PRESIDENT D. ALLISON RESIGNS

Members Sorry to Lose Mr. Allison Whose Efficient Services Put Fair on Sound Footing.

Community Car Asked For Western Relief

Car Will Be on C.P.R. Siding at Chesterville All Day Monday to Receive Contributions of Food and Clothing For Saskatchewan.

With a large portion of Southern Saskatchewan facing a hard winter with insufficient food and clothing, Chesterville and district has again been asked to supply relief by giving of its surplus food and clothing to those of our own people in the western province who have been the victims of crop failure for the third consecutive season.

A meeting was called for the Town Hall here Tuesday night and while the attendance was not large, those present felt that their faith in the generosity of this district would not be misplaced, and went ahead in an endeavour to organize on lies similar to last year when each school section in the neighbourhood was the unit, with all responding nobly.

At the conclusion of the annual meeting of the Bowling Club, a delegation from the association for the community car for the West asked to be heard with a view to organizing for the coming shipment to be made on Monday, October 29th.

The meeting convened under the chairmanship of G. J. Hunt who called upon A. O. Robertson to act as secretary. It was moved by Rev. R. C. Tait, seconded by C. F. Marshall, that W. A. McElroy, secretary of the Maple Leaf Colonization Bureau, be appointed organizer with power to add to the various committees.

This year the time is very short and it may be impossible to get personally in touch with those nominated for each section, as the car will be on Chesterville siding Monday, all day. Below are the names of those expected to take charge in their neighbourhoods, and if those who will give something: potatoes, vegetables, fruit or clothing, will get in touch right away with their representative, the thing will go over with a bang.

The canvassers for the following districts or school sections were appointed:

C. T. McIntosh, Forward Headline.
A. Carruthers, Nation Valley.
H. J .Kittle, The Boyne
C. F. Marselis, Dunbar.
Oscar Beckstead, Elma.
Wallace Gallinger, Gallingertown.
Earl Beckstead, Beckstead.
Vince Coyne, Connaught.
Howard Beckstead, Grantley.
Earl Nephew, Goldfield.
D. G. Hutt, Maple Ridge.
Ed. Carroll, Limerick.
W. W. Henderson, Orchardside.
H. Johnston, Frood School.
Wm Marcellus, Ninth School.
W. B. Allison, Bethune Bush.
Durham Wells, Hoasic.
Ken. Hummel, Colquhoun.
The Women's Institute, W. H. Casselman, Bernard Coyne and George Servage, Chesterville village.

Mr. Hunt thanked the bowlers for their willingness to co-operate with the association to see that the needy in the West receive such articles of clothing and vegetables as would lessen their hardships.

Most barns, root cellars and storehouses in this district are full to overflowing this year after a bountiful harvest, and a car loaded to the roof should testify again that Chesterville and district never fails its friends.

All the churches co-operate in the giving and there is no question of creed or colour in the distribution at the destination, as many thankful letters received last year testified.

Served Sunday School 40 Years as Teacher

Late Miss Bertha Merkley Honoured in Death Sunday Afternoon—Died in Civic Hospital Friday After Long Illness.

A very fine tribute to the memory of Miss Bertha Merkley, whose death occurred on Friday in the Civic Hospital, Ottawa, was paid on Sunday afternoon by many friends and relatives who attended the funeral held from her late residence to Trinity United Church. Rev. R. C. Tait, assisted by Rev. John MacKay of Winchester, conducted a very solemn and impressive service and brought a hope to all who mourn.

Miss Merkley was the daughter of the late Jacob Merkley and his wife, the late Anna Cord, and was born on the Merkley Homstead just southwest of Chesterville. Her entire life was spent in this community. A woman of deep and vital faith and marked executive ability, she contributed unstintingly of her time and talents, rendering magnificent service and splendid leadership in the different organizations of her church and also in community welfare work. She was a member of the Ladies' Aid and gave 40 years of service as teacher in the Sunday school. At the time of her death she was teacher of the Philathea Bible Class. She was a life member of the Woman's Missionary Society and served four years as president, retiring from this office in 1933 when she became acting treasurer, which office she held at the time of her demise. She was also an enthusiastic member of the Oxford Group.

Sixty women, members representing the Women's Missionary auxiliary and Philathea Bible Class, formed a guard of honour at the church and many beautiful floral offerings were received as well as messages of sympathy from friends in near and distant points attesting to the high esteem in which Miss Merkley was held

The deepest sympathy goes out to the surviving brothers and sisters:—Mr. Wilburn A. Merkley, Buffalo, N.Y.; Dr. Stanley Merkley, Melfort, Sask.; Mrs. T. O. Keyes, Winchester; Mrs. Elmer Grant, Melfort, Sask.; Mrs. A. A. Murphy, Saskatoon, Sask.; Mr. Harry Merkley, New Westminster, B.C.; Dr. Leonard Merkley, Winnipeg, Man., and Mrs. Cecil Fulton, Calgary, Alta.

The pall bearers were: Parnham Allison, Wesley Fulton, Charles Graham and Fred Forward.

John J. MacMillan, of Grantley, a well-known and respected resident of that district passed away at the home of his son, John E. McMillan, on Sunday night.

Cornwall Boy Is Killed In Cotton Mill Elevator

16-Year-Old Labourer Meets Tragic Death in Elevator Shaft.—Caught Beneath Descending Lift and Neck Is Broken.

Cornwall, October 22nd. — Roma Seguin, 16, was killed instantly at the Cornwall mill of the Canadian Cottons, Limited, here to-day, when he was caught beneath a descending elevator.

Seguin had been employed at the Dundas Mill of the Cotton Company since Monday last. To-day a foreman sent him to the spool department of the Canada mill to obtain certain supplies and Seguin went by mistake to the beaming department. Although he had been warned against using the freight lifts, he attempted to operate an elevator to carry him to the third floor of the building. The elevator was up at the time and Seguin, evidently ignorant of the method of operating it, crawled beneath the locked safety gate into the shaft. He released the elevator to lower it and, as he did so, the steel trap door beneath his feet opened, hurling him to one side in such a manner that his head was caught between the edge of the door and the bottom of the elevator platform, snapping his spine.

There were no witnesses to the accident. When a workman discovered the body a few minutes later, mechanics were compelled to tear out a wooden partition and raise the elevator by hand in order to release Seguin. The boy was dead when Dr. A. R Alguire arrived.

Seguin was an orphan.

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

In the production of wheat in 1933, Canada was in the eighth position with 269,729,000 bushels, being exceeded by Russia, China, the United States, British India, France, Italy, and the Argentine. In the export of wheat in 1933 the Dominion led the world.

Quality in dressed poultry depends almost entirely upon the manner in which a bird has been fed or finished in preparation for market. Milkfed is a term applied to birds which have been finished through feeding in crates or pens on a ration of finely ground grains and milk This process increases the proportion and flavour of edible material.

Soybeans More Popular.

The soybean gives every indication of becoming a valuable addition to the field crops of Ontario. Its possibilities are being actively investigated in other provinces too but production at present is limited almost entirely to this province. The acreage has grown from 1.000 in 1929 to 15,000 at present, which indicates the increasing interest in the soybean as a field crop. Present production is chiefly for seed, which, bing extremely rich in protein and oil, has a high commercial value. The industrial uses for which the soybean can be utilized are numerous The seed also has considerable value on the farm for livestock feeding, and since the soybean plant itself possesses a highly nutritive value for fodder, it is quite possible that as production increases the crop may find its greatest use on the farm rather than in industry.

Horse-Shoe Pitching Championships.

Horseshoe pitching the typical old farm sport, has lost none of its grip on rural Ontario and information from local clubs reaching the Royal Winter Fair point to a higher level of attainment and keener interest in the sport than most old players can recall. Again the championships of Canada are to be decided during the last four days of the Royal Winter Fair, November 26-29. These championships, singles and doubles, are officially recognized competitions sanctioned by the Dominion of Canada Horsehoe Pitchers' Association. They are held under the auspices of the Royal Winter Fair itself and will be conducted by a special committee.

The Open Singles Championship is for the Diamond Calk Horseshoe trophy, with four money prizes. The Champion Doubles is for the T. A. Murphy, M.P.P., challenge trophy, and four money prizes.

In addition, there are class B Singles and Doubles open to non-winners in either champion or class B. divisions. Trophies are held for one year and the rules of the Dominion of Canada Horseshoe Pitchers' Association govern competitions, the shoes to conform with specifications in rule 8. Entries in the horseshoe contests must be in the hands of the Manager, Royal Winter Fair, 217 Bay street, Toronto, on November 14th.

Putting Bees Away for the Winter.

Bees that are to be wintered in cellar or dug-out should be carried in immediately after the last good cleansing flight they are likely to get. At the Central Experimental Farm this is usually during the first week in November.

The last two weeks in October is the best time to clean up the garden to reduce insect infestation. The Department advises burning all leaves, refuse, weeds, fallen fruit and other material after being raked up, and then ploughing or digging the soil deeply. Fences, arbours and trellises should be brushed with a corn broom.

Proper Ration Needed.

A hen may lay a few eggs early in the spring without receiving much feed or attention or she may lay at the end of the season when feed may be picked up in the fields, but the hen has not yet been developed that will lay without the proper ration during the fall and winter months. A good mash is important if the hens are to lay, and it should be before the birds all the time. If any one of the necessary elements required for the making of eggs is absent, production is impaired. Pullets require a little different mash than the old hens and it is a mistake to house them together and have them feed from the same hopper. Home-grown feeds with the addition of some purchased concentrates may be mixed, or a commercial mash may be purchased that will supply the necessary ingredients to the bird. Chickens will pay dividends if properly housed and given the right rations.

Royal Winter Fair.

The Royal Winter Fair is being held November 21st to 29th, at the Royal Coliseum and Winter Fair buildings, Toronto. Its objects are the promotion of Canada's basic industry, to link the nine provinces in common interests, and to set high national standards for farm products. The Royal Shows for horses, cattle, sheep, swine, dogs, cats, poultry and pet stock, fruit, flowers, seed and grains are large and specialized shows for each. The assembly of so much excellence under one roof gives the Royal a distinctiveness not matched anywhere else in the world.

British Apple Market.

Mr. Andrew Fulton, overseas representative, reports that since arriving in England a few weeks ago, he has found the pricipal markets all heavily loaded with cheap English apples, with the result that ordinary quality Canadian apples are making comparatively low prices. On the other hand, Ontario dessert apples of outstanding quality and colour are meeting a good demand in Glasgow, Liverpool and the south of England. While seeing no hope for cooking apples or any variety short of colour making satisfactory prices before the New Year, Mr. Fulton is favourably impressed with the immediate prospects for red dessert apples, providing that values ranging from 22 to 24 shillings are sufficiently remunerative to the shippers as he cannot see higher prices in sight for a while. In other words, if shippers can make sales in Ontario for such varieties as Snows, Scarlets and McIntosh, at about $3.50 to $4.00 a barrell f.o.b. car, then it looks like good business to sell locally.

He advises Ontario shippers to place such varieties as Baldwins, Ganos, Ben Davis, Greenings and Starks, with shredded oil paper and place them in cold storage until they are required after the New Year. There is no doubt that good quality apples are going to be scarce and will make good values before the season is finished.

CANADA DONATES BUFFALO TO POLAND'S NATIONAL PARK

Ottawa.—Canada's gift of four buffalo will leave the Buffalo National Park, Alberta, very early next month, the department of interior officials stated here yesterday. The shipment will be destined for Warsaw to be placed in one of the national parks of Poland.

The present of the Canadian government follows representation by Polish citizens in Canada who are arranging to pay, personally, the cost of transportation.

The English apple crop is the largest in many years, the quality is generally very good, though practically every market has more than its share of inferior grades. Values are extremely low, a fact that is influencing the price of coloured Canadian apples.

Ontario Bartletts have met an unfavourable market. The pears have landed in excellent condition, but unfortunately many of them are very small this season, with the result that the market has not been as good as if they had been larger. English pears are quite plentiful, as well as English plums.

Employer: "Now don't be inquisitive. I discharged my last boy for that."

New Boy: "Yes, sir; wot was his name and wot did you pay him and wot was he inquisitive about?"

$300 Is Figure Charged For Small Hotel Licenses

High License Fees Announced by the Liquor Control Board—Applications November 1st.

Toronto, Oct. 22nd.—Application forms for renewal of hotel wine and beer authorities have been sent by the Ontario Liquor Control Board.

It was said the nominal cost for an authority in a small hotel will be $300 for the fiscal year beginning on November 1st, but in addition there will be a surcharge on the amount of beer and wine purchased. In the case of the largest hotels in Toronto it was believed this figure may bring the cost up to $10,000.

"I'm very sorry you don't like my cakes," said the tea-shop proprietress, haughtily, "but I can assure you this business has been built up almost entirely on my cookery!"

"I don't doubt it, madam," said the customer. "With a few more buns like these you could build a house!"

An Irishman's attic took fire, and his wife, running for the nearest available water, seized the kettle from the fireplace. On her way up the stairs she was met by Paddy. He stared aghast at the kettle in her hand.

"Mrs. O'Grady," he said, sadly, "but it's a regular fool ye are an' all. Fancy trying to put out a fire with hotwater!"

London to Australia In Less Than Three Days

British Airmen Capture $50,000 Purse And Smash Every Record For 11,300-Mile Flight to Melbourne Centennial Celebrations.

Melbourne, Australia, Oct. 23rd.—Flight-Lieut. C. W. A. Scott and Campbell Black, daring British aviators, landed here this afternoon at 3.33 p.m. (Melbourne time) to complete one of the greatest flights in history.

First in the London-Melbourne air derby they had broken all records on the 11,300-mile flight half way round the world. Their total elapsed time since they roared away with 20 other 'planes in the dawn Saturday from Mildenhall aerodrome outside London was officially computed at 71 hours and three minutes. (Melbourne is 15 hours ahead of Eastern Standard Time)

The cheers of the huge crowd assembled at Flemington course track to greet them were scarcely heard, so deafened were they by the din of the motors of their fleet de Haviland Comet 'plane. Burly Scott and his dapper co-pilot left their 'plane, weary but happy at their unprecedented achievement.

They were far in the lead of the great air derby and easy winners of the $50,000 purse Still winging over northern Australia were the second-place team of K. D. Parmentier and J. J. Moll, only other competitors to reach the island continent so far.

The last stages of the great derby, from Singapore to Melbourne, proved the toughest of all for Scott and Black. They overcame weariness, an engine which gave out at times and intermittent storms to make a driving finish.

Flying over the Timor Sea, approaching Darwin, for a time it appeared as if their amazing exploit would not be accomplished. They limped into Darwin with only one of the motors functioning.

Between Darwin and Charleville, the second last leg of the flight, they fought against the continued handicap of a balky motor, only five out of six cylinders functioning. Mechanics worked feverishly to adjust the motors there and the fliers took off after a stop of two hours and 20 minutes.

Their unofficial elapsed time, just under three days, was far ahead of all previous flights from London to Melbourne. At Darwin they had shattered the record for the England-Australia flight by four days and 15 hours.

Premier Bennett Lays Cornerstone New $6000,000 Women's Hospital

Eloquently describing the institution as a memorial to the faith, courage and hope of the women of Canada, Premier Bennett laid the cornerstone of the new Women's College Hospital at Surrey Place and Grenville street, Toronto, on Saturday afternoon.

Before an audience of 400 people, including some of the most distinguished of Toronto's citizens, Mr. Bennett marked his return from Europe by paying a warm tribute to the band of women who had brought the women's hospital from a one-bed "ward" at 18 Seaton street in 1910 to the ten-storey $600,000 edifice now under construction.

Mr. Bennett, looking the picture of health after his six weeks' journey overseas, remarked on the pleasure he felt in being permitted thus to pay his respects to the women of Canada. No one who had read of the long, persistent fight made by women to gain admittance to the medical profession could be other than impressed.

HOBBLEDEHOY.

"HOBBLEDEHOY" is an old word that is used to describe the awkward youth who is neither man nor boy. It is for the hobbledehoys that we would ask some consideration because for them, their awkwardness is not at all amusing; it is a trying state of self-consciousness.

The child does not grow slowly and steadily into his adult size. There are periods when growth is particularly rapid. The first year of life sees the average child increase his weight threefold. At no other period of life is there such a tremendous rate of increase in weight. During adolescence, there is another spurt leading to a remarkable increase in both height and weight. This period of rapid growth during adolescence occurs earlier in girls than in boys, the girl attaining her full growth at an earlier age than the boy. It is because of this rapid growth and increase in strength which is proportionately greather than the increase in size that the adolescent frequently becomes clumsy and awkward. Hands and feet seem, for a time to be out of proportion and difficult to control.

Furthermore, it is at this age that pimples and blackheads most commonly appear to add to the discomfort of the adolescent, who is, perhaps for the first time, conscious of personal appearance and who is thus rendered unhappy by a combination of awkwardness and a bad complexion.

Throughout life, the child requires from his parents a sympathetic understanding of his problems. Failing that, he withdraws into himself—a most unhealthy thing for him to do, or he fights back in a self-assertive manner. The latter is a much more healthy response, although it is apt to be resented by his parents and others.

Help can be given the child through this period by not drawing attention to his awkwardness. For example, he should never be called clumsy, and his size and his actions should be ignored. Clothing which fits, rather than clothes which have been outgrown, will help. It should also be explained to him that the overactive oil gland in his skin which causes pimples is normal to his age and that the condition will respond to treatment and most likely correct itself in a few years. He should be praised for his successes instead of having his failures constantly pointed out. He should be encouraged to have plenty of rest, to keep his skin clean by frequent bathing, and to eat a balanced diet, avoiding an excess of sweets.

Told They Have Solution of Problem in Own Hands

Premier Hepburn Advises Prohibition Deputation They Could Promote Vote to Stop Sale of Beer.

Toronto. — Premier Hepburn told Rev. Ben Spence and a deputation of prohibitions from Peel, Perth and Huron counties they had the solution of the liquor problem of those counties in their own hands, Saturday. The delegation sought the Premier's co-operation in a move to prohibit the sale of beer and wine in those areas, but Mr. Hepburn said it could promote a vote in the three counties that would prohibit granting authorities under terms of the Ontario Liquor Control Act.

NO DAMAGES FOR NEGLIGENCE.

In an action tried before a Middlesex jury the other day, in which damages for injuries were asked, a verdict was given that will have a widespread effect on all cases of compensation for injuries suffered. Suit was entered against the Melbourne Agricultural Society by a father on behalf of his son, 10 years old, who was injured on the racetrack at the fair. In spite of warnings given to keep off the track through a loudspeaker he persisted in getting into the zone of danger, with the result that he was knocked down by a racehorse, receiving injuries to his knee.

The jury deliberated on the case and found that the boy had suffered on account of his own carelessness and, hence, was not entitled to damages.

The significance of the verdict is that it throws the responsibility on people themselves for exercising reasonable caution. If they are careless and negligent they cannot expect to collect damages on the ground that the latter are responsible for their safety. It is possible that if this principle were pressed more energetically there would be fewer accidents.

WOLVES NEAR BELLEVILLE.

The township of Tyendinaga, east of Belleville, is overrun with wolves. Farmers are losing their sheep and their hens, and it is probably due to the prowling of these animals that partridge and pheasants have become so scarce in the township as to be so noticeable.

One farmer, back of Melrose, which by the way is not more than three miles north of Highway No. 2, states that his flock of sheep was completely wiped out recently and that he saw with his own eyes 15 wolves in his field. Another farmer caught wolves killing his hens and he managed to shoot one of the animals.

All over the township the farmers are out gunning for the wolves but with little success so far. A good fall of snow will help greatly in rounding up these animals.

A MEAN MAN'S GENEROSITY

CLEARING his throat a little consciously, Mr. Hyne looked askance at Caleb Peaslee.

"This is a queer question, Kellup," he ventured at last, "and I d'know's I ought to ask it 'bout a neighbour but who is the most selfish man you know of, right in his own family, and to'rds his own children?"

Mr. Peaslee glanced about him cautiously, and then replied with a grin that had in it a touch of self-consciousness.

"I wouldn't tell you if I didn't know we're both thinkin' of the same man," he said. "Ben Safford's the pusson. I saw you stop when you came by his place. What's he been doin' now?"

"Nothin' special," replied Mr. Hyne. "What I saw him do is of a piece with all his doin's, only he done it without any colour of shame, fur's I could see."

"What was it?" persisted Mr. Peaslee.

"Well," Mr. Hyne deposed slowly, "I had a pocketful of walnuts, and when I got 'long by Safford's he was standin' by the gate with that boy of his. I don't care what Ben Safford is—that boy is bright and smart as they make. Mebbe he takes it from his mother. I didn't want the walnuts myself, and I did want to give 'em to the boy. I don't suppose Safford ever brings any bought truck home to that youngster. So I started to give 'em to the kid, but Safford held out his hand.

"'I'll shell 'em,' he says, and like a fool I put 'em all in his hand—and what do you think he done?"

"Eat the heft of 'em himself," conjectured Mr. Peaslee without a moment's hesitation. Mr. Hyne smote his leg savagely with his hard palm.

"He eat the last solitary one of 'em himself, and gin the boy the empty shells to play with," he asserted stoutly. "Yes, sir, he eat 'em all, with that kid watchin' him and hopin' to the last that mebbe one of them would fall to his share. And then his father gin him the empty shells and told him he could make boats of 'em, and the boy went off lookin' pretty sober."

Mr. Peaslee pursed his lips and smitted a low whistle of surprise.

"I d'know's I ever heard of anything to beat that I d'know jest how a man could go to work to beat it," he said. "But I ought not to be surprised at anything Ben Safford does in the way of stinginess. You know what he did when he was courtin' his wife, don't you?"

Mr. Hyne shook his head sourly. "He was married long 'fore I moved into town,' 'he replied, "but I'm willin' and able to be'lieve anything after what I saw this mornin'."

"Well," began Mr. Peaslee, "they say he took her to a fair one time, bein' as he had some cattle on exhibition and could get into the fair grounds for nothin'. They took their own food with 'em—she put it up for both of 'em—and Ben was havin' a dretful good time, seein' nothin' was costin' him a cent.

"There was side shows and things like that, but of course the girl knew that Ben wouldn't fool away any money on such things. But there was heaps of things to east — candy and pears and oranges, and I s'pose she had a kind of a sweet tooth. Anyway, after they'd wandered round and Ben'd seen 'bout all he could see for nothin', she sort of plucked up courage. She is a quiet, patient little pusson, you know, and she had a kind of wistful look even in them days.

"They was goin' past a booth where there was some oranges and she touched him on the arm and says, 'Don't them oranges look awful nice, Ben?' He halted right square in his tracks, and she hardly dared to believe her eyes at that.

"But when he grabbed her by the arm and begun to fetch her along to'rds the oranges, elbowin' folks out of the way so he could get closer, she felt that she'd been sort of misjudgin' him all along. He made a way through the crowd and led her right up in front of the booth.

"'There!' says he. 'They look better from here than they did when we was way out there. Now,' he says, 'we'll stay here and you can look at 'em long's you're a mind to!'"

"Where have you been for the last four years?"

"At college taking medicine."

"And did you finally get well?"

Lady of the House: "Why don't you get a job? Don't you know a rolling stone gathers no moss?"

Tramp: "Madam, not to evade the question at all, but merely to obtain information, may I ask of what practical utility is moss to a man in my condition?"

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

Conducted By
MISS HELEN LACEY, B. H. Sc.

BRIGHTEN YOUR MEALS WITH CRANBERRIES.

IN THE AUTUMN we like to go to the woods and collect red berries such as black elder and bittersweet, with which to brighten our homes during the dull November days. We can brighten our meals with red berries without the effort of going to the woods to look for them. Just go to your favourite grocer and buy a few pounds of cranberries. Then try the following recipes.

CRANBERRY PIE.

Most people call this pie "Mock Cherry," but I think it is too good to suggest that it is not the real thing, so I always say "Cranberry Pie."

1 cup cranberries
½ cup seeded raisins
¾ cup sugar
1 tablespoon flour
1 teaspoon almond extract
1 teaspoon butter

Line a pie tin with pastry. Fill with cranberries, washed and cut in halves, mixed with chopped raisins. Sprinkle with mixture of sugar and flour, add almond extract and dot with butter. Cover with a second crust and bake in a hot oven for about 40 minutes.

CRANBERRY JELLY.

4 cups cranberries
2 cups water
2 cups sugar

Pick over and wash cranberries. Add water and cook until very soft. Press through a sieve, add sugar and stir until dissolved. Cook about five minutes or until it jellies. Pour into moistened mould and set away to cool.

CRANBERRY COCKTAIL.

Remember this one at Christmas time when you are planning your holiday menus.

2 cups cranberries
2 cups water
3 cloves
2-3 cup sugar
1 tablespoon lemon juice

Wash cranberries and cook with water and cloves. When tender, strain thoroughly. Add sugar to the liquid and cook long enough to blend thoroughly. When partly cooked add lemon juice. Serve ice cold.

CRANBERRY SHERBET.

1 quart cranberries
1 cup sugar
1 cup water
⅛ teaspoon salt
4 cups water
2 cups sugar
¼ cup lemon juice
1 cup pecans or walnuts

Cook berries with 1 cup sugar and 1 cup of water until soft. Push through a sieve and add salt; boil 4 cups of water and 2 cups sugar for 10 minutes. Cool and combine cranberries, syrup and lemon juice. Freeze until partly solid, add nuts, and freeze until stiff.

LEMON PIE.

There are lemon pies and lemon pies, but when you try this recipe you will have finished experimenting with new lemon pie recipes.

1 cup boiling water
1 cup sugar
2 egg yolks
1 tablespoon butter
4 tablespoons cornstarch
Juice and rind of one lemon

Make a syrup of water and half the sugar. Beat egg yolks until smooth with a little cold water; add remainder of sugar mixed with the cornstarch, to the egg yolks. Add syrup slowly and stir constantly until the mixture begins to thicken. Add butter, lemon juice and rind. Cook for 15 minutes or until there is no taste of raw starch. Cool and pour on a baked pie shell. Top with meringue made from egg whites left from filling. Brown in a slow oven.

JELLY ROLL CAKE.

Perhaps your apple jelly didn't jelly quite enough to turn from the mould. Use it in jelly roll cake. Or, for a change, spread with marmalade instead of jelly.

2 eggs
1 cup sugar
4 tablespoons cold water
1 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt

Separate eggs; beat yolks, add sugar slowly and cold water, beating continually. Sift dry ingredients and add gradually, mixing well but not beating. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Spread very thin in one long greased oblong pan or in two smaller ones. It is important that the mixture be thin as when thick it will not roll properly. Bake in a moderate oven at 350 degrees Fahrenheit, about ten minutes. Turn out on a damp cloth sprinkled with powdered sugar. Spread quickly with jelly and roll up in the cloth while still warm. When cool, remove cloth and sprinkle with powdered sugar.

Cranberries, along with prunes and plums, belong to the acid-forming group of foods. If you have been advised to eat mainly alkaline foods, it may be just as well to avoid cranberries.

* * * *

Cranberries are ten per cent carbohydrate and when used with saccharine to sweeten them, may be eaten by the diabetic as a substitute for oranges.

* * * *

Julienne is the name given to a clear vegetable soup invented by Jean Julien in 1875, containing vegetables cut in match-like strips. The word "julienne" also refers to any food cut in matchlike strips.

Sautéing is cooking in a small quantity of fat. The article to be cooked must be shifted from side to side to come in contact with the fat. Sautéing is a cross between pan broiling and frying.

To become a good cook requires more than the blind following of a recipe. A good cook must gain a knowledge of foods and how they behave and skill in manipulating them. The recipe by itself will not produce a good product, the user must interpret it and have skill in handling the materials it prescribes.

Judge (in Traffic Court): "I'll let you off with a fine this time, but another day I'll send you to jail."

Driver: 'Sort of a weather forecast eh, judge?"

Judge: "What do you mean?"

Driver: "Fine to-day—cooler tomorrow."

Magistrate (a non-motorist): "The officer has stated that you used bad language when you were stopped."

Motorist: "Well, you see, I was in a tantrum at the time."

Magistrate: "The make of your car doesn't interest me in the least."

"Doctor, I want to consult you about my stomach."

"But, madam, you are mistaken—I am a doctor of philosophy."

"Doctor of philosophy? What strange diseases there are nowadays!'

The Alleluia Plant

IT SEEMED to Margaret Ward, spending two weeks in the country for the first time in her life, that she could never get her fill of green growing things. Molly Spencer, her cousin, laughed at that Molly's inclinations tended away from growing things: she hankered for town.

"We ought to change places, Meg," she said one day. "Only, you'd mighty soon tire of the monotony of farm life."

Margaret smiled. She was wondering how soon Molly would tire of bookkeeping, with a lodging house to return to at the end of the day. But she only said, "I wish I could take a piece of Barnesfield back with me."

Old Uncle Adrian Shaw, another visitor to the farm, looked up from his whittling. "That ain't a hard wish to grant yourself," he observed. "Dig up a hardy plant in the old south woods and carry it back in a pot."

Uncle Adrian spent his time in cheerful pilgrimages up and down the land. When Margaret sought him later for further information she found that he had drifted away as he had drifted in, without a word of warning.

"But if he told you there are hardy plants in the south woods, then there are," her Aunt Emily assured her. "He knows. You'll find an empty plant pot in the old pit, Margaret, and good rich soil in the garden."

Molly laughed again. "Look at her—you'd think she was on the trail of buried treasure. I wish you were, Margaret, and that you'd share it with me, so that I could accept Hilda Burney's invitation for Christmas. Just enough for a new hat and fixings—and I'd go back to town with you!"

Margaret was thinking of Molly's eager words as on her last golden afternoon she set out for the woods, basket and trowel in hand. Her cousin was still more or less a stranger to her, for the Spencers had only recently moved from their Western home to the Barnesfield place. But the two girls were very congenial, though Margaret was sometimes obliged to smile at Molly's funny little whims.

"She'd let clothes keep her from taking that trip," the city girl mused. "Now, I'd have come down here if I had to, in a—grass bag!"

She was smiling at her own nonsense as she paused at the little post office and received the one letter that was there for her. As she unfolded the single sheet of paper a coin slid into her hand. The letter, which bore a strange postmark, was signed Adrian Shaw and was very brief. It told her that Uncle Adrian was sending a little gift to Molly and herself,—addressed to her, as the older,—and it ended abruptly, "No thanks." There was no return address.

The old man was given to doing such things and to doing them in his own peculiar way, but Margaret was astonished when she looked at the coin. It was a twenty-dollar gold piece.

"Why, bless his heart!" she said fervently. "My half will pay my den—she halted uncertainly. Molly ought can have her hat and fixings, so she can!"

Turning to go back to the house, she halted uncertainly. Mooly ought to have the great news at once, but the sun was already slanting low in the October sky. After a few moments of irresolution she decided to keep on. She slipped the piece of money into the breast pocket of her sweater and pinned the pocket carefully with a strong clasp pin from the neck of her blouse. That same pocket and pin had often done similar service when she hurried from her room late Saturday afternoons to buy her Sunday supplies at the grocery round the corner. The action made her think of town with a little pang of distaste.

The south woods were sweet with early autumn, and Margaret took a long breath of delight. Her knowledge of wild flowers was limitel, but there was at least a chance of her finding a plant for her purpose. After a while, where the undergrowth thinned at the north edge of the woods, her faith was rewarded. A little colony of slender-stemmed growths was huddled in a plot of moss. The plants had stopped blooming, but their clover-like leaves were still graceful and green They might be "hardy plants" and they might not; it would be worth while to make the trial. She went home with her spoils, warm and tired, but triumphant, and took them to her aunt for inspection.

"Wood sorrel," Mrs. Spencer said. "I don't know how it will behave transplanted; but it might thrive in a warm room, I should think."

On her knees in the garden, busy with her trowel in the yielding brown earth, Margaret made plans for the new possession. It should have a place of honour in the warm corner of her window sill where in winter the sun sometimes shone. She sang to herself as she bent above the unaccustomed task. Then, throwing the trowel down, she sank back on her knees and wiped her hot face. What must ploughing be like?

The rest of the work was easier; but by the time the last ounce of earth had been packed into the pot dusk was falling.

The gate clicked, and Molly came swinging down the walk. "Still grubbing?" she challenged as she paused beside her cousin. "Going to take that heavy thing back under one arm? I wish that you were going to take me instead!" Margaret came hastily to her feet. Molly's last words had recalled with a rush what in her absortpion she had utterly forgoten Uncle Adrian's gift! Her hand flew to her pocket; then she gave a little gasp. The pin and the coin were both gone!

Molly was moving toward the house serenely unaware of disaster. She called over her should that there was to be ice cream for supper in honour of Margaret's last evening.

Margaret stood stock-still in the twilight. It seemed incredible that such a dreadful thing could have happened; yet the empty pocket was an unimpeachable witness. She tried to steady her thoughts and take account of the matter. The safety catch had been in place the first time; that was certain. Later on she must have unfastened it absent-mindedly and flicked the coin out on the soft ground as she got out her handkerchief. That seemed the only explanation.

Margaret groaned. She was not thinking of her own loss, but of her cousin's. To save herself a little inconvenience she had taken the foolish risk; and now poor Molly's heart's desire was lying somewhere—anywhere—out yonder in the ten acres or more over which she had been rambling.

With a faint hope that the tragedy might have occurred nearer home she got down on her hands and knees and groped about in a half-hearted fashion. Then she took up her plant and walked slowly back to the house. She was not going to leave Barnesfield until the afternoon of the next day; that would give her the whole morning in which to search for the money. It would be a needle-and-haystack business; but she would do her best.

She made a big effort to appear gay and natural at supper, but all the time she was busy with her difficult problem. She would replace the money from her own salary, of course. Meanwhile, should she tell what had happened, or not Surely Molly had a right to know; and yet, the knowledge would only make her unhappy. Through the buttered muffins and broiled chicken Margaret wrestled with herself; by the time she had choked down the ice cream her decision was made. She would keep her own counsel for a while.

She spent the next forenoon in the woods. But her trail the day before had led along a dozen winding paths, through brier patches and across a swift stream; the search was really hopeless from the start. A needle in a haystack would have been easy by comparison.

The family welcomed her back with good-natured reproaches. "You love the birds and bushes better than you do your own kin,' 'said Molly's father laughing. "It's a pity you and Molly here can't change places for a little. She's aching to hear her shoe heels click on the pavements, aren't you, Moll?" Margaret caught the flash in Molly's blue eyes, and her heart sank. She was glad when it was time to go.

The journey back to the city was dismal. Beside her on the seat, sheathed in protecting stiff paper, was the little green plant, the cause of all the trouble. Margaret turned her back on it and watched the flying landscape. Every time she caught sight of a gold autumn leaf lying solitary her heart gave a jump.

By the time the engine blew for the city station she was positive that the gold piece was at the bottom of the swift woods brook. She remembered distinctly having picked up a muddy stone just there: of course she had pulled out her handkerchief to wipe her fingers. Well, with the money so utterly lost it would be sheer cruelty to tell Molly. Instead, she would put by several dollars each week and send in the whole amount by Christmas.

But the weeks moved swiftly toward Christmas, and the sum grew slowly. Margaret found that the task would be harder than she had thought. Her room rent was raised the first of November; last year's shoes balked of a further service; the dentist's bill was unexpectedly high. When she broke her glasses near Thanksgiving Day she was seized with panic It was like trying to climb a greased pole.

After a while the panic subsided to grinding worry. If she saved only a dollar a month, then it would be nearly a year before the matter could be set right. That was unthinkable. A letter from Barnesfield soon after Christmas added to her unhappiness. Molly, writing with flourishes on new stationery, enumerated her gifts. Keeping the best for the last, like a child, she announced in a postscript that her godmother had sent her five dollars.

"Think of it—the price of a ticket to town and back! With a little more money, Meg, I could snap up Hilda Burnley's invitation—it's come up again—and be walking in on you."

That night Margaret wrote to Molly and made a clean breast of it all. She enclosed a five-dollar bill—all she had been able to save up to that time.

The little gray letter that came whirling back by return mail was almost childish in its petulant anger. Margaret could not restrain a wry smile as she read.

"Why on earth," Molly wrote, in a flurry of indignant punctuation points, "didn't you tell me at first? I could have found the money then; now it's deep in drifted leaves. Here's your five dollars; you mustn't send me your money. I'm not stupid enough to blame you for the accident, Margaret, but I do blame you for treating me like a three-year-old!"

The signature was worst of all—a bitter, significant little blot, blurred by a tear.

"However, I deserve it," Margaret said.

One day in February Uncle Adrian Shaw appeared suddenly from nowhere. Margaret was dismayed when she saw him, genial and travel-shabby, in her room. The sight of him brought up hard associations; but she managed to give him a welcome.

"Where's Molly?" he demanded.

Margaret flushed "Molly?"

Uncle Adrian explained. When he had dropped in at Barnesfield a fortnight before, Molly was about to come to town. "The child was so droopy about Christmas time," he went on, "that John Spencer said 'twould be worth the price of a calf to give her a change, and so they packed her off. She'll be hunting you up soon as ever she gets her bearings."

Margaret was silent as her visitor talked on. Molly in the city without letting her know! Surely she would not carry her resentment so far. Still, Uncle Adrian had been cheerfully certain of his information. She did not want to question him on that subject, anyway.

"You look bothered, Maggie," the old man said suddenly. He ruminated a while, regarding her averted face. "Well, these are hard time," he offered presently. "But the old stone has managed to gather some moss." He was reaching for his pocket, but Margaret saw the movement and caught his arm.

"No, please don't!" she begged. If he offered her money again, it would be the last straw.

Uncle Adrian, who had the wisdom that is better than understanding, rose and strolled to the window. Margaret, watching his back, debated with herself whether she should mention his first gift or not. She was so preoccupied that she did not see him bend over the sill and adjust his glasses.

"Aha, alleluia!" he said suddenly; and in spite of her woe she laughed aloud at the queer exclamation.

"That's right, laugh," her visitor said, turning to beam on her. "It's a dark time of year, this February but by April you'll be as joyful as your flower—see if you're not."

With that, he took himself off.

Margaret wondered idly what he meant. But she was chiefly concerned with trying to decide what to do about Molly. She would have liked to walk straight up to the Burnley house and ring the bell. The inclination took her two squares and then her courage failed.

Several times in the weeks that followed she barely missed coming face to face with her cousin. Once the slim little figure disappeared round a corner just ahead. Another day, as she stood on the second floor of a department store, an elevator shot past, and she recognized a familiar face with blue eyes and unruly dark curls.

"In 'a new hat and fixings,' I do believe," she said under her breath and tried to laugh.

Mrs. Spencer wrote after a while that she could not understand why the two girls seemed to be seeing so little of each other. A later letter brought the news that Molly had found work in the city.

Margaret was troubled afresh. Thrown on her own resources, Molly would be needing money more than ever.

March passed slowly. With the first gilmpse of green tassles on the park trees, Margaret began to yearn for the country. It struck her that there was something almost funny about the way she had forfeited all of Barnesfield for a few quarts of it. With sudden distaste she caught up the little pot and set it out on the fire escape. The weather was warm and bright; it could stay there, out of sight, unharmed.

The day before Easter was dark with rain and mist. Margaret came in at noon from her work, tired and listless.

"It doesn't seem a bit like Easter," Mrs. Avery," she remarked to her landlady, who had come upstairs to bring fresh towels.

Mrs. Avery was putting back the curtains to get more light. "Here's something that does, though," she answered, pressing her face against the pane. "See, Miss Ward, your plant is in full bloom!" Margaret looked. Sure enough, the plant, pushed close under the window sill, had come to perfection without her knowing it The frail-petaled pink and white flowers shone in the dullness like delicate stars.

"Sometimes the alleluia plant blossoms exactly on time," the landlady said.

Margaret glanced at her in surprise. "Wood sorrel," she corrected her.

"We call it alleluia in England, where I came from," Mrs. Avery answered. "It blooms at Easter there."

When she had left the room Margaret put the plant back in the window and stood gazing at it for a while. Somehow its brave beauty made her glad in spite of herself. She sat down to her weekly darning with a lighter heart.

Alleluia: that was what Uncle Adrian had meant. After all ,it was springtime, and Easter. As she sent her needle swiftly in and out she decided to stop her useless worrying. At length she folded up her work and put on her raincoat and rubbers. Then she crossed the room and picked up the rosy plant.

"You belong down at the church," she said. "There'll be nothing lovelier in the whole chancel to-morrow, I know there won't."

Her hand was on the knob when there came a sound of light steps running up the stairs. The next instant the door flew open. The shock of contact sent Margaret's burden spinning out of her arms to the floor.

"Oh, what have I done?" the intruder cried. It was Molly Spencer, brought up short in alarm.

Margaret thrust out two eager hands, and drawing her across the threshold thrust her into a chair. "You've come to see me!" she cried. "That's what you've done!"

Molly's head dipped. "I had to come," she declared, "though I was ashamed to, and that's the truth. Margaret, I rushed into writing that hateful letter just the way I rushed into your room a minute ago. What are you going to do about your plant?"

Margaret stooped to pick up the broken pot. "The corner florist will help me out," she said. "Look, isn't it beautiful?"

As she lifted the plant something fell to the floor with a sharp click—a small bright object that rolled swiftly under the sofa. Margaret made a dive, but it wheeled out again, spinning toward the fire place and making gold circles in the little gray room.

It was Molly who captured the thing. She held it out shamefacedly. "I suppose it's that everlasting gold piece," she said.

Margaret blinked at the thing, frankly bewildered.

Molly had a theory to offer. "You flipped it out with your handkerchief that evening; then you shovelled it in with the earth.

"And all these months," Margaret said slowly, "it was right here at my elbow." She looked at the yellow disk glimmery in her palm. Then she looked at Molly, her face shining.

Molly read the look of relief; for the first time she realized what Margaret had endured. She laid an eager hand on her cousin's arm. "I know how we'll invest part of it," she said. "To Barnesfield for Easter, Meg!"

Margaret shook her head. "No," she said. "I want you to have it all. You must be needing it, now that you're living in town."

Molly's eyes began to dance. "Oho, but I'm no longer living in town,"

Molly's eyes began to dance. "Oho,' but I'm no longer living in town," she said. "The city was fine in February, but when spring came back I knew where I belonged. Hurry! Where's your suitcase, Meg? Mine's down at the door. We can take the five o'clock train and walk out to the farm. Look; the sun's shining for our special benefit!" She was folding blouses and collecting pins. "The south woods are one mass of anemones," she flung across her shoulder to Margaret, who stood wavering in a shaft of sunlight.

Margaret hesitated no longer. "I'll be back as soon as I mend my alleluia plant," she said.

"Your what?" Molly echoed hollowly from the depths of the clothes closet. But Margaret did not hear the question. She was already halfway down the stairs. She had one hand firm under the little mould of fragrant, crumbling earth. and with the other she was steadying the starry pink petals of her flower.

The annual meeting of the Chesterville Lawn Bowling Club was held in the C P.R. station on Tuesday evening and one of the most successful years in the history of the club was reported.

"Prize nights" proved particularly popular, the rinks usually being filled and at times the teams consisted of five men to a side. During the year's play, Doc Hutt was high man with 9 wins to his credit. Hanna, Hamlin Flynn and Woods came next with 8 wins each; Harper got in on 7; Dixon, Merkley and Olsen, 6; Robertson, 5; Senn, Durant and Clayton 4; Hess, Casselman and David 3; Wales, Reaburn, King, Alguire, Gilroy, Doering, Lloyd and Lacey 2; Cass and Waldorf 1. Percy Gilroy's friend, Mr. Patton, was in the competition one night and won a prize.

The highlight of the season was the winning of the provincial shield for District 16 in its first year of competition. Bill Dixon skipped Robertson, Clayton and Hamlen through the series, but were eliminated in Kingston in the Provincial semi-finals.

The doubles representation of Hutt and Hanna did not get into the finals.

The Caldwell Trophy was won by this club going through the season with 48 points out of a possible 80. Out of this, Dixon's rink won 8 points out of 12, Hutt won 2, Casselman, 7; Robertson 10; Clayton 7; Hanna 6; Cass 8.

The Governor General's playdowns entry from this club was skipped by Hutt and Clayton and were eliminated by Centrals after this club defeated Brockville in the first round.

The Treasurer's report was given by H. E. Wales which showed a deficit for the year's operations of $20.63.
