LYLE ALFORD INJURED.

Lyle "Pro" Alford, star player on Chesterville's Maple Leaf hockey squad, received an injury yesterday that may keep him out of the game the remainder of the season, as he was struck on the knee by a hockey stick in the hands of a young as he was passing in a truck owned by Fisher and Smith who are his employers. The blow brought on an old trouble Pro suffered a couple of years ago and he is hardly able to walk today.

Fugitive Cornwall Lawyer Surrenders to Border Police

Cornwall.—Wanted since June 15, 1938, on a charge of conversion, Howard O. Hessell, former Cornwall barrister and one-time candidate for the Stormont seat in the Ontario Legislature, was brought here on Tuesday night to stand trial. Chief Fred Seymour said he had been advised that Hessell surrendered to United States immigration officers at Rouse's Point, N.Y., who handed him over to Canadian immigration officers at Lacolle, Que.

He was held by Royal Canadian Mounted Police at St. Johns, Que., pending arrival of Cornwall police. Chief Seymour went to St. Johns with the warrant Tuesday afternoon.

The charge against Hessell, laid by Mrs. Sadie I. Goldberg, Cornwall, reads that "on or about June 15, 1938, he did steal the sum of $1,878.12 received by him on terms requiring him to account for same, and converted by him to his own use."

Hessell is 36 years of age and was born in Cornwall. He was called to the bar in Jan., 1929, and practiced at Morrisburg and Cornwall. He was Conservative candidate in Stormont in the Ontario election of October 6, 1937, meeting defeat at the hands of F. B. Brownridge, Liberal, by 4,800 votes. He is married and has two children.

Finch Gains Second Place Locals Lose 3-2 Last Night

Finch Black Hawks went farther out in front of Chesterville last night to lay undisputed hold on second place in the C.O.V. Intermediate league by toping the 3-2 score on local ice in a game featured by a first period of nine penalties, a total of 17, with two majors in the final when a free-for-all developed.

The Leafs, short-handed through injuries to Bud Fyke and Pro Alford, were at a marked disadvantage with their first two lines broken up, and showed signs of weariness in the last period. The game was a hard-checking affair and gave Referee Arnold Lynch plenty to do to keep tempers cooled off.

Finch scored two in the first period, both teams counted in the second, and the Leafs notched the only goal in the final.

Finch went into the lead at two minutes in the first period when Ken St. Pierre took Reilly's pass after the defenceman had fought along the south boards to the Leafs' end following a rush led by Del Robertson. Reilly's pass-out came to St. Pierre uncovered in front of the net and Fyke had no chance on the shot. Reilly put his team up two 11 minutes later when his shot from the blue line took a crazy hop from Fyke's glove and caught the crossbar enough to fall inside.

Bic Fulton scored both of Chesterville's goals, first from Bub Plantz at 2.35 in the second, and the last at 16.20 in the final from D. Munro. Degray scored the last for Finch with but 20 seconds left in the second.

The heavy penalty list was topped when Wes Loughridge and Woody DeGray were given majors with four minutes of play left for starting a fight that brought every man of both teams to the fray. Loughridge had chased DeGray the length of the ice as the Finch player got a breakaway and they tangled in the north-east corner.

Penalties went in pairs in the opening period with Dwayne Munro and Mickey McIntosh taking the count as they pushed in the corner at 5.10. Fifteen seconds later Dob Plantz and Reilly were thumbed off, and in three minutes Del Robertson and Skinner Helmer went to the bench. A minute after Robertson came back he was sent off again and he was followed by Ken St. Pierre and Bub Plantz.

The middle session was much milder as the players kept their eyes on the puck and only three penalties were given out, two to Reilly and one to Dob Plantz. Ill-feeling crept in again in the third as the sticky ice kept nerves ragged and five penalties had to be meted out, one to Dob Plantz, two to Ken St. Pierre, and majors to Loughridge and DeGray for their fisticuffs.

Line-up:

Finch—Goal, Gamache; def., Helmer and Reilly; centre, DeGray; rw, St. Pierre; lw, Landriault; subs, Preston, Dutt, McIntosh, Zeron, G. Reilly.

JUNIORS WIN TWO GAMES.

Last Thursday evening Chesterville was victorious in two home games of hockey when the High School Girls defeated Winchester, and the Junior boys defeated Finch in a C.O.V. Junior league game. The juniors went on to defeat Berwick on Finch ice Tuesday night 1-0.

Play-downs in the C.O.V. Junior league start Feb. 20 and as the schedule will not be completed until the 18th, the high-point team will represent the league, with the play-offs being held at a later date.

VIVIAN LaSALLE WILL SING OVER CKCH, FRIDAY, 4.30

Chesterville's favourite songstress will make her début on the radio tomorrow afternoon at 4.30 with the Homesteaders from station CKCH in Hull, and Saturday evening will be on the air from CKCO, Ottawa, at 9.15 with the Murphy Sisters. This is the big chance that has come to Miss LaSalle following the amateur night staged here a couple of weeks ago when she was awarded the prize after competition with a large number of aspirants. Miss LaSalle has delighted audiences locally and throughout the district for several seasons with her singing and winsome personality on the concert platform.

Curling Bonspeil Arranged

The other evening in Winchester, district representatives of Morrisburg, Metcalfe, Russell and Winchester met and organized a district curling association for the purpose of instituting a bonspiel for the district, and Chesterville was not among those present. The forming of a curling club in Chesterville has been a difficult task. A full set of irons for four rinks have been stored for several seasons, the ice is available, but there is still no club.

It's a grand game played the country over in large and small places, but Chesterville simply will not expend the energy to heave the irons down the ice. Lawn bowling flourishes with local bowlers holding their end up with any in Eastern Ontario and doubtless with curling well started would take just as prominent a place in that game.

Ken Woods, ice maker at the arena, would like to see another attempt made to get it under way. It may be a little late this season, but it would be a good idea to make a try at it.

An X-ray examination this morning at the office of Dr. R. G. Dodds showed no bones were broken in Allan "Bud" Fyke's ankle which was injured in the hockey game at Finch Monday night. He had suffered a severe sprain and it is now expected he will be around in a few days and will be ready for the play-offs. Bud is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Fyke of town.

MAD AS A MARCH HARE.

Col. George H. Drew, the new leader of the Ontario Conservative party, speaking to a Women's Canadian Club, said Hitler appears to be working on a six-month programme, and advised them to watch for happenings during March.

How significant the travelling bag is. We note an Ottawa man has been presented with a fortnight bag. When your friends arrive from the city, or country, glimpse their baggage and get all set, for an overnight call, a week-end stay, and, if it should be a fortnight bag, you are well aware you are going to be visited.

Harry Wilson, a breeder of Aberdeen Angus cattle in the Chatham district, has given up feeding for heavy cattle, preferring to raise baby beef since the demand for heavy cuts has gone out of fashion.

No, dear, when you go to the second-hand store it is not to buy a second hand.

FEWER ACCIDENTS IN 1938.

Accidents in the Home Continue To Top List.—10 Per Cent Decline in 1938 Total.

FROM the statistical bulletin of the Metropolitan Life one learns that in the United States there was a decline of more than ten per cent in the aggregate of accidents of all kinds in the year just gone. The 1938 loss is the lowest since the depression years of 1932 and 1933. The figures for Canada are not at the moment available but they will probably compare favourably with those from across the line.

Motor vehicle fatalities decreased about 8,000 or from about 40,000 in 1937 to between 31,000 and 32,000 in 1938. The gain was assuredly not due to less travel by motor for there has not been an appreciable change in the amount of automobile mileage in the last two years.

From the figures piled up there seems to be little improvement in the number of persons killed in what are called home accidents in 1938. Indeed these accidents seem to be on the increase. In every year they exceed those due to motor accidents but since they are less spectacular less notice is given them.

Canada is less disturbed by cataclysms and floods than our neighbours to the South. We were spared such disasters as, for example, the hurricane and flood in the Atlantic coastal States in September and the floods in southern California during February and March which together accounted for 863 lives. Tornadoes in various places in the States cost altogether about 130 lives, while the plunging of a railroad train through a bridge in Montana was the cause of death to 42 persons.

Care on all hands would eliminate much of the loss of life through accidents. This care is required not only by those who handle automobiles but in every sphere of life. This is a plain fact when we consider that, as already mentioned, home accidents in each year continue to top the list.

THE HABITS OF WOMEN.

A Short Story of Real Life That Should Interest Young Girls And Their Mothers.

I FREQUENTLY saw Mary Seaton as she travelled to her job by the same street-car. She was a striking-looking girl, tall, erect and well turned out. The darglingest little hat, shaped just like a pill-box and not much larger, topped her golden curls. It was winter and her blue eyes were matched by the blue of her frock which, to borrow a commonly-used phrase, was long enough to cover the subject and short enough to be interesting." She wore a grey-coloured fur coat which was most becoming. Her stockings were of the sheerest silk. They would not suit me who am accustomed to the thickest woolies, but I should not quarrel with any item of her attire except the foot-gear. They weren't shoes! They were sandals!

As I sat behind this beautiful young creature I saw her cough into her handkerchief. The cough was repeated and I observed a streak of blood. I was disturbed.

Why are young girls so foolish? Why are their mothers so careless? Why tempt fate as Mary Seaton did?

I missed her after the incident referred to. Then I heard that she was in the "San." Now and then there were hopeful reports. She was progressing favourably. She would be home for Christmas.

In the rush of Christmas Eve, I bought a paper to read on the car. I glance at, among other items, the B.M.D.. I caught the historic name of Seaton. It was Mary's name. Dead at 21. How sad!

—Facts About Canada—

WOOL, THE NECESSARY FIBRE.

The Sheep Has Provided Clothing For Mankind Since the Misty Beginning of Time.

WOOL, the necessary fibre, and its use for clothing goes back to where the misty curtain of time hides both the history of sheep and the history of mankind. Fabrics of wool have been found in ruins of villages inhabited in the Stone Age.

Scientists apparently agree that the ancestors of our modern sheep, when they roamed the eternal hills of Northern Africa, had a black or brown covering of coarse hair, but grew, under this natural overcoat, a fleece of soft, white wool.

The Early Romans, in producing white and glossy wool for their togas, took a leaf out of the book of nature. They had overcoats of animal skins made for their sheep and four times a year these overcoats were taken off, the sheep were washed in wine, and the tangled fleeces were combed out.

When the Moors, who lived in Africa, crossed into Europe about 700 A.D. and settled in Spain, they passed through Italy and drove off flocks of Roman sheep. They crossed these sheep with the sturdier Spanish range sheep and produced the breed which today is known as Merino.

Louis XIV of France, in the seventeenth century, was presented with a flock of sheep by the King of Spain, and bred what is now known as the Rambouillett sheep. Some few years ago some 800 of these sheep were imported into Canada to improve the stock of Canadian sheep.

Sheep are grown in 22 countries and there are about 200 distinct breeds. There are about 725,000,000 sheep in the world and they produce 3,879,000,000 pounds of wool. Canada has about 24,000,000 sheep.

If fibres of wool are twisted together by hand a passable thread can be made, and this thread can be woven into cloth on a frame made from four sticks. In this way the earliest mothers of man, sitting in the doors of their caves, surrounded by their younger children, and awaiting the return of the father and elder boys from the hunt, made woollen cloth.

Long before Columbus discovered America, the natives of British Columbia were spinning yarns from the fibres of mountain sheep and goats, and the hair of dogs, and weaving cloth on primitive hand looms.

The early French settlers in Canada found their first requirements in order to maintain existence were food, habitation and clothing. They produced their own food and built their own houses, but their clothing was supplied from France. In 1705, when supplies of clothing were cut off from Canada by a war, the clever and adaptable Franch Canadian made cloth from nettles and the inner bark of basswood trees. Then they were given permission to keep sheep, and with the wool from the sheep they spun yarns, wove cloths and made clothing. This was the start of the textile industry in Canada. In 1936 the output of factories in Canada included in the woollen textile industries was valued at $42,390,000, giving employment to close to 12,000 persons, with salaries and wages totalling $10,000,000.

Forthcoming Legislature Session Will be Memorable Occasion

TORONTO.—Proceedings of the Ontario Legislature session soon to open are expected to be of a memorable character. Even veteran politicians and observers, scenting excitement in an usual degree, are looking forward with keen interest to the unfolding of unusual events.

QUEEN'S PARK CLOSE-UPS —By— Paul Farrell

Advent of Colonel George Drew, new Conservative leader, to the benches of the Provincial House, means that there will be two outstanding personalities in the chamber instead of only one, which has been largely the case since Premier Mitchell Hepburn headed the government ranks. While Mr. Hepburn, by virtue of his large majority, can dominate proceedings, it is not expected he will be able to exercise the marked ascendancy in debates which have rendered discussions so one-sided during the past four years.

In the new Opposition leader, the Premier will face an opponent of nearer his own calibre, ability and aggressiveness. Col. Drew is known to believe that in recent years the Conservative group has been too supine in their tactics. As a result, debates in the assembly are expected to fire and spectacular qualities reminscent of the days when men like Sir James Whitney, Howard Ferguson, Hartley Dewart, R. L. Bracken and others crossed fire in the House.

* * * *

REPORT AWAITED OF PREMIER'S TOUR.

Members await eagerly Premier Hepburn's report on his Australian tour which he has promised early in the session. There is much speculation as to how far he may go in implementing, provincially, Australia's social legislation. He has intimated that an unemployment insurance measure will be enacted this session, but it is understood the preliminary investigation of such a set-up has proved more involved than was expected, and that this legislation may have to be postponed.

There is strong feeling that the Ontario Premier will make some legislature move towards compulsory conversion of public indebtedness at a lower rate of interest. This is primarily a national problem. It is probable Mr. Hepburn will seek to place the Provincial House on record as favouring forced conversion. It is also likely a strong resolution on defence will be introduced and forwarded to the federal government. The government is also expected to make assessducing taxation on municipal real estate. In defending his Hydro and palities. In defending his Hydro and Northern Ontario policies, Premier Hepburn will probably carry his differences with Premier King into the Assembly and accentuate the split between the national and Ontario Liberal organizations.

* * * *

DEBT CONVERSION ACTION EXPECTED.

Direct action on conversion of Ontario's debt is regarded as impossible because of court rulings voiding Premier Aberhart's legislation along similar lines. But an appeal for voluntary conversion may be made or indirect means attempted by taxation on income from provincial secu ities. The new Conservative leader is watching for any move designed to force investors in Ontario provincial and municipal securities to accept reduced interest. Led by Col. Drew, the Opposition will do its utmost to obstruct any such plan on the ground that it is another repudiation move, similar to cancellation of the Quebec power contracts, and as such dishonest and inimical to Ontario's credit. Col. Drew will, also, once the provincial-dominion rift is aired, do his utmost to raise the national unity issue in the Legislature. If he can force the government on record as adamant for full provincial rights, he will have laid the basis for what is hoped to make the main issue in the next provincial election.

ROYAL VISIT TO HOUSE CAUSING FLURRY.

The second session of the twentieth legislature will open in an unprecented atmosphere of expectancy too, because of imminence of the first visit in history of the Empire's King and Queen. Plans to have their majesties prorogue the House having fallen through an official visit from King George and Queen Elizabeth to the Legislature is being arranged. Already Queen's Park corridors are jammed with scaffolding, hammers are ringing and paint brushes are being wielded about the main block as alterations and improvements are rushed in anticipation of the royal arrival. Though no Speaker is in office, the speaker's staff and House officials are being swamped with early applications for space on the day Their Majesties will attend the Legislature. Pressure is being brought from all corners of the province on members, civil servants, press gallery members and officials for access to vantage points from which to witness the royal attendance.

Tentative plans to build special thrones for the King and Queen in the legislative chamber have been abandoned. Instead, Their Majesties will occupy two massive Speaker's chairs during their reception. The speaker's platform may have to be enlarged to accommodate necessary furniture for the royal set-up, but beyond that no alterations are planned for the legislative chamber itself. An official from Buckingham Palace is expected within the next few weeks to make a detailed supervision of all preparations and arrangements. Until he arrives, finishing touches to the royal programme cannot be made. The regal reception is expected to include formal presentation of all members of the Legislature and all former premiers and cabinet ministers of Ontario governments, past and present.

With a heavy legislative programme in mind from the government side, a more militant Opposition under a new leader and the visit from the British sovereign and his consort, the forthcoming session is expected to be a history-making one.

An Egg In the Pocket

Somewhere in New York, a heavy-set man, bald, of a rather testy turn of mind, is walking around with a poached egg in his pocket—or was. It seems he was in a Childs restaurant and had ordered two poached eggs. When the waitress appeared bearing a shiny white plate with the two eggs shimmering on it and swung around to place it before him, one of the eggs slipped noiselessly and amaginzly into his coat pocket. The girl was panicky but the man, who hadn't noticed what had happened, glowered at the plate and snarled. "I ordered two eggs, didn't I?" "I'm sorry, sir," the girl said simply and wisely. Then she hurried to the kitchen and brought another egg. About ten minutes later the man put down a dime tip and left, with the egg.

Knew His Bearings.

Among the crowd about to pass through the track gates at Grand Central Station, New York, were a sailor and a girl, kissing. Others were kissing, and no one paid any attention — except an idle meddler who noted that neither the girl nor the sailor got on that train. They simply walked over to another gate, joined the crowd, and kissed some more.

Force of Habit.

The Justice of the Peace was performing his first wedding ceremony and he found it difficult to dissociate from it several police cases he had heard earlier in the day.

"Do you take this man to be your lawfully wedded husband?" he asked. And the bride demurely said she did.

Turning to the groom, the Justice asked, "What do you have to say in your own defence?"

Second Childhood.

Some sightseers, in Washington for the first time in their lives, asked a uniformed guard on the Capitol steps when the Senate would be in session. "It's in session now," said the guard moodily, "but I wouldn't go in if I were you—sounds like a d—— kindergarten."

ALONG THE AIR WAVES

BY "ETHERITE"

"THE BARBER OF SEVILLE" FEATURE OF SATURDAY OPERA

Rossini's "The Barber of Seville" will be broadcast from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House with Lily Pons in the rôle of Rosina, on Saturday, beginning at 1.55 p.m. Nino Martini, tenor, will be heard as the Count of Almaviva; Richard Bonelli, baritone, as Figaro; Ezio Pinza, basso, as Don Basilio, and Virgilio Lazarri, basso, as Dr. Bartolo.

"The Barber of Seville" is one of opera's great comic dramas. The spontaneous gaiety of Rossini's music combines admirably with the spirit of Beaumarchais' character of Figaro, the irrepressible barber who assists romance, arranges marriages and is generally a party to all of the intrigues of Seville.

CHURCH OF THE AIR.

From 2.30 to 3.00 p.m., Sunday, Father Warren of Hamilton will deliver the address on The Catholic Hour with music by the choir of St. Michael's church, Toronto. From 5.00 to 5.30 p.m. The Church of The Air will be conducted by Rev. George R. Calvert of St. Matthew's Anglican church in Winnipeg. Rev. Mr. Calvert has been heard previously on CBC networks, during the "Tudor Manor" and "Ventures in Citizenship" programmes.

ST. JAMES'S PALACE HISTORY TO BE GIVEN ON SUNDAY

St. James's Palace—"Our Court of St. James," to which ambassadors and ministers are still accredited although it has long ceased to be the sovereign's residence—will be the subject of the second programme in the series "London's Royal Palaces," for Sunday, 5.30 to 6.00 p.m., by H. Rooney Pelletier, of the CBC, at present on loan to the BBC. The broadcast will originate in BBC's London studios and will be heard over the CBC's national network through the short-wave receiving station at Ottawa.

The building of the palace was begun in 1532, but it did not become the official home of England's monarchs until the reign of William III. Rich in historical associations, it was the home of Charles I in his happier years, and on the morning of his execution, he attended Divine Service in its chapel. It was from this palace that James II fled on his journey into exile. St. James's Palace was the official home of the first four Georges. During the reign of Queen Victoria it came to be used only for Courts, Levees, and other ceremonies. It is in the Friary Court, the nearest part of the Palace to Marlborough House, that the ceremoney of Changing the Guard takes place when the King and Queen are not in residence at Buckingham Palace.

It now holds a programme that sets a new record in commercial radio. The new agreement, which includes Carleton E. Morse, the author, and the entire original cast, is for seven years, extended until Dec. 19, 1945.

CANADIAN GIRL'S BIG THRILL, AT SECURING CONTRACT

Ann Jamieson, who made her radio début in Toronto and became the star of "Hollywood Hotel," came home to Toronto last week for a concert at Eaton Auditorium. On Monday, Jan. 30, she was Monica Mugan's guest on CBL, where she had once appeared as a regular artist on the Neilson Hour under the direction of Geoffrey Waddington. Questioned by Monica Mugan, Ann Jamieson revealed breaking into "big time" in the United States was the surprise moment of her career. Her first audition was in competition with many radio celebrities. Immediately after facing the microphone and before hearing the results, Miss Jamieson slipped out of the studio and into a motion picture theatre, discouraged. In the meantime NBC officials were searching for her, contract in hand. When they finally contacted her the following morning, Miss Jamieson was the most astounded young woman in New York. From Toronto the young singer went to Guelph, to visit her mother and sister.

Who Can Blame Henny Penny?

In a crowded café one evening, a lot of people were standing waiting for a table, among them one small stag. A tall young lady, wearing a pendulous creation with lots of cloth dangling from it, came up behind him quietly and looked over his head, trying to see if there were any seats in the corner. She must have brushed him, for he turned suddenly and threw both arms around her waist, bracing himself. "I'm sorry," he said after they had got untangled. "I'm sorry, but I thought one of the coat racks was falling on me."

General Election Plans Changed Is Belief Around "The Hill"

MIRROR OF THE NATION —By— "Commoner"

It has been known that Mr. Mackenzie King contemplated an appeal to the country as soon as possible after the present session of Parliament. His plan was to make his Washington trade bargain the issue. He proposed to present the trade treaty to the country, not so much as a reciprocity treaty securing definite trade advantages for Canada, but as a peace treaty. His plan was to put it up to the people that they could not refuse to endorse him without putting themselves in the position of refusing to approve of a contribution by Canada to the promotion of peace and especially to closer relations between Great Britain and the United States.

By representing the trade bargain to be an arrangement, first, for securing greater friendship between Great Britain and the United States and, second, for promoting international good-will and appeasement, and making it the chief election issue, Mr. Mackenzie King and his advisers figured that the Canadian people, in their desire for peace, would feel obliged to endorse the treaty by voting for the government.

It was a good political plan if it would work. Six weeks ago the Prime Minister and his advisers felt quite sure it would work. Now they are not so sure. Confidence in the plan has been decreasing rapidly since the terms of the Washington bargain were made public and especially since the claim it is a peace treaty has been subjected to examination in Parliament.

The Government is now reluctantly convinced that the Washington bargain is falling flat both as a trade deal and a peace treaty.

That is why the Prime Minister is now less definite in his intention to go to the country this year.

PRESSURE FROM ALL SIDES FORCING POSTPONEMENT.

THE Government is under heavy pressure from several sections of its followers in the House of Commons to abandon the plan for a 1939 election. Ontario members are at the head of the movement but most of the contingent from the Prairie Provinces are with them and they have support from the Quebec and Maritime groups. If the Prime Minister took the advice of his followers in Parliament he would not risk bringing on the election before he has to, or before 1940 at the earliest. Mr. King has pointed out, significantly, that he need not appeal to the voters before 1941. The House of Commons opponents of a 1939 election are concerned for their own individual seats as well as for the fate of the Ministry. They are largely responsible for persuading the Government that the "peace treaty" plan won't work.

WASHINGTON BARGAIN FAILED TO DAZZLE.

RELUCTANCE of the Administration's followers in the Commons to face an election this year is due mainly to the absence of any programme for dealing with the realities of conditions in Canada. With the Washington bargain already fallen flat their reasoning is that public attention will not be diverted from unemployment, economic insecurity, agricultural distress and other internal conditions. They figure that the public will not be persuaded that the way to grapple with these conditions is through the appointment of royal commissions, the calling of more Dominion - provincial conferences, the raising of constitutional issues, disputes with provincial governments or the handing out of large contracts for public works. The arguments which private members behind the Government are advancing against the advisability of an election this year are based on their acquaintance with the present humour of the electorate. House of Commons members are anxious for a general election only when they feel confident of retaining their seats.

The Administration's spending programme for this year, as indicated in the main financial estimates, is, of course, an election sign. It is by way of precaution, however, and does not commit the Government. It could be duplicated in 1940 should the opposition to an election this year prevail.

"I have waited so long for Canada to be relieved of its difficulties by means of trade treaties that I do not intend to be fooled by this one."

BUTTER PRICES ROCKED BY LARGE IMPORTS.

SOME Liberal Members from Ontario and Quebec are holding informal meetings to discuss the heavy surplus of butter in Canada and the consequent depression of butter prices to farmers and dairymen. The discussions need not go very far. One of the principal causes of the surplus, and the resulting low prices, was a tremendous importation of butter into Canada this last year. With a surplus of domestic butter being produced, Canada imported no less than 5,231,338 pounds from abroad. Nearly three million pounds of this came from New Zealand, 1,400,000 pounds from Australia. Of nearly a million pounds imported from the United Kingdom, a considerable part, it is believed, was Canadian butter brought back to Canada with the effect of depressing the prices for Canadian producers. The total imports of over five million pounds in 1938 compares with imports of only 65,918 pounds in 1937.

A commentary on this situation was contained in the speech of Agnes McPail in the debate on the Address, in which she discussed the failure of the Administration to cope with agricultural conditions. She said: "It must give the Conservatives some satisfaction when they think back to the Natural Products Marketing Act and remember the opposition—the political opposition, if I may say so—that the Liberal Party put up to that Act. They did not want it and the Privy Council of Great Britain—I shall not say for that reason, although it may have had a bearing — threw out the legislation and called it ultra vires."

* * * *

National Disunity.

"If the Government had had a proper approach to the provincial governments, if it had gone out in the spirit of compromise, we should have in Canada today national health laws, national hospitalization and national labour laws, all of which are badly needed. All these improvements could have been law today if the Government had been willing to compromise with the provinces, as it ought to have done." — Karl Homuth, M.P. for South Waterloo, in the House of Commons.

BOOKS UNLIKELY TO CARRY DISEASE.

DR. ARTHUR H. BRYAN, Baltimore, Md., made laboratory tests on books recently used by students and found few germs of any kind; those present were mostly of a harmless variety.

Communicable diseases are transmitted mainly by the person and not by objects. Books that have been handled recently by patients suffering from smallpox, scarlet fever or diphtheria may transmit such infections to susceptible persons. There is scant likelihood that common colds, tuberculosis or typhoid fever would be transmitted by library books or magazines. Any viruses or bacteria present on books soon die because of the absence of moisture, heat and the food necessary for their continued existence. In most instances disease-carrying germs soon cease to live outside the body.

Some years ago it was the custom that books on premises under quarantine were required to be disinfected by means of the fumes of formaldehyde. It is generally believed that the exposure of books to sunlight and fresh air is equally effective. In most contagious disease hospital, books that are used by a patient are destroyed when the patient leaves the hospital. In no case is the patient allowed to take the books with him from the hospital.

The hands are one of the commonest agencies in transmitting infections. Consequently when a book is read the hands should be clean. Printer's ink is illuminationg in a thousand ways; it has no antiseptic or inhibitory action on viruses or bacteria.

HANDSOME — PERHAPS.

Sherbrooke Record.

UNTIL NOW Hitler has enjoyed pretty general approval of the feminine population of Germany. He was described as handsome when he first came to power and there were some of them who believed he had brought about better days for the German nation.

But when he issued his call for German girls for labour on farms and in households, bearely a hundred thousand responded.

Now he has issued an order that all girls who seek private or state jobs must furnish evidence they have laboured for a year on farms or in the households. He said nothing about pay, and that year of hard labour may be just a patriotic requirement.

The ladies, it is reported, have now learned that Adolf is not the handsome cavalier they once thought him.

Looked Before She Leaped.

One evening at the rush hour, a girl standing at the corner of 57th Street and Fifth Avenue, New York, hailed a southboard cab. It pulled in ahead of a bus, and as she ran to catch it she passed the platform of the bus. "Here, here! Don't be so extravagant," the conductor said chidingly. The girl stopped, thought it over and boarded the bus.

Fine Tribute at Moose Jaw For Late John E. Graham

(Moose Jaw, Sask., Times-Herald.) (Feb. 1.)

A last observance was paid to the memory of John E. Graham by his many friends and admirers who thronged Zion church Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. Tribute was paid to his memory by the many associates and fellow members of the several organizations in which the deceased took an active part in his lifetime.

Rev. J. W. Pratt conducted the service and gave as his text "And His servants shall serve Him and they shall see His face" (Revelations 22, verses 3 and 4). Clarence Stansfield sang a solo. "Face to Face."

Rev. Mr. Pratt made brief reference to the several groups present which represented the many organizations of which the deceased had been a member. A brief service, observed by the St. George's lodge, A.F. and A.M., of which Mr. Graham was an honoured member, was led by W. W. Snider and T. W. McPhail. None had entered more into the true spirit of the fraternity of Masons or had a brighter hope than he to whom tribute was being paid.

He was honoured also a true and active member of the Rotary Club. In his life he had sought to incorporate its ideals of service in his business and personal relations. His unfailing courtesy and tact and the general high standards of his life gained for him a host of friends, but it might truthfully be said that the height of his devotion was to his church and he had consecrated great gifts of personality to its service. Especially appropriate to his life, Rev. Mr. Pratt observed, were the texts "He being dead, yet speaketh," and "Their works do follow them."

Kind and ever gentle, his softly spoken opinions were taken by many In his life he epitomized all that can be good in man, and his faults, so few, were shaded into darkness by his generosity. Known to many in every walk of life, John E. Graham had served on the board of stewards of Zion church for many years. In a life devoted wholly and unselfishly to the community he had also served on the Parks Board.

Interested intensely in the welfare of the younger people, he was a director of the Y.M.C.A. since 1922 and had been vice-president since 1928. Many young men could tell of kindly words and deeds from Mr. Graham which had encouraged and helped them to live a life of service to the community.

Rev. Mr. Pratt said of him, "I have seen him early and late, earnest in the cultivation of the spiritual life, and giving of his great powers of organization and leadership, and they were of a high order, that this church would stand alongside others in witnessing to the good life and helping young and old to live it."

The choir was in attendance and sang the hymns "The King of Love My Shepherd Is" and "How Firm a Foundation."

John E. Graham passed away, Tuesday, Jan. 24, at Long Beach, Calif., after a short illness, at the age of 64 years. He leaves to mourn, a widow and two brothers, Charles, of Chesterville, and Arthur, of Brinston. From the many organizations to which he belonged his passing will be keenly felt.

At the conclusion of the service, the long funeral cortège wound slowly to Rosedale cemetery, where he was laid to rest.

Honourary bearers were A. W. Irwin, chairman of the board of stewards of Zion church; B. C. Crichton, superintendent of the Parks Board; H. W. Falconer, chairman of the Parks Board: Thomas Miller, president of the Y.M.C.A.: William Thatcher, president of the Rotary Club; Fred Jones, president of the Moose Jaw Agricultural Society; A. P. Brown, manager of the Regina branch of the International Harvester Co.; J. A. B. Reilly, manager of Robert Simpson Western, Ltd., Regina; and A. P. Park, Saskatchewan manager of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co.

Acting pall-bearers were H. A. Davidson, R. H. Clarke, W. T. Cunningham, W. P. Angus, G. Walker and Wm. Anderson.

The Guardian Angel.

A graduate student at Columbia went to the Morgan Library recently to examine some manuscripts. As she was leaving she noticed she would have to pass between two faintly hostile and frigid attendants who guarded the door, and under their gaze she felt as though her pockets were bulging with priceless manuscripts. She faced it out and was nearly out of the place when one of the attendants advanced a step. "Madam," he said, keeping his eyes straight ahead of him, "your slip is showing."

It Is Curious.

"Professor, there's one thing about astronomy that puzzles me."

"What's that?"

Willie: "That's funny. My dad's eaten fish all his life and still he can't swim a stroke."

To Decide Within a Week About McDonald's Extradition

Malone, N.Y.—Federal Commissioner Ralph Levy said Monday he would decide "within a week" whether to grant extradition to Canada of Dan Arthur McDonald, 53-year-old United States citizen wanted in connection with the slaying of Captain Fernandez Cameron last November 21.

Levy is studying briefs filed by C. J. McDougal, of Cornwall, Ont., counsel for McDonald, objecting to documentary evidence entered by the Crown on grounds he had no opportunity to cross examine witnesses who made affidavits and by the Ontario Government, contending such cross examination would be "highly improper."

"PEANUT KING" MAKES DEAL BEHIND HIS PRISON BARS

London, Ont.—A business deal behind the bars in Middlesex County jail was disclosed with the reported sale by Melville Campbell, convicted bank robber, of a slice of his peanut machine business in Toronto to Louis Kaman, serving a month's term on a lottery charge.

Campbell, sentenced to eight years for the hold-up of a Mount Brydges bank, and Kaman met in Middlesex jail before Campbell was moved to Portsmouth Penitentiary. Preliminary details of the transaction were completed there and the legal end of the deal is being wound up now by a lawyer. Campbell sometimes is referred to as the "peanut king" of Toronto.

Quite Different.

"Was I driving too fast?" asked the Texan, apologetically. "Heck, no, you were flying too low," the patrolman retorted.

THE GREAT SEPTEMBER GALE

ONE EVENING in November Grandmother Ruth was giving Theodora and Ellen their first lesson in spinning yarn. Ellen complained that the wheel-finger was too large for her hand.

The old lady regarded her patiently. "Well, child, there is a little one in that old yellow chest in the attic," she said. "Light a candle and run up and get it. You will find it down under some things in the bottom of the chest."

Ellen was gone for some time, and when she returned she brought not only the smaller wheel-finger but the wreck of an old umbrella. It had been an elegant one in its day, for the stick carried a hand-carved ivory handle and had silver ferrules on it. The covering, too, though now split at every rib, was of heavy green silk.

"Oh, Gram! Can't I have the handle of this old umbrella?" Ellen cried. "It is such a pretty one! And see, it pulls off easily."

"You will have to ask Joseph about that," Gram replied with a glance at the Old Squire, who sat nearby. "That is his umbrella. It is one they say he brought home when he was a small boy and never told just how he came by it," Gram went on. "Perhaps now he will tell you," she added.

"No, I did not steal it exactly, although I always felt a little queer over the way I got it," he remarked; and in response to our pleas he related the following story of his boyhood.

IT went back to the year 1815—the time of "the great September gale" as old people termed it for a generation afterward, which devastated all New England. What the Weather Bureau today would call this storm, I hardly know. It wasn't a tornado, for it lasted all day and through much of the following night. In the West Indies they would have called it a hurricane. Perhaps it was one that had strayed off from that centre and haunt of cyclonic storms; one that lost its way, so to speak, and came roaring up the Atlantic coast, to vent its spite in the lands of the Puritans. For pure destructiveness there appears never to have been anything quite like it in New England, before or since.

How our then youthful Old Squire chanced to be out in it requires a word of explanation. His mother, partly from maternal pride as well as a desire to have her boy see something more of the world, had planned a visit for him to Salem, Mass., where her girlhood had been passed, and where she had relatives. At that time it was a momentous four-day journey on horseback.

His father was not much in favour of the boy's going off so far, but he yielded the point, as he generally did to whatever Great-Grandma Betty urged; he was a quiet, peaceful man, and his energetic wife was easily the head of the ancestral home.

They bought Joe a new outfit, obtained a new saddle for old Jane, one of the family horses, and started him on his trip in company with a young man named Jotham Fowler from Newburyport, Mass., who had been examining land for a farm in Maine and was now going back to get his younger brother Hiram.

The journey proved uneventful. The pair jogged on together, first to Portland, then to Saco and to Portsmouth, N.H., and thence on to Newburyport, where a young carpenter was found who was about to make a trip to Boston on horseback by way of Salem. In the company of the carpenter Joe reached Salem and the fine old mansion of his uncle and aunt, Nahum and Mahala Hobbs.

He remained for two weeks and no doubt had a fine time. The city with its ships and sights must have been an exciting place to a lad fresh from the backwoods of Maine. He did not want to go back home, but it had been planned in advance that he should return with the Fowlers, leaving Newburyport on the twentieth of September. Uncle Nahum and Aunt Mahala were to take him there in their chaise and lead old Jane, under saddle, behind. But a northeast storm had set in on the eighteenth of the month, and it was still raining next morning. The chaise part of the trip was therefore abandoned; but, as it was felt that the boy should keep the appointment, Nancy Hobbs, an older cousin of Joe's, was sent with him on a side-saddle and palfry.

It must have been a disagreeable wet ride for a young lady on horseback, and it is doubtful if Cousin Nancy greatly enjoyed it. But they cantered along together, Nancy setting the pace, Joe trailing her, and by ten that forenoon they had passed Ipswich.

Quite suddenly the rain ceased with a rousing clap of thunder. The wind, which had been from the northeast, shifted. There followed within the next five minutes another burst of rain from the west, mingled with hailstones as large as filberts. Their horses balked and appeared frightened. The sky to the southwest had taken on a strange lurid aspect, full of wildly rolling clouds that seemed to be slipping along the surface of the land.

Immediately the first gust of the gale struck them with a terrifying roar. It lifted Joe clear of his saddle and dropped him by old Jane's side. Nancy, too, was dismounted by it and became much alarmed.

"We must go back!" she cried to Joe; but the lad felt that he must meet the Fowlers at Newburyport as he had promised; otherwise he would have to journey alone all the way home.

A hay cart was approaching from the direction of Newburyport, the horses on the gallop, the driver hatless. Three men with scythes and rakes, who were putting up marsh hay on the flats that bordered the road, came running to escape the high tide that was rolling in from the sea. They shouted to Joe to join them, but he was holding old Jane by the mane and trying to tell Nancy that he must get on to Newburyport without delay.

That was the last he saw of his cousin Nancy, for just then another of the tremendous gusts of wind that marked the progress of the gale hit them both with even greater violence than the first. It may be added that the girl was later picked up insensible in the wreck of the rope-walk near Ipswich. She recovered, but her saddle-horse was never heard from. Joe and old Jane were swept resistlessly along the highway and finally blown from it into a salt inlet that crooked its way through the marshes. The lad fell in mud and water but was helped out by the driver of the hay cart, who had landed with his team in the same salt creek.

"Where are you going, boy?" the man shouted to him during one of the lulls that succeeded the gusts.

"I've got to get to Newburyport," Joe explained.

"That your hoss?" the man inquired pointing to old Jane, who was splashing about in water up to her sides.

"Yes, and I must catch her to ride home on," Joe replied, and then told his rescuer where he lived.

"Wal, I dunno what to advise ye," this kindly person declared. "But you had better skootch down under this bank awhile."

Joe, however, was intent on getting old Jane out of the creek, and the man tried to help him rescue her, even leaving his own team to do so.

Before they had accomplished anything, another gust struck, so overpowering that they could neither speak nor breathe. Joe found himself once more in the creek, not far from the hay cart, and, though drenched and nearly breathless, he managed to climb into it.

The teamster was endeavouring to extricate his own horses, and at length got them out, cart and all—with Joe still in the cart. But alas for old Jane! She had struggled out on the wrong side—the seaward side—of the creek and could be seen running toward a little haystack, one of many that were scattered over the salt marshes, each perched on a foundation of posts set in the mud. Farther to seaward they saw the water rolling in. Little wonder that Joe's new friend looked disheartened.

"I'm afraid we can't get your hoss back across the creek," he said. "It's fillin' with the tide. I've got to get to Ipswich," he added. "If you must go to Newburyport, about the best you can do is to hoof it along the road here afoot. If another gust comes, you better drop down flat in the road and lie still till it blows by."

JOE didn't like to leave old Jane, but thought the Fowlers would perhaps return with him to recover her later. He started to run along the highway, as advised, for a considerable distance. For a minute or two the sun nearly came out, but a wild, ink-black cloud was rolling up from the south, and immediately the same violent roaring of the wind was heard. Pausing a moment to glance back, Joe saw dirt, leaves and a cloud of small objects rising in the air. He was now on a long bridge over what seemed to be a tidal river with several boats and a schooner on it. Approaching along the road from the farther side of the bridge was a load of hay and other teams, the people with them shouting and lashing their horses. At this moment a gust, the worst one so far, came rushing down upon them. Fearful of being run over by the teams, Joe shrank down by the railing of the bridge; but an instant later he felt the railing give way, and he was blown into the river with it.

Probably he would have been drowned if he had not chanced to fall near a boat partly filled with water. He got hold of it before he sank, and clambered inside, when he found that he was not alone. A little two-wheeled donkey cart, without a driver, had been blown from the bridge at the same time. The donkey floated, and put its nose on the gunwale of the boat into which Joe had climbed. He got hold of the reins and helped the poor animal to hang on. The cart appeared to be filled with umbrellas.

A tremendous shower, with a few hailstones, was now falling, accompanied by dazzling flashes of lightning and crashes of thunder. Then came other great gusts of wind, but the embankment of the road leading up to the bridge broke the force on the lee side.

In a short time the boat—a large dory — went adrift from the bank where it had been drawn up, and floated out on the river. What to do Joe did not know. There were no oars in the boat. The little donkey groaned agonizingly at times as if afraid of losing his nosehold on the dory; and to help him keep his position Joe made the rein fast inboard and drew it tight.

Probably by reason of the heavy rainfall, a strong current was setting beneath the bridge, and the dory, with Joe inside it and the donkey clining to it, was borne along the channel seaward. The boy now discovered that he was in other trouble; he was unable to step on his left foot, and the ankle was puffed up strangely, as big as two ankles should be. Quite likely it had been injured when he fell from the bridge, although in the alarm and excitement of the moment he had been unaware of feeling hurt. But at present it pained him badly, and he could not bear his weight on it.

I SUPPOSE our then young Old Squire was about twelve years old, and it would be little wonder if he shed a few tears. Terrific gusts still raged and roared, driving marsh grass and even frogs into the dory. He was obliged to crouch low and cling to the thwart to keep from being blown overboard. Yet he still tried to prevent the poor groaning donkey from losing its hold.

They were driven by the wind along the channel until the sea could be seen breaking and foaming beyond a line of sand hillocks not far off. As often as the dory went aground, the gale whirled it out and away again, donkey and cart still following.

Presently as they approached the sand dunes where the river found its way through them to the sea, the boat grounded on the shallows. Here the donkey got a foothold and, breaking away, waded ashore and as Joe looked about he caught sight of a little hut, sheltered by the sand hills, and saw an old woman standing in the doorway, her hand shading her eyes as she watched him. He called to her, but the wind blew his voice away; he then made signs for her to come out to him. She hastened forth, struggling, half-doubled up, against the gale, and on reaching the dory seized the bow and pulled it farther up on the sands.

Joe thought she might be an Indian squaw, for she was very swarthy. She talked to him, but it was not English that she spoke, and it was clear that she did not understand what he said to her. She looked curiously at the donkey and cart, evidently thinking it belonged to him.

Finding he could not make her comprehend anything he said, Joe began pointing to his swollen leg. Sympathy at once appeared on her wrinkled face. She took the ailing ankle in her hand and nursed it gently for a time, then helped Joe hop on one foot until he reached her hut. This quaint house, built apparently from the wreckage of vessels, was so low that a person could scarcely stand erect within. At one side was a sort of couch, and on this she permitted him to lie down while she made a poultice of herbs, or weeds, which with much care she bound on his ankle, using portions of an old gown for a bandage.

Joe lay there all the following night sleeping a little at intervals when the gale began to abate after midnight. Nor could he leave the next day, for he was unable to put his left foot to the ground.

The old squaw apparently lived by digging clams and quahogs and impounding fish at the mouth of the river, where she had set up a weir. She cooked after a manner of her own over a fireplace at one corner of her cabin, and during the forenoon offered the young guest clam broth in a cracked crock—nourishment which he received with gratitude. Later in the day he was given fried quahogs and tea. The woman also secured the donkey and was much delighted by the load of umbrellas in the little cart, inspecting them one by one with much curiosity and at length appropriating a bright coloured one for herself. Joe found it impossible to explain to her that the umbrellas were not his, but were the property of some unknown vendor of umbrellas, possibly lost in the gale.

He was obliged to remain with her eight days before he became able to walk sufficiently well to get into the cart and drive the donkey to Newburyport. He had seen nothing further of old Jane, and finally decided that she had been blown into the river or out to sea.

On reaching the home of the Fowlers in Newburyport, he was told that Jotham and Hiram had already set off for Maine, having first made a trip to Salem to inquire for him. On the way they had been told that a boy answering to Joe's description had been swept from a bridge in the gale and drowned along with an old peddler of umbrellas.

Cousin Nancy Hobbs had been carried home, and from what could be learned from her, Joe's Uncle Nahum and Aunt Mahala felt little doubt that Joe—along with old Jane—had perished on the marshes.

THE Fowlers started for Maine four days after the tempest, but they did not arrive with their sad tidings concerning Joe until a week later. Although not so violently destructive in Maine as in the more southerly portions of New England, the gale had ruined many of the settlers' field crops and blown down thousands of forest trees.

Great-Grandma Betty would have set off at once in the hope of finding her boy, but now that old Jane was gone they possessed no horse suitable for such an expedition. Many domestic matters, too, made such a quest so far from home well-nigh impossible at that time.

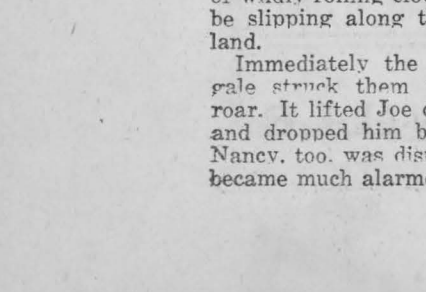

Just at sunset, however of the second day after the coming of the Fowlers, the shadow that had followed their return to Maine was happily dispelled. From her house door Great-Grandma Betty espied a strange object coming into view on the rough new road through the woods—nothing less than a very tired little gray donkey, drawing a small two-wheeled cart in which someone was hunched down nearly out of sight. Donkey and cart came wearily to the door, and lo, there was the lost one, safe if not wholly sound, sitting on a heap of umbrellas! He had made the trip and found his way home after numerous vicissitudes and having to part with eleven umbrellas at wayside taverns in exchange for food and shelter. But there were eighteen left!

From Joe's youthful point of view, he had done the only thing he could do under the circumstances. Feeling certain that the owner of the outfit had been lost in the gale, he had by his own unaided exertions salvaged donkey, cart and umbrellas.

"What else could I do?" he asked. "I had to get home somehow."

Joe's parents, however, were by no means so sure that this was right and sent word repeatedly, both to Newburyport and Salem, informing claimants, if any, as to the whereabouts of the umbrella-vendor's property, while Uncle Nahum Hobbs advertised the matter in a Salem newspaper. No claimant, however, came forth.

The gray donkey lived long and happily at the pioneer farm in Maine; and as to the eighteen umbrellas, they became scattered about in time, as umbrellas will be, all save this last one with the ivory handle left untouched in the old chest in our farmhouse attic for more than fifty years.

SALMON SOUFFLE VALENTINE.

Canadian Salmon Gives It A Superb Flavour.

EVEN if you're not having a party on Valentine's Day ,you can celebrate by having something extra special for the family. After all, celebration depends on our own spirit, and we can have splendid fun in our own family. With this Salmon Soufflé to start you off, and a fancy Valentine cake with little heart-shaped decorations, the children will ask for Valentine parties often.

SALMON SOUFFLE.

3 tablespoons butter
1 1-lb. can Canadian salmon
1 cup milk
4 tablespoons flour
3 eggs
Salt and pepper

Melt the butter, add the flour, blend well and add the milk, stirring constantly. Season. Set aside to cool, while you separate the eggs and beat the yolks and whites separately. Add the yolks to the sauce, and the salmon which has been flaked and all skin removed. (Save the liquid and crush the bones and add these to the sauce. They contain valuable bone-building vitamins.) Fold in the egg whites and pour into a greased ovenproof glass baking dish. Cook for 30 to 40 minutes in a moderate oven.

Serve with glazed carrots and scalloped potatoes au gratin.

And don't forget the fancy cake with the heart decorations. Little cinnamon candies can be placed on a soft butter frosting in heart shapes.

SALT COD HASH.

Heat oil or butter in frying pan, sauté onion in it, then add freshened cod, shredded; diced cooked potatoes, season. Brown lightly. At the last moment add chopped parsley. Serve with vegetables.

Practiced Hands.

"The latest Hollywood craze is checkers." But surely, says a cynic, the ladies over there have been taking one another's men for years.

Henpecked?

A Connecticut cop who took a man man out for a road test for a car operator's license suddenly told him to turn right, on a red light. The man did. That, of course, is against the law in Connecticut, and the cop snapped, "What did you make the turn for?" "You told me to," said the man nervously. "Would you turn right on a red light if your mother or your wife told you to?" asked the cop. The flustered fellow hesitated and then said, "Not if my mother told me to, no."

How Come You-All Hurry So?

A pretty and efficient young business woman, called down to Charleston to help settle an estate, started at the affair in a brisk and businesslike manner. One day, as she was walking rapidly with big No'the'n strides through the business part of the town, a courtly old gentleman tapped her on the arm and arrested her mad progress. Raising his hat, he said gravely, "There is no hurry, Madam," and passed slowly on.

"Why don't I call them up?"

Yes, why not? Haven't you often started a letter when your thoughts went a'wandering —made you want to talk rather than write . . . and, then, within a minute, you heard "Dear Mary"—her own familiar voice.

"And here's Johnny!"

Watch a child's face when he hears Daddy's voice. You wish Daddy himself could see it—then he'd really know how much it means to his family, when he calls from a distant town.

"...now I call them every evening!"

Somehow you are attracted to a man who says this. In those few words he tells you much about himself and his family. He sets an example by "Going home" every evening—

by LONG DISTANCE

By using low Night Rates (which apply every evening after 7 and all day Sunday), and placing "Anyone" calls—you can talk a long way for very little.

K, D. Lawson Tells of Law Practice in Small Town

Canadians are generally a law-abiding people but they have a mania for making new laws, K. D. Lawson, local barrister, told Chesterville Rotarians on Tuesday night when he spoke at the weekly luncheon of the club and huge files of new enactments are created at each session of parliament and legislature, and it is impossible for any lawyer to say he "knows the law." He spoke on "Law Practice in a Small Town."

While Canadian law is based on British courts, the Dominion is miles behind the Old Country in law enforcement and treatment of criminals, said Mr. Lawson. The Magna Charta gave the right of trial by jury and progress of the courts to the present day was explained.

Mr. Lawson gave a comprehensive review of the set up of the courts of today from the local magistrate's court through to the Privy Council where British citizens have their last court of appeal. In early days the King heard these appeals, but they became so numerous the Privy Council was given the hearings, and now the Judicial Council of this body gives the last word.

There are two main divisions of law, civil and criminal, and the speaker preferred civil practice even though it did not create the front-page publicity of the criminal cases. Besides, in a small place, civil practice is much more important.

The lagging of Canada's legal forces Mr. Lawson attributed to the concern most lawyers have about the necessity of making a living. The wealthy class in the old land turns out a large number of barristers who do not have to worry about money and they spend a great deal of time in research and study and as a result the laws of the country are framed in a better manner.

Law practice in the smaller centres differs from the city through its generality, the city business being specialized in real estate, company, litigation, criminal, and so on.

Mr. Lawson did not believe litigation or criminal law good business for the profession in small centres. If a client makes up his mind to fight a law suit he has decided he is right, and if the court decides against him his conviction is not altered and the lawyer gets the blame. Criminal law brings one into contact with a very undesirable class and the speaker said his only interest in it was historical

Referring to the technicalities which oftimes upset a legal case, Mr. Lawson told his fellow members of the early days when petty offences were given severe penalties and kind-hearted lawyers invented all sorts of circumstances to ease the lot of their humble prisoners. A noted case was the trial of one Ted Watt convicted of stealing a grey mare; the penalty for which was flogging and abominable treatment. The prisoner proved he had stolen a grey gelding and won his case on a "technicality."

Canada's criminal laws are uniform as the Federal House has control and this is a great aid in enforcement. Civil laws are enacted by provincial legislatures and all follow the British law with the exception of Quebec where French custom holds sway. Many laws are poorly written because those responsible for their enactment were not well enough versed in the art of drafting. Mr. Lawson stated his belief that if proposed laws were given to men skilled in this art before the bills were presented, future trouble in the courts would be done away with. He cited as an example the fate of the NRA in the United States. Gen. Hugh S. Johnston boasted in his book of the fine work he did in drafting its several codes, but when the different sections came before the Supreme Court officials they were thrown out. If a skilled constitutional lawyer had been employed to write this law, history might have been different.

President P. S. Boyd introduced Mr. Lawson and gave a brief resumé of his career from the start of his studies in Chesterville schools until he was called to bar in February, 1923, and in his practice since that time in Chesterville. James Slosser expressed the thanks of the club.

A brief meeting of the directors following decided on ladies' night for the next luncheon which falls on St. Valentine's Day.

Mr. D. S. Paul, of Napanee, who is assisting the District Representative of Carleton County in a short course in agriculture at Metcalfe, spent the week-end with Rev. R .C. and Mrs. Tait at the Manse.

Miss Enid Barwick, of Montreal, is the guest of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Casselman.

Miss Cassie Droppo is teaching in the Public school this week for Miss Marion Casselman who is ill at her home.

Mrs. H. E. Wales and children returned to town at the week-end after spending a week in Petrolia where she attended the funeral of her father. the late Mr| McLauchlan.

Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Magee and family returned home the first of the week after spending a few days in Stirling where Mr. Magee's father, the late John M. Magee, died suddenly on Thursday morning.

Mrs. David Allison was the week-end guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Kearns in Toronto.

Fine Address Delivered To Institute Members

The twilight tea given by the members of the Women's Institute, Friday afternoon, was a most successful and enjoyable event. Mrs. J. D. Stewart, of Winchester, was the guest speaker and her audience was delighted with her address on "Books." She quoted from Dr. Stidger, "He who gives a boy a book gives him a ship; he who gives a boy a book gives him a friend."

She complimented the Women's Institute on their efforts in maintaining the library and stressed the value of good reading.

Mrs. W. N. Fulton and Mrs. Allison Graham contributed vocal selections with Mrs. P. J. Gilroy as accompanist.

The tea table was presided over by Mrs. M. Durant and Mrs. R. C. Dillabough, assisted by Mrs. H. H. Casselman, Mrs. Jas. Smith, Mrs. A. B. Clayton, Mrs. Harold Hamilton, Mrs. A. L. Bailey and Mrs. H. J. Slosser. Mrs. Bernard Gibbons was in charge of a table of home baking.

Many Attend Infant's Funeral At Williamsburg, Sunday

The death occurred at Williamsburg of Norma Ann, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Casselman who was born Feb. 15, 1938. She had not enjoyed the best of health, but her death came as a great shock to those who had learned to love her dearly during this short year.

The funeral service was largely attended at the home of her parents on Sunday afternoon at one o'clock where Rev. C. A. Adey was in charge. Hymns sung by the United church choir were "When He Cometh" and "Safe in the Arms of Jesus."

The pall-bearers were two uncles, Hubert Barkley and Walter Merkley, both of Dunbar; Arnold Barriger, of Mountain, and Wilbur Garlough, Williamsburg.

Floral tributes included sprays from Father, Mother and Sisters; Grandma and Grandpa Black; Baby Spray, cousins Desmond, Alexander and Aileen Barkley; Double Spray, Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Barkley, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Merkley and Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Alexander.

The remains were placed in the vault to await burial in the spring.
