WIFE AND FAMILY.

SWERDFEGER—In loving memory of my dear wife, Ilda Swerdfeger, who passed away May 7, 1948.
In tears I saw you sinking,
And watched you fade away
God knows how much I miss you
As it dawns a year today.
—Lovingly remembered by her Husband and daughter, Barbara.

DAWSON — In loving memory of our dear sister, Ethel, who passed away suddenly May 10th, 1948.
A beautiful memory, dearer than gold,
Of a sister whose worth can never be told.
Alone, unseen, she stands by our side
And whispers: "Don't grieve, death cannot divide".
Deep in our hearts a memory is kept
Of one we love and will not forget;
And although the years may be many or few,
We'll always be thinking, dear Ethel, of you.
—Sadly missed and lovingly remembered by sister Mary Jessie and niece, Doris.

Jogging Around

SIX O'CLOCK TOWN

Merchants in one Canadian town have learned how to damage it as a shopping centre, says the Printed Word. It seems that two or three years ago, when customers were kind and anxious, these merchants decided they weren't going to stay open Saturday nights any longer nohow. The farmers would just have to come to town in the daytime, whether or not they had to rush right back to milk and feed the stock and thereby miss the pleasant late-evening hours of meeting the folks from the other concessions.

One merchant refused to go along with the others. He kept his store open, though business fell off, because people weren't going to that town just to shop at one store, and not a very big store at that.

The same merchant owns two other stores, each in a town not far away as time is reckoned in these days of paved roads and decent cars. And this merchant, whho like all good merchants, had a keen ear for the music of the cash register at work, reports that his sales in the two Saturady-inght towns went up nicely week by week and have stayed up while in the town where the merchants went modern, Saturday sales dropped way down. And have stayed down. The town, where of a Saturday parking space used to be scarce as a buggy, became quiet as a Sunday in a rural hamlet. Advertising fell off to the local newspaper. Bank managers became a little less smiling. And the merchants among themselves began to wonder who the heck had the idea in the first place.

They're all running old fashioned stores again. Open on Saturday night to serve the people who want to buy on that night. But all is not well, yet, for some of the old customers have come to like shopping in one or other of the other towns. And a shopping habit like others, is often hard to break.

One historian says that the late Timothy Eaton had a fetish that customers must come first in his mind and he was always anxious to have the goods they wanted, at a price they could pay, and he was willing to serve them at any reasonable hour they wished to be served, excepting Sunday but including Saturday night. There's an allegedly modern idea, born in the mind of some lay merchants, that the customers will be ready with cash in hand when the merchants get good and ready to unlock the door. There are others, of course, who recollect, that Mr. Eaton, with his idea that a merchants owed a duty to the public, was one of the most spectacularly successful merchants in this or any other country.

TALL— BUT SHORT

(The originator of this little story makes no claim to originality. He is passing it along simply because he enjoyed it, and he thinks others will too.)

Bill Pearsall was a great man for dogs. At one time or another he owned all sorts of breeds—no two alike. His first dog was a St. Bernard named Zeke. Now Zeke was about the largest piece of dogmeat that ever came in one piece, and so lazy it took him ten minutes to lie down. Eat?—Zeke needed twenty pounds of beef a day just to keep from starving. Bill couldn't stand the expense, so he swapped him for Hans.

Hans was a dachshund, about two dogs long and half a dog high. Hans was so long he'd pass himself twice just going around a tree. He was a long dog all right, but he was mighty short of breath. One day he walked around a barrel and caught up with his hind legs. Darn if he didn't think it was another dog and run himself to death. Bill was broken-hearted until he got another dog.

This one he called Charge, on account of somebody had sunk a charge of No. 8's into him. Charge was a greyhound. He was so thin you'd have to squint both eyes to see him endways. But he sure could run. I've seen him skid fifty yards just trying to stop. One day he skidded head-on into a stone wall. He folded up like an accordion. Bill tried to iron him out but couldn't do it.

Bill's last dog was a setter named Sport. He was a setter all right and that's about all he ever did. Sport turned out to be a bird dog that was scared of birds. One day a quail flushed right under his nose. Sport beat his shadow home by a dozen yards. Bill was so disgusted that he traded Sport for a two-gallon jug of prime ten year old nooch. But on the way home he broke the jug against a rock. That nearly ended Bill and as he told me "I ain't had no dog since, and I don't want none.

Former Morrisburg Doctor Dies Suddenly

Citizens of Morrisburg and district were very grieved to learn of the sudden death of Edward Foster McIntosh, former well known and greatly beloved physician of Morrisburg, which occurred suddenly at Helen Mines, near Sault Ste. Marie on Sunday. Dr. McIntosh was the victim of a heart attack.

Born at Dundela, he was a son of Dr. Pember McIntosh and the late Mrs. McIntosh of Spencerville. He was educated in schools at Spencerville and Prescott, and, as the youngest member of his class, graduated in medicine from Queen's University.

He interned in Hepburn Hospital at Ogdensburg, and also in a New York City Hospital, and came to Morrisburg to establish a practice in 1930, which he conducted most successfully until the outbreak of war in 1939. Then he enlisted in the Medical Corps. After his discharge, he practiced for some time in the Royal Ottawa Sanatorium and later went to Northern Ontario, where he followed his profession.

He is survived by his widow, the former Minnie McMillan, whom he married at Kingston in 1929; his father; one daughter, Mrs. Frank Shaver of Cardinal; one son, Pember; and one sister, Miss Annie McIntosh of Spencerville.

The funeral service was held from the MacIntosh residence at Spencerville on Wednesday afternoon to the United Church, and was largely attended, testifying to the high esteem in which deceased was held.

Rev. L. M. Somerville conducted the service and was assisted by Rev. E. W. S. Coates of Prescott, Rev. C. Mullen of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Spencerville and the choir, with Dean Hunter as soloist and Mrs. J. H. Bennett as organist.

Interment was made in the family plot in Iroquois cemetery.

During his many years of practice here, Dr. MacIntosh made a host of friends, who will learn with sincere regret of his early death.

FIFTY-FIFTY

Dissension of the British Columbia CCF from the national leadership's endorsation of the Atlantic Pact seems to indicate that the party's right wing knoweth not what its left wing doeth. Neither would the public in the coming Federal Election; which means that a vote for the CCF has a fifty-fifty chance of being a vote for Tim Buck.

Berlin's Best—Thea Theil, 18-year-old high school student, shows the qualities that helped win her the title of "Miss Berlin" over 39 rivals. 'People's Car' Finally Arrives in Germany

A dozen years ago, Adolf Hitler promised a shiny new Volkswagen (People's Car) to any German with 1000 marks to pay for it. The war intervened, and not a People's Car reached the people. But now the Volkswagen plant at Wolfsburg, Germany, is rolling the cars out for civilians at the rate of 40,000 a year. The rear-engine autos seat four or five, are economical on fuel, and hit a top speed of about 62 mph. Above, completed cars line up in a parking lot behind the Volkswagen factory.

Proposed U.S. Rival for Britain's "Queen's"—Here is a model of the proposed $70,373,000 American transatlantic superliner, largest ever constructed in the U.S. Accommodating 2000 passengers, or 12,000 troops in time of war, the 48,000-ton ship will be 980 feet long and have a speed of more than 28 knots. Proposed for the U.S. Lines, it will be slighty smaller than Britain's "Queen" ships, the Elizabeth and Mary.

Diagnosis By Long Distance Phone

Diagnosis of cardiac conditions and epilepsy is now said to be possible by telephone as a result of a new device developed by the Air Force School of Aviation Medicine at Randolph Field, Tex. The school created a new small-size electroencephalograph, a machine which measures heart and brain waves, which is a great improvement over older types. The new device can pick up faint waves and transmit them over a telephone even while the subject is in motion. Above, a patient exercises on a stationary bike with the new device hung around his neck. Former electroencephalographs were bulky and the patient had to lie motionless. With the new device, as shown below, the faint wave signals can be transmitted over a telephone to a doctor who can make a diagnosis from them.

Village Vendetta

A Short Story

By ADVICE FATHERS

Old Mrs. Marrable and Doctor Gregg hated one another at first sight. She was a remnant of the feudal system left behind in a corner of Hampshire. Roman-nosed and haughty, she had been presented when a girl at one of Queen Victoria's "Drawing-Rooms" and had never changed her ideas since.

He was a foxy little man with too-assured manners, who ran a nursing home for neurotics.

Mrs. Marrable was the lady of the manor and ruled the village with a rod of iron; when Doctor Gregg bought one of the few houses in it that did not belong to her she was deeply annoyed.

She was even more annoyed after she had seen him. Driving one afternoon in her ancient, beautifully-kept Daimler, she saw a little gingery man in a saloon car.

"Who may that be?" she asked her companion, putting up her lorgnette.

"That is Doctor Gregg," was the reply.

At that moment he looked up and their eyes met. Mrs. Marable saw a smart-aleck and Doctor Gregg a fierce old woman obviously of a type he both hated and feared. The feud was on.

It did not abate with time. Doctor Gregg said to himself that the elderly woman could do nothing to him, but, nevertheless, he was a little frightened of her; her contempt for him was so marked that it undermined even his self-confidence. He went on running his nursing home, incidentally making a large income, but socially he got nowhere. He was a climber, and this annoyed him; he wanted not only to make money but to mingle with the "county." Mrs. Marrable was still powerful, and he thought, with truth, that she queered his pitch.

It might have comforted him if he had known how much of an obsession he had become to the old lady. To her he represented everything that she most detested in a frighteningly changed world: with his shoddy reputation, his free-and-easy manners and his Midlands accent he was anathema to her. She would have given anything to get rid of him, and when she heard the stories about his nursing home she sent for her solicitor and consulted him.

Of course, he told her, there was no evidence—no evidence at all—she could do nothing. The next time Mrs. Marrable met Doctor Gregg and he tipped his hat to her she turned to him a face of stone.

"It's like that, is it, you old so-and-so," commented Doctor Gregg. Then he chuckled, for he had had a sudden idea.

From that time on his favorite sport was baiting Mrs. Marrable. He took quite a lot of trouble about it. He went to church because it was the thing to do, and he would stare at Mrs. Marrable, enthroned in the Manor pew, throughout the whole of the service, never taking his eyes off her. When he passed the alms bag he would accidentally touch her hand if he could manage it, and whenever he met her he would raise his hat with a flourish, disregarding her stony countenance.

One winter she had an attack of bronchitis and, Spartan though she was, she had finally to give in and send for the local doctor, an old friend of hers. She was lying on a couch by the fire in what she still called her boudoir when the elderly butler announced, "Doctor Gregg."

For a moment Mrs. Marrable, from sheer indignation, could find no words, but the doctor's manner, owing to his secret nervousness, was more offhand even than usual.

"A bit off color, Mrs. Marrable?" he asked breezily. "We must see what we can do for you. I'm taking Doctor Courtenay's cases for him while he's laid up, you know. Any temperature, do you think? Let's see," and he produced a thermometer.

His patient sat upright. She could not say much; she was too short of breath, but she looked. It was a wonder the look did not wither Doctor Gregg as he stood.

"If I had known that Doctor Courtenay was ill, I would have sent to Winchester," she wheezed. "Please leave my house."

"Oh, come now," protested Doctor Gregg, "you mustn't talk like that, you know. After all, I'm Doctor Courtenay's locum."

"Good morning," said Mrs. Marrable, and rang the bell.

"You'd be surprised if you knew the death-rate from bronchitis," said Doctor Gregg airily. "Good morning."

He had been in the village some years before he made his great mistake. Urban to the core, he had never realized how much, in the country, everybody knows everybody else's business, and when he had an affair with one of his patients he thought no one knew.

She was the pretty, silly wife of Mrs. Marrable's agent, and though it was by no means Doctor Gregg's first love affair it was the first in which he had been rash enough to put pen to paper.

Mrs. Marrable waited patiently like a spider watching a fly entangle itself and, at a certain stage, she pounced.

Her agent's wife was terrified of her; now she crumpled and, weeping, produced Doctor Gregg's letters when her husband's employer demanded them. Mrs. Marrable, for the first and last time in her life, sent for Doctor Gregg.

"I have here some letters of yours," she told him majestically, looking quite remarkably like Queen Victoria, "and I suggest that the wisest thing for you to do is to leave the country."

Doctor Gregg looked at her and, with wild recollections of all the thrillers he had ever read, wondered whether he could bash over the head with a poker and get away with it. He decided reluctantly that he could not and swallowed nard instead.

"I don't know what you're talking about, Mrs. Marrable," he bluffed.

She ignored this. "If you will not do as I suggest," she said, "I shall send the letters to the General Medical Council."

Doctor Gregg met her steely grey eye, then took up his hat and marched out. Shortly after that the nursing home was put up for sale and Hampshire knew its owner no more.

To Mrs. Marrable it was as if a blight had been removed; her enemy had been overthrown and she was openly triumphant.

Mrs. Marrable's heart was a somewhat flinty one, but it had in it one soft spot and that was for the memory of her husband. Each week, winter and summer, she would lay flowers on his grave, and one fine morning in spring she went to the churchyard as usual. The Marrable tomb was an imposing affair of urns, and weeping angels and on it was a long list of names. Mrs. Marrable surveyed it thoughtfully and reflected that when her own name was added below her husband's the list would be closed. They were the last of their line.

Suddenly it came back to her that the site of the family grave did not include the bit at the rear where the churchyard narrowed. For some reason it had never been included and there was just room for one more grave beside the Marrable tomb.

"It would spoil everything," she thought, "if anyone else was buried there. I'll see about buying that bit of ground at once before I forget."

She walked slowly with her stick to where the sexton was working. He stood upright and pulled his forelock as a vassal should.

"Don't let me interrupt your work," said Mrs. Marrable in her autocratic voice. "I am right, am I not, in thinking that the small piece of ground by the wall is not included in the family grave?"

"No, ma'am, it isn't," said the sexton.

"I have decided to buy it," continued Mrs. Marrable. "I'll speak to the vicar about it at once."

The sexton looked uncomfortable and coughed apologetically.

"It's bought, I'm afraid, ma'am," he answered.

"NO!" exclaimed Mrs. Marrable, deeply vexed. "Who bought it?"

The sexton shifted his feet. "Doctor Gregg, ma'am," he said, "just afore he went away. Said he'd like to be buried here even if he couldn't live here no more. I didn't quite take his meaning, but he said something about the last shot in the locker."

Mrs. Marrable gazed at him, speechless, and knew that in Dr. Gregg she had met her match. He had trumped her ace.

With both coal and apprentices in short supply, the government hopes to graduate a corps of skilled miners.

World Fight Against 'Flu'

I want to tell you the story of influenza. What I have to say is not a medical story and it is not a story with headlines. I am neither a medical man nor a newspaper man. I am a scientist; but a scientist whose greatest interest is what people do and what people think. And I am not interested in the people of one country rather than another: I am interested in people. Like the flu, I do not want to stop at frontiers, writes the noted scientist, Professor J. Bronowski, in "London Calling".

In Paris everyone has been talking about the 'flu. The French Government thinks that one Frenchman in every four has had 'flu; and Paris has been worse hit than most of France. The 'flu is still news in Paris; the 'flu is world news.

The influenza epidemic started some time in November, in the island of Sardinia. It spread to southern Italy; then, in December, it reached Rome. That was the first that anyone outside Italy heard of the epidemic. The World Health Organization of the United Nations at Geneva at once notified its ob- [illegible] division for [illegible] prepared to put itself on an emergency footing. Its fears were justified; in January the 'flu had spread to France and Holland.

But by that time the World Health Organization was already counterattacking. It had cabled to all European countries on January 7 to keep a continuous watch on influenza figures and to help to trace the type of the illness. And all the European countries are helping: there are no politics about influenza.

Helping — how? What does one do about 'flu? Are we going to have another 1,000,000 influenza deaths, as we did in 1918? What defences can we improvise now, when the epidemic has been on the march for many weeks?

And this is where I discovered how little I or anyone knows about the silent work which the World Health Organization does, long before there is any talk about epidemics. Influenza is a disease which you cannot improvise against. You must plan ahead. Let me tell you why you must plan ahead, and how.

Influenza is a disease which is carried not by a bacillus, not by what you and I call 'a bug,' but by a virus. A virus is something too small to be seen, even under a microscope. That is why it is so difficult to identify a virus and to find ways of attacking it. That is what makes the virus diseases so awkward. The ordinary cold is a virus disease, and you know how little we have been able to do about that. Influenza is another virus disease, and that is the beginning of our trouble.

In order to culture the 'flu virus, you have to grow it on a living animal which can catch 'flu. What is done in the laboratory is to inoculate the embryos of chicks still in the egg, when they are about twelve days old. It is a tricky business, and it only comes off once in two or three dozen tries.

What is the point of inoculating chicken embryo from the throat-washings of someone ill with 'flu? It is an essential step in growing the virus, in identifying it, and, in the end, of making a serum which will protect against the virus. Because the important thing about fighting an epidemic is to inoculate people in places to which it is spreading well in advance of its arrival.

That is how 'flu epidemics were stopped in their tracks in America in 1943 and 1946. But next year, in 1947, the vaccine which had done so well turned out to be useless; there was something about the 1947 epidemic that was different.

And the same thing has happened in the much larger epidemic that has been going on. We have not grown the right vaccine yet, because we have not completely identified the virus which has been giving everybody 'flu just recently.

There are at least two kinds of 'flu virus, of which the more virulent is the one called A. Both in Holland and in France, virus A has been found in most people suffering from 'flu. But not in all: so far there remains an unidentified fraction which has not been placed in either of the two families of 'flu virus. That is where we are so far: very much where we were in 1947—we may even find that this is the odd, 1947 virus again. And that is the point that we must clear up before the laboratories can hope to make a vaccine which will really stop you from catching 'flu.

Now you can see why 'flu is not a thing you can improvise against. The heart of the problem, the main shock of the battle, is growing and identifying the virus. You need people who know that strange new technique; you need a collection of the known viruses; and you need a centre where this work is done and where the making of the vaccine can begin.

That cannot be planned overnight; and it was not. What I learned for the first time at Geneva was that such a centre exists; and it is from that centre that the battle against influenza today is being directed.

Meeting About Viruses in Copenhagen

The World Health Organization had foreseen, not perhaps this epidemic, but that some grave 'flu epidemic would happen again, sooner or later. It began to make its plans at a meeting about viruses in Copenhagen in 1947. There was not much publicity, there was no fuss. But last summer the World Health Organization and the British Medical Research Council together set up the International Influenza Center in Hampstead, in London, under the direction of Dr. Andrewe.

There the preparations for the next epidemic have been going on for many months now. Men have been trained, specimens have been prepared, a network of information has been made ready. The remarkable work that has been done in Italy, in France, in Holland and in Switzerland recently in tracking down and fighting the 'flu virus takes its inspiration from that international centre, and from the foresight and good will which created it.

In some epidemics the kind of 'flu that people catch seems to get suddenly worse after the epidemic has been going for some time. Probably it is not the 'flu that gets worse, but the complications, like pneumonia, that are carried with the 'flu, and it was they that really killed people in 1918. Perhaps the sulpha drugs and penicillin, though they do not attack the 'flu virus, have been keeping the deadly complications at bay this time.

Fire extinguishers have come a long way since the first successful portable, held in demonstrator's left hand, came out 20 years ago. Used to protect telephone switchboards, it weighed 37 pounds—yet held little more extinguishing gas than the modern trigger-operated version she shows, weighting only 15 pounds.

Coins Galore—But Not For Them—John Alcorn, left, 12, and his brother Robert, 11, gasp in amazement at the $1800 in coins they found behind a supermarket. However, the boys' piggy banks still go begging, for the money was left behind by burglars who broke into the store and escaped with $6000.

VERY SUDDENLY MRS. KENNETH GEGGIE DIES

The community of Williamsburg and surrounding district was saddened and shocked at the announcement of the passing of Mrs. Lucy Geggie, wife of Mr. Kenneth Geggie of Toyes' Hill, which occurred after a few hours illness on Friday night at the General Hospital, Cornwall, where she had been removed during the day. Her death came as a shock to her family and occasioned deep regret among her relatives and many friends.

Mrs. Geggie McIntosh, whose maiden name was Lucy McIntosh, was in her 24th year, born on March 14, 1926 in the Sixth Concession of Williamsburg, the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus McIntosh. She was educated in the local public school and the Morrisburg Collegiate. In her further studies she attended Gowling's Business College, Ottawa in which city she held a position until her marriage in 1947, to Kenneth Geggie of Toyes' Hill.

Close family relatives who sorrow at the passing of one who was yet in the arly vigor of life, include her husband, a four months old son, her parents, one sister, Doris McIntosh and two small brothers, all of Williamsburg. Words cannot describe the grief brought to members of her family, relatives and friends with whom she shared the gifts of her kindly and pleasant disposition. Her cheerful personality won for her a host of friends who sincerely mourn her passing.

The funeral was held from her home to St. Peter's Lutheran Church, Williamsburg, where the pastor, Rev. George Innes, who oased his remarks on the theme "Thy Will Be Dond", paid warm tribute to the memory of the deceased.

During the service the choir led in the singing of the hymns "My God and Father While I Stray" and also "Nearer My God to Thee", and by request, the choir sang "Safe in the Arms of Jesus".

Interment was made in the Williamsburg cemetery. The pall bearers were Ralph Casselman, Lloyd Casselman, Ralph McIntosh, Lorne Henderson, Dwain Johnston and Kenneth Wylie.

The casket and room where the body rested were banked with floral tributes, all beautiful and all speaking their silent message of love and sympathy and the regret felt at her early death.

GREATER MARKETS- better marketing!

The stores of Canada tell the story.

Smart new fronts and clean, bright interiors; up-to-the-minute facilities for faster, easier, more convenient shopping; modern displays and smartly packaged products: all are the visible symbols of Canada's modern merchandising progress.

Canadian distribution methods are more effective, more efficient than ever. Recent advances in marketing have been as remarkable as those in this country's record-breaking production and the development of natural resources.

The whole vast field of merchandising today presents new and greater opportunities for successful Canadian careers.

"Imagination in business knows no geographical boundaries.

In this young and vigorous nation originality, based on sound thinking, pays off. To the young Canadian who is willing to raise his sights above the conventional, and work hard to make his vision come true, no country today offers greater opportunities for success than our own", says Hedleigh Venning.

HEDLEIGH VENNING

began his career as a junior salesman in 1926. From the beginning, he became aware of the opportunity awaiting the application of imagination and creative thinking to any job. A keen student of modern packaging, an enthusiastic and energetic worker, he is now vice-president in charge of sales of Shirriff's Limited, one of Canada's larger food product companies; a great believer in scientific marketing and a leader in the field of selling and advertising.

TURNING THE PAGES OF "CANADA UNLIMITED"

When Canada was growing up, hewing a living from the virgin forest left little time for holidaying. By the 1790's, visits to distant friends were popular. Settlers would travel three hundred miles by sleigh in winter to see their friends.

Picnics were popular by 1835. While the men fished, the women picked berries, and all joined for lunch. In Springtime, excursions to the woods for "maple-sugar making" were greeted with delight.

With the arrival of the automobile about 1900, and improvement in the roads, people began to travel to "see the sights". Touring to Niagara Falls, Muskoka or the Laurentians, became a common holiday pastime.

Today, tourists are big business. Canada is a vast wonderland, with countless surprises for the sightseer—and each year millions of Canadians and visitors tour our land. The opportunities that exist in the tourist industry are many—for there's room to grow in Canada Unlimited.

MRS. HERBERT VanALLEN HEADS W. M. S. IN GRENVILLE-DUNDAS

Merrickville, April 27— The 23rd annual meeting of the Dundas-Grenville Presbyterial of the Women's Missionary Society of the United Church of Canada, held here Tuesday, elected Mrs. Herb VanAllen of Iroquois president for 1949-50.

Miss Gwen Suttie of Montreal, a former missionary in Japan, spoke on the need to give Christianity a chance to grow in vanquished Nippon.

Other members of the new slate of officers are: Mrs. J. I. Murdock, Cardinal, honorary president; Mrs. W. E. Wright, Chesterville, past president; Mrs. C. H. Ferguson, first vice president; Mrs. Cecil McIntosh, Winchester Springs, second vice president; Mrs. W. Johanson, Brinston, third vice president; Mrs. Roy Leizert, Cardinal, fourth vice president; Mrs. S. Simms, Mountain, recording secretary; Mrs. Ingram Cross, Iroquois, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Hugh Adams, Prescott, treasurer.

With about 175 delegates from 23 different localities attending, the annual gathering heard reports from the many committees and auxiliary organizations of the presbyterial.

Mrs. W. E. Wright, retiring president, conducted the morning and afternoon sessions and thanked her fellow officers and members for their co-operation during her three years of office. Mrs. R. S. Peterson expressed appreciation to Mrs. Wright for her leadership.

"New Life Calling", a special technicolor sound film on the missionary undertaking in China was shown by E. Fennel, of Winchester, and a playlet was performed by Mrs. W. Hutton, Mrs. W. Fowler and Mrs. A. Brown of the Iroquois branch, pointing out the need for increased membership in the auxiliaries.

"We know the power of the atom bomb", said Miss Suttie in her address, "but there is more power in the super-bomb of Christian love".

There are, she said, innumerable evidences of that power in Japan today.

Since the old pagan ways brought their country to the verge of economic destitution, she told the meeting, the Japanese have realized they must seek a new ideology.

Communism is competing with the three main religions to supply this need, she warned.

Churches of Japan are crowded today as never before, the mission worker declared. The Japanese people, who have bought more than 2,500,000 copies of the Scripture since the nation's surrender, are fairly trying Christianity, she said, and "we must take advantage of our opportunity now".

The presbyterial was invited by Mrs. C. H. Ferguson to hold its 1950 meeting in Kemptville.

FOOTNOTE TO A REQUEST

I'd rather have you tell me, "No!"
And end my hopes with one quick blow
Than keep me in expectancy
With that habitual "I'll see....."
Especially when I'm aware
"No" is what you mean, my dear.

—S. H. Dewhurst

"Darling, haven't I always given you my pay cheque on the first of every month?"

"Yes, but you never told me you were paid twice a month".

CANADA LEADING SUPPLIER BRITISH FOOD REQUIREMENTS

Canada was Great Britain's principal source of supply in 1948 for wheat, flour, bacon, shell eggs, dried eggs, condensed milk and canned salmon. Canadian forests provided most of the sawn hardwood, sawn softwood, planed and dressed softwood and veneers required by the United Kingdom construction industry. News print, sleepers for British railways, aluminum, copper, nickel and ferro-alloys were also supplied in large volume by Canada.

Smiling and confident, Prime Minister and Mrs. Louis St. Laurent are shown here as they left on their trip to Western Canada during the Easter recess of Parliament. On his return, Mr. St. Laurent, announced the next Federal general elections would be held on Monday, June 27th. The man who took up the reins of government from Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King is confident he will be re-elected with even more seats than he now holds.

New Chrysler Now on Display

Increased vision, roomier interiors, longer wheelbases, and slightly smaller outside dimensions are some of the features of the new Chrysler models. Front and rear overhang is reduced to allow safer entrance and exit from driveways. Over 50 improvements have been made to engine, body and chassis. Functional design is stressed. Shown above is the Chrysler Windsor Four-Door Sedan. Also available in the Windsor series is a Chrysler Windsor Club Coupe. Windsor models have "Presto-Matic" transmission as standard equipment. The Chrysler Royal series includes a Four-Door Sedan, a Club Coupe and a Seven Passenger Sedan. All wheelbases are 125½" except the Chrysler Royal Seven Passenger Sedan which is 139½".

GOOD CITIZENSHIP
is a lot of little things

THIS IS NATIONAL NEWSPAPER WEEK

A Free Press is one of the privileges of Democracy. Canadian newspapers, almost without exception, are examples of free enterprise—reporting the news truthfully, without bias . . . without censorship. As a citizen, the press is not only your eyes and your ears but also your mouth. Your opinions, expressed verbally or by letter will be welcomed by the editor—and published, should they be considered in the public interest. Your newspaper, perhaps more than any other single medium, teaches our people the real meaning and value of "Good Citizenship".

You can help this public service effort. Make a note of some of the little things which, in your opinion, contribute to Good Citizenship.
