Giles W. Bogart Passes Former Local Businessman

Yesterday afternoon Giles W. Bogart, formerly a well-known businessman of Chesterville, where he was born 64 years ago, but for the past ten years of Detroit, passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Hess, of Williamsburg, where he had come to spend his last days, suffering from an illness that extended over several months. About six weeks ago he left Detroit and had been steadily declining since his arrival here. He is survived by a family of nine children, Howard, Myrtle, and Garnet, of Detroit; Mrs. Brown (Ethel), Greta, and Bruce, of Calgary; Mrs. Ouderkirk (Marguerite), and Dora, of Ogdensburg, and Mrs. Hess (Helen), of Williamsburg.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at two o'clock in Chesterville United Church, under the direction of the I. O. O. F., when Rev. R. E. Newman will conduct the service.

Many Beautiful Shawls Displayed at Valentine Party

The Leap Year Valentine Party under the auspices of the Women's Institute held in the Library Hall on Tuesday night was well attended. The hall looked very bright and pretty with decorations of red candles, cupids, Valentines, hearts, and darts. The guests were received by Mrs. C. W. Casselman and Mrs. Parnham Allison. A very pleasing and varied programme was presented.

Mr. P. S. Boyd, who acted as chairman during the evening, gave the history of St. Valentine. Mrs. Jas. Smith gave a humorous reading, and Miss Helen Hutt danced the "Highland Fling" in a very charming and graceful manner. Musical numbers were given by Mrs. John Turner, Miss Minnie and Mr. Alfred Merkley, Miss Lois Boyd, Miss Yvonne Merkley and Mr. O. L. King. "Amos 'n' Andy," radio stars, were impersonated very cleverly by Edwin Hutt and Reginald Helmer.

Mrs. Boyd, Mr. Eugene MacMillan, and Miss Rae Dixon provided instrumental music during the time required by those taking part in the "Shawl Parade." This was a very interesting and unique number, some very beautiful shawls being shown. Prizes were won by Mrs. W. A. McElroy, for the oldest shawl, about 150 years old; by Mrs. W. Perkins, for the most beautiful, a Paisley pattern, over 100 years old. A "Made in Canada" shawl, owned by Mrs. John Munroe, also was a prize winner. The exhibitors were: Mrs. Marcellus, Mrs. M. Fetterly, Miss Harrison, Mrs. J. Wardell, Mrs. W. Perkins, Mrs. Munroe, Miss Moad, and Miss M. Cameron.

The concluding number was an old-fashioned spelling match which created much interest. Dr. H. H. Casselman had the honour of being "last man up."

Accompanists were Mrs. Boyd, Miss Marguerite Shaver, Mr. Eric Barwick, and Mr. P. G .Hewitt.

Refreshments were served by a committee under the convenorship of Mrs. G. J. Hunt, Mrs. W. A. McElroy and Miss Moad.

Chesterville United Church Closes Satisfactory Year

At the annual meeting of Chesterville United congregation last Thursday evening in the Sunday School hall a very optimistic feeling was evidenced when it was shown that with givings from all sources totalling over six thousand dollars, all obligations of the congregation had been met. Reports were presented from the different organizations showing progress all along the line and continued interest in all the works of the church. Mr. W. N. Fulton was elected to the Session, filling the vacancy caused by the death of the late W. G. Reaburn.

A motion expressing the appreciation of the congregation in the work of the pastor, Rev. R. E. Newman, and Mrs. Newman, was unanimously carried ,and the hope expressed that Mr. Newman would continue his pastorate in the charge where he is doing such a good work.

After the business a short programme was rendered, a piano duet by Miss Lillian Tate and Mr. Hewitt, and vocal solos by Master Hubert Lloyd and Mrs. J. M .Turner, followed by a very able address by Rev. R. W. Armstrong, of Morewood, on the subject of religious education, in which it was submitted that those who were receiving the advantage of living in a Christian community should be willing to contribute to the cost of religious education at the rate the ratepayer was contributing through his taxes to public and high school education.

Before dispersing, dainty refreshments were served by ladies of the congregation.

Chesterville Wins Round Defeating Finch by 9 to 4

In the play-off for the Central Ottawa Valley League championship Chesterville advanced another notch when, in two games with Finch, the latter were eliminated to the tune of 9 to 4 on the round. Monday night at Finch Chesterville sewed up the two-game series when they tamed the Black Hawks with a lead of seven counters over the shut-out route, in a game which found the winners at the top of their form, while the losers could do nothing right. Picking off two counters in the first period, a third was added in the middle session while playing one man short, when McAvoy went in from a face-off and slapped the rubber behind McMillan. In the final Chesterville ran wild, flashing an attack the Hawks' defence could do nothing to stop, adding a double brace of counters to put the series almost beyond doubt.

Although the Black Hawks might have been somewhat tamed Monday, their wings were certainly not clipped as was shown last night on local ice, when they scored a win of 4 to 2, cutting the margin by two points in flashing some of their old-time form. Robillard and Henry Ouderkirk were not on the line-up last night, Dickey taking the latter's place with Stark on the defence and Dutt taking Robillard's on the front line, where after the first frame he played a nice game accounting for half of the Finch total in the second period, after Preston notched the first one when he went around the Chesterville defence to score in twelve minutes. Preston's final counter was almost a gift when his shot from away out was deflected into the twine when the rubber hit Lapierre on the bean.

In the first period before the Hawks found just where the Chesterville nets were located they gummed up enough perfectly good chances to have wiped out the seven goal lead, when they broke through time after time and either missed the final pass or shot a mile wide.

Five minutes of the first period had slipped when Clarmont tricked Dickey on the north boards and made a pretty drive home, and the same kid slammed in the other counter a couple of minutes after the start of the final.

Lapierre had a hard-luck night of it. Before the game started he was accidentally slashed across the nose and eye by Ronnie Lynch's stick, requiring two stitches to close the wound; in the dressing room between the second and third periods one of his fingers was opened to the bone when it came forcibly in contact with the blade of a skate, then he was banged on the head by the puck in the last when Preston's drive caught him.

The teams:

Chesterville—Goal, Fyke; defence, Helmer and Lapierre; centre, Jarvis; wings, Clarmont and McAvoy; subs., A. Lynch, R. Lynch, Plantz, and James.

Finch—Goal, McMillan; defence, Stark and Dickey; centre, Preston; wings, Dutt and Gove; subs., McIntosh, McQueen, and Casselman.

Referee—George Foster, Ottawa.

Morewood Women's Institute

The regular meeting of Morewood Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. J. W. Bogart on February 9th, with a good attendance of members and visitors. The president being absent, Mrs. Bogart, 1st vice president, presided. The meeting opened with the Ode, followed with the new Institute Creed. Plans were made for an entertainment to be held in Faulkner's Hall at the close of the drawing for the rug. A reading was given on "Life's Garden." A contest was conducted by the committee in charge. Mrs. Fetterly gave a splendid paper on, "In Praise of the Apple," by Nina Moore Jamieson. The next meeting will be at Mrs. Dillabough's on March 8th, the roll call to be answered with "The Name of a Place in Ireland." The meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Former Morewood Man Passes Away at Ottawa

In ill health for the past two years, the death occurred Friday at his residence, 352 Gladstone ave., Ottawa, of Rowat Charles Swerdfeger, a former well-known resident of the Capital, and son of Mrs. Isabella Swerdfeger and the late Albert Swerdfeger.

Born at Morewood 28 years ago, Mr. Swerdfeger went to Ottawa with his parents 12 years ago, where he attended the Lisgar Collegiate Institute and the Ottawa Normal School. Later he left the city to take up residence in Chicago, Ill., where he was employed as an accountant in the Walgreen Drug Company. Two years ago, Mr. Swrdfeger returned to Ottawa, where he has resided since.

In addition to his mother, he leaves to mourn his death three brothers, J. O. Swerdfeger, Murray Swerdfeger, and Ernest Swerdfeger, all of Ottawa; and two sisters, Mrs. A. E. McLatchie, Iowa, and Miss Ina Swerdfeger, at home.

The funeral was held from his late residence on Monday afternoon at one o'clock to the Presbyterian Church at Morewood for service, and thence to the Morewood cemetery, where interment was made.

The Bankers Win Again Defeat Nation Valley 3 to 2

The "Bankers" won their third straight game by defeating the Nation Valley puck chasers Tuesday night in a hotly contested game by the score of 3 to 2 on local ice. The local team was without spare men and played the sixty minutes without rests, doing well to pull a win from the bag after the Nation boys had obtained a two-goal lead in the first period. Play was very strenuous at times, the continued hard checking and tripping resulting in a mix-up in the last period when Eric Casselman and Jim Munro, of Nation Valley, were sent to the penalty box to cool off.

The first goal of the night came when Chas. Grey scored for Nation Valley on a shot from close in, and Munro put his team two up five minutes later. Thirty seconds later McLeod scored for Chesterville on a pass from behind the net by Eric Casselman, and one minute later Eric put his team on even footing when he slammed in his own rebound.

"Baldy" Durant came close to scoring for the Bankers when he shot from near the corner and the puck ticked off both goal posts. In the last period, however, he aimed his shot better and a slow one drifted over Stanley Shay's stick into the Nation goal.

The Bankers have won their three games and to-night Riverside comes to town to do battle, and to-morrow night Limerick and Nation Valley will meet for the first time.

The teams:

Nation Valley—Goal, S. Shay; defence, Ken Merkley and Jim Munro; centre, Ab. Munro; wings, Edwin Shay and C. Grey; subs., Ralph Grey, B. Robinson, B. Ball, H .Barkley.

The Bankers—Goal, Campderros; defence, Eric Casselman and H. Durant, centre, J. McDonald; wings, L. McLeod and Alex McMillan.

Seven Firemen Injured Fighting Alexandria Fire

ALEXANDRIA, February 14.—Seven firemen were injured and damage of more than $100,000 was caused Saturday when a stubborn fire that threatened for a time to destroy the town, wiped out eight buildings in the business district.

Starting from an unknown cause at 5.30 a.m. in the Marleau garage, the blaze flamed through one building after another until it was brought under control at noon. Remains of the razed structures continued to burn, however, and to-night firemen were still pouring water into the destroyed structures where small fires are causing anxiety. At 6.15 last night a portion of the Dever building collapsed and debris began to burn with new vigour. The entire resources of the town fire department were needed to prevent a fresh outbreak.

All seven injured are being treated for severe burns. None is in danger. W. A. Milligan, member of the squad sent from Cornwall fire department to help out local forces, was among the injured, suffering from cuts, bruises and burns. The others were members of the local fire fighting force. Other firemen escaped serious injury several times when walls collapsed.

Two explosions which were heard throughout the town occurred in the Dever block. Cans of oil caught fire and exploded, igniting blasting powder and ammunition stored in the same buildings. The firemen injured were burned in the blasts.

Mrs. Eva Archambault and her seven-year-old son, who resided over the Markson store, had a narrow escape when they were overcome by smoke and had to be carried to safety.

Those who suffered the largest losses were: Arthur Marleau, garage, $13,000; Aldege Lalonde, restaurant and dwelling, $1,000; D. E. Markson, general store, dwelling, barn and warehouse, $40,000; Mrs. Eva Archambault, $500; Dr. M. Markson, $5,000; A. Chenier, hardware store, warehouse, and home above, $26,000; J. Larocque, restaurant. $1,000; E. J. Dever, unoccupied store, $15,000.

THE CHAMPION CHOPPER

Perth Courier

MR. C. M. FORBES has presented to the Courier a framed statement which alludes to Mr. Edward Moot, of Weathersfield, Vermont, who some years ago was the champion wood chopper of the United States, who chopped on a wager five cords of wood in a day from sunrise to sunset. The bet was that this feat could be performed between sunrise and sunset, but the chopper had an hour and a half to the good, and besides had an eighth of a cord over the required quantity, and had some wood split and piled besides. This performance was nothing compared with the official record of a noted wood chopper of this section, the late Mr. Charles Foster, of North Elmsley. He had a record as a chopper which none could approach, and to-day there are men living who will verify on oath, if necessary, as to some of the work performed by that man. Mr. Foster, when cutting for Mr. Henry Andison, walked a mile to and from the bush and in five and a half days between sunset and sunrise in the last days of December (the year is not given) cut split and piled 30 cords of birch and maple. This is by far a greater record than Mr. Moot's. Another time Mr. Foster cut at the farm of Mr. James Manion 14 cords of elm in two days, splitting but not piling it. On another occasion, Mr. Foster split and piled seven cords of elm from three trees in one day for Mr. Walter Cunningham, of North Elmsley.

County Orange Lodge Registers a Protest

CANNAMORE, Feb. 2.—The Loyal Orange County Lodge meeting of Dundas County was held in the Orange Hall, Cannamore, on the above date with a large number of members present from the various lodges throughout the county. The following resolution was passed and forwarded to the Minister of Education, to the Orange Sentinel, and the local press:

"Whereas the Roman Catholic Church is putting forth a great effort to secure a greater share of taxes from incorporated companies for the Separate Schools of the province;

"We, as a County Orange Lodge, resolve and register our protest against any further concessions being given the Separate Schools of Ontario in the way of taxation.

"We believe that we have in Ontario a Public School system second to none in any province open to all classes and all creeds.

"We believe that the Separate Schools are a hindrance to the unity and in bringing together the mutual understanding and common ideas of the two great races, the English and French people."

Lennox Baker, Wm. Hillis, Committee.

Luke: "Do you find it hard to meet expenses?"

Carl: "No, I meet them at every turn."

Accidental Death Verdict In Brinston Youth's Death

A verdict of accidental death was returned at the inquest held at Brinston Monday afternoon into the death of Alfred Marcellus, 18, son of James Marcellus, Dundela farmer. The inquest was held with Coroner Dr. Chas. Louden, of Morrisburg, presiding.

Evidence showed that Marcellus met his death as he was driving in a buggy to Iroquois on February 7th. It was stated that there were no lights on the buggy and that Hugh Thompson, driving a car which hit the vehicle, was not able to see it.

Mrs. Thompson is the organist in the United Church at Iroquois and they were returning home after the church service. She said she went to a nearby house and telephoned to Dr. Miller, at Iroquois, who arrived. Dr. Miller and Dr. Marcellus, of Iroquois, gave evidence that Marcellus came to his death by fracture of the skull. Provincial Officer Rose, of Morrisburg, who was at the scene of the accident shortly after it happened, swore that he took measurements of the road where the accident occurred and said that he found the buggy across the ditch on the west side of the road and Thompson's car close to the ditch on the same west side.

Farewell at Cannamore For Mr. and Mrs. L. Irven

On Friday evening about eighty friends met at the home of Mr. Wm. Irven, Cannamore, to bid him and his family farewell before they left for their new home south-east of Morewood. Refreshments were served and games and dancing were indulged in during the evening. At 12 o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Irven were called forward when the following address was read by Mr. Frank Carruthers and the presentation of a well-filled purse made by Mr. Thos. McMahon.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Irven,—

A few of your many friends have gathered this evening to spend a social hour with you and your family before your departure from among us, and to tell you that we are very sorry to sever that friendship that we have all so much enjoyed since your coming among us ten years ago.

We have always found in you, Mr. and Mrs. Irven, true friends, ever ready to assist in times of trouble or need, and always found your influence and example on the side of right and usefulness.

Your broadness of mind, Mr. Irven, always enabled you to be characterized with that spirit of fairness that soon endears us one with another to be willing to do unto others as we would wish others to do unto us.

While we are sorry to lose you and your family from our midst, we are glad to learn that you are not going far away, and that we may meet often to renew our old-time friendship. We all wish you success and prosperity in your new venture, and trust that the hand of Providence may ever guide you all.

Before parting with you, Mr. and Mrs. Irven, we would ask you to accept this purse as a small token of the love and esteem which we all hold for you and your family.

We shall ever and always be glad to renew our friendship of past days.

Signed on behalf of all present—Thos. McMahon, Frank Carruthers, Robert Steven.

Cannamore, February 12th, 1932.

Mr. Irven, although taken by surprise, thanked the donors on behalf of himself and Mrs. Irven and expressed his regret of parting from them, and extended a warm invitation to all present to visit them in their new home.

"Why, Mandy," said Mrs. Brown to the coloured woman who did her laundry, "what in the word have you been doing to get arrested?"

"Ah ain't been doin' nothin' 'tall, Mis' Brown," was the indignant answer. "All dis heah fuss is 'bout a lady named Miss Demeanour, and Ah ain't nevah heahed ob her befo'."

"We have parted forever," said the young man ,sadly. "She is never going even to write to me any more."

"Are you sure of that?" asked a sympathetic friend.

"Yes. She told me so in each of her last four letters."

"Oh, George," she exclaimed, "now that you've seen my new hat you surely can't regret that I got it? Isn't it just a poem?"

"Well, if it is," said George, "I suppose a proper title for it would be 'Owed to a Milliner'!"

Persistent Suitor: "If you'll marry me, I'll take out a big insurance policy on my life, so you'll be well provided for."

Bored Girl: "Yes, but suppose you don't die."

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Big Wool Clip Handled

Although faced with poor markets and apprximately 5,000,000 pounds or one of the largest wool clips ever handled, W. H. J. Tisdale told the Ontario Sheep Breeders' Association the other day that the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers had disposed of this successfully and that full settlement would be made immediately. Moreover, shippers through the Co-operative would receive as nigh or higher prices, quality for quality, as were paid in Canada or eslewhere. Due to careful management, handling charges had been cut a third this year or three-quarters of a cent per pound. "Our warehouses are practically empty," stated Mr. Tisdale, "and we enter the new season in excellent shape." This record has been made in the face of dire predictions that wool could not be sold at any price and was only possible, this speaker claimed, because the Co-operative during the past ten years had been opening up many new outlets in Britain and elsewhere for Canadian wool. These outlets saved the situation in 1931, according to Mr. Tisdale, although he was of the firm conviction that as we were producing only a fraction of our domestic consumption of wool and wool products practically all our clip should find a market in Canada.

Women's Institute A Rural Organization

When the rural women of Wentworth County organized a Women's Institute in 1897 for "the dissemination of knowledge relating to domestic economy, including household architecture, with special attention to home sanitation, a better understanding of the economic and hygienic value of foods, clothing, fuel, and the more scientific care and training of children with a view to raising the general standard of health and morals of our people," little did they think that 35 years later the rural women of 28 countries scattered pretty well over the face of the earth would follow their example.

The main purpose of the Women's Institute is to provide educational opportunities for grown-ups bearing directly upon the responsibilities of home life. They are endeavouring to provide for the rural communities some of the advantages found only in the larger centres, such as suitable meeting places, libraries, rest rooms, athletic fields, parks, rinks, etc. The criticism is sometimes heard that the Institutes of Ontario are composed largely of townswomen, when, as a matter of fact, surveys made at different times and in different parts of the province in recent years show that 65½ per cent of the members are living on the farm, 21 per cent are made up of persons who have lived on the farm, and only 13½ per cent have never lived on the farm. One of the chief factors contributing to success is that the residents of the villages and smaller towns are co-operating with the farm women in making the Institutes a forceful educational factor for women of responsibility, are encouraging wholesome social activities, are rendering a splendid service in cases of need, and are contributing very liberally in providing desirable community equipment and utilizing it to the best advantage.

It is the regret of some of the leaders that here and there we find branches which are so absorbed in the raising of money and providing supplies for community undertakings and relief that they are, to a large extent overlooking the fact that the main purpose of the organizaion is that of education in nutrition, clothing, housing, health, with a wholesome sprinkling of the cultural and entertaining Ontario has 1200 Women's Institutes with a membership of 41,000.

A New Organization

An association of representatives of all county councils in the province to further the farmers' interests is likely to be the outcome of the conference held by Hon. Thos. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, at the Parliament Buildings recently with several hundred representatives of county councils from all parts of Ontario, who gathered at his behest to delve into farming problems. The Minister declared it would be non-political and would present its recommendations periodically to the Government. He stated it as his intention to have the Department of Agriculture in each county co-operate with the farmer to help him grow crops especially fitted to soil and climatic conditions of his county.

Alfalfa a Valuable Crop

Apple growers have found that in order to get sufficient colour and maturity for the fruit, it is necessary to keep the orchard in sod, breaking up only at intervals of five or six years. And for this purpose the best crop to use is alfalfa, according to W. B. Somerset, chairman of the Ontario Marketing Board, and a practical grower in the Burlington district.

Alfalfa, being perennial in nature, remains in the ground year after year. Its roots penetrate the soil much deeper than those of the apple tree and, therefore, do not consume much of the moisture supply available to the tree. Furthermore, the roots open up the soil, make it porous, thereby allowing air to penetrate the soil, which in turn stimulates bacterial action.

This plant is capable of taking nitrogen from the air and storing it in the roots as nitrates. All good orchardists apply nitrate fertilizers early in the spring to promote rapid browth, and to stimulate blossoming. A crop of alfalfa is an extremely cheap source of nitrate supply. Alfalfa, being the heaviest yielder of all legume and grass crops, may be cut twice a year. The cuttings, which are allowed to remain under the trees, make an excellent mulch, which conserves moisture and keeps weed down.

About Timothy Seed

George H. Clark, Dominion seed commissioner, brings to the attention of Canadian farmers that while this country's consumption of timothy seed is fully 9,000,000 pounds a year, Canada only produces 1,500,000 pounds a year, importing mostly from the United States the balance. Mr. Clark goes on to say:

"At the present time timothy seed in Eastern Canada is bringing farmers around 9c a pound, while the price in Western Canada is around 8 cents per pound. This price is, of course, controlled largely by the price at which the United States producers can lay their product down at Canadian points, and this price includes such items as the cost of the seed, transportation, insurance, handling charges, and customs duty. Are there good reasons for these importations, or could that production profitably be kept at home?"

The Canadian Turnip

The Canadian grown Swede Turnip (Rutabaga) has been finding a large place in the high-grade trade of United States cities. From four to five thousand cars go out each year from the central part of Ontario to American markets. Food specialists declare it to be one of the finest of vegetables, yet many Canadian people still think of it as the lowly turnip.

In order to develop interest in and a deeper appreciation of this splendid vegetable, a very interesting circular entitled "The Canadian Rutabaga" has been published by the O. A. C. This circular gives valued information about the best varieties, the food value, and the table use of turnips, and includes sixteen very carefully-tested and approved recipes for the preparation of this vegetable.

Copies of this circular may be had for the asking from the Extension Department, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

They were left alone for the first time in their new home.

"Darling," she cried, "I must make a terrible confession to you—I can't cook."

"That's all right, dear. I've a confession to make, too," he replied. "I'm a poet, and there won't be anything to cook."

"Were you annoyed because I sharpened a pencil with your razor?" asked the attentive wife.

"Twice," replied the patient husband. "After I had given up trying to shave, I tried to write with the pencil."

Federal Salary Cuts Hit Premier and Liberal Leader

From the Prime Minister down to the man who fires the noon gun, all those who draw salaries from the Federal Government got the bad news when the main estimates, showing the recently-announced 10 per cent salary cut all down the line, were tabled in the House of Commons.

A little booklet, appropriately bound in blue, gave the details in cold print. It showed that Premier Bennett is cut from $19,000 to $17,100. Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal Leader, and the cabinet ministers come down from $14,000 to $12,600 each. These figures all include their session indemnities at the new rate of $3,600.

Even the motor car allowances paid to the Premier and Mr. King, the ministers and the speakers of both Houses in addition to their salaries and indemnities, were clipped by 10 per cent. Last year, will be recalled, Mr. Bennett abolished the fleet of Government cars maintained for these gentlemen and decided to pay an allowance of $2,000 for the maintenance of a car. This grant is reduced to $1,800.

No one was missed, Hon. G .Howard Ferguson, High Commissioner to Great Britain, will get $10,800 instead of his former $12,000, one part of the blue book showed. Another obscure item, a few pages away, made it plain that the same went for Ernest Snowden, the post office employee who has been making $150 a year extra for firing a gun on the river front every day at noon. This year Mr. Snowden will have to make the same noise for $135.

No allowance was made in the estimates for the cut which the Governor-General has insisted on taking. His Excellency's salary of £10,000 per year payable at par ($48,666.66) is fixed by the British North America Act and could not be changed without an amendment passed by the British Parliament. He will take his reduction by refunding 10 per cent of his salary, $4,866.66 per year, to the treasury.

The allowances made to the speakers of both Houses in lieu of residences have been slashed from $3,000 to $2,000, or by one-third.

Lights and Shades of London

CENOTAPH

TEN-THIRTY A. M. in Whitehall on a cold, grey February morning. There is expectancy at the Horse Guards, where two living statues draped in scarlet coats sit their patient charges. A group of sightseers wait at the gates for the high note of a silver cavalry trumpet for the click of hoofs on the cobbles and a shining cavalcade beneath an arch, the pageantry that precedes the silent ceremony of changing a guard that "turns out" for no man but King.

Laden omnibuses go down to Westminster or up to Charing Cross and as they pass every passenger looks at the two Life Guards in their scarlet glory, for they are one of the sights of London that never grows stale. Taxicabs and limousines spin smoothly left and right, men and women enter and leave Government offices: a Whitehall morning is moving easily, leisurely, elegantly, if you like, towards noon.

* * * *

More than thirteen years ago the last shot was fired. Thirteen years. It is long enough for a heart to become convalescent. Sharp agonies which at the time of their happening seemed incapable of healing have a mercilful habit of mending in six years. A broken love-affair that turned the world into a pointless waste of Time has ended in a happy marriage in thirteen years. A death that left so much unspoken, so much regret, so much to atone for, falls in years into its pathetic perspective a little nearer Nineveh and Tyre.

I look up at the Cenotaph. A parcel delivery boy riding a tricycle van takes off his worn cap. An omnibus goes by. Then men lift their hats. Men passing with papers and documents under their arms, attaché and despatch cases in their hands—all the business of life—bare their heads as they hurry by.

Thirteen years have made no difference here. The Cenotaph—that mass of national emotion frozen in stone—is holy to this generation. Although I have seen it so many times on that day once a year when it comes alive to an accompaniment of pomp as simple and as beautiful as church ritual, I think that I like it best just standing here in a grey morning, with its feet in flowers and ordinary folk going by, remembering.

* * * *

I look up to Charing Cross and down to Westminster. On one side Whitehall narrows to a slit, against which rises the thin, black pencil of the Nelson column; on the other Westminster Abbey, grey and devoid of detail, seems etched in smoke against the sky, rising up like a mirage from the silhouette of bare trees.

The wind comes down Whitehall and pulls the flags, exposing a little more of their red, white, and blue, as if invisible fingers were playing with them. The plinth is vacant. The constant changing trickle of a crowd that later in the day will stand here for a few moments has not arrived. There is no one here.

No one? I look, but not with my eyes, and I see that the Empire is here: England, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India. . . here—springing in glory from our London soil.

* * * *

In a dream I see those old mad days eighteen years ago. How the wind fingers the flags. . . .

I remember how only a few weeks ago, as a train thundered through France, a woman sitting opposite to me in the dining car said, "The English!" I looked through the window over the green fields, and saw row on row, sharply white against the green, rising with the hill and dropping again into the hollows—keeping a firm line as they had been taught to do—a battalion on its last parade.

The Cenotaph and no one there? That can never be.

Look! Near the mottle white and black of the War Office far up Whitehall is a platoon of Guardsmen marching. As they come near I see that they are men of the Irish Guards. They swing their arms and stride out, carrying their rifles at a perfect "slope." They are very young, the "eighteen-year-olds" we used to call them in 1918 when they were called up to form the "young soldiers' battalions." I remember how frightened some of them were at this thing that had happened to them, and how often, when one was orderly officer padding round at night, a boy soldier would be crying like a child in the darkness at some harshness or in a wave of homesickness.

The old recipe has worked with the Guards! On they come, a platoon of tough Irish soldiers, their solemn faces grim and set under their peaked caps, their belts snow white with pipeclay.

They approach the Cenotaph:

"Platoon!" roars the sergeant. "Eyees—right!"

He slaps his rifle butt, and the faces swing round.

"Eyes—front!"

* * * *

The Cenotaph stands there with a wind pulling . . . pulling like fingers touching the Flag.

Next week: Romance on Wheels.

NO DANGER OF CORN BORER IN INSPECTED SEED

Federal Plant Inspection Service Certifies All Seed Shipped

AS THE TIME of year when supplies of seed corn for 1932 will be in demand is just around the corner, the Dominion Entomologist calls attention to the fact that there is absolutely no danger of the transmission of corn borer larva in seed corn shipped from quarantine areas which is inspected and certified by officials of the Federal Plant Inspection Service.

The only way in which the European Corn Borer can be spread through seed shipments is through carelessness which permits pieces of stalk or cob to remain with the seed corn, the larva of the borer being too large to lodge in the seed kernel. It is to make sure that seed corn is thoroughly cleaned that Plant Inspection officials in the quarantine areas are required to issue a certificate of inspection before seed corn may be shipped to points outside a quarantine area.

Owing to the effectiveness with which control measures have been carried out by corn growers, particularly in Southwestern Ontario, under the direction of provincial and federal departments of agriculture, considerable supplies of Canadian seed corn are available for the coming season. Past experience has shown conclusively the advantages of Canadian grown seed, and the farmers all over Canada are welcoming this opportunity of again obtaining their supplies from dependable Canadian sources.

THE ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

J. L. Payne
in The Ottawa Journal

IN A RECENT REPORT of Senate proceedings, Hon. C. P. Beabien is represented as having said that failure to deepen the St. Lawrence inland waterway would probably lead to the United States building a canal through New York State. "What would Canada then do about the money she has already spent on her canals?" he asked. I have given years of close study to the waterway question, and am convinced that the Senator's fears are quite unwarranted, for the following reasons:

1.—The United States is not a large shipper of export wheat by the St. Lawrence route, although enjoying absolutely equal privileges with Canada in the premises. In the last normal year, 1928, total shipments through all the canals at Sault Ste. Marie amounted to 406,759,712 bushels of which but 94,333,843 were American in origin, or 23.5 per cent.

2.—The United States already has the New York State Barge Canal, finished a few years ago at a cost of $171,000,000. There is something suggestive in the fact that the primary estimate was $52,000,000. Although this new and up-to-date canal parallels the rail system to the port of New York, and nearly 60 per cent of all American export wheat left the water at Buffalo it did not move 10 per cent of the volume available. The railways got 92 per cent. In fact, this new and costly canal has not in any year since it was completed moved 3,500,000 tons all told, or about eight per cent of the total commodity volume of 40 years ago through the old Erie.

3.—The estimated cost of the proposed canal from a point on Lake Ontario to the Hudson River is two billions in round figures. If that canal were built and operated, even though it should move every bushel of American and Canadian export wheat, it would involve a draft on the United States Treasury of not a penny less than $100,000,000 a year. If the entire volume of American export wheat were shipped by rail, and the Federal Treasury were to pay both rail and ocean tolls, the saving would be not less than $25,000,000 per annum as against building, operating, and maintaining the projected canal.

4.—The United States Department of Commerce, during the years President Hoover was at its head, went thoroughly into this proposed canal through New York State and most positively declared it to be economically unsound and indefensible. This finding was strongly endorsed by the Brookins Institute, an independent organization, of Washington.

For these reasons I suspect the United States is no more likely to build the canal about which Senator Beaubien is apprehensive than to start an airway service to Mars.

BUYING UNEMPLOYMENT

Industrial Canada

WHAT EVEYONE wants to see in Canada just now is more Employment.

We talk about "giving employment. When a manufacturer takes on hands; when a farmer hires help; when a merchant employs clerks; when a housholder provides a man with a job, he is said to "give" employment.

That is all to the good and the more employment that can be "given" that way the better.

But lots of people think they can't "give' 'employment, because they are not in a position to hire any one to work for them.

If they only realized it, however, they CAN "give" employment and the way they can do it is by "buying" employment.

Every time a person purchases an article or a service Produced-in-Canada, he is "buying" employment and doing his bit to keep his fellow-Canadians from joining the ranks of the unemployed.

He is not simply buying a hat, or a piece of furniture or food or a railway ticket, he is helping to buy a job for some one as well.

Think of your buying in this double way and you will realize what a service you can render, even with a few cents, when you make sure that your Money is being spent on Produced-in-Canada commodities.

You are really buying employment, —the employment of fellow Canadians whose work is represented in the articles you have purchased.

Therefore when you buy, see to it that you are buying Canadian employment and thereby keep Canadians at work and help to reduce the ranks of the unemployed.

HEALTH SERVICE

CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

"NOTHING SERIOUS"—"Only one of the diseases that children get"—This is, unfortunately, what too many parents think about the more common communicable diseases.

It is quite true that these diseases do occur chiefly among children, for the reason that children have no immunity of power of resistance against the invading disease germs. Disease among children is just as serious as when disease affects adults.

Every communicable disease is dangerous. Some take a heavier toll than others, some are more damaging in their after effects, but all are serious. The communicable diseases should be prevented when possible, avoided always, and treated seriously if they do occur.

We look forward to the time when we will be able definitely to prevent all the communicable diseases which are now causing so much suffering and disability and which are responsible for a very large number of deaths.

The first disease against which we were given a means of definite protection was smallpox. In the year 1796, Jenner, an English physician, published his findings which demonstrated that vaccination would prevent smallpox.

Smallpox is banished where vaccination is used. Smallpox is no longer one of the usual diseases of children, as it was before vaccination was discovered. In the pre-vaccination period about one out of every ten deaths was caused by this one disease, and it was unusual to see a person who was not scarred by smallpox.

Within the past few years we have been given the means of banishing another of the so-called usual diseases of children—diphtheria. Diphtheria is a disease which, for generations, has struck terror into the hearts of parents.

That diphtheria still continues to take a toll of over nine hundred lives each year in this country is due to our failure to make use of the means which are at our disposal for its prevention. We have, in diphtheria immunization, a simple, safe, and sure method of preventing diphtheria.

Unfortunately, the list of diseases which we can prevent so definitely is limited. We can, however, in all cases, use the general methods which are of value. No child should ever be exposed to contact with a child or an adult who is suffering from a communicable disease.

Isolation and quarantine are carried out to safeguard others, not merely to protect those who are quarantined. The placard on the door is placed there as a warning to others, not for the protection of the inmates of the placarded house.

Proper treatment of the case will lessen the chance of serious results. Neglect of the case, failure to understand that disease is always serious, led to unnecessary pain and damage, if not to fatal results.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

SEEDING AND CARE OF HOT FRAMES

Experimental Farms Note

AFTER the hot-bed has been prepared, it should be left until the first rapid fermentation of the manure has taken place and the temperture of the air under the glass nas fallen to 75 degrees Farenheit. The seed may then be sown, either directly in the soil placed over the manure, or in flats. At the Experimental Station, Charlottetown, flats have been found the most convenient especially where a large number of varieties are to be sown. These flats or boxes are usually 12 by 18 by 3 inches in size. Drainage is provided by small spaces left between the bottom boards of the flats. When boxes are used very little soil is needed to cover the manure. Laths on the surface for the flats to rest on are helpful, if the manure is very hot.

The soil for seeding should be a rich, fibrous loam and one that will not bake easily. Sods and manure composted in the proportion of three parts sod and one part manure make an excellent mixture. A small amount of sand may be added if the soil is inclined to be heavy. Shortly before using, the soil should be sifted through a screen of about one-quarter inch mesh. A small quantity of freshly slaked lime added at this time will kill any angle worms that may be present and also improve the physical condition. Fertilizers at seeding time are not necessary.

When filling flats it is advisable to place at least one-half inch of the rougher screenings in the bottom for drainage. The box is then filled with the sifted soil, the edges pressed down with the fingers and the whole then firmed and smoothed with a flat board. When finished the soil should be slightly below the edge of the flat. The seed may be sown in shallow drills about one inch apart or broadcasted. Large seeds must be pressed firmly into the soil. Small seeds should be merely covered. After seeding, press lightly and water thoroughly.

Care of the frames after seeding consists chiefly of watering and ventilating. The temperature at this time should be around 70 degrees Fahrenheit with slightly lower temperatures at night. Until the seedlings are well up it is well to shade lightly, and after that they should be given as much air and sunlight as possible. In ventilating raise the sash on the side away from the wind. During bright sunny weather the temperature may be allowed to rise to 70 degrees or even higher, but during dark, cloudy weather and at night lower temperatures must be maintained..

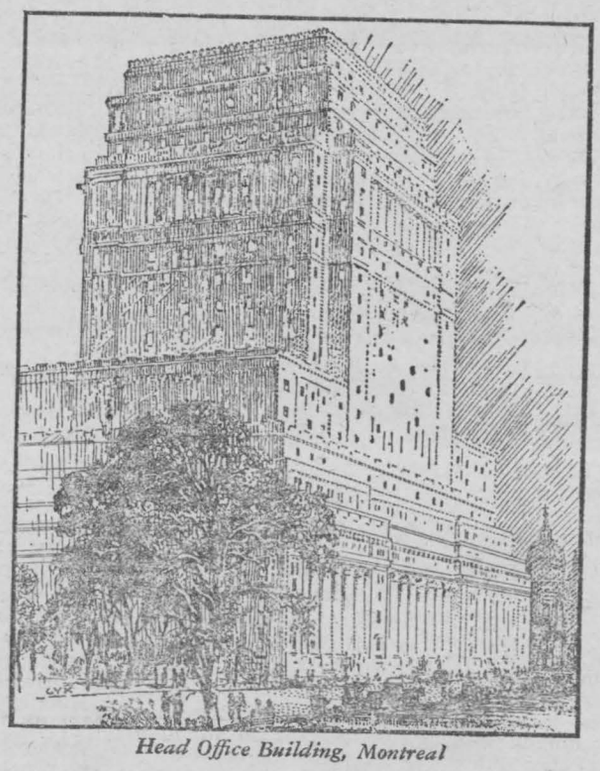

After the seedlings have formed their first true leaves they may be transplanted. When mixing the soil for transplanting add a liberal amount of bonemeal. Before being set in the open the plants should be hardened as much as possible. This is best done by withholding water and giving all the air possible.

A youthful offender has been discharged because his father had already thrashed him. A switch in time saves fine.

THE YEAR'S BUSINESS REVIEWED

". . . I think you will agree with me that for a year such as that through which we have just passed the showing is a remarkably fine one.

"New assurances of over $527,000,000, and a total in force exceeding $3,000,000,000, are figures so great as to need no emphasis.

"The distribution of our new business is interesting. Canada contributed $101,000,000, United States $291,000,000, Great Britain $50,000,000, and the rest of the world $85,000,000.

"Our mortality experience has been even more favourable than that of last year, the claims being but 54.3 per cent. of the expected, against 57.6 per cent. in 1930.

"Since business was commenced in 1871 we have paid out in benefits $594,000,000. Last year alone our payments were $93,000,000, an amount exceeding the total assurances written in 1922. We may well rejoice over the magnitude and importance of the social service which the Company is performing.

"During the past year life assurance has been tested as perhaps never before, and it has withstood the trial triumphantly. So far as I am aware not one life company on the continent has had to close its doors, a wonderful record. In Canada we can claim with pride that even since Confederation not one Dominion licensed company has ever failed.

"It will be noticed that in addition to the surplus of $16,000,000 over all liabilities and capital stock, we have a contingency reserve of $4,700,000 to provide for possible shrinkage in mortgages and other real estate investments. Our reserves have been calculated on the same strong basis as last year. Although our investments payable in American currency greatly exceed our liabilities in that currency, we have treated both as on a par, taking no credit for the premium on American funds. Our liabilities under contracts in other currencies also are included at a total greater than required at the prevailing rates of exchange.

"Our holdings of stocks have been valued on the basis laid down by the Dominion Department of Insurance, which is practically the same as that adopted for all companies by the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners of the United States.

"In new investments we have favoured high grade bonds, the yield on which is now very attractive. Our purchases of Canadian Government bonds during the year amounted to $23,000,000.

"The profits paid or allotted to policyholders amounted to over $26,000,000, or over 20 per cent. of the total annual premium income.

"In the light of these figures, the report is indeed an excellent one.

"And what of the future? No one believes that the depression will last for ever. It is impossible to say just when the turn will come, but with the vast natural resources of this continent, and the brains, energy, and actual wealth of its people, business recovery is inevitable. When prosperity does return no company will share in its benefits in greater measure than our own."

—From the President's Address at the Annual Meeting.

SIXTY-ONE YEARS OF SERVICE

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The Amazons

UNCLE JIM sat beside the window and looked far down at the people moving about in the sunshine in the park. Ever since luncheon he had heard his nieces, Celia and Madge Mackenzie, and their friend Ruth Sawyer chattering away in the room down the hall where they were getting ready to go out. Now Celia came into the front room of the apartment and walked to the other window, beside which her mother was sewing.

"It's such a lovely day, mother," she said brightly, "you and Uncle Jim ought to go somewhere. Oh, you're going to the museum! And Marshall too? That's fine. We may be rather late, you know, but you needn't worry. That waist is going to be stunning, isn't it, mother? Don't work too hard, deary. Take care of yourself."

Uncle Jim blinked. "Is that the way she talks to you, Agnes?" he demanded suddenly.

"That?" repeated Mrs. Mackenzie.

"'Take care of yourself, deary,'" Uncle Jim mimicked Celia's indulgent tone. "As if you were five and she were forty! In my day that's the way mothers used to talk to their children."

"Oh, yes, that's the way all girls talk to their mothers nowadays," Mrs. Mackenzie replied as she laid her stitches.

Just returned from a long sojourn in India, Uncle Jim had brought back with him besides his strange clothes, his brown complexion and his little bronze curiosities an utter unfamiliarity with the changes in the ways of American households. Among the Mackenzies he was as bewildered as a staid old duck might be among a family of stirring and up-to-date eagles. His nephew, John Mackenzie, was the kind of a father familiar to him—a hard-working business man who was away from home all day, and who was inclined to bear rather hard upon the fancies and foibles of his family. Uncle Jim could understand him. But he could not understand Agnes, his niece, whom he had left a pretty girl about to grow up into the home-keeping, cared-for kind of woman he knew best. She seemed to him to have become a woman altogether different in kind from the one he had expected. Running her six-room apartment without the help of a maid, feeding her family scientifically and triumphantly on a very small allowance, helpin- to put her daughters through college by doing remarkable things in interior decorating, taking courses of study, reading, writing articles and giving talks, haunting the shops in search of samples of stuffs and wall papers, steering her son through the rapids of school life, handicapped as he was with weak eyes and a high-strung temperament, deftly managing her rather difficult Scotch husband, giving little tea parties and dinner parties, heading committees and finding time as now to embroider—doing all those things and more, Agnes was a wonder!

And here were her daughters, as independent and self-assured as young Amazons, administering to their own needs, if not to the needs of their parents as well, and petting and patronizing their mother! Uncle Jim remembered the "yes, sirs" and the "no ma'ams" of the submissive children of his own youth and rubbed his head; he felt that the old world was upside down. "Where are the girls of yesteryear!" he murmured, looking up at Celia's sparkling face and her slim, self-reliant young figure.

Celia smiled at him affectionately but did not answer. In spite of her sparkling manner she did not appear to be thinking much of her mother or of her uncle. As a matter of fact, she and Madge were much absorbed in plans for an entertainment that they were to give that afternoon for the children at the Neighbourhood House in the Italian quarter of the city. The girls taught a sewing class there and were interested in all the activities of the organization. Both admired and adored Mrs. Elliot, the president.

"Where's Marshall?" demanded Celia. "He has my camera, and Mrs. Elliot wants us to get some snapshots of the children to-day."

Like a Jack-in-the-box Marshall shot up from the window seat in the dining room. He was a handsome dark-eyed boy of twelve who played the violin remarkably well. His taste ran so strongly to music that he even used his musical vocabulary for ordinary speech. "Andant gracioso," he observed and handed his sister the camera.

Celia laughed and gave him a shake. "We ought to get some pictures of the talent also," she said. "Billy Grosvenor doing one of his stunts would be a splendid advertisement for us. Oh, did you know, Uncle Jim, the Grosvenors were going to entertain for us to-day?"

Celia spoke of the Grosvenors in a tone that suggested beings on the exalted same level as cherubim and seraphim. It appeared that the Grosvenors, who were newly acquired and highly prized friends of Celia's and Madge's, had generously offered to put themselves at the service of the Neighbourhood House to-day. Mr. William Grosvenor had promised to do sleight-of-hand tricks and tell stories, and his sister Maud had said she would sing ballads an arias, all for the delight of the little Italians.

"Imagine," said Celia, "their giving up a whole afternoon just for those children, when people like the Vandergoulds would be only too glad to have them. Why, indeed they would, mother!"

Mrs. Mackenzie had uttered an exclamation that caused her daughter to turn upon her with acute reproach in her voice. "I don't think you appreciate the Grosvenors at all, mother,' 'Celia continued. "Why, theyr'e sought after everywhere. Mrs. Elliot told me only yesterday that she thought Billy Grosvenor was the cleverest fellow she ever knew, and that Maud had a lovely voice; she said it was perfectly wonderful that we were able to get such people to entertain for us. She's coming herself to-day just to hear them!"

"My dear," said Mrs. Mackenzie, hastening to make amends of her unlucky remark, "I didn't mean to disparage your friends in the least. I thought perhaps you exaggerated a little, that's all."

"It's all right, dear," replied Celia. "But I don't like to have you throw cold water on our entertainment, even if you don't think it's very important."

"I wouldn't throw cold water on it for the world," Mrs. Mackenzie declared and smiled warmly at her daughter.

The little cloud dispersed, and when the girls came into the room together to say good-bye a little later there was no shadow on their enthusiasm. They were very imposing. Tall and laughing and masterful, they walked confidently about the room. They seemed so intrepid and commanding that Uncle Jim almost expected to hear them burst into the triumphant shout of the Valkyries. Celia had forgiven her mother. She radiated gayety and confidence from the tip of her blue hat to the toes of her trim little boots.

"Aren't the Grosvenors going to call for you?" Mrs. Mackenzie asked meekly. "I thought—"

"No," said Madge briskly. Madge was like her sister; she was not so pretty perhaps, but she had a captivating little snub nose, and a delightfully capable and matter-of-fact air of her own. "No, dear; they're going to meet us over at the Neighbourhood House. We arranged all that Tuesday night. What is it, Ruth?" The whirl of departure had begun. "Forgotten your bag? No; Celia has it! Ready, Cele? Do hush, hush, Marshall, we're agitato enough as it is! Come on, girls; the Grosvenors will get there ahead of us if we don't hurry. Good-bye, mother! Good-bye, Uncle Jim! We'll tell you all about it when we get home!"

"Good-bye!" echoed Celia and Ruth, plunging gayly out after her into the hall. The front door banged behind them, and stillness settled over the apartment.

"Marshall," said Mrs. Mackenzie gently, "I wonder if you and Uncle Jim would mind if we postponed going to the museum till another day? I'd like so much to get this waist done now that I'm at it."

"Well, if you'll let me read—" began Marshall.

"Oh, you may read," his mother conceded.

Uncle Jim, wondering a little at his niece's devotion to her sewing, settled himself contentedly for a peaceful afternoon.

It was then two o'clock. For almost an hour nothing disturbed the sunny quiet of the apartment. Then the telephone bell rang. "Celia, mums," said Marshall, who had sprung to answer the call.

Mrs. Mackenzie's devotion to her embroidering ceased on the instant. "Yes," she said into the transmitter. "Celia?—Yes!—What is it?—They haven't come?—And you haven't heard anything?"

Uncle Jim looked interested. Could it be the adored Grosvenors that had failed? He could judge the situation only by his niece's answers; but if his ear had been at the receiver he might have heard a hurried girlish voice that suggested tears: "But how could we help it, mother? Everything was all arranged.—No: we've telephoned and nobody answers.—Oh, yes, there's a perfect mob outside now; they've all brought their little brothers and sisters and their mothers, and we daren't let them in, and we can't send them away. You know how these people are when you've promised them a thing. And Mrs. Cadman let us have the room and all. —No, she isn't here, and we can't send for her! We're mortified to death already because Mrs. Elliot has brought friends.—But there isn't time mother! We never could get anybody.—Oh, will you? Mother, you're an angel!—Yes, anything—anything on earth, so they'll think they've had an entertainment.—Yes, I'll tell Madge. Hurry, mother, won't you?"

Mrs. Mackenzie hung up the receiver and turned to Marshall, who was standing beside her, alive with curiosity. "Marshall," she said, "could you play something for the little Italians over at the Neighbourhood House?"

"Con brio," said Marshall. "Con Fuoco—"

"Speak English!" commanded his mother.

"Why, I suppose so,' 'Marshall responded, "if you think they would like it."

"Never mind about that," said his mother crisply. "Get your music and your Strad as quickly as you can. Celia can accompany you." She took down the receiver again. "3470 Clinton.

"Yes, put on a clean collar, Marshall, and your other coat. Hurry!"

"Yes, Mrs. Beach!"

"Prestissimo!" exclaimed Marshall, catapulting joyfully out of the door.

No, Mrs. Beach could not sing this afternoon ;she had an engagement and was just going out. Had Mrs. Mackenzie thought of Miss Campbell of Trinity choir? She loved to sing for charity, and she knew lots of musical people.

But Miss Campbell had recently moved, and Mrs. Mackenzie could not reach her by telephone. So she telephoned Mrs. Vivian, one of her richest and best clients in whose house she had given most of her talks on interior decoration. Mrs. Vivian at once promised to send her automobile round to take Mrs. Mackenzie to Miss Campbell's and everywhere else she might wish to go.

"If Miss Campbell can't do it, I'll ask Miss Matthews," Mrs. Mackenzie told Uncle Jim. "I'll get somebody and at the worst we have Marshall." She was pinning on her hat as she spoke. Now she caught up her coat.

Marshall had already put his violin—which the family affectionately but disrespectfully called his "Strad" into its case and was strutting up and down muttering, "Agitato! Scherzo! Appassionato!" under his breath.

Five minutes later the promised automobile was at the door, and Marshall and his mother were on the steps. But before they got inside it she sent Uncle Jim to the Neighbourhood House to bear the news that help was coming.

The Neighbourhood House and the Thrift Shop, which were run by the same management, occupied different rooms in the same building, and you entered each by a door that opened on a different street. Uncle Jim blundering in at the wrong door, found himself inside the Thrift Shop. To his unaccustomed senses it was a bewildering place filled with a chattering crowd to whom three or four earnest-looking ladies in long brown pinafores were selling things of extraordinary variety. Afterwards Uncle Jim learned that the stock was composed of out-grown, out-worn, or outlived articles that well-to-do persons sent and that sold at prices far below their original value. In the room there was everything it seemed, from a shoe button to a Worth gown.

At the moment Uncle Jim was too much bewildered to do more than stand and wait for some one to come to him. At last when a woman with a pair of overalls on her arm, a bunch of orange blossoms in one hand and a large knife in the other happened to come by he asked her whether she could tell him anything about his niece.

"I'm sorry," said the lady brightly, "but I'm afraid we haven't any—Oh, your niece, Miss Mackenzie! Yes, she's in the back room there behind the curtain, lying down. Yes, go right in!"

He found Celia lying in a state of mental and physical collapse on a discarded couch; near by two women who were working frantically to examine and put a price on articles that had just come in spoke a word or two of sympathy and encouragement from time to time.

"Oh, Uncle Jim!" Celia cried, springing up. "Why, how did you ever — Oh, is mother coming? Has she done anything? Is there anybody —"

"Your mother,' 'said Uncle Jim, "is bringing first aid at once. She'll be here in a minute now. She said not to worry."

"Oh!" Celia exclaimed and sank back. "Oh, I'm so glad! I wish she were here now! I don't know what ailed me, Uncle Jim, but I was so sick about it all. Oh, I'll be better; I'm better now; I'm all right. Let's go and tell Madge quick. She's out there with Mrs. Elliot. They don't dare open the doors; the crowd is awful outside. But it'll be all right now that mother's coming."

In front of the Neighbourhood House round the corner the air rang with volleys of argument and exclamations. The street was filled with a small but genuine mob. It besieged the door and demanded entrance, attention and the fulfillment of promise. A lethargic policeman was making a weak attempt to keep order and saw that small and vehement Italians did not kill themselves or one another in the frantic struggle to see through the windows or to open the doors.

And then scarcely five minutes after Uncle Jim and Celia had joined the little group that was watching through the crack of the blind inside, a symptuous automobile arrived, and the mob was sullenly silent. The automobile drew up at the curbstone, and three fur-clad, portfolio-laden ladies stepped from it; with them was a boy with clear eyes and curly hair who carried a violin case in his hand. At sight of him the crowd gave a shout of delight. He laughed and waved his violin case at them, and their good humour returned swiftly. The little party passed through the midst of the crowd and went inside, where they were greeted with almost tears of joy.

A moment later the doors were thrown open, and the audience entered. There were no foolish preliminaries to keep them waiting. The last and smallest crowd was hardly in its seat when the first signorina stepped smiling on the stage and the concert began.

It was successful from the beginning. The Grosvenors themselves could not have won more abundant and vociferous applause. But the audience saved its greatest enthusiasm for Marshall. And how he played! The first soft, vibrating note of his violin roused them to rapture. After that the music flowed from under his flying fingers and the weaving bow with a passion and tenderness that might have filled the heart of one of their own passionate race. The little Italians gazed at him, round-eyed with awe and adoration, and their mothers wept.

"Some concert," said Marshall, putting his violin into its case when all was over and the audience, pouring out its emotion in Italian and broken English, were streaming out a gain into the street.

"Some family, I should say," Uncle Jim observed later when they stood laughing and talking things over in the living room.

Even Mr. Mackenzie, hastily informed of the events of the day, wore a dry smile that might well have indicated properly restrained pride and satisfaction.

"Wasn't Marshall a perfect duck!" cried Celia. "And didn't they take to him like flies to honey! Madge kept her head pretty well too; and as for mother, she made me think all the time of that verse about the day, 'So cool, so calm, so bright.' I just gave up when I found that the Grosvenors weren't coming. Do you suppose they went off somewhere and forgot all about us?"

That indeed was just what had happened. The lively Grosvenors, sent for to assist in the entertainment of a big house party on Long Island, had tried once to telephone the Mackenzies and, failing, and knowing, as Maud explained in her belated letter of apology, that it was "only for the Neighbourhood House," they had let the whole matter slip from their minds."

"I wish they could have seen that crowd!" said Madge, sighing. "And Mrs. Elliot and all. But it was for the best! Mrs. Elliot told me afterwards that Marshall's playing did something for those children and for their mothers also that was worth more than anything else to the organization. It gave them a fellow feeling toward us. And it's all owing to mother! I don't know what would have happened to us except for her. If she hadn't been at home—"

Celia suddenly looked at her mother. "Why, you were going to the museum!" she exclaimed. "Mother Mackenzie, don't tell me you stayed at home on purpose!"

"I certainly did," said Mrs. Mackenzie. "I never had much faith in the Grosvenors, and I know you'd have your hands full with the excitable people down there; so I thought I'd better be on hand."

"Some use for mother yet, eh?" suggested Uncle Jim, when the chorus of exclamations and laughter had subsided. "I didn't know but nowadays—you girls are so competent—"

Celia threw her arm impulsively round her mother's waist and hugged her, and Mrs. Mackenzie, laughing, leaned her cheek against her tall daughter's shoulder.

"It's the same world after all, Uncle Jim," said Madge. "I guess girls need their mothers as much now as ever they did. At any rate, we do," she added, catching at her father's hand and whirling him gayly into the circle. "Don't we, dad?"

"Molto, ma non troppo," added the irreperssible Marshall grinning.

"Now," said the teacher, "which boy can name five things that contain milk."

"I can," shouted a freckle-faced youngster. "Butter an' cheese, an' ice cream an' two cows."

Friend: "You look ill."

Mrs. Newrich: "Yes, I dreamt that all the animals from which my furs are made were standing round my bed."

Friend: "But surely you are not afraid of a few rabbits."

It was at the vicar's Christmas party. Tea was over, and games had been indulged in. The vicar looked around.

"Well," he said, "I think we might have a song. Tommy, will you oblige?"

"I can't sing," said Tommy, "but I'll fight any of the other kids!"

Conceited Author: "If it were customary in this country to confer titles upon men who go in for literature, what would I be, do you think?"

Friend: "Baron of Ideas."
