MALICIOUSLY ORGANIZED

On Monday, the first "Jack the Ripper—Get The Leader" squad of volunteers appeared on the scene, presenting a united front at the St. Lawrence Hall Corner, obstructing the traffic and interfering more or less with our business. Though reluctant, we were compelled to call the local Provincial Officer, when the point of invasion immediately became the scene of "No Man's Land."

Those who witnessed this performance realize that it is exceedingly unfortunate for our town. It not only defeats the object for which it is done, but it widens the gap for co-operation, and registers a "want of confidence" in the ear-marked thoroughbreds concealed in the rear trenches, who sought revenge in a maliciously organized attempt to belittle the management of this paper.

PRESENTATION TO MR AND MRS. STRIKE

(Perth Courier)

There was a large gathering at Ashury Church on Sunday afternoon Feb. 14th when both the members of the Sunday School and representatives of the various church organizations met to convey to Mr. and Mrs Ross Strike, their sincere regret at their departure and to express in tangible form, their recognition of the valuable service which these two had rendered their church during their residence in Perth.

The chair was taken by the Rev. Arthur Wilkinson, the pastor of the church, who after briefly expressing the high esteem in which the church held both Mr. and Mrs. Strike, called upon various members of the congregation who paid tribute to the devotion and untiring effort with which Mr. and Mrs. Strike had worked in every branch of church work. Mr. S. T. Dowson spoke on behalf of the Trustee Board of the church, of which Mr. Strike had been the efficient treasurer; Mr. Robert Thornbury voiced the appreciation of the Sunday School which had grown to its present large numbers under the capable leadership of Mr. Strike and Mr. J. H. Hardy read an address expressing the congregation's deep appreciation and recognition of the splendid service which had meant so much to the life of the church, and their keen regret because of the removal of such valued and trusted friends. Messrs. T. A. Poole and J. A. Graham then presented Mr. and Mrs. Strike with a handsome Westminster clock on behalf of the congregation, and wished them many years of services in their new home Mr. Strike in reply, spoke feelingly of the happy associations which he had greatly enjoyed in the church and heartily thanked the people for the valuable gift, assuring them that it would always remain a cherished possession.

KIND WORDS APPRECIATED

The following note, with remittance for two years' subscription, from Dr. W. H. Rose, a former Morrisburg boy, who graduated at McGill with highest honors, a few years ago, and now enjoys an enviable practice at Avonmore and district, is much appreciated:

"Am sorry to have overlooked the subscription to The Leader. We wouldn't be without it, and I think this is a poor way to show our appreciation. However, I'll try to compensate for this by paying for this year and next, that is, to July 1927."

WEDDING BELLS

(Three Hills Capital)

An interesting wedding took place at the Presbyterian Church on Wednesday afternoon, January 17th, when Thomas Alfred Hanna and Mabel Marguerite, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. W. Kirk, were united in marriage. Rev. R. C. Acheson officiating. A large number of relatives and friends were present and many were the good wishes and congratulations tendered the happy couple. The bride, who was prettily attired in burnt orange satin, was attended by her sister, Evelyn, who wore a dress of pale green vella-vella crepe. The bridegroom was supported by Leslie Crawford. A solo was rendered by Miss Elizabeth Jenkins, Miss Wilson presiding at the organ.

Mabel has, by her kindly friendly disposition earned many warm friends in and around Three Hills and practical evidence of this was given when no less than three showers were tendered her. On Wednesday last a number of relatives and friends met at Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Grant's, showing their love and friendship for her in a real practical manner.

Again on Saturday afternoon, the Ladies' Aid and Girls' Clubs of the United Church gathered at the manse and many and useful were the gifts presented.

Then on Monday last, a large number of her friends met at the Presbyterian Manse to wish her every happiness in her approaching marriage; bringing with them many beautiful presents.

If good wishes can secure for them the happiness they deserve, the young couple will surely get their full measure—(Mr. Hanna was formerly a student of the M.C.I.)

Ma's Posy Bed

BY WALTER PRICHARD EATON.

PART I.

Almost the first thing Betty Ann could remember was her mother's flower bed, like a bright ribbon of color beside the driveway across from the side porch. The porch was a late addition to the hundred-year-old house. She could remember looking at that belt of color, the zinnias tall as herself, one hot summer day, and then starting across the drive to "pick a posy," and falling down in the dust and cutting her chin.

She could remember, later, going out with her mother on soft spring days, when the garden bed was just a strip of nice brown earth, and watching her mother put little seeds into it, in even rows, with the pretty envelopes they came in stuck on a stick at the end of each row, so when the bed was all planted they looked like a line of paper dolls marching toward the house.

She remembered, too, how excited her mother used to get when, along each row, tiny green leaves came up—they always came up in the night, when nobody was watching—and how she would hold Betty Ann's hand very hard, and say, "Look at them, Betty Ann, look at them! They're sprouting!" In fact, Betty Ann remembered the posy bed, as it was called, much more vividly than the barn, or the cows, of which she was a little afraid.

She remembered it better, even, than the drowsy ticking of the old grandfather's clock in the sitting room and the hot smell of the kerosene lamp, and her mother sewing, and suddenly crying out, "Time for sleepy heads to be abed!"

It was Betty Ann's father who always called it "Ma's posy bed." Her mother spoke of it as "the posies," or sometimes "my flowers." Freeman Bachelder always spaded it up for his wife in the spring, and pretended he couldn't spare her any manure. But after that it was Ma's posy bed in very truth.

Freeman Bachelder was a farmer, on a stony Ontario farm. He had no time for posies. Also, Ma Bachelder was the wife of a farmer, and she had no time either. But she made it. Somehow she found a twenty-fifth hour in the day to transplant her seedlings, to keep out the weeds, to carry water, to pick off the withered blossoms; sometimes, even, just to walk along the bed and look and look. When Betty Ann was a very small girl she used to love her mother's face almost the best when she was just looking this way at her posies.

"Mamma," Betty Ann once asked, "why do you look so happy at the posies?"

And then, suddenly, her mother didn't look happy a bit! But pretty soon she smiled again and kissed Betty Ann and said, "Because they're not dishes"—which Betty Ann thought was a funny thing to say, and told her father, and he didn't laugh at all.

Betty Ann had no brothers or sisters, and because the farm was two hundred acres in extent, and on a side road, too, she didn't have any playmates when she was small, except old Shep, the black collie, and Bim, the cat—when he would let her play with him, and didn't stalk off toward the barn—and every so often some little bossy calves that soon got carried away with their feet tied together, which made her cry, and a turkey gobbler who used to chase her up onto the verandah when she tried to make him fan his tail, and, of course, little yellow chickens in the spring.

But better than any of the animals, except old Shep, Betty Ann loved the posy bed, and very soon she knew the flowers by name, and which ones had a sweet smell, and which ones she could pick and put in little glass jars of water along the edge of the side porch. She always sang as she fixed these posies, and then her mother, in the kitchen, would sometimes sing too. Her mother was almost always in the kitchen, unless the hired man had gone away and a new one hadn't come yet. Then mother was just as apt to be in the barn, or feeding the chickens, or even helping father catch the yearlings which had broken down the pasture fence and got into the woods.

But presently Betty Ann went to school. She had to walk a quarter of a mile up over a little hill to the main road and wait there till the team came along which collected almost a score of children and carried them in to the Centre. Going to school was pretty hard at first for Betty Ann, because she was shy and unused to other children, and her big brown eyes often filled with tears when the boys plagued her, or the whole room, perhaps, laughed at her embarrassment.

During those first days of school her mother's posy bed was a gay riot of zinnias and orange calendulas, with the early asters coming out, too, and Betty Ann could see it from afar as she crested the little hill between the main road and her house when she was almost running home. How it gladdened her! It was everything that school was not; it was home, and it was mother, and it was lovely, shy thoughts which she couldn't speak to the other children because they would laugh at her.

As the years went on, Betty Ann got used to school; she even grew to like it, because she liked to learn. But she never quite got over that sense of coming back to a quieter, a happier world when she crested the ridge and saw the posy bed rioting beside the old white farmhouse. It was a busy world she came back to, however, for Betty Ann very soon had to do her share of the household chores. She learned to milk, also, so she could help out if the hired man got wanderlust or hard cider, and she could make a good loaf of bread when she was ten. Her hands were hard and capable, if she was a slim bit of a thing, with big, shy, brown eyes.

And she got as a gift from her mother the knack of handling flowers. There were two now to plant the rows of seed in the spring, and two to pull the weeds and carry the water. When Betty Ann was twelve her mother had pa spade the bed a whole two feet wider—it had been only four feet wide before—and on the far side, away from the house, she planted perennials and biennials—larkspur and hollyhocks and foxglove—which all died the first winter—and forget-me-nots for edging, too, and even some tulip bulbs.

Then Betty Ann, in the public library at the Centre, discovered a garden magazine, and gazed long and eagerly at pictures of marvelous flower beds, and read advertisements of plnts unknown to her—unknown and she feared unattainable. But it was possible, maybe, to have some of those lovely gladioluses, so different from the stiff red things some other farmer's wife had once given her mother. Betty Ann worked as she had never worked before and won a five-dollar prize for English composition, awarded each year from a fund left years ago by a local worthy who had written a history of the town and thought himself literary. She invested this sum secretly in a collection of choice gladioluses, and gave them to her mother on Easter morning.

Betty Ann's mother cried when she opened the box.

"But you should have had your money for a new dress," she said. "A pretty new spring dress."

Betty Ann thought this over for a moment in her honest, sober way. "I guess I don't maybe care for dresses so much as some girls," she asnwered. "And I guess I care more for having where we live dressed up."

Her mother kissed her and held her close for a moment—something she seldom did. It was then that Betty Ann began dimly to realize that ma's posy bed was also a symbol.

When Betty Ann was a senior in the high school she became the centre of family discussion. It was her ambition to go to Toronto after high school and study to be a trained nurse. Something she had read about that profession appealed to her, as the sick and suffering always did. It meant getting away, too—and Betty Ann, who had never been much of anywhere, was, after all, a quite normal young person. Her mother approved, but pa was by turns skeptical and pleading.

"What do yer want ter traipse off 'n' fool with sick people for?" he would demand. "It's goin' ter cost a sight o' money, which we ain't got, and pretty soon ye'll git married, and then whar'll it all be?"

Or, again, he would point out: "Your ma needs yer, Betty Ann. She ain't so strong ez she was, and she'll miss yer. Seem's if yer place was here."

And sometimes it seemed to Betty Ann so, too, for her mother looked older, even to her young eyes, and sometimes her face was drawn. But whenever pa talked that way she stood up straight, and emitted a loud "Nonsense! I've taken care of you so far, haven't I? Well, I guess I can keep on doing it, and let our girl have her chance in the world."

When she talked that way pa either retired into his newspaper or the barn.

And late that spring, after it was about settled that Betty Ann was to go, in the autumn, to the nurses' training school, a boy in her class, discovering some mystery in her big brown eyes, took her for a ride in his father's flivver. It was a wonderful ride, for he drove her to a town noted for its lovely estates, where at one of them a cousin of his worked in the gardens. She went through the gardens and through the hothouses, and when she left, on the rear seat of the car was a great flat full of little potted antirrhinums, and, wonder of wonders, a tuberous-rotted single begonia, already showing a bud of fiery flame orange.

Mother will just jump up and down when she sees that begonia!" she cried to her companion.

"Gee, you're a queer one," he answered. "You're bugs on flowers, ain't yer?"

"Don't you understand at all, Will?" she demanded, fixing her big eyes upon him and touching his arm.

He met her gaze and grinned. "I understand some things, all right," said he, taking his right hand off the wheel and grabbing for her fingers.

She drew them hastily away, flushing to the roots of her hair.

None of her schoolmates again took her riding that year. Nor would she have gone had they asked her.

But the begonia, tenderly planted and watered, flourished and bloomed in ma's posy bed, a glorious little patrician among humbler things.

Betty Ann's mother went out to see it every morning as soon as she was up, and every evening, in the twilight, after the endless day's work in the kitchen was over, she went out again.

"He said life without me would be impossible."

"And he could easily find out from your former husband what it would be with you."

Talleyrand, it seems, hated to write letters, and when he could not escape answering a note his style was telegraphic. Two autographs of his were recently sold, both addressed to a widow who remarried.

In answer to the news of the death of her husband he wrote:

"My dear —— Alas! Devotedly yours."

When the consoled widow told him of her second marriage he wrote back:

"My dear ——: Bravo? Yours devotedly."

A VERY POPULAR PLAN

By F. H. Marani, Architect.

It is not often that the name of a prominent architect is found associated with a home costing as little as fifty-five hundred dollars. One of the larger lumber companies featuring this design in a plan book state that the plan has been a tremendous success, many homes having been built from it. But the reputation of the architect and the cost are not the only reasons for such popularity. There are many others.

Few homes possessing individuality of design are to be found on lots under forty or fifty feet wide, however here is a decided artistic exception. The outside width is 22 ft. 6 in., which makes it suitable for a thirty-five foot lot or even two or three feet less. A minimum allowance of eight feet should be made for the driveway at the left and two, preferably three feet, for overhand of eaves and clearance at the other side.

While the original ground floor plan does not show any window openings on this side, an alternative plan provides a group of three side windows in the dining room. The most suitable plan to use depends upon the width of your own lot and the proximity of the building on the next location. If none is there yet, it is safer to use the original plan unless you can keep at least four to six feet away from the line.

A lot facing the south or west is most desirable, but by reversing the plan and having the hall, side entrance and kitchen at the right side instead of the left, a northern exposure could be used. The side entrance would then be exposed to the west, which is better than to the east, where it would be if this change were not made.

Looking at the floor plans and beginning with the ground floor, it will be noticed that the verandah is not in its customary place, but is at the back overlooking the garden. The small porch in front affords ample protection from the weather and has the advantage of performing this function without obstructing the living room light.

Entering the hall, it is quite a treat to find the coat closet conveniently located right at hand. The staircase landing, with small latticed window above co-operates with the living room in a pleasing interchange of views.

The fireplace in the corner of the living room is another departure from custom which works in very well with the size of the room (13 ft. 3 in. x 16 ft. 3 in.) and permits the same chimney to also serve the kitchen and furnace. One would have to be quite unobservant to miss the large bay window, and equally lacking in imagination to fail to appreciate its value from three viewpoints—exterior appearance of the home, interior appearance of the living room, and as a means for flooding the room with health-giving sunlight.

The dining room is 11 ft. 5 in. x 12 ft. and gets its natural illumination from a combination of windows and a large French door which leads to the verandah.

The kitchen, 8 ft. 10 in. x 10 ft. 6 in. is well planned, the feature being the group of three windows just above the large combination sink with its convenient drain boards. At one side is a milk cupboard with outside access and at the other a china closet. The range has been alloted a convenient position opposite the sink. The pantry 3 ft. 9 in. x 8 ft. 6 in. has a built in refrigerator with outside icing door.

Just outside the kitchen door and down three steps is the side, grade entrance and from the same landing one may proceed to the cellar and the furnace room, laundry, fruit and vegetable rooms.

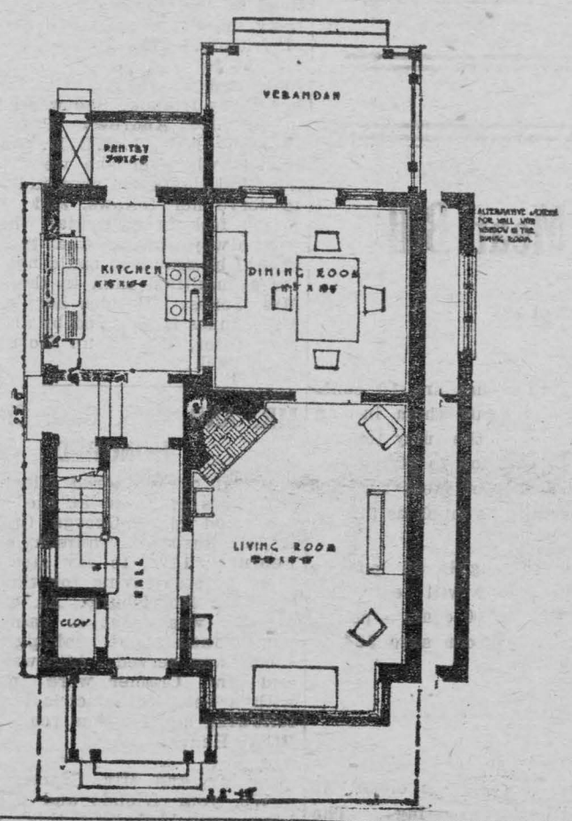

On the second floor are three bedrooms with clothes closets and a bathroom with linen cupboard at the right. This plan also shows the architect's conception of the best positions for the beds.

Many a wonderful summer evening could be spent on the balcony of this floor or verandah below if their possibilities are not overlooked when selecting the site. Georgeous sunsets; a well planned, well cared for garden—why not!

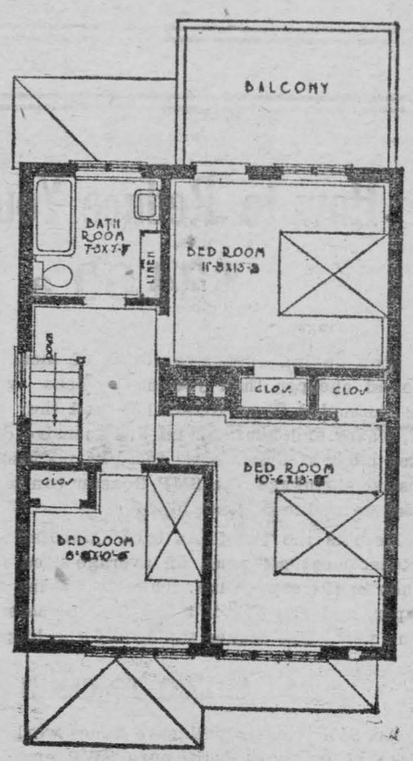

Why not a home like this for you and yours?

Canada's Primary Transportation.

Canada has many transportation problems and the development of her wonderful natural resources accentuates these problems. In mineral production, in agriculture, in fisheries, in forest development and other features of Canada's growth the question of how to get the product to market forms a major difficulty. Various mining companies are meeting the problems in their own way, while the fishing and forestry industries are using several different methods of getting their output to market. One of the most difficult transportation problems is met by the mining companies of the Mayo district of the Yukon, where the silverlead ores have to be brought long distances in bags by tractor and sleighs over snow roads. They are there piled on the banks of the river awaiting shipment by water route on the spring break-up.

Many of the settlers in the lake areas of the northerly portion of the Prairie Provinces secure large catches of fish through the ice. To get these fish to railhead before the weather changes is a problem, as the settler has to drive often 200 miles to deliver his frozen fish, which are stacked up on his sleigh like stovewood.

The grain grower of the prairies has met his delivery problem by the use of the tractor and grain tanks, whic have hauled for many miles to the country elevator or loading platform. The man who cultivates thousands of acres must make very definite plans in the moving of his crop from the farm to the nearest railway point.

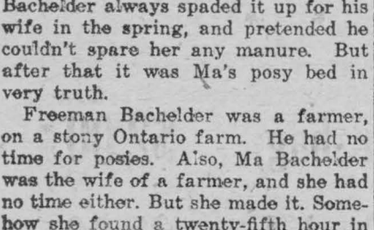

The good roads programmes of the several provinces cannot help much in overcoming such transportation problems, as in almost every case the point of production is isolated and beyond the range of economic highway development. This condition is an incentive to individual actio, and the aggressive Canadian, whether miner, lumberman, fisherman or Farmer, is equa to the occasion.

Wide-Brimmed Hats.

A wide-brimmed hat may be securely and comfortably worn on a shingled head if two pieces of flat elastic are fastened inside the crown, from back to front, in such a way that they grip the head on either side. The space between these strips of elastic should be smaller at the back than the front.

wonders for me," writes Mrs. Russell Hill, Norwood, Ont. "I was run-down and could not eat or sleep and was very nervous. I was pale and would sometimes faint. I took a lot of doctor's medicine but it did not help me. It was a real trial to do any housework, or to go about, and I got so that I scarcely cared whether I lived or died. One day while reading a paper I saw an advertisement about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It described a case very much like my own and I decided to give the pills a trial. I had not been taking them long when I could feel a change for the better. I continued the pills until I had used eight boxes, when I felt like a new woman. Every disagreeable symptom had vanished and I gained in weight, and a good color returned to my face. All this I owe to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I am now never without them in the house, and any time I feel out of sorts they are my first aid. I gladly bear this testimony in the hope that it will benefit some other sufferer."

Nightingales.

During one of my visits to England I formed the friendship of a family of some importance. Their home, of which they were proud, both for its traditions and beauty, was an ample and dignified manor house a few miles from the city of Canterbury. The place was gracious rather than grand in aspect and appeared venerable without looking old; it was built of red brick, mellowed by climate to a sober tone, and clustered chimneys crowned its roof with promised comfort. It was set in the midst of tiny irregular fields with dwarfed hedges and yellow brown hayricks, and the only view of a distant horizon was from the terrace, directly in front of the house; to the right the view was broken by a line of pollards fringing a sluggish brook, and to the left, just beyond the paddock, the outlook was obstructed by the tall vine-burdened poles of a hop-garden with the quaint top of an oast showing in the background. Such a serene and sequestered spot I had never known before, and the days slipped away in peaceful delight.

But it is the evenings I recall most vividly. My host was a lover of birds, especially the nightingale. Every evening we would sit in the breakfast room, with the French windows wide open, and listen to one which sang from some sapling elders growing just beyond the kitchen garden. I grew to be as fond of the song as my friend and would wait breathlessly for the recurrence of certain unusual notes and if they did not come I felt defrauded. One propitious evening—windless and with a full moon—we walked across the country, by footpath and stile, to a piece of woodland which was the haunt of a number of nightingales. Although we had started with high hopes, the reward far exceeded them. It was impossible to tell how many songsters formed the symphony, but at times the chorus rose to such a chercendo that it seemed as if every twig of every tree in the spinney must be bending under the weight of a performer.—Joseph H. Odell, in "Unmailed Letters."

ABOUT MEN AND WOMEN OF TO-DAY

Her Majesty Obliged.

Like most women, the Queen is fond shopping, and it is curious how very seldom it happens that she is recognized while so doing by other shoppers.

At one big West End store which Her Majesty particularly favors, an elderly woman recently came up to her holding in her hand a mechanical toy she had picked up off the counter.

Mistaking the Queen for an ordinary fellow-shopper, the woman said: "Pardon me, madam, but could you possibly tell me how this thing works?"

The Queen took it in her hand and carefully explained the mechanism.

"Oh, thank you so much," said the woman, "I think I'll buy it."

One of the heads of the firm who knew Her Majesty quite well, had hurried up, very much concerned. But the Queen motioned to him to take no notice, and when the woman had gone she turned to him and laughingly said: "I think I carried that through rather well."

What They Wanted!

It is an open secret that Sir Austen Chamberlain might have had a peerage with his Garter, had he been so minded.

The maker of the Treaty of London, however, had no desire whatever to accept an honor that would have had the effect of driving him from the strenuous House of Commons to the quieter House of Lords.

"I hear they want to make you a peer, Austen," said a friend who met him on the day of his triumphant return from Locarno.

"Do they?" was the non-committal reply. Then he added, his eyes twinkling:

"What some of my political opponents really want is to make me disappear."

One of His "Off" Days!

Have you heard this story of Mr. Rudyard Kipling, whose recent illness caused so much concern?

An American woman called on him not long ago at his Sussex home, with a letter of introduction. When she caught sight of him, she looked him up and down, and murmured: "You! You Mr. Kipling?"

Then, realizing her breach of good manners, she began to explain: "I'm so sorry. I expected to see someone so very different."

"I am sorry," the great author replied, "but, you see, this happens to be my day off!"

When Lord Lascelles Laughed.

There was a time when no exalted individual connected with the Royal Family would have dared to admit that he was ever frightened. We live now—happily—in more honest days, and Lord Lascelles made some ex-Service men laugh at Finchley the other day by the manner in which he "owned up."

He told them that once, in a front-line trench, he became really frightened. He went round a traverse in order to pull himself together—and came upon a sentry who was even more frightened.

The discovery of somebody more scared than himself had a tonic effect. Lord Lascelles laughed, and, if he did not give up being frightened he gave up showing that he was.

"Probably," added Lord Lascelles, concluding his narration of the incident, "that sentry has told his friends since how he laughed at me!"

The Day.

The lingering planets pale and disappear,
As fades the velvet darkness of the night
When morning's near,
Then smoothly, slowly, slips across the grey,
One lengthening line of golden light—
At last, the day!

—Elizabeth Challis Adams.

A Song of Joy.

Speak not of snow and cold and rime
Now that they prevail,
Would you have joy in winter-time,
Think of the pale
New green that comes, of blossoming lilacs think
Larkspar, and borders of the fringed pink.
And sing, if winter grants you heart to sing
Of summer and of spring.

—Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer.

He Forgot to Secure His Victory.

The mother was getting her small son ready for school when she noticed a lump on his head.

"Freddy!" she said sternly. "Have you been fighting again?"

"Fightin'," he echoed, "not me."

"But somebody struck you?" said his mother.

"Nobody struck me," he answered stoutly; "I wasn't fightin' at all. It was an accident."

"An accident?"

"Yes," he replied; "I was sitting on Tommy Jones, and I forgot to hold his feet."

Tuberculosis.

"Tuberculosis lies round about us in our infancy" might be the radiogram broadcasted by any town or township in Ontario. Ontario has been wondering for some time to what extent tuberculosis was attacking her child population and is now informed by two surveys, one urban and one rural, that 32 out of every 100 (or 426 out of 1392 examined) apparently healthy, normal children gave evidence that germs of this disease had gained entrance into their bodies. In addition, 94 suspicious cases and 14 active cases of tuberculosis were found.

The common source of infection was the adult open case. Every person, but particularly a child, who has been in close contact with a tuberculosis patient should be examined by a doctor who has studied the disease.

Milk from tuberculous cows was shown to be the one and only source of infection in many children, both town and rural. This led the committee to urge "that children be protected from the milk of tuberculous cows, and that milk from uncertified herds for the use of children should be pasteurized."

To assist physicians who have not facilities at their disposal in detecting early tuberculous disease in people who have been exposed to opportunities for infection is the reason for the Traveling Tuberculosis Clinic of the Department of Health. The clinic is staffed by two chest specialists and a nurse; its equipment includes an x-Ray outfit, and it is sent free upon request of physicians in different localities.

Peculiar Customs.

In Northumberland and other northern districts of England, some peculiar customs still exist.

The male guests at a wedding, as soon as they emerge without the precincts of the churchyard—if the marriage occurs in a church—commence distributing money to the spectators, and continue to do so from thence to where they remain for refreshments. There is another peculiarity in connection with a marriage at the same place. Previous to the bride's entering the doorway of the house after the ceremony, she is met at the door, a veil is thrown over her head, and a quantity of cake is pitched over her. Some think these customss are borrowed from the East. They probably have a symbolical meaning.

"To live long one must keep active," says Lord Phillimore, a famous lawyer, now eighty-one years of age. "Idleness is fatal."

Time.

Time, you old gipsy man,
Will you not stay,
Put up your caravan
Just for one day?

All things I'll give you
Will you be my guest,
Bells for your jennet
Of silver the best;
Goldsmiths shall beat you
A great golden ring,
Peacocks shall bow to you,
Little boys sing;
Oh, and sweet girls will
Festoon you with may.
Time, you old gipsy,
Why hasten away? . . .

Time, you old gipsy man,
Will you not stay,
Put up your caravan
Just for one day?

—Ralph Hodgson, in "Poems."

BABY'S WELFARE DURING FEBRUARY

Should be Most Carefully Guarded by All Mothers.

February is one of the hardest months of the year on little ones. It is a month of cold, blustery days that prevent the mother taking her baby out for the fresh air so necessary to its welfare. Baby is consequently confined to the home. More often than not the rooms are over-heated and badly ventilated and the little one catches cold or grippe. What is needed to keep the baby well is a gentle laxative that will regulate the stomach and bowels; banish constipation and indigestion and in this way will either prevent or break up colds and grippe. Such a laxative is found in Baby's Own Tablets. They are mild but thorough in action; are absolutely safe and they are guaranteed to contain neither opiates or other harmful drugs. They never fail to be of benefit to little ones and may be given to either the newborn babe or the growing child.

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by all dealers in medicine or may be had by mail, post paid, at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Woodcraft.

Once in ten years the woodman with his axe
Felling slim undergrowth from stubby boles,
Shall bare the auburn flooring of the copse,
Its ridges, and the sandy rabbit-holes.
Then shall he pare the twigs, and set in stacks
His tall young ash and stripling chestnut poles
That presently shall serve the wreathing hops,
And he shall peel the bark of shorter wood
Clean as a cat in pattens, smelling good,
And sharpen to a point for stakes and spiles,
The whittled slivers flying as he chops,
And lash the shaven wood in ready piles,
For this is woodman and his livelihood.

A Feast for Dobbin.

Inmates of the Home of Rest for Horses, Westcroft Farm, Cricklewood, England, received their usual New Year's treat on Jan. , in the presence of a large number of patrons of the home.

The dinner originated 34 years ago, when it was started by a lady who maintained a pensioner in the home. The treat is now given by the subscribers to the institution. This year's feast consisted of carrots, apples, brown and white bread, and loaf sugar, and was shared by 77 animals, 27 being horses and donkeys which have been pensioned off, and the remainder work horses enjoying a temporary rest.

As in previous years, Roger, an old war horse, announced that dinner was ready by ringing a bell by pulling with his teeth a rope (to which a carrot was attached). Roger was discovered riderless on the Somme battle field and ridden through the latter part of the war by an officer, who afterward pensioned him off. Other war veterans include Punch and Sunny Jim. Another survivor is Peter, who, since his discharge, has acted as a relief trace-horse on one of London's hills.

Time to Spare.

It is said that the distinguished Elbert Hubbard was once walking along the street when he met a little boy, who asked him the time.

"Ten minutes to nine," said Hubbard.

"Well, at nine get your hair cut," said the boy, and he took to his heels, the aggrieved one after him.

Turning a corner, the man ran into a policeman, nearly knocking him down.

"What's up?" said the policeman.

"See that boy," Hubbard shouted, "He asked me the time, and I said, 'Ten to nine,' and he said, 'At nine get your hair cut.' "

"Well," said the policeman, "what are you running for? You've got eight minutes yet."

WOMAN COULD HARDLY WALK

Mrs. Horn Tells how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health

Hamilton, Ont.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and would not be without it now. I had a female trouble so badly I could hardly walk and I was all run-down and could hardly get around to do my housework. I would be in bed three or four days at a time. I was told by a friend to try your Vegetable Compound. I did, and by the time I took two bottles I was beginning to get around again. I took ten bottles in all, and now I am all right again and doing my own work. I have six grown-ups to work for, so I have plenty to do. I also used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and I think it is good. But I owe my health to the Vegetable Compound, and I think if more of it was used women would be better off. I would not be without it if it cost much more."—Mrs. NELLIE HORN, 28 St. Matthews Avenue, Hamilton, Ontario.

Do you feel broken down, nervous and weak sometimes? Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is excellent to take at such a time. It always helps, and if taken regularly and persistently, will relieve this condition. C

PRESBYTERIAL OF BROCKVILLE MEETS IN CONVENTION

Wednesday, January 20th, was a red-letter day for Hallville, when the twelfth annual meeting of the Brockville Presbyterial W.M.S. was held in St. Andrews United Church. A three-session program was held and a large delegation was present for the opening session, nearly very auxiliary being represented.

The church was filled in the afternoon and evening even standing room was at premium, many being turned away unable to gain admission.

The morning session was taken up with routine business. Mrs. Clarke in a few kindly words welcomed the delegates to Hallville church and homes. Miss Farlinger of Morrisburg replied, voicing a note of sadness in meeting for the last time as a Brockville Presbyterial, but looking forward with optimism to the future work in the new Dundas Presbyterial.

The reports of Auxiliaries, Y.W. Auxiliaries and Mission Bands were most encouraging, showing faithful work was being done during the year. Morrisburg is the banner auxiliary with an average giving of over $15.00 per month. Winchester a close second averaging over 14.00 per member. Hallville Y.W.A. leads in the young women's work contributing the sum of $414.41. Prescott has the banner Mission Band contributing $66.00.

Miss Jean Graham, Heckston, delegate to the summer school in Whitby gave a very concise and interesting report of her time spent there.

Three out of the four district presidents were present, namely, Mrs. Anderson, Heckston; Mrs. Steele, Winchester Springs and Miss Fairburn, Spencerville, and reported successful sectional meetings held and faithful work done during the year.

A very full minute was read by the recording secretary, Mrs. T. Coleman, Hallville. Mrs. Ed. McKendry, Mountain, accompanied by Mrs. John Anderson, of Heckston, delighted the large audience both afternoon and evening by rendering in splendid voice, two beautiful solos.

The secretaries reported as follows: Corresponding secretary Mrs. J. W. Fulford, Brockville; Y. W. A. and C.G.I.T., Miss J. Smith, Mountain; Mission Band, Mrs. J. Bovaird, Spencerville; Stranger and Social Service; Mrs. Ed. Smith, Williamsburg; Messenger secretary, Mrs. Roy McCarley, Heckston; Literary and Library, Mrs. F. A. Campbell, Winchester; Home Helpers, Mrs. McNish; Supply Secretary Mrs. W. Coulthart, Morewood; Press, Mrs. A. Ennis, P. Valley; Finance, Mrs. Elliott, Prescott.

The report of the Treasurer, Miss Cameron of Brockville, showed the following very encouraging figures:

Rec. of Auxiliaries	$2,205.00
Y. W. Auxiliaries	380 00
Mission Bands	102.03
A total of	$2,687.03

A pleasing feature of the afternoon session was the presentation to Miss Cameron, for 14 years the faithful treasurer of a handsome leather handbag. The presentation was made by Mrs. McNish of Lyn. Mrs. Steele, district president, of Winchester, was presented with a life member's certificate from all the auxiliaries under supervision. The presentation was made by Miss Violet Tuckey, Williamsburg, and at the same time, Mrs. Edwin Smith of Williamsburg, was made a life member by the auxiliaries of that district. The presentation was made by Mrs. Steele. But the surprises reached the climax, when the girls of the Hallville Y.W.A. through the president, Mrs. J. P. Milne and secretary, Miss Gladys Logan, presented their honorary president, Mrs J. P. Milne and secretary Miss Gladys Logan, presented their honorary president, Mrs. Clarke Hyndman with an honorary life members certificate.

Mrs. B. M. Johnston, Toronto, representing the general board and president of Toronto Presbyterial was the speaker of the day, and her pleasing personality and earnest messages will not soon be forgotten.

The Ladies Aid of St. Andrews Church provided a sumptuous dinner and tea in the basement of the church and the social time was much enjoyed.

At the dinner hour, the president, Mrs. Clarke Hyndman gave a short report of the work of the Brockville Presbyterial from its inception, which by request, is being printed and copy sent to each auxiliary.

At the tea hour greetings were given from the Mountain Auxiliary by Mrs. Render; from VanCamp Auxiliary by Mrs. Taylor, and from Matilda District by the president, Mrs. Merrill, of Morrisburg, and the greetings from the Dundas Presbytery by its secretary, Rev. J. W. Clark.

The evening session was presided over by Rev. J. W. Clarke, pastor of the church, Rev. C. K. Mathewson of Heckston, conducted the opening devotions. The girls of the Mission Band, accompanied by Miss Lois Beggs, sang very sweetly "Jesus Bids Us Thine."

The pageant entitled "The Conversion of the Hon. Mrs. Ling" put on by the members of the Hallville Y.W.A. was pronounced a complete success.

The courtesy committee through its convenor, Miss Farlinger, of Morrisburg, supported by Mrs. McDougall of Jasper, and Mrs. McNish of Lyn, conveyed the thanks of the delegates to all who helped to make this closing Presbyterial so great a success.

Pianists for the convention were the Misses Carrie Stewart and Thelma Weaver.

"Nerves in Bad State Could Not Sleep"

Mrs. H. N. Tardell, Harrowsmith, Ont., writes:

"My nerves were in a very bad state, and for nearly six months I did not know what it was to have a good night's rest. I could not eat, and never felt well. I heard about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and thought I would try it. After taking it for a few days I began to feel better, and soon was able to sleep well at night. My appetite also returned, and I felt stronger and better, and after taking three boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was quite well. I have also given the Nerve Food to my little girl, with good results."

Live Stock in 1925.

The meat trade review of the Markets Intelligence Division of the Dominion Live Stock Branch for December is, in its introductory remarks, rather more of a summary of the year's business than of the month. It is most decidedly cheering and encouraging. During 1925, says the review, the British market for our cattle competed with our domestic trade, in itself very strong, in a remarkable manner, thereby maintaining prices on all good sorts of feeders and export butcher stock at very satisfactory levels. All told 110,257 head of cattle were moved overseas as compared with 82,086 in 1924 and 56,649 in 1923, an increase of 34.3 per cent. over the previous year and of nearly 100 per cent. over 1923. Public stock yards sold approximately 945,000 head of cattle in 1925 as against 857,500 in 1924. Indications were of a strong trade in the East for the Western provinces.

It is estimated that the increase in hog sales revenue in 1925 over 1924 wsa about fifteen million dollars. Prices ran anywhere up to $8 per hog higher on good bacon hogs in 1925, over the previous year. The contributing factors to the situation, says the review, were an excellent market in England for our bacon and hams, an exceptionally keen domestic demand, a sharp inquiry for our hogs from the Pacific coast States, which absorbed around two million dollars' worth, and a general improvement in the type and finish of the hogs marketed.

Nothing, adds the review, could be more encouraging than the way in which our bacon is gaining in favor on the British market, our sales being about twenty million pounds more in 1925 than in 1924 and the total being in excess of 120,000,000 lbs.

The fly in the ointment is a tendency apparent during the latter months of the year to overfeed and over finish the hogs put upon the market. This, if persisted in, must have a disastrous effect on the export demand.

The sheep industry experienced a somewhat quiet year, but on the whole was encouraging, although the business in wool was a little disappointing. Choice lambs were in good demand and are likely to continue so. Good breeding stock is also in demand. Supplies were rather scanty but 26,000 head of lambs were exported in 1925 against 9,000 the year before. Also 1,500,000 lbs. of mutton and lamb were shipped out of the country compared with only 198,000 lbs. in 1924.

Choose Good Milkers for Raising Pigs.

In choosing brood sows too little attention is paid to udder development and indications of milk production. Both breeders and swine judges err in this regard.

A recent experience illustrates very well, although it may be a bit extreme. Ninety-five students recently participated in a college judging-contest, and several classes of hogs were judged. In one ring of under-year sows there were two notable individuals, one a flashy sow with beautifully arched back and good sides, while the other was a bit straight on top but very long both in body and underline.

One outstanding difference between the two sows was udder development. The first sow carried but nine teats, one blind, with the front pair placed nearly at the middle of her belly. The other carried twelve prominent teats, well developed, all well spaced and well placed. You can readily see why one sow was more valuable than the other, assuming that both should farrow ten or more pigs.

Yet, out of the 95 student judges, coached by livestock professors, less than 15 made adequate reference to udder development and brood-sow qualities in giving reasons on that ring of sows. Possibly several had noted the difference but forgot to mention it when the time came. However, too many of them were thinking and talking just "hogs" instead of "breeding sows."

Years ago Professor Henry reported that it requires 293 pounds of feed for 100 pounds of gain on pigs going from 15 pounds to 50 pounds in weight, whereas it takes 400 pounds of feed for 100 pounds gain on pigs going from 50 pounds to 100 pounds each. Pigs are suckling most of the time while going from 15 pounds to 50 pounds in weight. They get their feed in the form of milk and the mother must have constitution and digestive capacity in order to supply to the mammary glands the nutriment from which milk is secreted.

Has any one seen a ton litter, the dam of which was not a good sucker?

Feeding Veal Calves.

For the first two weeks the calf should be fed three times daily. During the first week it should receive eight to ten pounds of milk a day and during the second week ten to twelve pounds a day. Beginning with the third week, milk and grain supplement, or skim-milk substitute and grain supplement, can gradually replace whole milk. By the end of the third or fourth week, therefore, according to the size and vigor of the calf, the whole milk can be omitted from the feed. The amount of skim-milk can gradually be increased to 16 or 18 pounds daily.

The grain is best fed dry, beginning with a handful after feeding the milk. When the calf is one month old and is being fed entirely on skim-milk, or skim-milk substitute, clover hay and grain, the amount of grain can be one-half pound daily. At the end of two months it can be one pound, and at the end of three months two pounds daily. No further increase is necessary until the calf is six months old. A good grain mixture consists of 100 pounds of cornmeal, 100 pounds of ground oats, 100 pounds of wheat bran, 50 pounds of linseed-oilmeal, and eight pounds of blood flour.

If the supply of skim-milk is limited, various substitutes can be employed after the calf is 30 days old. Commercial calf-meals give fair results, and vigorous calves result from their use without milk after the calves are four weeks old. A home-made calf-meal can be made of equal parts by weight of hominy meal, red dog flour, linseed-oilmeal and blood flour. It is prepared by stirring one pound into seven pounds of water at a temperature of 145 deg. F. and allowing the whole mixture to cool to 90 deg. F.

Storage of Ice.

The saving of a few gallons of cream makes the storage of ice well worth while. Cream handled under cool conditions will grade higher than cream not cooled.

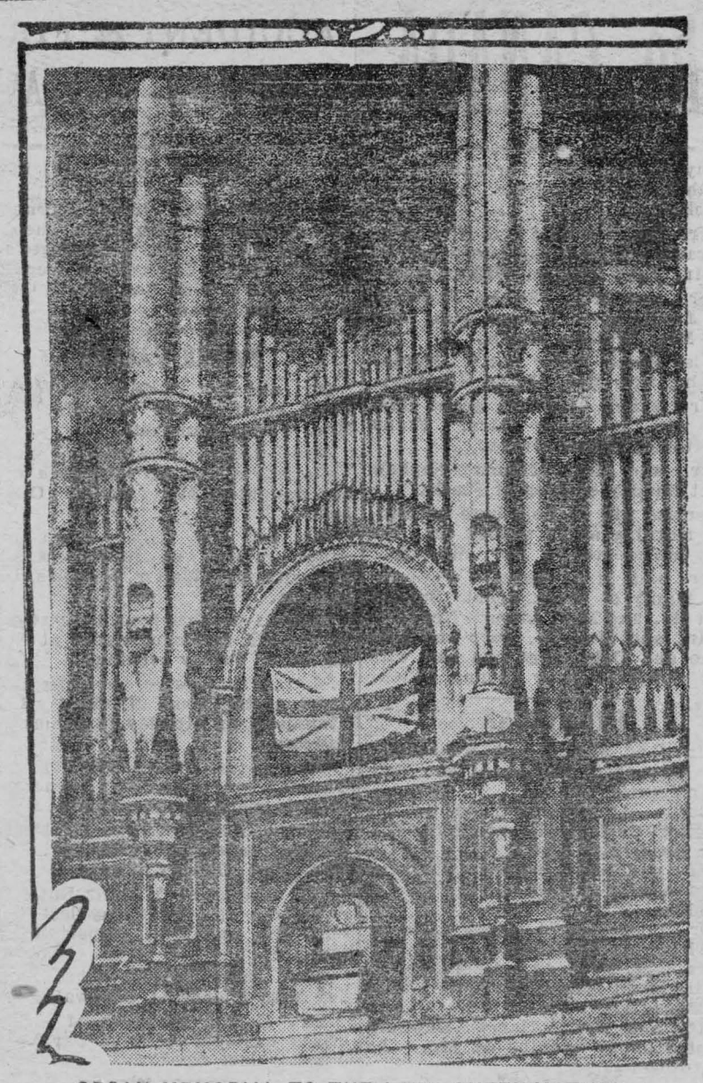

Success in storage depends upon the following conditions:

1. The ice must be secured from a clean body of water.
2. The ice cakes should be cut all of a size.
3. Store the ice on a cold day, when everything freezes dry. It is easier to handle and keeps better.
4. Pack the cakes closely, fill cracks with crushed ice.
5. Use at least 12 inches of sawdust beneath, on the sides and above the mass.
6. Provide good circulation for air in the building.
7. See that the foundation is well drained and that the walls are reasonably tight.
8. When removing ice for use, cover in again with dry sawdust.
9. Store in a location that is naturally cool.

A Bathroom Substitute.

Not liking a washstand in our bedroom we emptied a large clothes press which was located close to our bedroom. A large washstand, a bureau, a large jar for waste water, a box of bath towels, a large tub and a painted floor covered with a big washable rug, furnished it comfortably. As we have no bathroom we can bathe and spatter all we wish and keep our sleeping rooms free from disorder. We could not do without it now.—F. R.

Weeds are killed easiest before they are sown. In other words, sow clean seed. Home-grown seed should be run through a seed-cleaner to take out weed seeds. You can take most of 'em out of the seed grain that way.

ORGAN MEMORIAL TO THE LATE QUEEN-MOTHER

King George has approved the plan to preserve as a memorial to Queen Alexandra the beautiful organ in her former home, Sandringham Palace. The work of restoration is now in progress.

New Ways to Serve Oranges.

Orange conserve is made with six oranges, four cupfuls of sliced rhubarb or cranberries, one lemon, one cupful of seeded raisins, four cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of walnut meats broken into pieces. Grate the rind from the oranges and lemon. Cut the pulp in slices, discarding the white membrane and the seeds. If sliced rhubarb is used place it in a colander and pour boiling water over it, then drain thoroughly. If cranberries are used, cut them in halves, place in a colander and run cold water over them to remove as many seeds as possible. Mix the fruits, grated rind, sugar and raisins. The fruits and raisins may be chopped or cut into pieces. Cook slowly until thick, then add nuts. Cook five minutes after adding nuts and pour into sterilized glasses. Cool and seal with paraffin just as you would seal canned fruit.

Orange Jelly requires six oranges, three lemons, cold water, sugar. Cut the oranges and lemons in paper-thin slices with a sharp knife, cutting through pulp and rind and discarding seeds. Measure, and to each cupful of the mixture add three cupfuls of water. Bring to the boiling point quickly and boil vigorously for one hour. Pour off all the clear liquid and measure, and to each cupful of liquid allow one cupful of sugar. Boil until it jells when a little is dropped on a cold dish. Pour into sterilized glasses and when cold and firm seal with paraffin. The remaining liquid that is not clear can be made into a second quality of jelly. Do not throw this liquid away.

Orange Puffs are a novelty. To make, sift into a mixing bowl: One and one-quarter cupfuls of pastry flour, one-half cupful of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of baking-powder, one-quarter teaspoonful of salt. Add one-half cupful of milk mixed with two egg yolks, one tablespoonful of butter (melted) and one-half teaspoonful of grated orange-rind. Beat two minutes, pour into six greased muffin tins and bake 25 minutes at 250 deg. F. Serve hot with orange puff sauce.

Orange Puff Sauce: Put two egg whites in a bowl with a few grains of salt and beat until very stiff; add slowly (while beating constantly) two-thirds cupful of powdered sugar, juice of one orange and juice of one-half a lemon. Serve as soon as possible, as the sauce will separate if it stands.

MONO AND POLY

BY FRANK BELLEW.

"Words—words—words."—Hamlet.

Where I live, in the State of Orthography, we have two neighbors—one called Mono Syllable, and the other, Poly Syllable. We call them Mono and Poly for short.

They are both very nice people in their way, but Mono is the general favorite, particularly among the children, because they always understand what she means; whereas Polly bothers them dreadfully with her big words and grand ways.

Mono, who comes from the North, is quite small, with light hair and blue eyes, but Poly—who comes from the South—is large and tall, with black hair and dark eyes.

Some of the old folks are very fond of Poly and associate a great deal with her, but the children look scared when they see her coming, and run off, and play and romp and have fun with Mono, for Mono is very fond of fun, while Poly prefers ratiocination—as she calls it—or, at most, brings down her dignity to enjoy a little humor.

Now, just to show the difference between the two—when the children are playing with their little pets, Poly will come striding along and say that one of them (the pets) belongs to the Feline species, and is carnivorous, whereas Mono will call it a cat, and say it eats meat, and they all know what she means. Another pet, Poly will say, belongs to the canine species, Mono calls it a dog.

Poly tells the children that their candy has saccharine properties, Mono says it is sweet. Poly will draw the attention of Tommy Tidy to some oleaginous matter on his apparel, and Mono will tell him there is a grease-spot on his vest.

They both mean the same thing, but every one can understand Mono; whereas only a few of the old folks understand Poly, and many of the best and most learned among them do not like too much of her company.

I do not mean to say that Poly Syllable is not a very good and useful person. No, she has done great service in the world, and I want you to get acquainted with her, so that when you find yourself in the company with which she mixes, and read the books she writes, you may understand them.

Still, stick to little Mono as your general companion in the ordinary walks of life.

If, when you grow up to be a man, you wish to become a doctor, or a minister, or a lawyer, or a chemist, you will find Poly a very useful—yes, a very necessary—friend.

Now, I have no doubt that, knowing as little as you do of Poly, and what a good, sensible creature she is, you would be just as much frightened of her as Tommy Tidy was the other day, if you were to meet her under the same circumstances. I will tell you how it was.

I was walking down the road, with little Mono, past Squire Richman's barn, when we came suddenly upon Tommy Tidy and Poly Syllable.

Tommy was seated on a rock by the roadside, with an apple in his hand, and crying, his clothes somewhat torn, and his hair all over his wet eyes and red nose.

Poly was standing up, looking very much puzzled and shaking her finger at him.

"I have been endeavoring," she said, "to explain to this juvenile my conjecture that his paternal relative would castigate him severely, if my hypothesis is correct, that he has been purloining the pomological possessions of the opulent agriculturist proprietor of this repository!"

"Boo-oo-oo!" whimpered Tommy.

"Oh, I will ask him!" said Mono. "Now, look here, Tommy Tidy! Miss Poly says this: 'I have been trying to explain to this youth that I think his father would give him a bad beating if my guess is right that he has been stealing apples out of this rich farmer's barn.'"

Tommy's face lighted up.

"I guess my father won't beat me, for I guess he gave me the apple hisself, and I guess I just fell over a stone, and I guess she don't know what she's talking about!"

And Tommy Tidy ran off, laughing and skipping and biting the red apple all the way down the road.

WHAT DO YOUR BOYS AND GIRLS READ?

BY MRS. WILL RATCLIFFE.

It is high time that Canadian parents should be alarmed at the amount of trash, in the form of sex literature, that is falling into the hands of their boys and girls. Filth from across the border flows into our Canadian homes to wreck our Canadian youth. A generation ago, we were troubled over the effect that the dime novel had upon our boys. We were grief-stricken when they held up the officials of a bank and escaped with the booty, not for the sake of the money, but to get the thrills that accompany a hold-up, be it an individual, a house or a railroad train. There can be no question that the literature of that period was responsible for the downfall of many a mother's dearer-than-life son.

To a great extent, this detective blood-and-thunder stuff has seen its day. It is supplanted by the sex story that seems to be taking the reading world by storm. The harvest of the former literature was the loss of property, freedom and life; of the latter something far more valuable, the good name and morals of our young people.

What a people read, that they are; and, to see where we are headed, one has but to look through the American magazines of so-called "life stories," published by concerns which know that their publications supply the demand of a class of people who are moral lepers; the concerns that, for the love of money, place in the hands of the young, stories that are not true to life (though so claimed), stories that will lead youth astray much more certainly than the detective story.

THE SCARLET LETTER.

Since the dawn of civilization, down to the present time, a woman who is marked by the scarlet letter may live so that she will regain the respect of good men and women, but the door to the social world is eternally closed to her, and the black spot on her name can by no means be erased. No man, unless he be her inferior in morals and intellect, will ever take her as a wife.

It is not right for the woman alone to be placed beyond the pale of society, while the same society closes its eyes to the past of the man who has been her companion in wrong-doing; but such is the case. We can not change it. Woman, like a used postage stamp, once inked, is done for, and any writer who preaches otherwise lures the innocent into a life like that of the leper, who may be cured but is so disfigured as to be eternally shunned.

The publishers of these magazines manage to get their publications through the mail, permitting their writers to go just as far as they please in writing of the things that men and women have always held sacred, just so they include a little preachment and say that these things are wrong. They stop right at the edge of vulgarity and many of ther hardly stop there.

After years of observation, we know that the influence of such literature is bad, but what can we do when the publishers keep within the law? When we tell a child not to read a certain book, that the book is bad, we right there plant a desire in that mind to see for itself what we term "bad."

GOOD BOOKS ARE FRIENDS.

We want to cultivate a love of reading in our young people. Books can be friends, safeguards, companions, educators. They open up another world to us, enriching the mind. But there must be supervision over the books and magazines which come into the home, and there must be no dearth of what we know to be good reading. There is an inexhaustible supply of wholesome fiction and interesting books on history, travel, biography and adventure, and if this be supplied, our boys and girls will be trained to appreciate the true and sense that which is false.

Talk it over, parents. Realize the dangers which surround your children, and protect them with an invisible wall built by training them to be clean-minded, by informing them of the results of wrong-doing, and by supplying them with opportunities for normal pleasures and food for the mind as well as the body. Good magazines cost less than broken hearts. Good lights by which they can read and good books are better than empty homes. In these days of traveling libraries, no one need starve for good reading.

Children's Foods.

Cereals best suited to a child's diet are rolled oats, rolled wheat, wheatina, cream of wheat, farine, hominy, cornmeal, pearl barley. All these are cooked four hours in a double boiler and served with milk.

Prepared cereals, such as cornflakes or shredded wheat, are expensive in comparison with the cooked cereals.

Fruits are good for children and should be given daily—fresh apples, peaches, pears oranges and grapes; or stewed fruits such as prunes, apples, rhubarb, apricots, peaches, pears, figs, dried peaches or dates.

Vegetables are just as important. Like fruits, they should be given daily. As well as supplying valuable mineral matter, vitamines, carbohydrates and bulk, they lend variety to the meals. Those most suitable for children are: beets, carrots, onions, cooked celery, spinach, peas, string beans, asparagus, squash, marrow, chard, lima beans and lettuce (cooked). Spinach is particularly valuable on account of the iron which it contains.

If care and thought are taken, food can be easily selected which will contain adequate amounts of mineral matter and vitamines in combination with protein, fat and carbohydrate.

Mineral matter and vitamines are contained chiefly in fruits, vegetables, eggs and milk, and—providing these are given their proper place in the diet—there should be no deficiency on that score. With these, too, the necessary bulk is supplied to keep the intestines in condition. Bran in cereal or muffins and whole wheat bread also are excellent means of adding bulk to the diet.

Hints Worth Taking.

A pinch of soda added to any boiled syrup will keep it from crystallizing. A teaspoon of vinegar added to home-made syrup will keep it from candying after it stands.

A teaspoon of vinegar beaten into boiled frosting will prevent it from being brittle or breaking when cut.

After boiling salt beef, leave two or three carrots in the liquid until cold. The carrots will absorb the salt and the liquor can be used for soups.

Dissolve the sugar used in making fried cake, in milk, and they will not absorb the grease as readily.

High Courage.

Of a mother, a simple but charming woman who died and left several small children, a friend wrote this touching tribute: "I never knew a braver woman. To face life's little things dauntlessly, to finish the day's job in spite of weariness, to answer illness with a jest and to fight back pain for the sake of husband and children is the highest form of courage. In certain moods common, everyday work seems rather useless, but after all it is the pushing and pulling of simple men and women that make civilization."

Alfalfa hay is one of the best and cheapest feeds for brood sows in winter. Let the sows eat right from the stack if that is the handiest way. Another good way is to feed it in a rack.

THE FASHIONABLE FLARE.

Fine wool twill fashions this frock with the front of the skirt flaring in the dashing new manner. Very simple and very chic are the lines of this youthful frock, which may be worn successfully for any day-time occasion. The plain back extends over the shoulder at the front in yoke effect, to which the front is slightly gathered. Small, round buttons fastening with loops of braid make an attractive closing for the convertible collar, which is worn buttoned close to the neck. The lower section of the full sleeves is banded with a handsome oriental trimming, a narrower width being used for the collar. The diagram pictures the simple design of No. 1222, which is in sizes 16, 18 and 20 years (34, 36 and 38 inches bust). Size 18 years (36 bust) requires 4⅝ yards of 36-inch, or 4¼ yards of 40-inch material. Price 20 cents.

Our Fashion Book, illustrating the newest and most practical styles, will be of interest to every home dressmaker. Price of the book 10 cents the copy.

ANTHRACITE COAL STRIKE SETTLED

A despatch from Philadelphia says:—The longest and most costly strike in the history of the anthracite industry was settled on Friday. The 158,000 mine workers who have been on strike since Sept. 1, 1925, returned to work Wednesday, following ratification of the terms of the new contract by a tri-district convention of miners on Tuesday morning. Normal production of hard coal will be reached in three or four weeks.

Here are the terms on which the settlement was made:

Immediate resumption of work on a 4½-year ,contract ending Aug. 31 1930, at the scale of wages prevailing when the last contract expired.

Provision for revision or modification of the agreement once a year, beginning Jan. 1, 1927, on the request of either side.

DISCOVERED IN SHACK WITH HEAD CRUSHED

Robbery Believed Motive of Crime at Porquis Junction.

A despatch from Cobalt says:—Provincial police officers of the Northern district are confronted with another murder mystery case. Thursday night in a shack at Porquis Junction the body of John Jones, about forty-eight years of age, and a blacksmith by trade, was found by the dead man's son, the head having been smashed in by some instrument not yet determined or found.

Jones had not been noticed about his place for several days but his absence occasioned no alarm among the neighbors. His son, going up from Vimy Ridge, near Matheson, had to force open the door of the small building and found his father dead in the room. Robbery is considered the likely motive, but the alleged murderer is believed to have had three or four days start on the police and there is no clue to the crime yet.

Jones lived in a shack at the rear of his blacksmith shop and he had made his home at Porquis Junction for some years past. Coroner Tucker, of Cochrane, opened an inquest Friday, but adjourned the hearing pending further investigation of the case by provincial police.

Official Figures for Last 12 Years Show Total of $163,-470,553 in Cash and Effects.

A despatch from Ottawa says:—United States citizens settling in Canada during the past 12 years brought with them wealth in cash and effects totalling 163,470,553.

In the statement for the last fiscal year of the Dept. of Immigration and Colonization, figures are given for the past 12 fiscal years. The biggest year was that of 1912-13, when settlers from the United States brought $25,-795,545 to the Dominion. The lowest year was that of 1915-16, when the total was $6,005,049. In the last fiscal year it was $6,277,122.

In the last 14 years Michigan sent more of its citizens to become Canadians than any other State. Settlers from Michigan in that period totalled 87,107; from Minnesota there were 86,922 migrants to Canada; from Massachusettes 77,750; from Washington 75,466; from New York 74,067, and from North Dakota 51,402. The other States vary from 30,000 to a few hundreds.

CAPTAIN'S LIFE SAVED BY SMALLNESS OF HOLE

Wave Sweeps Bridge and Leaves Officer Dangling Half Overboard.

A despatch from St. John, N.B. says:—Saved from being washed overboard from the bridge of his ship 50 feet above the water line only by the narrowness of a hole through which a huge wave thrust him, feet foremost, Captain Pedersen of the Laval County finally extricated himself as the water, which had literally filled the bridge deck, receded. The vessel docked here on Friday, after being 30 days out from the liver Tyne, a trip which the Laval County usually does in 14 days.

Referring to his narrow escape, the Captain said he was on the bridge with three other men endeavoring to secure his bearings by the sun when a tremendous wave towered high above the bridge and broke upon the ship. The officer was whirled across the bridge and buried in tons of water.

For nearly half a minute the water filled the bridge deck until the outlets were able to drain it off. During this time the Captain was mostly under water. When finally he was able to get his head above the water his legs were projecting through a hole that had been torn in the side of the bridge.

INFERIORITY COMPLEX ALLEGED OF CANADIANS

Inclined to Compare Dominion With U.S., Which is in More Advanced Stage of Development.

New York, Feb. 14.—Gentle criticism of an alleged Canadian inferiority complex was made by Dr. Henry Marshall Tory, director of the National Research Council, before the New York Canadian Club here on Saturday.

"We are always," said Dr. Tory, "making comparisons with the United States to our own disadvantage. These comparisons have given to young Canadians a sort of feeling that their own country is not quite the equivalent of other countries. I don't like to use the term 'inferiority complex,' but that is what they have. It is a kind of looking toward this country which is not wholesome."

Canadians, Dr. Tory thought, should see Canada as a young, aspiring nation, and make comparisons with other nations in the same stage of development.

Production of wheat in New Zealand is estimated at 2,460,000 hundredweight, a reduction of 460,000 hundredweight compared with the previous season.

CAPTAIN BATTLES ICE FLOES ABOVE RAPIDS

First Greeting is Telegram Announcing Death of Daughter in Brockville.

A despatch from Prescott says:—Bringing his ship safely into port after a 24-hour fight against the ice-choked north channel of the St. Lawrence River, Capt. Arnold Henry of the ferry Charles Lyon, plying between Ogdensburg, N.Y., and Prescott, Ont., received as his first greeting a telegram announcing the death of his 9-year-old daughter Irene in a Brockville hospital.

Torn between his duty to his ship and devotion to his daughter, Capt. Henry, who pilots the most powerful ice breaker in the river, elected to remain with his ship and the 12 members of his crew, who were marooned when the ferry was caught in an ice jam just above the Long Sault Rapids. Two members of the crew reached shore after a perilous trip over the broken ice-field, and brought back provisions.

After hours of tedious work in zero weather, 25 men, using saws and other ice-cutting tools, cut a channel through the 150-foot stretch of 18-inch ice between the ferry and open water. Once in open water the Charles Lyon, a 1,600-ton steel craft, worth $400,-000, crashed her way through four miles of ice-jam. Some of the cakes were 10 feet high.

The ferry carried 12 carloads of coal for ballast.

FIRING AT OFFICER MINER KILLS CHUM

Lethbridge Man is Shot in Attack on Provincial Constable.

A despatch from Lethbridge, Alta., says:—Karl Perdue, aged 23, was arrested late on Thursday and charged with murder in connection with the killing here on Thursday morning of Walter Vere, 18-year-old miner. Perdue is stated to have made a confession which will be admitted as evidence at the inquest to be held Friday. The police refuse to reveal the contents of the alleged confession.

Vere was shot and killed at 8 a.m. Thursday in what was believed to be an attempt on the life of Constable Carr of the Alberta Provincial Police. Two men called the constable to the door of his home. The constable became suspicious and grappled with the man nearest the door, whereupon his companion fired two shots from near the gate.

Both shots hit Vere and he died almost instantly. The man who fired the fatal shots made his escape and the arrest of Perdue followed an all-day search.

Art Smith, "Sky Writer," Killed While Carrying Mail

Cleveland, Feb. 14.—Art Smith, famous American "Ace" who braved death hundreds of times in daring exhibitions of stunt flying, was killed outright when the mail plane which he was driving from Chicago to New York struck a tree and crashed to the ground near Montpelier, Ohio, six miles northwest of Bryan.

Details of the accident are lacking, but it is believed he was about two miles off the regular air mail route between Chicago and Bryon when the crash occurred. His body and the mail he was carrying were burned when fire consumed the wreckage.

Smith, although only 32 years of age, was a veteran flyer. His chief claims to fame were as the originator of both "sky writing" and the "loop the loop." He was the holder of fifty-two medals.

Commission Named to Select South African Flag

London, Feb. 14.—The Daily Telegraph's Cape Town correspondent cables that a commission representative of all parties has been appointed to select a national flag for the Union of South Africa such as will, it is hoped, command general respect and approval. An early decision is expected and legislation will promptly follow. This step is an outcome of the friendly arrangement between Gen. J. B. Hertzog, Prime Minister, and Gen. J. C. Sumts, Opposition leader, last session.

FIND BODIES OF THREE IN ELMVALE RUINS

Father, Mother and Son Perished in Fire Which Destroyed Business Block.

A despatch from Barrie says:—The remains of Lawrence McWatters of Elmvale, who, with his father and mother, was burned to death in the fire which destroyed the block in which their store was situated, were discovered in the ruins Thursday morning. Only a few fragmentary bones remained to show the place in which he perished, within about ten feet of the back door, where his father's body was found, with the mother's charred corpse but a few feet away.

From the position in which the remains were found it is thought that the parents would have been saved had they not turned back at the door when they found that their son did not follow them, as they expected. The son, it is believed, must have stumbled and fallen, or been overcome by the smoke and flames when he was but a few yards from the door. The triple funeral took place Friday afternoon. Dr. Corcoran, the Coroner, after investigating the circumstances, decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

Joseph McWatters had been a resident of Elmvale for five years, moving there from Waverley, where he had a store for several years. He served two years on the Elmvale Board of Police Trustees, was a county constable, an Anglican, and an Orangeman.

Emigrants to British Colonies Now Receive Training

A despatch to London says:—An emigrants' university recently established at Mundford, Norfolk, to prepare men and women of education, character, physique and financial means for life in British overseas dominions presents a student body which is in strong contrast to most of the immigrants entering the United States, even under the present restricted American policy.

Instead of poverty-stricken and ill-trained immigrants, the British colonies demand the best blood and brawn their mother country has to offer. This demand has resulted in the establishment of the training centre in Norfolk, a certificate from which insures immediate acceptance of an immigrant by the colonial governments. Farms are provided and financial assistance given those who have passed tests for fitness.

London Goes Back to 1840 to Obtain Styles for Men

A despatch from London says:—London's well-dressed men have reached back into the 1840 period for some of their styles of 1926.

The Prince of Wales and other young Londoners who are responsible for the leading fashions have revived the black evening waistcoat, double-breasted, with heavy lapels, and cut straight at the waist line. This is made very much ofter the styles of eighty years ago, modified here and there to meet certain requirements. A new evening tailed coat with small, short lapels and close fit at the waist line, also bears resemblance to the garments of other days.

In the latest styles, however, whether for day or evening wear, men are seeking a slimness of silhouette with almost the same fervor the women have shown in recent years.

Indian Found Drunk in Snow Dies from Exposure

Chatham, Feb. 14.—Johnston Small, aged 33, an Indian, died Saturday night in the Public General Hospital from shock and blood poisoning which developed from frozen feet. Three weeks ago he was found lying intoxicated in the snow on a lonely road in Harwich Township. He was taken into custody by county police, to whom he stated he had been attending a dance. He was remanded to jail, but was immediately taken to the hospital for treatment. Two days ago it was deemed necessary to amputate one leg below the knee.

GOLD PROSPECTORS COVER 140 MILES OF BARREN LANDS BY DOG TRAIN

Hundreds of Pack-teams Are Treking Out of Hudson on Rigorous Journey to Gold Area.

A despatch from Toronto says:—The era of Canada's romance is not yet dead. That appears obvious, from the stories which are coming from the Red Lake district, the latest Canadian gold lure; and if the spectacle which is now working itself out in the heart of winter, in the district of Patricia, some hundred and forty miles from the nearest railway station, is any indication of what is yet to come, then Canada, famed for gold rushes, is in for one of the greatest rushes of its history. The latest story to come out of the North is that which was told by Major C. J. A. Cunningham-Dunlop, a mining engineer of Haileybury, who has been in the gold zone for some weeks past staking claims, and who was able to lift the curtain and show some of the scenes which are being witnessed daily in the great White North. Major Dunlop is so enthusiastic over the Red Lake district and its possibilities that he predicts that the spring will see a gold rush such as has not been known since the palmy days of the Klondike.

The Red Lake district is so far from the centres of civilization that the spectacle which it now presents has to do for the most part with the difficulties of transportation. The nearest railway station is Hudson, on the Canadian National line, and this has become the jumping-off place for the gold enthusiasts who are now daring the North in the middle of winter. Hudson, from being a small and all-but-isolated centre of population, has suddenly sprung into a place of importance, and now it is the scene of all those features of northern activity which of late have been branded as fiction and nothing more. But, according to Major Dunlop, all the scenes of romance are there, with the dog-train, the pack and the packer, the snow-shoes, the Ojibway Indian, and the general excitement which always accompanies the thought of gold.

If a person wishes to go into the Red Lake district at this time of the year, he is confronted with the problem of covering 140 miles of snow-clad North, where the thermometer thinks nothing of dropping to 35 to 40 below, where the huskies moan in the cold, where the snow whirls in blizzards over the frozen lakes, and where the forests are lashed with the gales of winter. But in spite of the difficulties, hundreds of pack-trains are being made up, and they are treking out of Hudson at the rate of from ten to twenty a day, each bound for Red Lake, where the only touch of civilization is a lone Hudson Bay Post, with a factor in charge and with a few hunters and trappers who, of late, have turned their attention to hunting for gold or packing in the belongings of the prospertors.

Major Dunlop furnished a glimpse of the difficulties along the trail, and these chiefly concerned the frost, the snow, the forest and the whims of the huskies. So far as transportation is concerned, the gold rush appears to be a case of reverting to the primitive for all forms of transportation other than that of the dog-train have failed to stand the strain of a trip from Hudson to Red Lake. The reason is to be found, not so much in the wide stretches of ice which must be covered, as in the problem of penetrating the forest, where the trails, though marked, are not such as would appeal to the average man.

Because of that, the dog has already been quoted as a premium, as the prevailing price for good dogs, when Maj. Dunlop left Hudson a few days ago was $200 each. Even so, the demand has been so keen that all the dogs in the district have been bought up, so that any person wanting to go into Red Lake must get his dogs somewhere else.

WIRE

If you have an important message to send quickly, it goes by wire.

That is just what the brain does in directing the work of the body. It sends out its messages over the greatest communicating system in the world, the nervous system.

If something goes wrong with this system the brain cannot get its full amount of force over the nerve wires and disease is the result.

CHIROPRACTIC ADJUSTMENTS

will keep your nerve wires clear.

IN MEMORIAM

Merkley—In loving memory of our dear son, Corp. Orlin Merkley, who died in France, February 1st, 1919.

Seven years have passed since he left us
With his smile and loving ways.
We'll miss him more as years roll on
As we miss him more today.

Gently the stars are shining
On his silent grave
Where lies that dear boy sleeping
The one we loved but could not save.

We often sit and think of him,
When we are all alone,
For memory is the only friend
That grief can call its own.

More and more each day we miss him
Friends may think the wound is healed
But they little know the sorrow
That lies within our hearts concealed.
Inserted by Father and Mother.
