HENRY'S Shorthand School
Ottawa, Ont.

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

VanCamp Farmer Dies

Mr. Milton Rose, a well-known farmer of VanCamp passed peacefully away early Sunday morning at the age of 64 years. Being of a jovial disposition he made many friends whom he always made welcome to his home. For six weeks he was laid aside with pernicious anaemia and kidney trouble. Besides his wife, a grown-up family of sons and daughters survive, also several brothers and sisters. His funeral service was held Tuesday afternoon at VanCamp United church, his pastor, Rev. C. H. Brown, taking charge. Interment was made in Van Camp cemetery.

Eliza Christie Vibrans

Mrs. Eliza Christie Vibrans passed to her Eternal Home March 22nd, 1930, in her sixty-ninth year. The late Mrs. Vibrans was borne at Maple Ridge, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Grant Christie, of Maple Ridge, and his wife, Elizabeth Houlehan, of Chesterville.

More than sixty years ago, Mr. Christie went to the western part of the United States where he remained until his death. He was one of the prominent pioneers in opening up and developing this section of his adopted country as one of the builders of the then Great Northern and Western Railway. When this work was completed, he purchased a ranch in Idaho and later on a more extensive ranch in Wyoming. The confidence and respect accorded Mr. Christie by the people of this state was tangibly proved by the fact that for years he represented Wyoming in the United States Congress at Washington.

His only child, the late Eliza Christie married Mr. William Vibrans and spent her whole married life on the ranch in the State of Wyoming. It was here at her home in Border, Lincoln, Wyoming, that she was stricken with fatal illness. She was taken to the hospital in Seattle, Washington Territory, where the best medical aid was available, but passed away in less than two days after her arrival at the hospital, before the performance of an operation could render her possible temporary relief. The sad tidings were forwarded to her cousin, Miss Leona M. Ker, B. SC., M. A., of New York City, with the request that the wide connection of cousins in Winchester and Chesterville be notified. Seven years ago, after an absence of almost fifty years, Mrs. Vibrans came east and spent three months with her beloved aunt, the late Mrs. Mary Christie Ker, in New York City. They visited Winchester and Chesterville. visiting another cousin, Mr. Howard Nesbitt, the present Reeve of Winchester. But Mrs. Vibrans, perceiving that the excitement and strain were too severe for her aged aunt, Mrs. Ker, who had then passed her eightieth year, prevailed on Mrs. Ker to return to New York City and complete the visit there. Thus many cousins whom they had purposed visiting were unable to renew the old ties of childhood and of kin with Mrs. Vibrans.

The bereaved family consists of the aged father and husband, Mr. William Vibrans, who is in a hospital so critically ill that the sad tidings have not yet been communicated to him. The children are: Dr. Frank Christie Vibrans, Professor of Science in Chicago University; Mr. Lewis Grant Vibrans, who served with the U. S. Navy during the World War; Mr. George Vibrans, a rancher in Washington Territory; Mr. Charles Vibrans, and Miss Ruth Vibrans, at home with their parents, and a daughter, Miss Mary Vibrans, who predeceased her mother some eight years ago.

The deep sympathy of the cousins and friends in Winchester and Chesterville is extended to the bereaved family in their temporary separation from a devoted, Christian mother, one of whom it can be truly said: "Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her. A woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised."

Chesterville United W.M.S.

The meeting closed in prayer by Miss B. Merkley.

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Norfolk Leads in Reforestation.

Norfolk led the counties in reforestation in 1929, when 677,000 trees were planted. The objective of the county for 1930 is 1,000,000 trees to be planted on non-agricultural land or for windbreaks.

Spring Cultivation.

Use care when cultivating in spring not to spoil a good job of plowing. If you used a toothed implement in working the soil you are almost sure to drag the stubble up and make more work for yourself in picking. The best method is to roll the soil before working it, then use a disc, and, if necessary, a packer to pulverize it, then sow with a disc drill.

Farm Drainage.

Under-drainage of much of Ontario's farm land is recognized as necessary if profitable returns are to be secured. Under-drainage lowers the water level of soils, removes surplus water, lengthens the period for crop growing, makes cultivation easier and increases the efficiency of the soil. The drainage increases yields in both wet and dry seasons. Well drained soils result in lower costs of production.

That Royal Trip.

In the past three years 1407 young men have participated in the trip to the Royal Winter Fair sponsored by the Ontario Department of Agriculture. The trip is being held again this year during which time the guests will have an opportunity to see for themselves many phases of Ontario's agricultural and industrial life. The contest is open to all farmers' sons and full details can be obtained from the local agricultural representative.

The Weed Act.

Owing to public demand plans are under way for a more strict enforcement of the Weed Act this year. Farmers will be well advised to avoid inconvenience at or near harvest time by planning now to control weeds. Weed polluted fields should not be seeded without proper preparation even if this requires late sowing of a special crop. Weed inspectors have an opportunity to do their most helpful and pleasant work between now and planting time.

Multiple Horse Hitches.

More horses per team so that men can individually accomplish more work is being recognized as one way of increasing farm efficiency and reducing the cost of production of farm crops. The Ontario Agricultural College has issued a circular describing suitable hitches for four- and five-horse teams.

Spring Clipping.

Clipping the horses in spring is a practice claimed to be advantageous by many farmers. It is stated that clipping saves the animals much discomfort, thereby enabling them to develop a given amount of power on less feed. Thorough grooming during the working season also increases the horse's efficiency.

O.A.C. Extension Circular.

The Extension Department at the Ontario Agricultural College has just recently issued a series of extension circulars which are attractive, brief, and well written. These should prove very useful to those who want information regarding the various subjects dealt with. They are:

Circular No. 1—"Debates."

Circular No. 2 — "Multiple Horse Hitches."

Circular No. 3—"Fertilizer Questions and Answers."

Circular No. 4—"Farm Drainage."

Crop Meetings.

That farmers are anxious to improve their condition is evidenced by the large attendance at special crop meetings this year. Special speakers are provided by the Ontario Department of Agriculture to communities requesting their services. G. A. McCague, agricultural representative in Huron, reports an attendance of 825 at a series of 15 meetings in all parts of the county. This was an average of 55 at each point. The Lincoln County average was over 75. In Welland the average was over 100. Special meetings of this kind are being conducted in about 30 counties. The demand for speakers is so great that there has been difficulty in securing suitable speakers. As these men are practical farmers, and most of them running large farms, it has been difficult to persuade them to leave their private affairs to render this public service.

Seed Potatoes.

The term "seed" when applied to potatoes must mean something in future. It is illegal to advertise or offer for sale potatoes described as "seed" unless they are vigorous and free from serious diseases and have been so certified by an inspector of the Federal Department of Agriculture, who has inspected the growing crop and also the tubers after harvest.

This is governed by regulations of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, amendments to which became effective March 12, 1930.

Soils Train Appreciated.

A. R. G. Smith, superintendent of the Soils and Crops Train, says "we are getting all the people we can handle properly. Questions are numerous as farmers are eager for information on many problems but particularly those connected with soil management, chemical fertilizers, and weed control." This train, directed by the Ontario Department of Agriculture co-operating with the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways, is making 55 stops in Eastern Ontario. The attendance to date has averaged over 360 at each stop, the highest being 1000 at Belleville.

"Wonderful Varieties."

At this time of year there are usually some agents offering new varieties of grain and other crops at fancy prices. Extravagant claims are made for these which are alleged to offset the price and leave a very favorable balance. If farmers can procure more suitable sorts than they are now using, they should do so, by all means, but why not permit the government farms to do t menting. Trained experimenters at these stations are testing hundreds of varieties every year and no farmer is justified in paying a high price for "something new" until he learns how these kinds have produced in comparison with others on government farms.

Better Seed in Demand.

The crop report for the latter part of March comments on the increased interest which has been manifested in better seed. The demand for registered grain and certified potatoes is keen and supplies of such stock are rapidly becoming depleted. Although it is too early yet to make definite statements about the condition of fall wheat and clover, a great deal of anxiety prevails throughout the southern part of the province.

Renewed attacks on the corn borer are described in the report from Essex County. Brood sows are bringing as much as $75 apiece at sales in Lanark County, while in Leeds farmers have been disappointed over the stopping of the sap flow. In Muskoka and Parry Sound live stock is better than had been anticipated with conditions in general about normal. Norfolk will use about 325 cars of fertilizer in 1930.

Bird Club Meeting

The third regular meeting of the Peptimists Junior Bird Club was held in Room "A" April 4th, Marjorie Hannah acting as chairman in place of Jean McLean, who was absent through illness. The roll call was given. Wyda Maloley volunteered for reporter.

The programme was as follows:

You Know What You Get

When you buy branded beef bearing the red and blue brand of government inspection you know what you get. Much effective work has been done by the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture in respect to popularizing branded beef but the serious fact is that there is an acute shortage of beef animals which will measure up to the strict standards of the official grades. Most of the larger retail stores, however, now stock one or both grades. There are only two grades in branded beef: "Choice" and "Good." The "choice" beef is necessarily limited in volume and represents the product of particularly high class, well-finished cattle. The "good" beef is identified by a blue brand and is the grade in greaest supply. It includes only beef which can safely be recommended as of good eating quality. Six months in operation finds the new brands gaining rapidly in popular favour particularly because of the assurance of quality which the government stamp provides.

Girl Will Not Be Tried For Murder

North Bay, Ont.—A 15-year-old girl who confessed she had slain her mother with a hatchet because of maternal opposition to her love affair was Monday declared mentally unfit to stand trial on a charge of matricide, after the grand jury had returned a true bill. The charge arose out of the death of Mrs. Edith Foster, the girl's mother, last month. The mutilated body of the woman was found in the fruit cellar of the Foster home by a neighbor who had been summoned by the accused girl.

Testimony of a number of prominent alienists was given to the effect that the girl was mentally subnormal, one of the witnesses declaring she had a mind of a ten-year-old child.

When the grand pury returned the true bill on the murder charge, the girl pleaded guilty, but her plea was not admitted by Mr. Justice McEvoy, who immediately charged a specia jury to decide on her fitness to stand trial.

Giving evidence before the grand jury, Dr. A. E. Raney stated that in his opinion the girl was mentally deranged. He added that, if placed under proper guardianship and care, she might be able to take her place in society.

Dr. English, superintendent of the Hospital for the Insane at Brockville, Ont., after being granted permission by His Lordship to examine the girl stated that he found her to be suffering from mental trouble.

Throughout the hearing the accused girl sat unperturbed and unemotionless and heard the evidence and the presiding judge's utterance with the utmost [illegible] rence.

Justice McEvoy announced that the girl would be held in custody here pending instructions as to what institute she would be sent.

Why Keep Old Hens?

In discussing methods of increasing egg production, F. C. Elford, Dominion Poultry Husbandman, asks the very pertinent question, "Why keep old hens?" He provides the answer by citing official figures from tests concluded by the Experimental Farms Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture saying that when pullets are tested against hens the average yearly profit over cost of feed is, for the pullet $3.34 and for the hen. $1.66; presented in another way, it costs 20 cents to produce one dozen of eggs through pullets as against a per-dozen cost of 35c with old hens. It is also pointed out that it takes 60 eggs to pay for the cost of the bird, and any pullet or hen which doesn't lay at least this number is just a bill of expense. There are a number of good ways of getting hens that will lay a profit over their cost and keep.

What Is the Reason for the Low Price of Farm Land?

The Chesley Enterprise had an article a few years ago on the low price of farm property in the counties of Bruce and Grey, which it says was widely copied. The article showed that the selling price of farms would barely pay for the cost of the buildings on them and that, consequently, the farms were thrown into the bargain. Since then there has been a still further depreciation in farm property and now the value of the buildings, if they were to be replaced, cannot be realized on. "Farm lands," it says, "are unsaleable and the average farmer is barely holding his own financially. There is a hundred-acre farm with fair buildings on it, not six miles from Chesley, on which there is, with accrued interest, a mortgage of $3,600, and this spring the farmer picked up and left it to the mortgagees and took another farm on shares. Both the man and his wife are hard workers and thrifty folk, but they couldn't meet the annual payment with the present prices they are getting for farm produce. We were told of another party, who held a mortgage against a farm and threw off $1,000 of the amount because it was better to let the man on the farm try to meet the balance, as the farm would not meet the amount of the mortgage if put up for a forced sale."

The situation is deplorable and though many contributory causes have been assigned to it, a real and generally applicable remedy has not yet been found.

Speed Cured at Source

In Massachusetts a traffic official came out boldly with the recommendation that auto makers be called upon to turn out cars that cannot exceed the legal speed limit.

Why not? What is the need for making a car that can do eighty an hour when the limit is thirty-five? Certainly a powerful and speedy car is a constant temptation, especially in the hands of the young, to violate the law. And the young folks of today—and some older ones, too—appear able to resist almost anything except temptation. Of course it would be necessary for all states to have the same speed limit, or to stop interstate traffic. About the only other way to prevent the illegal speeding of autos is to abolish all speed limits.

The Boy And The Horse

The farmer's boy is losing his pride in the horses that do the work on the farm. He can't help it. In the old days this boy played with the foals, and found names for them, halterbroke the colts, was present in the morning before school when the colt did his first plowing, rubbing his shoulders at night to take the mark of the collar off them. All these little incidents endeared the farm horse to the boy. Now the farm horses come from the West and are bought at a sale. Their harness is procured from some department store. It is cheap and unattractive. These things do not bring from the prairies the thought of the pretty little foal which boys love to play with. It is only a horse to pull the plow in the hot sun and draw the wagon round the farm. There is no sentiment about it, no comradeship to cheer the life of the boy on the farm.

Jimmy giggled when the teacher read the story of a man who swam a river three times before breakfast.

"You do not doubt that a trained swimmer could do that, do you?"

"No, sir," said Jimmy, "but I wonder why he didn't make it four, and get back to the side where his clothes were."

Doings of a Week In the Legislature

First session of Ontario's Eighteenth Legislature was prorogued on Thursday afternoon by Hon. W. D. Ross, Lietuenant-Governor, accompanied by the ancient customs of the British Parliaments. The Lieutenant-Governor, after reviewing the military guard was escorted into the Legislative chamber by Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Prime Minister, to be greeted by crowded galleries, as were witnessed at the opening ceremonies just two months ago.

In his speech from the Throne, the Lieutenant Governor drew attention to the outlook for Agriculture, which he said engages widespread attention.

"The spring is somewhat later than usual," said His Honor, "but much work was done last fall and live stock have wintered favourably. The improvement in the methods of production and marketing continues to be the most valuable assistance that can be given to agriculture."

In regard to Hydro, His Honor observed that legislation passed at the session just concluded would open up enlarged spheres of usefulness for this great public undertaking.

"The measeures you have adopted will help to extend the advantages of electrical services in the rural districts," said Hon. Mr. Ross. "Plans have been approved which will serve to make power more generally available for the mining industry. These changes together with the increased normal demand for power have made it necessary to secure additional [illegible] for the production of electrical energy."

Amendments made to the school laws provide a progressive system of Primary School Inspection, he continued, as well as increasing facilities for Secondary education. This legislation combined with the generous aid you have given to all branches of education will, it is definitely hoped, tend to stimulate the efforts of teachers and trustees in this most important public service.

Commenting on the financial responsibility law for automobile drivers, His Honor said: "this law will assist in the control and regulation of motor transportation. Increased financial help has been provided for rural roads, while the proposal that the provincial roads be officially designated "The King's Highway" has met with general approval and has been embodied in the law of the province."

In connection with the Security Frauds Prevention Act, and the prosecution of brokers found not within the law, his Honor observed that the principles approved at the Conference of Attorneys-General have been embodied in the laws of the province.

As to the new five-year sessional term, his Honor said this imporant change, meeting with general public approval, will make the law on this subject uniform throughout the Dominion.

Touching on the Liquor Control situation, his Honor said the report of the Liquor Control Commission gives valuable information as to the operations of the Act. The sale of native wines has been brought within the scope of the permit system and the law amended with the view to making it more effective in the interest of sobriety.

Additional safeguards for workers engaged in mining operations have been provided for, in conformity with the recommendations made by the investigating commission. It is hoped, observed Hon. Hr. Ross, that this enlightened legislation will receive the co-operation of all concerned and will serve to ameliorate conditions which have been a menace in the past.

An increased bonus on iron ore is offering additional encouragement to an industry basic in its nature making a step forward which is likely to have far-reaching consequences for the prosperity of the province.

Pointing toward Northern Ontario, his Honor drew attention to a further $10,000,000 appropriated for the development of that section of the province, providing for the continuance of an undertaking of the utmost importance.

"Your faith in the future of the northland will afford opportunities for may prosperous communities both now and in the generations to come," said His Honor.

Satisfactory progress is being made with the extension of the provincial railway towards James Bay, while there is every assurance that the road will reach the newly discovered coal region early in the coming summer.

Many valuable suggestions are contained in the report of the special committee appointed to enquire into the game fish situation in Ontario. These suggestions will receive full consideration during the recess.

Legislation has also been enacted to improve the quality of dairy products; prevention of forest fires, and for the better prevention of vexatious legal proceedings.

Concluding His Honor said: "I thank you for the enactment of much beneficial legislation, and I trust that under the blessing and protection of Almighty God, your labours will advance the welfare and happiness of our people."

During the session, the Legislature held thirty-nine sittings, including several night sessions. Some 160 bills passed the House and will be given Royal assent. These include legislation as outlined in the Speech from the Throne, and carry out every pre-election promise made during the October election campaign by Premier Ferguson. The bill amending of the Election Act calling for a deposit of $200 for candidates in election, was put over temporarily, Premier Ferguson explaining that public opinion was not sufficiently decided upon the question. It will likely go into effect by order-in-council at a later date.

In upholding the clean and outstanding record of his government, Premier Ferguson severely critized the action of Hon. Dr. Forbes Godfrey, Minister of Health, for having written a postscript upon a letter dealing with a Mother's Allowance. Hon. Dr. Godfrey had written a letter adding a postscript to one of his constituents asking that the woman be seen and the matter would be given further consideration. Premier Ferguson declared this action inexcusable and unjustified and not in keeping with the government's record. Further action in the matter is anticipated from Premier Ferguson during the next few weeks.

BOILS

The unbroken healthy skin is an effective barrier to the entrance, into the body, of the numerous germs with which the skin is brought into contact.

There are germs, commonly called disease germs, which cause certain specific disease, such as diphtheria and typhoid fever. There are other germs which are very common; some of these are probably always present on the skin, but as long as the skin is unbroken and healthy, they do no harm.

The skin may be broken in many ways, such as when it is cut, scratched or bruised. The skin is an important part of the body and, as has already been mentioned, if one part of the body is upset, other parts are apt to suffer. The healthy condition of the skin is lost and its power to resist the action of germs is more or less decreased in the presence of actual diseases, such as diabetes. The skin is also injured by upsets of the digestive tract, by faulty diet, and by an unhygienic life which starves the body of fresh air. Uncleanliness, and overclothing which results in excessive perspiration and irritation of the skin, lower its resistance.

As a result of the occurrence of one or more of the above conditions, the normal resistance of the skin is lost or decreased; then, the germs present on the skin are enabled to gain a foothold. The result of their activity is inflammation—redness, swelling, pain, and production of pus.

Boils are infectious in the sense that they are caused by living germs. In the treatment of boils, this fact must be kept in mind, and the boil should be treated with the same strict cleanliness that is used in all surgical treatments.

Considerable harm may follow the squeezing of boils. The individual's hands should be kept away from the boil, and it should be opened and treated at the proper time by a physician.

In some cases, vaccines are used to raise the resistance—fighting power—against the germ. In all cases, the general health must be considered. Proper diet, exercise, fresh air, body cleanliness, regular elimination, all go to make up a hygienic life.

The occurrence of boils in most cases means that the sufferer has not been giving the reasonable care to his body that is required if a condition of health is to be maintained. To have a healthy skin, it is necessary to keep the whole body in a state of health by living a hygienic life.

Rotation of Vegetables

It is advisable to move your vegetables around in the garden from year to year. This practice is known as rotation. One vegetable grown in exactly the same location each season will soon exhaust all the particular nourishment that vegetable requires and may, also, fill the soil full of disease. Then, too, some leguminous crops, such as peas and beans, which actually add fertilizer to the soil, must be moved about so that the whole garden will benefit. These will help to compensate for the inroads made by such gross feeders as carrots beets and corn. In a small garden it is always well to sow till the time specified in the seed catalogue, with a little left over to replant any spots which may have been visited by slugs, frost, rabbits ,or children. If the first sown vegetables come on all right. and they have two to five chances of of doing this every year, you will have extra early and satisfactory results, but if they are lost you are only a few cents in seed out. The labor, of course, is not considered in this argument because there is no such thing in gardening, which is only a healthy exercise and a pleasure.

Healthy Exercise.

A stout woman asked her physician what she should do to reduce.

"Take the proper kind of exercise," the physician replied.

"What kind do you recommend?" she asked.

MARKED SPECIAL

Little Miss Ingram, departmental clerk, class B, at eighteen hundred dollars a year, swept back the litter of documents that constituted her latest "case," and gazed upon it with a disapproving frown. It was the same old type of cases—she had grubbed through the already much-thumbed papers, verified the many-times repeated figures, condensed into a copy-book brief the typed opinions of others who had already extracted and assimilated everything of interest and had retied the whole into a red-taped bundle of weary, dreary words, for its tomb, the files. It was all so beforehand dissected, cut-and-dried, that there was no mental nourishment in it. "A mere clerk of Class E could do such work," Miss Ingram said to herself, as she regarded it scornfully.

"Brain fag?" asked a passing fellow- clerk. He stopped and looked at the papers with an appreciative grin. "Very interesting and exacting work, the law, Miss Ingram."

"That's just the trouble," retorted Miss Ingram, impatiently. "There's no chance for brain fag in cases like this; there's no opportunity even for mental exercise; there isn't a point o law in it that hasn't been threshed and re-threshed. It's nothing but—but compiling, that's what it is."

The man chuckled at her earnestness. "Pity you weren't a man Miss Ingram, so you could handle the interesting cases!" He waited for her repartee, got none, and went chuckling back to his desk.

The truth was that Miss Ingram felt that she was being "tolerated" as a law clerk, and resented it. Six months before, after three years of grueling study and preparation, she had taken a competitive examination for this law clerkship, and had won, over a class of seven men. She was the first woman who had ever essayed and accomplished such a thing in the department, and it was slowly being borne in upon her that she was considered somewhat in the nature of a freak. She had never been given a case that had not been handled and rehandled by other—men—clerks. In the language of the office, she was being "carried."

"It's fight to get advancement; fight and work to keep it, and then fight and harder work to win on further," she confided to the sympathetic clerk across the ailse. "And, after all, I suppose that is as it should be, though there are times when it seems as if the goal were hardly worth the struggle."

She was silent for a moment, and then her eyes snapped. "But the fight's the real thing," she went on with quickening breath. "The being in it, of it— the big fight, I mean. The—" And then suddenly she was laughing and waving the girl away. "Go away!" she laughed. "Go away! I'm too talky this morning. You'll end by thinking I'm an oracle. Back to your desk!" And with a final wave at the smiling girl she fell assiduously at her work.

And that work she did well, if it was only "compiling." She could find some springs of enthusiasm in it in spite of all her impatience, for she knew that, if she was to "arrive" in this, her new place she might be ready and abundantly ready, when opportunity should come.

So each evening, when the other clerks left, she remained for an hour or more, digging into the cases that would come to her desk. She familiarized herself with procedure, weighed evidence and digested arguments; and at her hand she constantly kept her notebook and pencil, to jot down references to other cases. These she would take at night to the law library of her old college and one by one run them down and study them. It was all a process of sharpening her tools, of working and fighting and keeping the lamp well trimmed.

The weeks rolled into months, the months into seasons, and still the opportunity did not come. By summer she was worn out and took her vacation early, in June. She need her rest, and she wished to go back to her desk again, fresh and with sharpened wits, when the wholesale exodus began in July, the month of vacations. Then, with the office force largely depleted, the opportunity might most likely come to those who were on the ground.

It was the second week of July. Miss Ingram had returned, refreshed, eager, alert. Four of the seven law clerks were on leave, and on their desk tops disorderly piles of cases that could wait were accumulating. The remaining three were working overtime. Miss Ingram did all the "compiling." On Tuesday morning the Chief came in from his room; in his hand he held a packet of papers tied with red tape. He stopped at the first desk; the man looked up, shook his head in pleading dissent and waving a comprehensive hand above his already heaped-up desk The Chief proceeded to the next; the man threw up both hands, crossing his fingers in comical sign that he couldn't be "it." He jerked his head back toward Miss Ingram. The Chief hesitated, pursing his lips, and then, with a manner of doing the best he could, under the circumstances, he approached Miss Ingram's desk and upon it placed the packet.

"Marked 'Special,' as you will notice, Miss Ingram. The legal representatives of the firm are coming on Friday morning to argue the case. You will notice that the importations in question are held by the department to be undervalued, but, unfortunately, we have no positive proof. Nor can we, it seems, in the absence of one witness.

"That witness was one of the foremen of this firm. He had special charge of their manufacture. He was discharged six months ago and is supposed to have come to this country to go into business for himself. It has been impossible to locate him, if he is in the United States. and without his disposition our hands are tied, even though we were morally sure that there has been gross undervaluation.

"Mr. Fardon has been handling this," the Chief continued. "In his absence you will have to do the best you can with it. Go through the papers and compose a recommendation that the case be dropped. It's the best we can do, but I'm sorry, for such recommendations have gone in all too frequently of late. The Secretary is manifesting some irritation. What we need here is a law clerk with some initiative, a sixth sense for this work, but you can't get them in eighteen-hundred-dollar packages."

He smiled, a little wearily, at his joke, including in it, with a deprecating wave of his hand. the whole law division, and returned to his room.

Miss Ingram stared listlessly at the tape-tied packet. As the Chief had place it upon her desk her whole being had tensed itself in anticipation of the opportunity it might contain. And then, as he had recited its substance, she leaned despairingly back in her chair. Miss Ingram's heart was sick. It was just another case of compilation, according to directions.

Mechanically she untied the tape and spread out the papers. invoices, sworn statements declarations depositions, and endless pages of description of materials and processes. Then once more she leaned back in her chair. The Chief had wished for a law clerk with a sixth sense! She tried to formulate a definition. A sixth sense! After a half-hour of thinking the best she could do was: "Undivided interest and enthusiasm for the work in hand. And that," she said to herself, "should generate initiative." She commenced on the case.

That afternoon, as she grubbed away, with undivided interest. but with slow-coming enthusiasm, the law clerk at the desk ahead arose, stretched himself and sauntered over.

"Hello! So that's the case, is it?" he laughed, after a moment of quick scrutiny. "I've seen that before; another one where the department's contention is lost through lack of evidence. I'm glad your initials go on that case instead of mine. Not that I'm wishing you any ill luck," he added magnanimously; "but I understand the Secretary's getting warm about so many cases being lost by default. And what do you think! He says they wouldn't be if they came to us in civil life, and we were working to build up successful practices. According to him, we're rusty in here, and need some new blood with a little live imagination mixed in with the corpuscles."

He chuckled at the Secretary's remedy, and poked among the papers with a derisive forefinger. "Suppose you stir in a few 'imaginative corpuscles,' Miss Ingram!" he said as he went chuckling back to his desk.

Miss Ingram did not chuckle. It began to look as if she were going to be a scapegoat. Lines of trouble wrinkled her brow as she bent again over the papers. By night she had gone through them all and had a clear grasp of the case as it had been worked up. That there was undervaluation seemed certain, and yet complete proof was lacking. The office was deserted, it was growing dark; she closed her desk and went home.

But she did not relax; her thoughts were busy with the papers on her desk. She ate her dinner, went back to her room, and for two hours sat with her head in her hands, cudgeling her brain for a point, a spark of imagination, a deduction, upon which she found none. The nub of the whole case was the foreman's special knowledge, and he had that with him, wherever he was. If he had come to this country, he was seemingly swallowed up in its teeming millions; if he was still abroad—well, he might just as well be, for they had not found him.

As she stood before the mirror to undo her hair, she found herself smiling at that foreman's name; it was one to conjure with, under the circumstances—"Missing!" He was Missing sure enough. She had never known of a person bearing that name never. It was worthy of a Dickens—Mr. Fang, the police magistrate; Tom Pinch, Mr. Grimwig; Pyke and Pluck—wait! She laid down the comb. Missing—Missing—and then suddenly she had it: "Failing & Missing!" She had seen it displayed above a shop entrance in the very city where she had spent her vacation, not six weeks before, and had laughed at it then, she had thought it so "Dickensy."

She picked up the comb, and then dropped it abruptly. Was it possible? Could he be the man? She drew in her breath sharply as she remembered that the shop was a manufactory, in a small way, of the same type of articles that were at issue in the suit. He was! She believed it! He was the discharged foreman! And she might— She lowered herself weakly into a chair at the bigness of the thought.

She never could tell whether she slept that night for one hour, one minute, or not at all. She was up a dozen times to strike matches over her watch. At daybreak she dressed and packed a small handbag. At breakfast she ordered coffee and rolls and forgot to eat the rolls. She reached the department nearly an hour before the doors were opened and spent the longest hour and a half of her life eagerly watching the entrances to intercept the Chief. When she finally descried him and bore down upon him bag in hand, he stood stock still and planted his feet well apart as if he were about to be run down.

"Please, sir, grant me two days' leave—I saved two for Christmas, you know—and please fix it up without my going in, for I've only twenty-four minutes to catch a train. And, oh! I beg your pardon—good morning! But I'm in such a hurry, and I haven't a moment—"

"Some of your family ill, Miss Ingram?" the Chief broke in, his voice at once sympathetic and soothing.

"No—no, sir; but it's awfully important—and, you're going to grant it, aren't you?"

"But, Miss Ingram, that special case on your desk?"

"It'll be ready on time! I promise. I give you my—" She shut her watch with a snap. "If I'm to go, I must fly!"

"Well, well, Miss Ingram! It's all very unusual, of course, but—"

But, Miss Ingram, expressing her thanks in one gasping word, was already skipping for a car at the corner to catch her train.

And then, in the inaction of the next few hours, as the train crept along, her enthusiasm oozed out and left in its place a frightened emptiness. She had been borne along on the excitement of a first wild hope—a grasped-at straw. To her the name had seemed unusual but there might be communities in this vast country where it abounded. And what a picture—a hundred-pound girl before a possible towering, strange giant, asking if he were the man she sought! Just one atom of sense had she exhibited—she had not told the Chief her errand.

Nevertheless, as she stepped from the train at four o'clock, her excitement returned. A chance was a chance, when it meant so much. She remembered the locality of the shop perfectly. There was the sign: "Failing & Missing," and it was new; no year of storms had deadened its freshness. She lifted the latch excitedly and stepped inside.

"I wish to speak to Mr. Missing." She asked it of a greasy man, in greasy denim and a greasy paper cap, who was loading iron bolts into a barrow.

"Which one, ma'am?" he asked with a grin. "There's three of 'em here, all told."

Miss Ingram hesitated, disconcerted, considered for three swift seconds and determined on a bold stroke. "The one who was a foreman abroad."

The man gave her a quick glance, and his features hardened till the very grease seemed to congeal. He wheeled, without a word, and slouched off toward the rear of the shop.

For many minutes she anxiously awaited his return, straining her eyes to penetrate the gloom at the shop's rear; and then she was startled by a voice directly behind her.

"Well! What's wanted? I'm Missing."

Swiftly she turned. and then drew back, for there so close she might have touched him, towered the most tremendous bulk she had ever seen moulded into the shape of a man. Huge arms, bared to the elbow, hung loosely from mighty shoulders His great neck supported a giant's head. the deep-set eyes of which glared down on her in fierce suspicion. Yet, in spite of the bulk. his tread must have been catlike. for she had heard no sound till he spoke. Evidently he had slipped round from behind to scrutinize his strange caller before making himself known.

"Well! Out with it!"

And then, with a gulp. Miss Ingram gathered herself, and stated her errand. Would he come with her and make a statement?

"No!" It was a bellow. "Trouble enough have I had with thev folks. Do they mind their business, and I'll mind mine."

Patiently she reëxplained: it was for the department's use, not his former employers'.

"No! I tell you no!"

She tried to think. Clearly, in his present surly. stubborn, suspicious mood he would do nothing. Could she get behind that mood? "Mr. Missing will you believe me when I say that no trouble can come to you through doing what I ask?"

"Humph! And what good will it do me? Answer me that. miss."

And like a flash she took the opening. "Not a bit in the world, but it will help me."

He blinked. uncertainly. at the frank acknowledgement. Then: "Soho! And why, young lady, should I go out of my way to help you?"

"For the same reason that you would go out of your way to help anyone who needed your help. I'm sure. if you could honestly give it." And then, with a flash: "Wouldn't you, Mr. Great. Big, Cross Man?"

He gasped. She repeated her challenge. And then, suddenly a half-denying, half-sheepish grin was answering her frankly saucy smile. He shrugged his shoulders, as if throwing off some persisting suspicion. It was a sign of voluntary surrender.

"Well spoken, young lady," a little grimly. "And if I wouldn't I should, and that's a fact. Maybe if a chap was come at the right way he would, always. Just you go ahead and tell me again what you want, and I'll do it this time, I'l be bound."

"If you please?" she insisted. "Dirt will wash off; what's on many a white one won't." And her hand ached for a week after.

And so, after a "clean-up," she led him to the nearest notary. And two hours thereafter she had the deposition safe in her bag. The crushed hand was recrushed, and. thenceforth, carrying the bag in her left, she hurried off to the station.

She had done better than she had hoped. She could now catch a night train and be back in the office in the morning.

As she walked bright-eyed into the office the next day at ten o'clock, she had many times to repeat her laughing replies of "No, none of my family has been ill; I have not been ill myself," and "I have been out of town on business." And, as she again thanked the Chief, she forestalled his curious interest by mysteriously stating that she would "tell you all about it tomorrow."

All that day she spent in going over and over the case, making sure that no point was unestablished, no contention unanswered, no small details unattended to. And at four o'clock she arranged the papers—as she had arranged them a dozen times in the preceding half-hour—in their orderly sequence, retied them with bright, new tape, and cosed her desk. The case was ready.

And yet, when she should have slept soundly, after the two nights of broken rest, she did not. The preceding forty-eight hours of excitement, the trip, the interview with the big foreman, she lived over again as she tossed. She had become torn by doubt; apprehensive lest what had been so swiftly accomplished migh. by incomplete after all. It seemed that the moment she did finally doze off she was again wide-awake and it was nearly eight o'clock.

She dressed quickly, allowed herself ten minutes for breakfast, and hurried away to the office. Feverishly she reopened the packet and went over the deposition., comparing, verifying and proving again. And, as she retied the tape, the Chief, with the Secretary's messenger, came down for the case.

"Your initials, Miss Ingram," said the Chief, after a hasty glance; "you have forgotten them." And then, as she nervously supplied the final "J. L. I.," the Chief, bending over her shoulder, exclaimed in astonishment: "What!"

Miss Ingram looked up, thrust the packet into the waiting messenger's hand and fixed the Chief with beseeching eyes. "It's all right! And pease let it go just as it is. I'll explain it all to you now."

His keen eyes held hers for a moment. He nodded to the messenger to go. "Step up to my desk," he said to Miss Ingram. "Quick!" he spoke crisply, as he dropped into his chair. "What caused you to recommend that the case be pressed? I may be called in for conference at any moment."

Miss Ingram was quite deliberate. Why should she not enjoy the moment of her triump? "I recommended that the case be pressed," she announced, evenly, "because it is now fully sustained. The missing foreman has been found."

The Chief stared. His features relaxed in an expression of astonishment and incredulity. "But how? Where?" bewilderdly. "Who—" He broke off abruptly for the Secretary's messenger stood at his elbow.

"'J. L. I.,' if you please. The Secretary requires the presence of the clerk 'J.L. I.' at once." Miss Ingram's heart jumped.

The Chief shot her an imploring look. "Say nothing you cannot fully substantiate, Miss Ingram," he whispered. "Be sure, be very sure, of that." And, with her face gone suddenly pale, she gave him an excited nod and went fluttering after the messenger.

The two legal representatives of the firm in the case were seated at the side of the Secretary's desk. One nervously passed and repassed a hand through his hair, the other had both hands planted upon his knees, as if in support. The Secretary was reading aloud from her brief. As she advanced, all three looked up.

"You sent for me, Mr. Secretary," she managed to say. "I am 'J. L. I.' —Miss Ingram."

The two men gaped at the Secretary. The Secretary was gravely regarding Miss Ingram. His was a face that did not easily betray surprise

"Mr Mr. Missing, Mr. Secretary."

"How?"

"Mr. Missing, Mr. Secretary.

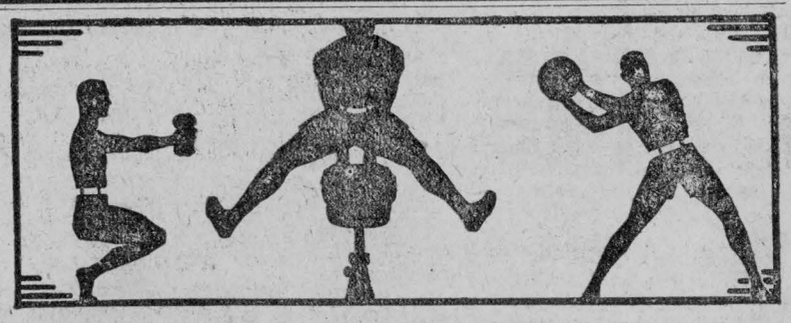

"You! When? Explain, please."

As she advanced, she was aware that the Secretary was watching her narrowly. She saw the passive expression in his eyes change to interest. from interest to approbation, and finally a smile played about all their corners. As she finished he arose from his chair and extended his hand.

"'J. L. I.'—Miss. Ingram. I congratulate you. Gentlemen," turning to the two, "allow me to introduce to you, Miss Ingram, who has, I am sure you will agree, quite cut the ground from under your feet. Miss Ingram, gentlemen, I may say, embodies my ideal of what a law clerk in this department should be."

Again he extended his hand and then remained standing while she passed. blushing, through the swinging door.
