Council and H.S. Board Agree to Build Addition

Agreement was reached by the High School and Village Council Boards for the building of an addition to the High school to include the teaching of the new subjects of manual training and household economics, and renovating the old building to include a science room and the resuming of the commercial course. The cost of the work, estimated by W. C .Beattie, Ottawa architect, and including new equipment, is $17,400, of which Chesterville will be required to raise $10,000.

The addition will be a two-storey brick wing at the rear of the present building, and will house the shop on the first floor with the household economics classroom on the second storey. Formal application has been made to the municipal council for permission to proceed and council is expected to pass on it at a special meeting tonight, and then application will be made to the Municipal Board for the debenture issue

C. W. Beattie, of Ottawa, the architect, was present at the meeting to explain the sketches of the four schemes he had planned, each including two and three rooms. The three-room plans, which would have put the science room in the addition, were found too expensive and the two-room plan was adopted after a thorough discussion.

The present heating system, in a sad state for several years now, will be replaced by a low pressure steam system fired automatically. The cost of fuel will be greatly reduced with this changeover, it is stated. The present stairways will be demolished and both halls cleared with separate entrances for boys and girls at the rear and the stairs in the hall formed between the two buildings. This will be a vast improvement, giving direct opening to the outside.

Estimated cost of the addition is set at $11,000, of which the Department pays one-half. The same proportion will be contributed to the equipment for the new courses, and the share of the heating and plumbing for the new rooms. No contribution is made toward the repairs to the present structure, such as removing the stairs, changing of the furnace room.

The furnace room will be enclosed with a cinder block partition, and the toilets will be changed.

The office is slated to be moved to half of the upper hall and its present space will be incorporated into that upper room formerly used as a science room and at present accommodating fifth form. This will make a room large enough for the science and commercial classes.

With the grants from the department and estimated increase in county pupils, and with the debentures spread over 20 years, the cost to the village ratepayers will be very small.

If permission is obtained from the Municipal Board, it is hoped the building will be ready for the fall opening of school.

Old Home Week Decorations Subject Council Discussion

Very little business came before the village council at its regular meeting Tuesday evening but much time was spent in discussion of various matters. A delegaton was received from the High School Board in reference to financing the proposed addition to the school buildings to take care of the additional work which will be necessary to bring the school up to date with the new course of studies. A special meeting of the Council will take place tonight when action will be initiated to obtain the consent of the Municipal Board for the issuing of debentures to take care of the cost.

A request of the Women's Institute for a wooden floor in the Library was held over until figures can be obtained as to its cost.

A committee from the Old Home Week Association will confer with the council at tonight's meeting to formulate a scheme of decoration to be carried out Old Home Week.

Funeral This Afternoon Late Mrs. Chester Merkley

The death occurred on Monday of Mrs. James Chester Merkley in her 74th year at the home of her daughter, Mrs. G. W. Strader, of Williamsburg, after an illness extending from last December. The deceased before her marriage was Sarah Pickering, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Pickering of Goldfield. Fifty-three years ago she became the bride of Chester Merkley, who passed away ten years ago.

The late Mrs. Merkley was very well known in Chesterville where during all the years of her married life she was active in church and community work. A member of Trinity Methodist church and since union of Trinity United, she was a member of the Women's Missionary Society and of the Philathea Bible class.

She is survived by a family of one son, Delbert, of Detroit; and four daughters, Mrs. J. M. Jarvis, North Bay; Mrs. H. B. Black, South Mountain; Mrs. A. Steinberg, Morewood, and Mrs. G. W. Strader, Williamsburg. Two daughters, Maude and Alice, and one son Clifford died some years ago. Two sisters, Mrs. Dan Fawcett and Mrs. Ezra Droppo, survive, as well as one brother, Michael Pickering, of Portland, Oregon.

The funeral will take place this afternoon in Trinity United church when the service will be conducted by Rev. R. C. Tait, assisted by Rev. A. C. Adey, of Williamsburg. A guard of honour will be formed by members of the WM.S. and of the Philathea Bible Class. Interment will follow at Maple Ridge cemetery, when Messrs. Chas. T. Fulton, D. J. MacMillan, O. L. King, A. E. Bolster, J. Slosser and J. D. Beckstead will be the pallbearers.

"Father" Fisher Celebrates 82nd Birthday This Week

The Record joins the many friends of Chesterville's grand old man, Mr. Joseph Fisher, in extending congratulations and best wishes to him on attaining the 82nd anniversary of his birth, which was quietly observed on Monday. Mr. Fisher is hale and hearty and active in business in his butcher shop in Chesterville and in buying live stock for the Montreal market throughout the district.

About 55 years ago, after having had charge of the work in dredging the Nation river between Chesterville and Cass Bridge, he set up business for himself in this thriving village where he has carried on continuously and successfully all these years, becoming one of Chesterville's most substantial citizens.

While accumulating a competence, he has in no less degree become beloved by those with whom he has carried on his dealings, until today he is familiarly and lovingly called "Father" Fisher He has ever been a follower of clean sport and never misses a hockey game on local ice regardless of the elements.

He is a devout and faithful member of Holy Trinity Anglican church and no worthy cause goes from him empty-handed after an appeal. May he be spared many years to grace Chesterville with his presence.

CARD OF THANKS

The family of the late Mrs. Ozias Durant wish to express their appreciation for many expressions of sympathy and kindnesses on the death of their mother. 24

MUNICIPAL NOMINATIONS AND QUALIFICATIONS

THE EFFORT of Hon. George S. Henry in the Legislature to eliminate the practice of "plumping" for a single candidate in municipal elections met its deserved fate when it was killed. Mr. Henry could have done a real service to the ratepayers of many municipalities if he had eliminated the time for qualification after nomination and substituted for it a declaration of intention to run, accompanied by qualification papers before the nomination is made. The will of the electorate is many times frustrated by manipulation among the candidates after the nomination has been closed when nothing can be done about it.

INCOME TAX VS. SWEEPSTAKES

PREMIER HEPBURN'S stand on the sweepstakes question may not be with the one idea of keeping the money that is believed going from Ontario to Ireland in this province. If it were he would know how futile it is to try to keep local money at home, whether it is village, city or province. Like those with one-track minds, no two residents make the same resolve at the same time to do their trading (or gambling) at home for the sake of their community.

Mr. Hepburn doesn't give a hoot about the sweepstakes for Ontario unless he gets the power which the Dominion has always exercised in collecting the income tax. The sweepstakes will mean something. The Dominion, while probably having the right to tax sweepstakes winnings, has never done so, considering them as increase in capital, while in the United States they are taxed heavily. The United States government is the largest winner on the Irish sweepstakes in that country and takes no chances.

If Mr. Hepburn finds sweepstakes taking care of hospitals, an income tax on the winnings would be a better bet than a played-out inheritance tax.

CHESTERVILLE'S ENVIABLE POSITION.

THE Department of Municipal Affairs, in a preliminary report on municipal statistics for 1937, shows the population of Chesterville as 1,068, Iroquois as 1,050, and Winchester as 1,041.

The assessed value of Chesterville is $405,000; Iroquois $314,000, Winchester, $459,000.

The total unmatured debentured debt of Chesterville is $18,153; Iroquois, $8,444; Winchester, $49,389.

BUYING AT HOME.

Forest Standard.

NO TOWN will become a good business centre so long as its business men rely on a few merchants to make the effort to bring trade to town. Too often the men in a few lines of trade are about the only ones that reach out after custom. Other merchants wait until these men induce the people to come to town and content themselves with trade that naturally drifts to their place. A public-spirited man should ask himself if he is doing his best to attract people to come to town to trade, helping the entire business community, and no town is a success unless all lines are working to extend the trade as far as possible and trying to bring a larger territory in the circle in which the town is a business centre.

DEPRESSING STATISTICS.

Kingston Whig-Standard.

ONCE every twenty-two seconds—or three times a minute, there is committed a crime of one sort or another in the United States. Every two minutes there is a burglary; every nine minutes a robbery; every two and a half minutes a car is stolen; every thirty-one minutes a homicide, either in the degree of murder or manslaughter. One person in every ninety-one is the victim of a crime of some kind.

The authority for these figures is the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which has been doing such an effective job in rounding up what its chief, Edgar Hoover, has described as "rats." They are based on the statistics for 1937 gathered by the bureau which lists the aggregate number of crimes at 1,415,816 during the year.

Standing alone this total and these time rations seem to suggest that the United States is ridden with crime, thing are probably getting worse and worse. One wonders if this is really the case. Or is it just the effect of solitary statistics.

MAILS MUST BE SAFE.

Huntingdon Gleaner.

NOW and again across Canada there arise in post offices cases where employees are either charged with or found guilty of tampering with the mails.

Cases are on record where employees have been charged with opening letters, reading the contents, and then sealing up the letters again. This is an indictable offence, and the person so doing is liable to sentence anywhere up to five years under the Criminal Code.

If an individual has a complaint regarding mails being tampered with, it is necessary that he or she sign a written complaint to this effect and get one other person to do so also. When there are two written complaints, an investigation can be called through the proper authorities.

Tampering with the mails is a most despicable practice, and it is fortunate that there is not a great deal of it in Canada.

TEST SEED BEFORE SOWING IN THE FIELDS.

WHEN seed fails to germinate after sowing, real loss results, for reseeding costs money and early crop propects vanish. Recently a gardener sent samples of lettuce, onion beet and carrot seed to the Dominion Seed Branch Laboratory, Ottawa, for germination test. The seed was three years old and intended for use next spring. The lettuce germinated 79 per cent, the beet 71 per cent, the carrot 49 per cent and the onion two per cent. Three years ago, when fresh, all of these seeds germinated over 90 per cent. These tests proved once again that some kinds of seed lose their vitality quicker than others. The onion seeds were practically dead when three years old, while the beet and lettuce seeds retained reasonably high germination. The carrot seeds had declined almost 50 per cent in the three years but was still serviceable at a heavier seeding rate. These results are typical of many tests made.

The point is that old seed should not be used before testing for germination. This may be done at home between two damp blotters or a sample may be sent to the nearest Dominion Seed Branch Laboratory.

RAILROAD LINGO.

Barrie Examiner.

RAILROADING has a language all its own—a language that is used every day in the yards, around the shops, on the road—wherever railroad men meet. Humourous for the most part, this picturesque jargon is as colourful and homely a manner of speech as can be found anywhere in the lexicon of North American slang, says the Canadian National Magazine, which gives a list of some of the terms, under the title "Railroad Slanguage."

The names are not always complimentary. For instance, the engineer is known as a "hogger" as well as an "eagle eye;" a car repairman is a "car toad;" a boilermaker is an "iron skull;" the master mechanic is "master manias;" and the train despatcher is a "detainer." The fireman has to put with the name of "diamond pusher," "tallowpot" and "bakehead." The conductor is referred to as "the brains;" on some trains he is "brass buttons;" officials are called "brass collars" and "brass hats." A "car catcher" is a brakeman, and "scissor bill" is what they call a student brakeman. Telegraph operators are "hams." The despatcher is the "master mind." The yardmaster is a "dinger;" a checker is a "number grabber;" "gandy dancer" means a section hand; a machinist is a "nut splitter."

The hogger's locomotive has many names. It is a battleship (so is the landlady, sometimes), a calliope, a pig or hog, a goat, a Jack, a mill and a stack o' rust. The caboose is known as a hearse, a buggy, a hack and a clown wagon. A box car is a "side-door pullman." A railroad motor car is a "doodle-bug."

To "beat 'er on the back" is to make fast time; "to bend the rail" is to turn the switch; to "jerk coup" is to take water on the fly," and to "wipe the clock" is to stop suddenly.

BOYOLOGY.

Exchange.

A BOY is a man, minus pride, ambition, pretense, greed, and about 110 pounds. When he grows up he will trade romance, energy, bashfulness, warts and a snag-proof stomach for those other possessions. But then a boy is usually getting the worst of it in some trade or another.

The world is so full of boys that it is impossible to touch a fire-cracker, strike up a band, or pitch a ball game without collecting about a thousand of him. Boys are not ornmental, but they are useful. If it were not for boys, the newspapers of this country would go undelivered and unread, and a thousand circus elephants would die of thirst.

Boys are not popular except with their parents, but they do have many fine points. One is their entire trustworthiness. You can absolutely rely on a boy, if you know what to rely on. Trust him to get into some kind of mischief every day, for instance, and he will not disappoint you.

Boys are abstemious, eating only when awake. They are also very durable. A boy, if not washed too often and if kept in a cool, quiet place for a while after each accident, will survive broken bones, hornets, swimming holes, massacres and nine helpings of pie at one sitting.

PLACE FERTILIZERS CAREFULLY FOR BEST RESULTS

Poor Germination is Costly if Seeding Has to be Repeated.
—Result of Typical Tests.

FERTILIZERS are carriers of plant food and unless placed in a convenient position for the plants to use, are ineffective. It is not enough to scatter the fertilized around the plant on the surface of the soil with the expectation that bounteous rains or watering will take all the plant food down to the feeding roots. Some is bound to be lost unless cultivated into the soil or, better still, it should be placed in narrow bands at the depth of the plant roots and from two to four inches away. This permits the roots to reach the fertilizer quickly and easily without chemical injury to the plant. The so-called "band way" of applying fertilizers to garden crops has proven the most effective and economical. Modern planters and drills are designed to apply the fertilizer in the band way.

BOY FRIEND CAN STAY UNTIL 11.30, SAYS MAGISTRATE

Sarnia.—If a daughter, 18, wishes to entertain a boy friend of that age even if he remains until 11.30 it is not unreasonable, Magistrate C .S. Woodrow ruled when he dismissed a charge of trespass brought by the girl's father, Fred Telford, Point Edward, against Leo McCallum, the boy friend.

"You have to be reasonable about this," the Magistrate instructed.

"I try to be," Telford replied.

"Well, then don't bring a young fellow up here for seeing your daughuntil half-past eleven at night," the Magistrate said in closing the case.

Well-Known Township Man Becomes an Octogenarian

Celebrating his 80th birthday, William H. Hamilton, a former deputy reeve of Winchester, living just north of Chesterville, is enjoying good health and has been the recipient of many messages of congratulation.

Mr. Hamilton is the son of the late Joseph Hamilton and the former Miss Jane Cramer, members of the first pioneer families to settle in the vicinity of Chesterville. He was born on the Hamilton homestead, a short distance from his present farm.

He served for seven years as councillor and was deputy-reeve for three terms. He has for many years been a trustee of his school and has taken an active interest in educational matters. One of the largest land owners in the township, he still looks after his numerous farm properties. His wife, the former Miss Debra Barrington, died eight years ago.

He has one daughter, Mrs. G. I. Smith, of Maple Ridge, and two sons, Thomas J. Hamilton and William, both of Winchester township.

Hopeless.

"How do you spell 'graphic'?" asked the young man; "with one 'f' or two?"

The old man sighed: "Well," he said at last, "if you are going to use any you might as well go the limit."

How to Enjoy Oneself.

Donald: "Thank you."

Woman: "I like to hear little boys say, Thank You."

Donald: "Give me a couple of pieces more and you can have a grand time."

Elderly Twp. Farmer Dies Result of Kick From Cow

Henry Wood, 75-year-old farmer of Winchester township, who was fatally injured Thursday evening by a kick of a cow at his home at Harmony, died in Ottawa Civic hospital Tuesday morning.

The elderly farmer was attended by Dr. J. J. McKendry, of Winchester, who had his patient transferred to hospital the morning after the accident. X-ray photos revealed a fracture of the spine at the base of the skull.

Born at Harmony, he was the son of the late James Alexander Wood and the former Miss Virtue Jane Docksteader, who settled in the vicinity more than a century ago. For the past 35 years he had farmed in Russell and Winchester twnships, and about a year ago returned to the home of his brother, having disposed of his interests in Russell. Of a quiet, reserved nature, he had many friends in the district who mourn his tragic death. He was formerly a member of the Harmony L.O.L. and of Ormond Baptist church.

Information from Ottawa said no inquest would be necessary.

He is survived by four sisters, Mrs. John McGregor, of Winnipeg; Mrs. Willis Froats, Port Dalhousie, Ont.; Misses Effie and Lillian, both of Harmony, and one brother, John Wood, of Harmony.

Preparation.

The bright young thing came into the room and smiled at her mother.

"Mother," she said, "I must have some money for a new dress. Will you ask daddy for it?"

"Ask him yourself, dear," was her mother's reply. "You are getting married in a month's time, and you must have some practice."

Cheese Assn. to Place Buyers on Every Board

Brockville. — The Ontario Cheese Producers' Association will have a buyer on every cheese board operating in the province this year, A. W. McIntyre, of Finch, the president, told the annual meeting of the South Leeds Cheese Producers' Association at Lansdowne, on Saturday.

Mr. McIntyre stated that S. L. Joss, Belleville, secretary of the Ontario body, was in England at the present time seeing brokers who will handle the cheese bought on boards by association buyers. The president also said the provincial association will also furnish qualified milk-testers for the province, thus relieving dairying instructors of these duties and enabling them to devote their time to improving the quality of cheese produced in the province. Leeds County last year, S. S. Cheatham told the meeting, was the only county in the province to improve the quality of cheese in 1937 over that of 1936.

John G. Mitchell, Lansdowne, was named president for the year and Stanley Leeder, Caintown, was named secretary.

Large Flock Wild Geese Resting Off at Britannia

Waiting until the weather up north is mild enough for them to continue their flight to the summer haunts, the wild geese continue to make Britannia village, near Ottawa, their headquarters.

About 2,000 geese spend the nights on the ice in Lake Deschenes. This ice does not move out until much later than the ice in the open sections of the river. They perch on the ice for their rest periods, but go far afield during the daylight hours.

One resident of Britannia who has seen the geese come and go for many years, states that the birds rise from the ice shortly after five o'clock each morning, providing a memorable sight as they stream away, breaking the silence with their "honking" and the sound caused by the movement of thousands of wings.

Then they return to Britannia between nine and 10 o'clock each night. The interval has been spent in the fields for miles around where they feed.

Boy Scout Commissioner Speaks to Rotary Club

Chesterville's provisional Rotary members was honoured Tuesday evening with the presence of John A. Stiles, Dominion Commissioner of the Boy Scouts Association, who was the guest speaker for the second weekly meeting. Mr. Stiles has been prominent in Boy Scout work in Canada for some time and knows Canada from coast to coast. He gave the gathering a rare treat in his talk on "Growing Pains."

Mr. Stiles spoke of the great expansion of world vision since 1912 with the advent of radio, and of the failure of the nations to grasp the facts and become neighbourly as their horizon of vision was broadened, but he saw signs of international friendship becoming stronger in the midst of the turmoil, and held hopes that some day the command of Christ that we should love one another would be realized.

Introduced by Provisional President P. S. Boyd, Mr. Stiles said he felt as though he were in the Garden of Eden after his visits to the dry Canadian west areas. Dwelling for a moment on the Western arid regions, he told of a peculiar incident in the drying up of Johnson Lake. As the water receded, an old road was discovered leading into the lake and when the water finally disappeared, a well was found at the end of the road in the bottom of the lake bed. This was proof, he said, that this part of Canada had been dry before and that prosperity may be expected to return.

"Growing Pains" of the individual and the world were introduced by the story of a man who left town and went into the wilds "to get away from it all." He built a hut in the valley at the junction of two rivers and each morning went down the river bank to the spring for a pail of water. One day he noticed another hut by the side of his trail. Eventually more came; the path became a street, village, town and city, and a law was passed no one should get water from the spring. The man thought he would go away again, but this was a free country and more would follow if they cared to.

"Am I a one-street man?" was the question to be asked of oneself. How many streets do you know? How many men?

"When I was a boy of 12, my world was about five miles. Like that man I was in a valley, but as I grew up I went up the hills and I could see much farther." Living in Italy he regarded the people as curious folk, until he noticed they looked at him as a sort of freak also. They couldn't understand his ways any more than he could see theirs, and he realized people were much the same.

Back in 1912, the world was in a valley. One couldn't see out of his own country. Then came the radio. A fairy clapped her hands, and the world was brought before our eyes. The world had gone on to the top of the mountain. But it was not ready for this widening of thought, of international friendliness. People of other nations are measured by our national "measuring stick," which is not yet big enough, said Mr. Stiles.

Glancing at Japan, he attempted to give the other fellow's point of view. If the map of Ontario were halved, one-half cut into a thousand pieces and dropped into very deep water, you have Japan. On these islands live 70 million people. A farmer has but two acres of land. Across the water is Australia with vast stretches of land, and across the narrow sea is great China.

The British Empire, he said, owns 85 per cent of the raw material of the world. Could these small countries be blamed for elbowing around for more room, from their viewpoint? Austria fell to Germany, and Czechoslovakia, sticking into Germany like a thumb, is a tempting morsel to the Nazis.

He related the amusing story of King Menelik II of Abyssinia who proposed by letter to Queen Victoria in 1867 when he learned she was a widow. When a reply didn't come, he decided he had been insulted and clapped the British agent in jail and said he should remain there until Queen Victoria promised to wed him. One day he saw from his palace a number of people coming up the hill. They were dressed alike and he realized he had dong wrong as he saw the throng was an army, and he shot

Reeve Casselman Again Head Counties' Reforestation Group

Reeve W. H. Casselman, chairman of County Conservation and Reforestation Zone No. 5, attended the annual meeting in Kemptville, Tuesday afternoon with about 50 members including reeves, deputy reeves and councillors from the 11 counties in the zone beginning at Frontenac county and extending east. A welcome was extended by Principal J. C. Shearer of Kemptville Agricultural School, who said more applications had been received from farmers for trees this year than ever before.

The report of the executive, given by Mr. Casselman, the chairman, recommended that a crusade be made for forestry extension through school plots, councils and the press. In Russell and Prescott counties about 1400 acres were under reforestation and half a million trees had been planted.

E. J. Zavitz, provincial forester of Toronto, stated production of nursery stock should be done in the eastern part of the province and that in 30 years idle lands usually sold for taxes if reforested would then become a real asset.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, W. H. Casselman, Chesterville; vice - pres., Marshall Rathwell, Navan; secretary-treasurer, H. G. McLeod, Kemptville.

At the conclusion of the meeting, J. A. Campbell, Kemptville, offered a half acre of land for forestry work in Dundas county.

Notice.

AS a condition of the building of a dam below the village by Nestlé's Milk Products Ltd., the Municipal Council was required to collect the outflow of certain drains emptying into the river and deliver it below the dam.

We now have a fine body of clean water where formerly we had a condition that was a disgrace to the village. This body of water will provide amply for the needs of Nestlé's and for fire protection. It also provides a swimming pool and boating facilities for those who care to use it.

For these purposes as well as for public health and as a matter of civic pride, the water in the pond must be kept clean.

We have provided a large refuse dump, convenient to the village for the use of all citizens. The council makes one general clean-up each spring. There are several persons who make a business of collecting refuse and garbage to be taken to the municipal refuse dump and therefore there is no longer any excuse for depositing waste materials of any kind either in the river, upon its banks, or upon the streets.

The pollution of the water in the river, the use of the river banks or village streets as a dumping place for refuse can no longer be allowed.

Without further notice offenders will be promptly prosecuted.

MISS HELEN LACEY, B.H.Sc.

ONE-A-PENNY ! TWO-A-PENNY !

IT IS HOT CROSS BUNS of course, that I am talking about, and if your daughters don't like them, give them to your sons. I never could see any reason for the daughter's dislike of hot cross buns and if you follow the recipe below I'm sure they will like them.

HOT CROSS BUNS.

1 cup scalded milk
¾ teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
½ cup shortening
1 yeast cake softened in ¼ cup warm water
4½ cups flour (about)
3 egg-yolks

Add scalded milk to salt, sugar and shortening. When lukewarm, add yeast and 1½ cups of flour. Beat until bubbles begin to form in the sponge. Let rise until very light. Add the egg yolks and the remaining flour. Knead lightly and let rise until double in bulk. Roll the dough to one-inch thickness and cut in rounds. Set these close together on a greased pan and let rise. Glaze the surface with a little egg-white diluted with water. With a sharp knife cut a cross on top of each bun. Bake about 20 minutes in a hot oven. Just before removing from the oven, brush with sugar and water. Fill the cross with plain frosting. If desired, a cup of raisins may be added to the dough before cutting into rounds.

GRAHAM MUFFINS.

1 cup Graham flour
1 cup white flour
3½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt

Sift all dry ingredients except the graham flour and mix them with the graham flour. Beat the egg and milk. Make a depression in the flour mixture and pour in the milk and egg and then the melted butter. Stir as little as possible in mixing; turn into well-greased muffin tins. Bake in a moderate oven 25 minutes.

SPICED COFFEE CAKE.

¾ cup brown sugar
3 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon cinnamon
⅛ teaspoon salt

Cream the butter with brown sugar and flour. Add cinnamon and salt. Spread over the coffee cake dough and bake 25 minutes in a moderately hot oven.

If desired, split the coffee cake in half, put together with whipped cream and serve as a dessert.

SOFT GINGERBREAD.

2 tablespoons butter
1 egg
1 teaspoon ginger
½ cup cold water
1½ cups flour

SWORDFISH.

Interesting Facts About Our Dominion of Canada.

NOVA SCOTIA is the only Canadian province where the big, toothsome Swordfish are landed. Cape Breton is the centre of the Swordfish industry. It is found also on the other side of the Atlantic and some times in British waters.

The sword is really a prolongation of the upper jaw of the fish. It commands the fisherman's respect for he knows that when it comes swiftly into action there is the thrusting force of a big powerful creature. It is no uncommon thing for one of these fish, several hundred pounds in weight, furious from the attack of the fisherman's harpoon, to drive its sword through the planking of a boat.

The fish itself ranges in length from four to fifteen feet and the sword up to three feet. It feeds largely on cod but will attack whales. The flesh is firm, nourishing and tasty.

During the last ten years the catch has average $104.000 to the fishermen, but in 1934 it ran up to $177.000. Last year it was somewhat less. The swordfish are usually marketed fresh. The oil is centred in the liver.

PREPARING FOR HATCHING SEASON ON THE FARM.

While Large Hatcheries Supply Many Farmers With Chicks, a Number Will Hatch Their Own.

REPEATED experiments have shown that for egg production, pullets are superior to older birds. The incubation, hatching and rearing of a great many chicks is therefore a yearly necessity. The tendency is toward large hatcheries supplying the smaller poultryman and farmer, and the sale of day-old chicks, sexed chicks and cross-bred chicks has increased rapidly.

The individual can now purchase chicks from recognized agencies with assurance. The Department of Agriculture is now grading chicks as follows: Purple label, R.O.P. chicks from blood tested and Government recorded flocks; Red label, R.O.P. Sired Chicks, from blood tested and Government approved flocks; Blue label, Approved chicks, from approved cockerels, and approved banded and blood tested flocks.

For those who wish to incubate their own eggs, the use of R.O.P., or approved males is recommended, and it is advisable to secure males early in order to get a good selection and to acclimatize them to local conditions.

Incubators should be looked over and put in first class shape. They should be scrubbed and disinfected prior to incubations and also between hatches. It is always good policy to have spare incubator supplies on hand as many a hatch has been ruined by something going wrong after incubation has commenced and with no spare parts on hand. Thermometers should be tested and placed at proper levels as a degree or so out may make considerable difference in size and strength of the hatch.

Care should be exercised in selecting normal eggs of good shell texture and colour. Breeding pens of the best hens mated to good males should receive the right food and attention in order to obtain eggs that will produce strong chicks. Follow the directions supplied by the manufacturer for operation of the incubator as the directions have been compiled after considerable experimentation.

Export of surplus Canadian pork products ensures a strong hog market, but the production of sufficient hogs suitable for export is a serious problem, particularly hogs of the desired weight (190 to 200 lbs.). For 1937, it is estimated that Canada's bacon exports will be approximately 190,000 000 lbs., equivalent to 1,583,000 live hogs. In 1932, the exports of bacon, hams and pork cuts to the United Kingdom totalled 35,820,400 lbs.; in 1934, 120.410,200 lbs., and in 1936, 158,048,600 lbs.

Those Song Titles.

The four-year-old lady was trying hard to remember the words to the tune she was humming. At last she called on mother.

"Mother, what is that song about the big flea?"

"The big flea?" asked mother, puzzled.

"Yes; 'The Big Flea Will Get You.'"

"Oh, you mean, 'The Love Bug Will Get You If You Don't Watch Out?"

"Yes, Mother; that's it."

DOMINION COMMISSIONER VISITS CHESTERVILLE

The Scoutmaster had a rare pleasure Tuesday evening of meeting Mr. John A. Stiles, Dominion Commisioner, at the meeting of the Rotary Club. Mr. Stiles has been very much to the front in Canadian Scouting for a long time and has some sons as enthusiastic as their Dad. It will be recalled that back in 1935 John Jr. and his brother visited our camp at Burritts in company with Mr. Frank C. Irwin, Provincial Commissioner.

Mr. Stiles gave Scouting a fine boost in his address to the Rotarians, and mentioned the fine work of the Scout troop at Rosetown, Sask., in the repairing and manufacturing of toys for the needy children of Western Canada.

THE HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN

Salvage

HOUR AFTER HOUR the train sped on across the level prairie. Not a hill broke the straight, unvarying line of the horizon. Scarcely a rock rose to give brief shelter from the heat. The long grass beside the track was dry. The sun shone hot and cloudless, and the air was sultry, although the month was only May.

The passengers had settled themselves as comfortably as they could for the long journey to the East — railway travel sixty years ago was not what it is today. Even the crochety old gentleman whom Lucy had been watching with amused eyes across the aisle had at last arranged his numerous cushions to his satisfaction and had composed himself for slumber. The severe-looking professor beyond was nodding over his book. Lucy Barclay looked over at them and down at the sleeping baby in her arms. Her own eyes were wide. She wondered how anyone could sleep in that car, when every turn of its wheels carried it nearer to the land of the rising sun—the goal of her heart's desires!

The goal was Lucy's home. Five years before, she had come with the young minister, her husband, to the charge of his first parish in Lounsbury, Illinois. Five happy years they had been for them both, passed among people who loved and in work that they loved; yet when, for reasons that seemed good to all, William Barclay had accepted a call to another church in the East. Lucy's heart had flown like a bird to the home of her childhood.

"People who go West are expected to come home rich, aren't they, William?" she said, turning her happy face to her husband, as he sat beside her, reading.

"Well, we are rich, aren't we, my dear?" he answered, smiling back. "Consider the experience we have accumulated—to say nothing of the baser stuff back there in that baggage car."

Lucy considered. "I am thinking," she said, "how pleased mother and Mary will be with our riches. All the furnishings for our new home, and all the lovely things those dear people have given to me and my little daughter. Did you know, William, that Mrs. Tupper made this for the baby with her own hands?" and she touched the cloak of padded wool in which the child was wrapped.

"They have done more for us than we can ever measure," said her husband. "Perhaps we shall be able to give out to others something of what we have received from them; it is stored away, safely enough, in our hearts."

"And in your sermons," said Lucy, with a quick, proud glance.

He smiled. "The fruits of five years' thought and study and experience—they ought to count for something, oughtn't they, Lucy? — all packed away in that little leather trunk at the end of the car. It was so small that I had it put in here, where I can keep an eye on it. What if I lost it?"

"A trunkful of treasure! I put your preaching coat in the other little leather trunk, and my wedding dress and the baby's things. The big black one held all the rest."

As she thought of the things that she had not been able to bring—the treasure that she must win again, with new care and patience, in another field, her face grew suddenly sober and her eyes wistful. Only a few weeks in the old home of her youth, and then the new parish, the new problems to be solved, the new way to be won, inch by inch, into the hearts and lives of the people.

Would there ever be a work so pleasant as that which they had left behind—or friends so dear? The experience that they had gained—would it avail them among their changed surroundings? Were they not after all going helpless, empty-handed, to the new field of their labour?

Then suddenly she forgot those things in a vision of her mother's face. She looked out dreamily from the window, and saw, with her smiling eyes, not the level grassy plains of Illinois, but the white steeple of the little church in Rivermouth, the hills and pastures of New England, the sea breaking, breaking on the rocky cliffs.

Noon came and passed. The baby woke and, being an adorably sunny, blue-eyed, dimpled child, received her due share of attention, and queened it right royally in her father's arms until even the crochety old gentleman and the severe professor melted into answering smiles.

At three o'clock, Lucy, crooning a lullaby under her breath, put the child to sleep again. The train raced on across the endless miles. And with it there raced, far down on the edge of the horizon, a little cloud. Growing, and ever growing, that cloud, harmless enough at first, began presently to assume, to the careless eyes watching it from the car windows, a sinister and threatening look. Its hue was green, its shape peculiar. It spread and spread and rose higher and higher toward the zenith — a great vulture with dark wings hovering above the earth. Lithning began to dart through it: thunder mingled dully with the rushing of the train.

Lucy was timid in thunderstorms. "I hope it will not be a heavy one!" she said.

Her husband did not answer; but he put her with the baby in the end of the seat away from the window. He had seen the sky look like that once before.

Darkening the prairie and blotting out the sun, the cloud swept higher and higher. The engine shrieked at it in defiance and sent out a great feather of black smoke, which the wind caught and dashed back furiously against the windows. Then, with a blinding flash that seemed to fill the whole hollow of the skies, the cloud parted and the storm broke.

Rain, wind, thunder, lightning and hail—such a fury and a tumult Lucy had never seen or dreamed of. She bent her head forward over the baby in her arms and closed her eyes to shut out the dazzling glare. Her eyes eyes were filled with the roar and crackle of the thunder.

Within the car there was a hush of awe and terror. The crotchety old gentleman had forgotten his cushions and sat upright, staring out into the strange world of wrath and darkness. One of the women in his party was crying softly with fright, while another, half crying, too, tried to comfort her. Anxious husbands reassured their wives and daughters with cheery words. A little knot of men in the forward end of the car — men who knew the storms of the Western plains—began to take down and to unfasten their travelling rugs.

Lucy bent closer over her child. "Look up, dear," said her husband very quietly. "You will never see such a sight again, I think."

Half awed, half comforted by his voice, Lucy lifted her eyes, and in the wild splendour and majesty of the scene before her forgot to be afraid.

A tempest of hail, driven against the side of the car, shattered the windows. The rain and the icy drops beat in. Lucy wrapped the child in its wadded cloak and shielded herself as best she could while her husband went into the seat behind to fasten his travelling shawl up over the broken pane.

The car swayed and shook. The engine shrieked again, and the train shot forward quickening its speed, to reach if possible the shelter of a little cut not many miles ahead.

"Can you hold that corner down for a moment?" said William to Lucy, as he struggled with his flapping shawl.

When his wife leaned forward and caught it with her free hand, there rose above all the tumult round her, above the rush and racket of the wheels, the booming of thunder, the clamour of the icy rain, another sound, deep, indescribable, appalling —a roar that seemed to fill and rend the universe.

A cry went up in the car. The passengers sprang to their feet. But before they had time to look into one another's blanched faces the tornado was upon them. It struck the train broadside and turned it over as a child would upset a toy; then, leaving it lying on its side in a shallow ditch half filled with water, the storm swept on.

"My baby! Oh, my baby!"

Lucy's voice was a shriek in her own ears; but in the wild terror and confusion of the moment, no one else heard her. She had not lost consciousness in her fall, but after the first bewildering shock had realized that her child had been torn from her arms.

Raising her head, she thrust out arms in anguish. By a great flash of lightning she saw the strange chaos into which she had fallen — broken seats, shattered windows, the jam and floating débris of the wreck. Then the darkness shut her in again; and she felt herself sinking, sinking into its unknown depths, until the soft, deep waters of unconsciousness closed soundlessly above her head.

From those depths she came floating slowly back at last, with a sound of voices, like the murmur of the waters, in her ears.

One voice that spoke close beside her, she knew. It was her husband's; and she spoke—or thought she did—in answer. What she said must have satisfied him, for she realized presently that he had left her side.

He was alive, then, and safe; but her baby was gone. She had waked with that fact fixed in her mind. She was still lying in a tangle of wreckage, with her head on a cushion and her feet in the water. The car seemed a great black cavern, full of echoing noises. From its roof she saw stalactites hanging—the feet of people who had climbed up and perched among the broken seats, to be out of the water.

She smiled at that in vague amusement. Her despair had overwhelmed her like a narcotic. She lay passive, without pain of mind or body. Only one thought possessed her: she had been discontented, unbelieving, at going home empty-handed. And now she had lost her baby. She knew that without feeling it. Presently, through her stupor, she heard a low, persistent sound near by; it was a woman sobbing.

"Don't cry!" said Lucy, with a vague and childlike instinct of sympathy.

"I guess you'd cry," moaned the woman, "if you'd lost all your money and jewels and everything, as I have! They were in my little handbag, where I always carry them, and I never let go of it for a moment till the shock came. And now it's gone, and I don't suppose I shall ever see it again! To think such a thing could happen to me, when I'm always so careful—it isn't fair—it isn't right—"

Her voice became a mere babbling in Lucy's ear; but again her instinct, the cultivated instinct of the minister's wife, urged her on to help where help was needed.

"You mustn't complain," she said distinctly, although with an effort. "You may get back what you have lost; but if not, you must try to be resigned — you must remember that all is for the best, and that we have no right—"

There she stopped; for with the sound of the stereotyped phrases, at which she could have smiled had she been herself, her own apathy was broken. For the first time she realized with full consciousness what had befalen her, and with the realization her despair gave way and her whole being melted.

"Oh, I am sorry for you!" she cried out to the woman in her natural voice. "I have lost—something—too!"

And she broke suddenly into natural tears, weeping her heart out in grief and yearning.

At that moment another sound came out of the darkness—a sound at which another instinct leaped up in the mother's heart, stronger than all her weakness, so that she lifted herself and sat up with a cry.

"What!" said the woman beside her; and then the lightning flashed again, and she saw her husband hurrying toward her, and close beside him, lurching and stumbling through the water, the severe professor, severe no longer. His face, white in the weird light, was cut and bleeding, but the smile it wore made it seem to her the smile of an angel; for in his arms he carried a bundle—a little bundle, wet and bedraggled, warm and moving, wrapped close and safe in a little wadded coat.

"YOU see," said the professor, telling his story for the fourteenth time to an admiring auditor perched near him in the dark, "I was pinned down at first,—no, only bruises; no one was badly hurt, thank God!—and when I flung out my arms, my hand touched the queerest thing—bare and little and warm; and I pulled on it, and—it was the baby's foot! I dragged her out from under something that had fallen slantwise against the side of the car, and made a sort of shelter for her. I think Mr. Saunders has it now."

"It's under my head," said the crotchety old gentleman feebly. "Some one put it there; but it's very wet and anything but soft."

"It may not be soft," said William Barclay, with a chuckle, "but I am sure it must be dry. Hold on to it, it contains my sermons."

"They'll never be dry again, then," retorted the professor.

All through the long night with their cheery courage they kept up the spirits of the wet and weary prisoners; but Lucy, lying quiet in her corner, felt neither anxiety nor discomfort any more. With the touch of her baby's hands in the darkness her faith had returned. The overwhelming gratitude in her heart left no room for coward fears. Let the future bring what it would—it was in other hands than hers; all would be well.

"Why didn't you tell me it was your baby!" said the woman who sat beside her; she had forgotten her lost handbag and the jewels in helping, woman-like, to care for the found and living treasure.

With the dawn came rescue. To a tavern, still standing in a storm-wrecked town, the thankful passengers were carried; and with them went the little leather trunk. All that day, while her husband foraged for food and clothing, Lucy sat by the fire in her tiny room, drying the precious sermons, page by page, until, blurred and warped, but still legible, they were ready to be re-copied and re-preached over and over again, as the custom was, to listening and loving congregations.

The furnishings of the new home were lost or ruined. The wedding dress and the preaching coat and all the baby's finery, the handiwork of the dear people in the old parish—those Lucy never saw again. But what of it!

When, three days later, she alighted at the station in Boston, and fell into the arms of at least half a dozen of her family, waiting on the platform, they exclaimed at her blooming cheeks and smiling eyes.

"You poor dear!" cried her sister Mary. "What a terrible time! How can you look so gay, when you have lost simply everything?"

"Everything!" cried Lucy, hugging sister as well as she could for the leaping baby in her arms. "What can you mean, my dear? We are the richest people in the world! The things we couldn't spare were saved to us with our lives; and what more do we want, William and I, to begin life with in our new home, than a baby and a trunkful of sermons?"

Comparatively Modern.

Phillips Brooks was dining at the home of a friend when he noticed the very small but dignified daughter of the house trying to take care of a very large fork.

His eyes twinkling with mischief, he said kindly, "Why don't you give up the fork, my dear, and use your fingers? You know, fingers were made before forks."

At once came the swift reply: "Mine weren't."

HEALTH

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

This is article two of a series of six, the information contained being absolutely authentic and carefully checked, and should be of great interest to readers of The Record.

WHAT TO EAT TO BE HEALHY.

Number Two.

A DEFICIENCY of any of the essential foods known as vitamins, minerals, proteins, fats and carbohydrates endangers the health. If any of these necessary food elements is missing from your diet, it will result in a gradual or, in some cases, a rapid lowering of your level of health. Your vigour will be impaired. You will probably feel what is commonly known as "seedy," and if this deficiency is marked and continues for any length of time, you will die.

You have all heard of substances called vitamins. There are at least six of these substances all of which are essential for health and life itself. They have one thing in common, the daily amounts required are small. For example, one pound of vitamin D would cover the needs of the average adult for over a billion years, yet without it we would die. Vitamin A is essential for the health of the mucuous membranes of the eyes, nose, throat, sinuses, bronchial tubes, oesophagus, stomach, intestinal tract, and the genito-urinary passages. Vitamin B1 and B2 are necessary for the nerves, skin, and the normal burning up of sugars and starches in the body. A lack of vitamin C affects the miles and miles of capillaries in the body, while vitamin D is essential for the normal formation of bones and teeth. Without vitamin E, animals cannot reproduce themselves.

We all know that a lack of iodine causes goitre, and a lack of iron, anaemia. Copper is necessary to get the iron from the food into the red blood corpuscles, and calcium and phosphorus make up over 95 per cent of the mineral part of bones and teeth. Proteins build up the body cells and are necessary to keep them in repair. Fats and carbohydrates supply energy, which the body uses to produce muscular effort and heat.

Carefully conducted investigations have shown that when your diet is just slightly lacking in any one of the 30 necessary food elements, your resistance to infections, such a colds, bronchitis, etc., is definitely lowered, so that you catch these diseases easier and have greater difficulty in recovering than when your diet is adequate. This minor deficiency of any of the necessary food elements in your diet will probably not produce any one specific symptom, but still, you will not carry on at the highest possible level of good health.

So it is very important for us to know the food elements we need, how much of each one of the food elements we should have and where we can get it. Through proper nutrition we can secure increased health and happiness, greater vigour, better resistance to disease and longer life.

The next article in this series of "What to Eat to be Healthy" will tell you what foods to eat to secure an adequate supply of Vitamins A, B1 and B2.

CHECKING MACHINERY NOW IS GOOD INSURANCE AGAINST SPRING HOLDUPS

Careful Farmers Keep Depreciation to 10 per cent.—Spare Time Now Should Be Used in Checking, Repairing, Greasing

FARM MACHINERY is a big item in the matter of farm capital and so deserves more consideration than is usually given to it. On the average farm this item will amount to about $1,500. Depreciation is one of the greatest factors the farmer has to contend with in this connection, and is usually figured at about ten per cent. In may cases, however, this figure will be nearly doubled, but with proper housing facilities or proper handling, it can be reduced considerably.

With another season of work not far away, now is the opportune time to get drills, disc harrows, cultivators and other machinery checked over. A few hours' work tightening loose bolts and bearings, replacing worn or missing parts, will likely save valuable time during the busy season. It is a paying proposition for the farmer to be able to take his machinery into the field at the start of the season in first class condition. Much of this work can be done now, such as sharpening discs, harrow teeth, cultivator shovels, etc.; cleaning and adjusting the discs and scrapers on the grain drill, seeing that oiling systems are clean and in working order so that all parts of the machine are properly lubricated, and so on. It is advisable to wash out the discs of the drill with kerosene and to make certain that these parts are getting oil or grease to them and that the discs are properly adjusted.

Liberal use of oil or grease on machinery is not a waste but rather a good investment. Some parts will require more oiling than others, but, generally speaking, for the average tillage machinery, proper oiling or greasing twice a day is sufficient. Choosing a good grade of lubricant is good economy in the long run.

SOYA BEAN PRODUCTS.

Soya beans yield an oil which is used in the manufacture of soap, margarine and lard substitutes, and, owing to its semi-drying properties, may also be used as a substitute for linseed oil. The flour derived from the bean is used as a foodstuff and the oilcake as animal feed and fertilizer. In several countries the soya bean is the principal forage crop, and in Canada it is giving every indication of becoming a valuable addition to the field crops of Canada.

A cantankerous old lady was very ill—so ill in fact that the local doctor found it necessary to call in a big specialist from London. The lady was very anxious to know what was the matter with her, so she requested her equally unpleasant sister to go down into the diningroom and hide behind the screen in order to overhear the conversation of the medical men.

In due course the doctors left the sick chamber and repaired to the diningroom. The local doctor remarked, "Well, Sir Thomas, what do you think of my patient?"

"Ah," said the local doctor, "you should see her sister."

Scout Commissioner Speaks

In this age, the newspaper and radio would give us these events shortly after they had happened, instead of months later as in 1867.

"Can our minds stand this expansion?" the speaker asked. "I believe they can." He then named a long list of international understandings that have been consummated. He praised the League of Nations and mentioned one of its great tasks, the distribution of raw materials. Speaking of its work in agriculture, he said nine-tenths of the farming is still done by the hoe. We need to tear down these fences, move in the machines, and give these people a chance.

Spain, he said, was so poor that thousands of the adults of the working classes have never tasted meat. Russia, striving to feed her millions, is now sowing wheat by airplane at at the rate of 600 acres an hour before the land was dry enough for the farmers to work.

Rotary is doing much to make international friends. It is spread in 70 nations, he said, and 900 clubs met that day (Tuesday). Noting the unselfish principles of Rotary, Mr. Stiles told of a club of 45 men in the Malay States. They represented 12 religions. The food was prepared by four cooks who must not touch each other, and when the men were on the street their castes would not permit them to touch or speak to one another. Yet, while meeting in Rotary they ate around the same board. In Jerusalem, Rotary keeps Arab and Jew together also, he said.

Now, what could Chesterville do? Every town or city has its individual character just as each man is known by his friends. Each citizen is a unit of the town and the value of these units determines if that place will stand out from the rest. Mr. Stiles referred to Rosetown, Sask., a town that was never heard of until a troop of Boy Scouts put it on the map with their work of repairing and manufacturing toys for needy children.

"If you want to be big," the speaker said, "be big first in your home, to your own children, your neighbourhood. They see you more, and you daren't be small."

Man's instinct seems to be to push up and he is quite strong that way, but it doesn't take much of a push horizontally to topple him. Rotary says: "Let's put our arms around each other." Co-operation that spells strength.

"Christ gave a new commandment to us that we love one another," reminded the Scout Commissioner. "There are some who say Christians have not followed their leader's commandment, but this is not true. We have gone one step, and God only knows what would happen if we took another step in the path of our Master."

To illustrate how far Christ's commandment has been obeyed, Mr. Stiles told the story of a boy expecting to see a Christmas tree in his home, and instead found a note reading "If I had not come." He saw his father working with a gang on Christmas Day and a bit of paper blew up with the message "If I had not come." He rushed to the church to see the Christmas tree but found a vacant lot with the sign before him again. He found a man sick, and on taking him to the hospital he knew so well, found that building gone also, and the statement "If I had not come," again before him." The dream ended as the boy's mother wakened him.

Dr. S. H. Hutt thanked Mr. Stiles on behalf of the Rotarians for the wonderful thoughts in his speech, and gave him a hearty invitation to visit the club again.

Two new members were welcomed, James Slosser and Louis David. O. L. King lead the community singing with Jack Morris at the piano.
