so soak the crust. If that does not help matters, you might try baking your crust slightly before adding the custard filling or you might brush the crust with egg white which will prevent it from being soaked.

Because we believe that careful motorists are entitled to a further reward for Care, Courtesy and Common Sense in their driving, we have extended our Merit Rating Plan in Ontario so that DISCOUNTS UP TO 25% are now available for Private Passenger Automobiles on All Classes of Automobile Insurance— PUBLIC LIABILITY, PROPERTY DAMAGE, COLLISION, FIRE AND THEFT.

10% DISCOUNT to motorists who have owned and operated a car for the past year without claims.

15% DISCOUNT to motorists who have owned and operated a car for the past two years without claims.

20% DISCOUNT to motorists who have owned and operated a car for the past three years without claims.

25% DISCOUNT to motorists who have owned and operated a car for the past four years or more without claims.

Our Merit Rating Plan is the only one available in Canada which provides such discounts for all coverages for Private Passenger Automobiles. These discounts apply, whether or not the motorist has been insured with this Company in the past, and are deducted from the premium on the issuance of his policy.

A claim having been made under either the Collision, Fire or Theft coverages will not disqualify the motorist for his Merit Discount on the Public Liability and Property Damage sections, and likewise a claim under either the Public Liability or Property Damage sections will not disqualify the motorist for his Merit Discount under the sections of Collision, Fire and Theft.
