"Dick" Fawcett, Dunbar, Granted Permission Establish Seaplane Base at Cornwall

R. H. Fawcett of Dunbar, has been granted permission by the Department of Transport to establish the Fawcettt Air Service from an "air harbour" on the St. Lawrence River east of Cornwall using seaplanes and skiplanes. Subject to approval by the Air Transport Board, the services will include a School of Flying Instruction, sight-seeing and pleasure flying, and a non-scheduled air service to any point except along scheduled routes already chartered.

The equipment and building will consist of an office and waiting room for passengers, dock, slipway into the water and moorings for securing seaplanes. At the start, two aircraft will be in operation, one for instruction and one for charter flights.

The aircraft presently owned by Mr. Fawcett, a Piper Cub with markings CF-DAQ, will be used for instructional flights, and it is expected floats will be fitted to it in the very near future. Several types of amphibians and land type planes with float attachments were tried out by Mr. Fawcett for his charter flights before he ordered the amphibian, which uses land or water bases. Delivery, however, is not expected before June, 1947.

The charter plane will be radio-equipped for two-way communication and following radio aids to aerial navigation. All passengers and goods transported will be fully insured as demanded by the charter, states Mr. Fawcett.

Imperial Oil is supplying the refuelling facilities which consist of tank and dock pump with 50 feet of hose for servicing planes on the water.

Mr. Fawcett, who has been flying since long before the war, is a veteran of several years instructional and ferry service with the R.C.A.F. and after returning to his business of cheesemaking on his return to civilian life, purchased his present plane and has been engaged all summer flying throughout the district at fall fairs and other gatherings.

A brother, T. Bordon Fawcett, operates an air service in Northern Ontario, flying mining and lumber men into the woods with his two planes.

The bride who was attended by Mrs. E. A. Covington as matron-of-honor, wore an afternoon dress of turquoise crepe, with black accessories and a shoulder-knot of American Beauty roses. Mr. E. A. Covington was best man.

Following a wedding luncheon held at the Alexandra Hotel, the couple left on a motor trip through the St. Lawrence district. Upon their return they will take up residence in Cornwall.

Mrs. W. H. Lloyd Honoured Before Leaving Chesterville

About 35 ladies gathered at the home of Mrs. Emerson Johnston last evening to honour Mrs. W. H. Lloyd who will be leaving shortly to take up residence in Kingston. The evening was spent in games, contests and singing, and Mrs. Lloyd was presented with a beautiful coffee table.

Following is the address, read by Mrs. Anna Marcellus.

Dear Mrs. Lloyd:

This lovely Autumn evening we, a few of your neighbours have met at Mrs. Johnston's to honour you before you leave for your new home. It was with regret that we heard of your near departure and we are sorry indeed that you, the Doctor and boys, have found it necessary to give up and go from our midst. For many years now you have been with us and your presence in our little village will in many, many ways be missed.

We do hope that you will have everything that is good in your new home at Kingston. May God bless you all and give you health and prosperity and everything that tends to a happy life.

We ask you to accept this table to remember us by and when serving your new friends a cup of tea, just close your eyes and think of us here in Chesterville, will you?

Anna Marcellus.

Replying, Mrs. Lloyd quoted the poem on "Friendship"—

I can't explain, I can't define
That "something" in some friends o' mine
That seems, in sorrow, to impart
The resolution of my heart
To battle on, despite my care,
And see the sunshine everywhere,
And view the morning with its light
When everything is dark as night.
And should I ask, what is it, then,
That comes to me from hearts of men—
This wondrous thing I can't explain
That dries my tears and eases pain,
That makes me like 'em through and through,
And yet, not knowing why I do?
One word explains it mighty fine—
Its "friendship" true and genuine.

Maple Ridge Veterans Honoured Last Night Presented With Gifts

The people of Maple Ridge School Section gathered at the school building last night to honour their war veterans at a Hallowe'en party sponsored by the pupils and their teacher, Miss Dora Baker. The room was decorated with orange and black streamers, black cats, owls and bats, jack o' lanterns in the windows, and a large welcome sign at the front door. A large union jack was placed above the stage.

The concert opened with a parade of costumes. Mrs. Clarence Thompson and Miss Wilda Barkley, acting as judges, awarded prizes to Miss Olive Derby for the comic costume, and Helen Hutt for the prettiest.

During the evening Mrs. Clarence Thompson of Winchester Springs, presided at the piano and at the end of the programme was presented with a beautiful vanity set on behalf of the pupils and teacher.

Recitations, songs and plays suitable to the occasion were given by the pupils, and as the Hallowe'en programme came to a close, Ernest Summers, Reeve of the Township of Winchester, who acted as chairman, called up Doreen Cross and Lois Wilson to sing "Keep the Home Fires Burning", and a recitation "The Union Jack", was given by Miss Cross. Lois Windsor, Evangeline Morris, Olive and Alice Derby and Doreen Cross, senior girls, sang, "The Maple Leaf."

Mr. Summers called forward the boys who had served on Active Service, Earl, Edward and Ray Fawcett, John Cassidy and Wm. Armstrong. As the audience stood, the senior girls sang "O Canada", and E. B. McMillan, of the Municipal Council, gave a short speech, presenting pen and pencil sets and billfolds to the veterans. Douglas Young and James Cassidy were unable to be present, and their gifts will be forwarded. Earl Fawcett replied on behalf of the veterans.

H. H. Nesbitt, ex-Warden of the United Counties, spoke to the gathering in which he thanked those responsible for the party. Refreshments were served, and the National Anthem was sung.

Attendance was small, but discussions were lively on the two questions "Would you take a job in the city at $32.50 a week if you got the chance?" (This is the average wage of non-agricultural workers.) and "Why are some women dissatisfied on the farm, and what can be done about it?

Bulletin from the Provincial office stated this forum was the largest contributor in cash in the province last season.

RACINE-KELLEY

St. Bridget's Church, Ottawa, was the scene of a pretty wedding at nine o'clock Saturday, October 26th, when Rita Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Murray Kelley, became the bride of Clifford Wilfred, son of Mrs. Nora Racine and the late Mr. C. Racine. Rev. Father Corkery officiated. Baskets of gladioli, mums and ferns decorated the altar.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a floor length gown of white taffeta, designed with fitted bodice, high neckline and short puffed sleeves. The skirt was in full bouffant style with bustle-effect hipline ending in a slight train at back. Her finger-tip veil was held in place by a heart-shaped coronet. She carried a cascade bouquet of American Beauty roses and maiden hair fern, her only ornament being a double strand of pearl, gift of the groom.

Attended by her two sisters, Miss Monica as maid-of-honour, who wore a gown of pale blue brocaded satin, with matching head-dress and carried a nosegay of Talisman roses, and with Miss Betty as bridesmaid, who wore a gown of turquoise taffeta with matching head-dress and carried a nosegay of pink and red roses.

Mr. Lawrence Racine acted as best man and Jack Kelley and Leo Chambers were ushers.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at Orange Lantern Inn. The happy couple left on a trip to Toronto, Niagara and Buffalo. For travelling the bride wore a cocoa-brown wool suit trimmed with squirrel and matching accessories and a corsage of yellow roses. They will take up residence in Ottawa.

Guests included, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Moran, Avonne Moran, Mr. and Mrs. Alex Racine, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Racine, Mr. and Mrs. James Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. H. Labre, Mr. H. A. Laughton, Miss Rose Coyne, of Ottawa; Col. and Mrs. Cecil Reid of Kirk's Ferry; Miss Donala Doaust of Wrightville; Mrs. A. Racine, Cornwall, grandmother of groom. During the day, a telegram of congratulation was received from the Bank of Canada staff.

Mother-and-Daughter Meeting Last Evening Sponsored by W. I.

Describing the influence good lives exert on those about us, Mrs. W. D. Payton of Prescott addressed a mother and daughter meeting of the Women's Institute in the Library last evening. She told the young girls present of the vast amount of good done by Elizabeth Fry among those condemned to jails, and by Florence Nightingdale, mother of the nursing profession. The speaker also stressed the influence of girls for bettering the lives of young men. Mrs. George G. Merkley, president of the Branch, introduced the speaker, and Miss Margaret Gilroy expressed the thanks to the ladies of the institute on behalf of the girls who were their guests.

The programme included a piano solo by Miss Miriam Gilroy and a vocal solo by Miss Marjorie Merkley, with Mrs. P. J. Gilroy playing the piano accompaniment. During the business part of the meeting, it was announced $34 had been realized by the canvass in aid of the Children's Aid Society and it was decided to make a donation from the Branch's funds to raise this amount to $50. Plans were also discussed for sending two delegates to the two-day course for the Garden Brigade to be held in Morrisburg, November 3 and 4.

Joint Council Meeting Held to Discuss Improved Road Outlet for D. Cross Farm

Meeting in joint session, Tuesday evening to discuss the possibility of a better road providing an outlet from the farm of Donald Cross and the municipal dump owned by the village, the Councils of Chesterville Village and Winchester Township passed resolutions that the matter of the road outlet be referred to B. Lee, District Engineer.

The road, which follows the Nation River from the site of the old Grove to the village by way of Eric Casselman's farm, is under several feet of water in the spring and is not in the best of condition the rest of the year. The Cross farm, bounded by the Nation and the C.P.R., has its only outlet this way.

The township has rented the roadway from the Casselman family for many years, and the possibility of a roadway on higher land will be taken up with the Department.

HALLOWE'EN FROLIC OR PRANKS

For the first time in Chesterville, an organized Hallowe'en frolic will be held for the entertainment of children by the Rotary Club who have taken over the Community Hall and Theatre and arranged a good entertainment with prizes for costumes and games, which will be followed by a free movie show arranged through the kindly efforts of the Federation of Agriculture.

The idea of the scheme is to give the youngsters something to think about except ringing doorbells and getting into mischief, by providing organized fun, and plenty of it. It is sincerely hoped parents will co-operate with Rotary in this experiment which has been tried out with good success in the larger centres.

On Hallowe'en, when all spirits—mostly evil—are supposed to have their annual fling on the eve of All Saints Day, the custom seems ingrained that any kind of nonsense will be tolerated. Plenty of trouble has been carried out here in past years, but last year very little damage was experienced, and little junk was piled on the Post Office Square. Let us hope our young people will display as good common sense again tonight so that citizens will not be caused inconvenience by the tipper-uppers and other practical jokers.

THEY SERVED 'TIL DEATH

Poppy Day will soon be rolling around again. The scarlet poppy of Flanders has become the symbol of aid to our disabled veterans who returned from freedom's battles unable to work at full capacity. In the Vetcraft shops in Toronto and Montreal, many such old soldiers have their only means of livelihood. These shops, organized in 1923, manufacture the poppies and wreaths sold by local branches of the Canadian Legion and other organizations during the week preceding Remembrance Day.

Profits from local sales assist the Branches of the Legion to help deserving veterans who find themselves on hard times as a result of unemployment, sickness or other unavoidable causes.

Chesterville Branch, barely a month old, officially, has gone thoroughly into the campaign and with the assistance of a group of veterans' wives and high school girls, plan an extensive sales campaign next week. Merchants and other businessmen have co-operated in the purchase of wreaths with which to decorate their windows for the week, and success of the project appears quite bright.

May we remember the Legion's motto when the sales girls approach us: "They Served 'Til Death—Why Not We?"

SCOUT APPLE DAY ON SATURDAY

And now may we say a word or two on behalf of another worthy organization, the Boy Scouts.

Each fall the Scouts conduct Apple Days to raise funds for the maintenance of the troops. This year the First Chesterville Troop will hold its sale on Saturday when the Scouts will make a house to house campaign as well as selling on the streets.

Co-operation of the public with Scout authorities is necessary for the furthering of this excellent organization for boys. This was evidenced well enough during war years when the Troop disappeared from sight after functioning in a splendid job for a good many years. Now that the Troop has been re-organized and is getting onto its feet once more, The Record hopes our citizens will support it generously.

MY WEEK

By R. J. DEACHMAN

I have a grandson about seven years of age who has a chum who is eight. The chum had the hiccups the other day and my daughter-in-law thinking in her kindness to cure them said: "Come over here and I will give you a glass of water to take away those hiccups." "No thank you" he said, "I like them."

There are a good many people in Canada who are like that boy. They like to see things happen but they failed to consider that they would be the sufferers in the end.

We are just beginning to harvest the fruit of many wage increases and they are more or less unpleasant. There was a very distinct and positive howl made when the price of agricultural implements went up. The net result of that was an increase in farm operating costs. Then followed an increase in the price of milk and the barking was on the other side of the street. The people who paid the price did the kicking. They could stand increases which fell on others but when personally affected they were distinctly vocal.

Now another instance booms large on the horizon. For some time raliway wage rates have been moving up. The cost of materials used by the railways have increased sharply, are likely to continue to increase, the result will be higher freight rates affecting our export market, affecting cost of production in Canada, probably increasing our tax rates. A freight rate increase is a basic rate. It is something which affects all the people of the nation.

But will you tell us what can be done about it. If costs rise so will prices. The temporary gains which one group receives are soon lost in the general price advance. I think I am safe in saying that a general wage increase has never increased the total earnings of labor any time in Canadian history. On the other hand a reduction in the price of products can be very effective in the promotion of prosperity. This occurs when the reduction takes place through technological change which lowers cost of production and permits a lowering of price and thus an expansion of markets.

There is one thing on which we should keep a steady eye, the relationship between the price of farm products and the price of manufactured products. Higher prices of farm products and higher general increases in wage rates may not produce any noticeable affect, but the gravest danger we face today is the prospect of possible reductions in price of farm products within the next few years. I said "possible", I might almost have written "certain". When, and if that happens, there will be marked distortion in earning power. The cost of living will fall, wages will remain high, the price of farm products wlil be low and cost of production high. When that movement starts it will be the signal for hard times. It is the one problem to which we should now give our closest attention. It should receive the consideration of statesmen, farmers, labor leaders and all those who have an interest in the ultimate welfare of the nation. It is the biggest danger confronting us in the next four or five years. It will call for courage and breadth of mind—balance in the economic life of the nation is always an essential asset.

THE COMMON EEL

Eels are not among the species of first-ranking importance in Canada's fisheries, but they have an interesting history. The Ancients had some fantastic theories about them.

Determining the spawning grounds of this species of fish was a long and difficult job. Different opinions were held from time to time. Now, however, it is accepted that the common eel, whether of North American or European stock, spawns in the Atlantic waters south of Bermuda. Guided by marvelous instinct, the tiny eel babies hatched from the eggs set out in due course on their long migration to fresh water, some crossing the thousands of miles of ocean to the streams of Europe, others ascending rivers on the Atlantic coast of North America where in many cases they travel far inland. The growing eels remain in the fresh water until time of maturity and then set out, in the autumn season, on their oceanward spawning migration. Once on the spawning grounds, eggs are produced in great numbers, for the common eel is a prolific creature, with a female of 30 inches or so producing perhaps more than 10,000,000 eggs; the adults die after spawning, both the males and the females; a new generation hatches from the multitude of eggs and the cycle of life continues.

"Thinking of the smallness of England, and the bigness of its population, one tends to picture it as a country dotted with towns, villages and farms, with very little open space between—a few fields, a little wood perhaps here and there—but never enough to let you stay long out of sight of buildings . . . When you travel on foot, you can go for hours without seeing a house. You do see signs of humanity—woodlands that have been carefully planted, tended, tidied and trimmed; pastures that have been pastures for centuries, and have acquired a certain mellow smoothness from long use, like a jewel that has been cut and polished and pumiced till it glows, and ploughed fields that have been ploughed by generation after generation, until the very earth takes on the subtle form of something made by man.

But these marks of human care, of men's work and thought—and taste—have quite a different effect on the mind from the sight of buildings, metalled roads, and telegraph poles. They do not stop the landscape from being landscape; they shape it into a lovely picture, instead of a wild and spectacular accident."

A BIRD IN THE HAND

THERE'S a lot in the exactness of a term, according to ornithologists of the Royal Ontario Museum. If a hunter bags a Woodcock, that's legal and the bird can make a dainty dish. If he bags a Cock-of-the-Woods, that's illegal and he might as well eat crow.

The Woodcock is a plump, big-eyed member of the shorebird family, whose plumage matches the russet and brown of October leaves. Though its members have sadly diminished, Ontario still lists it as game. The Cock-of-the-Woods is a big black-and-white, scarlet-capped Woodpecker. It has increased somewhat in settled Ontario and should receive every protection because it imparts a special flavour to the woodland scene by its boisterous call and striking plumage.

GRAPHITE AIDS SELF EXPRESSION

IT is a widely accepted view that "the pen is mightier than the sword", and by the same token, the lowly pencil should come in for its share of glory. The "lead" of pencils is formed of the mineral graphite, mixed with fine clay, the name graphite being derived from the Greek word meaning "to write". It is found in distant parts of the world, but also in Canada, examples of the natural mineral in the Royal Ontario Museum having been taken from the Ottawa valley. Artificial graphite has been manufactured in this country also, and possibly the "lead" in the pencil you used today came from Niagara Falls.

THIS IS A NEW ONE IN OTTAWA PARKING

The panhandler fraternity, whose usual approach in the game of obtaining the price of a beer is: "Hey, Bud, spare a dime for a cup o' coffee", have a new racket that has caused much annoyance for unsuspecting motorists who park their cars on Queen street, between Bank and Kent.

Working in groups of three or four, the thirsty gentry wait for a motorist to start his car. If the driver backs up a foot or two to extricate himself from a tight spot, he finds himself in a still tighter spot . . . surrounded on all sides and accused of injuring one of their pals. As the 'injured" one limps away, his tough-looking buddies offer a quick settlement with the motorist for a "cuppla dollars".

A Journal reporter, parking along the Capitol Theatre side of Queen street to make a brief report to his office, was a near-victim of the new racket late Friday afternoon. When about to start from the curb he was accosted by three angry men who threatened to pull him from his seat if he didn't settle immediately for the "injury done our pal". The quartet scattered in as many different directions when the reporter suggested the "accident" be investigated by the police.

SOLACE FOR OLDSTERS

I know of no greater fallacy or one more widely believed than the statement that youth is the happiest times of life. As we advance in years we really grow happier, if we live intelligently. The universe is spectacular, and it is a free show. Increase of difficulties and responsibilities strengthens and enriches the mind, and adds to the variety of life. To live abundantly is like climbing a mountain or a tower. To say that youth is happier than maturity is like saying that the view from the bottom of the tower is better than the view from the top. As we ascend, the range of our view widens immensely; the horizon is pushed farther away. Finally as we reach the summit it is as if we had the world at our feet.

William Lyon Phelps.

Two hillbillies who had never been on a train before were taking their first ride in a coach.

A man came through the train selling bananas. Although they had never seen bananas before, each of the mountaineers bought one. As one of them bit into his, the train entered a tunnel. His voice came to his companion in the darkness. "Jed, have you eaten yours. yet?"

"Not yet," answered Jed. "Why?"

"Well, don't touch it. I've eaten one bite and gone blind!"

FRESH AIR

Living in stuffy, closed-up rooms, is courting anaemia, headache and lack of energy. Health authorities of the Department of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa, point out that fresh air helps to ward off disease, and urge that rooms be filled frequently with fresh life-giving air, particularly where there are children in the house. Open windows and doors wide whenever possible, say the doctors.

"Lama Was Here" One Trip Too Many Ending 71-Day Search

Sought by police for two and a half months in connection with the brutal knife murders of his wife and nine-year-old daughter, William Earl Lma, 49, Harrison's Corners farmer, was trapped as he foraged for food in the cellar of a house at Moulinette on Saturday night.

Looking well-fed and healthy, Lama remained cool and collected throughout his arrest and questioning by police. The short, slight, 115-pound farmer had grown a heavy moustache and wore a wine colored windbreaker, gray trousers, rubber boots and a ski cap.

A citizens' posse surrounded the house and kept the fugitive trapped until Cornwall township police arrived to take him to jail, charging him with murder.

Lama's capture ended one of the most intensive manhunts in the history of Eastern Ontario. For 71 days, the hunted fugitive eked out a meagre, rough existence in the township area and from his hideout watched police searching for him on several occasions.

After his arrest Lama was closeted with Chief of Township Police Robert Hawshaw for four hours, during which he gave a lengthy statement.

Chief Hawkshaw said later that Lama denied killing his wife and daughter, Mary Elizabeth, whose knife-scarred bodies were discovered by the accused's sons, Fred and Daniel.

Lama claimed in his statement he was in Montreal at the time of the double slaying and did not know about it until he returned two days after the crime was discovered.

Hunger drove Lama into the little village where he had fled from a vacant house on a previous occasion. He told police he had not eaten for a whole day and entered the basement of the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Ellis to forage for food.

The Ellis family had gone to Cornwall for the day and the house was deserted, but Lama's movements in the basement attracted the attention of William Seymour, a county constable, who lives next door.

Constable Seymour took a flashlight to go to a shed at the rear of the two houses. He noticed the reflection of a light through the cellar window of the Ellis home.

"Without putting on the light, I went over to the house and found the screen and window removed at the back," he related. "I saw Lama lighting matches in the cellar.

"I have known Lama for years and recognized him immediately."

"I ran to my own house and told my wife to telephone the police. Then I got hold of Stanley Bisbee, a neighbor, and we went back to the house while my wife got other neighbours to help. We surrounded the house.

"In the meantime my wife brought me my gun, and while I was loading it at the cellar window, Lama was watching me as cool as could be."

A few minutes later Sgt. H. Poirier and Constable Gerald Belanger of the Cornwall Township Police arrived.

"Come on out", we've got you covered," Sgt. Poirier called to Lama.

The hunted man scrambled out the rear window of the cellar and gave himself up.

"Has anybody got a cigarette?" were his first words to his captors.

When captured he carried a burlap bag which contained a small hand axe, two straight razors, a small bottle of gasoline and another of coal oil, a bottle opener and can opener, a pair of scissors and a new flashlight.

It was learned that Lama had told police he had taken shelter in his own farm house for two weeks, concealing his presence there by the system by which the doors were locked.

After the murder police searched Lama's house and then locked it up. Both front and back doors had screens, the front door screen hooked from the inside and the back door screen hooked on the outside. Each time police visited the premises, which averaged about once every night at irregular hours they examined the doors and finding them locked as usual, concluded that he had not returned.

It was learned that Lama unhooked the rear screen door, unlocked the rear door with his key, and then to conceal the fact he had entered, he went out the front door, went around and latched the rear screen door on the outside and then re-entered by the front door.

Lowly Blueberry's Story Proves Interesting Talk To Rotary Members

Propagation of the lowly blueberry, which yeilds New Brunswick farmers about one and a quarter million pounds of luscious fruit a year, and the attempts to develop a true strain were described by Jack Bremner, B.S.A., a former Rotarian of St. Stephen, N.B., who is now manager of Venturecroft, Chesterville, before the Rotary Club, Monday evening.

P. J. Gilroy was chosen chairman of the Community Service Committee to replace George H. Barkley who had to leave town on Sunday and will be away for the winter. Meeting after the luncheon, the committee completed plans for the Hallowe'en frolic to be held Thursday evening in the Community Hall for the children of the community. Prizes will be given for comic and dress costumes in the various age groups, boys and girls, and for contests. Following the games, a free movie will be given in the Community Theatre.

Arrangements were made to take a district child to an Ottawa eye specialist on Monday with W. J. Carr offering his car. Dr. S. H. Hutt, chairman of the International Committee, took on responsibility of supplying monthly boxes of food to needy English families through an Old Country Club.

Mr. Bremner, who is a former Agricultural Representative and Secretary of the Radio Farm Forum in that province, was introduced by J. Howard Fulton, and thanked by Keith Graham. He told of the early settling in New Brunswick, the abandonment of farms which the low-growing blueberry bush soon carpeted as it thrived on the acid soil. Following studies by the University of Maine, started 20 years ago, farmers took up the production of blueberries on a large scale.

In August all growth is cut down by mower or brush scythe, and the piles of brush burned. The "barren" is covered with straw which in the spring is burned off, thus completing the pruning of the plants. That year the barrens are a sea of luscious green foliage, and the following year the plants, which are only five or six inches high, produce berries "as large as my thumbnail", said the speaker. The yield is about 80 bushels to the acre.

The crop is not without its pests. A few years ago the blueberry maggot made its invasion from across the border, and then the black army cutworm came in. Arsenical poisons controlled the first pest, and poison baits were used with some success on the cutworm until DDT made its debut and worked 100 per cent on its control. However, DDT has no effect whatever on the blueberry maggot which is similar to the railroad worm attacking apple crops.

Vetcraft Shops Are Working Full Time On Production of Poppies and Wreaths

That little red poppy which makes its annual debut on November 11th, that little flower of lacquered muslin and silk has an intriguing background.

Manufactured in Montreal and Toronto at Vetcraft Shops the work is done by the skilled hands of disabled veterans who are unable through their disabilities to compete on the commercial market. Some work in the shops while others too handicapped to leave their homes do the job propped up in bed.

A simple looking thing that poppy but each individual one is shaped and produced by skilled workmen.

Said one old sweat of nigh three score years, "There was a time when I hated the sight of that Flanders poppy, we saw 'em when they were real, but to us they represented a graveyard flower. Now, bless 'em, they are the means of my livelihood."

And this is true. To quite a number of ex-servicemen this is the only form of income. The horrors of war reach far into the years and the body and brain of man can stand only so much punishment.

Many of the veterans discharged apparently physically fit in 1919 began to crack up in later years. That Jerrie "whiz bang" which exploded so close to Mons, it didn't seem to do much damage then. Those nights of sleeping in bone-chilling mud, a tot of rum seemed to fix up things at the time. But as time and age crept on it took its toll. It wasn't a thing that one could pin down and prove for a pension, but it was there just the same.

And so in 1923 under the Soldiers Civil Re-establishment setup the first Vetcraft shop bloomed and blossomed forth poppies, so that the people of Canada could contribute and help these men and their dependents.

During the depression years the demand upon the Canadian Legion from destitute veteran families for assistance became terrific. The sale of poppies in these trying 30's naturally suffered but somehow the Legion carried on and many a family managed to see it through due to the Poppy Fund.

During the war years the Vetcraft plants found that they too were caught in the shortage material. Precious rubber used for our mechanized armies became unobtainable and so the windshield poppy which depended on a rubber suction centre disappeared. Now things are brightening up and this year the familiar large poppy will be found on thousands of auto windows throughout Canada.

The stamen centre of the small poppy which was purchased exclusively in Czechslovakia disappeared when the brittle concrete heel of the Nazis invaded that country. The Vetcraft switched to using green fibre, solving thereby that problem.

Lycopodium which is similar to twitch grass faded from the market and so nothing daunted the veterans switched to using magnolia leaves imported from Florida. This year a limited quantity of lycodium is showing up again and it serves to make a more attractive looking wreath.

The metal shortage presented a grave problem because the wreaths were based on wire rings, but again they came up with a specially made wooden ring and the work was carried on.

"It was tough going," said T. E. "Tommy" Smart, foreman of the Vetcraft plant on Munro Street in Toronto, and who has been supervising and making poppies for 13 years.

Royal Wreath

Greatest thrill that the workers in the Toronto shop got was in the making of a special wreath for the King and Queen during their visit to Canada in 1939. Said Tommy, "Everybody in the shop had a hand in it and it was made especially from oak leaves which is the way they make them in Great Britain. We were certainly proud of that one." And so that its memory may linger for posterity, a large colored photograph of the wreath hangs in a frame in a place of honour in their office.

In the Montreal factory on Pine Street West P .J. Bush, who hails 72 active years and is affectionately known by the veterans as "P. J.", has been supervising the job for 16 years. Belying his age, P. J. said, "I get down here every day summer and winter and I hope to keep on doing so, but just in case one of these days I shouldn't be able to make it," and he shrugged his broad shoulders suggestively, "I have with me a young fellow that I'm breaking in and he'll carry on."

Costs Increase

Appreciating that the cost of living has risen considerably the veterans in both plants were recently given an increase in wages.

Meantime the plants maintain their all-year-round schedule and while all the orders are filled for the 1946 delivery they are now busy making others for 1947. In 1945 nearly 4,500,000 poppies were sold and this year in anticipation of still greater sales they have stepped up production by twenty per cent.

Operated under the supervision of the Department of Veterans' Affairs, the Vetcraft shops play a large part in maintaining needy cases. The Canadian Legion, while undertaking no responsibility in the financing of these shops, nevertheless has been entrusted with the business end of poppy sales. The sales of these poppies go only toward taking care of those destitute, irrespective of whether they are Legion members or not, and all work is voluntary in this respect without any remuneration.

The late Governor Hoge Tyler of Virginia was extremely generous in the matter of granting pardons—particularly around Christmas time.

He related that once he pardoned a Negro from Richmond, who had been convicted of some slight offense, and whom he considered had been sufficiently punished.

The pardoned prisoner's young brother learned of his release before the ex-convict could reach home and rushed to tell their mother the good news.

"Oh, mammie," he cried, "Bob's dun got out and 's mos' heah now!"

"Yah mammie. De Gov'nor jist sint down an' axed his pardin and told him to go home."

They Served' Til Death - Why Not We?

A Houna-Dog Man

I wanted to get on with our wolf hunt the minute we hit Uncle Dewey's camp shack. But he kept piddling around, patching on his saddle gear or twisting up little chicken-bill cigarettes to smoke while he stared off through the Texas blackjack oaks.

Uncle Dewey was a black-haired, blue-eyed, skimpy little man with the biggest kind of a laugh. Most of the time he was spinning you a long-winded funny yarn. But now he had something on his mind. It had taken hard petering all fall to get him in a notion of taking a rusty-footed farm kid like me on a wolf hunt. I was scared he was already wishing he hadn't.

"Tell you what, Bud," he said finally. "We can just about make it to Joe Fowler's place by suppertime. A bait of them hot biscuits his gal Cora makes, they'd sure set us up right for this hunt."

So we saddled up and turned the hounds out of the cedar-picked pen. They were pretty as bank calendar pictures. Black-and-white spotted, mostly with a patch of lemon here and there. Long-legged, short-eared, and their tails bobbed so they wouldn't get whipped bloody in the brush.

We rode over to Dead Man's Hollow and up to old Fowler's shack. He came to the door grinning through his chin whiskers. "Light down, boys!" he invited. "Cora's just putting it on the table!" Cora stood on tiptoe to see over her daddy's shoulder and then ducked back with a pinked-up face.

We went inside. Sure enough, there were the hot biscuits, big as terrapins and all browned over with a good crust. There were venison steaks, too, and sweet-cream gravy, and wild honey with the flavor of catclaw bloom.

We men folk started putting it away and talking. Joe Fowler recollected the time him and some others were coursing bees at a water hole and jumped a panther. And Uncle Dewey, he told about the mad heifer that treed him once down on the Llano River. And me—well, a 14-year-old never does get a full bait of such talk; so I just listened and stacked away enough vittles to've had Ma shaming my company manners.

The Fowler girl came back to give us second helpings, wearing a different dress and a perky red hair bow. She had big, brown eyes, and every time they rested on Uncle Dewey they'd light up and shine like lightnin' bugs in a dark river bottom.

Uncle Dewey was talking to Joe Fowler. But he wasn't looking at Joe Fowler. He was reared back in his chair and slapping his leg and laughing big, but he'd keep looking square at Cora Fowler. And what I saw in his eyes reminded me of the hungry look a hound-dog'll take on when he's watching you eat a chunk of corn bread between meals.

After supper I helped Joe Fowler milk his cows. Uncle Dewey stayed at the house, claiming he'd help with the dishes. But when he got back, nobody was in the house, and there hadn't been a dish touched. Then, under a big old spready burr oak, we saw Uncle Dewey holding Cora Fowler up close, like he thought she might get away. But it was plain that getting away was the last thing she had in mind.

Behind me I heard Joe Fowler slam down his bucket so hard that some of the milk slopped out. He lifted down a shotgun from a deer-antler rack. Uncle Dewey, he swung around with a sheepish grin and stepped to meet Fowler like he expected a handshake. But Fowler wasn't in a handshaking frame of mind. "Dewey," he said, "you've been welcome at my table, but that don't give you leave to mess around with my girl!"

Uncle Dewey's grin fell to pieces. "Hold on, Joe Fowler",, he said. "My intentions is plumb reasonable. I just now showed Cora the marrying papers I'm a-packing!"

"Thunderation!" Joe Fowler yelped. "Then it's worse than it looks!" He pointed a knotty finger at Uncle Dewey. "Now let's get it straight. I don't hold nothing agin' you personal," he said. "But you're a hound-dog man, making your living by wolf-hunting for bounty money. And where womenfolk is concerned there ain't no breed of man more no-account. I don't aim to see my Cora load herself with a lifetime of worry and neglect while her man's off prowling the woods after a passel of hound-dogs."

Uncle Dewey, he set out to tell Joe Fowler that this wolf-running was just a temporary proposition to clean up some quick money before he went to steady-paying saddle work.

"There ain't no use in talking, Dewey," Joe Fowler said. "Once dog-hunting for varmints gets in a man's blood, he's ruint Now ride on. And don't let me catch you fooling around with my girl again!" he waved his shotgun as he spoke.

Uncle Dewey looked like a dog that's been whipped over the head for no reason. We climbed in the saddle and rode past the shanty, where we could hear the girl trying to smother her crying in the bed quilts.

By now a half-moon was slanting long bars of silver light down between the winter-bare trees. The night chill reminded me that I'd ought to have worn my long-handle drawers. I sure wished we'd never ridden over to Joe Fowler's for supper. I got to figuring on what had happened, but the further we rode the more mixed up I got. What's eating old Joe Fowler, anyway, that he'd low-rate Uncle Dewey because he was a hound-dog man? At $25 a scalp he was making money hand over fist at this wolf-hunting. "Crazy", I said to myself. "Joe Fowler's crazy as a bedbug in a hot skillet."

I don't know yet if Uncle Dewey meant to go on with the wolf hunt or whether he was just so bogged down with his woman trouble that he forgot and let the hounds scatter. But one of the hounds suddenly opened up on the rimrocks with a yelp that said he'd struck a hot trail. It was to late to stop then.

My horse bolted at the first bark. He grabbed the bits in his mouth and went yonder, taking the brush down on the way. I was trying to fight him down when Uncle Dewey came tearing up. "Let him go, Bud!" he said. "Git both hands full of leather and leave the rest up to him!"

The sound of those dogs had knocked all the worriment out of Uncle Dewey. I could tell that by the ring in his voice. I was sure excited. I got a choke hold on the saddle horn and grabbed up a fistfull of mane.

The hounds were pushing that old wolf from the start. They didn't waste any breath baying and bawling around, but once in a while one would cut loose with a short yelp, letting us know which way the chase was going.

The wolf kept to the high places mostly, taking us through one thicket of scrub live oak after another, cutting across bor canyons where the blackjacks grew thick and was sewed together with a tangle of briar vines. Sometimes I was in front of the saddle and then again I rode behind it. My tail bone was hammered sore and all the time the brush was knocking my hide off. I got an idea of what Uncle Dewey meant when he said wolf-running at night was like riding a cyclone with the bridle off.

About then the wolf said farewell to his old granite-rough range and lined out for the Llano River, 20 miles away. Uncle Dewey spurred past me so quick that I didn't get to tell him that I was done worn out. I couldn't stop my fool horse anyhow, so all I could do was hang on and follow along, hour after hour.

The hounds were out of hearing by the time we made it to Doug Wilson's place. Doug stuck his head out of a window. "They got a 20-minute lead on you, Dewey," he shouted, "and they're stacking the scenery behind at a high-lonesome pace. Better take a couple of my horses. I want to see you get that calf killer. I'm tired of him romping on my stock."

I slipped to the ground in Doug's corral, and my legs were so numb that I had to hang to my saddle horn to keep from falling. "You're a rough-riding fool, Bud," Uncle Dewey said. "I never seen the beat of it for a kid. There's regular saddle hands can't keep up on a wolf chase!"

Nobody had ever bragged on me like that before. My legs stiffened and I knew then I'd keep riding till I was worn raw as a fresh beef hide.

Uncle Dewey was trying to figure which way the wolf would go when he hit the river. "He won't take to that cold water," he said. "It's wolf nature to try making it back to his home range and to run the high places getting there."

We started to head him off, and when the first light of day streaked the east we got a sky-line glimpse of him once when he crossed a hog-back ridge. By that time he could just barely trot. Behind him less than 50 yards were the hounds, tongues out and tails down, too winded to close the gap. And behind them came me and Uncle Dewey, riding horses that were just stumbling along.

The hunt dragged on down a rough draw and finally swung into Dead Man's Hollow. He was heading straight for old man Fowler's shanty! The kitchen door stood open.

I couldn't hardly believe what I was seeing. Uncle Dewey had told me a run-down wolf would go anywhere when the hounds closed in, but I never looked to see one go in a body's house.

Uncle Dewey's face was white as a bed sheet. He pulled his six-shooter, but he was to late. The wolf dis-appeared inside the shanty, the dogs pouring in after him. We heard a snarl and a howl, and Cora's screams, and the yelling of old Joe Fowler. Then the whole thing was just one big wild roaring tumble that shook the old shanty.

We piled off our horses and rushed in. Everything in the kitchen was in the middle of the floor. The fight had moved on into a bedroom. Uncle Dewey was saying, "Oh, my Lordy!" over and over as we scrambled past the debris to the other room.

The wolf was up on a bed, rump to the wall, snarling and slashing at the dog pack. One hound was crawling off under a broken chair with a shoulder laid open to the bone. What hounds weren't up in the bed with the wolf were tugging at the quilts, trying to drag him down.

Uncle Dewey cut down on the wolf with his six-shooter, and didn't stop triggering till he'd emptied the cylinder.

Joe Fowler dropped to the floor then, from where he'd had a safe roost on the overhead joists. He reached up his hands to help Cora, who was trying to hold her nightgown tight around her legs and swing down at the same time. Then he said, sort of sad like, "How come you to do it, Dewey?"

Uncle Dewey flopped down into the one whole chair left in the room and started running his hands through his hair. "I couldn't help it!" he said in a bitter voice. The dogged critter just come right on in the house and the hounds come in after him and I was too far behind to stop it!"

"Thunderation! I never meant that!" flared Joe Fower. "It's the hounds I'm talking about. You didn't treat them right, Dewey. They run that wolf down and they ought to've had the pleasure of making the kill!"

Uncle Dewey's mouth fell open. Joe Fowler squatted to soft-run a hand over the head of the hound with the slashed shoulder. When he finally looked up at his girl, standing there shivering in her nightgown, his voice was all hoarse and raspy. "Cora", he said, "you got the same objections to hound-dogs your mama had?"

Cora's eyes got round as saucers. "No, Papa," she said.

"You got any objections to marryin' a hound-dog man?"

She caught a quick breath and said, "No, Papa." And then she said, "Oh, my gracious!" and ran and got in my Uncle Dewey's lap and went to crying.

Joe Fowler paced the room in his red flannel drawers. "It ain't right," he declared. "I follered the hounds till I lost a farm and killed a good woman with lonesome."

He stopped walking and slammed a fist into his other hand. "But thunderation! I never got enough of it and I ain't yit. I got to have me some good hound-dogs, if I do have to marry my only daughter off to git them in the family!"

PLOWMEN MEET FOR FIRST INTERNATIONAL MATCH SINCE 1941

An outstanding feature of the Victory International Plowing Match at Port Albert was the "Salada Tea" event for the best land plowed in sod, using horses. Out of Reach

A business man from Aberdeen was lunching with an English visitor when the Scot, in turning out his pockets, produced a dental plate.

"Bless my soul!" said the Englishman, "why do you carry that about with you? And in any case, it looks too small to be yours."

"It belongs to the wife," explained the Aberdonian. "Ye see, she's contracted the habit o' eating between meals."

THE MIXING BOWL

By ANNE ALLAN

Hydro Home Economist

Hello Homemakers! Once upon a time, witches, hobgoblins and other spirits of either evil or mischief were supposed to appear the last of October and these were feared and appeased. Lights, bonfires and torches were supposed to be hostile to these evil ones. The Jack o'Lanterns of today are relics of those sacred fires of ancient times.

To this day the spirit of mischief is personified in the youngsters who dress in ghostly costumes to frighten the timid. They ring door bells and tote away anything they have a mind to take. Entertaining at this time may be inexpensive, and it is a way to bring the children together and keep them out of mischief. (They should be warned of costly damage to property in the neighborhood).

The numerous paper decorations on sale at stores can be used in many ways. Guests should be asked to dress in costume as it creates so much fun.

A punch bowl, a stack of plates, cups, forks and spoons, gay orange and black napkins may be arranged on the table along with the serving dishes. This is the time when you can use the old iron pot for a hot dish, the old earthen jug for sweet cider, a clean basket for rolls and that sort of thing—providing you protect your table carefully with a pad. Gypsy atmosphere is intriguing for this occasion.

Chili Con Carne makes a substantial dish for a crowd and is good with a relish, hot rolls and a crisp salad. Frankfurters in long rolls, baked apples and doughnuts are favourites for children. A big bowl of potato salad with strips of raw turnip, carrot and tiny whole tomatoes is another suggestion. Molasses cake, pumpkin tarts, or crackers put together with cheese can be served with coffee or sweet cider.

ESCALLOPED BACON-POTATOES
(All-in-One Supper Dish)

6 cups thinly sliced raw potatoes, 1½ cups thinly sliced mild onions, 1½ tsps. salt, ¼ tsp. pepper. 5 tbsps. flour or rolled oats, 3 tbsps. butter, 1 quart scalded milk, 8 strips partially cooked side bacon.

Prepare potatoes and onions. Mix salt, pepper and flour (or rolled oats). Grease a two-quart baking dish. Sprinkle with part of seasoning and flour mixture and dot with butter. Make three layers. Pour in the hot milk. It should barely show through top layer of potato. Bake slowly in a moderate oven (325 to 350 degs.) until the potatoes look transulcent (about 1 hour). Arrange strips of partially cooked bacon over the top and bake until bacon is crisp.

Yield: 6 servings.

Note: If desired, onions may be omitted. In their place use thinly sliced carrots, string beans or peas or a mixture of all three.

When short of butter, omit it entirely and use a little bacon dripping.

In place of bacon, top the potatoes with crisp pork sausages.

Or omit meat toppings and sprinkle over a cup of grated cheese, scalded shredded codfish or put minced cooked ham between layers of potato.

DOUBLE QUICK YEAST ROLLS

½ cake fresh compressed yeast, ½ cup lukewarm milk, 1 egg beaten, 2½ cups prepared packaged biscuit mix, melted butter or shortening.

Dissolve yeast in lukewarm milk. Add beaten egg. Put prepared biscuit mix in bowl and add liquid. Mix well. Turn out on floured board, knead gently. With floured rolling pin roll out ¼ inch thick. Cut out with 2½ inch biscuit cutter. Brush each with melted butter or shortening. Using blunt side of knife, put crease in rounds to one side of the centre. Fold over so top slightly overlaps. Press together at ends of crease. Place on greased baking sheet about ¼ inch apart. Cover with damp cloth. Put in a warm place (about 82 degrees) and let rise until light. (1½ to 2 hours.)

Bake 10 to 12 mins. at 375 degs. in electric oven. Yield: 16 Parkerhouse rolls.

PUMPKIN TARTS

12 unbaked tart shells, 1¼ cups cooked pumpkin, 2|3 cup brown sugar, ½ tsp. salt, ¾ tsp. ginger, ½ tsp. nutmeg, ½ tsp. cinnamon, 3 eggs, 1¼ cups scalded rich milk.

Prepare shells. Chill in refrigerator for 2 hours. Combine pumpkin with sugar, salt and spices. Beat well together. Add scalded milk slowly to egg and pumpkin mixture. Pour into chilled shells. Place in a hot oven (450 degs.) Reduce oven temperature quickly to 325 degs. and continue to bake for 20 mins. Cool before serving. Serve with cheese.

Note: for Hallowe'en dish top with raisins or pitted prunes. Arrange them to form (eyes, nose and mouth).

HOT SPICE CIDER

2 qts. cider, 12 small pieces stick cinnamon, 16 whole cloves, 16 capers, 1|3 cup sugar, ¼ tsp. salt.

To cider add whole spices tied loosely in cheesecloth bag. Add sugar and salt. Bring to boiling point but do not boil. Allow to cool and let stand for several hours. Just before serving heat cider, remove spice bag and serve piping hot.

Yield: 8 to 10 servings.

GINGERBREAD

¼ cup butter, ¼ cup sugar, 1 egg (beaten), ½ cup molasses, ½ cup sour milk, 1¾ cup flour, 1 tsp. cloves, ½ tsp. soda, 2 tsps. cinnamon, 1 tsp. ginger, ¼ tsp. salt, ½ tsp. baking powder.

Cream butter and add sugar. Add beaten egg and molasses and beat together for 1 min. Sift together the dry ingredients and add alternately with sour milk. Pour into a greased and floured loaf pan and bake in an electric oven of 350 degs. for 40 minutes.

All roads must have lead towards the Colquhoun Church Hall on Monday evening, when one of the largest crowds ever to attend a church banquet gathered there. Over four hundred people were served with all the good things that our Dundas farmers' wives know how to prepare. After partaking of the sumptuous repast, all wended their way to the church where a good musical program presented by the Colquhoun choir was enjoyed by all. Net proceeds amounted to over two hundred and sixty dollars.
